Mr. Code is the kind of fellow who can keep you entertained for hours with unusual anecdotes and yarns of Alaska in the early stages of the game.

Four years ago, he met Findlay, his partner in the original Australian venture.

"Burned your hand since, Monty?" he inquired laconically.

L. H. Marks' Patron Kicked Because "No Kille Today"

One of the sights of San Francisco, and one frequently visited by tourists in search of local color, is the Acme Theatre, proclaimed by its owners to be the most cosmopolitan theatre in the world. Located at 1249 Stockton street, just on the edge of Chinatown, with the French quarter on one side, the Italian district on another, and the Mexican, Filipino, Spanish and Portuguese quarters around the corner, it quite lives up to its reputation.

"If I am not the oldest exhibitor in the city," said I. H. Marks, senior member of the firm of I. H. Marks & Son, which conducts the Acme, "I, at least, hold some records that no one else can hope to claim. The Acme Theatre was opened in the fall of 1909, and is, therefore, 13 years old. I have been on the job every day since then, have the original location, the original building, the original music, operated under the original policy, show some of the productions I showed when I first opened, have the same operator, Helmer Erricson, and would be showing at the same old price of 5 cents but for the war. We now charge 10 cents. Only a few days ago I booked a picture I showed 11 years ago and some pictures have been shown a dozen times.

"I exaggerated it a little about the music. For the first five years we had an old automatic piano which played two tunes. One of these was 'Annie Rooney' and the other wasn't. Now we offer a repertoire of a dozen selections. Our policy is to give a short show, using short subjects full of action. The more lurid the poster the better, and once when I varied the show a Chinese patron looked the lobby display over and said: 'Wasser malla, you no kille today?'"

The moving picture business was not Mr. Marks' first venture in the amusement field. He traveled with Wilson's European Circus for a time and was also with Capt. Jack Crawford's Wild West Show. While traveling with a comic opera company in the Southwest, he became stranded and secured a job in a hardware store at Santa Fe, New Mexico, later traveling through that territory selling Colt revolvers. Prior to opening the theatre in San Francisco he was with the Pacific Hardware & Steel Co.

San Francisco Showmen Enlist Public's Aid in Fight Against Rentals

San Francisco theatre owners are commencing to protest vigorously against the continual increase in rentals and are taking their case to the public to show why it is impossible for them to reduce admission prices. Article after article is appearing in the daily press on a subject which has heretofore been kept from the public, and it is announced that a campaign of publicity is to be continued until prices are brought down to a reasonable figure.

It is pointed out that the expenses of some of the local theatres amount to from $10,000 to $15,000 a week, without considering film rentals, and that as much more is demanded for some of the late feature films.

Theatre owners in the suburban city of Oakland are said to have adopted a plan which has made that city rather unpopular with distributors, but which has enabled exhibitors to remain in the business. Exhibitors meet frequently, decide on the maximum price that can be paid for certain productions, and if distributors hold out for more, the pictures are not played there. This attitude has resulted in at least one producer making plans to enter the exhibiting field there, the Fox Film Corporation having a large house in course of construction.

At Last Dallas Exhibitors Have Chance to Make Money

With the Melba, heretofore dubbed along Film Row as a "white elephant," re-opened under the management of P. G. Cameron and enjoying, according to all reports, quite a play; with the Capitol, Dallas' newest theatre, nearing completion; and with the re-opening of the Jefferson, under the management of Ray Stinnett, a review this week of the forty odd theatres in the hub of the Southwest indicates that the long delayed period of near prosperity is near at hand at last.

Dallas picture theatres passed through a tough summer, admittedly—a losing summer, if the exhibitors' words may be taken—but it would seem that the coming winter will not be one of discontent. Theatres are gauged largely by what the exchange men say of business — the independent exchange men, that is.

The writer not so long ago met a pioneer exchange man on the streets. In 1919, or the early part of 1920, this man's exchange was worth a cool hundred thousand—he was offered that, in fact, to step down. In the summer of 1921 he could, perhaps, get a few hundred dollars for his films on hand, and certainly they weren't worth much more, under conditions existing then in this territory. It is doubtful if he could find a buyer in the summer of '21.

But it's different now. He's riding around in a new car; and, while this doesn't necessarily indicate a condition of prosperity, it means that he found a few winners, concentrated on them and is making money.

Cotton—upon which Texas lives and dies—is a short crop over the state, but 3,000,000 bales will be made. Nevertheless, the staple is skyrocketing, with a record price of 26 3/4 cents having been paid at present writing. There is every indication that the price will go to 30 cents. This more than makes up for the short crop. In fine, with the strikes over, there is every indication of a return to normalcy, insofar as Texas and the Southwest is concerned.

The reopening last week of the Jefferson Theatre in Dallas, which was leased from Southern Enterprises by Ray Stinnett, brings back to the hub of the Southwest an exhibitor and showman who pioneered in the game here. Stinnett established the theatre in 1915 and 1920 sold it to Southern Enterprises, who closed it about a year ago. Stinnett, upon leaving the Jefferson in 1920, went to Breckenridge, a town of 1,000, opened a house there and literally made a small fortune when the town jumped to 100,000 overnight, with oil gushers coming in every day. A score of men bucked him at the game in Breckenridge, but he sat tight and today owns every theatre in Breckenridge—seven—with the town down to a rather normal gait and 20,000 population. At the time of leasing the Jefferson, Mr. Stinnett also leased from the Southern Enterprises two houses in Abilene, Texas.

The Queen, Marshall, Texas, recently owned by F. A. Alexander and sold to William Roth, has gone under new management, with a half interest sold to Claude Dorough, well known Marshall exhibitor, who will jointly manage the theatre with Mr. Roth.

Judge Royall R. Watkins, in a Dallas court, last week made a ruling from the bench that "a moving picture house in a district is not injurious to the health or morals of a community," in granting A. J. Urbish a writ of injunction restraining the City of Dallas from preventing him from constructing a theatre in Oak Lawn, a prosperous suburb. This action was interpreted as being an attack on the city's interpretation of the "ill effects" of a theatre, rather than an attack on the validity of the city's building code.

Despite the fact that the writ comes after months of litigation, in which thousands of persons have either been interested or took part, the matter is not closed, for the City of Dallas has taken an appeal and hopes to win out in a higher court.

The American Motion Picture Company, of Fort Worth, with a capital stock of $3,000, has been incorporated at the Texas State Capitol by F. M. Elliott, W. S. Stegall, F. B. Kirby and F. X. Schuler.

R. J. Stinnett, veteran exhibitor of Breckenridge, and John Victor, his partner, who recently purchased the Queen and Mission Theatres, of Abilene, Texas, adopted a unique method of introducing themselves to the citizens of Abilene last week when they leased the theatres from Southern Enterprises. Taking a half page in the Abilene Reporter, Messrs. Stinnett and Victor filled this space with letters from prominent ministers, Chamber of Commerce officials and bankers, highly commending the morale of the Breckenridge theatres managed by the exhibitors.

A new theatre opened in Fort Worth, Texas, this week. A. L. Mitchell, well known exhibitor, took over the theatre formerly known as the Strand, 1206 Main street, and has renamed it the Utopia.

According to P. G. Cameron, owner and lessee of the Melba Theatre, Dallas, Pantages vaudeville will not be inaugurated at the Melba until next season. Announcement had been made that Pan time would be installed this season, but this plan was changed due to the fact that a certain southwestern house failed to link up with the circuit projected. On a picture policy, however, Mr. Cameron has made quite a success and succeeded this week in obtaining a pre-release showing of Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country," simultaneously with the pre-release showing in New York City.

The new Dallas Film Exchange Building, in which at least 50 per cent. of film exchanges in Dallas will be housed, was formally opened last week. The building is as nearly fireproof as possible, no wood being used in this structure. It has four stories and a basement, and a sprinkler system is being installed. The building was constructed especially for Dallas film exchanges and cost about $250,000.

During a performance recently at the Lometa Theatre in Lometa, Texas, films caught fire and in a few seconds the whole frame of the building was in flames. The house was crowded to capacity but everyone got out. A few were slightly injured from being knocked down and others from having to jump from the windows. The Hart Hotel and a residence adjoining the theatre building were also burned, entailing a total loss of $8,000.

One of the largest film contracts ever made in Dallas covering the city alone was signed recently by the Dallas office of the Fox Film Corporation with W. D. Neville, owner of the Washington Theatre, for the entire Fox output for this season.

The Dallas Amusement Company, with a capital stock of $50,000, has been granted a charter at Austin, Texas. The incorporators are John T. Jones, W. O. Huggins and C. A. Rasbury.

A number of important theatre changes have occurred in Denison, Texas. The Star and Rialto Theatres, sold about a year ago by L. M. Rideout to the Southern Enterprises, have been repurchased by Mr. Rideout. The amount involved is not stated.

In this connection it is noted that the Southern Enterprises are letting a number of their theatres go in small towns. Two years ago, when a scramble was on for theatre sites, during a fight between Southern Enterprises and the Hulsey interests, both interests invaded many towns of 10,000, 15,000 and 20,000 population and attention was even paid to towns of 3,500 population. Since that time Southern Enterprises and Hulsey interests, after amalgamating, have gradually let these houses go, concentrating their efforts on Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Fort Worth, El Paso and other large Texas cities.

A. E. Fair, general manager, Dallas, for Southern Enterprises, has announced the appointment of George D. Watters as his personal representative. Mr. Watters formerly was manager of the Capitol Theatre in Dallas, which burned a year ago.

Here we are searching for the senior exhibitor in the United States and no mention yet of Arthur D. Hotaling, who was with Lubin in Philadelphia from 1896 to 1915. That's all wrong. Let's hear from you, Mr. Hotaling.

Recently we paged I. W. Rodgers, of Poplar Bluff, Mo., and he has just sent us an intensely interesting history of himself which will appear soon. Then, too, we are fortunate in having the biographies of George E. Williams, of Buffalo, N. Y.; John C. Green, Guelph, Canada; Eugene H. Roth, San Francisco; Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis, and others. They will be published in the order in which they were received.

GRANDMA'S BOY LOOKS AT HIS PROTOTYPE

Three hundred and fifty grandmas, each with a boy, were recently entertained at a special matinee given by George Gravenstein, of the Carman Theatre, Philadelphia, to witness Harold Lloyd.

Schlichter, Goldberg, Rome to Lead in Baltimore Fight

A committee of three, including Chairman Louis Schlichter, manager of the Bridge Theatre; Thomas D. Goldberg, proprietor of the Wizard and several other theatres, and J. Louis Rome, manager of the Rialto and several other theatres, has been appointed by the Exhibitors' League of Maryland to decide what action will be taken by league members to influence people to vote against the passage of the Daylight Saving Ordinance at the next election in Baltimore, Md.

The Gem Theatre, 617 Duncan Place, Baltimore, which is under the management of Joseph Robbins, was purchased by Louis Greenberg for $23,500; $1,000 cash and the balance subject to a mortgage, when the playhouse was sold at public auction by E. T. Newell & Company, auctioneers.

S. Kleinman has purchased the Brodie Theatre, 1118 Light street, from Joseph Brodie. This playhouse has been under the management of Samuel Scherr for some time, who had a lease on the property. Mr. Kleinman is redecorating the theatre. J. R. Fields has been appointed house manager. One hundred more seats have been added in the space made by moving the front forward about twenty-five feet.

The new Everett Theatre was opened to the public at Middletown, Del., November 9. The construction cost $60,000. The opening performance was crowded. It is the only picture theatre in the city.

Frederick C. Schanberger, president of the James L. Kernan Company, operating the Maryland and other theatres in Baltimore, attended the opening of the Keith Palace Theatre in Cleveland.

The Opera House at Havre de Grace, Md., which was destroyed by fire some time ago, will be rebuilt by Enock M. Smith, building commissioner of that city.

The Central Theatre Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland in 1920, has acquired the properties at 615-21 East Fayette street. The purchase price was $10,000. There are four lots, each subject to a ground rent of $30 per annum. The directors in the Central Theatre Company are J. Louis Rome, manager of several Baltimore theatres; Grace L. Boehl, B. Francis Rome, Samuel H. Rome, and Abraham S. Rome. The capital stock of the company consists of 1,000 shares, par value $100 each, and 1,500 common without par value. If the city does not acquire the property for widening Fayette street, it is the purpose to erect a picture theatre. This site is very near the present Rivoli Theatre.

Charlotte Exhibitors See No Menace in the Alhambra

The Alhambra, the fifth first run house in Charlotte, N. C., opened five weeks ago, has slumped. Not to say it isn't doing business, but folks were looking for some good old "cut-throat" opposition in Charlotte when, soon after the Universal house, the Strand, opened with pictures, Southern Enterprises threw out the stock in their Alhambra and started off the picture policy with "The Prisoner of Zenda" for a solid week's run and an exposition campaign that woke the old town up.

The other managers were immediately on their toes. The Broadway, Dick Craver's First National house, brought in Ralph DeBruler, showman wizard of the South, who formerly handled Atlanta's million dollar "Howard," as manager; Ray Beall, of the Imperial, while under the same management as the Alhambra seemed a little upset, and Manager Dardine of the Strand signed a larger contract with the newspapers for space.

But it was a false alarm, the Alhambra having gone back to second runs and the older 1921 output of the different producers, which so far had not been run in Charlotte, and everybody's again sleeping soundly these nights.

Keen competition is expected to develop in Richmond with the completion early in 1923 of the mammoth new theatre being built by Pryor Brothers and allied interests. The Pryors already have the Broadway, playing principally First National first runs, the Bijou, Colonial and Bluebird also being first run houses. The Bijou, Colonial, also Isis and Odeon, the latter two second run houses, are under the same management.

Frank Freeman, Georgia Tech alumnus, football enthusiast, general manager of Southern Enterprises and S. A. Lynch Enterprises, was recently re-elected to the presidency of the National Georgia Tech Alumni association, a position which he held during the past year.

The Grand, Atlanta, Ga., is preparing for a personal appearance by Virginia Pearson. She will appear in several of the Loew Southern theatres.

Lawrence Lester, of Lester's Rivoli, Columbia, S. C., drove over to Atlanta the past week.

A. J. Economu, of the Franklyn Theatre, Fort Valley, Ga., is preparing for the annual Peach Festival in the spring of 1923, which annually draws 50,000 people to this small town.

A. P. Robert, formerly manager of the Salisbury Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., recently sold by Southern Enterprises, now heads a new department for this corporation, handling the details of all children's matinees in twenty of their Southern theatres.

San Francisco's Century Now Being Thoroughly Remodeled

Ackerman & Harris, who recently took over the Century Theatre on Ellis street, San Francisco, are expending a large amount of money in remodeling this house, including the installation of a permanent projection room on the ground floor, and will reopen it on November 25 with the world's premiere of "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera," a picture made by the H. A. Snow expedition. Following this will come the first showing here of "Oliver Twist," with Jackie Coogan. William J. Casey, for some time manager of the Hippodrome, and before then with the Tivoli and Newman's College, has been appointed manager of the Century.

With the greatest amount of newspaper publicity ever given a picture in San Francisco, the Curran Theatre recently commenced an extended run on "When Knighthood Was in Flower." The opening night was reminiscent of the opera season, with society out in full force, and a $10,000 advance sale was reported by the box office.

Manager Herbert E. Phelps is greatly pleased with the manner in which "East Is West," a picture produced largely in San Francisco, has been received by the patrons of the Tivoli. It ran three weeks, the first run of such a length since "The Kid."

John Peters, popular exhibitor of Elmhurst, Cal., plans to erect a new theatre there and will commence work in February.

William Voss has sold his half interest in the Auditorium Theatre at Modesto, Cal., to his former partner, Frank Andrews.

The Alpaugh High School, Alpaugh, Cal., has added a picture machine and will show pictures three times a month. There is no theatre in that town.

The Tokay Theatre, Lodi, Cal., will be reopened shortly by the T & D. Junior circuit. Program pictures will be presented exclusively.

The Washington Theatre, San Francisco, owned by the North Beach Theatres, Inc., of which Maurice Klein is president, was reopened recently, following extensive remodeling work. Supervisor Angelo Rossi made the opening address of welcome. Sam Jacobs is resident manager.

Sol Lesser has purchased the interests of Louis Linsey in the New Lyceum Theatre on Mission street, San Francisco, and is now sole owner.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu, T. H., who has been in San Francisco for several weeks, sailed for his island home on November 15.

Kahn & Greenfield, who conduct four picture houses at San Francisco and one at Santa Cruz, Cal., have added to their chain by opening the Princess Theatre at Honolulu. This is a splendid new house seating 1,700, arranged for both pictures and dramatic performances. Edward A. Smith, formerly manager of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, is in charge. A four-manual organ is presided over by Edwin Sawtelle and use is also made of an orchestra of twelve pieces.

Troy, N. Y., Exhibitors Plan to Organize in Near Future

Exhibitors in Troy, N. Y., are planning to organize in the near future, probably with the return of Edwin O. Weinberg, who will manage the new Troy Theatre, one of the Strand chain. Jacob Rosenthal is also busily engaged in completing a new house and will soon be classed with Troy exhibitors. There was an organization among the Troy theatrical managers some years ago, but with this one and that one dropping out, the organization passed out of existence.

Benjamin Apple, owner of the American and the Griswold in Troy, is the only member of both the national and state organizations, and it is quite probable that he may be asked to assume the presidency of the Troy organization when it is effected. There are about seventeen houses now running in Troy. This leaves about a dozen owners and managers who will be expected to join the organization. Albany has a live local, but Schenectady is in much the same shape as Troy. It is barely possible that a tri-city association might be brought about between now and spring.

Business in Troy is showing marked improvement these days. As a rule, November and December are not particularly good months in the Collar City, as some of the shops are running at half capacity. With November making the showing that it now is, exhibitors are looking forward to a bangup January, and, in fact, entire winter.

Exhibitors are looking forward to the opening of the Ford plant, which will employ close to 5,000 men. There is also a big packing plant about to be opened on Green Island which will employ a thousand or more men. Within the next two months, two new theatres will open in Troy, with a combined seating capacity of nearly 3,000 persons, but with plenty of business activity under way, owners of houses do not anticipate any slump.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" pulled so well at the American this week, that Ben Apple decided to hold it over for another week. With the exception of "Way Down East," there has never been a picture run in Troy for longer than a week.

Mrs. Mary E. Crawford, of New York, is spending the week in Troy, as the guest of her son, Edward H. Crawford, manager of the Lincoln.

It now looks as though the new Troy Theatre would not be in shape for opening much before the last of February or the fore part of March.

Fire damaged the Alpine Theatre one night last week. Defective electric wiring is believed to have caused the blaze. Two projecting machines were destroyed and a hole was burned in the roof of the house. The fire was discovered shortly after midnight. The theatre is operated by Sabin & Judge, and seats about 500. It was recently renovated. The auditorium was somewhat damaged by water.

The Lincoln just conducted a contest to find a misspelled word in one of the Troy papers, offering tickets of admission to the lucky one. Manager Crawford received over 1,000 letters within three days and is firmly convinced that the scheme is a good one as a means of attracting attention.

The Capitol Theatre was responsible for calling out the fire department one night this week, when an overheated steampipe threatened to give trouble. There was no fire.

The American has enlarged its orchestra to ten pieces, an increase of three. Olin Niles is directing. The house is making a drive for patronage through a combination of the best pictures procurable and a musical program that can't be beat.

Battaglia Brothers have just taken over the Arlington, one of Troy's residential houses, which has been closed for some time. The house seats 400. This gives the Battaglias four houses in Troy.

Work is progressing most satisfactorily at the New Rose, and its owner, Jacob Rosenthal, expects to open not later than January.

All of the Troy exhibitors are planning to pay a visit to Schenectady next week as the guests of Edwin O. Weinberg, manager of the new State.

"Sin Flood" has been booked for a straight week at the Griswold, beginning Sunday.

Next to "The Eternal Flame," which established a record for a week's business at the Lincoln, "If I Were Queen" takes second place, although coupled with a fashion show.

"Under Two Flags," running a straight week, went across fairly well at the Lincoln, but, according to many, the actress is not the type that attracts the flappers with which Troy is filled because of its many collar factories.

When it comes to keeping in touch with his audience, there isn't an exhibitor in all Troy who can excel Ben Apple, of the American. He is right on hand to welcome his patrons, and also present to bid them a cheery good night as they leave his house. As a result almost everyone in Troy knows Ben, and as a further result the profits of the house become better and better through his personal touch.

After all is said and done, it pays to do a little figuring when one is booking pictures, and, likewise, take into consideration the characteristics of the place. That is exactly what "Al" Bothner did last summer, when he started to manage the Colonial in Troy. This is a 10-cent house, which had proved more or less of a "lemon." Mr. Bothner figured out that Troy, generally conceded as a "working girls' town," could pay both a 10-cent as well as a 30 or 35-cent admission, but that a 10-cent house would have to run pictures with plenty of action and lay off the society drama stuff.

As a result, the Colonial does a whopper of a business at its first show each night, from patrons who are of the early-to-bed-early-to-rise type, being employed in the factories. Mr. Bothner figured that others drawing bigger salaries and who could sleep a bit later in the morning, would patronize higher priced houses. He appears to have hit the nail on the head and is booking just the sort of pictures that pack the Colonial night after night.

Double features are being booked at the Strand whenever there is a strong opposition in neighboring houses. The scheme appears to be working well.

Manager Crawford, of the Lincoln, was right on the job election night and flashed a picture of Governor Alfred E. Smith the moment his election was assured.

When Percy Waters was screening for Edison on Twenty-first street in New York City, and in the days when there were probably not over twenty half reels in all New York, "Al" Bothner, now managing the Strand and the Colonial in Troy, started in business. When it comes to exploitation, there isn't a man in Troy who can so much as hold a candle to Bothner's efforts, many believe.

MAKING AN EMPTY WINDOW BLOSSOM WITH COLOR

This scene, copied from one of the stills of "Manslaughter," was worked up in the window of a vacant store in the business section of Los Angeles, and sold a lot of tickets to Grauman's.

Albany

William Berinstein, who owns the Colonial and the Hudson in Albany, as well as two houses in Elmira, plans to build one or more houses in the near future and establish a chain. Mr. Berinstein lately moved to New York.

Judge Charles McCarthy, of Hoosick Falls, will shortly open a new theatre in that village. He is one of the old-timers in the business, and is widely known throughout the state.

Howard Richardson, of the Plaza in Chestertown, is in bed, suffering from an attack of pneumonia.

Paul Alberts, of the Albany, in Schenectady, is endeavoring to pack his house nightly by putting on a couple of amateur nights each week, in connection with his pictures. The idea seems to be working well.

Fred Elliott, of the Clinton Square, in Albany, is planning to use about 500 window cards in connection with next week's run of "What's Wrong with the Women."

Harry Berinstein, of the Mozart, in Elmira, observed his twenty-third birthday one day last week.

George Roberts, president of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, in discussing business, recently said that there were more really good pictures this year than ever before, and that such were really the salvation of hundreds of theatres this fall.

"It used to be," said Mr. Roberts, "that there would be one outstanding picture each year, such as 'The Birth of a Nation,' but now it would be a hard matter for anyone to pick the real big feature of a year."

Stock has closed at the Palace in Watertown, and from now on feature pictures will be given although amateur nights will prevail on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

There is talk in Ogdensburg that a number of business men will take over the Hippodrome in that city, which is now owned by Eli Rosenbaum, and run the house as a picture theatre, changing three times each week.

There is a new house in Oneonta on which a small fortune has been spent and which will open on Thanksgiving Day. It is said that the ornamental plastering alone represents a cost of $20,000. The house will seat 600.

There was an auspicious opening of the Strand Theatre in Carthage this week. J. N. Schine, of Gloversville, who recently took over the house, made a trip to Carthage, and was accompanied by a number of his friends. It has been decided to change the pictures every second night instead of each night, as in the past.

Carthage, N. Y., has only about 4,000 inhabitants, but when "The Old Homestead" was given a three days' run this week at the Strand there, the management engaged a local quartet and presented the first prologue ever seen in the village.

All the Troy and Albany exhibitors are planning to attend the opening of the State Theatre in Schenectady during the week of November 26.

Detroit

An aggressive campaign is now under way to eliminate in Michigan the practice of sub-renting of film and the unauthorized holding of pictures for extra days' showing. The campaign is under the direction of the F. I. L. M. Club of Detroit and is indorsed by the M. P. T. O. of Michigan. The practice is not prevalent in most parts of the state, but it is intended to publish the names of all guilty parties where all exchanges and exhibitors may read them.

Charles Hagedorn has purchased the Lyric Theatre in Mt. Clemens, Mich., a house which he has been managing for the past six months. Extensive alterations and redecorating plans are now under way.

The following first-run houses in Detroit are now opening their doors at 10:30 a. m. instead of 12:30 p. m.: Adams, Broadway-Strand and Miles. This gives them an extra show a day.

John P. Harris, promoter of the Family Theatre, Detroit, and general manager of that house, although he lives in Pittsburgh, was elected state senator from his district in the recent election. He operates a big chain of theatres in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Bert Greiner, of the Gratiot Theatre, Detroit, who has been ill for a few weeks, is now back at his desk again.

Claud Jensen Contracts for Eight of F. B. O.'s Pictures

Claud Jensen has contracted for the following F. B. O. releases for the Portland circuit of Jensen & Von Herberg theatres: "The Kick Back" and "Good Men and True," two Carey releases; two Novaks, "Colleen of the Pines" and "The Snowshoe Trail," "If I Were Queen," featuring Ethel Clayton; "The Hound of the Baskervilles" and "Broadway Madonna," "Heedless Moths," starring Audrey Munson and directed by Robert Leonard. Play dates on the above will begin immediately and the entire product will be shown within the next two or three months. Manager Jensen is reported to be re-opening the Peoples Theatre with the "Hound of the Baskervilles" on November 18. It has been closed all summer.

Mack J. Davis, of Port Angeles, opened his new Mack Theatre on November 17 with "Remembrance." Several novel features, including a banquet hall and ballroom, are incorporated in the new house.

George C. Faskins, proprietor and owner of the Royal Theatre, Cashmere, Wash., also owner of the Blewett Hotel, the finest hotel in the Wenatchee Valley, reports business good in spite of the seriousness of the transportation problem confronting the fruit growers.

Manager Goldsmith of the Society Theatre in the Broadway and Capitol Hill district, Seattle, has arranged a private screening of three episodes of "In the days of Buffalo Bill," to which he has issued invitations to the Parent Teachers' Association of that district and school teachers. December 5 is the day reserved for the screening. Speakers, a short musical program and a Prizma Scenic will be given in addition to the featured picture. Tea will be served at the conclusion.

Patrons of Hamrick's Blue Mouse are to be treated to an Irene Castle fashion show and parade in connection with the showings of "Slim Shoulders," early in December.

Conductor G. H. Stone last Sunday inaugurated the first of his new series of popular winter concerts at the Coliseum Theatre. These concerts, which last one hour, are quite popular with music lovers, and the numbers are carefully chosen, with usually an assisting soloist.

Pells & Swanson have re-opened the Apollo Theatre, Everett, after a year's closing. They are reported planning very extensive improvements.

The good old "meller" continues perennially young in its interest. This week the "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" is drawing full houses to the Blue Mouse, where it established an exceptional business on opening days. Even the Monday matinees were heavily attended.

Over at the Liberty, Goldwyn's "Sin Flood" is reported furnishing thrills to big houses, who get a final kick out of "Sawing a Woman in Two."

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Terhune, former owners of the Rex Theatre, Spokane, have given over possession to Otto Bischell, formerly of the Havre, Mont., Orpheum. Mr. Bischell and Mr. Terhune were in Seattle transactng some necessary business on Film Row. Mr. Terhune is reported looking for a good suburban location in Seattle.

A First National Release

AN ELABORATE LOBBY ON HURRICANE'S GAL

This was worked up by W. F. Brook, manager of The Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., and includes two original paintings on the Dorothy Phillips play.

Jack Allender, of the Allender circuit, has bought back his Liberty Theatre, Moscow, Idaho sold some time ago to Charles Coates.

Manager O. R. Hartman, of the Princess Theatre, reports satisfactory business on his new plan of charging 15 cents and giving only the cream of second runs. The new policy has been in effect since October 14 when the house re-opened with its new name, after extensive repairs had been accomplished. Hartman is a First National Franchise holder. The Princess and Victory, both downtown houses, are owned by the Woolley Theatres Co.

"Doc" Clemmer, of the Spokane Clemmer Theatre, has booked "The Kickback" to open November 15. This F. B. O. release is the first western picture Mr. Clemmer has shown. "If I Were Queen" and "The Snowshoe Trail" have been booked for early December showings.

H. K. Dunham, who recently demolished his Rex Theatre in Mount Vernon, has built a new Rex on the same site. He worked day and night shifts, and expects to re-open about the fifteenth. The new house will seat about 500 and cost in the neighborhood of $10,000.

The Grand, in Bellingham, reopened November 2 with the Val Howland Stock Co. in "Pollyanna", to full houses for three nights. Manager Fred B. Walton's plan is this: The first three days of each week will be devoted to Pantages vaudeville, featuring each week episodes of "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," Wednesday the house is open for local and civic affairs, while the last three days are filled by the stock company. The recreated Grand seats 1,208.

Manager Danz, of the Colonial Theatre, is distributing high-class photographs of the stars featured on his programs, to ladies at matinee performances. The Colonial is second run, and Mr. Danz is offering some of the very best screenings. He was the only local exhibitor to give election returns on November 7, and proved that it pays to be 100 per cent. on the job all the time.

Manager Case, of the Columbia, this week put over an exceptionally artistic number "The Mah Jongg Blues." His stage setting was effective with Chinese art panels, and bowers of greens and blossoms. Two Chinese girls and a mandarin playing the new popular game, during the singing of the number by the mandarin. One of the maids followed this with a dainty Chinese dance number, the chorus being sung as before. It won a big round of applause at each performance. A Mah Jongg set in a glass case in a lobby, attracted attention to the novelty number.

Wehrenberg Putting Pep Into St. Louis "Go to Movie Week"

The week of December 3 to 9, inclusive, will be a big one for the picture theatres of St. Louis. Fred Wehrenberg, vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis, and owner of the Melba and Cherokee Theatres on the South Side, has put all his pep and personality behind a "Go to the Movies Week" for St. Louis on the dates named, and he has keyed up the majority of his fellow exhibitors to the same pitch of enthusiasm.

Fred is a driver, an enthusiast, a pioneer. He is the one St. Louis exhibitor who can always be relied upon to lead any drive for the benefit of the industry. He it was who fought the good fight when Sunday closing and Daylight Saving threatened the industry in St. Louis. And now as head of the "Go to the Movies Week" of the Exhibitors' League, he is hitting on high to put it across big.

He has mapped out his campaign. It will include a big banquet for exhibitors and invited guests, including leading educators and clergymen, with William Hays as the principal. That is, if Bill can arrange to be there. And if he understands the importance of this drive he will sure be there, for a speech by Mr. Hays at this time is what is most needed in Missouri.

Next January at Jefferson City the new lawmakers of the state will gather. The blueites will be there with measures for Sunday closing, state-wide censorship of movies and the rest of their bag of joykillers. Some fight will be needed to put them to rout. The Massachusetts vote hasn't made any impression on them. They dismiss it in their own way by asserting that the fool people have no right to decide these questions for themselves. Moving picture censors and their advocates firmly adhere to the doctrine that the American people are incompetent of self-government or to think for themselves. So Missouri is in for another siege.

There will be prominent advertisements in all the newspapers describing the aims and purposes of the drive. For fear the newspapers may miss some people, Wehrenberg is having made thousands of one sheets and a few three sheets, and these will be placed in every prominent location in the city.

Seven hundred dollars in cash receipts. That's the loot obtained by five bandits who entered the Manchester Theatre, 4251 Manchester avenue, early Monday, November 13. They carried off the strong-box and busted it open in a pasture near the St. Charles and Natural Bridge roads in St. Louis county. As the robbers were leaving the show house a passing policeman sent them on their way after gently reminding them that their lights were not burning. The St. Louis Amusement Company owns the theatre.

Father Spigardi's Italian parochial schools are several thousand dollars richer than they were two weeks ago. Father Spigardi is fortunate that he numbers among his friends, Fred L. Cornwell, who controls the Del Monte Theatre. Fred heard that his friend, the priest, had trouble meeting the mortgage obligations on his school building, paying teachers' salaries, etc., so arranged to put on a benefit show at the Del Monte for the school. The net proceeds for the week of November 12 went to Father Spigardi. "The Rosary" was the feature picture. Capacity crowds were present at every performance.

The Yale Theatre, Shelbyville, Ill., opened November 15 with "One Week of Love" and Harold Lloyd in "I Do." Lou Wagner is manager. The Illmo Amusement Company, recently incorporated in Missouri for $20,000, owns the house. The stockholders are Wagner, Floyd Lewis and Roy Dickson.

The Orpheum Theatre, Vandalia, Ill., burned down November 17. The cause is unknown. S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill., was the owner. He had some insurance. The Orpheum, which seated 500, is a total loss.

The long-deferred erection of the 12-story office building that is to crown the Missouri Theatre is now under way. The Famous Players Missouri Corporation last week awarded the contract to the Black Masonry and Construction Company. The building will cost $1,000,000 and is designed especially for physicians and surgeons.

The filming of "The Spirit of St. Louis" is under way. Gilbert P. Hamilton, director for the Rothacker Film Corporation, is in charge.

Bill Savage, owner of the Hippodrome Theatre, Alton, Ill., intends to seek re-election as mayor next April. He is getting into condition by shooting wild ducks along the Illinois River near Beardstown, Ill.

George Beban & Company and his "The Sign of the Rose" have been booked for a third run at the Del Monte Theatre. A record for St. Louis. No other film, not even the record-breaking "Birth of a Nation," could repeat twice in one season. On his two previous calls to the Del Monte, Beban broke all house records. The date for his third call has not been set. It depends on his itinerary. He has also been booked for the new Le Claire Theatre, Moline, Ill., and the Indiana Theatre, Terra Haute, Ind., a Paramount house.

The Shubert-Empress Theatre has a new manager in Z. M. Harris, a former newspaper man. He is well-known here, having acted as press agent for several leading dramatic and musical comedy stars.

Special pictures of the Armistice Day celebration were taken for the Missouri Theatre. Thousands who couldn't get to the Armory later saw the spectacle on the Missouri screen.

The mallards along the Missouri bottoms are having bad luck these days. George Skouras and Bill Lyric, West End Lyric manager, spend all their spare time shooting.

Up on Goose Hill and farther North, in the vicinity of Bissle Point, they are talking about Joe Mogler, president of the Exhibitors' League and owner of the Mogler, Bremen and Excello theatres, as a member of the Board of Aldermen to succeed Edward Scholl, who died a few weeks ago. Joe is a member of the Republican State Committee and would be a happy selection for alderman. He will have no opposition if he will consent to run. He is certain to be elected, as thousands of Democrats would vote for him notwithstanding he would make the race on the Republican ticket.

The Indiana Theatre has a new boss in Bruce Fowler, late of Buffalo, N. Y. Harold Franklin picked Fowler to fill the position formerly held by I. B. Lewis.

The American Theatre, Evansville, Ind., has been taken over by Phillip Holtzman. He formerly had it when it was known as the Variety Theatre. In recent years it has been operated by the Strand Amusement Company.

Frank Newman, of Kansas City, was robbed of his pocketbook containing $90, railroad and Pullman ticket and baggage check while being shaved at the Statler Hotel. The thief later secured Newman's suitcase, which contained clothing valued at $250. He sent out a S. O. S. to Spyros Skouras, who advanced the necessary cash to make up the deficit caused by the light-fingered gentleman.

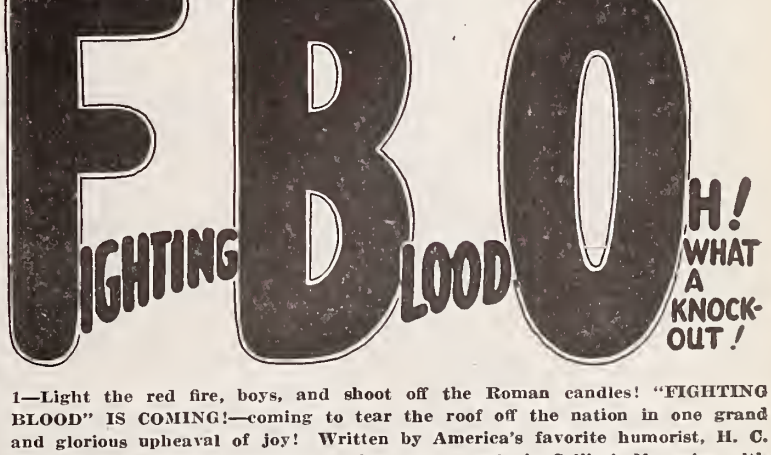
Exhibitors seen along Film Row the past seven days included: J. Stempfle, St. Charles, Mo.; Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Henry Turner, Jewel, Poplar Bluff, Mo.; Lou Wagner, Yale, Shelbyville, Ill.; J. Sanders, Sanders, Mattoon, Ill.; G. M. Luttrell, Majestic, Jacksonville, Ill.; F. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill., and Jim Reilly, Princess and Grand Theatres, Alton, Ill.

Louisville

Hopkinsville, Ky., reports that the Crescent Amusement Co., Nashville, Tenn., is planning erection of a theatre at Hopkinsville, to seat about 1,200 and to cost about $150,000. The report is based on statements of Harry Sudekum, the big noise in the Crescent, while on a visit to Hopkinsville, both of these being strict picture theatres, while it is planned to operate the new house for pictures, vaudeville, road shows, etc. It is planned to have it ready for operation by next fall. Options have been secured on two sites.

Covington, Ky., reports that the Ernst Realty Co., which is erecting the new Liberty Theatre building at that point, has incorporated with a capital of $250,000, to hold and handle a general real estate business. The incorporators are Senator R. P. Erbst, Frank F. Thorpe, L. B. Wilson, George L. Hill and Polk Laffoon. The company owns the new theatre which it is erecting. It is planned to use the company largely as a "Boost Covington" organization.

Col. Fred Levy, of the Kentucky Theatre, Louisville, was a host last week to 225 children, in the Junior Agricultural Club Price Day Program, in which sixteen children were awarded silver or other trophies for the best showing in pig raising, corn culture and other agricultural efforts.



1—Light the red fire, boys, and shoot off the Roman candles! "FIGHTING BLOOD" IS COMING!—coming to tear the roof off the nation in one grand and glorious upheaval of joy! Written by America's favorite humorist, H. C. Witwer, and published consecutively for many months in Collier's Magazine with millions of eager readers, the "FIGHTING BLOOD" TWO REEL STORIES, as created by F. B. O., will knock the whole industry for a row of cash-packed box offices! Produced and distributed by F. B. O.

Chicago Exhibitors Meet to Plan Daylight Saving Fight

Sixty exhibitors were present at a meeting called by the M. P. T. O. A. Friday, November 17, to start a movement to repeal the daylight savings ordinance. A great deal of enthusiasm was shown and plenty of cash was contributed to carry on the work of getting out petitions and other stunts to spread the gospel of "regular time." The industry in the city does not expect to carry on the fight alone, but will enlist the co-operation of certain parts of the labor element, as well as employes of the post office and the stockyards, all of whom have been reported as firmly against new time.

Prince Sasha Taxis, of Czecho-Slovakia, has been a Chicago visitor for the past week. He expects to start a picture company in his native country, and is visiting in the United States to get pointers. He left Chicago Saturday for Universal City.

The second of the zone meetings of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois will be held November 22 at the Hotel Custer, Galesburg. Notices have been sent to the theatre managers in the nearby towns and a good turnout is expected. William Sweeney, organizer, will go to Galesburg on Monday, and a large Chicago delegation will be present for the meeting.

A junior mortgage of $4,000 has been placed on the Roosevelt Theatre building owned by the Ascher Roosevelt Theatre Company through the Continental Trust and Savings Bank.

Charles H. Shell, Thomas Petrulas and Joseph W. Beem have formed the General Theatres Corporation to operate and build theatres, with a capital of $250,000, and the main office will be at 127 North Dearborn street.

The Apollo Theatre at Dearborn and Randolph streets will pass from the Shubert management to the control of A. H. Woods again, according to a wire received by Manager Lou M. Houseman of the Woods.

The Taylorville Recreation Association, of Taylorville, Ill., has been formed, with a capital of $15,000, to operate amusements in that city.

A. J. Meininger has been appointed manager of the Frolic Theatre on East Fifty-fifth street. He is well known in the local movie circles.

Frank Gehring is now manager of the Commercial Theatre.

Ed Wurzburg has been made manager of the Ascher Peerless Theatre on Grand boulevard.

The Capital Theatre company has been formed by Sol Fichtenberg, Jacob Schwartz and Max Schwartz with a capital of $18,000. The main office is located on North Kedzie avenue.

Kansas City Theatre Loses $11,000 to Adroit Burglars

The Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, was robbed November 13 of $11,000 in cash, which represented Friday, Saturday and Sunday receipts. The loss is covered by insurance. The work of opening the huge safe was done with acetylene gas, burning a hole through two heavy steel doors.

Fred Spear, publicity director, said the receipts were unusually large as the banks were closed Saturday, and it had not been possible to bank receipts for several days.

Phil Ryan, vice president of Capitol Enterprises, who has been ill with a severe attack of pneumonia, is improving rapidly and it is expected that he will be up and around town soon. His many friends will all be glad to see him around the exchange center soon.

Archie Josephson, secretary and treasurer of the Josephson Amusement Company, and treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, has announced the sale of the Empire Theatre, Kansas City, Kans., to Sam Naster.

C. E. ("Doc") Cook, business manager for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, drove to Topeka, Kans., last week, on business.

Harry McClure, who has the Strand Theatre at Emporia, Kans., was in Kansas City the other day.

It has been reported that J. Peery has opened the Peery Theatre, Darlington, Mo.

T. C. Goodnight, owner of the Star Theatre at Warrensburg, Mo., made one of his frequent trips to Kansas City last week.

W. H. Kozel, of the Morrowville Theatre, Morrowville, Kans., was also a visitor at some of the exchanges last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark Wilson, of Chanute, Kas., announce the birth recently of a daughter, Mary Frances. She weighed ten pounds.

H. L. Stout, of the Liberty Theatre at Ft. Scott, Kas., was in town recently.

Harry McKee, who formerly had a theatre at Frontenac, Kans., was in town last week. He is planning on opening several new theatres in the mining district of Kansas, and has contracted for the entire 1922-23 Crescent output.

Judd and Rardin, of the Orpheus Theatre, Excelsior Springs, Mo., were callers.

H. K. McAfee, of the Liberty Theatre at Parsons, Kas., came to town to book some of Warner Brothers latest productions.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, ran a second week at Frank L. Newman's Royal Theatre, Kansas City. The picture has been drawing large crowds for every performance.

T. C. Goodnight of the Star Theatre, Warrensburg, Mo., was in town recently.

W. P. Cuff, who operates the Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Mo., was a visitor.

J. T. Waters was in Kansas City recently purchasing equipment for his new theatre at Lavant, Kas.

G. L. Rugg of the Eureka Theatre, Weston, Mo., was booking pictures.

Pittsburgh Territorial News; Robey Buys His Fourth House

H. H. Robey, who owns the Auditorium theatres in Spencer, Ravenswood and St. Marys', has purchased the Kanawha Theatre in Charlestown, W. Va.

L. V. Heppinger, of the Orpheum Theatre, Clarion, Pa., is putting in a stage and will hereafter introduce a policy of pictures and vaudeville.

Fielding O'Kelly, for nine months manager of the Main Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., has resigned and is now publicity manager for the Grand Amusement Company at Johnstown, Pa.

Mr. Loafstead has purchased the Milfred Theatre at Frederickstown, Pa., from W. S. Bowers, who still owns the building. Mr. Bowers is also proprietor of the hotel in Frederickstown.

Joe Saeli has taken back the Rex Theatre at California, Pa. He is now in possession of both houses in his town. The Rex operates every night, while the Lyric runs on Saturday nights only.

Fred Miller, of the Princess Theatre, Ford City, Pa., in addition to operating his theatre is proprietor of a gents' furnishing store in Ford City. Miller says to tell the road men not to buy that clean collar until they get to his town.

W. P. McCartney's new theatre at Du Bois is getting along very nicely. The foundation work has been completed and Mac says he expects to have it operating by the first of February. The house will seat about 1,000 and be modern in every particular.

Mr. Starisinic, of the Dome Theatre, Butler street, has just been discharged from a Pittsburgh hospital, having completely recovered from an operation for appendicitis.

Mr. Ferro states that he has not decided on the opening date of his new theatre in Bentleyville, although same is near completion. As mentioned in the World some time ago, Mr. Ferro's old house burned to the ground.

Frank Fairgraves, well-known Erie exhibitor, spent a week in Pittsburgh recently, looking over the various attractions offered by local exchanges. Mr. Fairgraves made the trip in his Franklin car and was accompanied by his mother.

Floyd Morrow, manager, and Nat Walken, proprietor, of the Palace Theatre, Washington, Pa., were recent Pittsburgh visitors.

Jacob Domb has sold the Altmeyer Theatre at McKeesport, Pa., to L. R. Meyers, who also conducts the Dreamland Theatre in the same town. The change of ownership took place November 6.

T. V. Barnes is erecting a new picture house to be known as the Liberty at Ellwood City, Pa., which he expects to open on Christmas Day. The house will seat 1,100.

Canada

A self-appointed committee in Quebec City has taken proceedings against the Victoria Theatre, Quebec, for alleged violation of the Lord's Day Act in giving Sunday performances at which an admission was charged. Announcement is also made that the Lord's Day Alliance is also taking action against a prominent local citizen who was one of the patrons of the theatre for a Sunday show. The committee has criticized the civic authorities for permitting the local theatres to be open on Sundays.

"I know that the people of Quebec, especially the laboring classes, are behind me in this affair," declared the proprietor of the Victoria.

In starting the Universal serial at the Gaiety Theatre, Winnipeg, on November 16, Manager Henry Morton opened a historical essay contest for boys and girls to run right through to the end of the picture. The prize was a high-grade bicycle.

Many exchange officials attended the recent opening of the Capitol Theatre, a new 1,480 seat house at Moncton, N. B., the proprietors of which are Messrs. Torrie and Winter.

Hoping for a Bonanza

Charles Greime, owner of the Ivan-L. Theatre, Blaine, Wash., broke all records recently with "The Storm." Mr. Greime is very well thought of in his territory, and his latest announcement has been greeted with enthusiasm. Just across the border in Canada, he owns a big interest in a gold mine, which at present writing looks like such a sure-fire winner that it has inspired Mr. Greime to state that if his investment turns out as anticipated, he will build the finest theatre in the Northwest, in Blaine, as a monument to the industry. Before another year is up, this dream theatre, it is considered extremely probable, will become a reality. At any rate, Greime is some booster.

Buffalo Exhibitors Turn Out for Opening of Fox Exchange

Buffalo exhibitors were out en masse for the opening of the new Fox exchange at 496 Pearl street. There was a big party Thursday night, November 23, with the Yankee Six, a local jazz musical organization, furnishing the melody, and Seames & Zeitler, caterers, the buffet luncheon. William Fox, president, and W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox company, came to town for the event. Buffalo is Mr. Sheehan's home town and it is interesting to note that the new exchange is on the site of the old Sheehan homestead. Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager, and Charles N. Johnston, local manager, received the guests and conducted all on a tour of inspection of the finely equipped two-story structure.

Sidney Gates, who hails from the Loew State in New York, has arrived in Buffalo to succeed Charles Jackson as assistant to Al Beckerich, manager of the big Buffalo Loew State. Mr. Jackson has gone to London, Ont., to assume the assistant managership of the Loew Theatre in his home town.

George Keating, manager of the Jubilee Theatre in Buffalo's Black Rock section, is finding it a difficult problem to please bis patrons. Some of the biggest productions have flivvered at the box office, while the smaller ones bave been big hits. George is of tbe opinion that folks today want at lot of jazz in their film menu. The old melodramatic stuff is becoming passe, he thinks. George ventures the opinion that by the time he is broke he will be able to figure out what the folks want. It's a merry life, states this good-natured exhibitor.

A judgment of $1,919.10 has been taken by default by Lillian B. Talcott in an action against Samuel Carver, former Buffalo exhibitor and manager of the old Empire Theatre. It was claimed Carver sold the plaintiff an interest in the Art Theatre, 1224 Sycamore street, Buffalo, in June, 1920, for $2,000, with a written agreement that if she did not like the bargain in four months he would repurchase her one-quarter interest in the house. The plaintiff swore she desired to sell it back to Carver and that he paid her $355.80 in October, 1920, but failed to pay the balance. The full amount with interest is represented in the judgment, the record stated.

Bruce Fowler, former manager of the Buffalo Elmwood and now manager of Terre Haute's Indiana Theatre, writes that he has a very beautiful house in his new field with prospects of lots of hard work ahead, but feels that he is going to enjoy it very much. Harold B. Franklin was in Indianapolis one day last week and Bruce jumped over to the big city for a conference with the Paramount theatre department chief, who formerly was managing director of Buffalo's Shea's Hippodrome.

By the way, they pulled a funny one on Mr. Fowler and Elmer C. Winegar, the new Elmwood manager, in one of the local newspapers last week. The paper used cuts of both managers, but the makeup man got the lines mixed and they appeared under the caption of "Married 55 Years." Luckily, Mr. Fowler is in Indiana, so there was not a casualty.

E. O. Weinberg, formerly manager of the Buffalo Strand, will remain at the new State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., only until the new Strand opens in Troy. The Troy Theatre will not be ready before February 1.

Movies are back in Bath, N. Y., again. This town recently lost its only picture house when the Park Theatre was burned to the ground. Now Chauncey Goler, of Rochester, has leased the Gem Theatre for a year and pictures are being shown every evening, with Saturday matinee. Mrs. Keekman is in charge of the music and Lambert Fay is the operator. The Comerford Amusement Company, of Scranton, Pa., is building a new picture theatre in the town. It will be ready next spring.

Herbert Houze, the organist at the Buffalo Strand, is making a big hit. His playing is the subject of much favorable comment on the part of Strand patrons. Manager Eugene A. Pfeil put on a Gala Revival last week, changing his bill every day and offering such pictures as "Through the Back Door," "The Miracle Man," "Dream Street," "The Molly-coddle," "Something to Think About," "The Sheik" and "Humoresque." Capacity business was the result.

Forty years ago, M. Slotkin, president and general manager of the Monumental Theatre Corporation, operating the big Buffalo Lafayette Square, was in Boston, working for a small salary. The other evening his old employer happened to be in Buffalo and walked into the big, new $2,500,000 theatre. He was naturally surprised to find his old employe a millionaire.

Yeggs entered the Kensington Theatre, Buffalo, owned by Jim Cardino, battered the combination off the safe, but got nothing of value. Buffalo theatres are proving a rich field for safe-crackers.

Manager Fred M. Shafer, of the Lafayette Square, Buffalo, announces that Anita Stewart will appear in person at the big theatre early in January.

The Central Park Theatre, Buffalo, a link in the General Theatres Corporation chain, is adding vaudeville to its picture bill and finding the venture meeting with success. The house is attracting a lot of automobile business.

Walter Hayes, vice president of the Mark-Strand Theatre interests, with offices in Buffalo, has returned from a motor and hunting trip, feeling like a new man and wishing he could go back again over the same route.

M. Shea will present "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, soon.

Commencing Sunday, December 3, the Strand, Buffalo, and the Goldwyn Company will inaugurate a season of big week runs, commencing with John Barrymore in "Sherlock Holmes." "The Sin Flood" and "Remembrance" will follow. If the stunt is a success many of the other big Goldwyn offerings will be shown. The arrangement is on a percentage basis.

T. Cecil Leonard is putting on some attractive programs at the Olympic, Buffalo, now being operated by Universal. He is featuring prologues.

Indiana

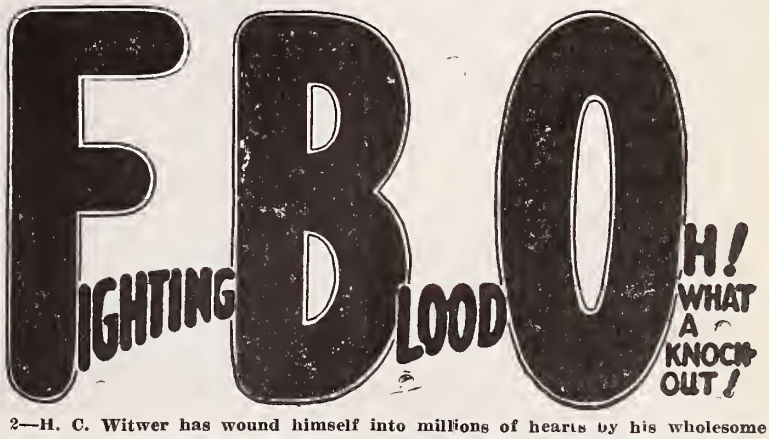
A modern, fireproof picture theatre, seating 1,200, is to be erected in one of Indianapolis's northside residence districts for Gustave G. Schmidt, owner of the Crystal Theatre, and formerly Indianapolis councilman. Construction will be started in about two weeks.

The structure will contain eight storerooms on the ground floor. Work on the theatre part of the building will not be started until spring. The cost of the site and the building, complete, is estimated by Mr. Schmidt at $150,000. The building will be situated at College and Fairfield avenues.

Work of installing the mirrors and plate glass in the new Palace Theatre at South Bend will soon be completed. More than 300 mirrors, ranging in size from 1 foot square to 5 feet square, are being placed in position. The building is now about 90 per cent. completed, according to the contracts, and soon will be ready.

Edward G. Sourbier, one of the owners of the Central Amusement Company, and a stockholder in several Ohio theatres, is no longer a member of the board of public safety in Indianapolis. Mr. Sourbier criticized the police department for failing to take action against a dance staged recently at a banquet of automobile salesmen, and Mayor Shank then asked him to resign, saying he did not think Mr. Sourbier was in sympathy with the workings of the administration.

To advertise the new Strand Theatre at Kokomo, Charles Raymond, manager, recently chartered an airplane and sent an aviator over the business section of the city, distributing 2,000 cards calling attention to the beautiful house. Co-operating with Mr. Raymond, the Kokomo Dispatch arranged to make 200 of the cards good for choice seats.



2—H. C. Witwer has wound himself into millions of hearts by his wholesome humor! His stuff snaps and sparkles with fun and zooms with big action. His name, as every showman knows, spells "BOX OFFICE" in great, golden letters. And as "THE FIGHTING BLOOD" stories are appearing right now in Collier's they are invested with box office power! When Witwer speaks he says a mouthful! And when he declares that this series tops anything he has ever done before—YOU CAN TAKE HIS WORD FOR IT! IT DOES! Produced and distributed by F. B. O.

Theatre Men in Rhode Island Welcome Democratic Governor

With a Democratic governor at the helm and a Democratic Legislature enjoying a prerogative that promises certain liberal deforms, Rhode Island in 1923 will be entertained with Sunday movies. This much is assured, for it has been an open secret that the Democratic party has long been in favor of Sunday picture entertainment, which right now is a matter of local option with cities and towns. In fact, all efforts made in the past to have the General Assembly enact a Sunday opening law have been made by Democratic legislative leaders, who because of a Republican majority, have failed to have such a bill passed.

When Charles Lovenberg, for years Rhode Island representative of the Edward F. Albee enterprises, which control the Victory Theatre, a first run house here; the Empire and Edward F. Albee theatres in Providence, and three other movie houses in Pawtucket, R. I., and Woonsocket, R. I., was taken ill, Mr. Albee sent Harry Crull, of Brooklyn, to succeed him. While Mr. Lovenberg is one of New England's foremost theatre men, the fact remains that with the advent of Mr. Crull all Albee interests here have been boomed.

Last week, to stimulate business, Mr. Crull featured an "Old Home Week" program at the Albee with local talent exclusively on the bill. Result was crowded houses at every performance. The Providence Elks, in appreciation of the wonderful record established by Mr. Crull, and for his apparent interest in all civic matters, last week presented him with a gold card case. Later in the week he presided at a dinner given in his honor at Hotel Biltmore in Providence, R. I.

Matt Rielly, of the Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., has tied up the entire United Artists and Allied Distributors' product insofar as first runs here are concerned. By cleverly advertising the fact that the Victory would show all the Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, David W. Griffith, Richard Barthelmess and George Arliss' features exclusively, Manager Rielly has succeeded in building up an exclusive patronage that is the envy of many showmen.

If Bill Mahoney, one of the most popular exhibitors in New England, succeeds in keeping the pace his Rialto Theatre has set thus far this season, there will be no doubt that the gross business for 1922-23 will show a record-breaking figure. Mahoney is one of the very few New England exhibitors who spends money on exploitation. In fact, his tactics have been so original and attracted such wide comment among theatre-going folk that other exhibitors, forced to acknowledge the value of good exploitation, are following in his footsteps.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," the production financed by New Bedford capitalists, closes a three-week run at the Shubert-Majestic in Providence, Saturday night, Nov. 25. The picture attracted considerable comment and won much favorable newspaper comment and is the only super-special that was ever tried out in this town before being shown in the larger cities of the country.

Felix Wendelschaefer, associated with the Shubert interests, is managing this spacious house where D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" is expected to hold the boards for some time, this engagement starting within a few weeks.

Sol Braunig, who is dividing his time between the Modern and Capital Theatres, has more than been compensated for the time and effort he devoted in putting over the Capitol, formerly the Mayflower Theatre, in Providence, for with a daily change policy this out-of-the-way theatre is playing to an average of four full houses a day. A five-show daily policy is pursued here.

That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Rhode Island, of which Edward M. Fay, of Fay's Theatre, Providence, is president, will play a considerable part in the annual doings of the General Assembly is a foregone conclusion, for theatre owners in Little Rhody have a number of "little things" they want reformed and duly recorded on the state's statute books.

New Milwaukee Is Last Word in Modern Amusement Places

The last word in amusement palaces has been presented to Milwaukee, Wis., with the opening of the New Milwaukee, the city's largest outskirt picture house. It is under the management of George Fischer. The crowd at the opening was so large that hundreds were turned away.

With comfort as his keynote, Mr. Fischer has incorporated in the $300,000 north side theatre virtually every modern idea that makes for the amusement and convenience of his patrons. In the basement are bowling alleys, a grill and a billiard room where the public may go before or after the performances. Adjoining the building is a vacant lot reserved for the parking of automobiles of those attending the show.

The ventilating system alone was installed at a cost of $30,000. The organ cost $25,000. There is a rest room for the women and a smoking room for the men. The theatre itself has been decorated in soft shades of lavender and pink, which lends a tone of warmth to the interior. The seating capacity is 1,200.

Noted for his original ideas, Mr. Fischer has outlined a program which embodies several innovations in Milwaukee, including children's matinees at which pictures chosen especially to please the youngsters will be shown. Punch and Judy shows will be a feature of these performances.

Mr. Fischer plans to run Paramount, First National, Metro and Universal attractions. The set price is 25 cents regardless of the attraction.

As for Mr. Fischer himself, his is an enviable record in the motion picture field. For nine years he was manager of the Alhambra Theatre, when it was considered one of the largest in the country showing films. Several years ago he went to Chicago and took over the management of the Woodlawn. He returned to Milwaukee early last summer to supervise the completion of the new building. He installed the children's playroom at the Alhambra and was the first exhibitor in the city to stage a style show.

All existing records for motion picture attendance in Milwaukee were broken by "When Knighthood Was in Flower," when it was announced that more than 50,000 persons had witnessed it in the first two weeks of its showing at the Garden Theatre.

The attendance on the first two days was given out by Leo A. Landau, theatre manager, as 18,556, thirteen showings being given on Saturday and Sunday. As the third week began the attendance continued at capacity.

The record is considered of special significance because the Garden can seat only 1,432, which is considerably less than the capacity of other houses here.

A twelve-piece orchestra has been engaged by Ralph Wettstein, manager of Ascher's Merrill Theatre. Heretofore an organ has furnished the only music.

Pathe Release

THE MOTORCYCLE IS HUTCHISON'S TRADE-MARK

So the Philadelphia Pathe Exchange used a speed bike to put over the introductory work for the new serial, "Speed." The same stunt can be worked along automobile row by exhibitors.

Los Angeles

Officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., announce the following additions to an already long list of theatrical properties: In the Welshire district the Crescent Theatre at Forty-eighth and Western, formerly owned by Graff Bros., comes in as a new member.

Plans now being formulated indicate that a new picture theatre will be constructed at Fifty-fourth and Western, to be called the New Crescent Theatre. This institution will be erected following a merger of the Crescent and Rivoli theatres, the latter being located at Forty-sixth and Western.

The Rialto Theatre, San Diego, has recently been added to the West Coast chain, W. W. Whitson, present owner, being associated with the West Coast syndicate in future control and mode of operation. The Kinema, California and Plaza Theatres, all located in San Diego, were recent additions to the West Coast chain in association with Whitson.

Chotiner's Theatre, located at Eighth and Western, Los Angeles, has been purchased outright by the West Coast Company.

The Fairyland Theatre, Anaheim, has again been opened after being closed while a modern lighting equipment and projection apparatus were installed.

The Pastime Theatre, Bakersfield, another of the West Coast chain of theatres, has again been re-opened.

The Orpheum Theatre, Riverside, has been purchased by the West Coast Theatres.

The West Coast Theatres expect to have a chain of more than 100 theatres in Southern California within the next six months.

The Loew Theatre in Long Beach has been sold by Ackerman and Harris to Johnson and Fay, who will continue the present policy of vaudeville and pictures. W. J. Johnson has been operating the Palace Theatre in the Beach City.

Manager Bostick of Loew's Theatre celebrated the theatre's first birthday November 12.

Fox Releases for Week November 20

A Charles Jones' vehicle, six exceptional educational half and full reels, a Sunshine Comedy, a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon, and two issues of Fox News comprise the schedule of productions by Fox Film Corporation for the week of November 20, according to announcements from New York headquarters.

"Boss of Camp Four," starring Charles Jones, is one of the best stories ever selected for the virile hero of western drama, Fox says. Many who have previewed the production, which is the work of Arthur P. Haskins, the author, and W S. Van Dyck, the Fox director, have placed it at the pinnacle of Jones' pictures. Release day for "Boss of Camp Four" is November 26.

The Sunshine Comedy is titled "Cupid's Elephant," and also will be ready for distribution November 26. This unusual two-reel laugh-getter offers some of the finest humor William Fox has ever instilled into his short subjects, it is stated.

The six educational releases are "Old Spain," full reel; "Pekin Ducks," half reel; "Camphor," half reel; "Bird Life," full reel; "Bits of Europe,' full reel; and "The Runaway Dog," full reel. The merit embodied in these half dozen feature subjects is said to be of a unique nature and far above that contained in the average picture of their kind.

November 26 is also the date of distribution for "Bumps and Thumps," another hilarity-producing Mutt and Jeff cartoon.

To Follow Closely Text of the Novel

Florence Vidor's expressed determination to picturize Booth Tarkington's great prize winning novel, "Alice Adams," exactly as it was written is emphasized, Associated Exhibitors says, in the selection of players for her cast and their assignment to the various characterizations in the story. The selections were made following an exhaustive study of the field, and the peculiar fitness of each actor to portray a particular role.

Miss Vidor herself will, of course, have the title role. Among others in the cast are Claude Gillingwater, Margaret McWade, Harold Goodwin, Vernon Steel will portray John Russell; Thomas Ricketts, Gertrude Astor, Margaret Landis, Herbert Fortier, Taylor Graves, Fay Holderness, Jay Hunt, Elizabeth Garrison and W. J. Irving.

Selects Fox Films Among 12 Best

The moving picture editor of the New York Times has selected twelve films shown between July 1 and September 30, 1922, which, in his opinion, represent the best output for that period of time shown on Broadway.

Among the twelve pictures mentioned, which are the product of eight different companies, two are Fox pictures, "The Fast Mail" and "Monte Cristo."

Laurette Taylor Finishes Role

Laurette Taylor returned to New York from Hollywood this week, having completed before the Metro camera the enactment of her famous role in "Peg O' My Heart," the celebrated play by J. Hartley Manners, under the direction of King W. Vidor. Mr. Manners, husband of Miss Taylor, served in an advisory capacity during the production of the photoplay and accompanied his wife on the trip.

Fox Announces New Jones Film

Fox Film Corporation announces Paul Schofield's adaptation of Arthur P. Haskins' widely read story, "Boss of Camp Four," as the November vehicle for Charles Jones. The feature will be released Nov. 26.

W. S. Van Dyck directed. Fritzi Brunette has the feminine lead.

Exhibitors Praise Metro Productions

Proof, Metro says, of the box-office power of its recent releases —the Rex Ingram production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," and Robert Z. Leonard's presentation of Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose" —is contained in letters received by the Omaha Exchange of Metro Pictures Corporation. In addition to laudatory comments on these two photoplays, many similar messages are, it is said, being received by showmen who are now presenting another Rex Ingram production, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

William Youngclaus, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Jefferson, Iowa, says of "The Prisoner of Zenda": I have watched the picture three times and each time I see more and more what a beautiful picture it is." The same exhibitor is equally glowing in his comment upon Mae Murray's latest motion picture, "Broadway Rose."

Among the exhibitors who have sent in letters of praise about "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," are E. A. Harms, president of the Mueller Theatre, Omaha, and J. H. Gaylord, of the Lothrop Theatre, Omaha.

Educators Use 'Em

Arrangements have been completed in compliance with requests from various Boards of Education to use photographs presenting scenes from "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" in conjunction with lectures and lessons in English history in public schools in New York and Brooklyn.

Wyndham Standing in New Film

Wyndham Standing is the star of a five-part drama which Playgoers' Pictures announces for release December 3. With him is a supporting cast which is said to be of special merit, with Dorothy Mackaill, who played opposite him in Playgoers' "The Isle of Doubt," in the principal female part.

Names the Cast for Leah Baird Film

Arthur F. Beck sent from Culver City this week a full list of the players in "When Civilization Failed," the production, featuring Leah Baird, lately finished for Associated Exhibitors. This picture was adapted from Dorian Neve's play, "All Mine." In the cast are Bobby Bolder, Walter McGrail, Richard Tucker, and Alec Francis.

High Praise Given to Goldwyn Picture

Seldom does a motion picture receive such flattering reviews at the hands of the New York reviewers of films, says Goldwyn, as they accorded to the adaptation of a Peter B. Kyne story, "Brothers Under the Skin," acted by Helene Chadwick, Claire Windsor, Mae Busch, Pat O'Malley and Norman Kerry. It was the offering at the Capitol Theatre recently.

James Spearing in the New York Times wrote: "The overflowing thanks of a grateful reviewer, and it is hoped many others, are extended to E. Mason Hopper and those responsible with him for the treatment given 'Brothers Under the Skin.'"

Quinn Martin in the World: "This is an exceedingly funny treatment of the extravagant wife problem. There are only five persons in the play and each one of them is ideally cast." . . . Alan Dale in the New York American wrote: "A film of truth, and clever. Oh, it handed me a fine, fat laugh. It was amusing, clever and true."

P. W. Gallico in the Daily News: "Bringing friend wife to this picture, is just as mild a sport as waving a red rag at a bull. For once the male is glorified, and how we like it."

Landon M. Robinson in the Globe: "The picture is exceptional chiefly because of its rich humor and the fact that it is rather a faithful reflection of life. The audience last night was quick in its response to situations that hit home."

Ben F. Holzman in the Mail: "What a wonderful relief it is to find a picture directed by a man with a sense of humor. One and all should bow in thanks. Helene Chadwick does just about the best work of her career."

Evening World: "It's as funny a film conceit as we have beheld for a long, long time." . . . Telegram: "Is going to give all the gentler sex at the matinees a good deal to talk about. The sterner sex will find much in it to arrest their attention. Go to the Capitol and you will recognize in the figures on the screen people that you know in real life."

Journal: "What appeared to appeal most to the spectators of both sexes was its amusing insight into the lives of their neighbors' families. It is a double-barrelled plot."

Telegraph: "So honest and told with so much whimsical humor and tender wistful flashes of sentiment that it is constantly entertaining. If laughs are worth a penny a piece, you ought to get your money's worth."

Journal of Commerce: "A diverting comedy of modern marriage. Throughout the story runs a delightful comedy vein, but underneath the surface is a strata of powerful and realistic drama that imparts to the picture the value of a true and interesting human document."

Overseating Cause of Poor Business

Any ills that the motion picture exhibitors are undergoing in Western Canada are due to overseating, according to W. P. Dewees, original First National franchise holder for Vancouver, who has been spending two weeks in New York as a member of the Rotating Committee.

In asserting that the exhibiting business was far from profitable, Mr. Dewees declared that people were still going to the picture houses in as great numbers as ever, but that the construction of large houses in his territory has squeezed the returns for exhibitors. In Vancouver, where he is general manager for United Theatre, three first-run houses are doing business in a city of 100,000. Two of these, the Allen and Rex, have a seating capacity of 2,000 and 1,000, respectively. In Victoria (population 35,000), the Royal, one of the first-run houses, seats 1,800.

Mr. Dewees does not look for any immediate betterment of conditions, declaring that the situation, which is a local one, must remedy itself.

June Mathis Heads Goldwyn Department

As a preliminary step to a production program which, it is stated, will call for an expenditure of many million dollars in the next six months, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has closed negotiations with June Mathis, one of the most famous and successful scenario writers in the industry to head its editorial department. Her title will be Editorial Director, and it is said she will hold the most responsible motion picture executive position ever held by a woman.

Miss Mathis recently returned from New York to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California, and will at once assume the duties of her new office. She took with her to the Coast the almost completed continuity for Goldwyn's forthcoming production of Gen. Lew Wallace's novel, "Ben Hur," on which she has been working for three months.

"Village Blacksmith" Has Prominent Cast

"The Village Blacksmith" boasts of a cast that is a combination of names long identified with the leading productions in the film industry and several that have been seen in electric lights in front of the leading picture houses. This 1923 melodrama, founded on Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's poem and produced by Fox Film Corporation, is now playing a highly successful engagement at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York. William Walling as John Hammond, the village blacksmith, is a comparatively "newcomer" in pictures, but his work as the sturdy specimen of a true American drawn by the famous poet, give him every right to his position at the head of the class.

An original feature of the picture is the manner in which the character of Ezra Brigham is treated. The cause of all the trouble to the other persons in the story, Ezra has been endowed by Director Jack Ford and Tully Marshall, the impersonator of the part, with a sardonic sense of humor which causes him to smile with grim satisfaction when he is getting even with anyone. As a matter of fact, he grins as often as he frowns and seems to enjoy the unhappiness that he makes others suffer. Set in opposition to the kindly and open-hearted blacksmith, Ezra appears doubly despicable.

Another of the fine qualities of "The Village Blacksmith" is the poetic composition of many of the exterior scenes. There are "shots" of country lanes, "the old swimming hole," and views of peaceful stretches of field and wood that are beautiful in the extreme.

"The Village Blacksmith" is one of the most human and appealing stories that has ever been put on the screen.

"Third Alarm" to Be Shown at Astor

"The Third Alarm," announced by Film Booking Offices of America as a perfect example of "heart-interest thriller," is to have a Broadway run in a "legitimate" house. The Astor Theatre on Broadway, has been selected by F. B. O. to house the new Emory Johnson production during its world premiere. This special will occupy the Astor screen beginning January 7th, for a minimum of four weeks.

"The Third Alarm" will follow "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Trifling Women" and "The Town That Forgot God," which successes have played at the Astor this season.

"The Third Alarm" will be even more lavishly presented than "In the Name of the Law" was.

Von Stroheim Will Direct for Goldwyn

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that it has signed a long term contract with Erich von Stroheim to direct for it productions of great magnitude. The director will also act important roles in some of his pictures.

Mr. von Stroheim handled the megaphone on "The Devil's Pass Key," "Blind Husbands" and "Foolish Wives." He wrote the two latter and starred in them. He is now putting into novel form his story, "Merry Go Round," in collaboration with Georges Lewys.

Strong Cast for "Abysmal Brute"

One of the season's most noteworthy casts has been selected at Universal City for "The Abysmal Brute," a Universal production with an all-star cast headed by Reginald Denny.

The picture is being adapted from a Jack London story of strong character portrayal and vivid action.

Opposite Denny is Mabel Julienne Scott. Hayden Stevenson plays an important part. Buddy Messenger has a wonderful opportunity to add to his success in the previous production.

Dorothea Wolbert, George Stewart, Charles French, Mae Busch, Nell Craig, Crawford Kent and other notable selections have been made.

Hobart Henley is directing.

Big Exploitation for Metro Film

When the Louis Burston production, "Forget-Me-Not," was presented for a week's engagement at the New Theatre, Baltimore, the United Railways, operating the street car lines in the city, transported to the theatre without charge hundreds of children, guests of the Baltimore News, which aided in putting over the picture. A circular was distributed, linking the Forget-Me-Not Day celebration — proclaimed by the Governor—with the name of the picture, and there was much other exploitation.

Changes Title

The title of "Shoe-Bar Stratton," the forthcoming William Fox production starring Tom Mix, has been changed to "Catch My Smoke," according to announcement by the Fox organization.

Nearing Completion

"Penzie," the William Fox version of Florence Bingham Livingston's novel, "The Custard Cup," in which Mary Carr will be featured, is rapidly nearing completion.

Hodkinson Announces Two Big Productions

An announcement of unusual importance to the motion picture trade emanates from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that "The Kingdom Within" and "Dollar Devils," two exceptional Victor Schertzinger specials, will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in the near future.

Both productions, in the estimation of the Hodkinson officials, are ones with genuine sympathetic appeal and interest that will make them decided attractions for the coming season.

"The Kingdom Within" is a story by Kenneth B. Clarke and will be the next release on the Hodkinson program following "Bulldog Drummond." "The Kingdom Within" is said to be particularly strong both from a production value and a box office point of view.

The photography has been ably done by Jole S. Stumar. The cast is composed of many well known players of proven box office popularity. They are Russell Simpson, Pauline Starke, G. Walt Covington, Gaston Glass and Hallam Cooley.

"Dollar Devils," which follows "The Kingdom Within" upon the Hodkinson release schedule, likewise is a production that should find a place in the class of first rate productions, it is said. "Dollar Devils" has a most unique theme which brings some real wholesome comedy to the fore, interspersed with thrills and heart interest.

Australians Praise "Nanook of North"

The latest mails from Australia and New South Wales brought to Pathe evidences that "Nanook of the North" enjoyed a most auspicious introduction to motion picture patrons in those countries. Exhibitors' Alliance Films, Ltd., sole distributors of the Flaherty Eskimo epic for those British possessions, took advantage of the fame of the picture in the United States to arrange for its launching with the highest endorsement.

On the arrival of prints at Sydney, N. S. W., a special showing of "Nanook" was given in the lobby of the Legislative Council at Parliament house.

Sir Joseph Carruthers, vice-president of the Legislative Council, declared this to be the finest out-of-door subject he had ever witnessed. Other Parliamentarians were equally eulogistic in praise of the film, it is stated.

The New South Wales' newspapers gave columns of space to descriptions of the characters and action of "Nanook of the North."

"Dr. Jack" Second of Lloyd's Big Comedies

Beginning with "Dr. Jack," announced for early release, Harold Lloyd's new contract with Pathe lifts the famouse golden rooster trade-mark from the long list of the most distinctive popular short comedies ever screened to a series of feature length productions heralded by a succession of multiple-reelers which have placed the comedian at the top, and in a class by himself among the world's most celebrated laugh-makers.

"Dr. Jack" is Lloyd's sixteenth multiple-reel comedy, and his second of full feature length, the enormously popular "Grandma's Boy" being the first excursion into the larger form. "Dr. Jack" is the costliest of any Lloyd production to date, and was nearly five months in the making. New features of any type show more elaborate settings. The Hal Roach technical staff was called on to build nearly a dozen big sets. These occupied, during the period of the production, the entire 30,000 square feet of the Hal Roach dark stage. One important set was erected on the lawn in front of the home of one of Los Angeles' richest bankers.

At least six times during the production of "Dr. Jack" work was held up while the scenario staff developed new and more original lines of action. The original story and continuity occupied this staff exclusively for weeks, the authors being Hal Roach, Sam Taylor and Jean Havez.

Lucky Lobbies

The lobbies of the many theatres in which Moving Picture World's exclusive Rotogravure pictures are displayed are sure playing in luck!

The people in those lobbies stop to look at the attractive pictures; later, when the exhibitors advertise that the films they illustrated are on the screen, the lobby lookers remember—say "That looked good"—dig for the dough and see the show.

Frame these Rotogravure helps; display them as an addition to your present lobby display.

MAKE YOURS A LUCKY LOBBY.

Worsley to Direct "Notre Dame"

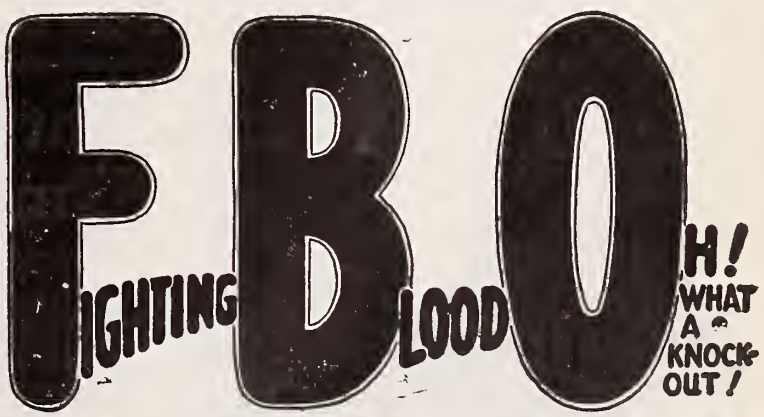
After months of preparation, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Victor Hugo's drama of church and state, life and love, is ready to be translated to the screen by Universal. Lon Chaney will be the star, and Wallace Worsley the director.

It will be made with the artistic experience of the best men in the industry behind it and the resources of Universal City on tap to qualify it as a Universal-Jewel production.

The director is now at the film city and will assemble a cast to support Chaney in the important characterizations of those men and women who were so closely associated with the misshapen worshipper at the shrine of Notre Dame.

Leaves for Mexico

Douglas Fairbanks will soon leave New York for Mexico, where he will remain for a short visit before returning to California. Mary Pickford will accompany him.



3—Witwer has flung open the treasure chest of his superb imagination for the "FIGHTING BLOOD" stories. He is supervising every step of production—has given them his personal, heart-and-soul endorsement as THE GREATEST PICTURES THAT EVER BORE HIS NAME! They're not just FIGHT PICTURES, but wonderful love stories with all the favorite characters—just as they are appearing RIGHT NOW in Collier's before the eager eyes of millions! Gale Galen, the knockout kid himself; lovely Judy Wilcox, old Ajariah Stubbs, "Rags" Dempster, Nate Shapiro and K. O. Kelly—all masterfully portrayed—all masterfully directed by Mal St. Clair. Produced and distributed by F. B. O.

Good Indication

A fresh indication of this season's big business prospects is seen by Pathe in the auspicious flying start recorded for the Eschmann Sales Contest, which opened at midnight on November 4 and will close at midnight, December 30. As a result of the first week of this competition between branch exchange forces, more Pathe product of all types is said to have been booked, and new accounts opened than during the same period of time in the course of any preceding contest.

This contest—which will divide first, second and third prizes totalling about $6,000 in a fixed ratio between managers, assistant managers, salesmen, bookers and cashiers of the winning branches—is named for Pathe General Sales Manager E. A. Eschmann.

Ray Announces Cast of New Picture

Announcement is made from the offices of Charles Ray, Inc., of the full cast in his forthcoming photoplay for United Artists' release, "The Girl I Loved," a picture version of the famous James Whitcomb Riley poem of the same title, and which is purported to tell the story of Riley's own life romance.

Crowds Flock to Griffith Film

Mystery, deep and black, and comedy, light and frivolous, continue to hold sway and draw capacity audiences at the Apollo Theatre, New York, says United Artists, where D. W. Griffith's latest picture, "One Exciting Night," is playing in its fifth week.

Much of the mystery of this mystery picture is due, United Artists says, to C. H. Crocker-King, whose splendid acting in the part of the Neighbor is attracting widespread attention.

Will Push Work on the Laemmle Nine

"A Dangerous Game," Universal's Christmas Day release, was adapted for Gladys Walton from Louis Dodge's story, "Gret'n Ann." King Baggot, one of Universal's leading Jewel directors, took charge of its production. The result is a picture of unusual charm, it is said. A strong cast supported Miss Walton, including Spottiswoode Aitken, Otto Hoffman, Rosa Gore, William Robert Daly, Kate Price, Robert Agnew, Edward Jobson, Anna Schaefer, Christine Mayo, Harry Carter and Jim Gibbs.

"The Flashing Hour," to be released January 1, was written by Mrs. George Randolph Chester, wife of the world famed author. Chester himself prepared the continuity. Frank Mayo was directed in this picture by Edward Sedgwick. Included in the cast were Helen Ferguson, Melbourne McDowell, Charles Clary, Albert McQuarrie and Tom Kennedy.

"The Ghost Patrol," the next picture in the group, was written by Sinclair Lewis, author of "Main Street" and "Babbit." A special cast including Ralph Graves, Bessie Love and George Nichols was selected for it. Nat Ross directed it. The cast includes such well-known players as George B. Williams, Max Davidson, Wade Boteler, Dan Crimmins, Lydia Titus, Melbourne McDowell and others.

"Scarlet Car" Features Rawlinson

The first Edward (Hoot) Gibson release in the group will be "Kindled Courage," from the pen of Leet Rencik Brown. William Worthington directed it, with a cast which included Beatrice Burnham, Harold Goodwin, Harry Townbrook, James Gordon Russell and Albert Hart.

"The Scarlet Car," scheduled for release January 22, is a Herbert Rawlinson vehicle directed by Stuart Paton, one of Universal's Jewel directors. The picture is adapted from one of Richard Harding Davis' "scarlet car" series. Claire Adams is the leading woman. Edward Cecil, Norris Johnson, Tom McGuire, Mark Robbins and Tom O'Brien are in the cast. It is said to be Rawlinson's best picture.

"The Power of a Lie" is a screen adaptation of Johann Bojer's world famed novel, which won him the highest French literary prize. George Archinbaud is directing it with a special cast, which includes Mabel Julienne Scott, June Elvidge, David Torrence, Earl Metcalf and Maude George.

"The First Degree," the second Mayo picture in the mid-winter schedule, was formerly called "The Summons," from the story of that name by George Patullo, popular Saturday Evening Post writer. Edward Sedgwick is directing it. Sylvia Breamer is the leading woman. Others in the cast are Philo McCullough, George A. Williams and Harry Carter.

The February 13 release in the Laemmle Nine will be "The Love Letter," a Gladys Walton picture adapted from Hugh Bradley King's story, "The Madonna of Ave. 'A.'" King Baggot is directing it. In the cast are Edward Hearn, Fontaine La Rue, Alberta Lee, George Cooper, Walter Whitman and others.

"Hoot" Gibson's Picture

The last release of the Laemmle Nine will be "The Gentleman from America," an Edward "Hoot" Gibson picture adapted from "Alias Sebastino," an amusing A. E. F. story by Raymond L. Schrock. In it Gibson plays the role of a doughboy who goes A. W. O. L. into Spain and gets mixed up with a brigand, a senorita and a blood feud. It is said to be hilarious from start to finish, and by far the best thing Gibson has ever attempted.

Edward Sedgwick is directing the feature, with a supporting cast which includes Louis Lorraine, Tom O'Brien, Sydney De Grey, Evelyn Sherman, Carmen Phillips and others.

The Laemmle Nine will be expedited so that the prints will all be in the various Universal Exchanges before the release date of the first of the series.

Paramount Sees Two Films As Big Hits

In the Cosmopolitan production of Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Pride of Palomar," and Gloria Swanson in Sam Wood's production, "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," which are scheduled for release November 26, Paramount says it announces two of its strongest box-office pictures of the current year.

"The Pride of Palomar" was directed by Frank Borzage, who produced "Humoresque," "The Good Provider," "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," "Back Pay" and "The Valley of Silent Men." The scenario was written by Grant Carpenter and John Lynch. The cast is headed by Forrest Stanley and Marjorie Daw.

Beautiful views of Europe's most fashionable water resort; an absorbing murder trial; colorful action at a fine country estate, and Gloria Swanson in an interesting array of brand new Paris gowns, are announced as high lights of "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," which was adapted by Percy Heath from a novel by David Lisle. Sam Wood directed. Conrad Nagel plays opposite the star.

Wins Contest

Katherine MacDonald wa declared winner recently in popularity contest held b George J. Wehner, a Ne York exhibitor with a strin of twelve theatres.

Miss MacDonald, accordin to the survey of letters tha accompanied the votes, wo her distinction particularly i the three or four recent pic tures in which she is starre They included "Heroes an Husbands," "Domestic Rela tions" and "White Shoulders.

Distinctive Pictures Signs Edith Robert

Edith Roberts has been sign by Distinctive Pictures Corpo tion to play the leading femin role in their first all-star produ tion, "Backbone," a Saturd Evening Post story by Clarer Budington Kelland which w completed in the November issue.

Miss Roberts, whose work Shamrock O'Day in the big Cel de Mille special, "Saturd Night," was one of the outstan ing features of that picture, r cently arrived in New York fro the coast to confer with Arth S. Friend, president of Distin tive Pictures Corporation; Hen M. Hobart, production manag and Edward Sloman, who w direct.

"Backbone" is a melodrama story with an unusual twist a a strong romantic interest. T work on production begins th week. The Biograph studios, 176th street, have been leased f the making of the picture.

Announcement has not yet be made of any other member of th cast, although it is to be an a star production, and it is rumore that some very interesting di closures will soon be made.

Hodkinson's Guest at Film Showing

Members of the Sulgrave Inst tution were the guests of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation la week to witness the showing "The Headless Horseman" "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow featuring Will Rogers as Ichabo Crane, and released by Hodkin son on November 5.

The Sulgrave Institution is society organized in this countr and in Great Britain for th preservation of the Sulgrav Manor in England, which was th birthplace of the ancestors George Washington.

Goes on Vacation

Following the completion o George Ade's "Back Home an Broke," which he has been mak ing at Paramount's Long Islan studio under the direction o Alfred Green, Thomas Meighan has gone to White Sulphu Springs, W. Va., for a vacation o two weeks. He was accompanied on the trip by Laurance Wheat who has been in Meighan's last three Paramount pictures.

Students Write on "Knighthood"

Two hundred and fifty students were chosen from the English classes at Marquette University in Milwaukee to view the Cosmopolitan picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies and then write their opinions of it.

The students were assigned to the production because of the immense impression it has created all over the country and because of the unlimited opportunity it affords for describing costuming, properties, scenery, etc.

The instructors in English decided that this picture, more than any other which has been made, offers the greatest possibilities for developing originality of expression and instruction.

The variety of scenes and the accuracy with which the life of the Tudor period is depicted are other features which prompted the instructors to avail themselves of the opportunity for their classes.

"Smilin' Through" Given Long Run

Indicative of the way in which First National's "Smilin' Through" has taken London by storm is the announcement, just received at the New York office of First National Pictures, that the engagement of this feature has been extended for another month at the West End Theatre, London.

English critics and reviewers say that this production indicates that American producers have demonstrated their ability to combine art with commercial success.

H. C. Witwer Helping to Direct

Mal St. Clair, director of the "Fighting Blood" series of two-reel subjects now in production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, is in daily consultation with H. C. Witwer, author of these stories, which are now appearing at regular intervals in Collier's Weekly.

Mr. Witwer's suggestions in regard to plot development and characterizations have proved invaluable in the production of the first two pictures, "Fighting Blood," from which the entire series takes its name, and "The Knight in Gale," which have just been completed. Production will start this week on the third of the series.

Back from Vacation

Helene Chadwick has returned from a vacation spent on Catalina Island. Not until she got back did her friends know where she had been, for she kept her haunt a secret in order that she might have a complete rest. The Goldwyn Company is said to have several excellent parts in mind for Miss Chadwick. She will be seen next in Frank Lloyd's production of "The Sin Flood," in which she and Richard Dix are featured.

Madge Bellany, who has been signed by Arthur S. Kane to star in a series of productions for Associated Exhibitors, and Clark W. Thomas, producer of the Madge Bellany pictures.

Madge Bellamy Added to Kane's Star List

Straight from her triumph in "Lorna Doone," Maurice Tourneur's production, in which she is heavily featured by Thomas H. Ince, with fresh laurels assured on the early release, also through First National, of another big Ince production, "The Hottentot," in which she and Douglas MacLean are the outstanding figures, Madge Bellamy has just entered the galaxy of Associated Exhibitors' stars.

Announcement of this alliance was made by Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated, immediately upon his return to New York from the West Coast. The contract for the distribution by Associated of a series of features starring Miss Bellamy was signed just before Mr. Kane left Los Angeles, and followed conferences of the executive with the popular player and her business associates.

Regal to Produce

Regal Pictures, Inc., is the new organization which will make the Madge Ballamy features, with Clark W. Thomas in charge. Promise is given that the name of the first on the list will be divulged soon, and that production work will be under way shortly.

Miss Bellamy's rise to stellar position has been meteoric, and it is a fact not without romantic interest that it was in one of the productions of the company which is elevating her to stardom that she made her first screen appearance. Her film career began only two years ago, when she played Marie Meyer in "The Riddle: Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar.

Kane Gratified

President Kane expressed extreme gratification at the selection by Clark W. Thomas and Miss Bellamy of Associated Exhibitors for the distribution of her coming features and at the entire success of the negotiations resulting in her enlistment under Associated's banner. He was enthusiastic in predicting that the series of offerings in which she will be starred will prove among the greatest and most popular attractions ever submitted to the public by his organization.

Metro Pictures Corporation announces the purchase of "Her Fatal Millions," a story by the well-known magazine writer, William Dudley Polley. This will be used as one of the series of pictures starring Viola Dana and directed by Harry Beaumont.

Joins Universal

Joe Weil has been engaged as exploitation manager for Universal's Big "U" Exchange. Weil's territory will include the 1,100 exhibitors in the metropolitan district.

Puts Big Thrills in "Strangers' Banquet"

Marshall Neilan has put a sequence of sensational thrillers into his new production, "The Strangers' Banquet," which, according to reports around the Goldwyn studio, will make his well remembered thrills in "Go and Get It" look like placid sunset scenes.

Mr. Neilan chartered a complete Santa Fe train, four miles of roadbed and a half dozen high-powered automobiles in the hands of as many daredevil drivers. With these ingredients he proceeded in collaboration with Frank Urson, director, to concoct something novel in the way of hair-raisers.

The sequence leads up to the thrilling automobile wreck in Donn Bryne's novel when the flighty wife of John Keogh and one of her admirers kill themselves through reckless driving after a night of festivities.

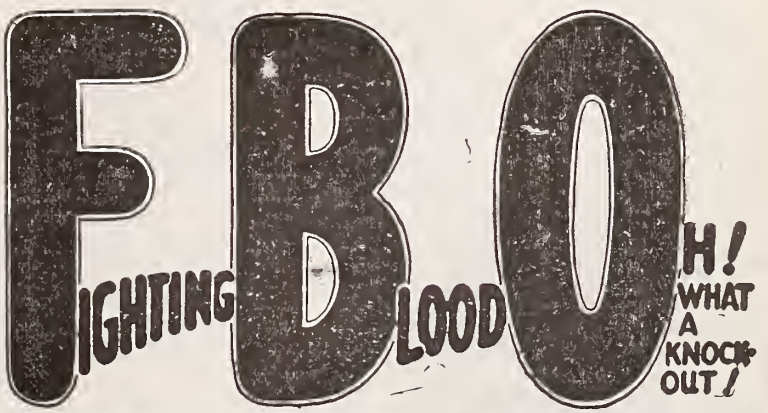
One of the effects that is expected to make the audience hold its breath takes place when an automobile full of revelers careens in front of an on-rushing train and—but "Mickey" wants to keep his thrills a secret.

Goldwyn to Screen "Gambling Chaplain"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased the screen rights to a short story by Gerald Beaumont, which appeared in the December, 1921, issue of the Red Book Magazine, called "The Gambling Chaplain." This story is one that attracted wide attention upon its appearance. It was later dramatized by George Broadhurst and produced in New York with Macklyn Arbuckle.

Making Her Debut

Gertrude Quinlan, well-known musical comedy actress, is making her debut in motion pictures in "Back Home and Broke," George Ade's story for Thomas Meighan, Paramount star.



4—A word about the "FIGHTING BLOOD" stories. Imagine a lowly soda jerker in a small town who tumbles into fame overnight as a pugilist! Imagine what a master writer like Witwer can do with such a character. Imagine what romance, what humor and drama, what laughs and what thrills! And then imagine what a series to exploit with F. B. O.'s own special brand of super-showmanship—big-fisted advertising and accessories! Imagine, too, what it means to YOU to have them RUNNING RIGHT NOW IN COLLIER'S WITH MILLIONS OF READERS GOBBLING 'EM UP! If you ever had an honest-to-God clean-up staring you right in the face, Mr. Showman, HERE IT IS!

Produced and distributed by F. B. O.

Miss Eddy Stars in F. B. O. Release

Helen Jerome Eddy will have Harrison Ford as leading man in her first starring vehicle, "When Love Comes."

The film is a Ray Carroll production soon to be released through the Film Booking Offices of America.

Carey Has Finished F. B. O. Picture

Under the direction of Val Paul, Harry Carey has completed "Canyons of the Fools," adapted from Richard Matthews Hallett's story of the same name.

This will be the third Carey production on the Film Booking Offices release schedule. It will be an early 1923 release.

"Human Hearts" a Hit in Buffalo

The new Olympic Theatre, Buffalo's newest first run house, recently opened with "Human Hearts," the Universal-Jewel production starring House Peters.

The picture, it is stated, was a big box office success and was a happy choice as a house opener, it was reported to Universal.

"Jerry Comes Home" to be F. B. O. Film

Film Booking Offices of America has purchased the screen rights to "Jerry Comes Home," a four-act play by Roy Briant. It will be put into production at the R-C studios at an early date.

American Releasing Receives Prints

First prints of the initial Frank R. Adams' production, "The Super-Sex," have arrived from Los Angeles at the home offices of American Releasing Corporation, distributors of the picture.

It was picturized and directed by Lambert Hillyer, whose most recent work is "Skin Deep."

Fairbanks to Play Pirate Part

Following "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," now in its fourth week at the Lyric Theatre and "The Three Musketeers," the energetic Doug has decided to portray on the screen as his next subject, the colorful character of the ancient pirates.

Henry Hull and Mary Thurman co-starring in "Midnight," a comedy photo drama to be handled through Producers Security Corporation.

Marion Davies Work Given Big Praise

Seldom does it fall to the lot of an actress to receive such a unanimous tribute of praise from dramatic critics all over the country as that which has been accorded Marion Davies for her portrayal of Princess Mary Tudor in the marvelous Cosmopolitan picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Swept over-night to the dazzling pinnacle of one of the leading stars of the screen, Miss Davies is now reaping the reward for the long months of arduous work put in while the film was being made.

The role of Princess Mary is one of the most difficult imaginable because the princess was an impulsive, adorable girl of many moods and because the set of circumstances confronting her called out every side of her many-faceted character.

Lloyd A. Wilhoit, of the Atlanta Constitution, declares: "Miss Davies' work in 'When Knighthood Was in Flower' is a work of art; she plays as though the spirit of the turbulent princess had settled into her heart and in such an unstudied way as to almost make one believe she actually lived four centuries ago, her beauty the trading stock of a buffoon king and the toy of a shrunken, aged monarch and her love the most unimportant thing in all the old European net of intrigue and plotting.

"Alternately melting and cold, haughty and yielding, she is swept by fury and tenderness in turn; one moment brave with regal courage, the next reduced to the miserable desperation of the simplest peasant girl of France. The part is one of the most difficult than can be imagined and Miss Davies' triumph in it is a vindication of her ability as the true artist."

Book Week Tie-ups Bring Big Results

To what extent National Book Week has been a success can only be gauged vaguely by the compilers of statistics, but from the offices of First National Pictures come some definite figures as to the results achieved by taking advantage of this nation-wide movement to arouse exhibitor and public interest in films that were affected.

Almost 300 additional bookings for pictures based on books of national reputation and literary merit were obtained as the result of plugging the National Book Drive in connection with civic and literary organizations to promote good reading.

Such pictures as "The Last of the Mohicans," "Kindred of the Dust," "Pilgrims of the Night," "Penrod," "Bob Hampton of Placer," "The River's End," "One Clear Call" and "All for a Woman," all of them based either on well-known books or famous historical characters, shared in the interest of Book Week.

Titled by Hopwood

Avery Hopwood, noted dramatist, has written the titles for "Slippy Mcgee," the Oliver Morosco production that is being released this month by First National.

Mlle. Narcita Engaged for Picture

Mlle. Narcita, young Spanish motion picture star, will make her American film debut in Cosmopolitan Productions' picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's "The Enemies of Women," now in production under the direction of Alan Crosland, which features Lionel Barrymore and Alma Reubens.

Although this is Mlle. Narcita's first appearance in an American film, she has won great popularity in Europe and in Canada as the star in numerous big productions.

Filming Is Well Under Way

The filming of "Midnight," the Syracuse Motion Pictures Company's latest production in which Henry Hull and Mary Thurman are co-starring, is well under way. Hamilton Smith is directing.

Producers' Security Corporation will handle the releasing arrangements of "Midnight" as well as all other Syracuse Motion Pictures Company productions.

American Releasing Finishing Film

Produced by Cardinal Pictures Corporation and scheduled for distribution by American Releasing, "The House of Solomon" is nearing completion at the Whitman Bennett studios under the direction of Lawrence C. Windom. It is a character comedy-drama dealing with every day types.

Will Soon Start on New Film

Following the completion of "The Scarlet Lily," on which work is now being finished, Katherine MacDonald will begin production of "Refuge," a story of adventure, written for the star by Lois Zellner.

Better Than Stage Play

Fritz Leiber, who played opposite Julia Marlowe in the stage production of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," declares that the Cosmopolitan picturized version starring Marion Davies is far superior to the legitimate effort. Mr. Leiber was appearing in Shakespearean repertoire in Milwaukee the same week the picture was shown there and took the opportunity to see it. He pronounced it the greatest motion picture production he ever saw.

On Way East

Edith Roberts, one of the stars in John M. Stahl's latest Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction, "The Dangerous Age," has left for New York to play the lead in "Backbone," a Clarence Buddington Kelland story now running in the Saturday Evening Post, which Distinctive Pictures Corporation will produce. It is reported that Edward Sloman will direct the picture.

Will Dramatize Commandments

As a result of the nation-wide contest for an idea for his next motion picture production, Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced through the offices of the company that he will dramatize the Ten Commandments and make of them the biggest picture of his career as a producer.

This decision was reached through a contest, conducted by the Los Angeles Times, in which Mr. DeMille offered one thousand dollars for a single idea, expressed in not more than three hundred words, which would serve as a basis for a picture. At the close of the contest it was announced that he had decided to award eight first prizes of one thousand dollars each, but the nature of the suggestions were kept a secret until Monday.

The scenario for the picture is already being prepared by Jeanie Macpherson, who has adapted all of Mr. DeMille's stories for the screen, and production will commence April first.

First National Has 7 Pictures in Work

Seven producing companies, whose activities cover a scope of territory that ranges from California to Paris, France, are at present working or about to commence work on productions that are scheduled to be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Under the direction of Henry King, Richard Barthelmess has just completed "Fury" for early release. In the Latin quarter of Paris, Richard Walton Tully is directing atmospheric shots for "Trilby," which will follow "Omar, the Tentmaker," as his contribution to the First National schedule.

Edwin Carewe has begun cutting and assembling his first release for First National, still untitled, which was made around New York City embracing scenes taking in familiar landmarks.

Allen Holubar has just returned to California from Vancouver, B. C., and Montreal, where he selected locations for "The White Frontier," which he will shortly start filming. Katherine MacDonald and her company have just returned to Hollywood from location at Arrowhead Lake, where many scenes were "shot" for the star's next picture, "The Scarlet Lily."

Maurice Tourneur is hunting the San Francisco waterfronts for antique vessels to use in connection with his forthcoming production, "The Isle of Dead Ships."

Frank Lloyd has started for the East, where he will "shoot" prison scenes at Auburn and Sing Sing for a film in which Norma Talmadge will star.

In addition to the features named above, additional units starring Jackie Coogan, and the regular Thomas H. Ince contributions are now being made for the First National schedule.

Live on Train to Film "Go-Getter"

Long Island commuters who got home to cold dinners and wrathful wives several nights this week blamed it on "The Go-Getter," Cosmopolitan's picturization of a Peter B. Kyne story, now being directed by E. H. Griffith. For three days and three nights the members of the company engaged in the making of the picture lived aboard a special train of three cars, chartered from the Long Island branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the while "exteriors" for the picture were taken.

In this special train were three motor generating sets which gave an illumination at night that attracted natives of Long Island at every stop from Mineola to Hicksville. During the "shooting" of the scenes the entire company worked three "days" from sunset to sunrise, this particular part of the picture calling for nothing but night scenes. The most spectacular scene filmed was one in which an aeroplane races with an express train. In this scene Cosmopolitan employed the services of Pilot MacMillan, of Curtiss Field.

During the filming of the aeroplane-express train scene, T. Roy Barnes, who plays the lead in the picture, narrowly escaped death twice. In the scene, Barnes, after alighting from the plane, flags the oncoming train. Although the train was approaching at the rate of forty miles an hour, Barnes held to his post in the center of the tracks until the driving locomotive was within fifteen feet of him. In fact, the daring of Barnes so frightened the engineer and Director Griffith, who was in the cab, that both men yelled warning cries to the actor. Two "shots" were taken and each time Barnes waited until the last second before leaving the tracks.

Gives High Praise to Arliss Picture

Characterizing George Arliss as "one of the foremost actors and impersonators of the day," and declaring that the latest Arliss photoplay, a Distinctive Pictures feature released by United Artists' Corporation, "is something way above the average" and "a picture that will appeal to everybody," the editor of the Savannah Press wrote a lengthy editorial on Mr. Arliss and his picture on the occasion of the engagement at the Arcadia Theatre, Savannah.

"The very elements which make the motion picture a potent power for entertainment, education, moral influence and general usefulness carry to those who control it an exactly measurable responsibility," says the editorial, the writer of which formerly occupied a high position in the United States diplomatic service. "Some of the pictures are open to criticism. Primarily a source of entertainment and amusement, some of them degenerate, and some of the more prominent screen stars have been identified in tragedies and scandals which have reflected no credit upon the moving picture industry.

"So many people attend moving pictures and the influence of this form of entertainment is so great that this must be our excuse for speaking of the delightful representation of George Arliss at the Arcadia Theatre. Arliss is one of the foremost actors and impersonators of the day. Everything that he is identified with on the screen or stage is clean and wholesome. So the beautiful representation of 'The Man Who Played God' this week left an impression.

"We realize that the motion picture producers are not asked to preach sermons, but this film of Arliss' is something way above the average show of the kind. If it is necessary to give different types of pictures for the various types of tastes and interests here is one that will appeal to everybody, and its effect is distinctly uplifting. It is an earnest of better service by motion picture producers. If the producers progress on this line their effort will lead to an accomplishment that will mean the largest possible usefulness."

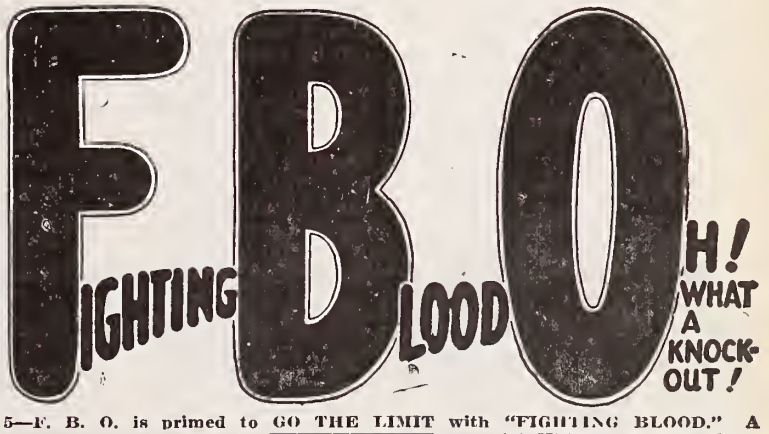
Ray Working on February Release

Charles Ray in the guise of a lover of perfervid and stormy emotion—it doesn't seem quite natural. But that is what is promised in his latest photoplay production and his second picture for United Artists' Corporation release, "The Girl I Loved," now in the editing and titling process for release next February.

Heretofore the romances in Mr. Ray's pictures have composed a rather jocular background with stress placed on the humorous details of the story. In "The Girl I Loved," the star, it is said, will put to blush all claimants for the title of supreme swain of the screen.

"The Girl I Loved" has a historical interest because its principals are real people and its story its real biography. The film draws from practical obscurity the personal romance of James Whitcomb Riley in youth (which character Ray portrays) and the young miss of whom he wrote in the poem of the same title as the picture.

While the picture version is largely of serious and impassioned drama, the lighter side of life in the Indiana of 1860, the period in which the events took place, and the picturesque character of the life of that time are shown in a way that gives the picture variety and presents Charles Ray in one of those portrayals of mischievous boyhood which have earned for him a world-wide popularity.



5—F. B. O. is primed to GO THE LIMIT with "FIGHTING BLOOD." A national advertising and exploitation campaign in Collier's Magazine will start the ballyhoo—a ballyhoo that will DRAG MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN TO YOUR BOX OFFICE! Combine this with the fact that Witwer's stories are running in Collier's RIGHT NOW and you will have a better idea of the box office potentialities of these great comedy attractions! Produced and distributed by F. B. O.

Delivers Films by Aeroplane

Fox Film Corporation, Ltd., of Australasia, has launched a unique exploitation campaign by which its pictures, specials as well as short subjects, will be distributed to exhibitors throughout the Commonwealth by aeroplane carriers.

Captain Tracey and Lieut. Butler, of the Australian Aircraft Forces, two airmen who particularly distinguished themselves in France during the World War, have been engaged to distribute Fox productions and conduct a special advertising campaign in New South Wales in the interests of the exhibitors.

The two aviators began their exploitation flight during the Fox Anniversary Week, September 10 to 16, leaving Sydney in their Avro planes on a special three weeks' tour of the towns of New South Wales. The new campaign has met with an enthusiastic reception on the part of Australian exhibitors, who are, Fox says, guaranteed bigger and better box-office returns than ever experienced in the history of motion pictures in Australasia.

Lincoln Will Have Lead in Arrow Film

E. K. Lincoln, who recently completed work in the leading role in "The Woman in Chains," for Amalgamated Pictures, Inc., has been signed by Martin Heyl to play the lead in "The Little Red School House," for Arrow release. Mr. Lincoln, who played opposite Martha Mansfield in "The Woman in Chains," will have the same capable actress with him in this newest Arrow offering, which is now in process of production at the Tilford Cinema Studios in West 44th Street, New York. John G. Adolphi is directing.

Among Mr. Lincoln's recent productions are "The Light in the Dark," with Hope Hampton and "Women Men Marry," directed by Edward Dillon, with Florence Dixon in the leading feminine role. "The Little Red School House" has a notable cast, including, besides Miss Mansfield, such well known artists as Edmund Breese, Rose Coghlan and Sheldon Lewis, has already been gathered together. Arrow officials says that "The Little Red School House" will be elaborately produced.

Mr. Lincoln will be seen in the role of a young schoolmaster, and it is said, that the part calls for the full display of the dramatic talents which have won him his large following. It is expected that "The Little Red School House" will be ready for release early in January.

Tourneur to Direct Four for M. C. Levee

Maurice Tourneur has contracted with M. C. Levee, president of United studios, for a series of four pictures to be released through First National. Work on the first of these, Crittenden Marriott's novel, "The Isle of Dead Ships" has already been started.

Accompanied by a technical staff of thirty, Mr. Tourneur has begun construction of a fleet of ships that will duplicate nautical history of more than a century ago.

"The Isle of Dead Ships" is, it is said, a novel that affords abundant scope for the spectacular play and sensational shots for which Mr. Tourneur has built up a reputation.

Casting is to be begun shortly and within another week it is expected that the full list of players can be announced.

Get BULLDOG DRUMMOND Dead or Alive!

In Cosmopolitan Film

Helen Lee Worthing, of the Ziegfeld "Follies" and pronounced by artists as one of America's most beautiful women, is appearing in Cosmopolitan picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's "The Enemies of Women."

To Work in Baltimore

The Cosmopolitan Company making "The Go-Getter," by Peter B. Kyne, left for Baltimore this week to work on exteriors of the picture. T. Roy Barnes and Seena Owen are featured in the cast, which also includes William Norris, Tom Lewis, Frederick Santley, John Carr, William J. Sorelle and Jane Jennings.

Built Town to Film Metro-SL Picture

An indication of the large scale on which the photoplay "Quincy Adams Sawyer" was produced, is contained in the information just made public by Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of this Metro-SL (Sawyer-Lubin) Special production.

In order to represent faithfully the locale of the story, a typical New England town was erected at the Metro studios in Hollywood; to portray its famous people, fourteen players were chosen, each of whom has an established reputation as an expert character delineator; and for the actual translation to the screen of the novel, of which more than 1,000,000 copies have been sold, an exceptionally well suited director was engaged to follow a scenario prepared by a craftsman skilled in the art of adaptation.

In Clarence G. Badger, director of established skill, the suitable director was found.

Bernard McConville, who has to his credit many of the leading screen successes of the past few years, was chosen to do the adaptation. His most recent accomplishment was the screen version of Mark Twain's delightful story, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," one of the most notable successes of recent sessions.

Among the noted actors in the cast are Blanche Sweet, Lon Chaney, Barbara La Marr, John Bowers and Louise Fazenda.

"Old Spain" Shows Popular Spanish King

Kings are notoriously camera shy. Although it is not denied that they have their petty vanities; in fact some monarchs would never go down in history if it were not for this failing—their "royal nibs" don't relish having their "mug" shot by the ubiquitous camera hound and flashed all over the world for the delectation of the "common" people.

King Alfonso of Spain, however, is a regular fellow and is as much at home at a bull fight, tennis match or athletic meet as he is at a pink tea. Alfonso has even gone into the movies. Not as an actor, however. He will be seen in one of the current Fox Educational Entertainments called "Old Spain," according to announcement by William Fox.

"Old Spain" is a camera jaunt through the most interesting spots of this picturesque country, showing the beautiful Spanish Senoritas, ancient and historic cities, famous watering places and other points of Southern Europe well known to the American tourists. "Old Spain" is pronounced one of the most interesting of the first twelve Fox Educational Entertainments.

Has Prominent Role

William Norris, whose portrayal of the role of King Louis XII of France in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" has been pronounced a triumph in characterization, is playing one of the leading parts in Cosmopolitan's "The Go-Getter," by Peter B. Kyne, now in production under the direction of E. H. Griffith. T. Roy Barnes and Seena Owen are featured in the picture.

A Scene from Arrow Film Corporation's latest feature, "Night Life in Hollywood," starring a galaxy of popular players.

EDITH ROBERTS
Who will star in "Backbone," to be made by Distinctive Pictures Corp. from Clarence Buddington Kelland's novel.

W. Ray Johnston Starts On Trip

W. Ray Johnston, vice president of Arrow Film Corporation, left New York last week for a flying trip to Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. While he is away it is expected that he will go into conference with various executives in the above-named territory who are handling the Arrow product.

In a wire received at the home office of Arrow Film Corporation from Mr. Johnston, he said, in part, that economic conditions in the territories visited, so far as he was able to determine, were excellent and showed every promise of a brilliant year ahead.

"Java Head" Nearly Completed

With the end of George Melford's production for Paramount, "Java Head," approaching at the Long Island studio, some of the leading members of the cast are already taking leave of the fellow members of the cast to return to the West Coast where they have been cast for future pictures. Others will begin shortly to arrive here from California to take their places as members of casts of pictures soon to be filmed in the East, including Mr. Melford's next.

Innovations Made at Mark Strand

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre, made several innovations during the run of Hope Hampton's "The Light in the Dark," and in addition to introducing a new idea in overture presentation, in which he used the Mark Strand Ballet Corps to interpret a collection of melodies by Schubert, made a symposium of Neapolitan songs and dancers to adhere to the medieval spirit of the picture.

Paramount Convention Opens in Los Angeles

One of the biggest receptions accorded the delegates to any convention ever held in Los Angeles marked the arrival in the West Coast metropolis Monday of the special train bearing the Eastern contingent for the Paramount sales convention.

Mayor George E. Cryer, of Los Angeles, and delegations from both the Los Angeles and Hollywood chambers of commerce whose efforts made possible the holding of the big meeting at the Western film capital, and officially welcomed Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Kent and the rest of the visitors.

At the train also were a large number of Paramount stars, directors and leading players, including Gloria Swanson, Agnes Ayres, Sam Wood, Lewis Stone, Walter Hiers, Antonio Moreno and others. A blare of lively music from the Los Angeles American Legion band greeted the visitors as they stepped off the train and made their way to the waiting automobiles through a shower of ripe California oranges thrown by Maude Wayne, pretty Paramount actress, from a float built to represent a huge orange.

Over one hundred automobiles formed in line and headed by the band the visitors proceeded to the Paramount exchange at 924 South Olive St., where Messrs. Zukor, Lasky, Kent and Herman Wobber, West Coast district manager, reviewed the passing machines which carried the delegates and scores of Southern California exhibitors who had gathered to welcome Mr. Zukor and his associates.

The business sessions of the convention started according to schedule on Tuesday morning at the Hotel Ambassador, with S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, presiding. On Tuesday evening the big social feature of the convention was held at the Lasky studio when hundreds of actors and studio production executives joined in honoring the visitors at a banquet held in the prehistoric forest setting for Cecil B. DeMille's current production, "Adam's Rib."

Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the company, acted as toastmaster, and in opening the postprandial formalities he expressed his recognition of the importance of this, the first Pacific Coast meeting of the distribution department of the company.

"The thing that this convention augurs," said Mr. DeMille, "is a closer co-operation between the men who make pictures and those who sell them. And this co-operation will bring closer contact with the public which is really the big goal of all of us. Our greatest duty is to serve the public with the highest grade of entertainment possible, and meetings such as this are certain to bring that duty closer to perfect fulfillment."

The Eastern delegation was given a great send-off at the Grand Central station in New York when the special train left Thursday afternoon. Shortly before 5 o'clock a big surprise was sprung when a band composed of members of the Rialto and Rivoli orchestras, followed by fifty of the two theatres' ushers in uniform, marched into the big concourse where the departing delegates had gathered. As the party filed through the gates to the train shed a flood of arc lights was turned on and motion pictures of entire party was taken. These pictures were shown the same night at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres.

A three-hour stop at Chicago enabled the delegation to visit Jones, Linick & Schaefer's new McVicker's Theatre. The next day at Kansas City Mayor Frank Cromwell, heading a big delegation from the local chamber of commerce, met the train and officially extended an invitation to hold the next convention in Kansas City.

Tickets Sell Fast for Goldwyn Dance

The Goldwyn dance, scheduled for Friday night, December 15, on the Roof Garden of the Astor Hotel, is going to be one of the biggest film events of the season. preparations for the big event and Goldwyn employees are putting all kinds of energy and pep into the preparations for the big event and they intend to make it something long to be remembered.

Jerome H. Remick, the music publisher, has agreed to furnish a ten-piece jazz orchestra to discourse music for the dance.

"Hearts Aflame" to Metro

Reginald Barker's first production under the Louis B. Mayer banner, "Hearts Aflame" for which there has been spirited bidding in New York, has been secured by the Metro Corporation. This became known on Thursday.

Mayer's productions have heretofore been released through First National, the latest, "The Dangerous Age," a John Stahl production, being just about to start its release course.

Goldwyn Adds Noted Players to Cast

Goldwyn has added two more noted players to the cast for the new Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls for Sale," in the persons of Barbara La Marr and Mae Busch. Miss La Marr has recently scored two decisive hits in Rex Ingraham productions, "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Trifling Women," while Mae Busch has just finished acting the leading feminine role in Goldwyn's production of "The Christian."

"Knighthood" Breaks Record

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," the wonderful Cosmopolitan film starring Marion Davies, broke all known records in Milwaukee for motion picture attendance on its first two days' showing at the Garden Theatre here. The production had been so widely heralded as an historic classic that students of Marquette University were assigned to write essays on it.

Unique Exploitation on "East Is West"

One of the most unusual contests ever staged was run in connection with motion picture exploitation, for the showing of First National's "East Is West" at the Regent Theatre, Paterson, N. J. Seventy-three pretty winkers, ranging in age from three to forty, winked twice before the Paterson News' special photographers, one a still photographer and the other a motion picture cameraman.

Seventy-three winkers, bold or blushing, had their picture reproduced in the News with the result that the Regent was tied up with 417 inches of free publicity space during the first six days that the contest was on. The same winkers were screened at the Regent Theatre, where crowded audiences cast their votes.

The idea started with a determination to find the prettiest winker in Paterson; and the News sponsored the contest. For seven days it carried a first page caption: "Wink and Win," and every day a front page story and photographs. Every day its motor truck, bearing its photographers, toured the streets with signs announcing its search for "Paterson's Prettiest Winkers," announcing at the same time that the champion winker of the world was Constance Talmadge, who is appearing in "East Is West" at the Regent.

Included in the visits made by this portable studio to discover winkers were: the high school, the court house, the city hall and banks and mills.

Voting was done on ballots provided by the News and deposited in a box placed in the theatre lobby. All voting was done during the run of "East Is West." The special "Winkers" reel was exposed Saturday, delivered Sunday afternoon, assembled Sunday night and shown for the first time at Monday's matinee. Opening with a shot of the city, it went through a scholastic exercise of winks from 73 people with a slow motion picture camera finishing the reel to show what the wink did to Paterson.

First National Has Thanksgiving Spirit

What of Thanksgiving for motion pictures in 1922? Have producers, stars and exhibitors cause for rejoicing. The past has written its own story. Is the future encouraging?

Answers to these questions have been obtained from officials, producers, exhibitors and stars affiliated with Associated First National Pictures, Inc. They breathe the spirit of the motion picture industry—lusty youth, eternal hope, the will to work and a just pride in tasks performed.

Here are the Thanksgiving messages from First National officials: R. A. Rowland, general manager: "We will eat our turkey this year with the knowledge that better times are here, better times are coming. Conditions are on the steady upgrade. We should view the matter that way and work with that conviction, rather than in a sort of childish faith that there is going to be a prosperity miracle. While this year finds us on the steady upgrade, next year will find us planted firmly at the top."

H. O. Schwalbe, chairman of the executive committee and secretary-treasurer: "Thanksgiving day, 1922, finds the industry working toward the accomplishment of better things."

Robert Lieber, president: "The industry should be thankful this year because some of the greatest pictures in its history are being produced; because people are demanding the best in the way of production, and in seeing their demands fulfilled are becoming strong friends, as well as patrons of the screen. We are entering an era in pictures in which there is a better understanding between all elements in the industry—the era of co-operation.

F. B. O. Catalogue

The advertising department of the Film Booking Offices of America has issued an attractive twenty page catalogue and booking guide which lists all its releases and gives a brief description of each. Exhibitors are offered a 10 per cent. discount for cash on any group of pictures booked therefrom.

To Show in London

"Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood'" will be presented in London under the direction of Charles B. Cochran, one of the foremost theatrical managers of Great Britain, shortly before Christmas.

Fox Specials Take Country by Storm

The success attained by the Fox series of special productions which have already been released on the program for 1922-23, is attested by the numerous fan letters which have been coming into the general offices of the corporation in New York and by the reports from exhibitors who have exhibited the pictures.

"The Fast Mail," the Lincoln J. Carter melodrama which was the first of the series, has received the unlimited praise of critics throughout the country and has already been shown in many of the large key cities. Exhibitors have been almost unanimous in their acclaim of the production as the best box-office attraction in many seasons.

"Silver Wings," which was released on August 27 after a long summer run at the Lyric Theatre, New York, continues to receive the favor of fans all over the nation. Trade paper publication of box-office reports of the film prove it to be above the average. As one exhibitor in the Middle West put it, "this feature is one of the finest shown on my screen and pleased everyone."

Similar praise has been accorded "Monte Cristo," the screen version of Alexandre Dumas' immortal classic. After a long engagement at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, the photoplay was released for general distribution only to be heralded as the best piece of work resulting from the adaptation of a famous novel. All houses have expressed their gratification of the turnstile results, which the work of Emmett J. Flynn, the director, has brought.

Universal Lists Its December Release

Universal's December schedule of releases includes pictures by such popular stars as Frank Mayo, Herbert Rawlinson, Gladys Walton, Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis. They were made by Universal's leading directors.

The first to be released will be "The Altar Stairs," a strong photo-drama starring Frank Mayo. It is adapted from a story by G. B. Lancaster and was directed by Lambert Hillyer. The picture will be released December 4.

The Universal release for December 11 will be a special cast feature directed by Emile Chautard from a novel by Mary Lerner. It is called "Forsaking All Others." Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis are featured.

"One Wonderful Night." Herbert Rawlinson's December picture, will be released December 18. It is from the popular novel by Louis Tracey. Stuart Paton directed. Lillian Rich is the leading woman.

The three foregoing pictures form the last three releases in the Prosperity Nine, Universal's second group of nine pictures for the 1922-1923 season. The first group, released in August, September and October, is known as the Winning Nine.

"A Dangerous Game," the final December release, and which will go to the screen on Christmas Day, is the first of a new group of nine.

Business of Getting a Goat's Goat

November 17, 1922.

Mr. Robert E. Welsh, Editor.
Moving Picture World,
516 Fifth Ave., City.

Dear Bob:

Swiping Danny's stuff. Congrats. On your editorial. About. An Editor's troubles. S'tough. As I have every reason to know. To be heckled. All the time. By pestiferous press agents.

But Bob. When we worked together. On the News. Before I became an Editor-Gent. Like you were. And are. You were a Smooth Egg. In passing the buck. And killing the kicks.

And then. When you left me as "Alibier." And joined Gunning. You made life miserable. For us editors. By grabbing space. To the limit. Remember?

Still. Even though I. Am now a publicist. And not an editor. Nevertheless I retain. My sympathy for the editors. And I don't kick much. Or ask for over-much space. For maybe sometime. If I again was an editor. I might fear. That someone. Would write me a letter. Like this. And remind me of "space hogging." Like I'm reminding you. And I'd blush. At my turn-about-face.

And anyhow. Though the editorial was good. I think. You wrote it. Because you had nothing else. To write about. For as I said before. You're always smooth. In killing press agent kicks.

I am not. A publicity seeker. So I don't ask. That you use this.

But when you do. Please mention Murray W. Garsson. Who you know. Has. The biggest picture of the year. In "Success." Which is nearly completed. And another. In "Way Down South." Now in the making.

Retiringly yours,

Star Comedies Essential for Complete Program; Add Relish to Entertainment

Fox Announces New Series of Fun Films, Starring Lane, St. John and Cook

By VIVIAN M. MOSES

Whether a moving picture theatre seats three hundred or three thousand spectators, the well balanced and zestful salad of the theatre's bill-of-fare is the Star Comedies. No screen mixed program is complete without them. They add a relish to the entire entertainment.

The first motion picture that attempted to tell a connected story was of a comedy nature, and this class of films has improved steadily in scope and entertaining qualities ever since. We read a great deal about the remarkable advance made by the motion picture in the last twenty years; these words of praise apply to the one and two-reel comedies quite as aptly as they do to the drama of serious purpose.

In screen comedy the comedians can appeal only to the eyes of the spectators. As a consequence, they are obliged to follow one piece of business with another in rapid succession. Each phase of their pantomime must be pointed with the keenest sense of humor and constructive skill. No series of comedies ever has succeeded in maintaining its grip on the motion picture public that did not offer a quick and generous stream of humorous incidents that appealed to a wide range of taste and intelligence.

Of all classes of screen comedies the series of one and two reelers of a humorous nature that can boast of a star at the head of its cast takes first place. In practically every instance the star performers in these short subjects possess that combination of surprising physical agility and grasp of the art of comic pantomime that make the spectator hold his breath with apprehension and wrinkle his face with smiles at one and the same time. To watch a ludicrous looking young gentleman climb the sides of a building with the ease of a monkey, balance himself in an extremely perilous position or take a fall that threatens to dislocate all his bones without losing his air of calm confidence or look of comic surprise, and to have these antics occur in a "rapid-fire" comedy in which the fun is clean and clever, is to share in a species of mental realization that is a priceless tonic to the average man and woman in this bustling world.

AL ST. JOHN IN ONE OF HIS LATEST FOX COMEDIES.

Fox Film Corporation, pioneers in this branch of picture production, can boast of three series of Star Camedies that are constantly growing in favor with the screen public. The trio of laugh makers starring in these pictures consists of Lupino Lane, Clyde Cook and Al St. John. All three are distinctly different in their method of fun making, and exactly alike in their ability to "put over" the comic incidents in each one of their respective releases. Representing, as they do, long and thorough training in the several branches of dancing, pantomime and acrobatic skill, the three started their careers at widely separated points of the compass. Lupino Lane is a product of the London stage and has played all over the world. Clyde Cook is an Australian, and was a leading performer at the Hippodrome, New York, when engaged by William Fox. Al St. John is a true son of the land that has developed the motion picture to its present high standing, and received his training under the stars and stripes.

"The Reporter," the first of the Lupino Lane comedies, demonstrated the wisdom of William Fox in prevailing upon this astonishingly agile and always humorous comedian to join the ranks of comic entertainers of the screen. Lupino has taken to his new branch of entertainment with the greatest enthusiasm and the happiest results. Other pictures to follow "The Reporter" are "The Pirate" and "My Hero."

Clyde Cook, whose comedy, "The Eskimo," revealed humorous possibilities within the Arctic Circle never dreamed of before, and whose previous releases have attested to his steadily increasing reputation as a comic actor of the first rank, is to follow his adventures among the bears and seals and two-legged inhabitants of the frozen North with "Lazy Bones" and "The Cyclist," two Fox comedies for which a hearty welcome is promised.

Al St. John, whose last two releases, "All Wet" and "The City Chap," guarantee the quality of his brand of Star Comedies, will be succeeded by "Out of Place" and "The Alarm."

With such a list of Star Comedies and Star Comedians, Fox Film Corporation need have no fear of not holding its present enviable position in this particular branch of motion picture production.

FROM "MUTT AND JEFF" ANIMATED CARTOON

Big Demand for "Mutt and Jeff"

Various factors enter into the popularity of the "Mutt and Jeff" Animated Cartoons, besides the factor of uniqueness. Granting that these are different in conception and execution from any other screen cartoons, there yet must be other things to account for the wide-spread demand for "Mutt and Jeff."

Publicity is undoubtedly the biggest item in creating this demand. Probably no other screen feature receives the direct and indirect exploitation obtained by these cartoons. In the first place, Bud Fisher's newspaper comics are syndicated throughout this country and Canada. There is no town in America of any importance, where some paper does not carry daily the doings of the tall, skinny Mutt and his small, bald-headed friend. Their names were household words long before they made their debut in the movies.

In addition, several books made up of Bud Fisher's cartoons have reached a tremendous sale, and various roadshows have popularized the adventures of the two inseparables. Which may account for the fact that Bud Fisher has a larger income than any other cartoonist.

One of the most interesting things about "Mutt and Jeff" is that they appeal just as strongly in Simsbury, Kansas, as they do in New York. The village and the metropolis, old folk and young, lowbrow, highbrow and mediumbrow—all greet with delight these two typical American characterizations.

Under the new Fox policy, these cartoons are issued once every two weeks. This allows double the time formerly devoted to each release, with the result that the celebrated pair of comedians are funnier than ever before.

Among the new Mutt and Jeff comedy cartoons are "Red Hot," which was released October 1; "Fallen Archers," released October 15; "Cold Turkey," released October 29; "The Wishing Duck," released November 12; "Bumps and Thumps," to be released November 26, and "Nearing the End," which will be released early in December.

Sunshine Comedies in Big Demand

No comedies ever released by Fox Film Corporation have been received with greater enthusiasm than the 1922-23 series of William Fox Sunshine Comedies, judging from numerous reports that find their way each week in the New York offices of the organization.

In all parts of the world, in Canada, Europe, South America and even in the Far East, these Fox Fun producers are meeting the approval of exhibitors and public alike. Scarcely a month goes by when the New York office of Fox Film Corporation does not receive hundreds of testimonials from "fans" in various parts of the world listing the Sunshine Comedy productions as the finest of the laugh provokers on the screen.

Every effort is being made by the production forces of the Fox Film Corporation to maintain the consistent quality of these particular series of short subjects, and from all reports the current releases are not only keeping up with the past standards, but are surpassing them in entertainment value and in the ability of the fun makers who are playing in them. As an indication of what it is doing to uphold the exceptional standard of these comedy productions, Fox Film Corporation is calling especial attention to the current releases and those to be released early in the new year. The first of the current series is "The Haunted House," which was released Oct. 29th, and which was followed on Nov. 12th, by "The Ranch Romeo." "Cupid's Elephant," heralded as one of the finest of these series is scheduled for release Nov. 26th. Other Fox Sunshine Comedies scheduled for early release include "The Fresh Heir," Dec. 10th; "A Poor Fish," Dec. 24th; "Rides and Slides," Jan. 7th, and "The Wise Cracker," which will be released Jan. 21st.

That the height of versatility has been reached in this group of seven two-reel comedies, is indicated by the extreme variance in subject matter contained in them. Each one represents the ultimate effort of a group of experts who devote their entire time to the creating of comedy situations and laugh provoking stories. Each of these pictures contains a cast whose names are known to picture fans throughout the world. In addition to many of the old favorites of comedy productions, both on the screen and stage, there are many new faces which are adding new interest and comedy talent, pulchritude and pep to these productions.

These pictures will be released one every two weeks for the remainder of the coming year, according to plans of Fox Film Corporation.

Varied Subjects in Fox Educationals

"Everything under the sun" comes very near describing the diversity of subjects covered by the first twelve Fox Educational Entertainments. Whatever is striking, interesting and entertaining becomes material for these unusual reels. The prime requisite is that they bring information and amusement to the motion picture public. The wide field that they cover, the known and unknown parts of the world that must be searched for material, are indicated in the titles of the first twelve releases, which are listed below in the order of their release: "Alligator Hunting and Farming," "Thrills and Spills," "Volcanoes of the World," "Water Sports," "A Story of Ice," "Ancient Rome," "Old Spain," "Pekin Ducks," "Bits of Europe," "Camphor," "Bird Life," "The Runaway Dog."

A QUINTET OF FOX SUNSHINE BEAUTIES.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

Newsy Bits

Fred Jacks and Frank Fay have opened a new exchange in Dallas, Tex., for the purpose of handling Arrow product.

John J. Parent, formerly owner of the Pastime Theatre, Chicago, is now associated with the Reelcraft Film Exchange of that city.

The Mid-West Productions Corporation of St. Louis will place $60,000 of its stock on the open market, according to a dispatch from that city.

R. C. Cropper, formerly with Reelcraft and Johnson & Hopkins, is authority for a statement he is forming a new distributing firm known as the Norca Pictures, Inc. "Just a Mother" is said to be the first release.

Last week, in an item that appeared in this department, reference was made to the Richard Talmadge western series. This series is produced by Phil Goldstone, and none of the pictures are or will be westerns. They are straights, with Dick Talmadge playing American roles.

Will Nigh's "Notoriety," distributed by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, will be shown to members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in New York next Tuesday afternoon at Hotel Astor.

The first trade showing held under the auspices of Principal Pictures Corporation was held last Friday, when the first release, "The World's a Stage," with Dorothy Phillips, based on the Elinor Glyn story. The second picture, "Chicago Sal," with Alice Lake and Milton Sills, an Irving Cummings picture, will be shown next week.

The "movie ball," promoted by some gentleman whom the exhibitors and exchangemen in Boston said was unknown, flivved, independent exchangemen in the Hub City having refused to participate in the event, which the Mayor was asked to stop.

Richard Kipling left New York last week on a tour of the Middlewestern cities. He will visit Minneapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland and Detroit.

A. E. Hnebsch of the Trans-Ocean Film Company arrived in New York from Berlin this week, bringing with him a print of "The Earl of Essex." He is making David P. Howell's office his New York headquarters.

Nathan Hirsch announced this week that he had made plans to extensively exploit his latest Maciste picture, "The Unconquered," in the metropolitan territory.

The current week-end will see many independent producers, distributors, exchangemen, directors and players leaving New York for New Haven to attend the annual Yale-Harvard football game there Saturday, Nov. 25. Many of them are motoring to New Haven.

Charles Seelye, who formerly took care of Arrow's New York exchange, is going into the independent distribution for himself. He is in New England taking care of the advance exploitation on a new picture he will handle.

On Friday evening, Nov. 17, the National Board of Review sponsored a special showing under the auspices of the Committee on Exceptional Photoplays of the Preferred Picture, "Shadows," starring Lon Chaney. Fourteen hundred persons attended.

The Week in Review

WHY distributors of mediocre product should insist on placing $100,000 valuations on productions they know are worth less than half that amount and for which they paid not a cent, assuming the distribution privileges on a percentage arrangement, is more than this writer can understand. The independent market today is healthier and wealthier than it ever was. The "flyers" are starving their way out of the business for the want of productions, because distributors of good product will have nothing to do with them.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD, unlike several other trade journals, believes in the motion picture industry as a whole. It is non-partisan and when it has anything at all to say about any individual or concern or picture it will say it in printer's ink and not in so-called "confidential letters." We are proud of the progress made by independents and we will continue serving and co-operating with them to the very best of our ability. And we refuse to be a party to any under-handed "confidential" tactics, such as sending out letters containing information that papers that are sending them out have neither the inclination nor confidence to publish them where they can be read by everybody.

THIS department never has and never will pursue a "two-faced" policy. When we don't agree with certain things we'll register that disagreement in this department. We have our cards on the table—and they are turned face up, so that the entire industry can read them. We do not believe in playing the independent's friend when facing him and stabbing him in the back when he isn't looking through the medium of stupid and worthless "confidential letters."

THERE is nothing "confidential" in this business. No more than in any other line of endeavor. A picture is either good or it isn't. The reviewer in batting out a review on any one picture is merely registering his own personal opinion on that picture. There isn't anybody in this business who can definitely fix in advance the audience status of any picture. When we say that we believe a certain picture to be an audience picture we are merely recording our own personal opinion—that's all. We're not "kidding" ourselves that it is more than that. If you have confidence in our judgment you will weigh our opinion accordingly; if you haven't that is your own privilege.

BUT there is one thought that you can sink in your bonnet so that you will never lose it: Whenever we have anything to say we'll say it in this department. And we'll not resort to "confidential letter" writing. Our criticism is aimed to be of the constructive sort. We believe in the old adage "live and let live." And we want it strictly understood that while our business is at times referred to as the "screen industry," we're not hiding behind any screen. So don't ever look for "confidential letters" from this department.

WITHIN the period starting December 4 and ending February 9 something like eleven independent productions will be shown at the first run Broadway houses. And the houses have not been bought either. The showings will be held on a strictly percentage arrangement with the house guaranteed its "nut." And that is only fair with Broadway pavilions which have the best there is at their disposal.

INDEPENDENT exchangemen and exhibitors are urged to keep their eye on the "short subject and serial" section. This department is devoted to short stuff and it will be to their advantage to keep in touch with it, for it's the best in the business.

SPEAKING of departments we can't refrain from directing the attention of our readers to Enes Sargent's exploitation section. We consider the department the best being published in any trade paper and we would no more think of closing the week without reading every line of it than we would of forgetting to call for our salary envelope. And our treasurer will vouch for the statement that we never forget that.

Trade Notes

Bob Lynch of the Metro Exchange in Philadelphia this week purchased two more big independent productions for his territory, eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, from Charles C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors. He bought the new Sloman special Burr acquired this week for independent distribution, entitled "Blind Youth," and the next Johnny Hines feature, "Luck." Lynch is also handling "Secrets of Paris" in that section.

A late dispatch Thursday morning from Philadelphia conveyed the information that the Al Lichtman special, "Shadows," has broken every record so far this week at Stanley Company's exclusive Victoria Theatre in that city. The picture opened to a jammed house one minute after midnight Monday morning and has since played to capacity audiences.

Reports from New England cities indicate that motion picture theatre patronage has fallen off markedly during the past four weeks. Many first run exhibitors from there report business now below that recorded during the latter part of the summer. Just what has caused this unexpected flop is something showmen there are unable to explain.

Philadelphia exchangemen were common in New York this week. Bob Lynch of Metro was in Sunday night and saw the first Amalgamated release, "Chained Women." Others who came to the metropolis this week were Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions, David Starkman, who has opened his own exchange in that city and taken over the entire short subject program of Masterpiece; Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation, and David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc.

George Fecke of the Motion Picture Distributing Corporation of Boston was in New York this week. His son, George Jr., is confined to a New York hospital with an illness from which he is rapidly recovering. Sam Grand of Federated Exchange, Boston, also was a New York visitor this week.

Joe Lee, who is managing Harry Houdini the wizard, and his road show, "The Man from Beyond," announced this week that he is laying out a route that will take the combination as far as San Francisco and back. The trip West will be made via the southern route and the eastern tour via the northern cities. Only cities will be played. Last week Houdini, because of remarkable publicity, broke every record at Louis Rosenthal's Strand Theatre in New York, the engaging grossing more than $10,000 in a 1,100-seat house.

The exchange demand for high class independent productions is keeping independent producers on the Coast working overtime selecting established stories and popular all-star casts. During the past week three big productions arrived in New York. These were seen by the editor of this department and are of the topnotch order. The producers are now arranging for their distribution through independent exchanges.

Three new direct-distribution-to-the-exhibitor exchanges are now in the process of formation according to unquestionably reliable information that has come into the possession of this department from Boston, Chicago and Denver. As soon as details are completed exclusive announcement of identity and plans will be made in Moving Picture World.

Sol Lesser Merges Three Companies Into One Big Producing-Distributing Concern

A deal merging three of the largest companies in the business and co-ordinating activities that embrace every angle of picture production and distribution, involving millions of dollars, has been closed through the efforts of Sol Lesser, according to a despatch from Los Angeles. The three corporations with which he has been associated in an executive capacity have been merged into one and plans have been matured to launch forth as a studio-holding organization.

By the terms of the deal, the West Coast Theatres, operating more than sixty theatres; the Western Pictures Exploitation Company, doing a general releasing and exploiting business, and the Principal Pictures Corporation, which has been producing pictures at the United studios in Los Angeles, have been consolidated into one huge enterprise, known as the Principal Pictures Corporation and officered by Adolph Ramish, M. Gore, Michael Rosenberg and Sol Lesser, the latter serving as general manager.

Fifteen acres of property, ideally located, have been secured on option and negotiations are proceeding towards the acquisition of the tract. Two huge stages will be built and an equipment of the most modern character will be installed. Twelve pictures per year will be made at a cost said to aggregate not less than $2,400,000. Four of these will be of the "super-excellence" calibre based on classic literature. All productions will be conceived and directed according to the best ideals of motion picture art, said Mr. Lesser.

Michael Rosenberg will be Western manager, with Irving Lesser in charge of the Eastern office. Arthur Bernstein is studio manager and Harry Wilson head of the exploitation and publicity department, with Walter Anthony in charge of the scenario branch. "The World's a Stage," with Dorothy Phillips, is the first release. This is an Elinor Glyn story.

The West Coast Theatres Corporation operates a string of coast theatres and also finances the Jackie Coogan productions. All stories have been selected for the first year's activities, which may embrace also a continuance of Jackie Coogan pictures if present negotiations between the Sol Lesser group and Jack Coogan, Sr., are terminated agreeably. In that case, as at present, Jack Coogan, Sr., will personally supervise the Jackie Coogan productions. The company is now working on the next Coogan picture, Eddie Cline directing. The story is an adaptation of James Otis' "Toby Tyler."

Big Features Getting Money

PITTSBURGH (Special)—A careful analytic study of the pictures that are grossing the biggest rentals for exhibitors shows that the honor goes to the big features. Independent exchanges with big productions are doing a tremendous business, judging from the number of bookings observed not only in this city, but in cities and towns within a radius of 30 miles.

Leon D. Netter, representing Al Lichtman Corporation, was here last week. Netter is well known in this city, having formerly conducted the Masterpiece exchange here. He was the host of Joe Lefko while here.

Harry Grelie, of Supreme Photo-Plays Productions, Inc., is busily engaged lining up first-run dates for his newest acquisition, "What's Wrong With the Women?"—the Equity special.

Joe Lefko, of the Federated and Al Lichtman Exchanges, is absolutely sold on the latest Preferred Picture, "Shadows." He has hooked up some important dates on this feature. "Rich Men's Wives," the first Lichtman special, did a good business in this territory.

Word from the home of William I. Forrey, manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, has it that he has virtually recovered from his recent illness. However, he is not expected to return to his desk for a week or so.

Standard Film Exchange here reports Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Barroom" having broken records in the following houses: Best, Milvale; Victory, Pittsburgh; Lyric, Beckley, W. Va.; Rialto, Wilson; Milford, Fredericktown; Midway, McMechen, W. Va.; Park, Monndsville, W. Va.; Harvey, Woodlawn; Olympic, Finleyville; Carrick, Pittsburgh; Victoria, Pittsburgh; Alhion, Alhion, Pa., and Couch, Carnegia, Pa.

Apex Film Service, Inc., is exploiting Aywon's "Oh, Mahel, Behave."

Alexander Gets "Great Expectations"

Hopp Hadley, who is handling the new Nordisk feature of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations," has arranged a special showing of that picture for New York exhibitors through Alexander Film Corporation.

"Only a Shop Girl" is Ready

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's second "Big Six" release, "Only a Shop Girl," based on Charles C. Blaney's melodrama, has been finally edited and titled. Bobby North, of New York; H. A. Lande, of Pittsburgh, and Sam Grand have viewed the picture and characterize it as one of the best melodramas they have seen. It will be shown to the trade in general next week.

Lesser Closes Foreign Deals

Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures Company, this week announced the sale of the entire South American rights to the first Principal release, "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips, and based on Elinor Glyn's latest story, to the Argentine-American Film Company. S. Noan closed the deal for the South American concern.

The popularity of Dorothy Phillips is substantiated by the many requests received by Mr. Lesser from foreign buyers with whom he is now negotiating for the sale of the picture in England, continental European countries, the Far East and Orient. These deals will be closed within the current week and announced next week.

"Sure-Fire Flint" Sets New Record

C. C. Burr, head of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., distributors of "Sure-Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, received a wire on Thursday morning from the offices of Rubin & Finkelstein, Minneapolis, reporting the record breaking career of that production at their spaciously luxurious State Theatre in that city this week. The picture, according to the telegram, has shattered every house record.

"Sure-Fire Flint" has set a number of records. Important bookings announced this week call for day and date showings at the Chicago, Riviera and Tivoli Theatres in Chicago; Capitol in St. Louis, and Rialto in Denver. "Secrets of Paris" established a new house record at Edward Fay's Theatre in Providence, R. I., two weeks, according to a statement made by Mr. Fay this week in New York.

Harry Charnas Loses Alexander Suit

The efforts of the Standard Film Service Company, of Cleveland, to obtain an injunction restraining the Alexander Film Corporation from exhibiting or allowing others to exhibit certain motion pictures, has been frustrated in a decision of Justice Irving Lehman, of the N. Y. Supreme Court, denying a motion for such a restraining order.

In his decision Justice Lehman says, "The plaintiff has under its contract with the Alexander Film Corporation never acquired ownership or legal title to the films, but merely a privilege of exhibiting the motion pictures within a certain limited territory. According to the complaint the Alexander Film Corporation was in its turn not the owner of the films, but had merely acquired the privilege of exhibiting motion pictures within a wider territory from the Stoll Film Company, which produced the pictures and presumably owns them. The plaintiff's privilege of exhibiting the films derived from the Alexander Film Corporation is not enforceable unless the owner of the film delivers them to the plaintiff's licensor, but the plaintiff and the owner are not in privity in any manner and neither has assumed any obligation to the other. The plaintiff can therefore clearly not obtain a decree of specific performance against the Stoll Film Company, and since the plaintiff has never acquired title to the pictures nor any contract right of any kind from the owner, it can also not secure an injunction against parties who have acquired rights from the owner."

Another phase to the controversy of the litigation between Horace Goldin and the Clarion Photoplays, Inc., over the movie production of "Sawing a Woman in Half" was disclosed the past week in the New York Supreme Court, when Justice John M. Tierney dismissed the suit of John Coutts against the Clarion Photoplays, Inc., brought to compel an accounting by the defendents of the profits from the movie production.

It was held by Justice Tierney in his decision that Coutts, to use an ordinary expression, was legally "out of order" in bringing his action for an accounting without first bringing a suit for breach of an alleged contract. Coutts, with three others, charged that they had manufactured the film for the picture of "Sawing a Woman in Half," and part of their contract with the Clarion people provided they should be reimbursed by the producers with 50 per cent. of the receipts from the exhibition of same.

After the picture had been produced and exhibited in various parts of the country Goulden claimed it was an infringement on his illusion of cutting a body in two, and first obtained a temporary injunction preventing it further exhibition, and then succeeded in having A. B. Silverman and Louis Weiss of 1475 Broadway appointed by Justice Wasservogel of the New York Supreme court, receivers for the picture. It was this situation that precipitated the suit by Coutts to enforce the payment of 50 per cent. of the receipts from the picture production.

"Shadows" Sets Newark Mark

The Al Lichtman release, "Shadows," presented by B. P. Schulberg and featuring Lon Chaney, is playing at the Strand Theatre in Newark, New Jersey, to the biggest business that the house has experienced in six months. The picture opened there November 17 for a week's run. The box-office receipts surpassed the record set by those of the previous week during the Houdini engagement.

Warner Brothers Closes Contract with Strand That Assures Important Runs

One of the most unusual and unique booking deals arranged between theatre-controlling concern and independent distributor was closed this week when Warner Brothers closed with the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, an agreement whereby five Warner productions will be shown in the Strand Theatres in New York City, Brooklyn and Albany, N. Y., the State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., and Troy Theatre in Troy, N. Y. The productions involved are "The Beautiful and Damned," which plays the New York Strand week of December 5; "Heroes of the Street," which plays there December 17; "Little Church Around the Corner," "Brass" and "Main Street."

This is the first deal of its kind ever arranged between an independent producer-distributor and theatre-controlling concern and assures Warner Brothers of ample metropolitan exploitation for their productions. Lon Young, head of Warner Brothers' publicity department, will start immediately on a campaign boosting the first showing. Joe Plunkett, managing director of the New York Strand, is very enthusiastic over the arrangement.

Other important theatres that have already closed for first run showings of the entire Warner series of pictures follow: New England: Gray, Gordon, Empire, Goldstein, Paramount and Hodgdon circuits; Chicago: Commodore, Crystal, Howard, Julian, New Irvine, Parkside, State, Windsor, Bugg and Atlantic theatres; Empire, Syracuse; Modern Beacon, Codman Square and Eagle, Boston; Nemo, Johnstown, Pa.; Grand, Topeka, Kansas; Criterion, Oklahoma City; Strand, Providence; Broadway, Lawrence, Mass.; Garden, Canton, Ill.; Majestic, Bloomington, Ill.; Strand, San Francisco; Liberty, Kansas City; Victoria, Altoona, Pa.; Palace, Little Rock, Ark.; U. S. Theatre, Hoboken, and scores of other theatres.

NEW YORK—Bookings on "Shadows," the Preferred Picture being released through Al Lichtman exchanges is scheduled for an early showing at the following big first run houses: Knickerhocker, Nashville, Tenn.; Universal, Fitchburg, Mass.; Capitol, McKeesport, Pa.; Apollo, Indianapolis, and People's, eBaumont, Tex.

PITTSBURGH—(Special) — "Night Life in Hollywood" has been booked into the new Globe Theatre in McKeesport, Pa., by H. C. Simeral Company, Inc. J. Charles Davis, assistant to President W. E. Shallenberger of Arrow Film Corporation will exploint the picture. He already is here on the job.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—(Special)—Charles Seeley is here exploiting a new special, which will be given a premiere showing at a local house. Mr. Seeley is carefully guarding the identity of the picture, which he characterizes as a "big one."

NEWARK, N. J.—(Special)—The Harry Houdini special, "The Man from Beyond," received more than 200 inches of news mention in the news columns of local newspapers, with the result that no surprise was occasioned when record-breaking crowds jammed the Strand Theatre all week.

PASSAIC, N. J.—(Special)—What has been characterized locally as the greatest publicity drive this city has ever experienced was staged last week during the run of C. C. Burr's "I Am the Law," at the Rialto Theatre. The stunt was emphasized by the escape of an inmate of the Almhouse in Athenia, N. J., and hooked up with the picture. Even the New York newspapers picked up the yarn, several of them playing it up on the first page.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—(Special)—Elmer Clifton's new picture, "Down to the Sea in Ships," closed a three-week run at the Shubert-Majestic Theatre here this week, and will move to the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia next week.

Many Sales On Principal's First, "World's a Stage"

Following special screenings held purposely for Principal Pictures Company franchise holders during the past week, Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of that firm, this week announced the disposal of more than half the country's territorial rights on the first Principal release, "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips. This is the production based on Elinor Glyn's latest story dealing with a screen star's life. Colin Campbell directed. Others in the cast are Kenneth Harlan and Bruce McRae.

The following territories were disposed of following the showings, which are in accordance with the policy of Principal Pictures Company, to sell features strictly on their merit:

Gene Marcus of Twentieth Century Film Corporation of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

M. H. Hoffman of Renown Film Exchanges of New York, Albany and Buffalo for New York City, Northern New Jersey and New York state.

M. Toy of Mid-West Distributing Company of Milwaukee for Wisconsin.

All-Star Features Exchanges of Los Angeles and San Francisco for the Coast territory.

Al Rosenberg of De Luxe Film Exchange of Seattle for the Northwest.

her initial independent release, "How Women Love," the first Whitman Bennett special. At the Chatham Theatre in the residential section she was the means of setting a new mark for gross business at the 6, 8 and 10 o'clock night shows.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(Special)—Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" at the Columbia Theatre, a Loew house, started a week that promised to set new marks. The pictur was cleverly exploited and featured atop of an all-star vaudeville bill.

PHILADELPHIA— (Special)—Gene Marcus of the Twentieth Century Film Company is telling all exhibitors in his territory that in "Deserted at the Altar," the Phil Goldstone special, he has a box office winner, and he is proudly pointing to the records established by that feature at the Hippodrome in Reading, Pa., where the picture is said to have broken every mark registered at that house.

BOSTON, MASS. — (Special)—Sam Grand's Federated Exchange has been signed by Arthur G. Whyte, booking director of the Keith Enterprises, to book his entire feature output for showings at the Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I.; Scenic, Music Hall, Pawtucket, R. I., and Park, Woonsocket, R. I., houses.

Mary Carr Added to Cast of Edgar Lewis

Mary Carr, the "motherliest mother" of the screen, after several weeks of dickering, was finally signed by C. C. Burr for an important role in the Edgar Lewis production, "Sires of Youth," which is now being produced at the Glendale, L. I., studio. Lewis is personally supervising the production on this feature, which, in addition to Mary Carr, includes James Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese and others in the cast.

Mrs. Carr is one of the foremost players of the screen today, her successful work in William Fox's great masterpiece, "Over the Hill," being one of the most remarkable pieces of character work enacted by any player of the silver sheet. She is repeating her splendid showing in "Silver Wings," which recently completed a long run at the Apollo Theatre in New York.

Final shots on "Way Down South," the rights for which Murray W. Garsson is said to have paid $25,000, were taken this week. Cutting and assembling of the production which has been many weeks in the making will begin next week. The cast includes Marian Swayne, Joe King, Jack Richardson, Isabelle Fisher, Norma Lee, W. F. Chaplin, Melville Shyer, John Jenkins, Francis Grant and Irene Boyle. One of the big scenes in the picture is an exciting horse race.

After carefully watching the making of the third Johnny Hines feature that Charles C. Burr's distributing organization will release, that popular showman this week ventured the statement that "Luck," which is the picture's title, will be an even greater production than either "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" or "Sure-Fire Flint." The cast, beside Hines, includes Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Violet Mersereau and Matthew Betts. The story is adapted from a work by Jackson Gregory and it is expected that the picture will be ready for release some time early next month.

The Glendale, L. I., studios, owned by C. C. Burr, is one of the busiest in the country, for in addition to the Edgar Lewis and Johnny Hines units, Gregory La Cava is producing there a series of two "Torchy" comedies starring Ray McKee with Charles Murray and Mary Anderson. Flora Finch also is in the cast. Ed Wynard, cameraman for Norma Talmadge for a long time, is photographing these two-reelers.

Dell Henderson, who has just completed directing "Jacqueline of the Blazing North," based on the James Oliver Curwood story, writes to the effect that he is now busy finally cutting and editing that picture, which Arrow Film Corporation will State right. The picture was produced for Pine Tree Pictures Corporation of Maine. The cast includes Marguerite Courtot, Lew Cody, Sheldon Lewis, Edmund Breese, Effie Shannon, Joseph Depew, Paul Panzer, Gus Weinberg, Helen Rowland and others.

"Lost In a Big City," the second Blazed Trails production for Arrow release, has been completed, and George Irving, the director, assisted by Authoress L. Case Russell, is engaged in cutting and titling the picture. John Lowell, star of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," is also starred in this production, which was made in Gloversville, N. Y., and New York City.

"The Little Red Schoolhouse," which Martin J. Heyl Productions, Inc., is making for Arrow distribution, is well under way at the Tilford studios in New York under the direction of John C. Adolphi. E. K. Lincoln, Edmund Breese, Sheldon Lewis and Rose Coghlan are in the cast.

L. Case Russell has been engaged by Atlantic Features, Inc., of which Robert W. Wood is president, to prepare the continuity on "The Broken Violin" which that firm will produce. This company recently completed "High Speed Lee," a photodramatization of J. P. Marquard's story. Arrow will handle both pictures.

C. B. C. Starts on Third Production

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Announcement was made here that the third special, "Temptation," which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation will State right, is now in the course of production. This picture is based on "Only a Shop Girl." Director Edward J. Le Saint will produce this picture. He also made "More to be Pitied Than Scorned" and "Only a Shop Girl."

Great Business Progress Forces C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. to Obtain Larger Quarters

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has moved to larger quarters, going from the second floor of the Mecca Building, number 1600 Broadway, where they were originally located, to more extensive offices on the eighth floor of the same building.

The move was necessitated because of the greatly increased scope of the activities of the company with the production and distribution of their series of Six Box-Office Winners, the features of which "More to be Pitied" and "Only a Shop Girl" are already complete and released to the State right market. Such extended activities have been under way and are planned for the future on these releases that Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn, who are the officials of the C. B. C. Company have augmented their entire staff to handle the output on the scale that has been planned.

The former offices not offering sufficient facilities for this, it was found expedient to move, in order to give the exploitation and advertising department, in particular scope for greater activities. This department, it is announced, will be augmented, in order to carry out the plans made by Joe Brandt while on his recent trip throughout the country, made for the purpose of finding out from territorial holders and exhibitors themselves, just what line the exploitation campaign should follow on the features and the shorter output.

This output has, since the inauguration of the C. B. C. Company, grown to large proportions, and the plans for the New Year constitute the biggest project that company has ever undertaken. C. B. C. has during the past year, especially, forged steadily to the front ranks of independent producers and distributors, and the new plans are designed to strengthen that position, Joe Brandt announces. The company's output comprises now what is probably among the strongest and most important independence releases in the field, including not only the Six Box-Office Winners and other features, but much new short stuff, among them the popular two-reel Hallroom Boys' Comedies, now in their fourth year of production.

F. I. L. M. Club in Detroit to Fight

DETROIT (Special)—The F. I. L. M. Club this week had the following notice published in a local paper: "An aggressive campaign opens this week to eliminate in Michigan the practice of subletting of film and the unauthorized holding of pictures for extra days showing. The campaign is under the direction of the F. I. L. M. Club with the full co-operation and consent of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan. Notice is hereby given that every effort is going to be made and that nothing will be left undone to bring to justice the exhibitor guilty of bicycling films or the stealing of extra days. Names of guilty parties will be published on this page."

With the litigation over "The Expose of Sawing a Lady in Half" now a matter of history, Favorite Film Company has started an extensive exploitation campaign on that short subject.

Dave Mundstuck is not in the field for any more features. Anyway, that's the substance of a statement he made here last week when he said that he has all the pictures he can possibly handle for this season. He has three big pictures, "The Black Panther's Cub," "Out of the Dust" and "Notoriety," the Will Nigh picture.

Carl J. Sonin, manager of the Warner Exchange, has had no trouble "catching on" here. He is quietly but systematically building up a splendid clientele of exhibitor patrons. He is now releasing "Rags To Riches." H. M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, stopped off here en route to New York from the Coast.

Producers' Security Executive on Trip

F. J. Hawkins, secretary of Producers' Security Corporation, is visiting exchangemen in the West in the interest of his concern. The State rights department of the firm is handling Dorothy Gish's "The Country Flapper," Maclyn Arbuckle's "Squire Phin," "Mr. Potter of Texas," "Mr. Bingle" and "Welcome to Our City;" also the Oscar Apfel series, "Trail of the Law," "The Man Who Paid" and "The Wolf's Fangs." The company also will handle "Just a Song at Twilight" with Richard Barthelmess.

First Runs Booked on "Notoriety"

"Notoriety," the Will Nigh special that L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North are distributing through independent exchanges, will be given premiere showings at the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, N. Y., and Alama Theatre, Louisville, Ky., the week of December 3. The Louisville booking was arranged by Lee Goldberg, of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, while the Buffalo Grand-North Exchange handled the Albany date.

Los Angeles Fire Force in Dick Talmadge Film

Phil Goldstone announced this week that Richard Talmadge has started production on his second special, working title "The Fire Eater," an original story by George Plympton, which will have some remarkable fire effects and thrills.

The cast includes Richard Talmadge, Charlotte Pierce, S. J. Bingham, T. L. Geary, Jeff Osborne, M. York and the dog, Pal., and is directed by Jack Nelson, formerly associated with Thomas H. Ince, and who directed Douglas MacLean in "The Home Stretch," "Chickens," "One a Minute;" also Louise Glaum in "I Am Guilty" and others.

The entire fire department of Los Angeles is being utilized in the making of the picture and two large buildings have been bought and will be burned down so as to give the necessary thrills and realistic atmosphere.

Dave Starkman Opens 'Change in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA (Special)—David Starkman, former local exhibitor, and during the season lessee of the Woods Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., has opened an independent exchange known as the Standard Film Attractions, Inc., at 1322 Vine street. The first feature release will be Lucy Doraine's "The Love Slave." Other pictures include "Sawing a Lady in Half" and a series of short subjects starring Wallace Reid, Dorothy and Lillian Gish, and two-reel comedies and westerns with Alice Howell, Muriel Ostriche, Shorty Hamilton, Hank Mann, Hallroom Boys, Billy West and William S. Hart. His one reel subjects include Keystone comedies, Screen Snapshots, Hank Mann comedies, Tom Mix westerns and Sunset Burrud scenics.

David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., through his attorneys in New York, Elishury, Lewis and Rothchild, has instituted suit against Amalgamated Exchanges, Inc., charging an alleged infringement of a contract in which, he charges, he purchased the Amalgamated franchise for this territory. In the bill of complaint against Amalgamated, Segal sets forth that after the franchise had been sold for this district, it was re-sold to Bob Lynch of Metro Exchange.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," produced by Elmer Clifton, will open a four-week engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House next week. Alexander Penrod photographed this production.

At a recent meeting of the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade, Oscar Neufeld, of De Luxe Exchange, and new president of that organization, announced that that organization would co-operate with the exhibitor body in that section in every particular, and that the two organizations would in the future work in unison to bring about better film conditions locally.

Joe Daly has returned to his first love, Interstate Film Company, where he is presiding nobly as exploitation manager.

Floats are common in this territory. First came Warner Brothers' float advertising the seven Warner specials handled here by Lou Berman of Independent Film Corporation. Now both De Luxe and Masterpiece Film Attractions exchanges have floats advertising their big features. Ben Amsterdam has a huge engine float parading through the territory advertising "The Curse of Drink," while Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufeld are sending out a similarly attractive float boosting "More to Be Pitied than Scorned."

Baby Ruth Sullivan, one of the clever players in the Graphic feature, "Mother Eternal," is making local appearances in conjunction with the showing of that feature in this territory.

Lee Goldburg Buys Picture

The State-right melodrama, featuring Harry Morey, Edmund Breese, George Fawcett, Marguerite Clayton and Miriam Batista, "The Curse of Drink," was sold to Lee Goldberg, of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, Louisville, Ky., for the States of Kentucky and Tennessee. Sam Sax, sales manager for the distributors; L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, negotiated the sale.

Preferred Acquires New Coast Studio

The old Louis B. Mayer studios, one of the landmarks of Los Angeles, has been enlarged and divided into two distinct sections and will henceforth be known as the Mayer-Schulberg studios. The growth of the Preferred Pictures Corporation, of which B. P. Schulberg is president, and the increasing number of productions planned for relcase through the Al Litchman Corporation necessitated new studio facilities and the arrangement with Mayer is the result.

The stages have been divided between Schulberg and Mayer and additional ones are being erected. Each organization will have its own equipment, wardrobe buildings and space to expand as its increased activities demand.

The Mayer-Schulberg studios were built by Colonel Selig shortly after the completion of the old Biograph, which was the first to be erected in the West. When Colonel Selig later became financially interested in other picture ventures the studio was leased to Mayer, whose name it has borne for many years. Last winter B. P. Schulberg took over half the building. Three units now are at work at the studios for this company alone—those headed by Directors Garnier, Forman and Schertzinger. It is probable that another will be added to this list in the near future.

Four Additional Territories Are Sold on Will Nigh's "Notoriety"

Following a tour of exchange centers in the East and Middlewest, Sam Saxe, sales manager of L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, distributors of Will Nigh's "Notoriety," returned to New York this week with the announcement that four additional territories had been sold on that production with indications that the country would be sold 100 per cent. within ten days.

The buyers are Howard Mann, of the Equitable Pictures Corporation of Baltimore, Md., who signed for the Nigh series for the States of Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and the District of Columbia; Dave Mundstuck, of the Exclusive Film Company, Detroit, who bought "Notoriety" and the Nigh series for the State of Michigan; Lee Goldberg, of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, Louisville, Ky., who bought the series for Kentucky and Tennessee, and the Midwest Distributing Company, Milwaukee, Wis., buyers of the Nigh productions for Wisconsin and the Upper Peninsula.

In every case, the buyers rank as the most progressive and successful of their respective regions, and their reputation for handling top-notch features is a worthy reflection on the high calibre of "Notoriety" and the Nigh series.

Every exchange handling the Nigh productions are putting extra effort behind it, and concentrating on the Weber & North releases, as the demand from their exhibitors for "Notoriety" and the others is of record proportions. Sax reported that exchanges were in receipt of quantities of inquiries from their exhibitors for booking dates on "Notoriety," before the picture was sold.

A great line of advertising and selling aids has been given to each distributor of "Notoriety." The thirty-two page press-book on the feature, containing more valuable material to put the picture over than any independent feature of current release, is proving an indispensable selling and booking aid among exhibitors. The collection of novelties, consisting of a newspaper broadside, cut-out herald, booklet, double post-card, blotter and sticker, is being ordered heavily, to supply the wants of exhibitors. These accessories are looked upon as sure-fire patron-pullers. Every piece of advertising matter is proving its worth in increased business, reports Sax. The paper on "Notoriety" was among the selling points of the feature, and the exploitation, lobby and publicity material was also a factor in the rapid sale of the Nigh features.

Lesser Warns Rumor Mongers

Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures Company, distributing a series of feature productions through independent exchanges, this week issued the following statement:

"I deny emphatically that 'The World's a Stage,' with Dorothy Phillips, is or ever was a First National attraction. While heretofore Dorothy Phillips pictures have been distributed through First National, I want to make plain the fact that it was through the good offices of Associated First National we were able to engage the services of Miss Phillips to play the leading role in 'The World's a Stage,' which is based on Elinor Glyn's latest story. Principal Pictures produced this picture exclusively for independent distribution, and the picture is in line with our announced policy of producing big features with well known stars and based on established authors.

"I will lose no time in prosecuting on the charge of libel all persons who in any way circulate or continue to circulate these false reports that this is or was a First National picture."

Exploitation Aids 'Changemen to Double Efforts

The value of exploitation has proved itself so indispensable that independent exchanges in New York are concentrating on it to the extent that right now exploitations are outdoing each other, pulling new and business-getting stunts. This situation is helping business considerably, with exhibitors coming out the big winners.

Harry Houdini's picture, "The Man From Beyond," did a splendid business at the Strand Theatre in New York City. Joe Lee, who is handling the bookings on the feature, is authority for the statement that the engagement was a record-breaker there.

Melvin Hirsch, manager of Aywon Film Exchange, reports that his exchange will release "Barriers of Folly," starring Eva Novak and George Larkin, on December 1. The picture already has been booked by the M. & S. Circuit, Loew Circuit, Haring & Blumenthal, Lou Brecher Enterprises, and others.

"Shadows," the second Preferred Picture released through Sam Zierler's Al Lichtman New York Exchange, was given its premiere showing in Newark this week at the Strand Theatre.

The newest independent exchange to enter the New York field is the S-P Film Exchange, which opened this week at 729 Seventh avenue. Samuel Pinkenfeld is the manager.

I. Brody is back in New York following a trip through New York State in the interest of Atlas Film Distributing Company, which is handling the distribution on "Why Do Men Marry?"

"Rags To Riches," the Warner feature, topped the boards at the U. S. Theatre, Paterson, N. J., this week, opening to a good house despite opposition from other houses. The Regent was showing "East Is West" with Constance Talmadge, while the Garden was staging the premiere showing of First National's "The Dangerous Age" with popular stars appearing personally at the opening show.

Indications point to the greatest season Commonwealth Film Corporation has had. Judging from reports coming from exhibitors in New York, Sam Zierler's exchange is running ahead of the field insofar as gross bookings are concerned.

Merit Film Corporation of New York is now concentrating on the second William Fairbanks production, "The Sheriff of Sun Dog," produced by Ben Wilson and written by W. C. Tuttle.

Bennie Zeidman Producing "The Spider and The Rose" with Array of 14 Stars; Coast Studio News

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—B. F. Zeidman is producing another independent special, "The Spider and the Rose," with an all-star cast, including Alice Lake, Gaston Glass, Robert McKim, Frank Campeau, Noah Beery, Edwin Stevens, Joseph Dowling, Otis Harlan, little Richard Heddrick, Andrew Arbuckle, Harry Northrup, Alex Francis and Louise Fazenda. Another equally well-known player will be added to the cast this week. The picture is being produced at the United studios. Gerald Duffy, whose original story, "Sure-Fire Flint," is Johnny Hines' latest starring vehicle, wrote "The Spider and the Rose."

An exquisite Prizma allegory is being filmed to enhance the production. Glen MacWilliams, who photographed "Oliver Twist," is handling the camera, while Jack McDermott is directing. He co-directed "Dinty" for Marshall Neilan. E. Richard Schayer wrote the scenario.

Louis Gasnier, who recently completed "The Hero" for Preferred Pictures, has started work on their next Gasnier production, "Poor Men's Wives," a screen original by Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston, authors of Schulberg's first release through the Lichtman Corporation, "Rich Men's Wives." The cast follows Schulberg's policy of all-star groups of players, including such names as Barbara La Marr, David Butler, Richard Tucker, Zasu Pitts and Betty Francisco. The feature will be ready for release early in 1923.

Two productions were completed last week at the Warner Brothers West Coast studios, according to Harry M. Warner. "Little Church Around the Corner," directed by William A. Seiter, was completed by Sam and Jack Warner, and Harry Rapf put the finishing touches to the Charles G. Norris novel, "Brass," directed by Sidney Franklin.

"Little Church Around the Corner" is said to reveal one of the sweetest stories that has ever graced the silver screen, namely, that there is a little church in every man's heart. In the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Claire Windsor, Hobart Bosworth, Pauline Starke, Cyril Chadwick, Marguerite Seddon, Walter Long, Alec Francis and Winter Hall. The story and scenario was written by Olga Printziau, based on the stage play of the same name by Marion Russell.

"Brass," a Rapf production, deals with modern marriage and divorce. It was adapted by Julian Josephson, and it is declared to be one of the best selling novels in the literary field. Prominent members of the cast include Marie Prevost, who recently played the feature role in "The Beautiful and Damned"; Monte Blue, Frank Keenan, Harry Meyers, Helen Ferguson, Irene Rich, Pat O'Malley, Margaret Seddon, Edward Johson and Miss Du Pont.

"Main Street," the last of the seven productions to be made for this season will be produced by Sam and Jack Warner.

Anthony J. Xydias, president of Sunset Productions, Inc., now producing the Jack Hoxie western series, is planning another independent producing unit which should be getting under way within the next week.

Jack Mintz is now serving as gag man for the Hallroom Boy Comedies which Jack Cohn is making here for independent distribution through C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York.

"Midnight Hummer" is the feature that Bob Horner is making with an all-star cast for Western Arts Film Company at the Bronx studio.

"Vengeance of Pierre" is the title of the next Lester Cuneo release that is now in its fifth week of production at the Fine Arts studio. Doubleday Productions, Inc., is producing the picture which Henry McCarty is directing.

Jack Nelson is directing the next Richard Talmadge for Phil Goldstone. The picture, "Fire Eater," is now in its third week of production.

"Snowy" Baker's first Phil Goldstone production, "Pals," in which he is starred, is now being produced. Howard Mitchell is directing.

Ben Wilson has completed his latest Monty Banks release for Federated. It is entitled "Brilliantino, the Bull Fighter," being a satire on the favorite Spanish pastime.

The complete cast for the Preferred picture, "Are You a Failure?" B. P. Schulberg will make for Al Lichtman exchanges follows: Madge Bellamy, Tom Santschi, Jane Keckley, Lloyd Hughes, Hardee Kirkland and Myrtle Vane. Tom Forman, director of "Shadows," is directing this picture also. The picture is in its seventh week of production.

"Rip Tide," with an all-star cast, is now in its fourth week of production at the Hollywood studios. This is the feature that A. B. Maescher Productions, Inc., is making for Arrow Film Corporation release.

Ginsberg Back

Henry Ginsberg, sales manager of the Al Lichtman Corporation, returned Monday from a Western trip of the important distributing points between New York and Denver.

When Oscar Lund completed production on "Love's Old Sweet Song," which Hopp Hadley will State right, he finished his ninety-fourth picture.

Wyndham Standing and Marguerite Marsh, the American stars, are in London to make a picture for Granger-Binder Productions, Ltd.

Several important first run contracts are in the process of being closed on Joe Brandt's first "Big Six" release, "More To Be Pitied than Scorned," which is handled in this territory by Lande Film Distributors, Inc.

The acquisition of the Alien Theatre by the Loew interests has developed a perplexing booking situation with which independents are now contending.

Lon Chaney in a series of striking scenes from "Shadows." Dir ected by Tom Forman, produced by B. P. Schulberg, and released through the Al Lichtman Corp.

Warners Engage Three Producers for 1923

Upon his return to New York last week, Harry M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, announced the signing of three producers who will make productions for Warner Brothers' distribution. Those signed are Harry Rapf, for a number of years; William Beaudine, for one year, and Monte Blue, for several seasons. The Warner Brothers also augmented their real estate holdings on the coast and will shortly enlarge their studio.

That Warner Brothers' productions will be sold individually and strictly on their merits was the substance of an emphatic statement made by Mr. Warner against alleged "sandbagging" tactics being utilized by certain exchangemen. The statement touching on this situation, as given out by Mr. Warner, follows:

"On my way back from the West Coast I stopped in a number of the key cities to gain some first hand information about exhibitor conditions. I discovered that exhibitors were complaining bitterly of the methods being used by a number of organizations in the industry to sell them pictures.

"The complaint is that these organizations are trying to sandbag exhibitors. By that I mean that an exhibitor cannot purchase pictures on an individual basis, but must take a group of mediocre product in order to secure one good box-office attraction.

As far as the Warner Brothers are concerned no such method will be pursued in the distribution of their present and future productions. We believe that exhibitors are entitled to choose for themselves what pictures are best suited for their audiences, and we will aid them in every way possible to derive the maximum box-office results with each and every one of our productions."

According to Mr. Warner the West Coast studios were enlarged at a cost of $200,000. Four and a half acres adjoining the studio were taken over, giving the Warner studios a total of over nine acres of ground. Construction of the administration office, dressing rooms and various other offices is reported under way.

"The acquisition of this property," added Mr. Warner, "was necessitated by our enlarged plans for next season. We plan to produce eighteen pictures, and we have already negotiated for the majority of the stories we will produce. They will be adaptations of only the well-known books and plays, such as the seven productions we are producing this year."

Northwest Is Humming; News of Independents

SEATTLE (Special)—Arrow, through its Seattle office, announces the purchase of seven Richard Talmadge features for distribution through eight states of the Pacific Northwest.

Ned C. Edris, a thorough-going showman, who has been everything from vaudeville artist to publicity man, has this week become affiliated with the De Luxe Feature Film Co. Through his experience as a newspaper man and exploiteer, Mr. Edris intends to be of service to exhibitors throughout the Northwestern states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana on exploitation matters. He is well known and well liked in the territory, although heretofore his actual contact with the game has been mostly through the vaudeville end. He was for some time associated with the late Paul Armstrong, playright. Edris has been in Seattle since 1911. He is a former University of Washington student.

Melvin G. Winstock, dean of moving picture men in the Northwest, whose name is synonymous with pioneering in the field, and who is probably the best known character in the territory, in consequence, has joined the organization of Kwality Pictures. Northwest distributors of the Warner Brothers product, and will be in charge of the Portland territory. The new Portland office will open December 1st at 403 Davis street, according to L. K. Brin, manager and owner of the exchange. Mr. Winstock starts this week for a tour of key cities, "from Boise to Bellingham."

"From Rags to Riches" has been purchased by the Jensen & Von Herberg Circuit and will have its Northwest premieres early in December. Mr. Brin is making a strenuous effort to secure Wes. Barry and his big vaudeville act for the Northwest.

Mr. Brin announces the following release schedule of Warner Brothers features, for the Northwest territory, at the rate of one a month: October, "From Rags to Riches;" November, "The Beautiful and Damned;" December, "Heroes of the Street;" January, "The Little Church Around the Corner;" February, "Brass;" March, "Main Street." Some wonderfully clever novelties are available with the above.

C. C. Burr to Release Sloman's "Blind Justice"

That C. C. Burr is rapidly blooming forth as one of the most potent factors in the independent industry was in great evidence this week when it was announced that he had taken over Edward Sloman's special feature, titled "Blind Justice." This production is reputed to be Sloman's crowning effort, containing a story and cast of such magnitude as to make it one of the most powerful dramas released. Directed and personally supervised by Edward Sloman, and adapted for the screen by Hilda Hollis from the story as it appeared in Munsey's Magazine, by Frank R. Adams, "Blind Justice" presents in its cast Milton Sills, Carmel Myers, Pat O'Malley, Jack Mower, Walter Long, Alec Frances, Eric Mayne, Charles Clary and Wilson Hummel. C. C. Burr and officials of his organization who viewed the production recently, expressed themselves as of the opinion that "Blind Justice" is a big production.

"Blind Justice" is a society crook story, in which Milton Sills possesses a role that gives him even greater opportunity to show his histrionic ability than that accorded Thomas Meighan in the "City of Silent Men."

H. H. Thomas Head of N. Y. Arrow 'Change

H. H. Thomas has been advanced to be manager of Arrow Exchange, Inc., an independent film distributing company, operating in New York and Northern New Jersey, with executive offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City. Mr. Thomas' rise, while thoroughly deserved, is all the more remarkable because his affiliation with Arrow Exchanges, Inc., dates back over a period of only two months. He associated himself with Arrow after having resigned as treasurer and general manager of Alexander Film Corporation, with whom he made an enviable record.

Prior to this he was in the New York Exchange of Fox Film Corporation for six years, in which time he learned to know the exhibitors in his territory thoroughly and—which is of equal importance—they learned to know him. They learned, too, that he was absolutely dependable and that when he made a promise he invariably lived up to it.

Ver Halen with Lichtman

Charles J. Ver Halen has joined the Al Lichtman Corporation, distributors of B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Pictures, as advertising manager. Ver Halen is well-known throughout the trade, having been actively engaged in picture advertising and exploitation for many years subsequent to his affiliations in the newspaper field. For a long period of time he was connected with Paramount's exploitation staff and later joined Robertson-Cole as advertising and publicity manager. He recently resigned a similar post with the Clarke-Cornelius Corporation. Ver Halen will take up his new duties at once and will handle all matters pertaining to advertising. Maurice Kann will continue as director of publicity for the Lichtman Corporation.

Time-tried Stunts to Combat Slump in Attendance During Christmas Shopping

RIGHT after Thanksgiving the pre-Christmas slump sets in, particularly at the matinees. Exhibitors have grown so used to this falling off in business that many have come to regard it as the inevitable preliminary to the Christmas season, and yet a little effort can not only hold business during the afternoons, but even make a little, if only the Christmas shopper is catered to. Some of the stunts suggested here are taken from Picture Theatre Advertising. Others are of more recent development.

Perhaps the best matinee appeal is the afternoon tea and rest idea. This is particularly useful if you have a "downtown" house or if your town is small enough to have but a single theatre and business center.

Cost Is Small

Advertise to the women. Tell them to drop in and see a picture before they go home. Tell them they can have a cup of tea, a rest and a wash-up.

If your retiring room is not already fitted with these, lay in a supply of cosmetics. Perhaps you can connect with a druggist for a supply of samples of face powders and rouge. Make the room especially attractive and inviting. Have plenty of towels, and make it possible for a woman to move the traces of the shopping strain.

Serve a light tea. You can get tea from some live grocer in return for a credit card. Perhaps you can obtain the cream and sugar in the same way. Hook in for some samples of chocolate malted milk. Several new brands have come upon the market and samples should be available. Get your grocer to give you light wafers, or perhaps the baker will fix you up in return for a slide telling about his mince pies and Christmas cakes.

Tell the Women

Then get after the women through personal letters or the newspapers. Exchange slides or program space for a line in the dry goods advertisements reading "Do your shopping early. Shop in the morning, when the crowds are light, then drop in at the Rialto Theatre to see (name of play). You'll never feel tired if you follow this course."

If you cannot effect any sort of hook-up, use the ten person personal notification cards, and get the idea over that way. Use a good line of talk; perhaps "I have been personally notified that during the Christmas shopping season the Rialto Theatre offers its patrons afternoon tea and the use of its luxurious rest rooms to remove the traces of shopping strain." There are ten spaces for name, address and telephone number, and a matinee ticket is given each child who presents one of these cards with the ten names filled in.

Make Good Your Promise

Make every effort to live up to your promises. Spend a little money to make the shoppers feel that your house is a haven of rest in the busy shopping excursions. Get them in the habit of turning to your theatre after a shopping tour. Get them in this thought during the Christmas season and you can collect on the idea long after you have discontinued the afternoon tea idea.

Perhaps you can get the merchants to take a hook-up page on the morning shopping idea. Most merchants seek to get the morning shopper, and will probably welcome the idea of a concerted drive. No one merchant will probably have the nerve to approach the others. Being neutral, you can approach them all and get not one but perhaps several hook-ups.

Gift Matinees

And don't overlook the gift matinees. Get in touch with the leading newspaper and hook it to a gift matinee when any child will be admitted who presents a discarded but still useful toy. Get some local welfare organization, such as the Salvation Army, to handle the distribution of these toys to the poor. Where there is an organized police force, perhaps they will help.

Then play up a special matinee for the poor children either on Christmas morning or the morning after. Hook the paper to this. If you can, hook some paper other than that to which you gave the toy matinee. Get them all with you if there is more than one daily.

Start right in with these and similar stunts and you can make the Christmas shopping help instead of hurt your business, and make it help well into the new year, by which time you can work some other idea.

This Candle Effect Gives a Light Lobby

Sometimes the Paramount Lobby suggestions are widely—and profitably—copied, and sometimes they are not so good. This lobby on "Singed Wings" is largely what you make it.

Although it is the moth which is supposed to get its wings singed in the flame of the candle, the suggestion is offered that butterflies be given preference because their brilliant colorings permit the better display. In addition to the canopy ornament; which is a conventionalized wing decoration, there are also painted butterflies on the back wall. These are too few. Get more of them. Get as many as you can. Put them everywhere in the lobby.

Fold a piece of fairly stiff hard surfaced white paper. Cut out on the fold a half butterfly. Paint one wing with oil paints, refold and press down, to get the same design on the other wing, then sketch in the body. Every butterfly has identical markings on its wings, and this is the only way to get the effect. Don't press hard enough to smear the paint, and work quickly so that the colors first applied are not dried down before the last color is applied.

You might use a butterfly matinee where a certain number of the flics are good for an admission, with perhaps extra ticket prizes for the best work.

The candles are profile and if you have a central box office, enclose it in corrugated board, with a pasteboard top and a rope wick terminating in a small power lamp, preferably in a frosted yellow globe.

This lobby will involve a little work, but if you do it well, the rich coloring will well repay you for your trouble.

Lean On This

The First National exploitation suggests a good scheme to put over Katherine MacDonald in "The Infidel." If you have not seen it, look it up in the plan book.

In brief, Miss MacDonald appears in many of the scenes in plain dresses, while she is marooned on a South Sea island. The suggestion is that the exhibitor capitalize the beauty unadorned idea to stage a calico contest in which the girls will wear simple garments and be judged solely on their looks. Every girl has or can borrow a gingham apron, and the contest should be popular and profitable.

URGES "MOTH AND THE FLAME" FOR SINGED WINGS LOBBY

This Paramount lobby suggestion plays up the butterfly rather than the moth as being more decorative in scheme and permitting the use of brilliant colors. The candles are supposed to be compo board, and the box office is also a candle effect.

Used Dual Ballyhoo for "Under Two Flags"

Up in the air and down on the street, it was all "Under Two Flags" in Los Angeles when that Universal tarried at the Kinema Theatre. In the air the house had a large gas balloon with the title painted on the underside. The balloon was captive and was kept low.

FROM LOS ANGELES

For the ground work a pair of riders were used, a male Arab and a girl in the costume of Cigarette, both mounted upon good looking horses and carrying banners for the attraction. They perambulated all the downtown streets and the horses attracted almost as much attention as the riders.

Made a Banner of a Cutout Display

The New Garrick Theatre, Duluth, seems to be very much on the hustle. The newest idea to come from the lake city is a skied cutout display, using the forest fire scene from "The Storm."

A Universal Release

THE SKIED CUTOUT

This is a combination of painted ground with cutout figures, and it was large enough to be clearly seen from the sidewalk, though this fact has to be taken on faith in the small cut. Trick lighting gave a realistic effect, and the display was seen to better advantage than would have been the case in the lobby. The design was duplicated on the other side.

If you want a fire lighting, try working an amber light with a red rapid flasher, to give the flames.

Champion Told of "Leather Pushers"

While Lew Tendler was still a champion, the Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, arranged with The Inquirer to have him cover the showing of "The Leather Pushers." It was not a very fluent criticism, but it carried the weight of authority.

PAYING THE PAPER

Then the theatre played up the criticism on its house front and not only interested possible patrons, but pleased the paper with the reference to its sporting page.

This is a hook-up every town can swing. If you have no well-known pug you can hook in the sporting editor; and probably he can do a better job of writing.

Sought Perfect Men As a Bondboy Stunt

Venus contests are a bit stale and are curling up on the edges and the nap is all worn off.

The Strand Theatre, Omaha, worked it in reverse for "The Bondboy" by advertising for the perfect man, hooking to the idea of the physical development of the rugged Kentucky mountaineers in "The Bondboy."

A newspaper was tied up to the idea and candidates were measured at the Y. M. C. A. and Athletic Club gymnasiums, these bodies being glad to offer their facilities in return for the advertisement their institutions received.

It's a little out of the ordinary and was well received.

Tied to Kewpie

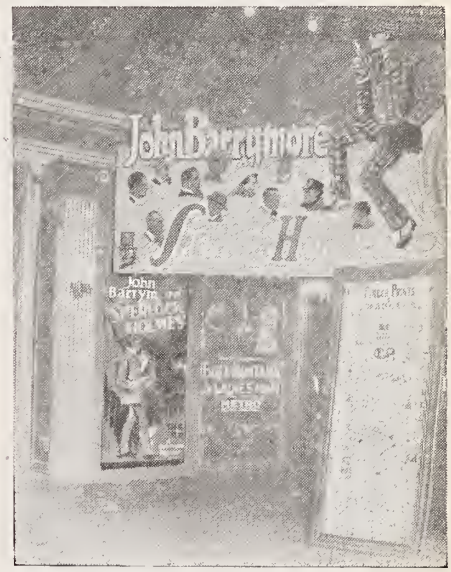
Lacking a big display, George Schade, of Sandusky, put a kewpie in a glass case on the sidewalk in front of the Schade with a "Crossroads of New York" four-way sign on top.

Then he sent postals to a mailing list of men asking them to meet the lady at "The Crossroads of New York" in front of the Schade, and that was about all he had to do on the Mack Sennett production.

Fingerprint Notices Helped Sell Goldwyn

Goldwyn's "Sherlock Holmes" was given an original yet very simple exploitation stunt when it played the Blackstone Theatre, Pittsburgh.

From the police department old reward circulars were obtained which carried finger prints in addition to the usual front and profile views of the wanted criminals. There were also handcuffs, brass knuckles and similar articles supposed to be connected with famous criminals, but of doubtful authenticity. They served to get attention, however, and to interest in the play.



A Goldwyn Release

THE BLACKSTONE IDEA

A caricature cutout was used for a banner with poster cutouts to work in with it, and 5,000 finger print record cards were distributed calling for the apprehension of Moriarty.

Seven Pittsburgh papers carried stories of a mock trial held by a college fraternity in the County Court and which was supposed to have been started through interest of the students in this picture.

Armed Klansmen

Armed klansmen guarded the entrance to the Isis Theatre, Houston, Tex., during the run of "One Clear Call.' They shot no one, however, because the guns were not loaded and also because the guards were cut from the First National paper and supplied with actual rifles to make them look more interesting.

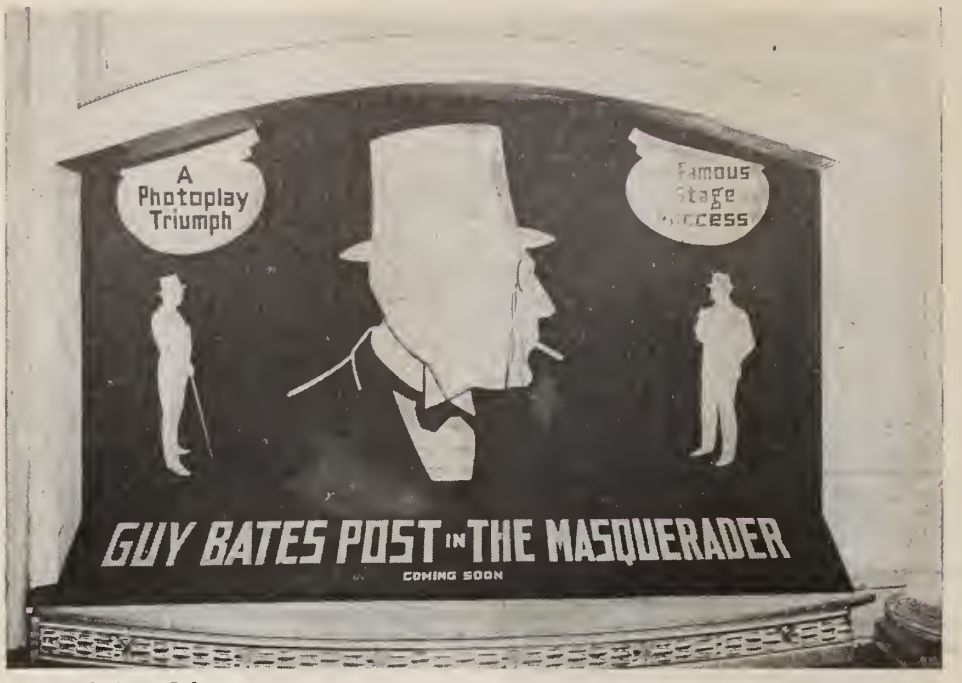
Just goes to show that you can take an old stunt and give it a new touch. The klansmen cutouts are old to staleness, but the rifle idea is new.

Another "Original"

The original gown worn by Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame" is last reported from Milwaukee, where it served a hardworking engagement. First of all, they put it on a sob sister for a morning paper and let her be photographed in the creation. That got it in the paper, for the sister was supposed to do a stunt a day and write it up.

Then they put it in a window with a three-foot candle, only they could not burn the candle as the fire laws prohibited the risk.

To get a final kick out of it, they insured it for $3,000, which is perhaps why the fire marshal would not permit the candle to be lighted.



A First National Release

RED SILHOUETTES MADE A FINE LOBBY DISPLAY FOR POST

Gus Metzger used this idea for the Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oreg.. These were not stage displays, but silhouettes in miniature prosceniums and were used for lobby work. The paper was cut out, backed with red and then blackened.

Red Silhouettes Starred in Lobby

Because he had little time to prepare for Post in 'The Masquerader," Gus Metzger of the Rialto Theatre, Portland, Ore., had to work fast.

He took the First National paper and cut out the portion shown in the cut, backing these with red translucent paper. The rest was painted a dead black and the whole was set into false prosceniums set up in the lobby. With plenty of light at the back these showed strongly even in the daytime, and were different, and therefore attractive. A little brush work on the face would have made it even better, but here is the germ of a corking good idea.

Metzger made three of these and put one in the tunnel over the sidewalk before a building operation, where the overhead protection required by law gave a semi-darkness that permitted the display to show up in daylight hours.

Quick Thinking Won Big Display

What Max Rosenfield—who has a college education—calls "cerebral acceleration" got a fine display for George F. Rabbit, of the Alcazar Theatre, Naugatuck, Conn.

Rabbit and Russell Moon, Paramounteer, were motoring into Bristol when they came upon a car in the ditch. Rosenfield says it was smashed beyond recognition, but then he is the chap who talks about Golems. Really it was only ditched, as the photograph shows. Anyhow it was ditched to a fare-ye-well in a swampy drain and Rabbit hustled back to his home town, got out a sign which read "This might have resulted in Manslaughter. Drive carefully," and added the advice that they see "Manslaughter" at the Alcazar.

According to the Golem Man the car rested in the ditch, in full view of state road traffic for two days. Then it was towed in, with the signs still on, and the kind hearted garage man paraded it around town before he took it under cover.

According to the Paramounteer's report, it was the other side of car which was smashed, but he took the side with the signs.

Paper Masquerader Puffed At a Fag

Making connections with an art student at the University of Wisconsin gave A. S. Desormeaus, of the Strand Theatre, Madison, a fine ballyhoo. The undergraduate was clever at papier mache work and executed an enormous head of Guy Bates Post in the costume made familiar by the silhouette. This was provided with electrical eyes and the mouth was connected to a rubber tube whereby the figure appeared to smoke a cigarette.

The design was mounted in an automobile and driven through the streets, lighted at night by four baby spots, and attracted considerable attention, particularly when the clouds of smoke issued from the paper lips. This is rather beyond the range of the average house, but papier mache is not as difficult to work as it sounds, and you do not even need a mould if you can model. Try for a minor effect at first and work up to more pretentious showings. Wet newspapers and a good stiff flour paste will work. It made extra money for the First National attraction and the possibilities are limitless.

Opposition Raffles

An odd situation recently arose in Terre Houte, Ind., where Brentlinger, of the Liberty Theatre, arranged for a Raffles stunt for "The Masquerader," not knowing that a traveling theatrical company had also arranged to work the same scheme with an opposition newspaper.

As a result two Raffles were on the street at the same time and no one knew which of the two challenges to give suspiciously acting characters. Several times the right masquerader was taken to the wrong office, and the resultant excitement helped the game along and increased the interest so that both raffles made more business for their respective employers.

Don't complain; exploit.

Literary Puzzle Was Good Ticket Seller

The inherent love for puzzles was capitalized by the Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., for "Shelock Holmes."

It ties a local paper to a contest in which the titles of a number of Conan Doyle's stories were jumbled. The first, for example was

of
uo

It did not require much labor to decide that this was "The Sign of the Four," but some of the others were more difficult. The prizes were tickets and copies of one of Doyle's books, the latter supplied by a news stone, which contributed a fine window display to the rest of the advertising, and sold out on the books in consequence.

A Paramount Release

THIS IS NOT A FAKE, BUT A REAL ACCIDENT STUNT

The car went into the ditch. Rabbit, of the Alcazar Theatre, Naugatuck, Conn., saw it and rushed back to town to get some tack cards. The car was left out in the cold for two days then towed into town to the garage, signs still on.

Screen Snapshots

One reel—Every other week

California THEATRE of LOS ANGELES
MAIN at 8th
Office of the BUSINESS MANAGER
Los Angeles, Cal. August 5, 1922
Mr. Louis Lewyn, Editor,
"Screen Snapshots,"
Los Angeles, Cal.
Dear Mr. Lewyn:
I have booked the entire series of "Screen Snapshots" from Pathe for the California Theater, and am convinced that it is the cleverest novelty reel on the market today.
The type of material that you are succeeding in getting for this single reel subject is splendid, and every "Snapshots" that I have ran so far has been thoroughly enjoyed by the patrons of the California Theater. The last one I used which had, among other interesting subjects, a little sketch participated in by Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin was a knockout.
"Screen Snapshots" is not only entertaining, but I believe it is the means of increasing the public's interest in pictures, and I believe that they will always be welcomed on the screens of the best theatres.
With best wishes for your success, I am
Cordially yours,
Managing Director.

Behind the scenes with stars of the screen

THERE isn't a man, woman or child in any of your audiences who wouldn't give a good deal to get "behind the scenes" of filmdom.

Screen Snapshots does just that; it shows the stars as they are, on the lot, off the lot, at work, at home and at play.

Every number is a box-office attraction for it has the box-office stars.

"As usual Screen Snapshots contains pictures of stars that will be of particular interest."—M. P. World.

"Views of stars on vacation instead of location make this a very pleasing reel. Most audiences like to see their favorite players 'back stage' and this should be popular."—Film Daily.

"Screen Snapshots is very interesting and my attendance has improved since I started showing them."—Ralph R. Gribble, Grand Theatre, New Hamburg, Ontario.

Comedies

Two reels

A few facts and figures

SNUB POLLARD has been amusing the public for seven years.

First he was a featured player in the remarkable Harold Lloyd one reel comedies that are still spoken of as standards of excellence in one reel comedies.

Next he was a featured player in the two reel Lloyd comedies that swept the country with laughter. Then he starred in the one reel Hal Roach comedies that have played more theatres than any one reel comedies ever made.

He became a star in one reel comedies three years ago. His first two reel comedies have been just released.

70% of the theatres that played him three years ago are still playing him.

It doesn't take much guessing to know the reason why.

Beautiful, Thrilling,
Full of Surprises

There has never been produced a class of pictures so universally popular as the American "Western." Travellers in China, Japan, India, the South Sea Islands, everywhere, speak of their popularity. And here at home they are liked by every audience,—if they are good.

The Range Rider Series are the best Westerns that can be made. The stories are great. The cast good. There is a surprise in every one. And they pack a great big wallop.

TRADE MARK

Noah's Ark Cruised Broadway Channels

For the run of "The Sin Flood" at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the management sent out an ark to float along the traffic currents of middle Broadway. The ark was built on a truck, the body being closed in to suggest the shell, while a deck house was built on top, through the windows in which appeared cutouts of the featured players. A small boy in the cabin kept revolving one of the circular posters which the Goldwyn advertising has made familiar.

The float was preceded by a rider who bore a banner telling that the "Sin Flood" was coming. In smaller towns this rider can be sent through the streets at a fast pace, but in New York the traffic cops were too watchful.

Several hundred target cards were wired to hydrants and when the poster was haled into court he explained he was referring to the "Sin Flood" in Albany. Being around election time he was let off without a fine.

A miniature of the Cottonia Gazette, about the size of a herald, was printed on one side with an advertisement for the theatre and attraction on the other. These were folded and tucked under the arms of newsboys printed on cards about 5 by 7 inches, the card being slit either side of the arm to permit the paper to be tucked through. The last time we saw this card used it came up from Central America.

Stereopticons threw advertisements on the sidewalk at night and about 125,000 pieces of printed matter were passed around, ranging from tack cards to the novelties described above.

A Goldwyn Release

THE WARNING RIDER USED ON "THE SIN FLOOD" IN NEW YORK

He went ahead of a Noah's Ark float used by the Capitol Theatre when the big release was given its New York run. He was not a mad rider, dashing to warn the populace, because we have traffic laws, but the stunt was a fast worker.

Put It Over

In Buffalo the Kresge ten-cent stores handled only one line of cheap sheet music and it looked a little black for the plugger song for "The Eternal Flame" until Manager Vincent McFaul and a First National exploitation man made a combined attack and pointed out the benefits to be derived from a connection with the Talmadge play. The result was that the store look in the plugger and had every reason to be glad that it had temporarily widened its line.

Worked Off Stickers

Billy Clifford runs the Clifford Theatre in Urbana, Ohio. H. W. Hitt runs a dry goods store. Hitt had a lot of old lace he had stocked before petticoats went out of fashion, even in Urbana. That was a considerable time ago.

When Harry Swift drifted into town to put over "Blood and Sand," he indulged in his favorite pastime of window grabbing. He got Hitt's window and made such a pretty display of Lila Lee in a mantilla that Hitt practically sold out. Now Hitt is strong for exploitation.

Harry also capitalized the fact that Urbana is trying to get a new post office. He dumped loads of sand in front of the theatre, which is in the same building with the post office, and somehow word spread that building operations were about to be begun. Then the newspaper investigated and the laugh helped sell more tickets.

Don't Forget to Order Christmas Ticket Book at Once

Classy Classified

Walter C. Benson, of the Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., pulled a star classified ad when he wrote: "Would you give $150 for a 1923 model Cadillac touring? So would we. But the question is, will you give a quarter to see Mae Murray in 'Broadway Rose,' now at the Laurier." He had a lot of them under the various headings, but this was the star. If you never tried the classified columns, you do not know what you are missing.

Forging the Chain

The chain letter used on "If You Believe It, It's So," was worked on Monte Cristo when it played the Pantheon Theatre, Vincennes, Ind. Five thousand letters were sent out and more than 100,000 copies were made, according to the publicity man.

A VIVID DISPLAY FOR "UNDER TWO FLAGS" FROM THE STRAND THEATRE, MILWAUKEE

The larger picture shows the placement and the other gives the detail of a compelling display. It will be seen that the small French and British flags are placed against the larger United States banners. KLANSMEN RODE ON THE LOBBY FRIEZE IN SEATTLE

C. H. Wooley, of the Princess Theatre, painted a row of black riders against a yellow ground and illuminated them with the cove lights for "One Clear Call." It made an effective show. Six sheet cutouts were used on the marquise to good effect.

Bought a Window With a Silk Hat

Harry Needles, of the Princess Theatre, Hartford, wanted a window in a woman's wear store for "The Masqueradcr" because it was one of the best locations in town.

There was nothing in the play to suggest a lingcrie hook-up, but he persuaded the store to make a boudoir set in one window, with two wax women in evening gowns. Then he set a silk hat and a pair of gloves on the table, put in a card stating that they had been left behind by thc Masquerader and let it go at that.

There was no particular idea to thc display, but it got a card in a desirable window, and that was all Mr. Needles was after.

At It Again

It has been several months since the last stage marriage was rcported, but Julian K. Johnston, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, persuaded a young couple that it was worth $75 to them to get married on the stage to advertise "Kindred of the Dust."

He jammed them in for the ceremony and the crowd went out and reported that the Kyne play was a good one, so the rest of the town came without demanding that a wedding be thrown in.

A hook-up page was arranged with those who supply young married couples and cach of the co-operating stores made a window display, which helped along.

Reading, Too

Laying out a four-page hook-up so that one column was left for text on each page was the new kink Kenneth O. Renaud, of the Salt Lake office worked on "The Old Homestead" for the Paramount Princess Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Paramounteer got in the ads and had it understood that the reading column was to be filled with talk about the play. This spread the hook-up and at the same time greater value to the house.

Free Paper, Too

Walter Lindlar put one more new trimming to the Raffles stunt. Down in Braddock, Pa., he put out a woman raffles for "The Woman Who Walked Alone," and in addition to a free ticket to the show the identifier got a three months' subscription to the cooperating newspaper. The woman was made the basis of a hook-up page in which each merchant advertised that the raffles would be in his store some time in a named half hour period. With small prizes, more could bc given, which made for a more general interest.

Sell the women and you sell all.

Personal Endorsement Brought in the Bacon

When Lem Stewart saw "To Have and to Hold" in the projection room, he wrote the Southern Entcrprises managers to get behind the picture with their personal endorsement, to put it over to the best advantage.

They know from experience that when Lem says that he means it, and the picture is being sold through the South on the personal guarantee that the picture is out of the ordinary.

Warren Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., smashed the Wednesday-Thursday-Friday record at the Imperial through spending most of his advertising appropriation for four personal guarantee ads, using the two suggested by Stewart and two others which he wrote himself. He also made a castle front and used a banner, but most of the selling was done on the guarantee.

Rewarded "Remembrance"

Radio advertising is forbidden, but Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, staged a concert of old-time songs and offered prizes for correct identifications. The songs were the same that were to be used in the presentation of the Goldwyn production, and this fact was noted in the newspaper stories.

The store broadcasting the concert held a theatre party at the Merrill as its annual celebration and 7,500 tickets were sold to the event.

Various tieups were used, including, of course, the cigar stores and the phonograph shops. Two of the latter used large compo board records to put the idea over.

Russell Brown figured that a California redwood would make a good banner for "Kindred of the Dust" when he played it at the Rex Theatre, Eugene, Ore., so he painted one on a banner and hung it in the lobby with chains instead of rope to give the suggestion of solidity. It was better than the usual painted sign and it brought the crowd in.

A Paramount Release

A CLEVER WINDOW MINIATURE DISPLAY FOR "OLD HOMESTEAD"

Designed by James Tallman, of the Victoria Theatre, Steubenville, O., and S. G. Sladdin, of the Paramount staff, it put the picture over in one of the best windows in town. And it was worth all the extra trouble in extra ticket sales.

Lobby Dances

Fred V. Greene, Jr., who used to be a Paramounteer, has taken over the Rialto Theatre, Jamaica, L. I., and is putting the house in the bonanza class. Hallowe'en he was playing "Burning Sands," but had his lobby decorated for the seasonal event, so after the last performance he invited the audience to stick around for a dance. They did—until two o'clock.

Now Fred is going to make the dance a regular Monday night event, but the dancing is limited to one hour. It will build up a weak night, and with a large lobby he can accommodate a large crowd.

Dizzy

Herschel Stuart, who sends an item a day from the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, made one of his contributions a one-sheet as noisy as the worst of Max Doolittle's shirts. It is green, red and black on yellow and it makes a noise like a calliope in joint debate with a boiler factory—but it certainly put over "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew." We never heard a noisier poster. The paper was delayed in transit and he wrote he had to do something. He did! E. A. Olmstead collaborated.

Tied 'Old Homestead' to Electrical Lobby

Two cities have advantageously used the electrical hook-up on "The Old Homestead." In Cleveland the Electrical League, instigated thereto by S. G. Sladdin, invaded the spacious lobby of Loew's State Theatre and put up an elaborate display. There was an old homestead, dimly lit, to be contrasted with an electrically lighted home, and the old fashioned kitchen equipment was shown beside the modern electrical appliances. The menagerie up above is part of the regular mural decoration and not the display.

To put over the idea to capacity, the league took quarter page spaces to tell how pleased Uncle Josh would have been with the mod ern devices.

Leslie F. Whelan, Washington Paramounteer, did the same thing in Loew's Palace Theatre, and the Potomac Electric Company took from a half to a quarter page daily for a week. Whelan also used the jingle contest and a drawing stunt, both for cash prizes. The prize in the drawing contest went to a woman who did her drawing on an eggshell and used cotton whiskers and hair.

A First National Release

ADDING SIX SHEETS TO THE LOBBY ART GALLERY

The Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, used portions of the six sheets on "The Eternal Flame" as part of the top work, also using three ones of the branding scene at the rear and a cutout surmounted by electric candles on top of the box office.

Holland Colors for Harold Lloyd Date

Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla., compo boarded in his lobby for Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," painting it a canary yellow with blue lettering. You could hear the lobby around the corner and two blocks down the street.

Where he had no lettering he pasted a cutout of Lloyd's head with Grandma on one shoulder and the Girl on the other. The box office opening came where his shirt front should have been, with an entrance and exit on either side. It was noisy, but it shot business up forty per cent., and Settle would paint the front shrimp pink to get the coin in. It was noisy, but it was not as garish as it sounds in type.

A local baker was induced to put Grandma's Boy's cookies on the market, and was loaned a lobby display outfit for the window he dressed. At the Saturday matinee the cookies were given all of the children in attendance—about 250. Each was wrapped in a special wrapping with Lloyd's picture and some advertising text.

A candy store came in with a box of candy of the old-fashioned "homemade" sort, and about a dozen soda fountains announced special Harold Lloyd sundaes.

It set the house back only $15 to get the heavy increase. A fifteen per cent. hoist is considered good in Texas. Forty per cent. is like money from home.

Lots of time an exhibitor thinks he is exploiting when he isn't.

A Near-Bare Bather for Saturday Night

Gordon Conrad is just getting around to playing "Saturday Night." That's not so bad when you are told that he runs the Town Hall, Melbourne, Australia.

Australia knows nothing of near-beer, but it got a taste of the near-bare when he shot a motor truck around town with a girl sitting in a bath tub mounted on the platform.

Over the rim of the tub her bare shoulders appeared, and over the rim of the tub could be seen her bare knees. And before anyone could plan to climb up on the truck and peep in, the car would stop and Venus would arise from her bath-tub sea while the crowd watched with mingled emotions, for the higher she rose the more pink you could see. But after the first gasp you realized that it was pink fleshings and not flesh and then it didn't seem so important, though still interesting.

Street demonstrations are barred in Australia, but the cops were so interested in the bather that they forgot for the moment the statutes therein made and provided and remembered only the statuesque beauty.

Of course it is to be remembered that it is summer time down there just now. There was no great risk of pneumonia.

Told by Tailors

W. A. Doster, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., persuaded three tailors to come in with him on a three-quarter page display for "A Tailor Made Man" by telling them how all the tailors in Los Angeles contributed space for this Ray production on its premier. The newspaper gave the other quarter page to a write-up of the story, stressing the tailor angle.

These three and two others all gave their windows to the title.

It's Different

Because the kid parade has been sadly overworked and because "Nero" is more or less linked to the idea of conflagrations, the Strand Theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, announced a Fireman's Day on "Nero" when it played the Fox release, and the motorized apparatus paraded the streets and made a bright red ballyhoo. Hook them up with banners telling that if your fire department had been in Rome it never would have burned down, and you'll get a good laugh and an advertisement at the same time. It's different, at any rate. That helps mightily.

This is the last reminder to get Christmas ticket books. See your printers.

THIS CLEVER DISPLAY PAVED WAY FOR THE NORMA PEARLS

It was used by a St. Paul store to put over Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame" and when this was done, to let Miss Talmadge put over the Norma Pearls, in which they dealt. There are no pearls in the original display; just photographs.

Window for a Week to Prepare Pearls

Modern merchandising looks well ahead. A dealer in artificial pearls gave a window for a week to "The Eternal Flame" to put over Miss Talmadge in the play and then, with the same backing, substituted the Norma pearls for the framed photographs of the star, to hook into the run.

The store does not deal in photograph frames and these were procured from another dealer. The central oval was a picture of the star done in oils, and the wreaths on either side named star and title on the left and house and date on the right.

The design was planned by the art department of Finkelstein & Ruben for the Capitol Theatre and was sold to the store on the richness of the effect. When the feature opened at the Capitol, the pearls were put in place of the photographs, giving a two weeks' run to the window.

It may be argued that Miss Talmadge is too well known to need this identification, but that was not the point. The idea was to first attract admirers of the star to the window through the display of her pictures and then to put the pearls over when her appearance on the screen heightened the interest.

Noble's Shadow Box Is a Classy Design

Paul E. Noble, of the People's Theatre, Portland, Ore., is one of the star lobby designers. His most recent design is a shadow box idea for "Hurricane's Gal."

The basis is a section from a six-sheet, as the three-sheet carried intrusive lettering, and he wanted to supply his own. This was set slightly back of a compo board frame of dark color, splashed with gold. Ovals let in the selling text and lights between the frame and the poster gave prominence to the picture.

THE NOBLE SHADOW BOX

The frame should be in black or deep crimson splashed with gold or deep blue splashed with either silver or gold. The ovals are some light color (red in this case, which photographed black), and the text is best done in white. It is best to varnish down the picture before it is set into place as the effect is much richer and often will suggest an oil painting.

This display was set into a lobby in a theatre in process of demolition not far from the People's but it will serve as well for window displays or in the house lobby. A set of these in a compo board falsework would transform a lobby for some special event.

Half Million Show Helped "Pink Gods"

George Smith, the Toronto Paramounteer, got a fine display on "Pink Gods" for the Regent Theatre recently. Visiting the leading firm of jewelers, he persuaded them to devote a window to diamonds.

In the background were scale photographs of the famous diamonds of history and photographs of the Cape diamond mines, with an explanation that similar scenes were to be shown in the film. These were all from the private collection of the head of the firm.

This was introductory to the display of about half a million dollars worth of real diamonds and a set of cutting and polishing tools. The store supplied a watchman to guard the display and the local police department detailed an officer to keep the sidewalk traffic moving. They almost needed another traffic officer at the theatre.

The diamond display, in some form or another, has been the standard exploitation on this release and has done much to put the feature over.

Oilcloth Mats

Probably most exhibitors have forgotten that some time ago it was considered a good stunt to use a linoleum mat in front of the house painted with a sign for the attraction.

The Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, used ten of these mats in various parts of the business district for "Sherlock Holmes," putting them down in front of stores whose owners gave consent. The value of the oilcloth over the painted walk is that it permits the lettering to be done more carefully and in oils instead of watercolor.

As the store and the brand were also advertised, the only cost to the theatre was the labor of placing the mats.

The ten-names cards were used to good effect and two boys drove goat cart perambulators just ahead of the circus parade which was threatening business.

Street cars used banners as well as the cars of a taxicab company; which exchanged the space in return for a slide. The only cost was for the banners.

Start them off with Christmas ticket books and you can get them in a year-round habit.

AMIKE VOGEL SPREADS EXPLOITATION ALONG THE ROAD

Transferred from St. Louis to Pittsburgh, the Paramounteer made the trip by car to save freight (on the car), and bannered it as shown in the picture. That's Amike with the pale halo. When Mike dies, we bet he has his hearse bannered

Landing Lobby Was An Effective Smithy

The landing of the grand stairway in the Strand Theatre, Lansing, used to be shown very often, but of late it has not come in. This display for "Human Hearts" is one of the best the house has made in the unused space, and carried out the idea of the picture in its advance work.

THE LANSING LANDING

Plays Up the Clock

Announcing the starting time of the next show, A. C. Cowles, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., uses a clock face of glass, similar to those which hung in jeweler's windows some time ago. The fad died out after the novelty ran off, and Mr. Cowles uses the clock to announce the next showing, with the legend "see the picture from the beginning." In place of the numerals he uses sections of stills or lobby cards.

"For The Face in the Fog" he draped the clock face with blue velvet and against this back he set a cutout face, with a scrim before it. Lighting through the paper cutout gave very much the effect suggested by the title, and helped not a little to sell the production.

HOW TO WORK THE BED STUNT ON "REMEMBRANCE"

This was recently described in this department, but the photograph shows just how it was done. The idea comes from the Capitol Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., and it is hooked to "The Old Shoes Pay for New Shoes" idea.

Wall Paper Gave a Striking Lobby

Black and white lobbies are wonderfully effective, but they are some trouble to paint. Richard A. Addison, of the Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, Cal., does not believe in doing work others can do for him. This very striking display is just wall paper and posters.

When he booked Marie Prevost in Universal's "Don't Get Personal," he wrote the exchange to send him all the ones and threes they had in stock showing the head of the star—just one of each—whether they were on his title or not. These gave the medalions. The backing is a black and white wall paper with a tiny rosebud design relieving the black stripes. This breaks the severity of the line without detracting in the least from the effect, but rather adding to it.

It's a bit late, but Mr. Addison just thought to send it in. He writes that he will send others later. If they are as good as this we assuredly hope that he does.

Any exhibitor can make a big showing by spending money. The clever man gets effects cheaply.

MADE WALL PAPER FOUNDATION OF EFFECTIVE LOBBY

Richard A. Addison, of the Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, used black and white wall paper for his lobby base and mounted one of each of Marie Prevost's heads the exchange had, whether it related to "Don't Get Personal" or not.

Grauman's Hollywood Gets a Big Opening

Three sets of near-teaser cards launched the opening drive of the Grauman Theatre in Hollywood, with "Robin Hood" for the opening attraction. The first of these read "Robin Hood in Hollywood." Then came a set in which "Doug says" prefaced the slogan and another set with "Sid says." After the opening a fourth card was used which announced the house. There were three thousand of each of the first three sets and 10,000 of the "now."

A banner was put up and ordered down by the city department, but the Board of Public Works took the matter under advisement and rendered an adverse decision a few days too late to be preventive. Meanwhile the banner stayed up.

Thirty-one United Cigar Stores were tied to the "Robin Hood" cigars, and a drug store chain advertised "Robin Hood" ale, which was nut brown, but kickless. A big department store ran a display of art stills at which some of the players acted as hosts, and there were numerous independent window hook-ups in addition to the chain stores.

A 48 page special edition of the local paper was another stunt, and five brass bands and a jazz orchestra played them in the opening night. The ushers, even, were used for publicity. The scheme of the house is Egyptian and thirteen girl ushers were dressed in the ancient costume of the Nile. There is a photograph to go with this, but press agents never seem to learn that wrapping a photograph in an old window card will not protect it on its 3,000 mile trip across the continent, and the photographs came in in sections.

A Six From Ones

The Washington Theatre, Dallas, used stock paper on Fox's "The Fast Mail," mounting a 24-sheet for a banner. It wanted two sizes to work either side of the box office, so it made the second six of six one sheets all of the same design; the locomotive head-on. This gave the railroad angle to balance the riding scene which is displayed on the six.

THE HEART LOBBY IS OLD STUFF, BUT IT IS STILL GOOD

The Main Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., used it very effectively for "Human Hearts." Not only is the lobby top strung with several hundred hearts, but the wall display carries out the same idea, very greatly increasing the effect of the display.

Razor Window Is Still on the Job

When Nick Ayer was with Roth & Partington, in San Francisco, he used to get the Gillette window about every other week, for Nick seemed to have a mortgage on that display.

Lately we have missed it, but the other day Louis McDermott slipped in and got this display for "Under Two Flags" at the Grenada.

THE GILLETTE WINDOW

The tie-in is based on the fact that Priscilla Dean is "Under Two Flags" while the Gillette is under all flags.

A stand of colors, four small cutouts and one large one were all that were required, but it made a very flossy appeal. Few passed the window without stopping for a look.

Hallowe'en Contest Pulled in a Storm

Although it rained Hallowe'en Night, Tom R. Clemmons of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, put over a better business by thirty per cent. than he took in the same night last year. Had it been clear, he would have made a killing.

For ten days in advance he had a lot of newspaper publicity for a Hallowe'en contest for the best masquerade costume and forty-seven entries competed for the seven prizes, which ranged from a $25 necklace to a black cat, all of the prizes, with the exception of the cat being donated by the merchants who helped put over the idea by displaying their prizes.

His lobby was dominated by a pumpkin six feet tall, broken open to display an 11 by 22 and lettered for Mabel Ballin in "Other Women's Clothes," and his lobby men were put into effective masquerade costumes to help the idea along. Black cats, pumpkins, witches and the rest of the Hallowe'en symbols were spread around the lobby on invisible wires.

Just watch Clemmons take an encore next year. Make a note to follow him.

Still Going

They are still making street pictures to advertise "The Crossroads of New York." The Palace Theatre made a picture, "The Crossroads of Des Moines," to be run with the Sennett play, and worked for several days with a cast of local players. Most of the "scenes" were blank shooting, but the crowd did not know this and followed the cameraman and his troupe around. At showing times the company would move over to the house front and after making a scene go inside. Many in the crowd would follow.

P. T. Barnum worked the same idea at his old Museum, 50 years ago, long before he went into the circus business, but it is still a good stunt.

Ritual Uniforms for "Burning Sands"

Borrowing the ritualistic uniforms of a secret organization for ballyhoo work is something new. J. B. Carroll worked it for "Burning Sands."

He sanded the floor of his long and narrow lobby and erected a striped tent in the centre. On either side he hung a desert drop borrowed from one of the drama houses. Most drama houses are well equipped if they have one such drop, but Carroll was in luck and got two.

Then he put his ushers in costume borrowed from the D. O. K. K., which seems to be one of the numerous imitations of the Mystic Shrine, and used them to give local color. All the display cost was ten passes, but it ran the business up twenty per cent.

Between the Shrine, the K. of C. Alhambra and a somewhat similar side degree of the Odd Fellows, it should be comparatively simple to borrow costumes.

HOW THE HIPPODROME THEATRE, READING, WORKED SHERLOCK

Cutting out the six sheet and giving it a new backing—with light effects—turned a poster into an exhibit and sold the idea strongly. They also used a cut-out over the banner with two smaller cut-outs to flank the main display.

Paneled Display Gives a Rich Effect

There is no especial jazz to this announcement from the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, on Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy," but it is an excellent example of what can be done in the way of a dignified and effective announcement. That reverse panel would be dangerous in some places but Baltimore offers notably good press work and reverse and half tones are reasonably safe, and in this instance came out better than good. About the only comment to offer is that the eight point roman in the lower right hand corner offsets the value of the supporting cast named in bold face just below. Put into an italic, the contrast would have been better, but the probabilities are that the reader is sold before he comes to that part of the display. The general impression created by the announcement is that of a genuinely good play and the reader goes further only for details. It is a very nice distribution of the component parts, and makes a pleasing appeal. Most of

Notched Stock Cut Is a Trifle Ragged

For "Remembrance," the Century Theatre, Baltimore, used a stock cut and notched out some of the superfluous reverse strip to let in a trio of full face lines. The tail of the "e" comes far below the rest, and the cut had to be notched to get this in, but the agent evidently did not want to waste the chance to say something, so he cut away what he could. He leaves the rest a little ragged, but the chances are that few noticed the device and it is not so pronounced as to spoil the effect, but it is not what might be called pretty. It might even have been better had more been cut away so that the white space extended higher into the black another half inch. This would have made a better mortise and would have given more room. Most of the type is given to three New York press notices; which is not altogether our idea of good selling, and the rest goes to the minor features, including an effective use of the outline cuts used by Christie for the comedies. The only real sales talk for the feature is comprehended in those three lines about Pop who paid the bills. Probably that was enough, but we think more might have been said. The criticisms tell practically nothing about the play. Few criticisms do, which is one of the reasons why they help so little. A man in Baltimore is hardly going to spend money for a ticket because a New York paper says that "Claude Gillingwater, in the role of Pop Grout, does some exceptionally fine acting and is well supported by the rest of the cast." "Pop, who pays the bills," is a lot more interesting than the New York American's estimate of Gillingwater's acting. We knew twenty years ago that he was a fine actor. We said so, for that matter. The reverse comes out well because this was in Baltimore, but we think the plan book carries too many reverse cuts on this picture. Type is better.

This Grauman Space Is Best Yet Done

One of the best displays ever put out by the Grauman theatres is that of the Rialto for Marion Davies. In this the hand work is almost eliminated and only the star and title are drawn, these being casts apparently supplied by Cosmopolitan, since the same lettering is used in displays in almost all of the cities. The rest is put in with type and offers an educational contrast to a majority of the Grauman displays. There is plenty of type in which to tell all about the subfeatures, and told as a running story in a few lines, it gets more attention than it would were it plastered all over the page as in the old style. In the old fashioned form the displays were offered as separate items, which the mind had to pick up singly and assemble. Here the production environment is a part of the story of the picture itself, and all is told in fourteen lines of well-written text. The display makes a stronger appeal than any other Grauman advertisement we recall having seen. There is a possibility, however, that this is not done by the regular Grauman staff, as Cosmopolitan is putting this picture over with special exploiters. Some of them do not measure up to the house standards, but this work is well ahead of the average, just as the Cosmopolitan handling of the Criterion Theatre in New York is a marked advance over the policy followed by Reisenfeld. It looks like a different house—like a real theatre—now.

A Paramount Release

A GRAUMAN DEPARTURE

THE LLOYD LETTER

speaks for itself. It is not intended that any of the letters be taken seriously, for you cannot get serious over a comedy. Another letter was to Thomas A. Edison, asking a few foolish questions, and bringing in Lloyd. It got a laugh, and you credited the comedy with the laugh. The display was a rather long drop of about eighteen inches across three columns, sufficient to class as a full column and yet having the double advantage that it cost less and was topped by reading matter. The cut was the press book cut, in which the comedian's face is made up of typewritten repetitions of his name. This, by the way, is nothing new to Mr. Chambers, who drew his own typewriter pictures several years ago and was one of the first, if not the very first, to use this novelty in an advertisement. Later on other cuts were used having a greater pictorial value, but he made this his opening gun, knowing from past experience that it is one of the best bets if not overworked. With two sure-fires he naturally did a very pretty business.

Balanced Display Gives the Idea

For the engagement of George Beban in "The Sign of the Rose," at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, Tom Reed had several things to do that are not included in the general film advertising. He had to tell them that Beban and his company would play a part of the film, and then he had to add to that the statement that this was not similar to the recitation Beban did with the same picture when it was seen in town before in an experimental stage. He had to get the story read if he was to get the largest ticket sale, and to do this he had to make the display invitingly readable. The main idea is put over in the top line, "A Revolution in Motion Picture Presentation." The cut-in is explained and then, "after twenty-five minutes of the spoken drama, the story is continued to a happy conclusion as a motion picture." It seems to us that this last is so carefully phrased that no one can well err in his understanding of the idea. It is simple and very effective. It tells the whole case so that you understand it, and then the eye is carried along to the star and runs down into the title. The prior appearance is referred to in the notice in the lower left-hand corner, isolated from the rest and placed where it looks interesting and important. The typographical arrangement is as good as the copy, and the whole makes a really pleasing display. It is 135 lines by four; a trifle large, yet suggesting in its size the importance of the presentation and worth the money because the

Still Strong

Because of the chances for snow lobbies, "Nanook of the North" was one of the best bets all through the summer. And when cold weather came, and the snow lobby was down and out, someone discovered that even better was a hook-up with a fur fashion show, and now the odd release is in as great a demand as ever. That Pathe release must have been launched with a golden spoon in its mouth. It seems to have all the luck.

Plays Up Cyclone in "Old Homestead"

The Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, is one of the first to play up the cyclone in "The Old Homestead," though it would appear that this would be the very best bet on this picture. In most sections the title itself is sold. All you can say about "The Old Homestead" is that it is "The Old Homestead." Everyone knows the play. But the cyclone is something new and something big. It is something to be sold that can be sold. It is the added factor which makes the film superior to the play, and the most intelligent sales campaign will sell the storm rather than the whiskers. It would be well to take it into the lobby and use a storm swept front with a hook-up banner, yet few of the houses have played up the cyclone to any marked degree and the Stillman is the first we have seen give it full value. The sketch is double, the left-hand side showing the old homestead in fair weather with the storm over to the right. This is very well done, but the star and title and the top selling lines are practically buried in the black clouds. They do not even use a white title, but simply outline the letters in a narrow line of white which cannot fight through. The top part of the display is very poor, and the bank of type might be improved for selling value, but there is one good appeal in the "More thrills than the ice jam in 'Way Down East' or the forest fire in 'The Storm.'" That will sell. The effort to tell the story in five lines is a failure and merely suggests a play without a story. It is very weakly done and might better have been left out, since it will not sell and may hurt. But they did use the cyclone, and that is good management.

A Paramount Release

Tied Up a Raffles to Hook-up Pages

Combining two stunts, the New Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky., hooked its "Raffles" to a double truck with thirty-two displays. According to the announcement he was to visit each of the advertisers, and the reader was supposed to watch these stores. The stunt was worked for "The Masquerader," and most of the copy was hinged on the title. This is a new use for the mysterious perambulator, and it gives the stores a very real reason for coming in on the layout, though some of the stores appear to have come in more to be represented and keep their names before the public than because they expected to derive any immediate benefit from the hook-up. It is hardly to be supposed that people who searched for a masquerader who was worth $50 to them would buy any extra chicken feed or purchase an automobile, but certain merchants seem to feel that it pays them to keep their names before the public on general principles, and that even though they may not make any direct sales it will all help their general campaign of publicity. This is a good argument to use on a certain type of merchant who is apt to contend that he will get no benefit.

Another Good Drawing from Gordon Bennett

Edwin R. Coffin, First National's exploitation man in the Omaha exchange, sends in an advertisement on "Lorna Doone" and opines that we will be glad to see it because he thinks it the finest display he ever saw. We are inclined to think that Mr. Coffin is a bit prejudiced, or else he is trying to put it over, for the Omaha Rialto does a fine piece of work about three weeks out of four, and we have used a lot of displays as good as this, but we are glad to run this because it is so effective. Gordon Bennett, who does the art work, really has done better than his usual on the landscape, and in the original it has the beauty of a tapestry, which is probably just what Mr. Bennett was shooting at. It cannot be shown to advantage in so great a reduction. It can only hint at the effect, but the landscape is as

It seems a shame to waste so pretty a design on a newspaper advertisement. It is 210 lines across four, but it is worth the space because it sells in every line. And Julius K. LOVE'S REDEMPTION. Norma Talmadge is well liked here. This is not her best picture by any means, but still is very good. Our patrons liked it. Advertising: newspaper, lobby, heralds. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

PENROD. Lost money on a pretty good picture. Too long in footage. Patronage: family. Attendance: fair. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. For me, very poor picture; the worst of Constance Talmadge's. Advertising: like a circus. Patronage: family. Attendance: poor. Jack Hocffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

SEVENTH DAY. Richard Barthelmess a clever star in a very ordinary story, that was about 50% entertainment; so said my patrons. Worth about half of what "Tol'able David" was—and if you haven't bought this, keep that fact in mind. Advertising: good. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SONNY. Very good. A credit to any theatre. Advertising: house program, newspaper, posters. Patronage: country town. Attendance: fair. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

SONNY. A wonderful picture, but for some cause it did not please the majority. War stories don't take well here. Failed to draw on second night. Twenty-four sheet killed business. Advertising: posters, photos, newspaper, heralds. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. Most wonderful attraction I ever had or anybody else could ever get. I put this over fine; but I had to have special printed one sheets and window cards to do it, on account of its poor name. The attraction is wonderful in every respect; so is the price. Go after this one strong. You can't go wrong. I advertised: "If patrons are not satisfied with this one I will refund admission price." Did not have a single complaint. My patrons came out and commented on it. Advertising: newspaper, ones, threes, sixes, photos. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: fine. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Fox

FOR BIG STAKES. Tom Mix in a brand new, but excellent picture, and very pleasing. Patronage: general. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LITTLE MISS HAWKSHAW. Fair program picture. A light story but well played. Pleased about 70%. Advertising: ones, photo, slide, program. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

MOONSHINE VALLEY. Good picture for William Farnum admirers. Plenty of action. Small child puts over some fine performing. Advertising: three ones, one three, slides. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

OATHBOUND. My patrons raved about this picture and yours will, too, if they like open air pictures, boat races, etc. I consider it the best photography I ever saw. Do not be afraid to advertise it. Advertising: two ones, one three, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

RIDIN' WITH DEATH. Since they changed Buck's name to Charles, he seems to spend too much time up in front of the camera making love instead of out in the open riding fast and shooting with both hands, as was his wont in the old days. There is a little of the old Jones action in the last one hundred feet of this one. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

STAGE ROMANCE. I'd say, keep away from this. "Shackles of Gold" was a whole lot better than this and it could have been a whole lot better. I don't see why they don't get Farnum where he belongs. Of course, I know that if the film companies did work him in Western stuff some critics would say, "why waste him on such simple stuff?" Advertising: extra. Patronage: country. Attendance: fair. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

THUNDERCLAP. Very good. Pleased 90% for three days' run to increased business. Patronage: general. Attendance: excellent. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

TRAILIN'. Will just satisfy Mix fans; others may kick. Advertising: regular billboard. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

VIRGIN PARADISE. Pearl White in best picture shown in my theatre. Everybody was surely pleased with this one. It holds every one's interest from start to finish. Advertising: same as always. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WEST OF CHICAGO. An excellent picture. If you have never used Jones, try him. He'll not disappoint you. Very convincing. Advertising: photos, slide, ones. Patronage: small town. Attendance: very good. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

Goldwyn

THE CONCERT. So far, heads the list of the "bummest" pictures I have shown. Of no interest whatever to small town audiences. Steer clear of it, boys, and miss a business killer. The K. K. K.'s will work on me if I show more of this kind. The film was in good shape, the best part of the entire production. Advertising: ones, threes, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair at beginning of first reel; poor at end of show. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

PRISONERS OF LOVE. With Betty Compson. Pleased 899% of our audience. The acting of Miss Compson is good, but her supporting cast is only fair. The picture will hold any audience from beginning to end. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

REVENGE OF TARZAN. Not enough Tarzan stuff. Can't get wild over this one. Advertising: one sheets. Patronage: industrials. Attendance: good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

YELLOW MEN AND GOLD. A good pirate story and will go over good in some places. My audience does not like blood and thunder. Patronage: the best. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Hodkinson

THE GRAY DAWN. Personally I thought this a good picture of California in the days of the Vigilantes in '49. However, my patrons are not very keen on this costume stuff. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

Special Service—giving exhibitors all the tips, printed and unpublished, on pictures they write to ask about—is already making a hit.

Straight from the Shoulder reports are honest; they are dependable; they come direct from exhibitors who KNOW.

Therefore, when you need them on any picture that has not been reported on, don't waste a second—write or wire the name of the picture on which you want tips—the call will go out in the next issue and the response will be as prompt as it has always been to any call on exhibitors for co-operation.

Use this service. Tell your exhibitor friends about it.

Make Straight from the Shoulder a Service Station—YOUR Service Station. VAN.

JACK O'LANTERN. A good program picture. Pleased 90%. Advertising: ones, three, six, 11x14, photos, dodgers. Patronage: family. Attendance: fair. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

JANE EYRE. A "lemon" for me. Really a good picture, but failed to please here. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Metro

BROADWAY ROSE. A beautiful picture. Mae Murray at her best. Pleased all who came. Advertising: one, three, six, twenty-four, heralds, window cards, band. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

BROADWAY ROSE. Not the best picture Murray ever made, but pleasing. Could have been cut to about six reels of good stuff. Advertising: mail, newspaper, billboards, etc. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very fair. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. For me, it was absolutely "rotten." Did not please my patrons at all. They all came out kicking; I did not blame them at all. I let a film salesman sell this to me as a Special, but it is a very ordinary program and about as weak as one could be. Advertising: lobby, six sheets. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: just fair. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

FOUR HORSEMEN. The last word in acting and production. Advertising: mailing list, heralds, etc. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: excellent. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Good picture. Star an attraction. Patrons very well pleased. Attendance: good. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. Splendid picture and business. The perfect love story of this generation. For sheer, romantic delight, for golden, shimmering beauty, for manly, heroic acting, for two hours of delightful dramatics and enthralling entertainment this positively has no equal among productions offered the public this season. Book it and no mistake will be made. Patronage: general. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Paramount

AFTER THE SHOW. Just a good program picture, but one that pleases. Lila Lee very good, ably supported by Jack Holt. Advertising: ones, photos, newspapers. Patronage: country town. Attendance: fair. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

BLOOD AND SAND. Valentino slipping. Story fair; acting fair; photography, to me, rotten; most news reels better. Many kicks on photography. Play pleased 50%. Advertising: all possible angles; we stepped on it. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair, second day flopped. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

BLOOD AND SAND. This is not a "Sheik." Your patrons will be disappointed. Criticisms terrible from patrons. Not a Special by a long shot. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones, 240 inches newspapers. Patronage: town of 15,000. Attendance: fair. J. E. Pierce, Family Theatre, Mahoney City, Pennsylvania.

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR. A fine production; pleased 90%. Our patrons said: "One of the best pictures ever shown in the Strand." Advertising: newspaper, slide, posters, photos. Patronage: very best. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH. Although this is old, the exchange gave us a good print and Billie pleased an average house. Advertising: sixes and ones. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. S. S. Pace, Jettie Theatre, Texline, Texas.

FOOL'S PARADISE. Another notch for DeMille. Wonderful. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

LADIES MUST LIVE. Too long drawn out for average audience. An eight-reel feature, unless full of pep, seems to bore our patrons. Not a good title for small town. Advertising: three, three ones, photos. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

NICE PEOPLE. Not much to it but will please. Business off, on account of inclement weather. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. Very pleasing show. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

OLD HOMESTEAD. The best of the w. k. forty-one, so far. A real good show with a real cast. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. Who could ever conceive the idea of making Will Rogers play the role of professor? Not up to his Goldwyn productions, patrons far more enthusiastic. Attendance: below average. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

A PRIVATE SCANDAL. Very good for high-class houses. Drew fairly well for me; could have been better. Advertising: newspaper, ones, threes. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

SATURDAY NIGHT. The work of Leatrice Joy in this is wonderful. Pleased practically everyone. Many favorable comments. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SHAM. Fine Society drama; well pleased the lady patrons. Advertising, newspapers and posters. Patronage, ladies. Attendance, good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

SIREN CALL. For me, the worst picture Paramount ever made. Stay off it. Advertising: very good. Patronage: nobody. Attendance: poor. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS. Did not get over very good here. Advertising, regular. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS. Nothing big at all. Paid too much for this one. Not much comedy in it, but it was claimed to be full of comedy. Advertising: regular way. Patronage: local. Attendance: fair. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

TRUTHFUL LIAR. An excellent program feature that will please the majority. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

UNDER THE LASH. A good picture, but couldn't compare with "Great Moment." It will please, however. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, photos. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

WHEN SATAN SLEEPS. This is a fine production; one of the best that we ever had the satisfaction of buying. It has action, pathos and comedy. The general theme points that the straight way is the better. Jack Holt is coming in this one; he is very, very fine. The production was liked both by the men and by the women. Ordinarily we have a very noisy bunch of children on Westerns, have to go down and keep them in check; but this picture held them as quiet as it is possible for kids to be, so it is a real picture. Advertising: mailing list of fifteen hundred, one column, two papers. Patronage: country town. Attendance: good. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

WISE FOOL. A long drawn out affair which did not satisfy our patrons. Kirkwood's acting, however, is excellent. Business good on account of Saturday. Advertising, threes, ones and photos. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, good. E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

To Exchanges

These reports are valuable because they come DIRECT from exhibitors to this department.

Naturally, letters of praise sent by exhibitors TO EXCHANGES OR PUBLICITY DEPARTMENTS are not reports and do not fall within the requirements of this department.

Don't send them in, please, because we only use the direct-from-exhibitors-to-us reports.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. The best Dorothy Dalton picture I have run. Good story and well acted. Advertising, lobby, newspaper, billboard, handbills. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

YOUNG DIANA. Why they spend so much money on this girl's productions is beyond me, for me she is a wet blanket; a few like her but it is like having a smallpox sign on the front door to have her featured so far as this little country town is concerned. She seems to go in the larger places but not in the country and I have yet to find a neighboring exhibitor that does not find her the same. They all look wise when you ask how they did, and laugh; but you never see them endorsing any of her pictures in their ads., not very strong. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Pathé

NANOOK OF THE NORTH. One of the very best pictures ever shown at the Criterion Theatre. Pleased a big business for first half of the week. Patronage: general. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Playgoers

RECKLESS CHANCES. Pretty fair Western; there is lots of the impossible, but it will get by. Advertising: nothing extra. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

Selznick

BY RIGHT OF PURCHASE. A Norma Talmadge revival that pleased about 100%. Far superior to "The Moth." Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

EVIDENCE. A very good program picture that elicited favorable comment from all. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FORBIDDEN CITY. Fine picture; as good as, or even better than, some of the new pictures. The only difference in the new ones is the film rental. Advertising: photos, slide, ones, newspapers. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

A MAN'S HOME. A good picture, well acted, with a good moral plot. Good print. You will make no mistake to book this. Price very reasonable. Advertising: regular. Attendance: good. J. I. McCarthy, Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

PROPHET'S PARADISE. Just another program picture which I am sure will please any audience. Advertising: six, three, one, slide, lobby. Attendance: poor. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

UNDER OATH. A good program picture, well acted and first class in every respect. Hammerstein goes good here and business fine in view of the fact that we had a revival meeting going on and rainy weather. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

United Artists

FAIR LADY. Verdict, just passable; and that represented what we did in a business way. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TAILOR-MADE MAN. Pleased a big business for entire week. A good drawing card and box-office coin getter. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WAY DOWN EAST. A splendid, satisfactory production that brought the crowd but put the money in the pockets of the distributor, not the exhibitor. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

Universal

BLACK BAG. A mystery picture without very much mystery, but even at that it will get by in most towns. Nothing to rave about, however. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

BLACK BAG. An excellent program picture which pleased our patrons. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

THE FOX. If it is Westerns they like, you will not disappoint them in "The Fox." Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

GIANTS OF THE OPEN. With Roy Stewart, very good picture, well played. Good photography and no kicks from the large audiences. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUMAN HEARTS. Universal classes, and prices, this same as "The Storm," but it is not in the same class for a minute. It is a well produced melodrama with nothing out of the ordinary, the old stage show pretty well done. The old stage play only aimed to please the cheaper class of patrons and this picture should be put in the same rank. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

LONE HAND. The best Gibson ever made. A scream from beginning to end. They'll like this one. Advertising: photos, six, one and slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

LONG CHANCE. Use a little extra advertising on this one as it should have been a Special. Far better than a lot of Specials. Advertising: ones, three, six, 11x14, slide. Patronage: family. Attendance: very good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

MAN TO MAN. Up to the usual Carey standard. Photography fine, plot good. Stampede not what it might have been, but no kicks. Advertising: ones, threes, 11x14, 22x28, slide. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

A PARISIAN SCANDAL. Here is a dandy little program picture and Universal sells them to you so you will make a profit and not have to give to the film exchange all that you take. Book it; most all of her pictures are good, and I am finding other Universal pictures as good. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

THE SCRAPPER. Wherein it is intended to depict the superiority of the Irish over the rest of the human race, particularly the Swedes. Good program picture provided you do not cater to Swedes. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

THE STORM. Wonderful picture; but lost money, as I paid just twice as much as should have. Buy it right and go after a picture that will please. Advertising: lobby. Patronage: small town. Attendance: average. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

TRIMMED. Hoot Gibson pleases them all and you cannot pick a flaw in this one. Advertising: newspaper, cards. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. Arthur G. Pearson, Auditorium Theatre, Melrose, Massachusetts.

THE TROUPER. For me, very poor; in fact, the worst one this little star has ever appeared in. Gladys Walton draws well for me, but one more like this and it will be all off with her. A pity they don't put her in better plays. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

Vitagraph

FLOWER OF THE NORTH. Good outdoor picture, but not extreme enough either way for our people. Walthall is good. Advertising: ones, three, six and heralds. Patronage: small town. Attendance: below average. Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

Missing

A lot of the good scouts who formerly reported regularly have sort of laid off. Exhibitors have asked why, as the reports were valued greatly. Come on, folks! Come again!

Comedies

THE GOAT (Metro). Buster Keaton pulls some new stunts. This is better than average two-reel comedy. Patronage: first class. Attendance: good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

PAIR OF KINGS (Vitagraph). Semon Comedies are 100% pure, many times Semon has saved the day for me. Am running a serial that is a losing propostion and know positively that Semon draws the crowd and not the serial. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SAILOR-MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib.). Book this as feature. Best Lloyd ever produced. Pleased all. Rental too high for the small town. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

SCHOOL DAYS (Vitagraph). I don't think I have ever reported on a comedy, but this one was so good that I can't help doing it Had them laughing from start to finish. Something doing all the time. Many said, the best they ever saw. Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

SUNSHINE COMEDIES (Fox). Some are extra good, others are ordinary. "Puppy Love" is a knockout, very clever. Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

State Rights

DIAMOND CARLISLE (Moranti). A pleasing story of the Northwest. You cannot go wrong on this one. Star popular. Advertising: six, three, one, slide, lobby. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

PEACEFUL PETERS (Merit). Personally, I can only rate this an average Western, but it drew an exceptionally large house and pleased the majority. It surely had box-office value for us. Advertising: posters, slide, press. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY? (Equity). An excellent production with an exceptional moral. Give us more like this. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

YOUR BEST FRIEND (Warner). This picture took good among the better class of trade, but was too sad for some. Good picture. Advertising: about a third more than usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. W. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

YOU CAN'T BELIEVE EVERYTHING (Triangle). Gloria Swanson in nothing but a display of limbs, yet there was no complaint as no one is against such a display in this town. This picture will do well for some houses and lose for others. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Enter Madame

(Clara Kimball Young—Metro—6,500 feet)

M. P. W.—It is a production which will appeal more strongly to high-class audiences as the humor is subtle and sophisticated.

E. H.—Makes a splendid vehicle for this star.

N.—The picture has its interesting moments. The idea is sound and it is well developed.

F. D.—Stage play does not lend itself to needs of screen adequately.

T. R.—It affords a round of comedy and dramatic action that should prove highly entertaining to any type of audience.

Good Men and True

(Harry Carey—Universal—5,400 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture has been well planned and well acted, and holds live entertainment for many.

N.—Among the best he has ever made, and far ahead of all his old-time program offerings.

T. R.—Is sufficient entertainment value in the film to hold the interest of those who like their amusement along rough-and-ready lines.

F. D.—Will entertain where they are not too critical.

E. H.—Is a good, lively Western drama, with Harry Carey doing his usual good work.

One Week of Love

(Elaine Hammerstein-Conway Tearle—Selznick—7,000 feet)

M. P. W.—High-class box-office picture.

N.—Contains a dash of everything, resulting in corking good entertainment delightfully new.

T. R.—For the man in the street or the woman anywhere "One Week of Love" is a corking story—a crackerjack picture.

E. H.—It is full of swift action and unusual situations.

F. D.—Great audience appeal and sure-fire material in "One Week of Love."

Robin Hood

(Douglas Fairbanks—United Artists—10,000 feet)

M. P. W.—"Robin Hood" will go down in film history as one of the screen's most fascinating characterizations.

N.—It marks another milestone in the making of motion pictures.

T. R.—This is Fairbanks' masterpiece.

E. H.—One of the big productions of the year, and compares in scenic grandeur and excellence with anything ever presented upon the screen.

F. D.—Magnificent production plus "Doug" makes this a bet.

The Man Who Saw Tomorrow

(Thomas Meighan—Paramount—6,993 feet)

M. P. W.—It plays upon the fancies of the spectator. . . . This fact, however, will not spoil the performance for the many fans who prefer highly colored romance to standardized drama.

E. H.—Another delightful comedy-drama.

T. R.—This picture affords very pleasing entertainment, is skilfully directed and presented by an admirable cast.

N.—It is all hokum, and would make much better reading via the printed page than from the silver sheet.

F. D.—Fair entertainment in Meighan's latest.

Peaceful Peters

(William Fairbanks—Arrow—4,690 feet)

M. P. W.—The entire picture is full of action, but the later scenes should be especially satisfying.

F. D.—Average Western, with best action in climax.

T. R.—A finely knitted, simple tale.

N.—In the general run of Westerns the picture is as good as the majority of them.

E. H.—A lively Western, with William Fairbanks in the stellar role.

"The Dangerous Age"

John M. Stahl's First National Attraction. A Picture That Glorifies the Screen and the Theatre

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

If "The Dangerous Age" does not fill every demand of the exhibitor and a fickle public for entertaining, interesting and diversifying pictures, then here is one writer who will admit that his conception of entertainment is all wrong. Meanwhile, he will adhere to his conviction that in "The Dangerous Age," John M. Stahl has given to the cinematographic show world a production that can be ranked among the most logical and entertaining the current year has uncovered. Masterly produced in a manner that denotes careful handling by the director of every foot of film photographed, "The Dangerous Age," in our humble opinion, will go through the movie houses of this country like a cyclone, leaving in its wake a monumental series of new box-office records.

Experience, plus past performances, has taught the show business all that it knows about public entertainment today and the greatest winners, both of the legitimate stage and screen, are those vehicles based on some phase of human life that the onlooker can grasp as genuinely true-to-life. Hit at the heart of a theatregoer, reach it with a hint at something that he or she knows, has seen or has felt, and you will have organized the greatest army of boosters a theatre can possibly have. Melodrama may excite for the time being, but it doesn't hold indefinitely. Give them a thrill and they'll be thrilled while the thriller is being unfolded—then they forget. Give them comedy or an artistic burlesque on current events and they'll yowl—but soon will forget and condemn if the same laugh-provoking tactics are utilized in a future comedy.

But John M. Stahl's latest contribution to the First National program will do something more than entertain—it will create public interest and inspire editorial, but every phase of the picture is a chapter from life. And you don't have to be an old rounder, an old sport, a has-been or a cynic to realize that. You know it in your heart, just as the cosmopolitan audiences which viewed it at the Garden Theatre in Paterson, N. J., knew it when they laughed, sighed and cried over the unfortunate adventures of John Emerson. And that was a hard-boiled audience, for cosmopolitan audiences are typical show-me Missourians. In that audience, too, was Paterson's "400" and their emotions, as this picture stirred them, were more pronouncedly demonstrated than those of the workers from the silk mills, etc.

The story cannot help but get over, for it dwells on a problem of life intelligently, logically and without the injection of the impossible or improbable. This picture seems to animate with the very breath of life. And that's one reason why it should register triumphantly, financially and otherwise. Were we an exhibitor we would never forgive ourselves for allowing our competitor to nail this one. It's too precious. Artistic, exciting with a race, involving a powerful speedster and fast train, that actually drew this writer out of his seat. Suspense—never did this writer see a production with more justified dramatic suspense. The horse race is a treat and cleverly photographed. There are smiles as well as pathos with each introduced at the opportune moment. Directorially, "The Dangerous Age" is flawless. The photography and lighting are of first order and with the splendid acting, make it a special that has every right to claim a place among the very best this industry has given the public.

Lewis Stone, as John Emerson, around whom the story is built, is seen at his unquestionable best. Cleo Madison, as his wife, is a peach, naturally charming she portrays a difficult role true-to-life. Edith Roberts could not have been better with Ruth Clifford equally as effective. The remainder of the cast's work is consistently good.

Story by Frances Irene Reels.
Scenario by J. G. Hawks and Bess Meredyth.
Directed by John M. Stahl.
Length, 7,204 Feet.

The Story

After twenty years of married life John Emerson's wife treats him more like a son than a husband. As a consequence of this attitude when he meets an attractive young woman while en route to New York he becomes interested. They visit the cabarets, races, etc., and John feels rejuvenated. She asks if he is married, and he evades the question. Believing he is falling in love with her he writes his wife a letter, telling her the whole story and saying he will not return.

John then goes to see the girl and finds her in the arms of another man, her fiance. Brought to his right senses he tries to stop the letter, but it is too late. With his racing car he overtakes the train, runs in front of it, and, when the car is smashed, he boards the train. He reaches home ahead of the letter and in time for his daughter's wedding. His wife gets the letter and reads it, and realizes her own shortcomings. Uncertain as to whether she has read it, John pleads to retain her love. She makes him believe that she has not read it, gives it to him, and everything ends happily.

"Thelma"

F. B. O. Offers Interesting and Pictorially Beautiful Version of Widely Read Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Based on one of the earlier as well as one of the most widely read novels by the famous writer, Marie Corelli, the Film Booking Offices' production of "Thelma" is an interesting film offering and should prove satisfactory entertainment for the masses, though the earlier part of the picture could be speeded up to advantage.

Director Chester Bennett has followed the story quite closely, although the contrast between the plain, simple life of Thelma in Norway as contrasted with the artificiality and intrigue which encompassed her in London society is not so strongly dwelt upon. He is to be congratulated on his choice of locations, many of which are strikingly beautiful with rugged coast backgrounds, strongly suggestive of Norway.

It is doubtful if a better choice than Jane Novak could have been made for the flower-like role of Helma; in fact, she seems the embodiment of the author's idea. Bert Sprotte gives a striking performance as Olaf, her proud old father, a vigorous man who is proud of his descent from a line of Norse kings and still worships their God Odin. The scenes surrounding his death, though rather theatric, are among the most striking in the picture.

The entire cast is above the average; with such players as June Elvidge, Barbara Tennent and Wedgewood Nowell in subordinate roles which they enact skillfully. In the role opposite the star, Vernon Steele gives a creditable performance, and the remainder of the cast is entirely satisfactory.

The fact that this production is based on a standard book, which for a number of years has been very widely read all over the world, is an exploitation point which the exhibitor should not overlook as there are a large number of persons in every t who will want to see the story in its form.

Directed by Chester Bennett.
Length 6,000 Feet.

The Story

To get away from the unwelcome attentions of Lady Clara, Phillip, who is a wealthy English nobleman, sails in his yacht to Norway, where he chances to see Thelma, a beautiful native girl. Friendship ripens into love, and finally Thelma's father, a proud descendant of the Norse Vikings, gives his consent to their marriage.

Going to London to live, Thelma is supremely happy in her new surroundings; but Lady Clara has not forgotten Phillip's rebuff. When Phillip attempts to bring about a reconciliation between his secretary and his wife, who is an actress, an indiscreetly worded letter which comes into Lady Clara's possession gives her the opportunity to poison Thelma's mind so that she flees to Norway. Phillip follows her, arriving just as Thelma's father dies, and a reconciliation occurs.

Charles Ray is Starred in an Enjoyable Comedy—a First National Release

Reviewed by C. W. McCarty

A thoroughly enjoyable comedy which serves to bring back Charles Ray in his old-time form—that, in brief, is "Alias Julius Caesar," the latest Ray picture for First National. It has many entertaining values and contains an abundance of good, wholesome fun.

Instead of the farmer boy role, Mr. Ray is cast as a rich man's son, member of an exclusive club and in love with a girl of his own class. For all that, he is one of those easy-going chaps, always blundering and the target of many a practical joke. He is "framed" to make it possible for a rival to take his girl to a dance.

The story gives many opportunities for amusing by-play and shows Mr. Ray to advantage. Barbara Bedford is attractive as his leading woman. The supporting cast is excellent. It is a picture that rabid Ray fans will enjoy to their heart's content.

The Story

Club members steal Ray's clothes as he takes a shower; they wish to prevent him from attending a ball with his girl. He escapes, wrapped in the waterproof curtain of the shower and hurries off in his car. Word reaches the police that a weird figure is riding about the roads and two motorcycle cops grab Ray, humoring him, pretending he is a lunatic, and landing him in jail. His cell-mate, a society crook, gets jewels by handing them to a confederate denouncing this aid and "arresting" him. Ray, who has been given temporary clothes in the shape of a khaki suit, makes the darky cell keeper think he is third-degreeing the crook, and manages to get the door left open, escaping and arriving at [illegible] girl angry at his seeming desertion. The society crook has also escaped and Ray has a time preventing him from making away all the jewels of the crowd; but after clever work and many amusing consis he manages to denounce the crook, the gems and regain the good graces sweetheart.

Williams Typically Cast as Secret ervice Hero in Vitagraph Feature

le Williams' role in "You Never Know" true to the type that has popularized him. more he is the suave, invincible American rying out a secret mission in the thick of intrigue. Novelty is not the oustanding feature of the production, but the success of this form of enertainment with Earle Williams' fans has been sufficient to warrant repetition.

One scene, however, will receive unusual appreciation, and deserves special praise. This is the corraling of an army of children from their various pursuits of crap-shooting and baseball to the immediate scene of drama, which happens to be a Spanish cafe. With their assistance, pictured with clever comedy touches, the hero is extricated from danger. The idea seems new and has been entertainingly worked out. Coy Watson, Jr., enters into the action with a zest that makes him a close second to the star in point of favor.

South American politics has probably been more abused by frequent use in screen melodramas than any other factor. It seems to be regarded as the quickest and most effective route to thrills. The average theatre-goer is probably too familiar with such plots to be much moved by them. But there is some spirited action in this, a motorboat chase, and altogether an enthusiasm that will be infectious with many.

"West vs. East"

Conventional Plot in Sanford Production Starring Pete Morrison

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This is a deviation from the usual Pete Morrison Western. It resorts to a more conventional atmosphere for much of the appeal. Pete Morrison has the role of a polished young Westerner who gives his Eastern acquaintances a surprise in a demonstration of culture and brains.

The story is not an especially strong one. There are a few scenes that are entertaining enough to offset this, as for instance those showing the beach party and surf sports. These are more refreshing. When the action returns to the Western settings, it recalls material that is frequently used in serials. Radio conspiracies, an imprisoned heroine, with a burning bridge between her and her rescuer, and a fight over a property deed—these are the exciting complications. The picture is entertaining to an average degree and gives the star's admirers a chance to see his versatility.

"Boss of Camp 4"

Latest Vehicle for Charles Jones Should Be Popular with Men—Made by Fox

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Road construction proves an undertaking with many thrills in this Fox picture, which stars Charles Jones. It invests the production with more interest than the recent vehicles for the star because it presents something slightly different in the way of outdoor dramas. Especially with masculine fans "Boss of Camp 4" should be a success.

Jones, in the role of foreman of the construction camp, faces the difficulties of fulfilling an important contract, as he is being framed by an antagonistic gang. There are many fights. Sometimes they are realistic, sometimes too victorious to seem plausible in view of the odds; but at least they manage to be entertaining. The star has the valuable faculty of keeping the sympathy in whatever he attempts.

The climax is managed with fine suspense. The hero, tied and gagged, is placed in a position where he has to watch the blasting of the tunnel executed before the proper time. To add to the dilemma his best friend is left by his enemies unconscious in the tunnel. Everything depends upon the delay of the explosion, and with this in mind the author and director have cleverly prolonged the tension and increased the melodramatic value as it progresses. Fritzi Brunette proves capable of some effective work here.

The Story

Chet Fanning has agreed to finish construction on a road within a stated time so as to fulfill an important agreement which his employer, Andrew Paxton, has made. Paxton has an enemy who wants to prevent this. He hires a number of the men to defeat Fanning's efforts. Fanning forces the lazy ones to work and nearly pays the penalty with his life several times. Once he saves Paxton's daughter from destruction when a huge rock is hurled down upon them. The opposing gang bind and gag Fanning and prepare to blast the tunnel before the proper time. Paxton's daughter delays the move that would mean tragedy to so many, and, after wild struggling, Fanning succeeds in carrying out his purpose—in romantic as well as business pursuits.

"The Pride of Palomar"

Peter B. Kyne's successful story of the same title has been converted into eight reels of dashing entertainment without any dull moments. This latest Cosmopolitan production, directed by Frank Borzage, is inspired by a zest and humor that is typically American. Its spirit and action will please men, especially.

The picture is unusually successful in accomplishing the purpose of all drama, that is to be constantly diverting. There is a hint now and then at melodrama, but it never becomes a strenuous factor or mars the easy, buoyant trend of the action. It is thrilling, rather moving, and is frequently amusing.

In the personnel of the cast, the picture has a strong, consistent force in giving realism to the story. Warner Oland's interpretation of Okada, the Jap conspirator, is perhaps the most impressive. In his make-up, and every appearance, even though the opportunities at times are scant, he registers an unusual and intriguing personality. The leading role is handled in approved style by Forrest Stanley. Marjorie Daw is delightful and like the entire cast, including Joseph Dowling, George Nichols, Edward Brady and Alfred Allen, shows fine co-operation.

Most of the action takes place on a California ranch. There are many picturesque natural scenes, and elaborate settings for horse races on two different occasions. These are accomplished with many thrills and effective comedy. The photography is excellent.

The Story

Don Mike Farrell returns to his father's California ranch after serving in Siberia for several years. He learns that his father is dead and his property in the hands of John Parker. Kay Parker, his daughter, falls in love with Don Mike, and attempts to help him in regaining his rights, but is thwarted by her father. Okada, a Japanese speculator, is assisting Parker, and the two plot to keep Mike from getting what belongs to him. Mike is resourceful enough to plan a way out. He leads one of his father's debtors a merry chase and gets the $100,000 that is due him. The rest he manages to procure by gambling on the racetrack. In the end he uses a clever trick to bluff Parker, and gets his land back, even to the admiration of Parker himself.

"Her Half Brother"

Certified Pictures Corporation Presents a Picture That Has Some Appeal Because of Its Strenuous Action

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

This film is called "Her Half Brother," but the title is so far fetched that it might be said to have practically no bearing at all on the picture. Almost any other name that the producers might have selected would have meant as much as far as connection with the story is concerned. It might almost be surmised that the title was selected to obtain word-of-mouth publicity through the mystified audience's discussions of what possible connection the title could have with the plot.

For those who are willing to view a picture with their minds open to accept at its face value a plot that is somewhat obscure, but which nevertheless, has enough gunplay and fist-fights to give it a touch of strenuousness, the film might have a certain appeal.

The photography is good and the acting is fair enough for a production of its special type. The scenes are laid in the West, in desert country and in small mining towns and their vicinity.

"Are Children to Blame?"

Child-Appeal is Best Feature of Certified Picture Suggested by "Silas Marner"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The theme rather than the performance carries an appeal in this picture produced by Chopin Features. There are not many who can resist the story of the abused and neglected child and it is upon this sympathetic quality that the picture relies essentially for its success.

Em Gorman is the little girl who plays the important part. She seems entirely lacking in self-consciousness and in a few instances shows an interpretive skill that will interest anyone. Possibly more detailed direction would have made this ability more striking.

George Eliot's book, "Silas Marner," suggested the story for the picture, and the action follows the general outlines of the original, although no attempt has been made to make an accurate reproduction. The characters of the irresponsible father, the neglected child and the miser have been used in somewhat more melodramatic complications, but in a way so that the human interest is not lacking. The production does not seem like a modern achievement. It will probably be most heartily appreciated by children.

"Ebb Tide"

George Melford Makes Fine Production of Stevenson's South Sea Island Story for Paramount

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Directed by George Melford, the Paramount production, "Ebb Tide," is one of the best of the South Sea Island stories that has reached the screen. It will hold the interest throughout not only because of the interest in the story, but because of the unusually fine character portrayals.

It is a screen version of a novel of the same name by the well-known author, Robert Louis Stevenson, and the widely divergent masculine types who carry the bulk of the action are portrayed with remarkable fidelity. The picture is strong in human interest and the three-sided conflict between the hero, his two villainous companions and the girl's father is well brought out and furnishes effective drama.

The story is closely knit and the suspense well handled. Mr. Melford has skillfully directed this picture throughout, but in no part does his work show to better advantage than in the scenes where the two conspirators go to dine with the girl's father and are waiting to kill him to get his pearls. He is aware of their plan and the scene at the dinner table where each side is waiting for a false move on the other fellow's part has remarkable suspense and keeps your interest at fever heat. This is further heightened when the hero, who is not in the plot, can no longer stand the nervous strain and leaves the table abruptly.

The cast is small, but well selected. James Kirkwood, in the leading role, is an English gentleman who has made a failure of life; George Fawcett is a down-and-out sea captain with a passion for drink, Raymond Hatton is a typical product of the London slums, while Noah Beery is extremely religious, but a hard master, vindictive and cruel and not even stopping at murder to enforce his will. Lila Lee gives a good performance as his daughter, whose disposition is very different from that of her father, though many will question the manner in which she dresses the role of a girl on a far away island. Jacqueline Logan is so attractive as a native girl that you are willing to overlook the fact that she does not carry out the illusion very well.

Altogether it is a picture that will provide fine entertainment for almost any type of audience and should be a big box-office bet.

The Story

On the beach of a small South Sea Island is a motely trio—Davis, a discredited sea captain; Herrick, an English gentleman, who has made a failure of life, and Huish, a product of the London slums. They wander into the town, where Davis is recognized, and the three are induced to ship on the Farallone, a vessel which the owners hope will sink so they can collect the insurance.

A storm comes up and the vessel is driven into an unknown harbor. The only white inhabitant is an Englishman and his grown daughter. The Englishman is of a religious type, but is severe toward his daughter and to the native pearl-fishers, and has sworn that no white man shall leave the island alive. His daughter, Ruth, impressed by Herrick's demeanor, resolves to save him, and a romance begins. Herrick's companions seek to kill Attwater and get his pearls. He is aware of their plan, and, after several exciting adventures, finally shoots the two as they are about to attack him. Attwater meets his fate when he goes to the Farallone, which has caught on fire, and attempts to save his daughter. She, however, has been carried ashore by Herrick. So all ends satisfactorily for the young couple.

of a crook conspiracy. The plot unfolds entertainingly, the scene shifting from the underworld to society functions, and the motive from frivolity to intrigue, Charles Craig is an amusing character study as the man who doublecrosses his business partner. De Sacia Mooers plays the title role. She is an attractive blonde, becomingly gowned, and gifted with the arts of coquettry to an interesting degree. "Dawn of Revenge"

Richard C. Travers Featured in Aywon Film With Sensational Appeal

"Dawn of Revenge" relies upon sensational situations for its appeal, and on the whole, is lacking in wholesomeness. The story is too unnatural to be convincing. It will be entertaining to a limited class of patrons who require neither originality nor ideals in their diversion.

The chief character is a half-crazed cripple whose first move of revenge is to steal the son of the man who is responsible for his deformity, and bring him up as his own. His evil purposes not satisfied at this, he determines to have the boy marry his own sister and then, when it is too late, reveal their relationship. This catastrophe is, of course, averted.

As can be seen from this synopsis the theme is not one that promotes clean normal entertainment. Neither does the manner of production make it seem real. It is unfortunate for the cast which in addition to the star, Richard C. Travers, has a number of capable performers, including pretty Muriel Kingston, Florence Foster and Charles Graham.

"The Gold Grabbers"

There Are Some Vivid Fist-Fight Scenes in This Phil Goldstone Production

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

This "Western" gives the players an opportunity to do some good horse-back-riding and to stage some vivid fist-fights, but taken in its entirety the plot is not entirely convincing. However, for those who like to see the "hero" come out on top no matter how many "villains" may beset him, the production may prove entertaining.

There are a few cleverly written sub-titles that will cause mirth in the audience, and the acting is good enough while the photography is quite up to the average. Franklyn Farnum hardly has the appearance of a man young enough to "pull" the virile "stuff" he puts over such as whipping two or three vigorous opponents single-handed, which is a "stunt" that few, if any, men in real life could accomplish.

The regeneration of one of the arch "villains," and the happy ending of the romance of the "hero" and the "heroine" brings the film to a close, which will prove satisfactory to those who demand endings of these sorts.

"Breaking Home Ties"

Intense Heart Interest in Associated Exhibitor's Picture Based on Family Love.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Tremendous heart interest is the outstanding feature of the Associated Exhibitors production "Breaking Home Ties." It is of the general type of "Humoresque" and one of the prominent characters, who, however, is not the lead, is a violinist. The picture is described as an epic of family love and the theme is based on the traditional Jewish melody of Russia and Poland, "Eili, Eili."

The story deals with a Jewish family in Russia. The son thinking he has killed his best friend, comes to America and achieves success. His parents meet reverses of fortune and follow him and finally land in a Home for the Aged where under dramatic circumstances the family is reunited.

It is a production which deals entirely with Jewish characters, stressing the strong affection between parents and children under all circumstances and should prove an unusually big success with Hebrew spectators. Its reception with other types of audiences will largely depend on whether they like pictures of this nature; however, the overwhelming heart interest and glorification of family love regardless of the fact that it deals entirely with one race of people, should give it a strong appeal. Coupled with this is the fact that though you feel certain son and parents will be reunited, the director has so handled the situations that the suspense of this meeting is well maintained as on two or three occasions when you feel sure that it will be brought about, and when it does not occur, it tugs at your heart-strings.

The cast is an entirely satisfactory one, a particularly good interpretation being given by Richard Farrell in the leading role and the same applies to Rebecca Weintraub and Lee Kohlmar as the mother and father respectively.

A point of interest in the film is the Jewish ceremonial scenes, the one in the chapel and the marriage scene which appears to be in strict accordance with Hebrew ritual even to the men keeping on their hats.

The director has brought out the theme of "Eili, Eili" cleverly all through the picture, this melody figuring in the important crises of the story. As well as could be judged from the showing at the Hotel Astor where the projection was at times very poor the photography and lighting while not striking are satisfactory.

It is the heart interest in the story and the intense manner in which it has been brought out which will largely determine its audience appeal, and in considering this picture it will be well to bear in mind the success made by "Humoresque" though technically the production is not up to the same standard.

The Cast

Father Bergman.....Lee Kohlmar
Mother Bergman.....Rebecca Weintraub
David Bergman.....Richard Farrell
Paul Zeidman.....Arthur Ashley
Esther.....Betty Howe
Rose Neuman.....Jane Thomas
J. B. Martin.....Henry B. Schaffer
Mrs. Martin.....Maude Hill
Moskowitz.....Robert Maxmillian

Written, Directed and Produced by Frank N. Seltzer and George K. Rolands.
Length, 5,622 Feet.

The Story

The Bergman family circle is broken when David flees his native Russia after killing his best friend in a rage of jealousy over a girl. During the years in New York he loses track of his parents, all efforts to locate them having failed. The Bergmans have failed in business and come to America to find David, who, unknown to them, has changed his name. They live in poverty and squalor.

David has become a successful lawyer. Unknowingly his path has often touched that of his father. David is a generous donator to the Home for the Aged, in which his fiancee, Rose Neuman, is interested, and to which she has taken the Bergmans, ignorant of the fact that they are David's parents. Then the friend David thought he had killed turns up, and David and Rose are married at the Home for the Aged, where David and his parents are at last united.

"The World's a Stage"

Principal Pictures' First Release With Dorothy Phillips Is Clever and Entertaining Production.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Moving picture "fan" magazines enjoy marvelously enormous circulation because of the so-called "dope" they give on stars, their hobbies, their modes of living and what not. Newspapers give screaming headlines to news items bearing on the trials and tribulations of unfortunate film folks and in fact have and are taking unfair liberties by referring to supernumeraries who come before public notice as "movie stars." The term "movie star" is always inserted in the headlines, for it is a magnet that never fails to arrest the public eye.

And then, if all the above be true, and experience has taught all of us that they are true, why shouldn't a production dealing with the adventures and domestic troubles of a movie star be equally as fascinating and attractive to the public? Personally, we believe that a picture depicting all the things the public reads about stars is sure-fire. And further we believe that a story dwelling on the domestic life of a star that presents her as any other human in a series of tangles that are typically human, will strike the popular cord. And Principal Pictures

Colin Campbell who directed this production made a splendid job of it for he remembered a lot of interesting things that the public literally has "eaten up." He has fed the public what that very same public has seemingly demanded from newspapers. But more than anything else, while he has seemingly satisfied a public appetite for "movie star stuff," he has gone a step farther, for, after this picture has been shown and the story thoroughly unfolded, your patrons can not help but become convinced that, after all, a star is just a human being blessed with the same natural gifts, bequeathed with the same likes and dislikes, subject to the same tangles as anybody in this sphere generously called civilization.

Will Hays would welcome an opportunity to see this picture. So would Sydney S. Cohen. Both stand for anything that will elevate this industry to the highest standard possible. And "The World's A Stage," which is a strong dramatic production with a splendid cast, headed by Dorothy Phillips, whose services were obtained through the courtesy of Associated First National, and based on a pleasingly entertaining story written by Elinor Glyn, will do more to change public opinion of the screen, stars, etc., than any other legitimate picture this writer has seen.

The story is typical Elinor-Glynish, if you know what that means. It dwells on the domestic complications of a charming young lady, who has attained both fame and fortune, only to have both dissipated by a worthless drunken husband. And then there is that true-blue friend who always appeals to the women folk. The story, though basically not a thoroughly new one, has a twist that is positively original. It gives the spectator an insight of what happens in a studio, at a star's home, etc. And is not that what millions and millions of our people have and are craving for? We believe it is and that is the primary reason for making the statement that "The World's A Stage" is a knockout from a box office standpoint. As a production it is effectively strong in direction, acting, photography, settings and light.

Dorothy Phillips gives an admirable characterization of the screen star who conquers the public and loses a matrimonial war. Bruce McRae as the "friend in need" is a corker, while Kenneth Harlan as the good-for-nothing anti-Volsteader who makes no failure of showing what a joke Prohibition is, is equally effective. But, in our humble opinion, the greatest work was that of Director Campbell for his was anything but a simple task—and he accomplished it nobly. Others in the cast who give good support are Otis Harlan, Jack McDonald and "Queenie."

The Cast

The Star ..... Dorothy Phillips
Brand ..... Bruce McRae
Wallace ..... Kenneth Harlan

Story by Elinor Glyn
Direction by Colin Campbell
Length, Six Reels.

The Story

A clever actress, through the friendship and influence of a friend, John Brand, invades the studios and becomes a star. Later she meets Wallace, a friend of Brand's, whom she marries. On their wedding evening Wallace attends a drunken party, but is forgiven. However, he does not reform, for marriage life means one endless chain of 'drunks" for Wallace, whose wife Brand tries to help. Wallace, jealous of Brand, forces his wife one pouring rainy night to ride with him in a touring car. Fearing some mishap would befall them with the drunken Wallace driving, Brand follows. Wallace drives the machine into a broken bridge and is killed. Thus the way is paved for Brand's marriage to the star.

"Saturday Morning"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

The kiddies and animals which have appeared in previous numbers of "Our Gang" comedies are also in this one, and as usual are up to a lot of stunts which will amuse the spectators. As the title implies, it shows the mischief into which a bunch of kids can get on their day off from school. There is a rich boy, a poor boy who has to practice on the 'cello against his will and the way he makes his dog do it instead. This is a clever scene. Then, of course, there is Sunshine Sammy and the tiny pickaninny girl who cause a lot of amusement. While the humor in this number is not as lively as some of the others, there is a lot of real true-to-life stuff, and those who like children, as well as the children themselves, will enjoy it.—C. S. S.

"Graphic 2548"

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

Probably the most interesting item in this screen magazine is the section showing some home-life scenes of F. Scott Fitzgerald, the twenty-six-year-old author of the much talked of and widely read novel, "The Beautiful and Damned." Another interesting section shows Evelyn Law, of the Follies, executing a variety of dance steps and high kicks which are repeated in slow motion. Then there is a study of different expressions by means of a distorting mirror; views of a New York postman who has traveled 250,000 miles on foot; and another section showing how the crew of a life saving station rescue passengers from a wrecked vessel with a breeches-buoy.—C. S. S.

"Friday, the 13th"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Superstition is, of course, the dominating motive of this Paul Terry Cartoon and the old farmer has all kinds of things happen to him in rapid succession because on the fateful day he ignores all signs and superstitions. While it contains several humorous hits and gives the cartoonist an opportunity for clever bits of business it is hardly up to the standard of the majority of this series and the moral, "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still" is not very convincingly brought out.—C. S. S.

"Blaze Away"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Paul Parrott is the star of this comedy, which is a travesty on Westerns. It contains several amusing incidents and is an average number of the series in which Parrott is the star. The plot shows how a tenderfoot goes West, is made a deputy sheriff and told to capture a "bad man" which he finally does. The ending is novel, where he finds he has locked himself in jail and the bandit on the outside.—C. S. S.

"Starland Review 16"

(F. B. O.—Magazine—One Reel)

Well up to the standard set by previous issues of this screen magazine is this issue which shows that Emma Haig, who danced off the stage sometime ago and broke her back, is now fully recovered and able to do all kinds of stunts. Another interesting section shows scenes from Florence Reed's new play, "East of Suez." Other sections show the making of costumes for the Greenwich Village Follies, Anna Fitqui, the prima donna, selecting tobacco, views of a Japanese prima donna, Ned Wayburn training dancers for a vaudeville act and the star of "Why Men Leave Home" at home.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 184"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

The high standard of interest and entertainment reached in recent issues of this magazine is maintained in this number. There is a section wonderfully photographed interpreting Longfellow's poem, "Sunrise on the Hills," also interesting views of the people of the new republic of Latvia, a section in color showing the city of Gafsa in the Desert of Sahara, and an instructive section showing the great power of air by means of simple experiments, including several unique effects achieved with liquid air.—C. S. S.

"True Blue"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

With "Queenie," a horse, as the star of this picture, it has naturally been built so as to allow this very intelligent animal a number of opportunities for clever stunts. While some of the things are far-fetched, many are quite remarkable and are sure-fire with audiences. "Queenie's" boss gets somewhat intoxicated but "Queenie" takes him to his fiance's home and also takes the couple to a minister and settles matters regardless of an irate father. The horse's cleverness will entertain the adults and delight the kiddies.—C. S. S.

"Pure But Simple"

(Federated—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is a Monte Banks comedy of variable merit. It has some exceptionally clever moments and other stunts that are average in amusement value. Mostly, it is a story of two rival suitors, a girl, and a father who is out for the better man. There is a barn dance in which the girl proves an attractive entertainer. In conclusion, there is a canoe race to determine which is the winning suitor and in connection are some original effects that should bring laughs. M. K.

"Screen Snapshots No. 14"

Film Exports Total Over $500,000

More Than 13,000,000 Feet Sent to Various Countries

Exports of moving picture film during the month of August reached a total of more than thirteen million feet and a value of well over a half-million dollars, according to a report of the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

A total of 1,179,470 feet of exposed negatives, valued at $56,167, also was exported. France and England were the most important customers.

Nearly fifty countries made imports of American positives during the month, the report shows, total exports amounting to 8,884,469 feet, with a value of $386,413. Canada was our best customer and Australia was next.

Louise Fazenda Featured in New Mermaid Series for Educational

Louise Fazenda has been engaged to appear in Mermaid Comedies which are distributed through Educational and she will make her debut in a special subject being produced under the supervision of Jack White. Miss Fazenda will head a new comedy unit and will be supported by Harry Gribbon who is also well known to screen audiences, together with Jack Ackroyd, Otto Fries and Jack Lloyd.

Two directors, Robert Karr and Charles Hochberg are at work on the first of these specials. Miss Fazenda who is famous for her work as a country girl with kinky curls has recently completed prominent roles in two big forthcoming productions "The Beautiful and Damned" and "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and her engagement for Mermaid two-reelers comes as a pleasant surprise in the short subject field as it was the impression that she had left this branch for feature productions.

Two prominent comedy writers Ballard MacDonald and Edward Kennedy have just been added to the Mermaid production staff, and now there are four directors, twelve well-known comedians, four cameramen and two scenario writers working on the two Mermaids to follow "Casey Jones Jr."

Lige Conley heads the cast of a new comedy being directed by Del Lord and Jules White. The cast also includes Jack Richardson, Spencer Bell, Sunshine Hart and Jack White's latest comedy find Peg O'Neill.

Universal Filming Detective Series Written by George Bronson Howard

Universal announces the early release of the first of a series of four two-reel detective stories "The Adventures of Yorke Norroy" written by George Bronson Howard, the well-known author. It is further stated that the recent untimely death of Mr. Howard will not affect the plans for the series as he had already completed the scripts. Duke Worne is directing the series and Roy Stewart is the star, and the cast includes Jack Perrin, Esther Ralston, Hayden Stevenson, Fontaine LaRue, William Welsh, and George Williams.

The leading character, Yorke Norroy, is one of the most popular of Mr. Howard's fiction characters and was the hero of a series of stories titled "Yorke Norroy, Diplomatic Agent" which were published in Popular magazine. They dealt with a secret service agent of international reputation. The new subjects are in the nature of a sequel to "Perils of the Secret Service" which was a series of seven two-reelers written and directed by Mr. Howard five years ago at Universal City, and which proved very popular.

The first of the series has been completed and it is expected will be released during the winter following the series of "Timber Tales" in which Roy Stewart is starring. The cast for each picture, with the exception of the star, will be changed. It is promised that this series will be high-class in every respect.

Another Our Gang Comedy Leads Off Ten Pathe Subjects for December 3

Another "Our Gang" two-reel comedy heads Pathe's list of ten subjects for release December 3. It is titled "Saturday Morning" and shows "Freckles Mickey Daniels, Sunshine Sammy, little chocolate-colored "Farina," tough little Jackie Condon, and the rest of "Our Gang" in their most irrepressible mood, making up for six days of behaving. It is said to be filled with humor and "animal spirits" and practically without a plot as it does not need any.

The Charles Hutchison serial "Speed" reaches its seventh episode in which the hero after escaping from a burning ship gets into the power of bloodthirsty savages and in seeking to get away from them has a terrific battle with an alligator.

In "Blaze Away" Paul Parrott having taken a correspondence course in how to be a cowboy has exciting experiences in the West in his attempt to capture a notorious bad man when he is made a member of the sheriff's posse.

The Aesop Film Fable "Friday the Thirteenth" shows in a humorous way all the bad luck that happens to a farmer who is not superstitious and does not believe in signs and points the moral "a man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still."

The Harold Lloyd single reel re-issue is "Soft Money" and Bebe Daniels is in the cast. Pathe Review 184 contains a picturization of Longfellow's "Sunrise on the Hills" beautifully photographed and many other interesting items. Screen Snapshots No. 14 shows interesting scenes in which Charles Ray, Mae Murray, Anita Stewart and other prominent players figure.

Signs Fay Tincher

Fay Tincher is now with Universal. The "stripes girl" of a few years ago, has returned to the screen to play opposite Lewis Sargent in a messenger boy comedy at Universal City. The comedies starring Lewis Sargent, have been enthusiastically received by theatre owners, according to Universal.

J. G. Rohlfs Now With Hodkinson

In line with the plans of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to create a big short subject department, announcement is made of the acquisition of J. G. Rohlfs who will have complete charge of the distribution and sale throughout the United States of all Hodkinson short subjects except the Movie Chats and "Fun from the Press."

Mr. Rohlfs was formerly with Hodkinson and later with Goldwyn Associated Producers and other companies. Among the series he will handle are the All Star Comedies, "Days Afield with Rod and Gun," Triart Productions, Great American Authors and the Bray Romances and comedies.

Mirror No. 3 Pictures Aviation Birth

The International News Reel Corporation has produced another novelty reel of exceptional interest. It is called "The Birth of Aviation," and will be released by Universal as The Mirror No. 3, or the third in the series of one reel features assembled by International from film taken a decade or more ago and showing historical events of the past.

"The Birth of Aviation" shows the first fledgling hops in 1908 of the Wright Brothers, Glenn Curtis, and other pioneer bird-men. It shows the flimsy aeroplanes of the early days and compares them in flight with their modern counterparts. It is a picturization in one reel of the growth of aviation.

Newsy Notes

A. H. Geibler has just completed and mailed to exhibitors a clever advertising herald in connection with the Plum Center Comedes, made by Paul Gerson Pictures Corp. and released by F. B. O. It is a four-pager, made up in the style of a burlesque of a small town newspaper, and contains a lot of the kind of clever and original humorous material for which Mr. Geihler is noted.

E. J. Smith, managing director of European Motion Picture Co., Ltd., who is handling Century Comedies in England, has prepared an attractive booklet covering ten of these comedies. Each page is devoted to a different picture and gives a synopsis and portrait of the star.

Short Subject Manager Lou Thompson, of the Cleveland Universal exchange, is an ingenous fellow. To call attention to the Century comedy, "Just Dogs," he secured a lot of frankfurters, cut them in pairs, and attached a tag reading, "Just Dogs—It's a Century," and forwarded them to exhibitors in that territory. This is an all-animal comedy, including a monkey and two clever dogs.

The Gordon Olympic Circuit in Massachusetts has contracted with Educational for all of its two-reel subjects, including the Hamilton, Mermaid, Jack White and Christie comedies. The Dallas branch of Southern Enterprises has also booked for showing over its entire circuit the following Educational series, Mermaid, Christie, Hamilton, Earl Hurd and Cameo comedies, Bruce Wilderness Tales, and Kinograms.

Pathe has received a large number of letters from showmen praising "Topics of the Day." Among them are Harry F. Dinning, of Paramount Theatre, Milwaukee. Ed Foy, of Foy's Neighborhood Theatres, Dallas; H. B. Paul, of Majestic Theatre, Ontario, Ore., and Chester A. Black, of Sun Theatre, York, Neb.

Bray to Release One Series Through Hodkinson and Two via State Rights

Three different series of short subjects are now being offered to exhibitors by Bray Productions, Inc. They include a series of Technical Romances which are distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, also the Bray Magazine and Bray Nature Pictures which will be distributed on the state right market.

The first three of the Technical Romances are "The Mystery Box" which deals with radio, "The Sky Splitter" which deals with the speed of light rays and "Gambling with the Gulf Stream" which deals with the question of the change in the gulf stream which scientists contend may make the climate of England and Northern Europe as cold as Labrador.

The announcement of the release of the Bray Magazine marks the first step of the Bray organization to enter the independent market. It will be a high class screen magazine in every way.

The Bray Nature Pictures will contain the result of special work which has been done for several months by experts of international standing such as Dr. Spaeth, biologist of Johns Hopkins University who contribuutes marvelous scenes filmed through microscopes, specimens from the unseen world and the depth of the sea. There will also be pictures of bird and animal life, exploration and adventure, showing unusual happenings and little known facts about bird and animal life. They will be entertaining as well as instructive and decidedly out of the ordinary.

J. R. Bray, president of the company producing these pictures, is a pioneer in the production of short subject entertainment being one of the first to issue a screen magazine the Bray Pictographs. A careful canvass of exchanges is now being made by A. Canter who will shortly leave on a coast to coast trip to arrange for distribution of the two state right series.

Bull Montana Film Has Big Cast

In Bull Montana's newest comedy for Metro "Rob 'Em Good" it is said that most of the male players weigh in the neighborhood of 200 lbs. This is a Hunt Stromberg production and a burlesque on "Robin Hood." Account of the nature of the picture it has the largest cast of any of the Montana comedies. In the cast are Chuck Reisner, Dot Farley, Sidney Dalbrook, James Quinn, Billy Elmer, Spike Robinson and Vincent Bryant.

F. L. Brown of the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., reports that Montana in "A Punctured Prince" created riots of laughter at that theatre.

New Hamilton Comedy

Lloyd Hamilton in his latest comedy for Educational will have one of the largest and best casts of his career. The title of this picture is "No Luck," and heading the supporting cast is Ruth Hiatt, who also appeared in "The Speeder" and "The Educator." Other members are Lloyd Bacon, Tom Kennedy and Tom McGuire and two clever kiddies, Coy Watson, Jr., and Bobbie DeVilbiss.

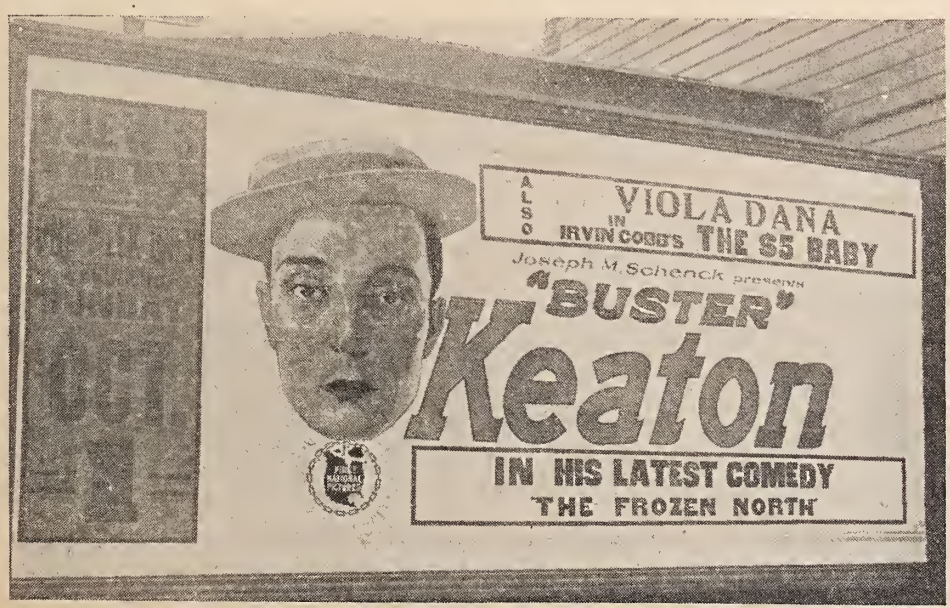
Mayor Allen Making Animal Series

Major Jack Allen, globe-trotter and sportsman, has been engaged by Universal to write, direct and star in a number of short features. Each is a cleverly written little story embodying a plot which comes to a climax by Major Allen's capture of the animal. The appeal of the series will be the drama of the chase and the humanitarian method of capturing animals without killing them.

In More Territories

The new Hallroom Boys Comedies, C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's series of popular two-reelers, were signed up in two additional territories this week, almost completing the entire United States sales, it is announced.

The sales were to United Film Service of St. Louis, through Sam Werner, and to Crescent Film Service of Kansas City, the company headed by Al Kahn. This disposes of three more states, United taking the franchise to Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, and Crescent holding rights to Western Missouri and Kansas. This leaves only one territory open on these comedies, C. B. C. announces.



How's this for boosting a short subject! Note the way Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, played up a First National-Buster Keaton Comedy on billboards.

Christie Comedies Highly Praised

Christie Comedies and their producers have just been paid a fine tribute by Robert E. Sherwood, motion picture critic of "Life." After reviewing two Christie Comedies recently released by Educational, and declaring that one of them, "Pardon My Glove," featuring Bobby Vernon, "is one of the best comedies that Christie has yet offered," Mr. Sherwood says:

"The Christies are about the only comedy producers since Sidney Drew died who have been able to strike a happy medium between light farce and slap-stick, and it is to be hoped that they will continue the good work—for the field is limitless."

The early pictures of the 1922-1923 series of Educational-Christie Comedies, including "That Son of a Sheik," "Pardon My Glove," "Let 'Er Run," "Ocean Swells," "Choose Your Weapons," and "Chop Suey," are meeting with such splendid success and receiving such complimentary reviews all over the country that it is evident that the public at large agrees with Mr. Sherwood that the Educational-Christie Comedies are "good work."

Century Makes Two Promotions

Sig Neufeld, who has been film editor for Century Comedies during the past four years has been promoted by the Stern Brothers to the position of Production Manager, Mr. Neufeld's former position will be filled by Charles Wallach, who is now editing Al Herman's latest Century Comedy "Farmerettes" under Neufeld's supervision. Neufeld has three companies at present. They are Alf Goulding's, Harry Edwards, and Herman C. Raymaker.

New Series

Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, will shortly announce a series of small-town boy stories featuring Buddy Messenger, the first of which is called "Kid Gladiators." Among the supporting cast will be Marjorie Marcel and Joe Bonner. Harry Edwards has been specially engaged to direct young Messenger.

Stern Brothers will spare no expense in procuring the right scenarios for young Messenger, the entire series will be supervised by either one or the other member of the firm and players of reputation will support him.

Won Over to Serials

Universal reports that after trying for several months to induce Sol Brill, of the Strand Theatre, Far Rockaway, N. Y., to run a serial, they finally persuaded him to try out "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" on a Friday afternon. The results were so satisfactory that he not only booked the serial for Fridays and Saturdays, which was the first he had ever ran, but has booked "Radio King" as well, for Monday and Tuesday.

New Montana Film

An excellent supporting cast, it is said, has been engaged for "Glad Rags," the next Bull Montana comedy now being produced by Hunt Stromberg for Metro. David Kirkland and Clyde Bruchman have been added to the Stromberg-Montana scenario staff.

Hugh Fay, who directed "A Punctured Prince," will serve similarly for "Glad Rags."

"Beyond the Jordan"

(Geographic—Biblical—One Reel)

The American Releasing Corporation is offering the first of a series of one-reel subjects, descriptive of ancient Biblical scenes. "Beyond the Jordan," if typical of the series, indicates that the appeal is out of the ordinary and one that will be felt by all thoughtful spectators. Great care has been taken in the production. It shows, first, a close study of the Old Testament and a selection of the places where many of the best known events took place. These have been visualized with a regard for beauty as well as accuracy. Quotations from the Bible, and a few scenes in color give them added meaning. For the exhibitor who wants his program to include a dignified number as far removed from cheap entertainment as can be imagined, these pictures should be a welcome arrival. Produced by Georgraphic Films.—M. K.

"Wonderful Water"

(Prizma—Educational—One Reel)

One of the most entertaining and instructive of the Prizma offerings. Prepared by G. H. Sherwood, of the American Museum of Natural History, this reel presents with views in Prizma natural color, with few subtitles and remarkable simplicity the complete and wonderful story of water. It shows how it rises from lakes and rivers as mists or fogs, how and why it is precipitated as rain or snow, its action in a glacier, how it forms rivers or sinks into the ground to reappear as springs or geysers and why; also its enormous power in wearing away rock as shown in the canyon of the Colorado, at Yosemite Falls and the Gorge at Niagara. It is scenically beautiful as well as interesting. —C. S. S.

"The Rescue of Lot"

(Sacred Films—Bible—One Reel)

This is the eighth episode of the series of Bible stories produced by Sacred Films, Inc., and is being shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York. Like the others of the series it is sub-titled largely with quotations from the Bible. It has been reverently handled and interestingly depicts the capture of Lot in the City of Sodom by the forces of five Mesopotamian Kings and their subequent defeat and the rescue of Lot by the forces of Abraham. An interesting item is the employment by Abraham in battle of the flanking movement subsequently used extensively by Alexander, Caesar, Napoleon and other generals. This is a subject which should prove attractive in both theatres and churches.—C. S. S.

"Old Spain"

(Fox—Educational—One Reel)

There is an abundance of beauty in this subject. The Alhambra, the celebrated edifice which dates back to the Moorish occupation, is minutely described in a number of artistic shots. Most attractive of the various native features included is the selection of typical Spanish beauties. An informal dance is given out-doors by some of the younger girls. The close-ups of two or three of the women are lovely enough in themselves to make the film worth-while. The exact length is 800 feet. M. K.

"Pekin Ducks"

(Fox—Educational—One-Half Reel)

Duck-raising is picturesquely treated in this. The scenes were taken on one of the largest duck farms in the world and contain information about the methods and profits of carrying on this business that will be new to most persons. From the baby duck to the big duck that went to market, the specimens are many. Special color effects have been used in places. M. K.

"Love Taps"

(Federated—Comedy—Two Reels)

Monte Banks is the hero of this comedy which reveals many clever stunts. It is the type of subject that contains much entertainment for the fan who likes slapstick that follows a slight plan rather than being entirely disconnected. There are many amusing scenes in the boarding-house where the first part takes place. What follows is a fight on the street that leads to a professional bout in which the frail Monte maxes his wits count instead of his fists. M. K.

"Fortune Hunters"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Builded on the theme "be it ever so humble there is no place like home" the situations pointing the moral are quite far-fetched. They involve a cat and a mouse which escape from jail lured by the prospect of a fortune and are glad to finally get back to jail. Cartoonist Paul Terry, however, has given his wonderful imagination full sway and evolved some unusual clever and humorous situations, particularly where the cat and mouse fall through space and landing on the exhaust from an aeroplane, do a marathon up to the machine.—C. S. S.

"Railroading"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

This is a thoroughly entertaining Earl Hurd cartoon comedy that should please almost any audience and prove of particular delight to lively children. Bobby Bumps and Fido are acting in a scene before the camera, which requires Bobby to run an engine rapidly and finally plunge through a broken bridge, only to find that the film has given out and a re-take is necessary. Bobby in the toy engine meets with some exciting experiences which show considerable cleverness on the part of the cartoonist, as for instance where the house cat gets in the way of the train and the manner in which Bobby finally gets the feline out of the way.—C. S. S.

"Out of Place"

(Fox-Comedy—Two Reels)

Al St. John is the chief sponsor for the versatile entertainment offered in this Fox comedy. It jumps from one clever stunt to another. The comic hero runs the gamut of life, starting out in a cow-barn and ending his career in a cabaret. The picture is hodge-podge of nonsense that brings hilarious laughter in places. Al St. John exploits his acrobatic gifts to a greater extent than in his recent pictures, and gets some extremely funny effects.—M. K.

"High Power"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

As with the previous Jack White comedies distributed through Educational, this one is full of action and stunts, which follow each other in rapid succession; and there is a lot of sure-fire material that will go over big with audiences that like slapstick. The action concerns a young chap who goes West and after exciting experiences on a ranch returns East with his high-powered car, drives up the stairway and elopes with his girl. This scene is cleverly handled. One scene where the cowboys put a rope around the hero's neck, his feet catch under a root and when they pull the rope his neck stretches several feet is rather gruesome. While there is considerable new stuff, the director has especially in his chase scenes made use of some ancient and oft used material. On the whole this comedy is hardly up to Jack White's standard, but then he has been making such excellent slap-stick comedies that he can hardly be expected to bat one hundred per cent. every time.—C. S. S.

"The Committee on Credentials"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is another of the series of Harry Carey Westerns which was originally issued in three reels and has been cut down to two reels and reissued with new subtitles. It concerns a gambler who aids a woman in distress who has a drunken husband. The picture ends with the death of the husband whose buggy goes over a cliff while he is fleeing from a posse after having shot Carey and killed another man, and the suggestion of a romance. There is a lot of heart interest in this production and several exciting moments and it should please spectators who like Westerns as it is one of the best of the Harry Carey reissues.—C. S. S.

"Their Steady Job"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Neely Edwards is featured in this single reel comedy distributed by Universal. While there is considerable material which will probably get laughs much of it has been used before. The picture is filled with buffoonery and is not up to the standard of the average Universal releases. The plot concerns two wanderers who place a pair of gloves in the water and when two men come to rescue the supposed drowning person, they take their clothes.—C. S. S.

"Bird Life"

(Fox-Educational—One Reel)

All bird-lovers will find enjoyment in this. Some of the pictures are studies made by the National Audubon Society in getting rare specimens of eggs. Perhaps the most interesting feature is the illustration of the birds' different methods of building their nests and protecting their young. There are one or two picturesque shots of the sea and a flock of gulls. This subject should increase the entertainment value of any program.—M. K.

"Pay Day"

(Winkler—Cartoon—One Reel)

This should appeal because of its novelty. The artist and his subject have a good-natured controversy in which the creature of the artist's imagination refuses to be disciplined. It ends in his doing a good turn for his creator by exposing the man who comes in to rob the safe. The picture is a little out of the ordinary and holds the interest. M. K.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Editor Travels

Daughter and I drove to Niagara Falls from Rochester and examined them carefully. We are pleased to announce that the said falls are in apparent good condition. We did the "Cave of the Winds," the "Maid of the Mist," 'n everything from soup to I scream.

That evening I visited a beautiful theatre which had excellent projection. Darn the luck anyhow! I was very tired and did not make notes. I am unable to recall either the name of the theatre or the projectionist or manager, though the former has been a correspondent of this department. The theatre was near the falls. Sorry, for I would like to have given credit where credit was deserved.

Over in Hamilton we were most cordially received. Incidentally, the Hamilton local, as a body, ordered a copy of the new handbook for each of its members. They had had the books for nearly a month when I visited the city. I have a letter from the local setting forth its opinion of the book. It was published on page 246 of issue dated November 18. I invite your attention to it.

Progressive Men

And now don't get the idea that what I shall say about the Hamilton men is said because they treated me well and bought handbooks. It is said wholly and solely because the Hamilton men deserve praise for their progressiveness. The very fact that they ordered a handbook for every one of their members, accompanying the order with a substantial cash payment months before the book was ready for release, is evidence of their progressiveness. Only progressive men do such things; also only progressive locals welcome lectures upon subjects allied with their profession.

I was too tired to visit more than a few theatres, and what I found in the very first one I entered kept me so long that the number I could visit was still further curtailed.

NEW YORK

And now I want to tell you about a real progressive, energetic projectionist—a man after my own heart. At the Savoy Theatre, managed by L. O'Sier, a most courteous gentleman, with whom I had the pleasure of shaking hands, I found Fred Baldassari and H. Sedgwick in charge of the projection room. Brother Sedgwick is an able projectionist and a student, but it is to Brother Baldassari we must credit most of what we found and shall describe.

Power's Projectors

The projectors were Power's Six B, in excellent condition; but there were no arc controls. May I suggest to Manager O'Sier that he should install arc controls? Up-to-date theatres mostly all have them, and they are an excellent investment. To run without them is not good practice.

In Figure 1 is a diagrammatic illustration of the lamphouse door observation window, through which the projectionist views the arc. This is not the invention of Brother Baldassari, but of Brother Purcell, projectionist at the Pantages Theatre, of which I shall speak later. The black lines represent glasses, of which there are four, held in a metal frame attached to the lamphouse door at a convenient angle, as shown. The colors of the glasses are: one grass green, one amber and two wine color. The combination is even more efficient than the well-known French arc glass. It allows one to look at the arc without the slightest eye-strain. I heartily recommend it to projector manufacturers and to projectionists. with the warning that grass green must be used.

Brother Baldassari has improved upon Brother Purcell's plan by adding a sheet of very thin mica, as shown. This prevents the breaking of the glass by heat. I would myself suggest a further possible improvement. There is no glare at all, hence no good reason why the window cannot be made four or five inches square, or even larger, thus providing a convenient view of the arc at all times. It is the way I think I would prefer it myself.

The Savoy projection room is in a very, very bad location. The angle of projection is twenty-four (24) degrees. Were it not for the fact that the screen is tilted very heavily, which same is instantly apparent from the auditorium, the resultant distortion would make the picture very nearly, if not quite, square.

The attractiveness of the picture is greatly lowered to the portion of the audience seated on the main floor, hence the drawing power of the box office is lowered. With projectionists of less ability than those now there I venture the assertion that the net result would be distinctly bad.

Another Stunt

Another stunt Brother Baldassari has pulled is illustrated in Figure 2. He has cut a small opening—about two inches square, as I remember it—in the rear wall of the upper magazines, and over it has riveted a casing made of russia iron, such as the lamphouse is made from.

This casing is made as shown and in it is placed a small lamp. I don't quite remember, but think he said the reason for offsetting the lamp with the opening is so that he could look into the window on the projection side without having the lamp shine directly into his eyes—which is another evidence that the man works intelligently; that he uses his brains. In Figure 2 we are supposed to be above looking down.

Baldassari has invented and has in operation on both his Power's projectors a very ingenious automatic dowser. There are so very many of these devices that I don't think it necessary to describe this one in detail. It would require much space and several drawings or photos. This I will say, however: The thing was exceedingly well made.

Baldassari has his revolving shutters out at the aerial image. The shutter shaft is eighteen inches long. Baldassari, himself designed the supporting bracket. He says he is able to get much better results with his shutter at the aerial image.

He has pulled one stunt here that I never saw before. The shutter is far from the lens, of course—about eight inches, I would say—and he has enclosed the light beam from lens to shutter, with a mask at the aerial image, right up against the shutter, which just lets through the effective beam and cuts off all stray light. This is as it should be, in so far as concerns the mask.

Where Mask Should Be.

It is where Griffiths says the mask should be. The inclosure of the beam is so that the bright spot of light on the shutter will not interfere with vision when looking at the screen. That is what I call careful, intelligent work. It is work which should be voluntarily recognized by the manager in the pay envelope because it is by such recognition men are encouraged to keep doing high-grade work.

Baldassari has the entire condenser beam enclosed, and I have never yet, in all my experience, viewed as workmanlike a job of connecting the condenser with the aperture by means of an inclosure for the beam. The job is shown photographically in Figure 3, which also shows the inclosure of the light beam between the projection lens and shutter: also the mask and its support.

The insert shows the condenser inclosure open, ready for threading the projector. I asked Baldassari to send me photos of this, and in so doing he remarks: "Took these photos myself and am out of practice with the camera. Used artificial light—my spotlight—hence was obliged to do it largely by guess."

Well, all I'll say is that he is some considerable guesser.

Closed Lens Ports

In addition to the shield at the aerial image the lens ports are closed down to size of actual light beam; this, presumably, to minimize passage of sound into auditorium. There was a dissolving shutter for the projectors, though whether this was made by the projectionists or not I cannot say. There were two Transverters—one 25 and one 60 cycle. This is because there are two power companies, one (the 25-cycle) taking current from Niagara Falls power station.

The rewinder table and film cabinet combined was made by Baldassari and Sedgwick. It is an excellent piece of work, but they stopped too soon. The reels should be divided from each other, preferably by a fireproof partition, though that is not insisted upon.

However, I will say that all film cabinets should be connected with the open air by a vent flue of ample size, so that, in case of fire (remote contingency, but possible, and has occurred), the smoke will be carried away and not enter the projection room at all.

This is not a criticism of the Savoy or of Baldassari or Sedgwick. I am of the opinion that authorities would do well to oblige theatres constructed in future to build a film cabinet into the wall, with a vent flue of ample dimensions leading therefrom to the open air.

Will some one tell me some good reason why this should not or could not be done? A bit of extra expense, yes; but what is that as against the possibility of panic or even injury through damage done the theatre by smoke?

Framed Charts

In the Savoy room I saw lens charts neatly framed and hung on the wall; also a framed, neatly typewritten sheet entitled "Routine of Duties Pertaining to Care of Equipment of Savoy Theatre Projection Room." This was divided into three sections, viz.: "Daily Duties," "Semi-Weekly Duties" and "Weekly Duties."

Beside each observation port is a Transverter panel, with volt and ammeter; and Baldassari has rigged a switch so that, by its manipulation, the projectionist is able to instantly connect the panels to either Transverter.

There is a high-power field glass (not an opera glass) with which to view the screen. The spotlight has been mounted on a special stand, with a clever joint made from two flanges, as illustrated in Figure 4. The dotted lines represent an extension, which, I suppose, enters the lower pipe, though that is a guess. The friction between the flanges is just sufficient to cause the lamp to swing freely and still "stay put" wherever it is placed.

Corking Good Picture

Needless to say that, aside from the tilted screen, the Savoy has a corking picture. The Savoy management has used good sense and good judgment in providing the projectionists with excellent equipment—lacking only needed arc controls.

My hat is off to them for that; but, unless it has already done so, it should encourage such men as it has by recognition of their high-class work in the pay envelope. It is that which makes otherwise lukewarm men strive to do better, and gives high-class men the incentive to improve still further.

Now, don't you other Hamilton men feel hurt because I have said so much about Baldassari and not much about the rest of you. Every theatre I visited showed evidence of intelligent work. The rooms were all dark, for instance, while projection was in progress. In the Capitol I found a good projection room, two Power's projectors, Fulco arc controls, an extension shutter shaft and automatic dowsers. Brother H. Paro was projectionist in charge. He is doing good work.

1922 Building Reports Show Where Over $94,000,000 Will Be Spent

UP to and including the issue of October 28, the Moving Picture World had published itemized reports showing where $80,533,000 have been appropriated for the erection and equipment of new picture houses since January 1, 1922.

In addition to the above, we publish herewith a list of seventy new picture houses being planned or erected.

Of these seventy houses, the estimated cost of but thirty-three accompany the report, but the figures supplied show a contemplated expenditure of $13,765,900, bringing the total thus far reported for the current year up to $94,298,900.

When it is taken into consideration that these figures represent approximately fifty per cent. of the actual costs of the building operations reported, as only that proportion of the reports were accompanied by figures showing the estimated costs, the magnitude of the picture theatre building operations of the year drawing to a close, will be appreciated.

The current report is particularly interesting, showing, as it does, a tendency toward larger and higher cost houses.

That calling for the greatest expenditure is a contemplated Hollywood house at $2,800,000. There are two houses on the list at $2,000,000 each, one at $1,700,000 and one at $1,500,000.

There are two houses at $400,000 each, three at $300,000 each, one at $250,000 and two at $200,000 each.

At a cost of $150,000 each three houses will be built, one at $100,000, one at $80,000, two at $75,000 each and one at $65,000.

Three houses will be built at a cost of $60,000 each, while the most popular figure quoted is $50,000, at which cost five houses will be erected. One house will cost $45,000, one at $40,000, one at $30,000 and the lowest contemplated cost mentioned this week is $25,000, at which one house will be erected.

In addition to the new houses contemplated, there will also be found below a list of nineteen older picture theatres which have elected to keep up their end by making improvements calculated to place them abreast of competition.

No House Too Small For the Fotoplayer

A report of recent installations received from the American Photo Player Company indicates most interestingly the present musical tendencies of picture theatres along the lines of economy and efficiency.

The installations recently made of Fotoplayers are as follows:

Crystal Theatre, Superior, Wyoming; Home Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.; A. J. Davenport, Compton, Cal.; the International Amusement Co., El Paso, Tex.; Playhouse Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.; F. A. Richey, Los Angeles, Cal.; Casino Theatre, San Diego, Cal.; Ramona Theatre, San Diego, Cal.; Star Theatre, Oshkosh, Wis.; Orpheum Theatre, Centerville, Iowa; Circle Amusement Corporation, Ottumwa, Iowa; Elite Theatre Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; Seminole Theatre, Homestead, Fla.; Lewis Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Grand Theatre, Winter Haven, Fla.; Pearl Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dixie Theatre, Coleman, Tex.

The American Photo Player Company advise us that the smaller theatres are equipping themselves with Style Fifteen, the baby of the Fotoplayer family, which enables even the little house to present a musical program that would be totally beyond its reach financially to obtain with a regular staff of musicians.

Hallberg Equipment Installed by Spiegel

Max Spiegel has just purchased for his two houses, the State Theatre of Schenectady and the Troy Theatre of Troy, a double Hallberg electric speed indicator equipment, with generators for two projectors and specially designed projection room panels on which are mounted the speed indicators for use by the projectionists.

The panels are equipped with a switch-over and control devices for additional indicators located on the orchestra leader's stands in the orchestra pit.

These installations, which were sold by Joe Hornstein, of the Howell Cine Equipment Company, illustrate the tendency of progressive exhibitors to insure the best possible results in the way of co-ordinating the music with the picture and enabling both projectionist and orchestra leader to work in harmony.

C. H. Fulton Reports More Installations

C. H. Fulton, president Fulco-Schaffer Sales Company, has sold two Power 6B improved model projectors, equipped with Power G. E. high intensity arc lamps and a Fort Wayne generator set to the Princess Theatre, Joliet, Ill.

Fulton has also sold the Dundee Community High School, at Dundee, Ill., a Power 6B improved model projector, equipped with Power G. E. Mazda unit and a complete Fulco safety unit. H. C. Stiff, technical engineer, is now supervising the above installations.

H. C. Stiff, technical engineer of Fulco-Schaffer Sales Company, Chicago, made an installation of Power G. E. high intensity lamps at the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., October 23. Reports received are that they are working satisfactorily, and giving excellent results on the screen.

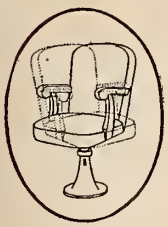
ONLY ONE PERSON STANDING

And that won't be you—unless it's you that's passing along the row. The old method of seating required every one in the row to rise to cramped positions to enable a late arrival to squeeze past, causing annoyance to all concerned and obstructing the view of those seated in the rear.

But no more! The Mov-Ezy theatre chair, the greatest improvement in seating arrangements since theatres were built, has eliminated all that. Its occupant can turn it to either side to allow ample passage space, without any one getting up.



The Mov-Ezy has proved itself the greatest individual feature of every theatre where it has been installed. Send for our beautifully illustrated catalogue and see why.

Right Basement of Ozark Theater showing complete installation of Skinner Bros. direct-fired Heaters with special sheet-metal enclosure.

A Combined Ventilator and Heater

The Skinner Bros. Direct Fired Heater offers the ideal combination of ventilation and heat in a single unit. No pipes or ducts used—your auditorium remains clear and unobstructed—the heater can be completely concealed from view. In operation it is odorless and practically noiseless.

In the summer time, heater can be used to draw pure, fresh air from the outside and diffuse it through auditorium, where it displaces the impure air and drives it out through the regular ventilator openings in the building.

When used for heating, the air is warmed as it is drawn through the heater. This warm air can be recirculated through the building as often as desired.

Economical—Fully Guaranteed

Even in coldest weather the Skinner Bros. Heater needs to be operated only a few hours daily. Costs little to install and can be operated by anyone. If steam is available we supply our Baetz Type, which uses live or exhaust steam at any pressure.

Every Skinner Heater is fully guaranteed. Should a heater, when installed as directed by our engineers, fail to accomplish the results we specify, it becomes immediately returnable at our expense.

Find out more about the Skinner Heater—we will gladly submit full details, without obligation, of course.

A NATURAL

It doesn't take sixty-point boldface to present an idea. The Idea right here in six point, Mr. Producer and Mr. Distributor is:—Do not sell your export birthright for a mess of small change any longer. In Spain and Latin-America you have a market of 120,000,000 people who are spending more money on the motion picture than on any other amusement—countries whose raw products, the basis of their prosperity are bringing higher prices than they have brought for years. Facts. If you really investigated this market and found out how much money your pictures really should bring, you would say, "Somebody has been kidding me." That's plain talk. Here's some more:—CINE-MUNDIAL is the recognized motion picture authority for the trade, the press, the public in Spain and Latin-America. A three-edged selling weapon. Use it.
Use the largest A. B. C. paid circulation going out of the United States. Use the only magazine that feeds 120,000,000 hungry enthusiasts news of the American film. Use the only medium that covers the Spanish film trade, on whose reviews theatre owners and importers thousands of miles from the point of purchase depend. With CINE-MUNDIAL make the Spanish market want your pictures. Bring the mountain to Mahomet—the film buyer to you. CINE-MUNDIAL is seven years old with its next issue, January 1923. Forms close December 15. The most NATURAL investment you could make is to put between 35,000 and 40,000 CINE-MUNDIAL film salesmen on your pay-roll on that date.

A 2 Reeler FEATURED over the LONG FEATURE!

Read what ASCHER'S Merrill Milwaukee DID!

"Before we advertise any short reel over the feature," says a wire from Ralph Wettstein, manager of Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, "and in the canopy lights, you can bet it must be an unusually big attraction. That's what we are doing with 'THE NEW LEATHER PUSHERS.' Without exaggeration, THERE NEVER WAS A BIG PICTURE MADE TO COMPETE WITH THE 'LEATHER PUSHERS' DRAWING POWER. Denny is establishing himself as a great favorite. Everybody was delighted to see this round."

What more can we say? This remarkable new series of two-reelers is THE GREATEST EVER MADE! It's being proven EVERYWHERE—daily!

Who Can Solve Syracuse's Problems?

WHEN is a city over-seated from the standpoint of the picture theatre? Can Syracuse, N. Y., be said to be over-seated when its downtown houses running straight pictures accommodate 11,000 persons out of a population of 175,000, and Buffalo, in its downtown houses, seats 13,500 persons out of a population of 500,000?

Does exploitation cheapen a house and does it really draw consistent business which will continue to maintain itself through coming weeks?

...loyment of the program.

At the Empire Theatre, a particularly large and handsome house, which was taken over some months ago by Morris Fitzer, sixteen years in the business, there is a ten-piece orchestra. This house always played the legitimate and is an exceptionally fine theatre. Mr. Fitzer reported that business was good and added that the whole thing revolves around the one declaration that "the picture is the thing." "If I can get good pictures," said Mr. Fitzer, "I'll take care of the receipts."

Mr. Charles S. Goetz,

New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Goetz:

Our doors opened at one o'clock yesterday with "RAGS TO RICHES" and at 2.30 the house was taxed to its full capacity and from then on we held them out until ten o'clock. This picture holds my box office record for the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, and I want to thank the Warner Bros. for their wonderful co-operation in sending a publicity man and their float to Syracuse to help exploit "RAGS TO RICHES".

The exhibitors in this territory owe it to Warner Bros. to give them their support, because I am convinced that when you buy a Warner Bros. Picture you are almost assured of a big profit at the box office.

You can depend on me at all times to be a 100% account, and I only wish that there were more concerns in the business who would help the exhibitor put over a picture the way you do.

The picture itself is one of the finest audience pictures that has ever been screened in Syracuse, and coupled with the great advertising campaign, spelled great success for me, and now I feel as though Wesley Barry will be a big box office attraction in whatever pictures he stars in.

Very truly yours,

EMPIRE THEATRE

THE EXHIBITOR MUST SOLVE HIS OWN PROBLEM

No Producer, Distributor, or Booking Circuit can Solve it for Him.

IF THIS BE TRUE:

What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way to protect his investment in theatre holdings and the good will he has builded with his patrons?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward permanently securing film rentals that will insure a profit to himself commensurate with the risk he takes?

What is the Exhibitor doing to protect himself against any movement in the industry that ultimately must be a burden to him?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward safeguarding his investment against any alignment that will tend to confine or restrict production or distribution?

What is the Exhibitor doing toward securing equitable film rentals during his good season, in order that slack periods do not absorb all his profits and more?

What is the Exhibitor doing in a constructive way toward keeping the independent producer independent and in business?

THE ANSWER IS THAT THE EXHIBITOR IS DOING NOTHING.

These problems relate not only to the present and the immediate future—they affect vitally the Exhibitor's destiny.

The purpose of this advertisement is to advise the Exhibitor that a plan has been created to cover every phase of Exhibitor protection, which will sweep the country.

Every Exhibitor in America owes it to himself, irrespective of location, size of house, priority of run, or population, to write for details of this plan.

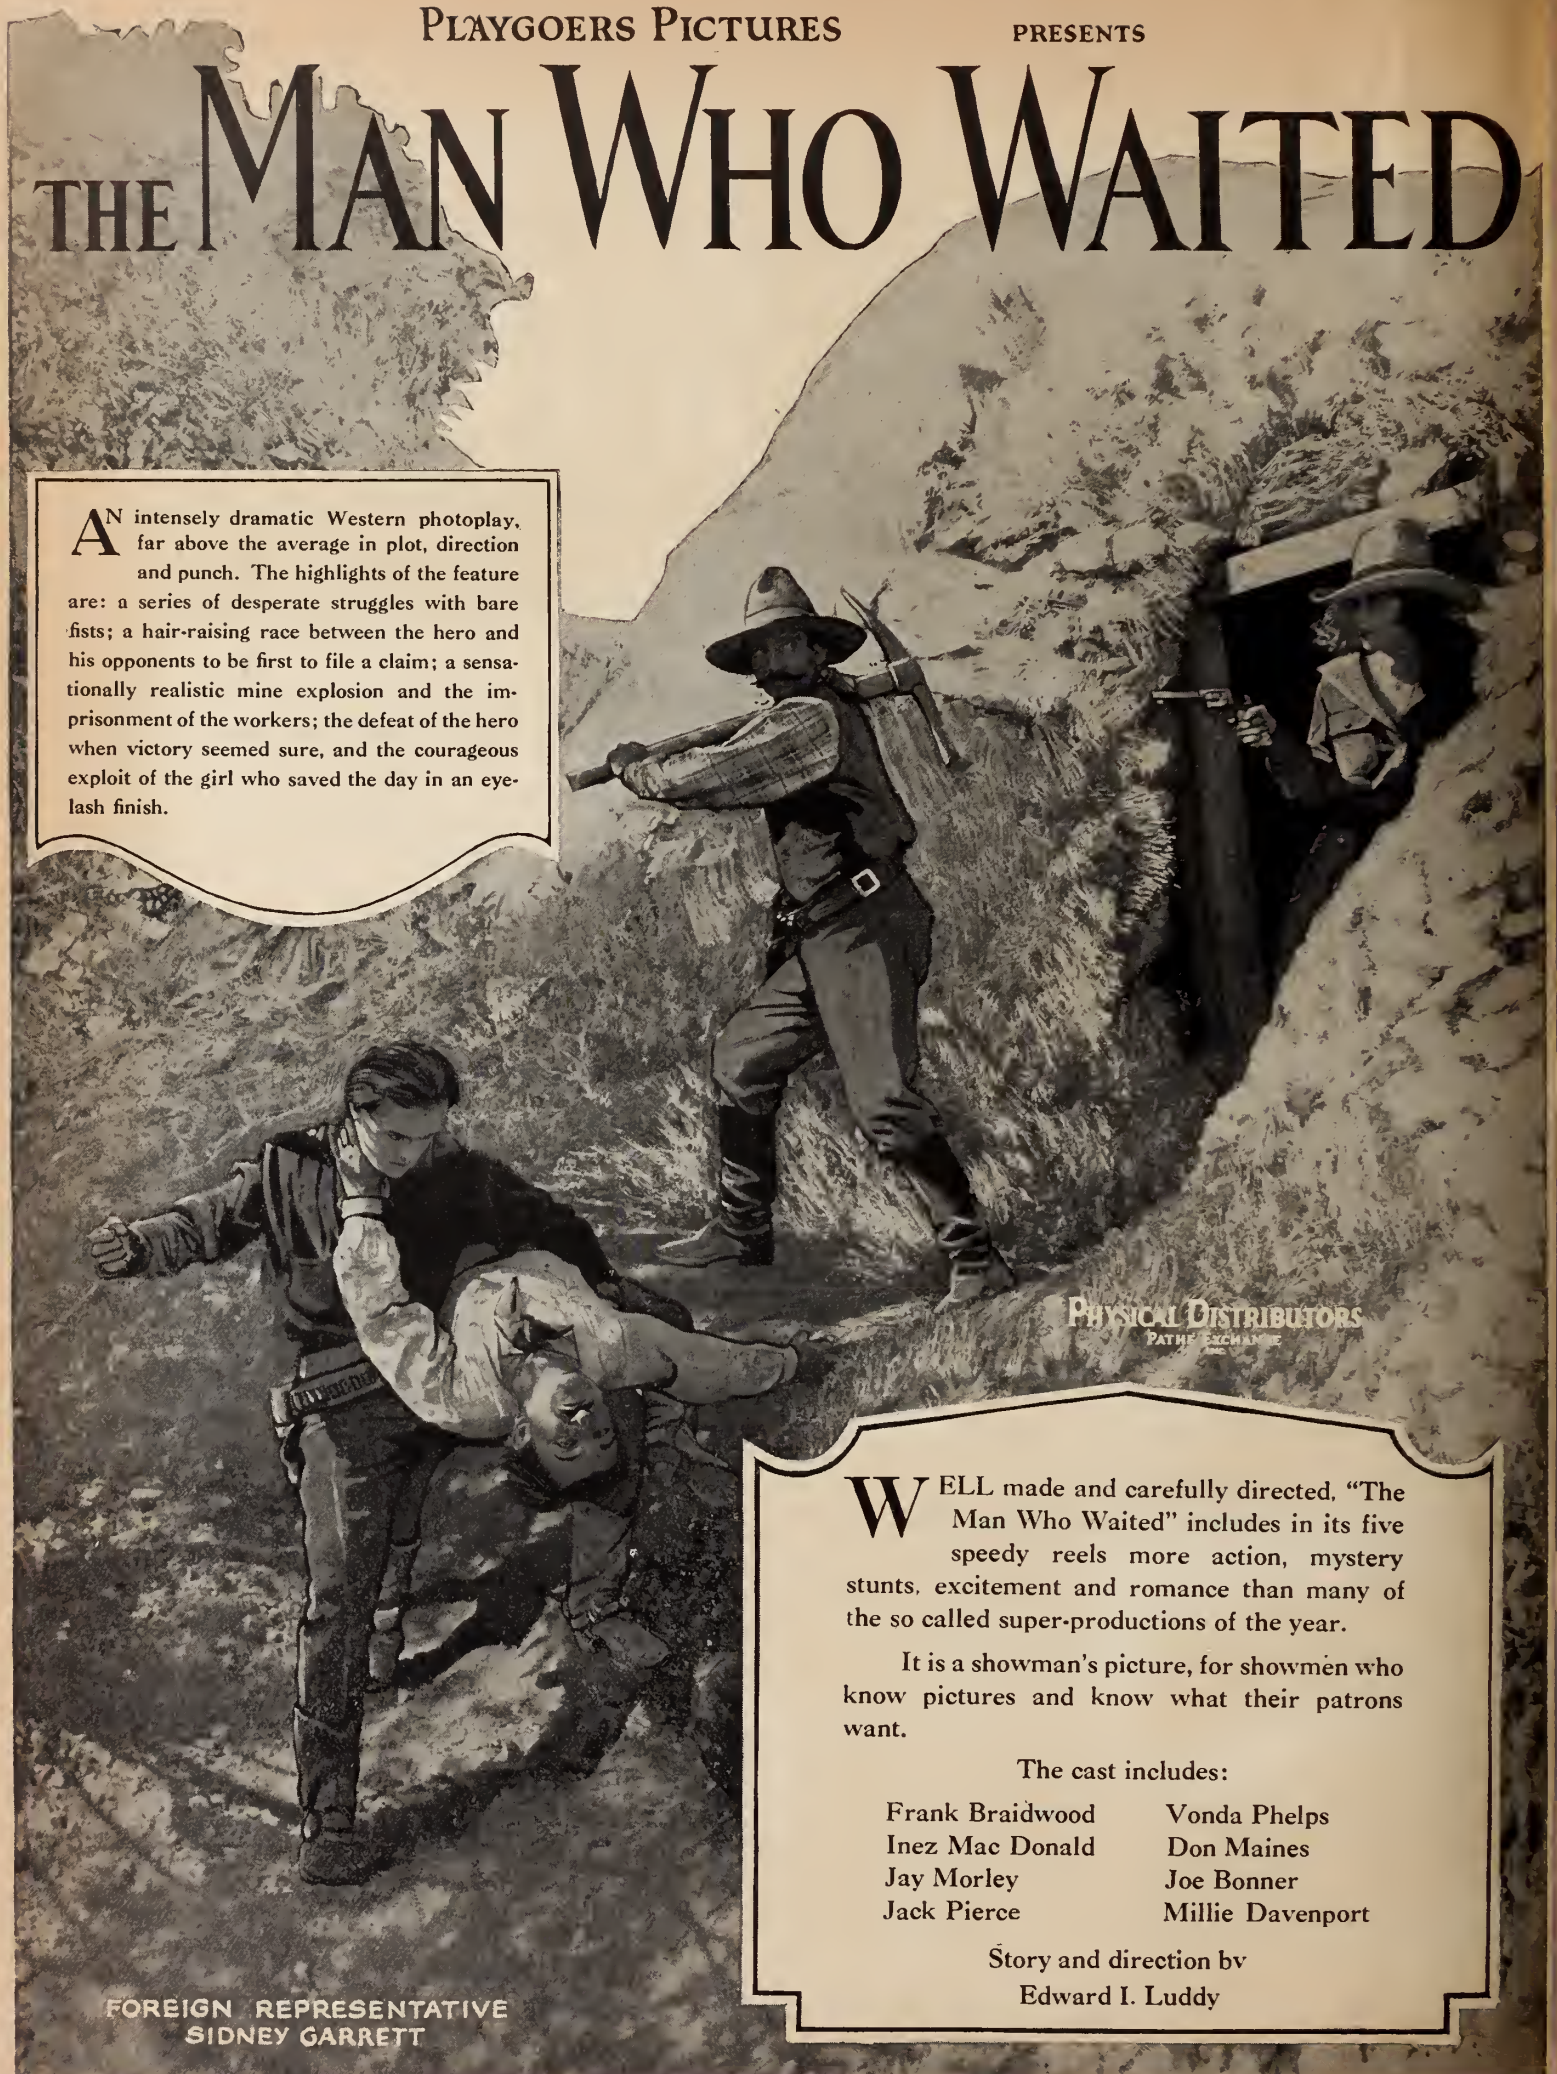
PLAYGOERS PICTURES PRESENTS

THE MAN WHO WAITED

AN intensely dramatic Western photoplay, far above the average in plot, direction and punch. The highlights of the feature are: a series of desperate struggles with bare fists; a hair-raising race between the hero and his opponents to be first to file a claim; a sensationally realistic mine explosion and the imprisonment of the workers; the defeat of the hero when victory seemed sure, and the courageous exploit of the girl who saved the day in an eyelash finish.



WELL made and carefully directed, "The Man Who Waited" includes in its five speedy reels more action, mystery stunts, excitement and romance than many of the so called super-productions of the year.

It is a showman's picture, for showmen who know pictures and know what their patrons want.

The cast includes:

Frank Braidwood	Vonda Phelps
Inez Mac Donald	Don Maines
Jay Morley	Joe Bonner

Gentlemen:

The Cleveland Cinema Club wishes to express its appreciation of the opportunity afforded through your office to review the picture "Lorna Doone" as produced by Mr. Maurice Tourneur at the Thomas Ince Studio in Culver City.

The purpose of the Cinema Club as you may know, is to encourage the production and exhibition of motion pictures of the highest standard of artistic excellence. We recognize the immense potentialities of the motion pictures and we are glad that a company of the importance of the Associated First National has seen fit to co-operate in the production and distribution of "Lorna Doone". Photographically, the picture has many scenes of rare beauty. As a presentation of Blackmore's novel, "Lorna Doone" will receive a hearty welcome from all those who have read and come to love that quaint English story of "Lorna Doone" and her John Ridd.

We hope the production will attain every success and are glad to give it our endorsement.

One of the most successful Oriental plays ever produced.

Road showed four years in city, town and hamlet.

A gorgeous spectacle and one of the most entrancing love stories ever filmed.

More thrilling and exciting than the Arabian Nights—more enthralling than Romeo and Juliet.

Scenes of rare beauty in Persian gardens, Oriental temples and palaces with the beauties of the Caliph's harem.

Hundreds of horsemen and foot soldiers in fierce hand to hand battles.

Love, romance and thrills aplenty.

Three full page ads have been prepared for the Saturday Evening Post. They will appear Dec. 9, Jan. 6 and Feb. 3.

Advertising in other national mediums reaching a total of more than 10,000,000 readers.

Think of it. More than 10,000,000 will see these ads. Your audiences are ready made.

Richard Walton Tully's master production.

Guy Bates Post's supreme triumph.

A strong supporting cast including Virginia Brown Faire, Patsy Ruth Miller, Nigel de Bruliere, Rose Dione and Boris Karloff.

Directed by JAMES YOUNG.

The Dreaded Monster

Much is being written and said these days about the reappearance of the dreaded monster, "Booking Combinations."

The accepted editorial idea is one of fear, combined with a desire to sound clarion notes of warning to Mr. Exhibitor.

"Don't step too fast with your booking combinations," the theatre owner is told, "else group action by exhibitors will bring about group action by distributors, exhibitor trust will be met with distributor trust," and so on.

A year ago, two years ago, three and more we wrought ourselves into similar frenzies of trepidation over the possibilities of centralized booking.

A year from now we will do the same, and two and three years hence. Booking groups grow up all around us in the years that intervene.

But the ones that operate successfully don't seem to have any of the aspects of the monster of our dreams and we fail to recognize them. The ones that bear resemblance to the monster fail and pass out; so we are always left to fear nothing but the future.

The present recurrence of talk about co-operative booking combinations has been brought about by the formation of the A. B. C. in New York.

This group was not born of any of the impulses creating the booking combination of our imaginations. It is not dedicated to the lowering of rentals, to war on any particular producer, or any of our usual battle cries.

The A. B. C. was formed to present a buying power able to enter into competition with the big circuits. A matter in which distributors are as vitally interested as exhibitors. For the circuits have not been any too gentle taskmasters in handling the distributors.

Such competitive bidding against the circuits on the more desirable screen attractions was an inevitable economic necessity. It is inevitable in any other city zoned and controlled as New York is.

But it is a long, long step from this sort of group booking to the operations of the Stanley controlled Philadelphia territory.

A step that is never likely to be taken, or, if taken, to be held successfully for any length of time.

There was only one Stanley Mastbaum—just as there is only one Ford, one Schwab, one Rockefeller.

Over the course of a year the productions that stand above argument are few and far between, and for the great average of their attractions the day has passed when exhibitors will allow any man or committee to book their theatres willy-nilly.

The average theatre man is as much "Shopper" as "Showman," and he has developed in experience and opinions past the stage where he will retire from active connection with his theatre further than janitor-service.

Attempts will frequently be made—for the theory of the booking combination is wonderfully attractive—but the attempts will as frequently fail.

For the very evils that editorial writers foresee in the formation of the wrong sort of booking combinations are the evils that speedily wreak their doom.

These facts being true, the only possibility remains in the type of booking office that can offer exhibitors the product of many producers and at a variety of prices.

And this also is true—such combinations can never come about without the active co-operation and interest of a number of manufacturers.

Not an impossibility.

But something that throws the discussion into an entirely new phase.

There would be no Stanley in Philadelphia had it had not been at different times to the interests of various producers to accept Stanley co-operation.

And that—we are speaking now of its application to future possibilities—is another story.

Still a Big Topic

Sunday Opening in Ohio Brings Legal Activity

The Sunday closing question is again the main topic in film circles throughout Ohio, and the battle of tongues and legalities is again on in full blast.

Following a first-page story in a Cleveland paper inspired by Sam Bullock, of the Theatre Owners' Association, to the effect that a great effort would be made to get the theatres in small towns opened for Sunday trade, even if it was necessary to attempt to have the law amended, two Cleveland lawyers went to Cleveland Heights, where a theatre slumbers on Sunday, and had a dozen merchants arrested for keeping their stores open on Sundays.

Immediately the officials of the suburb denounced the movie men, claiming they inspired the prosecutions, and defending the store-keepers. But the fact is the motion picture men had nothing to do with it, but the announcement of Bullock's has stirred up the opposition.

Meantime the lawyers say they will continue to have merchants arrested, even going into other suburbs, where theatres are open on Sundays, and causing the arrest of their managers. However, the theatre owners are not much concerned because popular opinion in the suburbs favors Sunday movies.

The Sunday movement won a distinct victory in Findlay, when a jury in Mayor Rodabaugh's court acquitted E. B. Gilmore, movie owner, of a charge of violating the Sunday closing laws. The verdict was returned after three hours' deliberation. One woman, Mrs. M. C. Dye, was a member of the jury, and acted as foreman.

Since 1917 the moving picture theatres in Findlay have been closed on Sundays. Two years ago an effort was made to reopen them, but the owners were arrested and convicted.

Arguments on Rates

Final arguments in favor of interchangeable mileage, for the benefit of men in the motion picture and other industries whose duties require them to travel considerably, were heard before the Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C., on November 15, and a decision is expected within a few days as to whether the provisions of the bill recently enacted by Congress shall be put into effect. The law called upon the commission to hold hearings for the purpose of determining whether it was feasible to order the railroads throughout the country to issue interchangeable mileage or scrip coupon tickets, good on any road, at a reduced rate of fare.

Exports Are Big

Figures for September Show Foreign Countries Buying Heavily

Motion picture film exported from the United States during the month of September included according to a report just issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, 11,182,258 linear feet of positive films, valued at $462,914; 3,009,732 feet of film sensitized, but not exposed, valued at $86,591, and 467,932 feet of exposed negatives, valued at $48,702.

Our best market for positives was Australia, taking 1,671,985 feet, valued at $68,539, with Argentina second at 1,293,889 feet, with a value of $57,116 and Canada third with 1,287,756 feet, valued at $70,364. Japan led in the importation of unexposed sensitized film, taking 1,353,140 feet, with a value of $38,578, while England was a close second with 1,182,463 feet, valued at $33,161.

Our greatest exports of exposed negatives went to England, that country taking 242,803 feet, valued at $32,715, while Cuba was second with 61,288 feet, valued at $4,180, and France third, with 54,956 feet, with a value of $6,857.

To Hold Dinner

Allied Laboratories Association to Celebrate Second Year.

The Allied Film Laboratories Association is planning to hold its second annual dinner at Delmonico's on Thursday evening, December 7.

Will Hays, Courtland Smith, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, have been invited. The dinner will also be attended by not only the executives of the various laboratories, but representatives of raw stock manufacturers and others.

The dinner will be in celebration of the second successful year of the Allied Film Laboratories Association.

Bromhead Is Host

To Film Men Prior to Sailing for England

Col. A. C. Bromhead, of the Gaumont Company, England, was the host last Friday at a Hotel Astor luncheon to film men prior to his sailing for home. The affair brought forth the interesting announcement that Gaumont planned the immediate making of Hall Caine's "The Quality of Mercy," with an American director, Tom Terriss, and an American star yet to be named.

The luncheon, which was handled by Sidney Garret, saw a gathering of important film men. Jos. Dannenberg, of The Film Daily, acted as toastmaster, and the speakers included Harry Warner, Elmer Pearson, M. Finkelstein, James Grainger, Fred Warren, and L. W. Boynton.

Considerable advice on the making of pictures filled the air, but the consensus of opinion seemed to come back to the old familiar line, that "a real good picture, on a popular theme, properly exploited, can be made anywhere and be successful everywhere."

Lubitsch Accepted

Ernst Lubitsch will direct Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." That became known this week when Miss Pickford received a cable from Berlin in response to her cabled invitation.

Famous Players Is Sued by Vitagraph

Violation of Anti-Trust Law Alleged; $6,000,000 Asked for ALLEGING restraint of trade by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Vitagraph Company of America, Inc., has begun suit against the former organization for $6,000,000. This amount Vitagraph alleges is due it under the terms of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law which allows a complainant to collect triple damages if it proves its case in a matter of this kind.

Cravath, Henderson and Leffingwell, attorneys for the defendant, when asked for a statement, said they had nothing to say regarding the case. Elek J. Ludvigh, treasurer and general counsel for the defendant, stated he had nothing to say at this time, but said he may make a statement later.

That the suit constitutes a difference between two members of the Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., but is not regarded as a matter pertaining to the Association, was the statement given out at the office of Will H. Hays, by Courtland Smith, secretary of the Association. The following was received from the Vitagraph Company:

The Vitagraph Company of America, Inc., organized in 1896, is said to be the oldest motion picture company in the world. The bill of complaint was filed in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, by William Marston Seabury, of 36 West Forty-fourth street, attorney for the plaintiff. Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Jules E. Brulatour, Frank A. Garbutt, Cecil B. DeMille, Daniel Frohman, Emil E. Shauer, Eugene Zukor, Sidney R. Kent, William H. English, Frederick G. Lee, Maurice Wertheim, Gayer G. Dominick, Felix E. Kahn and Theodore F. Whitmarsh are named with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as defendants.

The suit is based upon the claim that in 1919 the defendants conspired together to control a large number of "first run" theatres of the country for the purpose of restraining trade and suppressing competition among the producers and distributors of motion pictures by booking all the pictures produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its subsidiaries in all the first run theatres owned, controlled or influenced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and by excluding the pictures of the plaintiff and of other producers and distributors from such theatres.

The complaint contains much that is of great interest to the trade in general, especially at this time, and presents to the courts, for the first time, the legal status of the first run theatres, the legality of several of the booking circuits, particularly those in New England, in Philadelphia, in the South and in the Atlantic and Gulf states, and demands an inquiry into the extent to which producers and distributors of motion pictures may invade the field of the exhibitors.

Apart from the formal allegations of the complaint a full description of the three main branches of the industry is given, showing in detail the part played in the industry by the producers, distributors and exhibitors. The complaint asserts that there are about 38 key centers in the country in each of which there are now first-run theatres, and it is alleged in the complaint that the value of the exhibition in the first-run theatres of the country represents at least 50 per cent. of the American-Canadian gross receipts of any picture exhibited in such theatres and in other theatres of the United States and Canada; not that the 50 per cent. comes from the first-run theatres themselves, but that the percentage is due to the popularity and prestige the picture had obtained through its showing in the first-run theatre.

In confirmation of this estimate the plaintiff claims that the exhibition of the picture in anyone of the first-class, first-run theatres on Broadway, New York City, is essential to the proper exploitation of the picture throughout the country, and that the value of the Broadway showing is estimated at 10 per cent. of the American and Canadian gross receipts, while the value of the first run in each exchange or key city is estimated at about 40 per cent. of the gross derived from the particular territory served from the exchange city in question.

The complaint describes the business of the plaintiff, showing that since 1896 it and its predecessors of the same name have been engaged in the production and directly and indirectly, in the distribution of motion pictures throughout the world, and that during that time it has built up a great business which uniformly since 1909 showed a large profit each year, sometimes exceeding $1,000,000.

A description of the business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is also given and it alleges that as a result of the various consolidations and mergers of several producers and distributors of motion pictures within the three short years of its organization in 1916, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has attained a position in the first rank among the producers of motion pictures, here and elsewhere throughout the world. The substance of the charge against the defendants is that about the year 1919 they combined and conspired to monopolize a large number of first-class, first-run and other desirable motion picture theatres in the City of New York and elsewhere throughout the United States and Canada for the purpose of enabling them to dominate and influence the buying policy of all of those theatres and to enable the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to exclude the motion pictures of the plaintiff and insofar as possible the pictures of other competing producers and distributors therefrom.

The complaint alleges on information and belief that the defendant corporation, by combinations and agreements with Alfred S. Black and with the Black New England Theatres, Inc., obtained complete control over about 40 theatres in New England, and through one or more contracts with William Gray, who owns and controls about 20 other theatres in the same territory, Famous Players were able to book all, or almost all of the pictures produced by the Famous Players and its subsidiaries, to the exclusion of all, or almost all of the plaintiff's pictures and the pictures of a number of other producers from those theatres. It alleges that through one or more contracts with Jules Mastbaum, the Stanley Company of America and the Stanley Booking Corporation, the Famous Players exchanged $2,000,000 and 15,000 shares of the common stock of Famous Players for a large interest in these two important companies, one of which is said to own or control more than 57 theatres and has an exclusive booking contract with 92 other theatres, making a total of 149 theatres, all in the Philadelphia territory, and including the control of the entire eight first-run theatres in Philadelphia, and that as a result of these contracts all, or almost all of the pictures made by Vitagraph and a large number of other producers are excluded from this territory. It is further alleged in the complaint that as a result of similar contracts with Stephen A. Lynch and the Stephen A. Lynch Enterprises, Famous Players caused a corporation known as the Southern Enterprises, Inc., to be formed under the laws of the State of Delaware, which corporation is owned and controlled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and which owns, controls and operates a large number of desirable motion picture theatres, upwards of 140 in number, throughout the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma, and that by reason of a contract with one or more stockholders of the Saenger Amusement Company the defendants directly or indirectly acquired and now control about 40 per cent. of the stock of the Saenger Amusement Company which, in turn, owns and controls more than 25 motion picture theatres, some of them first-class, first-run theatres, and in addition has the exclusive right to book pictures in more than 68 theatres all within and throughout the states of Louisiana, Eastern Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Missouri, Alabama and Western Florida, and that by reason of these contracts and arrangements most or all of the pictures of the plaintiff have been excluded with negligible exceptions from all, or almost all of the theatres.

Complaint is also made that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation sells its entire product, whenever possible, under closed booking contracts, which require exhibitors to take all of their pictures or none, and that whenever possible these contracts are made with the franchise holders of the Associated First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and the effect of such contracts is to monopolize all or almost all of the exhibition time of a large number of exhibitors to the exclusion from such theatres of a large number of pictures of other producers.

The Realart Corporation is described as a "bogus" independent and it is alleged that this company was founded and is owned by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and was operated separately by it to make exhibitors who did not wish to buy the product of the Famous Players to take the Real-art pictures in the belief that the companies were entirely separate and distinct while in reality the Famous Players actually owned and controlled the Realart company.

The complaint offers as further evidence of further attempts of defendants to interfere with the plaintiff's business the defendants' interference with the plaintiff's stars and other employes by offering fictitious inducements, chiefly by promise of increase in salary and additional opportunities for publicity and exploitation, to leave the employ of Vitagraph and enter the employ of the defendant company. It cites among other instances, the case of Alice Joyce, one of Vitagraph's best known stars. The complaint alleges that in the year 1920 the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation caused public announcement in London that thereafter the defendant company would market in London and throughout the world pictures in which Alice Joyce was starred or featured when in reality Miss Joyce was under a contract with Vitagraph which had until June, 1922, to run, and of which contract the defendants were well aware. As further evidence of unfair competition the complaint embodies a letter written by S. R. Kent, as salesmanager for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under date of January 31, 1922, and addressed to the corporation's branch manager, M. S. Wilson, at Denver, Col., in which he advised, in part, to "kick out every Vitagraph account you can find, irrespective of the terms you may have to make, just so you cancel the contract and get them out of the way. As long as they insist on a fight let's give it to them." These instructions, the complaint alleges, were further carried to the various salesmen in a letter signed by Mr. Wilson which reads in part:

"Please do not permit anyone to read this communication and work quietly on this subject, but get results. You will note that he lets down the barriers regardless of the terms which you might have to make, but you must have convincing proof that you will be able to kick Vitagraph out."

The complaint states that these instructions and letters were extensively circulated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and that almost immediately after this attack Vitagraph's American and Canadian gross income showed a loss of more than $22,000 a week, and that this loss continued for upwards of 40 weeks. This appears to be the basis of the plaintiff's claim for over $800,000.

The complaint charges that the effect of the acts complained of has been to curtail and discourage the production of first-class motion pictures since it is said that such pictures produced by others than the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are denied exhibition in a large number of first-run houses controlled by the Famous Players, and the inference is that no one would be willing to spend the large sums of money involved in the production of this type of pictures unless they are assured of a first-run showing.

It is claimed that the acts of the defendants enhanced the film rentals and prices of exhibition rights, and that trade is unreasonably restricted and competition among distributors and producers suppressed, and these contentions conclude with the statement that the defendants have used arbitrarily and oppressively the power obtained by the Famous Players "to force out of business its weaker competitors among the small and independent exhibitors of the country, many of whom for years have been in the motion picture business, supporting themselves and their families from the small profits realized therefrom, and to coerce such exhibitors into a sale to or a union with the defendants. * * * "

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, said on the evening of November 28:

"In filing suit against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation I want the industry to know and understand that the suit represents much more than a mere personal controversy between two producers and distributors of motion pictures. As I see it, this suit is not only the case of Vitagraph against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, but it is the suit of every independent producer and every independent exhibitor in the country.

"For some years past certain tendencies in the industry have been very marked and pronounced. Some thoughtful producers have viewed with alarm the entrance of certain producers into the exhibition field and we are all aware of the abuses directed largely against the small exhibitor which this kind of thing encourages and promotes. When producers and distributors invade the field of the exhibitor a very serious situation arises, which materially injures not only the exhibitors of the country but the independent producers as well. It is to check this rapidly growing evil in the industry and to recover the losses occasioned by the acts of the defendants that I have instituted the present suit."

William Marston Seabury, attorney for the plaintiff, in commenting on the suit brought on behalf of Vitagraph, said:

"Perhaps one of the most significant allegations in the whole complaint and the one of greatest interest and importance to the trade in general is that in many places throughout the country and indeed, wherever possible, Famous Players makes a booking contract for the exhibition of all or almost all of the pictures with the franchise holders of the Associated First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and that the effect of such contracts is to exclude from those theatres operated by the First National franchise holders all, or almost all of the pictures made by producers other than the First National and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"This statement becomes all the more significant in conjunction with the statement in the complaint that only about one-third of the 14,000 or more theatres of the country are open continuously for six days in each week: that more than 7,300 theatres have no opposition from any other theatre in close proximity to them, that there are only about 200 first-class, first-run theatres in the country, and that these are so situated as to locality in a large number of the key cities that in many instances only one or two of such first-class, first-run theatres are conducted in the same key city, and that by producing and controlling from 80 to 104 pictures a year suitable for exhibition in first-class, first-run theatres, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is able to, and does, by the means indicated, consume the whole or almost all the available time of more than one-half of the first-run theatres, and by so doing the pictures produced by a large number of producers are excluded from such theatres, all of which is said to restrain trade, lessen competition among the producers and enhances the rental and purchase price of the exhibition rights in first-run pictures.

"It is, of course, obvious to those familiar with the industry that no one concern enjoys a direct monopoly of 14,000 theatres in the United States. Famous Players is alleged to be the largest theatre owner in the world and yet it is only charged with the ownership of 400 theatres. This number is only about 3 per cent. of the total number of theatres. But it is equally obvious that ownership of a large number of theatres in comparison to 14.000 is not essential to a substantial control of the industry. If a producer having 80 to 104 pictures suitable for exhibition in first-run theatres buys some such theatres outright, acquires interests in one or more circuits controlling more than 442 such theatres and then obtains control over some others by closed booking contracts for its entire product, and then succeeds in selling its entire output to many of those theatres already under contract to take the entire output controlled by the Associated First National Exhibitors' circuit—such producer has absorbed and appropriated for itself a large part of the market which belongs to the producers in the industry as a whole. The suit should prove of substantial benefit to the industry and to every independent producer and exhibitor."

Obtains Control

Allens Said to Have Taken Over More Theatres

Announcement has been made at Ottawa, Ont., that Bernard Allen, of Toronto, father of Jule and J. J. Allen, who have been identified with Allen Theatres, Ltd., and other companies of the moving picture business in Canada, has obtained control of a circuit of five important moving picture theatres in Eastern Ontario, the deal for this group of houses having been completed November 21. It is understood that Bernard Allen was acting for several of the Allens who are interested in the organization of a new chain of moving picture theatres in Ontario which is distinct from other Allen activities.

The theatres procured are located at Renfrew, Pembroke, Smith's Falls, Almonte and Arnprior, these having been owned and operated by O'Brien, Ltd., of Renfrew.

The O'Brien theatres are equipped for the presentation of dramatic road shows in addition to moving picture attractions and they have been operated in the past on a mixed policy. These houses are being added to the group of moving picture theatres in Toronto and Western Ontario which is being organized by several of the Allens, it is intimated. The new chain is distinct from Allen Theatres, Ltd., which made an assignment not long ago, creditors of this company having granted an extension of time for the satisfying of claims, the many theatres continuing to operate under a trusteeship.

Technicolor Process May Revolutionize Industry

Invention Forecasts Important Changes in Production

By ROGER FERRI

BOSTON—(Special).—This article is being written in the city that prides itself with being the home of culture. Incidentally, local newspapers are advancing another claim, namely, that of having furnished the inventor of what gives every evidence of developing into a flawless color process for injecting human life into American pictures. And, after all, this claim is a logical one, for Professor Daniel F. Comstock of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a gentleman who has accomplished wonders for the chemical world, who occupies a prominent place in "Who's Who In America," is the inventor of the Technicolor process by which Metro's beautiful masterpiece, "The Toll of The Sea," was made.

Just before hopping the Merchants' Limited for the city of colleges, a representative of MOVING PICTURE WORLD had the pleasure of meeting Prof. Comstock, his co-worker, Herbert D. Kalmus, also of M. I. T., and William Travers Jerome, who is financially interested in the corporation responsible for this latest experimental contribution to the motion picture industry. It had been the intention of the writer to record our observations while en route, but an acquaintance, an ex-graduate of M. I. T., kept us so busy answering a lot of questions about this new process that before we realized it our rattler had chugged its way into the busy South Station.

Nevertheless, it was just as well that we didn't write our report on the train, for had we done so we would have lacked the inspiration we got here following talks with men who have predicted the perfection of the process on which Professors Comstock and Kalmus are said to have labored industriously for seven whole years, what hardships they encountered in securing the necessary financial backing, how William Travers Jerome, completely "sold on the process," interested Joe and Nick Schenck and others in the project, and how after the Schenck brothers agreed to help finance the proposition, producers galore sought to color their pictures via the same process.

Thanks to Jack Meader, publicity and advertising genius of Metro, and Nils Granlund, Marcus Loew's hustling propagandist - showman - publicist, we had the pleasure, together with other trade press writers, of meeting Prof. Comstock at the Belmont Hotel on Monday noon, Nov. 27. The inventor was as enthusiastic as a child. Never had we expected that a lesson in chemical analysis would interest us as the professor's talk did for two and a half hours. We had ignored chemistry in our bygone days and we accepted Editor-in-chief Bob Welsh's instructions with no little fear, anticipating an hour or so of dull discussion about something which at the time did not interest us to any great extent. We had not seen the picture, "The Toll of The Sea," because several days prior we slept through another so-called color picture. At first we expected to be entertained, but soon our attention drifted from the story and process, too, and in a short time we were abruptly awakened and made acquainted with the fact that we happened to be in a temple of amusement and not a bedroom. That experience weighed in our mind as we accepted the invitation.

But after we had listened to Prof. Comstock and asked him a hundred and one questions we had never dreamed of before, we found ourselves going into the Rialto Theatre, immediately after the interview, to see the picture, which bore out every contention made by the inventor and lived up to the glorious notices the production received at the hands of hard-boiled New York newspaper critics.

And what the inventor had to say concerns the industry in general, for with the public already accepting the Technicolor process as the most perfect and entertainingly human of any, there will come a radical change in production insofar as it pertains to studio equipment and makeup. The process is a two-color proposition, according to the professor. The chemical process differs in many respects to that utilized by Prizma or in the coloring of the J. Stuart Blackton production, "The Glorious Adventure." The colors are admittedly natural with the only defect represented in the green member, but this color, according to the inventor, has also been perfected, so that the tendency toward the brown will be totally eliminated.

No present studio cosmetics can be used in artificially reproducing the natural on the screen. On the contrary, under the new Technicolor process, the photography is an identical reproduction of the genuine article and no makeup at all is used in filming color pictures under the new process. Neither are Cooper-Hewitt lights required. Both cosmetics and lights are eliminated. There is a slight, but, nevertheless, radical alteration in other studio equipment now being used.

An analytic explanation of the process is the job of a chemical analyst, not an ordinary observer—and that was our status when we listened to and asked questions of the professor. That the Technicolor process, however, has come to stay is a fact, for it is accepted as such by such experts in motion picture production and photography as Adolph Zukor, Joe and Nick Schenck, Jesse Lasky, the De Mille brothers, Rex Ingram and many others too numerous to mention. True, even the great D. W. Griffith has been so impressed by the naturalness of the process and its tendency to increase dramatic value rather than detract from it as has been the case of other processes, that, it is said, he is seeking to make "Faust" with Technicolor process.

That the public accepts Technicolor as a notable contribution to the cinematographic art is evidenced by expressions published by the New York newspapers. Reviewers devoted columns to the discussion of the process, paying strict attention to its dramatic value. After viewing "The Toll of The Sea," this writer cannot help but join many others in believing that the day of the absolutely natural picture is here. As one New York reviewer so aptly put it, the characters in this picture, based on a story by Frances Marion, directed by Chester M. Frank and photographed by J. A. Ball, are so human that if one "were to shout 'fire' you expect the players to rush off the screen, up the aisles and out onto the street." That's how good this Technicolor process really is.

When Nick Schenck said the day would soon be here when black and white pictures would be ancient history, in the vernacular of the street, he said a good, healthy mouthful, for there has been no single contribution to the screen so notably elevating and remarkable as this Technicolor process—and Metro can well feel proud of the fact that it released the first color production the public in general has agreed is the genuine article and increases the dramatic value of a production.

"Public Only Censor Needed," Gilbert Parker's View

IT is the public that must be the censors in all productions in art," Sir Gilbert Parker asserted to interviewers in St. Louis a few days ago. "They alone determine," he said, "whether a play is of high moral tone or a degrading moral nature. Theirs is the final responsibility for cheapness, gaudiness and poor art. Don't blame the poor producer and author. Whether it be in the movies or on the legitimate stage; their one ambition and aim is to satisfy the public, so if immoral plays and cheap productions are successful, that's the kind of productions the public wants.

"But there is no need for official censors," he averred. "The public in the last analysis are the best censors. The trend in the moving picture industry is upward. Every day I see indications of the future greatness to which the art is destined. The artistic appetite of the public is becoming more exacting."

To Sir Gilbert that was a healthy sign. It portends better things for the moving picture industry, for, he said, that desire for betterment of their pictures on the part of the movie fans would eventually lead the industry to the summit approximating perfection.

Pittsburgh Meeting

Exhibitors Reiterate Demands for Lower Rentals

A demand for a revision of film rentals downward, a rising vote of confidence in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and approbation of the course pursued by President Sydney S. Cohen and other national officers, were among the outstanding features of the big convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, which was held at the General Forbes Hotel, Pittsburgh, Friday afternoon, November 24.

About 120 theatre owners were present, the theatres in nearly every city and town in the territory being represented. A luncheon featured the preliminary phases of the meeting. President Jerome Casper, of Pittsburgh, introduced Max Englesburg as the chairman of the session. The first speaker was National President Cohen. He was enthusiastically received and gave an extended review of the activities of the M. P. T. O. A.

National Executive Board Member D. A. Harris declared national organization most essential to giving the theatre owner complete protection. Henry Guading charged that exhibitor values of pictures are being boosted while distributors are telling theatre owners that percentages are being reduced. National Executive Board Member Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh, urged complete support of the M. P. T. O. A. M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the National Public Service Committee, congratulated the theatre owners on the election of John P. Harris to the Senate.

Short addresses were also delivered by National Director I. W. McMahon, of Cincinnati, and State President Martin G. Smith, of Toledo. President Jerome Casper made a pleasing concluding address. A rising vote of approval of the national organization and its officials was then given and a telegram of felicitation ordered sent to Dr. Francis Holley, who is now convalescing from the effects of an operation in St. Mary's Hospital, Rochester, Minn.

Against Sex Films

Catholic Organization, in Convention, Says They Mislead Children

Motion pictures, as a whole, are a desirable and healthful influence, but the so-called triangle film and similar pictures are a detriment to society and must go.

This was the sentiment expressed by the 2,000 delegates to the convention of the Holy Name Society, a Catholic organization of Wisconsin, at its convention in Milwaukee, November 14, at which a campaign for cleaner films was launched.

With sex films as its chief target, the convention adopted a resolution urging stricter censorship and pledging each delegate individually to be responsible for carrying out a program for more wholesome pictures in his community.

"The so-called triangle photoplay preaches a false philosophy," said Francis J. Zimmerman, president of the organization. "Invariably, such triangles are presented on the screen in a somewhat favorable light. Children, especially, are misled as a result. It is up to everyone of us to voice our protests against such pictures."

Tom Patten Joins Hays

Former New York Postmaster to be Western Representative

Thomas G. Patten, postmaster of New York City from 1917 to 1921, and who was in Congress as a representative of the city for six years previous to that, has joined the staff of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and departed for Hollywood. He will remain in the cinema capital indefinitely as Mr. Hays' western representative. Accompanying Mr. Patten was Joseph J. O'Neil, assistant to Mr. Hays. He will remain in the West until some time early in the new year.

Part of Mr. Patten's work, it is understood, will be to maintain the friendly spirit of co-operation between Mr. Hays and the actual makers of pictures which Mr. Hays established during his visit last summer, when he told them that he was not a "Czar," but a "partner with everybody" in the industry.

To Seek Repeal of Daylight Saving

Motion picture theatre exhibitors in New York state will be interested in an announcement to the effect that among the first bills to be introduced in the State Legislature at Albany after it convenes on January 1, will be one seeking to repeal the present daylight saving law. The bill will be introduced by Senator J. Griswold Webb, of Dutchess county.

Public's Mood Shown

A notable indication of public feeling as opposed to over much moving picture legislation, in spite of reformers' activities, is seen in the fact that all members of Congress active in motion picture legislation either failed to run again or were defeated.

Congressman Appleby, of New Jersey, author of a Federal Censorship bill, was defeated. Representative Bland, of Indiana, also author of a Censorship bill, was likewise not returned.

Senator Myers, of Montana, announced that he would not run again; he sought an investigation of the industry, lengthy hearings were held, but no reformer managed to tell how to remedy the "evils" they claimed to be existent.

So Congress starts with a clean slate and the outlook is at least hopeful from the successors of the former adversaries of the industry.

Selznick's Costliest Picture to Be "Rupert of Hentzau"

SELDOM before in the history of motion pictures have there been such pretentious preparations and such a lavish expenditure of money for the production of a picture as have been made by the Selznick Pictures Corporation for the picturization of Sir Anthony Hope's world-known novel, "Rupert of Hentzau," a companion novel to "The Prisoner of Zenda,' which Rex Ingram has already produced with fine success for Metro.

It seems a certain fact that this picture will be a winner for Selznick and for exhibitors who realize its wonderful possibilities for exploitation and give it adequate presentation. In the first place, "Rupert of Hentzau" possesses wonderful motion picture material—atmosphere, plot and characterization; in the second place, Selznick Pictures Corporation is sparing no expense in its picturization. Various sums have been mentioned along the Rialto as the probable cost, but when Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, is approached on the subject, he only shakes his head and says: "It wouldn't do to tell, but I will say that 'Rupert of Hentzau' will be our costliest picture and one of the most expensive ever made."

Evidence of the large sums of money being spent is apparent when the remarkable cast is considered. "Anatole" has a remarkable cast, but Paramount did not go outside its own organization; Myron Selznick, in the effort to cast the picture as perfectly as humanly possible, scoured the country for players, and finding those he wanted, spared no effort or expense in signing them to contracts.

Fortunately for Selznick, Elaine Hammerstein is within the Selznick fold and therefore was unquestionably available to play the part of Queen Flavia. But great difficulties were overcome in obtaining the other players. Selznick persistence, the liberal expenditure of money and the desire of the players themselves to appear in the picture, spelled ultimate success.

Not one of the cast needs an introduction to any exhibitor or close student of the motion pictures in the country. All will rejoice to hear that to Bert Lytell has been assigned the role of Rudolf Rassendyl and King Rudolf of Ruritania. He is the ideal character for that heroic part. Lew Cody is well cast as Rupert of Hentzau and Hobart Bosworth will make a splendid Colonel Sapt.

There are other names in the cast that conjure the imagination. Bryant Washburn, a star in his own right, will play Fritz von Tarlenheim; Margery Daw will be Rosa Holf, Irving Cummings will be Berenstein, Adolphe Jean Menjou will appear as Rischenheim. For the parts of Bauer and Simon the Woodsman, Mitchell Lewis and Elmo Lincoln have been signed. There are two more important parts open.

The careful preparatory work of Selznick Pictures Corporation is also evident in the staff to which is entrusted the responsibility of making the picture. This was chosen by Myron Selznick after weeks of deliberation and represents, he believes, the best talent procurable.

Victor Heerman will direct. His skill has showed in previous pictures, such as "The River's End," "My Boy," "Love Is An Awful Thing," "The Chicken in the Case" and "The Poor Simp." Clem MacWilliams is chief cameraman. Edward J. Montagne is responsible for the scenario. Baron Von Bricken, from the King of Saxony's staff, will supervise the court scenes. Walter Israel, who supervised Norma Talmadge's costumes for a year and is otherwise widely known, will have charge of the costumes. Stephen Gosson is art director. His work will be remembered in "Oliver Twist," "East Is West," "The Eternal Flame" and other successes.

Selznick hopes to release the super feature in February. Its length has not been determined and will not be until the camera work is completed. Then the footage will be determined by merit.

"This marks our breaking away from all restrictions and shows what we will do in the future," says Lewis J. Selznick. "It represents the epitome of effort on our part. The cast alone shows that. It has never been equalled."

THE PERSONALITIES BEHIND "RUPERT OF HENTZAU," SELZNICK'S GREATEST PICTURE, NOW IN THE MAKING

The Mere Mention of the Names of the Two Directing Geniuses and the Presence of These Players in the Cast, One of the Most Remarkable Ever Assembled, Seem to Spell Success for the Picturization of Sir Anthony Hope's Great Novel.

Europe Likes Yankee Films; Berlin Tax Strike On

Theatres Closed in Protest Against Burdensome Taxes

Berlin, Sept. 20, 1922.

WHILE the amazing popularity of American films all over Euope has dismayed European producers, the greatest city in Germany has been without its motion pictures.

It does not look as if this strange famine is going to last much longer for if ever the public necessity of motion pictures has been demonstrated it has been done here. Whoever may hereafter have occasion to lecture on the importance of the motion picture as an absolute necessity of modern life will have to refer to the great strike of the Berlin motion picture threatre owners against a persistent attempt to complicate this business by way of over-taxation.

The motion picture theatre owner, not only in Berlin, but throughout the German Republic, has heretofore been the humblest kind of a worm. He let himself be taxed by city, county, State and Federal government, until at last the worm turned.

I spoke to one of the more prominent owners, whose theatre compares favorably with the best in the city, and he showed me his books—a perfect library, for the German government compels the keeping of books on every conceivable subject—from these it appeared most conclusively that the theatre owner in question had for at least five months prior to his shutting up shop conducted a losing business: no matter what his receipts were, he was always a loser at the end of the day.

It dawned upon him and his fellows that they would be making money by closing. They all suspended operations.

The political bodies at first affected to regard the strike with contemptuous indifference, predicting that it would end as quickly as it had begun. Right here they made the first great mistake. No city in the world needs motion pictures more badly than Berlin, for nowhere, not even in the Balkan States, are there more restless and unruly elements.

Motion picture theatres had always been a law-conserving influence, keeping the youth of Berlin sufficiently diverted to keep them harmless.

Only yesterday the gangsters who had terrorized the storekeepers by smashing show windows and plundering them, resumed their activities, to the great terror of the police. The loudest protest against the closing of the theatres came from the middle class section of the city.

The public all around seemed to sympathize with the theatre owner who had flatly refused to raise prices of admission to the fancy heights suggested by local and State legislators.

The result was that the authorities entered into negotiations with the striking theatre owners. The theatres will in all probability be showing as usual soon. I understand the owners are willing to give up 60% of their gross to the government. How they can pay expenses and figure a profit out of the remaining 40% is more than I can tell.

While our own country has raised no barriers against the foreign producer and our manufacturers feel themselves sufficiently protected by the quality of their films, the picture makers of France and Germany are seeking shelter behind their governments, utterly afraid of American competition.

In Italy the producers are likewise in fear of American competition but they are willing to meet it in more manly and honest fashion. The Italians frankly admit that America has distanced them in the matter of quality in films and despite their depreciated currency they are importing American aid, as has been fully described in previous letters.

I can say from personal knowledge based on close observation, that if France and Germany are ever opened freely to American productions most of the native producers will either go out of business or cut down their output to a minimum. It is the same story in Paris, in Rome, in Berlin, in Prague, in Vienna—nothing draws the crowds like an American film.

The few Yankee films that are allowed to enter France and Germany carry everything before them, breaking all records for attendances. Such features, for instance, as "Daddy Longlegs," and "Forbidden Fruit," have simply hypnotized the German public and evoked unstinted praise from the big dailies. This means something here because as a rule the German press declines to take motion pictures seriously, and is most severe in its criticism.

It is a fact stated in one of the journals of Berlin that audiences watch the domestic stuff with sad indifference, but come to life instantly under the influence of one of our good dramas or comedies. All this has resulted in a very curious effort on the part of the German producers to make "American" films. Germany just now can pay only very small amounts for our films when figured in dollars, but the theatre owners enthusiastically prefer them to the native product. Hence the effort to suply a substitute for the imported picture.

As I look over the programs of the principal motion picture theatres in central Europe from Berlin to Budapest and beyond, I am astonished at the use of the word "American." I read of "American comedies," full of "side splitting humor," of "American society dramas," revealing the "doings of high life in the New World," of "thrilling American serials" full of long-lived villains, hardy heroines, and bad luck heroes. There is now a school of German producers, who frankly specialize in this sort of fraud. It is the most awkward, the most transparent and the most amusing of frauds.

Even the Germans, whose perception of the psychology of other nations is extremely poor, refuse to be taken in by these "imitations," and do not patronize them. I made it a point to look at some of them and they surely "were to laugh."

The bigger producing concerns do not indulge in the manufacture of such wretched substitutes, but as I pointed out in another letter they are full of hopes, that they will find an outlet for their wares in the States.

I had an illuminating interview with the head of one of these concerns, a man of more than fair intelligence but full of ignorance about conditions across the water. As his state of mind is typical and as it reveals the futility of the German hopes, I set down this man's views briefly and in substance.

"We believe," he said, "that your American public is interested in German films, because they are German. To adjust our scenario to American tastes would, in my judgment, be foolish. Your people want to see German life as it is lived in Germany. That will give your program the real international variety. As to the photography and technique we have nothing to learn."

Only experience will help this man and feeling that advice cannot compete with experience as a teacher, I abstained from comment.

How "The Dangerous Age" Swept Paterson

Here—for the First Time in a Trade Paper— Is Given the A. B. C. of a Local Campaign

By ROGER FERRI

FIRST NATIONAL has communicated to every exhibitor in this country the information that its 1922-23 lineup of productions are the box office variety. And it intends substantiating and proving that statement beyond any shadow of doubt by telling the whole universe that it has entertaining features. And neither time, money nor effort is being stinted in merely telling this hard-boiled universe, but it is also aiming to bring everybody in it to the box office.

Which leads this writer to the task of completing the most pleasant assignment we have had in a long, long time, namely, that of trailing the Paterson, N. J., exploitation campaign of "The Dangerous Age."

Lining up the best possible products and telling exhibitors about it was only thirty-three and one-third per cent. of First National's program. The second third of the campaign was the alliance with Louis Mayer, who assigned Harry Reichenbach to spare nothing in giving theatre owners every co-operation possible. The remaining third constituted the successful consummation of the superlatively original exploitation of this money-making showman and tieing it up in such a fashion that sight of the exploited product would escape neither man, woman nor child and incidentally prove its mettle in good old dollars and cents at the telltale box office.

Unannounced he and his Assistant, Perry Charles, invaded this home of the silk industry and overnight securely took possession of it—City Hall, Mayor, citizens and newspapers.

There was not a single man, woman or child who did not know that Monday, Nov. 21, marked the world premier showing of Louis Mayer's latest John M. Stahl production, "The Dangerous Age," starring Lewis Stone. Every police officer in Paterson and in every city or town within a radius of 20 miles, for that matter, wondered what "The Dangerous Age" was. And they came on Monday, Nov. 21—a date Paterson will not easily forget—and saw and laughed and sighed and cried and then emerged from Fabian Brothers' Garden Theatre satisfied that they had received their money's worth, pleased because things had not been misrepresented, entertained because it was a wonderfully entertaining picture they saw, enthused because pictures had been "sold" to them in a new, up-to-date, dignified, intelligent style, rejoicing because they had solved a mystery that for fully ten days had been the popular topic of conversation on the streets, in the stores, in the offices, restaurants, cars, hotels and home, and smiling because they had lost no time seeing the thing that they so strongly wanted to see, for advance reports were so alluring, so captivatingly human, for the bid for patronage had been made so teasingly that keeping away from the playhouse was impossible.

EDITOR'S NOTE—There isn't a trade paper reader or a film man anywhere who hasn't heard of Harry Reichenbach and Reichenbach campaigns on motion pictures. Many of his exploits and stunts have found their way into print, but here—for the first time—is a complete "Start to Finish" recital of a Reichenbach campaign. "The Dangerous Age" is a title that offers the exhibitor an unusual opportunity for exploitation. Moving Picture World sent Roger Ferri to Paterson, N. J., to trail the campaign on this big Louis B. Mayer-First National special, so that it could present a step to step account that would open the exploitation possibilities of the production to all its readers.

It seemed as though a magnet attracted the whole of Paterson. Instead of the quiet, unassuming, conservative municipality it had been, Paterson, out of a clear sky and all of a sudden, arose, as if in unison, and bombarded the strongly guarded doors of the Garden, pressing to get in. But not even that manly Police Department of Paterson was powerful enough to conquer the populace that had been so rousingly awakened by an exploitation campaign that reached everywhere—in the offices and schools, in the shops and homes, in the churches, and, in fact, every place.

Paterson—and for this we have the word of Mayor Van Noort, who was born in that city and has lived there all his life—never greeted anybody or anything so royally as it awaited, impatiently, the advent of "The Dangerous Age."

The response to the exploitation was so great that even the smiling pilot of the house, Cameron Dooley, had to admit it was "the greatest sight I have ever seen." It was so great that the overflow from the Garden Theatre furnished capacity houses for opposition movie pavilions, for thousands were turned away.

And they didn't stop coming after the opening show, either, for the attendance on Tuesday was also great with every indication that the week would be the biggest any Paterson house has known.

The campaign did something more than permanently establish First National in Paterson; it did something more than bring an entire city to a box office; it went beyond accomplishing these tasks, for it injected life when life there seemingly was not and in the words, again, of Mayor Van Noort, it "convinced us Patersonians what great things we can do and how wonderful our city is."

An Horatio Alger could have received ample inspiration for material with which to write a story entitled "From Showman to Owner of a City" in what Mr. Reichenbach accomplished in Paterson. And he did own the city in every sense of the word, for there seemingly wasn't a single thing there that he wanted that he did not get. He conquered newspapers by intelligent tieups. Nowhere in Paterson was there a more enthusiastic booster of "The Dangerous Age" than Hissoner Van Noort. He won over the Chamber of Commerce to the man by enlisting the co-operation of every business executive there.

"The Dangerous Age" was everywhere. You just couldn't escape it.

Everywhere people for ten days before the world premiere showing, which was itself an event in that Director John M. Stahl, Cleo Madison, Edith Roberts and others representative of Louis Mayer and First National were on hand, Patersonians and their neighbors residing within a radius of 20 miles were asking:

"What is 'The Dangerous Age'?"

Newspaper editors editorialized on "The Dangerous Age."

Preachers discussed it from the pulpits.

Screaming, screeching illuminated billboards at the helm of every road leading into Paterson blazed the trail and directed the attention of motorists, pedestrians and who not to the fact that "The Dangerous Age" was here—and later supplemented this announcement with the information that it was playing at the Garden Theatre.

For ten days every Paterson newspaper, every newspaper in six towns, carried prominently displayed stories on their front pages, all dealing with "The Dangerous Age."

As one boarded cars there were artistically laid out cards announcing "The Dangerous Age." Twenty thousand heralds reached 20,000 hands and told of the advent of "The Dangerous Age." Five thousand one-sheets covered the territory as it had never been covered before. Twenty-four-sheets with attractive pictorial reading matter blazed in ideal locations on every road of any consequence and on roof tops. Hundreds of six-sheets and three-sheets were posted where they would escape the eye of no one. Attractive booklets were circulated by the thousand about the city, among men, women and children. Highbrows, lowbrows and highlowbrows all knew in plenty quick time that "The Dangerous Age" was coming.

Paterson has two morning newspapers—Morning Call and Times—and two evening papers—Evening News and Press-Guardian. There is one Sunday paper—the Chronicle. The combined circulation of these newspapers reaches virtually every English-reading and speaking home in Paterson. But "The Dangerous Age" didn't stop there; it enlisted the co-operation of every newspaper in the territory and among them were the Hackensack Record, Suffolk Independent, Hawthorne News, Clifton Times and others.

Space consumed in local newspapers for layouts follows:

FIRST NATIONAL SCORES

As a consequence of the remarkable campaign conducted on Louis B. Mayer's John M. Stahl production, "The Dangerous Age," there is apparently not a man, woman or child in Paterson, N. J., and vicinity that is not now acquainted with the trade mark, "First National." While the campaign effectively brought seemingly endless lines of humanity to the box office of the Garden Theatre, it established a good will for First National attractions that is unpurchasable. Every business man and city official was made intimately acquainted with the policy of First National.

Paterson, N.J.
Important silk producing centre being the location of many large silk mills. It is an unusually progressive community thriving and alert. Industrially it is growing each year. It is to be made important also as the first city in the world in which own mediums and by heralds, throwaways and cards written in their native tongue. Nothing or nobody was overlooked. The factories were carefully covered so that every workman and workwoman in the county knew that it was a question of just so many days when "The Dangerous Age" would overpower the city.

The cost of this marvelous campaign—the greatest ever conducted in that every newspaper in Paterson, conservative and liberal alike, and in adjacent cities and towns were completely tied up with it in one way or another—was astonishingly small, for no unusual amount of advertising was carried. But what made this campaign even more remarkable than the low cost was the fact that for ten days in all the aforementioned papers front-page stories that ran over into the inside newsy sections were carried with the title "The Dangerous Age" prominently played up in the headlines.

The campaign out-circused the circus without the typical circus ballyhoo. As an intelligent, sure-fire, effective campaign, dignified and concentrated on mediums that embraced the entire population. And without the services of the army of publicists, ballyhooers and billposters that circuses carry—receiving 21 times more space than all the circuses and carnivals that played Paterson this year, and this at less than one-tenth what it cost those wealthy combinations.

Instead of one front page story that usually greets a circus in town, the picture received thirty-five in eight papers in ten days, which is considerable of a record.

Thus it is shown, in cold figures, that for every line of advertising received brought four in return.

Of the total 370¾ inches of space in the news columns were about 210 inches on the front pages. And most of these front page yarns, which averaged three papers a day, were continued to the inside pages.

In addition to this news space two of the newspapers editorialized at considerable length on "The Dangerous Age."

Inasmuch as 60 per cent. of the campaign was confined strictly to newspapers with all the editors wholeheartedly co-operating it is only right that we take this phase of the movement first and in detail, paper by paper. Then we will dwell on the billboard and miscellaneous campaign that reached out to everybody and covered everything. No street ballyhoo of any kind, however, was used.

Following is the amount of space it obtained in the five newspapers, the inch space below recorded being that developed to strictly news stories involving contests, "news breaks," features and do not include the regular notices nor cuts used by the sheets, from Saturday, Nov. 11, to Monday, Nov. 20, when "The Dangerous Age" opened:

Something New in a "Catch the Letter" Race

Carte blanche was given by Louis Mayer, whose only instructions were to make the whole world know his latest John M. Stahl picture was a winner. Before we go a step farther let us record right here that what we believe to be a record in ticket selling was registered when the two girls at the Garden box office at the Monday night supper show sold 379 tickets between 6 and 6.15 o'clock, an average of about 25 tickets a minute—with a line three blocks long waiting to get in.

Now to get back to the inauguration of the newspaper campaign and following it through until the very last show on the Monday opening.

Then came the visit to the newspaper offices. Interviews with the editors "sold" them 100 per cent., as we will prove to the reader by pointing out the extent of their marvelous cooperation. Then the word was given out: "Let 'er go." And from that time on "she" went a pace the dust of which will never blow away from the now thoroughly awakened city of Paterson.

With the Mayor and editors lined up, the campaign started in earnest on Saturday morning, Nov. 11, when the Paterson Morning Times broke with a two-column seven-inch story on the second page. The story introduced the first newspaper tieup with "The Dangerous Age." The heading and story follow:

Want Ideas from Wives on Picture

What is "The Dangerous Age?"

Is it when a man reaches his voting age or when he is about forty?

For the next two weeks Paterson is to hear and see a great deal of this "Dangerous Age."

Are the wives of the men of Paterson aware that perhaps their husbands have reached this age?

It has to come and how to overcome it is the problem.

The Morning Times is aware of the significance and importance of this stage in the average husband's career and has taken upon itself to ascertain by a contest just what the married women of Paterson really believe it the best way to overcome "The Dangerous Age."

A committee has been appointed consisting of His Honor, the Mayor, as chairman, the editor of The Times, and Charles Dooley, and a prize of $50 offered, to be divided $25 as first prize, $15 as second prize and $10 as third prize, for the three best letters submitted to The Times' office before Nov. 20 on this question that has taken the country by storm.

Lewis Stone was of the average type of married man, with a devoted wife, blind to his "Dangerous Age," insisting that he have his soft-boiled eggs for breakfast, instead of hard, that he dress with the seasons, advancing in the spring morning with a tablespoonfull of sulphur and molasses instead of on the wings of romance, a steady diet of minor irritations and insignificant happenings that rubbed the wrong way.

Whose fault is that? Is a man the child of destiny as he so often fondly believes? And at what age is it that it becomes truly dangerous? Is he at the top of his fame at forty?

What think you, married women of Paterson?

Want to Make Fifty Dollars?

Lewis Stone has reached "The Dangerous Age" of life. Sickened with the motherly care of his devoted wife, the business call from his California home to the hustle and bustle of New York was welcomed as a relief of the steadfast daily routine of life.

It was a simple enough matter to mail the letter back home saying he was through, that the girl of his dreams had infatuated him even though she was a chance acquaintance, he knew that his future happiness lay before him.

Yet a brief half hour after, he would have given his very soul to retrieve it.

"Why, you are old enough to be my father," she had laughingly called after him as he stumbled, half blind with mortification and humiliation from the parlor of her home, as she snuggled closer to her lover.

Thousands of times have we seen letters dropped into the box without a thought of the strings of destiny that may be pulled and knotted by the contents.

How many of us have regretted the hastily scribbled notes written on the spur of the moment?

And what we wouldn't have given to recall it?

In "The Dangerous Age" there begins a continental chase that finally ends in California.

On Monday, November 20, will begin a chase that although not as country-wide as Stone's, yet of intense interest to Patersonians for The Press-Guardian has offered a cash prize of fifty dollars to any citizen of Paterson that intercepts one of twelve letters that will be mailed by Mayor Van Noort the Sunday before, and reaches The Press-Guardian offices first. A list of the twelve prominent New Yorkers who will receive the letters will be published in the previous Sunday Chronicle.

Was Stone successful? Will you be?

The next day—Sunday—the Sunday Chronicle broke with a double column boxed story, shown above.

That day the first three-inch, one column, teaser ad was inserted in The Sunday Chronicle. The text follows: "Ask Any Married Woman What Is THE DANGEROUS AGE, Then Ask Her Husband."

Monday afternoon, Nov. 13 The Press-Guardian ran an 11-inch story on its first page with a continuation on page two. The story was headed in 24 pt. Condensed Hancock with a three-line 14 point pyramid step-head. In this story, the contest announced the preceding day in The Sunday Chronicle, which is published also by the Press-Guardian firm, was again explained in detail. However, this story disclosed the local engagement of "The Dangerous Age," which by this time had taken the town really by storm, for the publicity given by the newspapers, together with the circusing of the city and countryside with banners, paper, heralds and what not had started the ball swiftly rolling, so rapidly in fact that the famous Hall-Mills' dual murder case of New Brunswick, N. J.; the movements of Clemenceau, the opening of the special session of Congress and the German cabinet reorganization news issues became of secondary importance insofar as Patersonians were concerned. The exploitation was that effective journalistically.

"It is simply a matter of endurance, rush, speed and matter of approach. All you need to do is approach some of the persons to whom the letter is mailed, ask for it in the name of The Press-Guardian and return it as stipulated above—and earn ten nice shining gold pieces.

"If two persons should return the letters at the identical time, which is almost improbable, this fifty dollars will be divided equally between the presenters. Full details of the enterprise will be published each day in The Press-Guardian and next Sunday in The Chronicle.

"Watch each day for new angles and details."

That same day three one-inch, one-column ads appeared in teaser form in The Times, Call, Press-Guardian and Evening News. These read as follows:

(1) Young Married Women Ignorant of THE DANGEROUS AGE in a Man's Life Can Ask Their Mothers or Watch Fathers."

(2) There Would Be No Need for a Divorce Court If Every Woman Knew When Her Husband Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE.

(3) Even a Greasy Old Gypsy Woman Is Competition When He Is at THE DANGEROUS AGE. You Must Watch Him Every Moment.

Tuesday The Morning Times continued its "Wives' Letter Contest"

boosting the tieup with a two-column front page yarn eight inches in length. And conspicuous mention was made of the coming of the picture.

The other papers were giving equally effective space, for all were in one way or another hooked up day in and day out and for the full nine-days' advance work "The Dangerous Age" became a front page subject.

The teasers, too, were going over effectively and on that Tuesday the following ads were run:

(1) When He Grumbles and Starts Making Excuses to Get Out Nights He Has Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE.

(2) If Your Husband Has Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE Watch Him Like You Would a Child. It Begins at 40 and Ends at 100.

Editorially The Paterson Call that day ran the following featured story.

"Some times in the most outwardly happy married couple's life there is thrown the bombshell of divorce.

"That in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred could have been prevented were the wife aware of the dangerous age is seemingly a fact.

"Man may call himself the child of destiny, the plaything of fate or the apex of the eternal triangle, a vain seeker after harmony, romance and love, but it is the home ties that unweaving and unbinding themselves, play havoc with the bliss of a happily married woman.

"She becomes a mother to him rather than the girlhood wife of his dreams. The romantic cloak in which she appealed to him is left to fall when the duties of home and children begin to manifest themselves. She works herself to the very bone to satisfy his every whim and thought and yet when 'The Dangerous Age' comes he forgets.

"A pretty face and again a flirtation with his buried romance begins. It has to come to every man sometime in his life. Not that he welcomes it, for facing the situation in cold blood he realizes the foolishness of it all, but when he does, he lightly throws off all thoughts of care and years of his wife's self-sacrifices and madly plunges.

"What is 'The Dangerous Age?'"

The Evening News fell in line the following day with a one-column seven-inch story on the front page as follows:

$4 For Single Copy of News $2 for 23 Others

YOU MAY BE ONE OF THE LUCKY ONES-READ THIS STORY CAREFULLY—IT HAS TO DO WITH THE DANGEROUS AGE

"It has often been said, and truly so, that a newspaper is the greatest value offered to the public today. It costs more to manufacture a newspaper and the finished product is sold for less than any other known commodity.

"Through the co-operation of Louis B. Mayer, of the Louis B. Mayer Enterprises, producers of the famous film, "The Dangerous Age," which will be shown all next week at the Garden Theatre, 24 copies of next Saturday's edition of The News will be worth $4 and $2 each.

"It's all very simple and there are no strings attached to the offer. Next Saturday evening The News will publish twenty-four names of men and women selected at random from the city directory. The first name published will entitle its owner to $4 in cash. Each of the other twenty-three names will get $2 in cash.

"Watch The News on Saturday. If your name appears save the paper and at two o'clock Monday afternoon present your copy of The News at the box office of the Garden Theatre and cash it in. You will be paid without fail; all you have to do is to sign a receipt for the money paid you.

"This is a progressive age and 'The Dangerous Age' will mean money in your pocket. It pays to be a reader of The News."

With the contests all underway, the newspaper editorial staffs co-operated to the limit and each day the stories hooking up with "The Dangerous Age" and the Garden engagement were printed in conspicuous places, mostly the first or second news pages. The Wednesday teaser ad was a three by two columns and read as follows:

"You May Realize You Are Married to Him, but Does He? He Begins Forgetting When He Has Reached THE DANGEROUS AGE."

After Wednesday the local reportorial staffs seemed to fairly vie with one another, for the space increased. The rhetorical genius of the staffs were put on the jobs. Paterson was treated to a new novelty, that of a group of reporters working industriously trying to get over the best story. The picture was the winner.

The newspapers were deluged with queries from readers and soon the campaign spread so much so that instead of the usual one story, several of the papers stepped outside the bounds and devoted two stories, at times, to the issue, which was discussed in the form of letters to the editors.

But while the contests were taking care of themselves and arousing public curiosity as it had never before been aroused in Paterson, use was made of the "want ad" columns of the various newspapers, all the ads hooking up with the text in clever fashion, and resulting in wholesale responses by thousands of persons. These were all told to call at a certain newspaper and at the same time acquainted them with the fact that "The Dangerous Age" would be at the Garden Theatre.

Friday, The Morning Times began publishing letters from readers. Hundreds of letters were received from married women. The discussions among married women became so pronounced and heated that "The Dangerous Age" became discussed in every women's club. One woman, Mrs. Emma O'Connell, of 27 Hamburg street, Paterson, N. J., said there was "no such thing as the dangerous age in any man's life," but Mrs. A. W. disagreed with her, saying that her husband's "Dangerous Age" came "about a year after we were married and if I had not been on the job every minute of the time I would have been sunk. 'The Dangerous Age' is any time your husband gets mooning around the house, sitting up with sick friends or horses every other night and galavanting about town like a colt when he ought to be home in bed. It's up to the wife to see that she is a pal instead of a sparring partner." Another woman, Mrs. R. H., contended that "The first five years of a married man's life constitutes 'The Dangerous Age.' If you can get over that space, you need not worry over anything else."

Saturday came the big play in all newspaper advertising and stories, all the sheets breaking all previous records for free news space given the picture. The Morning Times devoted almost one and a half columns to letters received from readers who discussed "The Dangerous Age." The letters were interesting and varied. The News, Press-Guardian and Call all gave equally prominent and liberal space to news stories. And mind you, all the while, the regular show notices were being published in the theatre columns of the various papers.

The Press-Guardian contest, coming to a climax on Saturday, published the following:

Race After Letters Starts Tomorrow

Mayor Van Noort Will Mail Them and First to Return One Gets $50

"Tomorrow is the day. Tomorrow twelve specially printed letters with glaring words on the envelope will be mailed by Mayor Van Noort, of Paterson, at the mail box on Market and Washington streets, to the following persons in New York:—

"Nat Lewis, Paul Mooney, Adele, Best & Ormonde, Crane Simplex Company, Kraus Manufacturing Company, J. Robert Rubin, Finchley, Heeps, Inc., Slendaform Corporation, Capehart, Cary Company and Murphy & Brody.

"The addresses of these individuals will be published in tomorrow's Sunday Chronicle. The first person who reaches New York, approaches any of the firms or persons mentioned above, secures one of the letters, unopened, and returns it to the business office of The Press-Guardian, will be presented with $50.

"The receivers of the letters have been requested not to open the letters until after 12 o'clock Monday, so that one must work fairly rapid in order to secure the letter unopened.

"The mailing of the letters will occur at nine o'clock Sunday night. Mayor Van Noort will drop the twelve letters into the mail box, after which it is entirely up to you If you arrive in New York too late to retrieve one of the letters unopened you will not receive any reward.

"This unusual enterprise was prompted by the unique situation in John M. Stahl's motion picture drama, 'The Dangerous Age,' which opens at the Garden Theatre, Monday, etc., etc., dealing with the story of the picture, the entire yarn taking up a full newspaper column."

The Sunday Chronicle conspicuously ran a front page story on the "go get-the-letter contest," adding the New

UPSETTING THE DOPE

The 5.30-7 o'clock (supper shows) are conceded bloomers in Paterson, N. J., show houses. The factories there suspend operations for the day at 6 o'clock, while the offices and municipal quarters shut up shop an hour earlier.

Showmen in Paterson never take the supper show seriously and an attendance of between 100 and 200 is considered rather high, for Patersonians are busily consuming their supper in that period. But seemingly a hungry stomach was ignored Monday night, for the supper show was as jammed as the last night performance of "The Dangerous Age."

The supper show Monday set a new record, for by 6.30 o'clock there was a line two blocks long, double file, waiting to get in. Eight policemen were rushed to the scene by Police Headquarters to handle the impatient, but enthusiastic crowd.

York addresses of the receivers of the letters.

Monday — opening day — brought all contests to a head. The News proudly devoted almost a column to announcing the 24 winners of its unique name contest. The Morning Times devoted considerable space, more than it devoted to internationally important news dispatches, completing its "letter writing contest involving the married women of Paterson." The Press-Guardian played up the winner of the "go-get-the-letter contest," which was won by W. Barlow, of 188 Genesee street, Paterson. The prize was $50.

The editors of The Press-Guardian, according to reporters' statements, were kept busy answering telephones from interested readers seeking to know who "won the contest." In the Monday afternoon edition of that paper appeared the following front page story:

Barlow First To Return Letter; Gets $50 Prize

test staged in connection with the showing of 'The Dangerous Age' at the Garden Theatre this week. He reached The Press-Guardian office at one minute past twelve o'clock today. He was the first person to return one of the six special delivery letters mailed by Mayor Van Noort last night.

"Macy Esterman, of 149 Broadway, came in second, arriving at the Press-Guardian office at 12.20 o'clock.

"Mr. Barlow, when informed he had won, immediately asked permission to phone his mother of his good luck. He then told how he left the office of the Crane Simplex Company, 200 West 59th street, exactly at 10.55 o'clock, when the letter arrived.

"Nick Harvey, well-known local sportsman, was waiting with his car. They dashed to the Weehawken ferry and just caught the boat. From Weehawken to Hackensack they made good time. Just this side of Hackensack they struck a bump and broke the rear end. Leaving Harvey, Barlow jumped on a bus for Passaic. There he just caught the 11.41 Erie train for Paterson. He ran from the Market street station to the Press-Guardian office, arriving there at 12.01 and winning the $50 prize for the first letter to be returned to this office.

"Mr. Barlow will be presented with the five ten dollar gold pieces at the Garden Theatre tonight.

"C. M. Donohue, of 120 Twelfth avenue, reported to the Press-Guardian at 12.51 o'clock with the third letter."

Monday's ad in all newspapers was a four-inch by three-columns one-size typed ad in 24-point bold face Gothic, reading:

"TODAY AND ALL THIS WEEK AT THE GARDEN THEATRE, LOUIS B. MAYER WILL OFFER JOHN M. STAHL'S DRAMATIC CAMEO OF MATRIMONIAL MATES AND MISMATES, "THE DANGEROUS AGE." IT IS WORTH THE WHILE OF EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD IN PATERSON TO ATTEND. IT ACHIEVES A POINT SELDOM REACHED ON THE SCREEN."

So much for the record-breaking publicity campaign reaching out to every newspaper. The rural papers were not forgotten and equally effective tieups were arranged with them.

Following the conferences with Mayor Van Noort, city officials and representative business men, Mr. Reichenbach, with the newspapers well underway with their campaign and the reportorial staffs working overtime, devoted his attention, temporarily, to the billboard question. For this purpose De Angeles' circus crew of bill posters were brought into action and they "sniped" everything within a radius of 23 miles. Nothing was overlooked. Spots that had never been plastered were adorned with cards, or paper, whichever was more appropriate.

Every road leading into the city of Paterson was covered. Not a single spot with any magnetic value was missed. Four thousand one sheets were plastered at locations where they attracted the eye. As one started on his way to Paterson from New York, either from the 33rd street Hudson tube station (uptown) or the Hudson Terminal (downtown) one's eye is arrested by a series of well-worded one-sheets. The same sight greeted one as he walked leisurely along in the tunnel leading from the Hudson tube stop at Erie Station in Jersey City to the Erie Station platform.

And as the train chugged its way from Hackensack twenty-four and six-sheets held one's attention. Everything else seemed to have been forgotten, for not a single spot of any vantage value was ducked or muffed.

Going into Riverside and Clifton. N. J., each town about four miles from Paterson, boards, each 14x14, were erected at ideal locations cleverly advertising the engagement. No motorist could pass the spot without having his attention attracted to the brilliantly illuminated and attractive signs. For the first time, too, the Public Service property is Paterson were covered with neat book-layouts on "The Dangerous Age."

Local churches also were cleverly tied up with the production. The theme upon which the production is based was capitalized by clergymen using "The Dangerous Age" for the sermons with mention made by most of them that it was playing the Garden Theatre. School teachers at the public schools encouraged the children to write manuscripts on "The Dangerous Age" of children.

The commotion stirred up by these dynamic tactics of Mr. Reichenbach and Charles resulted in the Paterson

Rotary Club asking him to address it on Thursday, Nov. 16, but owing to an important engagement, Harry sent his assistant. The latter made an eloquent address that completely won the organization, which co-operated in many ways. The organization includes all the prominent business men of the city. A similar invitation came from the Chamber of Commerce which lined up 100 per cent. with Mayor Van Noort in passing along word of the engagement of "The Dangerous Age."

All along the roads leading into Paterson were placed 24x8-inch black and yellow strips with the following text:

"Paterson just ahead: It is one of the world's greatest silk centres, a thriving community of homes and an industrial seat. Also—it is the first city in America to see THE DANGEROUS AGE for an entire week beginning Monday, Nov. 20, at the Garden Theatre."

Scores of novelties were distributed. Among the most helpful of these was a neat 3x2 booklet, cleverly laid out in fourteen pages. The text follows: "'The Dangerous Age' of man by a successful wife. (Page 1). After a man reaches The Dangerous Age 'Goo-goo' again becomes his chief figure of speech. Say it and watch him cuddle. After a man reaches The Dangerous Age he begins to love taffy. Then comes a two-page spread as follows:

It was no wonder then, with this remarkable exploitation, overlooking as it did no medium, but embracing everybody who was anybody in Paterson, with every newspaper tied up, with every business man's organization boosting and clergy co-operatively effecting, that "The Dangerous Age"

THE ECHO AND EXHIBITORS

There was not a single exhibitor in northern New Jersey who did not know of the extensive campaign of First National and Louis B. Mayer on the John M. Stahl feature, "The Dangerous Age," at the Garden. Exhibitors in the smaller towns adjacent to Paterson could not help but feel the effect at the box office, for the campaign spread into their localities, with First National profiting exceedingly, for it brought the public of those places in intimate touch with its attractions. It is safe to say that First National attractions in Paterson, N. J., are considered as valuable by Patersonians as the bonds issued by the First National Bank of that city.

when it opened Monday at the Garden did a record business.

Paterson is distinctively an industrial city. Six o'clock there means supper, but it didn't on Monday night, for promptly at 6 o'clock the record breaking line of three blocks started to form. It was the supper show that was on and for the first time in the history of the house the supper show was taxed to its capacity with at least 100 more folk waiting outside. By 7 o'clock the line had doubled and Manager Dooley had to summon additional police officers.

By 7.30 the entire street was choked, literally, with waiting humanity. Several thousands were turned away when the last show was started, thus driving them to other houses. The Tuesday business, however, continued in top form. John M. Stahl personally attended the premier and was introduced as were also the Misses Edith Roberts and Cleo Madison, who appear in "The Dangerous Age."

The Paterson Morning Call, Tuesday, Nov. 21, 1922.

"DANGEROUS AGE" GIVEN PREMIERE

Thousands Turncd Away From Garden Theatre Last Evening

Thousands of local theatre-goers attended the initial presentation of "The Dangerous Age," at the Garden Theatre yesterday afternoon and last evening. The film staged under the direction of John M. Stahl and featuring Edith Roberts and Cleo Madison, was released under the First National Exhibitors' circuit and after its presentation here will be shown in New York City.

Approximately 4,000 persons saw the performances yesterday afternoon and last night and it is estimated that nearly a like number were turned away. It became necessary early last evening for the management to appeal to police headquarters for aid in handling the crowd and Police Sergeant L. J. Dunn and a squad of men were sent to the theatre.

Included in the vast throng were prominent motion picture producers from New York City, all of whom desired to witness the mammoth motion-picture play, which until yesterday afternoon had been shown only in the production studios.

"The Dangerous Age" is one of those heart-gripping dramas of married life and shows the result of matrimonial mates and mis-mates in a most vivid manner. There is not a dull momen during the entire production and the audience is swayed with emotion throughout. There is a decidedly interesting moral story in the plot of the drama which should not fail to interest everyone.

The production will be shown at the popular Market street photoplay theatre during the current week and there is little doubt but that capacity audiences will witness every presentation. After finishing this week in this city the photoplay will be shown in New York City where thousands of theatre-goers are anxiously awaiting the initial performance.

Crowds Storm Garden to See Movie Stars and Wonderful "Dangerous Age"

A masterpiece was shown at the Garden Theatre last night.

"The Dangerous Age."

A much mooted and talked about subject was this Dangerous Age before its world's premiere last night and a much talked about subject will it remain for the balance of the week.

With superb photography, a sex plot treated in masterly fashion by John M. Stahl, a cast balanced to a hair's breath and its interest held until the very end, "The Dangerous Age" is bound to cut a wide swath in classical moviedom throughout these United States.

Edith Roberts, starring in "The Dangerous Age," Cleo Madison costarring with Miss Roberts and John M. Stahl made their personal appearances and were received enthusiastically by the crowds.

Canada's Senior Exhibitor Was "Original Merry Wizard"

Editor, Regional News and Gossip:

I frequently notice the names of men who claim to be oldtimers in this game, some of them with fifteen years' experience, which to many persons may appear a lifetime. Some years ago I wrote for MOVING PICTURE WORLD the history of the movie game in Canada, and as you will see I am still in the Land of the Living and at the age of 55 years very much in the motion picture business. While I call myself Old Man Green, some people call me by other names.

In June, 1896, the first picture machine ever set up and operated on Canadian soil was leased from the Edison Company and brought to Ottawa by the managers of the Ottawa Electric Street Railway and set up at West End Park. . . . I was then known (and for years previous to that time) as "Green, the Original Merry Wizard." This is my fortieth year in the show business.

The railway company signed me for a two-weeks engagement at the park to do my magic act and also to lecture on "The New Marvel-Moving Pictures." I remained several weeks. The entire performance consisted of Edison's first few 50-foot films—May Irwin and John Rice in a kissing scene, four colored boys eating watermelons, the Black Diamond Express, a bathing scene at Atlantic City and a colored film of Lo Lo Fuller's Serpentine Dance. These films were run like an endless belt. The music for the show was the Governor General's Foot Guard Band. We did an enormous business all that season.

I hooked up with two partners that fall and we bought a machine of the Edison Universal type. You could carry it in a suitcase. I was the operator and lecturer and gave a magic show to fill out a full two-hour program. From then up to the present time I have been at no other job and my twenty-six years of actual experience would fill a book much larger than the World.

At one time I was known as the Lyman H. Howe of Canada, from coast to coast, and also in the New England states, carrying fourteen trunks of reels, 100 sets of song slides and twenty-six kinds of special lithographed printing. I kept at the road show business until the movie theatres started to open in every village, town and city where a vacant store, a cotton sheet and some kitchen chairs could be bought or rented.

Since that time, some fourteen years ago, I have managed theatres in several cities in Canada and Michigan. Five years ago I joined N. L. Nathanson's new theatre and film corporations here in Canada, and for the past two years have managed the Capitol-Regent Theatre in Guelph, also acted as district manager of several other houses on this Famous Players Canadians Corporation circuit of about fifty theatres. I will say that up to the present time the treatment I have received at the hands of this company leads me to believe I am serving a life sentence with them—unless they think differently and give me the gate.

So you can see, dear editor, that some of the boys who think they have been a long time in this business are after all only students at the game. But they will never have to travel the road of the oldtimers, and make water rheostats, use the red and black oxy and hyd-gas cylinders and be all ready to show only to find the nipple on their gas tank is busted and have to dismiss a full house. It has all happened many times and a thousand more things that only a real showman with grit would ever go through and stick to the end.

I also have watched your journal grow from a small sheet up to its present size, and personally I recognize it as the only official journal of this great and growing industry. I am too busy to find time to write you very often, as I contribute weekly to our own little official head office journal, ably handled by our genial publicity man, Charles Branham.

You are at liberty to use this article as you see fit and I would be very pleased to meet and shake hands with any other man who can boast of twenty-six years' actual active experience in the motion picture business, and while I am not from Missouri they will have to show me. I hope to be able to write you again in another ten or twelve years. I am not at all ashamed of being 55 years of age. But I feel fit as a fiddle and can make some of the bright young gents who never miss the 'flu' step a few. Yes, I can; I said it, brother.

JOHN C. GREEN,
Manager Capitol-Regent Theatre,
Guelph, Canada.

Philadelphia Cites Buhler as One of Real Oldtimers

Philadelphia exhibitors going back over sixteen years will readily recall Frank W. Buhler as the real oldtimer when he was manager of the famous Bijou Dream Theatre once situated at 1205 Market street, which has since been replaced by Woolworth's store.

Back in 1906 Frank Buhler started specializing on features and rapidly gained an envious reputation for his theatre. Independent film men all became his staunch friends so that he had no difficulty in standardizing the Bijou Dream as the first-run house in the city. Five cent admission jumped to ten cents in a few years, and the house with its wonderful, money-making manager was taken over by the Central Market Street Company afterwards in 1912.

By reason of his progressive spirit and his advanced ideas in advertising (having been the first to advertise in a daily newspaper), Frank Buhler became an executive with this company, which had control of nearly a dozen theatres, and Mr. Buhler kept right on buying all the pictures. It was in 1914 when Stanley V. Mastbaum, (now deceased) first founded the Stanley Company, which shortly afterwards merged with the Central Market Street Company. Today, with Jules E. Mastbaum, its president, the Stanley Company of America controls over fifty theatres and Frank W. Buhler is its general manager, having thirty theatres under his personal supervision.

A few more of the local oldtimers who are still actively engaged in the business and who can be seen riding about in their limousines are Marcus Benn, Morris Wolf, Morris Spiers, Sam Blatt, Mrs. McMann, M. Stiefel and Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger.

Mr. Rappaport Reminisces

J. L. Rappaport, manager of the Lovejoy Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., has written Robert E. Welsh, our editor, a letter that we feel would prove interesting to oldtimers in the business, so we're quoting from it.

Mr. Rappaport and his father, who has been a subscriber of the World since 1908, were reminiscing over our last issue. The older man recalled the opening night of the first house he ever operated—a store-front turned into a nickel show. The show started at 6:30 p. m. It consisted of one and a half reels of film and an illustrated song. One woman came in at 6:15 and sat until the good night slide went on at 11:30. Going out, she asked, "Is that all?" The elder Rappaport replied, "No, madam, tomorrow night we will have some more."

Their only trouble at that time was to get them out; now it's to get them in.

Rhode Island Man's Chief Claim to Fame

Charles Lovenberg, of Providence, R. I., was the first man in New England to devote a theatre exclusively to the exhibition of motion pictures. This was at the old Nickel Theatre, which has been since demolished and in its place Edward F. Albee has erected a luxurious 3,400-seat auditorium, ranking among the most beautiful theatres in the world.

At that time—1906—all movie entertainment was confined to "nickelodeons," that were virtually stores. He took over the Park Theatre, renamed it the Nickel established an exclusive picture policy and immediately the proposition became a money maker. That year, Mr. Lovenberg stated, an entire week's bill cost him only between $25 and $35. As an added attraction every week he advertised "the latest illustrated song."

Chicago Debates Wage Scale; Zone Meetings Are Effective

The wage scale for operators is up again and again the exhibitors contemplate asking a reduction. A meeting of all exhibitors will be held next Wednesday to discuss the matter, select committees and get the movement started.

The zone meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, held at Galesburg last week, brought out a considerable number of exhibitors from the nearby towns, who exhibited a great deal of enthusiasm for the organization and show signs of becoming staunch members. The next meeting will be held at Rockford on December 6.

L. M. Rubens, of Joliet, was discharged from the hospital last week where he has been a patient for several days. Congratulations and best wisbes!

J. B. Dibelka has issued invitations to his friends in the film game to attend the opening of Chicago's new Dance Palace (so the invitations say) which has taken the place of the Parkway Theatre, formerly owned and managed by Mr. Dibelka. Mr. Dibelka calls his new venture the Parkway Gardens.

Plans are being developed by Jack Lund and Ethel Kendall to build a theatre, a dance hall and a 175-room hotel on the southwest corner of Sixty-fourth and Cottage Grove avenue. It is expected to cost $1,250,000, and S. W. Strauss & Co. have underwritten a fifteen-year bond issue of $75,000 on the projected buildings. The Garden Building Corporation will handle the project.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" closed after six weeks' successful business at the Roosevelt and will be released to the outlying theatres.

J. B. Stradford will build an eight-story hotel and a theatre building at Thirty-sixth street and Indiana avenue, to cost $750,000. The structure will be used by the owner for colored people, both the hotel and theatre. The house will seat 1,200 and vaudeville and films will be featured.

Claude Sigler has opened tbe East Side Theatre and the new house seats 800 people. An organ furnishes the music.

The Aristo Theatre at 2650 Lincoln avenue is featuring vaudeville with films for Sunday and holiday shows, using four acts of high class vaudeville and doing a good business with the combination policy.

Clyde Elliott, film distributor and formerly manager of the Orchestra Hall and Ziegfeld Theatre, has purchased the Evanston Theatre in Evanston and will remodel the house.

George Hegeman is now organist at the Bryn Mawr Theatre, and Manager Lou Weil says that the new vaudeville policy, with feature films on Sundays and holidays, is standing them out. Five acts are used in the combination bill.

F. E. Boyans is now connected with the Halfield Theatre, 5451 South Halstead street, as organist, and a new organ is being installed in the house.

Jack Mason is handling the presentations and the stage of the New McVickers, having come on from New York after the resignation of S. Barret McCormick.

The new Astor Theatre on Clark street has lowered the admissions to 15 cents on week days and is doing a good business.

Manager Barbee of the Barbee Theatre says he has the only musical cat in the Loop and that whenever the organ is in action the cat sits quietly in a front seat and after the concert scampers off for mice and other excitement.

The Elite Theatre, at Waukegan, has been incorporated as a stock company with a capital of $15,000, by Edward C. Diebler, Preston H. Sellers and Edwin Trinz. The house is located at 226 North Genesee street.

The California Theatre, at Twenty-sixth and Trumbull avenue, has been sold by Sophie Levinson to Louis and Clara Brecka for a consideration understood to be around $75,000. The transaction establishes a record price for land values in that district. The house was built twelve years ago and is modern throughout.

Lubliner and Trinz had two deals last week that involved more than $500,000 and included two Oak Park apartment buildings and property at Pleasant and Wisconsin avenues.

What is regarded as the highest price paid for a feature film was paid here last week by Balaban and Katz for Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country." According to word given out by the signers, the amount involved was $48,000. Douglas Fairbanks and Mrs. Charlotte Pickford were here with Mary and all left for Los Angeles on the night train. After signing the contract both Mary and Doug were shown over the Chicago Theatre and when recognized by the audience Doug made a speech and told them what a wonderful theatre they had in the Chicago.

J. E. Pridmore, architect of the new house to be erected at Ft. Wayne, Ind., by the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation, said the new theatre would cost $1,500,000 and estimates will be received in sixty days for the erection of the building.

G. M. McClain has made many improvements in his theatre at Barry and added new musical equipment.

The Columbia Theatre at Muncie, was damaged by fire which started in a nearby restaurant. Repairs will be made at once.

The Illmo Amusement Company has been formed by Floyd Lewis, R. B. Dickson and Louis Wagner with a capital of $20,000 to do a general amusement business.

The Garrick Producing Company, with offices at 1148 West Madison street, has been incorporated by B. H. Kuchanbecker, B. V. Damerel and G. J. Damerel, to do a general theatrical and moving picture business. One hundred shares of no par value have been issued.

H. M. Rouda has been made manager of the Ascher Bros. Lanecourt Theatre at Clark and Center street.

Grace Robinson, cashier of the Metropolitan Theatre for several years, died suddenly of paralysis.

Roy Feltus and Robert Harris are planning to rebuild the Princess Theatre at Bloomington, Ill.

Dick Kemp has taken over the Owl Theatre at Forty-seventh and State streets from Morris Salkin. Kemp was formerly connected with the Century and Old Chicago Theatres.

A new theatre has been opened at Linden by Mrs. A. Maxwell and she will show feature films.

The new theatre that Ralph Crocker is building at Elgin is rapidly nearing completion. The house will seat 1,499 on one floor and is of fireproof construction throughout. It is hoped to have it ready for early spring.

The Betty Amusement Corporation has been formed by Paul R. Simon, Mabel Hartigan and Olive Meyer with a capital of $5,000. Offices are at 54 West Randolph street.

The Blair Conn Production Company has been formed by Blair Conn, Robert H. Farrell and John M. Morey, to operate a motion picture business. The capital will be $125,000 and 1,500 shares of no par value. The main office of the company will be at 1345 Arygle street.

A Pathe Release

24-SHEET WORKS FOR THIRTEEN HOUSES

This seems to be a record. The posters were used in San Francisco and were put up by the Pathe Exchange. The first two weeks it was given the Golden Gate alone then the others were brought in.

Detroit

The Desmond Theatre, of Port Huron, Herb Weil, manager, is now playing burlesque shows on each Sunday matinee and evening, for the balance of the season. This is the same show which leaves the Gayety, Detroit, on Saturday night, enroute for Toronto.

George Cook, manager of the Strand Theatre at the Soo, has announced the purchase of a new $8,000 Bartola organ. Installation will be made within the next thirty days.

The Bijou-Arcade Theatre of Battle Creek, a Butterfield house, inaugurated a new policy on November 26 by giving five acts of vaudeville in connection with a feature picture. The Bijou-Arcade had housed a permanent stock company since the opening of the season.

J. B. Hunter, of Charlotte, Mich., has taken over the interests of C. H. Snobble in the Regent Theatre of that city and now has it to himself.

John H. Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., have subleased the Liberty Theatre, Farmer and Bates streets, Detroit, to Arthur E. Benjamin, of Detroit. Mr. Benjamin took possession on November 19.

New Schenectady Theatre's Opening Delayed to Dec. 2

The opening of the new State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., has been delayed through a number of matters, with the result that the house will not open much before December 2. It was scheduled to open November 26. "Grandma's Boy" will be the opening feature. George R. Lunn, of Schenectady, lieutenant-governor-elect, has consented to be present at the opening and make a few remarks.

Charles McCarthy, of Hoosick Falls, one of the old timers in the business, was obliged to close his house for a couple of days this week when flues in the boiler burned out.

The Barcli, in Schenectady, has a new organist in the person of Mrs. Florence Swartout, of Johnstown. The house supports a six-piece orchestra, and is now featuring its musical program.

Some rather extensive exploitation was done in Schenectady this week by Paul Alberts of the Albany, in connection with a straight week's presentation of "East is West." A real Chinaman was employed to wander about the streets, carrying a placard, announcing the attraction, while the lobby, with its many swaying Japanese lanterns, presented a most attractive appearance. Alberts does more exploitation than all the other theatre owners in Schenectady combined.

After some switching about, the Palace in Troy is making money these days by adding a couple of acts of vaudeville each week. The house is located in the residential section of the city, and after losing money on first runs, swung over to second, and then came back to first, but added vaudeville. For 25 cents the house now gives a feature picture, a comedy, a news reel and two vaudeville acts.

Contrary to expectations, "Tess of the Storm Country," playing the entire week at the Strand in Schenectady, fell flat after the second day. Everybody had been looking for a big cash in on the picture.

William Berinstein was in Albany from New York this week for a hurried conference with his local manager, George Roberts. There is a report going the rounds that Mr. Berinstein will shortly pick up another house in this vicinity.

There was a big dinner in Schenectady on Thursday night, November 23, when J. J. Walker, owner of the Barcli, treated some thirty of his employes to turkey and all the fixin's. The affair was in the nature of the second anniversary of the house and took place at Sirker's banquet hall. All the newspapermen were on hand also, with the result that Mr. Walker received plenty of free advertising.

Sunday movies will not prevail in Ballston Spa. William E. Benton, who opened the Capital Theatre there on November 21, secured a permit for Sunday shows from the village board of trustees. No sooner did the news get around than there came a howl of protest from many of the residents and the proposition was denounced from several of the pulpits. Mr. Benton decided to ask the board to rescind its action, and the threatened storm has now subsided.

School children in Watertown, who were without the price of admission, enjoyed "Penrod" at the Avon last Wednesday as the guests of Manager Charles Sesonske. The house was packed. Children from the orphanages were also present.

Plans have been made for adding a new stage to the Strand Theatre in Carthage, N. Y., which has lately been taken over by the Schine interests.

According to Paul Alberts, of the Albany Theatre in Schenectady, the last three weeks have been the best since the house reopened on September 2, after being closed for nearly five months in a strike with the stagehands. Incidentally, the union won out. Business has picked up in wonderful shape in Schenectady, and all of the theatres are now doing well.

The Riverfront Incorporation, of Troy, has filed a lease running for twenty years for the location in River street, upon which the Mitchell H. Mark Company of Buffalo is erecting the Troy Theatre. The rental of the property will be $32,500, to which is to be added 30 per cent. of the receipts from the property.

"The Kentucky Derby" went over big in Saratoga this week, when shown by Goldsmith & Harrigan at the Palace. The racing town was plastered with 24-sheets, and the picture played to crowds that jammed every available inch of space all three days.

William Milligan, who handles the Broadway, in Schuylerville, was in Albany this week booking pictures.

L. L. Connor, of the Victory Theatre in Cambridge, N. Y., spent a day in Albany this week in booking coming attractions. There is plenty of building going on in Cambridge and Mr. Connor admits that he is making good money with a feature, a news reel and a comedy for 25 cents. The best money-maker of the fall, according to Mr. Connor, has been "Smilin' Through."

Mrs. Dennis Regan, who has been running the Star in Greenwich for four years, announces that she has bought the property in which the theatre is located.

"Under Two Flags" has been booked at the Leland in Albany for the week of December 11, and Manager Perrin is making plans to put across some of the heaviest exploitation of the year. Mr. Perrin is very partial to such pictures as "Human Hearts" and "Under Two Flags," for up until a year ago he had always been associated with theatres playing the legitimate. Naturally enough, when he took over the management of the picture theatre, he liked to book the film versions of plays which had cashed in big in the years gone by.

Here's how some of the features at the Albany, Schenectady, panned out, according to Paul Alberts, owner of the house:

"Man from Home," "Borderland"—both flopped bad.

"Blood and Sand"—nice business for entire week.

"The Storm"—fair.

"The Young Rajah"—big business for the first two days and then fell flat.

"Loves of Pharaoh"—very poor.

This Buffalo Theatre Tries Special Costumes for Ushers

Says the press notice for the Olympic Theatre, Buffalo: "As is the custom at the Olympic Theatre the ushers will be costumed in keeping with the feature." One editor inquired if the attraction was "Adam and Eve."

Howard J. Smith has resigned as a member of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association. Mr. Smith is president of the local unit of the national M. P. T. O. A.

The Buffalo City Planning Commission has given its consent to James Cardina of the Kensington Theatre to build an addition to the house. Mr. Cardina will extend the theatre to the rear 42 feet, giving the house an additional 250 seats. Business must be good, eh, Jim.

Patrick J. Kelley, 55 years old, proprietor of the Hi-Art Theatre, Lockport, N. Y., was found dead in his room in the Niagara Hotel in the Lock City on the morning of November 23. Kelley was formerly a Buffalo man but had resided in Lockport for the past 20 years.

Deputy Chief Marnon of the Buffalo police department has put the ban on the giving away of candy, groceries, etc., as prizes to holders of lucky numbers in some of the smaller houses of the city. Marnon says that he has received many complaints that this practice has been carried on to stimulate business. He declares the practice a violation of the lotteries law.

The Abbott Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., has filed papers in the Erie county clerk's office stating that the capital of the company is $54,000. The directors are Harry Abbott, Jacob Lavene, Roy Van and Conrad V. Brunner.

H. Houghton, owner of the Little Hippodrome and Keith's Theatres in Buffalo, has nego-

He Cried "Wolf!" Too Often

R. A. Czerney, of Kent, Wash., has pulled so many good exploitation stunts that when a runaway horse proceeded to stampede all over his car, just a block from the theatre, recently, a large crowd of spectators gathered to enjoy his latest "thrill." Czerney was mussed up a bit, and the car doesn't even answer to its name.

He is still trying to explain that it wasn't a frameup, but can't get away with it as he was playing "Reported Missing" at the time and had just received some good newspaper publicity under the title of his attraction. Czerney says he was—nearly!

tiated a 30-weeks' lease of the Batavia Opera House, Batavia, N. Y. He will show pictures.

James Cranideas, of Affiliated Theatres, Inc., of Olean, N. Y., has returned to Brooklyn. He may sell his interest in the theatrical company.

Mike Woods, of Peterson & Woods, operating several houses in Jamestown, N. Y., announces that the company's new Strand will be opened to the public about January 1.

The theatre in Tioga, N. Y., has been closed permanently due to poor patronage.

Eddie Woods has succeeded John Fennyvessy as manager of the Family Theatre in Rochester, according to word reaching Buffalo's Film Row.

Lyman Beecher has taken over the New Linden Theatre in Lyndonville, N. Y. He has booked a great line of pictures for the entertainment of folks in the town this winter.

The American Legion Post has opened a new theatre in Wayland, N. Y. The two stores in front of the building will be used as the town library.

George Kellogg, who operates the theatre in Canisteo, N. Y., has taken over the houses in Dalton and Angelica, N. Y., both of which have been closed.

It is reported that Syd Allen, of Medina, is so busy attending all the social affairs in his town that he just about gets time to count the box office receipts each evening.

Frank Leon has resigned as organist at the Elmwood Theatre. Manager Elmer C. Winegar has installed two new Simplex machines and a new luminous screen.

Charlie Hayman, head of the Cataract Theatre Corporation operating the new Strand and Cataract Theatres in Niagara Falls, N. Y., is driving to Buffalo these days in a new Holmes air-cooled sedan. Mr. Hayman announces that he will bring Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar and Mischa Elman to the Strand for a series of special concerts this winter.

Arthur Amm, house manager of the New Eastman Theatre in Rochester, was in town last week, visiting old friends along Film Row and his old job, the North Park. Mr. Amm said that Daniel Frohman visited the Eastman last week.

Chas. Neidhart Recovering; Linton Plans Utica Theatre

Charles Neidhart, manager of the Park Theatre, Utica, N. Y., owned by the Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company of Springfield, Mass., is recovering from a serious attack of pleurisy. He soon will return to his managerial duties. Joseph Raymond, formerly of the Victory Theatre, Holyoke, Mass., temporarily is in charge of the Park.

W. H. Linton, one of the foremost up-state New York exhibitors, is planning the erection of a large theatre in Utica, N. Y., on the site of the present Hippodrome Theatre, which is under his control. A company has been formed and former Mayor James D. Smith is president. The house will be known as the Criterion. Stock now is being offered for sale.

Robbins' Majestic Theatre, Utica, N. Y., is playing the Fox, Metro and Universal specials on a percentage scale and doing a good business. The Majestic is the old legitimate house and not well adapted to the presentation of pictures. Clifford Servatius, formerly with the Wilmer & Vincent houses in Utica, is manager of the Majestic.

The Star Theatre, motion pictures exclusively, in Rome, N. Y., owned for several years by Shane & Kaufman, has been acquired by the owners of the new Strand and Family Theatres, Rome. All three houses now are being operated on Sunday.

Philip L'Hereux, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre, Troy, N. Y., now is managing director of the New Capitol Theatre, in Troy.

World Premieres Common Happenings in San Francisco

Owing to the fact that the production of moving pictures at San Francisco is showing such a remarkable growth, world premiere presentations of feature films are becoming quite common in local theatres. "The Forgotten Law," which was produced here by Max Graf, had its first showing anywhere at Loew's Warfield Theatre and did a fine business despite inclement weather.

"Hunting Wild Game in Africa With Gun and Camera" is to receive its premiere shortly in the Century Theatre, which has been taken over and refurnished by Ackerman & Harris at a cost of many thousand dollars. This picture was produced in the heart of Africa by H. A. Snow, a local man, and promises to be one of the hits of the season. Eight film companies are producing here and in a number of instances local theatres have arranged for the first showing of features of merit.

Sam Harris, of Ackerman & Harris, who will shortly open the Century Theatre on Ellis street, as a picture house, announces that a policy has been adopted that will be quite at variance to the one usually followed. There will be no set scale of admission prices, these being fixed according to the subject. For instance, $1 will be the top price for "Hunting Wild Game in Africa With Gun and Camera," while 50 cents will be the most charged for "Oliver Twist," which will follow the African production. There will be no news reels, no comedies, no short fill-in subjects, the feature selected comprising the show. The house will be managed by William J. Casey, until recently manager of the Hippodrome.

Milton F. Samis, until recently director of publicity for the California, Imperial and Granada theatres, San Francisco, has been promoted to the position of house manager of the California and in addition will handle the publicity work of this theatre. He succeeds Charles Pincus, who has been transferred to the Portola Theatre as house manager. This house will be closed shortly, remodeled and reopened before the holidays as a high-class, long run house.

Ben F. Simpson, who went to Honolulu six months ago to manage the New Hawaii Theatre of the Consolidated Amusement Company, has returned to San Francisco and is considering offers to resume his place on Film Row.

Joseph F. Enos, for some time manager of the Portola, has returned to the Frolic Theatre as manager.

The three theatres at Monterey, Cal., owned by William P. Wobber, the Strand, Star and Monterey, have been purchased by Robert McNeil and E. H. Emmick, of San Francisco, who assume possession the first of December.

A splendid picture theatre is to be erected at Twenty-third avenue and East Fifteenth street, Oakland, Cal., by A. E. King, who already has two houses in that city.

An organ is being installed in the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, and day and night shifts are working to get the instrument in place before the holidays.

F. Leal has opened a new picture house at Irvington, Cal.

Irvin Long, at one time with the California Theatre, San Francisco, and later with the State Theatre at Oakland, has been made manager of the Hippodrome, San Francisco.

Thieves recently effected an entrance into the safe of the New Lyceum Theatre, San Francisco, and made away with $617.30 in cash and $219.15 in checks.

The Peerless Theatre, 148 Third street, San Francisco, conducted by Aaron Goldberg, is being improved by the addition of a handsome marquee.

C. W. Wright, of the Rose Theatre, Roseville, Cal., visited San Francisco's Film Row recently to make advance bookings and then went on to Los Angeles.

Joseph Gottstein, owner of a string of picture houses in the Pacific Northwest, was a recent visitor at San Francisco.

Lining the Daddies Up for Review

In the next issue we are going to review the oldtime exhibitors whose histories we have carried in Regional News and Gossip, and see just what's what up to the present time.

ROSE O THE SEA WAS ALL LIT UP

H. B. Clarke, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, got his flashing light by attaching a strong bulb to an oscillating fan in the lantern. It gave a strong effect.

Shubert in Milwaukee Fails in Its Attempted "Comeback"

An attempted "comeback," after its failure of last spring which threw the show into bankruptcy, proved of short duration for the Shubert Theatre here, when after a combination picture and stock program had been shown for approximately a month, it closed its doors again on November 21.

Frances McHenry, leading woman in the stock cast, immediately announced that plans are on foot to reopen the house under a new policy in the near future, but whether pictures will be shown again she would not reveal. A. C. Niggemeyer, manager of the show on the two occasions when the theatre was closed, has gone to Chicago to engage in new ventures.

The Shubert is one of the oldest houses in the city, it having long been the home of stock companies. The combination stock and movie show was in the nature of an experiment in Milwaukee.

The Milwaukee Exhibitors Association, at its next meeting, is expected to consider a resolution now before the city council, which would limit the amount of film that may be kept in projection booths of picture theatres.

Not more than four reels of slow burning film, in an approved type of metal container, would be allowed in the booth under the proposed regulation which also makes it compulsory to have an approved type of liquid fire extinguisher, of not less than a quart capacity, on hand.

The safety division of the Milwaukee Association of Commerce is sponsoring the resolution.

An innovation in picture policies here was announced last week by Leo A. Landau when he made public a decision to show the same picture at his two downtown houses simultaneously. Besides the picture, the rest of the program in the two theatres, including music and supplementary features, will be identical.

Mr. Landau's theatres are the Garden, at Third street and Grand avenue, and the Alhambra, a block away at Fourth street and Grand avenue. The feature picture to be shown at the two places is Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country."

"No theatre in Milwaukee is large enough to hold the crowds who will want to see it, so I have decided upon the double showing," Mr. Landau announced after viewing a private screening of the photoplay. Tickets sold in either theatre will be redeemable in the other, Mr. Landau said.

St. Louis Showmen Consider Another Booking Combination

St. Louis may have another booking combination before the close of another week. Owners and managers of several of the smaller houses of the city have been holding repeated conferences during the past ten days, and it is rumored that some interesting developments are in the offing.

Details are lacking.. Those in the know decline to comment for publication or otherwise. As always, rumors are aplenty. But it is believed that if the present negotiations are consummated and apparently they will be unless there is an eleventh hour hitch, a number of theatres will contract for their films through a central office in the very near future.

A common law trust to be known as the McFall Film Production Company has filed its declaration of trust with the St. Louis recorder of deeds. The company's capital will be $30,000 and its intentions are to produce films. The trustees named in the papers are: S. McFall, Jr.; William Holmes, S. McFall, Sr., F. O. Brown and William Guinn.

The William Fox Liberty has booked "I Am the Law" for the week of December 2.

Contracts were signed this week for a third run of George Beban and "The Sign of the Rose" at the Delmonte Theatre.

There was a slight fire at the Hickory Theatre, Hickory street near Jefferson avenue, shortly after midnight, November 23. The blaze presumably started from an overheated furnace and burned a hole through the floor. The damage has been repaired.

Peace prevails once more between the Belleville theatres and their musicians. An agreement was reached the past week whereby music will be resumed. Concessions are said to have been made by both sides. The houses, including the Washington, Lincoln and Lyric were without music for many weeks.

Three bandits who held up H. A. Jones, manager of the Sedalia Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., and W. W. Perry, a friend, in the theatre office shortly before midnight, November 20, have not been apprehended. They took $35 from Jones and a diamond ring and diamond Elks' pins from Perry.

The bandits wanted Jones to open the safe. He pleaded ignorance of the combination. They then bound and gagged Jones and Perry and went to work on the strong-box, but failed to open it. Finally they fled. Jones and Perry were found by police and released a few hours later.

Out-of-town callers at the local exchanges the past few days included: Dominick Frisni, Taylorville, Auburn and Kincaid; J. Spaulding, of Taylorville and Litchfield; Joe Fassero, Litchfield; C. C. Cravens, Rex Theatre, Lilbourne, Mo.

James M. Drake, manager of the Lyric Theatre, East St. Louis, has resigned. Phil Cohen has not named his successor as yet. Drake formerly owned the Eureka Theatre here and prior to that was manager of the Delmar Theatre.

The Margarette Theatre, at 7300 Virginia avenue, has been re-opened. Fred Hoelzer, who also owns the Ivory Theatre, is interested in the Margarette, which was dark for many months.

Al Bromley plans to open his Aubert Theatre, Aubert and Easton avenues, within the next few weeks. Workmen are rushing the work to finish on time.

Mack Davis Forced to Delay Opening Washington Theatre

Unavoidable delay caused a last minute postponement of the opening of Mack J. Davis' new Mack Theatre at Port Angeles, Wash., from November 18 to 24. "Remembrance" was the opening attraction, augmented by "The Steeplechaser," a Mermaid comedy.

Al Raleigh, manager of the Columbia Theatre, Portland, has resigned to write titles for the Kiser Studios of that city, it is reported.

"Sherlock Holmes" drew thousands to the Strand, which did the largest Monday's business in months. On Sunday, the lineup lasted from the early matinee well through the evening, good tie-ups resulting from the Times articles on Conan Doyle and spiritualism.

The Armory, Gennessee, Idaho, is reported closed.

Carnes Hall, Pilot Rock, Oregon, was recently burned.

In co-operation with the city's public libraries, in commemoration of National Children's Book Week, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was donated by Famous Players for a free children's matinee showing at the Strand, Seattle, November 18.

Manager John Hamrick has secured "Tess of the Storm Country" for exclusive Seattle showings and will offer it starting November 25 at regular evening prices of 50 cents to all Blue Mouse patrons.

McGill Is Smiling These Days

J. A. McGill, an enterprising exhibitor, winged his way up Seattle Film Row recently, wearing a smile that refused to be banished.

It was like this. McGill loads his projection machine onto his trusty automobile and drives up to the Liberty Theatre, Port Orchard, Wash., or the Washington Veterans' Home at Retsil, as the case may be. Here he gives a show that has been well papered throughout the community, doing a nice little business. When he operates at a hall not properly equipped for projection, he connects up with the juice from his car, and presto! his patrons get the best and latest features.

With "The Storm" Mr. McGill did the most remarkable business of his career as an exhibitor, playing two nights at Port Orchard and one at Retsil. People drove in from Olalla, sixteen miles distant, and within a radius extending as far as Gig Harbor, twenty-three miles away. McGill didn't know what to do with all of 'em.

McGill gets wonderful co-operation from his local newspapers, and claims that in the three years he has been serving the people of his district, new history has been made. It was quite the fashion in earlier days for everyone to go over to Bremerton for their movies. McGill gives them the best and newest, and Bremerton no longer finds it profitable to even advertise its attractions in Port Orchard. McGill has built a nice home and is a highly respected member of the community.

Los Angeles

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" is in its third week at Grauman's Rialto Theatre and still going strong, while "Robin Hood" is still packing them in at Grauman's new Hollywood Egyptian Theatre for the fifth week.

Sol Lesser has announced a merger between the Western Pictures Corporation, the Principal Pictures Corporation and the West Coast Theatres, comprising sixty theatres in Southern California. This will co-ordinate the producing and exhibiting activities of the first, the producing functions of the second and the exhibition facilities of the chain of West Coast theatres.

Under the executive management of Mr. Lesser and the business and studio management of Mike Rosenberg and Arthur Bernstein, respectively, the conjoined interests will make at least twelve pictures annually. The holding organization will be Principal Pictures Corporation, comprising M. Gore, Rosenberg, Adolph Ramish and Lesser, who will continue as president and also act as executive director.

Toledo Showmen Optimistic Over the Sunday Situation

The Findlay Ministerial Association, which backed the unsuccessful fight in mayor's court against Sunday pictures, is expected next week to carry the case to common pleas court. The favorable decision of the jury for the picture theatre men will be followed by operation of all theatres on Sunday from now on, managers announce.

Doc. Horater, the popular manager of the Pantheon and Alhambra Theatres, is again on the job. "Doc" has been ill for some time with a bad case of pleurisy.

Billy Exton is again with us as the publicity man for Eddie Zorn at the Temple Theatre. Billy has been spending the summer with the Sells' circus and will devote the winter months to handling the publicity for the Temple.

Mrs. Lulu T. Gleason, who was elected one of Toledo's state representatives on the Republican ticket in spite of the campaign made against her by various exhibitors, announces that she will not make any attempt to force the closing of picture houses in Toledo on Sundays, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

Ora Brailey, manager of the Princess Theatre, is the new golf champion of the Inverness Club. In the final 36-hole match he defeated Harold Webber, the former champion, 2 and 1.

Business conditions at the Toledo movie houses has been decidedly off color during the past month with the exception of the Rivoli, where Manager Howard Fageley has been packing them in. Other movie managers, however, are confident that December and January will show rapid increase in attendance and that before long business will be above normal again.

Miss Elsa Whitmer, treasurer of the Saxon Auditorium Theatre, and Neil Hamilton, film actor, were married in New York this week.

As a protest against the ankle length frock, Toledo girl ushers of the local movie houses have formed a short skirted union for the purpose of eliminating the flapping, vampy, hampering gown.

Richmond, Va., Conditions Are Far from Encouraging

Conditions among the theatres in Richmond, Va., are not at all encouraging, although business has been worse—and it has been much better at various times in the past. None of the theatres is getting all of the business away from the others—it's simply a game of nip and tuck. Whoever has the picture that appeals to the largest element gets the crowd from week to week and no one seems to be able to pick a consecutive string of winners, it is reported.

The Colonial, formerly rated as a notch below the Bijou, has just installed a twelve-piece orchestra, whereas the Bijou has only eight. It has consistently played the lighter pictures, leaving the heavier, more pretentious productions to its sister theatre, the Bijou, under the same management. The new orchestra did not serve to increase business the first week, the entire week playing to very low business. The Bijou for the same week enjoyed fair business all week, with even less exploitation. The Broadway, belonging to Pryor Brothers, is playing to fair business with no orchestra at all, only an organ to furnish music for the motion pictures.

Some of the highly rated superspecials are falling flat in Richmond. "Nero," after extensive advance exploitation, fell flat at the Bijou. "Silver Wings" went so bad that it was taken off of a week's run after the third day; however, "Monte Cristo," another Fox special, did well. "Rich Men's Wives" at the same theatre drew very good business, and the record for the season so far is held by "Manslaughter."

The new theatre being built by Pryor Brothers, owners of the Broadway, will not be ready before May, 1923, progress being retarded by difficulty in obtaining shipments of material. This house will seat 2,200, by far the largest in the city.

P. L. Vann, who formerly operated the Plaza, at Greenville, Ala., has sold that theatre and will open a new one next month. It will be the Greenville Opera House and will seat 650. He reports general conditions much improved in Alabama.

North Carolina is rapidly lining up its principal cities in the Better Films movement, following closely the Atlanta plan which is being spread abroad through the agency of the Southern Enterprises' public relations representative, H. Turner Jones. In Raleigh and Greensboro committees are already being organized. Mrs. T. W. Bickett has taken temporary chairmanship in Raleigh and W. C. A. Hammel, who has charge of the amusement board of the city, is sponsoring the movement.

Definite date for the mid-winter meeting of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. has not yet been set, owing to the illness of Secretary Henry B. Varner, of Lexington. The mid-winter convention is usually held about the middle of December. The place of meeting this year will be Greensboro, the O. Henry Hotel being convention headquarters.

Strange how many things E. F Dardine, Charlotte's champion combination theatre and exchang manager, is doing these days t break into this palladium of personalities. He's taken up golf nov —and that's worth mentioning especially to those who know him It all came about when Jule Levy, district manager, and F. J McConnell, manager of the seria department of Universal, visitec Charlotte to look over the exchange and Dardine's Strand Theatre. Dardine has a beautiful home in Myers Park which boasts one of the most exclusive and finest courses in the state, and those two birds from the home office actually sold him the idea that he could do it—and he did!

Hundreds of friends will regret to learn that Colonel Henry B. Varner, of Lexington, N. C., has been confined to his room for almost three weeks with a multiplicity of boils from which he suffered intensely.

Boston's Capitol Will Open December 4, Gordon Reports

The newest of metropolitan Boston's large picture theatres will open its doors to the public in a week now. The official opening has been set as Monday, December 4. The house is the latest in the widely known chain owned and operated by the Olympia Theatres, Inc., of which Nathan H. Gordon is president. The building is the last word in theatre design, with attention given primarily to the comfort and safety of the patrons. It has been named the Capitol and will seat more than 1,500.

The Olympia chain is a purely New England organization, owners, directors and executives being all New England business men. The directors are: George L. De Blois, George U. Crocker, Lee M. Friedman, Nathan H. Gordon, Hiram E. Miller, Al A. Rosenbush, Max Shoolman, Gerald G. E. Street, Frederic H. Taber and Patrick F. Lydon.

Speaking of the Park, it has been well nigh remade for the occasion. The box office, which normally stands at the lobby entrance, like any well bred picture house, was moved inside and installed at the side to leave a clear lobby. The lobby has been completely hung in expensive tapestries, with a predominance of things characteristic of the ages of chivalry. Rugs and carpets cover the floor.

Many of the central Boston houses have been blossoming out of late with new dress in the shape of additional electric signs. Both the Modern and Beacon have made some additions, and the State and Orpheum, Loew houses, have added bright and shiny runners under the marquis just over the lobby entrance. The Park, where "When Knighthood Was in Flower" is playing, is almost completely hidden behind a huge automatic sign that covers the entire front of the building and extends up for two stories.

Griffith's "One Exciting Night," in keeping with the Griffith policy, has been announced to close at the Tremont Temple in two weeks. It has been doing S. R. O. business.

Boston fans were lucky again last week. In addition to the two aforementioned specials they had many good pictures to make up their weekly entertainment. "Enter Madame" and "The Young Rajah" at the State, "The Man Who Played God" at the Boston, "The Curse of Drink" at the Globe, "Under Two Flags" at the Fenway, and "Gray Dawn" and "When Husbands Deceive" at the Modern and Beacon theatres. The suburban houses all carried good bills.

Toronto's "Hip" Reopened; Clarence Robson, Manager

Shea's Hippodrome, City Hall Square, Toronto, re-opened November 25 as the leading theatre of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation chain throughout Canada, with "The Young Rajah," starring Rodolph Valentino. The entire staff of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, formerly the head theatre of the corporation, was moved over to the Hippodrome, the Regent being closed the night before for an indefinite period. Clarence Robson, at the Regent for three years, took over the "Hip" as manager, while Jack Arthur transferred to the new headquarters as musical supervisor. The Regent concert orchestra was increased from 22 to 30 pieces in the change-over, making it the largest permanent theatre orchestra in the Dominion, it is stated.

The Hippodrome had been dark for a week during which time marvellous changes had been made in the furnishings. The house, somewhat bare before, now presents a picture of luxurious surroundings with rich tables, chairs, paintings vases and other furniture, as well as many large rugs and drapings and mural tapestries. A handsome new stage setting was also installed. The theatre was recently equipped with a mammoth pipe organ which is credited with being the largest in Canada.

C. W. Smith, assistant manager at the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, has been appointed manager of the Empress Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, an important house of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation chain. Before leaving Winnipeg, Mr. Smith was tendered a fine farewell party at the Winnipeg Capitol. Some years ago, he was manager of the Pantages Theatre at Calgary and he also served three years in the North-West Mounted Police.

The Pastime Theatre, a modern and attractive theatre at New Toronto, Ontario, suffered damage to the extent of $1,000 in a fire on November 25 from an unknown cause. The manager of the theatre is L. Rosefield.

An important concession has been secured by Winnipeg exhibitors from the Manitoba Provincial Government in the obtaining from government officials, Hon. Mr. Black, Provincial secretary, and T. Bevington, of an agreement to remove the provincial amusement tax on all theatre admission tickets for children up to 35. It is hoped this action will be ratified by the Manitoba Legislature.

Winnipeg exhibitors have also asked for a special revision of the amusement tax on tickets selling for 15 and 35 cents to adults, but this request has not yet been granted. The theatre men also desire to secure a rebate of 10 per cent. on the total amount of tax revenue turned over to the government, this portion to pay for the cost of collecting the assessment for the Province.

The first important presentation of "The Man from Glengarry," the Canadian feature just completed by Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., will be at the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa. Harry Brouse, owner of the theatre and also prominent in First National circles, has booked the Ralph Connor story for two weeks.

Two picture men of Ottawa appeared in the role of public speakers during the week of November 20. Raymond S. Peck, director of the Exhibits and Publicity Bureau, Department of Trade and Commerce, delivered an address on "Selling Canada to the World" before the Rotary Club on November 23. Capt. Frank Goodale, manager of Loew's Ottawa Theatre, appeared before the Lions Club of Ottawa and talked on "Marriage as an Aid to Citizenship."

Walter Wallace New Member of Kansas M. P. T. O. Board

Walter Wallace, manager of the Orpheum and Lyceum theatres at Leavenworth, Kans., has been approved as the new member of the executive board of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas. Mr. Wallace fills the vacancy made by R. G. Liggett, who is now president of the organization.

The executive board remained in session nearly a whole day. M. Van Praag's resignation as president was formally accepted, the legislative program completed and financial plans made.

E. L. Valentine, of the Lyric Theatre, Girard, Kans., was in Kansas City recently.

I. W. Maple, of the Maple Theatre, Albany, Mo., was also visiting some of the exchanges last week.

John E. Lewis announced this week the sale of the Lewis Theatre at Independence, Mo., to Warwick T. Boles and George Minor, who have been operating the theatre. The sale includes a lot 50 by 165 feet. The building fronts 115 feet. The new owners said they would extend the building south to cover the entire lot.

Dr. J. L. Rich, who runs a picture theatre at Altamont, Mo., dropped into town the other day and looked over some of the new releases.

H. A. Jones, house manager for the Sedalia Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., was held up by three men shortly before midnight November 19 and robbed of $35. A friend, W. V. Perry, was robbed of a diamond ring. The hold-up was in the theatre office and the robbers demanded that Jones open the safe, but he did not know the combination.. Jones and Perry then were gagged and bound with ropes and an unsuccessful attempt was made by the robbers to force the safe's combination.

Stanley N. Chambers, directing manager of the newly organized Consolidated Amusement Company, Wichita, Kans., was in Kansas City last week. He announced that the Wichita Theatre in Wichita had been closed as the new company decided there were too many seats in Wichita.

S. A. Andrews, of the Gem Theatre at Olathe, Kas., was seen at various film exchanges recently.

KIMONOS AND CURIOS WORK FOR "EAST IS WEST"

The Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, used a real Japanese wedding gown, borrowed from a student, and built this up with the costume plates loaned through the First National.

Roy Pierce, also known as Claude McFadden, indicted recently by the grand jury on a charge of shooting David Harding in the attempted hold-up August 2 of the Liberty Theatre, was arraigned yesterday before Judge Latshaw. He pleaded not guilty. His bond was fixed at $5,000 pending his trial December 11.

Indiana

A Sunday "movie" war is again in progress at Wabash, Ind. Sunday picture shows were resumed there last Sunday and as a result affidavits were filed against William and I. H. Dickson, managers of the Wabash Theatre. Both were released on bond.

Last spring the Sunday shows were fought by the Ministerial Association and after two convictions had been obtained in the police and circuit courts, the Sunday shows were discontinued, although the proceeds of the shows at that time were given to charity.

The theatre managers contend they are being discriminated against because Sunday football is played and various groceries, drug stores, poolrooms and other places of business are permitted to remain open.

No effort was made to advertise the show last Sunday as an "educational feature," such as was done last spring, and no announcement was made that the proceeds would be given to charity. The police refused to arrest the theatre men until complainants had filed affidavits.

A committee of Wabash ministers conferred this week with the attorney-general at Indianapolis in regard to the case. The outcome of the conference was not made public.

Newton T. Miller, Indiana's State fire marshal, who is president of the Fire Marshals' Association of North America, has gone to Washington, D. C., to try to induce some member of the Congress to introduce a bill to "prohibit the importation, and the mailing, shipment, sending, carrying or transportation of inflammable films in interstate commerce." The bill was agreed on at a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Fire Marshals' Association at Chicago. It would become effective January 1, 1925.

The Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, has announced a change in prices, the new prices being a slight advance over the old ones. The new prices are: Evening, first floor, loges and boxes, 50 cents; evening, mezzanine floor and balcony, 30 cents; matinees, entire house 30 cents. Previous prices were 40 cents for first floor, loges and boxes, 25 cents for mezzanine floor and balcony and 25 cents for entire house at matinees.

Acclaim Film

Great enthusiasm is said to have been demonstrated over the Associated Exhibitors' feature, "Breaking Home Ties," presented by E. S. Manheimer, which was shown to a company that filled the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor, New York, Tuesday afternoon. The occasion was a special showing of this six-pert attraction, and those present, principally exhibitors and their friends, were guests of Associated.

The story is built around the prayer-song, "Eili, Eili," and is said to have an intensely dramatic plot, which glorifies family devotion.

Preparing to Make "French Doll"

Preparations are being made by Tiffany Productions, Inc., makers of the Metro photoplays in which Robert Z. Leonard presents Mae Murray, for this star's forthcoming appearance in "The French Doll," a screen version of Ray Goetz's big Broadway hit of a season ago.

Mr. Leonard and film editors are also attending to the cutting and titling of "Jazzmania," which recently was completed at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Gov.-Elect Smith to Be Honored

"In the Spotlight" is the title of the special attraction, which will be presented at the Theatre Owners' Supper Dance at Hotel Astor on December 3. It is understood that this will be a novelty in which all the stars will appear.

Governor-elect Alfred E. Smith will be the guest of honor.

Every producing or distributing company will be represented at the entertainment. It is stated that all previous records for advance ticket sales have already been eclipsed.

Paramount Company Back at Studio

Alice Brady and her company of Paramount players have returned to the Paramount Long Island studio from Miami, Fla., where they have been making exterior scenes for "The Leopardess," a Paramount picture adapted from Katherine Newlin Burt's novel of that name.

Many Novelties to Exploit "Dr. Jack"

Actuated by experience connected with the exploitation of other Harold Lloyd comedies, Pathe announces to exhibitors a highly attractive list of "Dr. Jack" novelties for use in keeping patron interest stimulated in the forthcoming feature-comedy production. For example, exhibitors showing "A Sailor-Made Man" are informed that Pathe supplied and they sold more than half a million of the famous Lloyd sailor hat. Feeling certain of breaking that record, the distributors of "Dr. Jack" are supplying a doctor's high hat, which is shipped flat in quantities and is quickly and easily made ready to wear. It bears in front the inscription, "Harold Lloyd in 'Dr. Jack,'" and on the back is space for the exhibitor's imprint.

It was foreseen that childrens' parades, with every urchin wearing one of these hats, would lack an obvious detail unless Harold Lloyd goggles were provided also. So this already popular novelty is ready in quantities equal to the anticipated demand.

As the interests peculiar to children come out strong in "Dr. Jack," exhibitors are enabled to equip their juvenile patrons with a "Harold Lloyd Happy Bag," a cardboard doctor's kit in miniature which is decorated with the comedian's picture and some fetching rhymes descriptive of the "joys" chasing the "glooms" off the premises. Showmen will at once see how readily these bags will effect tie-ups with local candy and novelty shops.

There is also a novelty herald in the shape of a playing card, the front of which is made up like a jack of spades, which figures in the film, over it being printed the scene where the old negro mammy reads the fortune of the "sick-little-well-girl." A large part of the back of the card contains information about the picture, with space for the exhibitor's imprint. This is a novelty intended for advance distribution, and will be mailed to every exhibitor in the country. Another novelty, from which much is expected, is not described here for the simple reason that it goes out as "a surprise package."

"Tess" Packs Two Houses Same Time

When Fred A. Miller of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, booked Mary Pickford's production of "Tess of the Storm Country," a United Artists Corporation release, he knew he had a big picture that was going to draw big, but he didn't expect to have to throw the California overflow into the Miller Theatre and pack that house also.

But that is what happened. The Los Angeles' public crowded into the California and jammed around it so persistently and continually that Mr. Miller had to do something to take care of those who clamored to see Miss Pickford in her new "Tess of the Storm Country" and couldn't get into the California.

So he sent another print into Miller's Theatre, and there he sent the overflow from the California, filling both houses to capacity at every showing. And at that, they were starting the first performance at ten thirty in the forenoon and giving six showings daily.

From Your Angle

"Newest Reviews and Comments" as well as "The Pep of the Program" are advance tips on the pictures you want to know about.

A review ought to be written from the exhibitor angle. It ought to give the exhibitor a line on the points in the picture that will appeal to or repel his audience.

All these needs are taken into account by the specialists who give their whole time and attention to telling you, in these departments, what the newest pictures—features, serials, short subjects—have to offer from your angle.

A 300% Picture

"There is only one thing to say about George Arliss in 'The Ruling Passion,'" wrote Robert J. Hock, of the Central Theatre, Goshen, New York, after he had shown this United Artists' release. And then he went on to say, "Every theatre should book it. George Arliss is 100 per cent.; his cast is 100 per cent.; his picture is 100 per cent. Total, 300 per cent. We wish to say for United Artists that their price was fair, their print excellent."

Cutting and Titling "Jazzmania"

Mae Murray has completed the enaction of the stellar role in "Jazzmania," to be presented by Robert Z. Leonard and released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

The new photoplay, scheduled for distribution about the third week in January, is now in the process of being cut and titled. Mr. Leonard directed.

The story is by Edmund Goulding, who wrote "Fascinaton" and "Broadway Rose." Like these two pictures mentioned, "Jazzmania" is also being made by Tiffany Productons, Inc.

Enid Bennett to Be in Leading Role

Enid Bennet has been signed by Arthur Sawyer of S-L (Sawyer-Lubin) pictures to enact the leading femininc role in the Metro-SL production of "Your Friend and Mine." Filming of this Willard Mack sketch is to be started within the next ten days at the Metro studios in Hollywood under the direction of Clarence G. Badger.

Makes Final Scenes for Meighan Film

Final scenes for Thomas Meighan's Paramount picture, "Back Home and Broke," by George Ade, have been filmed at the Paramount Long Island studio and the picture is now ready for editing and cutting. Mr. Ade is expected at the studio soon to help write the titles for his story.

Held for Second Week

"When the Desert Calls," a Ray C. Smallwood production for Pyramid Pictures, has been held over a second week at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre. Violet Heming is featured.

Celebrities Endorse "One Week of Love"

Unsolicited endorsements of the latest Selznick production "One Week of Love" are being received daily both at the home offices in New York and by President Myron Selznick at the Selznick Studios in Los Angeles, according to a statement made by David O. Selznick in a recent interview.

"Among the letters we particularly prize," said Mr. Selznick, "is one from Mr. Rupert Hughes addressed to Myron Selznick. Mr. Hughes says, in part: 'Rarely have I enjoyed a picture more than "One Week of Love." It opens with great vivacity and brilliance, then suddenly develops a situation that seizes and holds to the last moment. Elaine Hammerstein . . . meets every situation with remarkable power and restraint. Conway Tearle gives a magnificent performance. The conflict between the two characters . . . gives the picture high dramatic value. The production is gorgeous in its interiors and majestic in its landscapes. The photography and titling are perfect.'

"Mr. Phil Selznick, who is Field Executive for Select Pictures received a letter from Jack Dempsey a few days ago which is of more than ordinary interest for several reasons. In the first place Mr. Dempsey has maintained a steadfast policy not to endorse any picture. Another factor to be considered is that Mr. Dempsey has more than a passing interest in motion pictures because of his own activities on the screen. The champion saw 'One Week of Love' screened in Kansas City and wrote to Mr. Selznick after the showing: 'Was sorry that I did not get to see you after the screening as I wanted to tell you what I thought of the picture, but I saw so many exhibitors around you talking about the picture that I thought it best that I leave you alone.

"'I just want to tell you that if I packed the punch that "One Week of Love" does I would take Siki, Harry Wills, Brennan, Gibbons, Willard, Beckett and Carpentier in one ring and the massacre would be over before two rounds. Doc Kearns is still raving about the show and you know what a tough critic he is, although a wild movie fan.'"

Next Will Nigh Film Will Be Colored One

L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, after suggestions by Will Nigh, director of "Notoriety" and of three more feature productions to follow, have concluded a number of tests with an expert of colored film photography which may result in the use of natural color on their next Nigh feature.

The progress that this branch of photographic technique has met in the past few years led the producers to take advantage of the first step in film developing on their next release. The opportunity for color in Nigh's next picture was one of the factors in the contemplated adoption of natural color. Nigh's next picture will have unusual variety of scenery and shifting background. The use of color will bring out in bold relief the atmosphere and in general make the production as striking in its scenic beauty as in its dramatic strength.

The adoption of this new process in motion picture construction is taken as an indication of the producers' efforts to put forth nothing but the finest in picture creation and to avail themselves of every late device and invention in the production of their releases.

There are at present three important patentees, each of whom has a different process for coloring and tinting motion picture film. Weber & North have consulted all of them and have decided on the most feasible of the three. They expect to be in position to announce the success of their effort. If the color photog-

Universal to Send M. A. Chase Abroad

Maurice A. Chase, who has been eastern division sales manager for Universal during the past twelve months, will leave New York aboard the Aquitania early in December to be general manager for Universal in Continental Europe. He will be a liaison man between Universal and its European exchanges. His territory will embrace all European countries except the British Isles.

Universal's European business has become so great in the last year that it has become necessary to have closer co-operation between the various exchanges on that continent and the home offices in America, it is explained by James V. Bryson, Universal export manager. Universal has forty exchanges on the Continent and is arranging for others in Belgium, Portugal, Russia, Rumania, Bulgaria and Albania.

Goldwyn Production Praised by Critics

Goldwyn's production, "Hungry Hearts," based upon Anzia Yezierska's volume of short stories of the same title, was screened at the Capitol Theatre, New York, recently, and was received by the critics of the New Yark newspapers with the same enthusiasm that the reviewers on the motion picture trade journals had accorded it earlier after seeing it at private screenings, Goldwyn says.

"'Hungry Hearts' registered an emphatic hit," wrote Robert E. Sherwood in his review in the New York Herald. Rose Pelswick in the American said: "An appealing picture—a vivid account of immigrant life, with an understanding blend of humor."

R. W. Baremore, in the Telegraph, said: "'Hungry Hearts' is the best thing since 'Humoresque.' The Journal of Commerce stated: "Takes its place with the best of the year's screen offerings by virtue of its outstanding qualities of heart interest and amazing realism."

E. V. Durling in the Globe: "'Hungry Hearts' is one of the finest things of its kind ever done with any medium of expression." Journal: "The entire production is appealingly and sympathetically handled."

Metro Film Highly Praised by Critics

"The Forgotten Law," a Max Graf production made in San Francisco, received an enthusiastic ovation by newspaper critics when it made its world premiere at the Warfield Theatre, in the same city in which it was produced, Metro reports. Here are some of the extracts from reviews:

"Scored a big success. The Graf people are entitled to congratulations for the excellent work they have turned out," said the San Francisco Call and Post. "The picture is well made and is acted with virile power by a good cast," said the Chronicle. "Is a picture that will prosper on its own merits," stated the Examiner.

This photoplay was adapted by Joseph Franklin Poland from Caroline Abbott Stanley's novel, "A Modern Madonna." The direction was by James H. Horne.

National Campaign for Goldwyn Film

In connection with an early national advertising campaign for its first Marshall Neilan production, "The Strangers' Banquet," from Don Byrne's novel. Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will post a six-color twenty-four sheet poster in twenty-nine of the biggest cities in the country. The primary colors are black and red.

The poster was devised and executed by Howard Dietz, director of publicity and advertising for Goldwyn, and Hal Burrows of that firm's art department.

The advertising campaign for "The Strangers' Banquet" will begin in December, the release date having been fixed some time ago for December 31.

The poster features the director and the cast, which numbers twenty-five.

Schedules Two New Films for December

Associated Exhibitors says it has two smashing features for December release, each of them with an outstanding star. The first to appear, "Conquering the Woman," from the novel by Henry C. Rowland, is to be one of Florence Vidor's pictures, while in "A Bill of Divorcement," from Clemence Dane's stage play, Constance Binney is said to rise to new heights.

"Conquering the Woman," set for release December 10, is in six reels, and was directed by King W. Vidor.

"A Bill of Divorcement," which is in six reels, is to be Associated's Christmas week offering, December 24 having been fixed as the release date.

"A Bill of Divorcement," on the stage, is now touring the country after its all-season run last year in New York. The play ran for two years in London.

Walker Enters Ranks of Producers

Johnnie Walker, who was recently elevated to stardom by the Film Booking Offices of America, now makes his debut as a producer.

Walker has just secured the screen rights to H. C. Witwer's story, "The Fourth Musketeer," which appeared in the September issue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, this fascinating story will be used for his initial producing venture. In line with the usual Witwer stories, "The Fourth Musketeer" will be a story of sporting life. One of the big episodes on the play, according to Witwer, is based on an actual incident in the career of Bob Fitzsimmons.

The new producer-star has just completed his R-C production, "Captain Fly-By-Night," which is scheduled for December release on the F. B. O. program.

Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., will distribute the new Walker production.

Students Flock to "Knighthood"

Believing, says Cosmopolitan, that "When Knighthood Was in Flower" is the best historical motion picture ever made and that it offers exceptional opportunities for obtaining a graphic idea of Tudor times, four hundred and ninety-two students of the Evander Childs High School, 184th street and Creston avenue, saw the Cosmopolitan photoplay starring Marion Davies, at the Criterion Theatre, New York.

Because it was impossible to procure seats for all of them at one performance, the students viewed the film at four separate matinees.

Recommends it for Entire Family

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," the Cosmopolitan picture starring Marion Davies, has been recommended as a film for the entire family by the joint committee on better films from the Illinois Council of Parent-Teachers' Associations, the Illinois League of Women Voters and the Chicago City Woman's League.

Two Big Policies

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has taken out two $1,000,000 insurance policies—one on its newly engaged director, Eric von Stroheim, and one on June Mathis, recently engaged as editorial director.

Goldwyn was impelled to take out these two million dollar insurance policies because of the big productions in view, involving millions of dollars, in which Mr. von Stroheim and Miss Mathis may individually be concerned.

Lavish Scenes Made Abroad for Picture

Cosmopolitan says that all the artistry. perfection of detail and lavishness of production which featured the creation of its epoch-making photoplay, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," are now being employed in the making of "The Enemies of Women," a Cosmopolitan picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's latest and as many consider, his greatest romance,

Cosmopolitan sent an entire company to Europe on location for the making of the picture. The company spent six weeks in Monte Carlo, Nice and Paris, where the author located his story. The trip abroad brought the company into direct contact with Ibanez, and his assistance in the direction of many of the scenes taken abroad is considered invaluable.

In one of the palace scenes, beautiful women of various types predominate. In order that they would be every bit as beautiful as visualized by the author, Cosmopolitan engaged more than a score of Broadway's most famous stage beauties, including an octette of Ziegfeld "Follies" girls.

In picturizing this famous story as a super special, Cosmopolitan is said to have assembled a brilliant cast, directed by Alan Crosland. Featured are Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens, of "Humoresque" fame.

Public Finds More Than Melodrama in "Pawned"

Reports from the territory indicate that exhibitors are finding J. Parker Read, Jr.'s "Pawned," distributed by Select, much to their liking.

Filled with exciting and unusual action, "Pawned" was offered by the Select company as an out-and-out melodrama but reviews in the daily press indicate that it is being accepted as finer than that. The story, written by Frank L. Packard, first appeared in Munsey's Magazine. The printed version embodied considerable amount of serious thought in the author's mind when he wrote it.

Through his New York agent, Bob Davis, of Munsey's, Mr. Packard has provided the following statement which explains to some extent why "Pawned" is exciting so much comment:

"No one is independent of his fellow men, morally or socially. No one is sufficient unto himself. No one can live or act alone. We are all in pawn from the moment of our birth; we, in our millions, are the warp and woof of that strange fabric we call the community of life. And, as individual threads, as we break or hold, so does the life of that fabric endure. What you or I do must inevitably have its effect upon others—for good or evil—just as what others do must have an effect upon us. That, in its essence is 'Pawned.'

"Each one of us must play some part whether we will or no—and we are responsible for the part we play. It was ordained from the beginning that we could not be neutral in our relationships with those around us. Within every man exists a power which, despite himself, he must array either on the drab or on the sunlit side of life; but in him, and him alone, is vested the decision as to which of the two sides he shall choose. And so in 'Pawned' I have tried to picture, in miniature, the effect of some of these influences, as represented by human frailty and human strength of character, at work one upon the other—and out of that picture I have dared to hope the 'better part' would not be without its significance and its message."

Noted Dancer to Be in New Picture

Hannelore, considered by many the greatest dancer in Europe and who scored an unqualified success when she made her American debut recently in a recital at the Vanderbilt Theatre, has been engaged by Cosmopolitan Productions to appear in "The Enemies of Women," a picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's latest story, now being made under the direction of Alan Crosland.

To Begin Soon on "The Easiest Way"

Final preparations for the production of Eugene Walter's "The Easiest Way" by the Selznick Pictures Corporation with Theda Bara in the stellar role are actively under way at the Selznick home offices at 729 Seventh avenue.

Negotiations which have been pending with one of the best known directors in the industry are expected to be closed within a day or two. David Selznick, who will personally supervise the production as the first picture to be made by the newly created Selznick Eastern Producing Unit, has also tentatively cast the picture.

More Picture Accesories Now in Second Edition

The success of modern book publications is measured by the number of editions the publisher finds it necessary to get out to supply the public demand.

It doesn't happen often but the Selznick company are at present handling a photoplay which is showing its unusual success in much the same way. With "Love Is An Awful Thing," starring Owen Moore, not many months old the call has gone out for extra editions of many of the advertising accessories which were prepared for the purpose of helping the picture at exhibitors' box-offices. A second edition of the "Love Is an Awful Thing" is proving a surprise throughout the trade. It followed "Reported Missing," the previous Owen Moore starring vehicle, and despite the fact that "Reported Missing" has melodramatic and spectacular features which might have been expected to give it pre-eminence among all the Owen Moore releases, "Love Is an Awful Thing" is surpassing the splendid business which the earlier picture registered.

Crowds Go to See Pickford Film

Motion picture theatre-goers of Brooklyn, particularly Mary Pickford "fans," ammed the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, all last week to see "Tess of the Storm Country," says United Artists, and that in spite of the fact that the picture had a week's previous showing on Broadway and was being held over for a second week at the Mark Strand, New York.

Ask for Prints on C. B. C. Film

Proof of the interest with which the completion of "Only a Shopgirl" has been awaited is given this week by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation with word .that almost without a single exception every territorial holder of the Six Box Office Winners has already wired in his order for a number of prints to be rushed to him as soon as they can be pushed through at the laboratory.

Atmosphere Without Plot Divulgence

The musical prologue, built in tune with the feature, is the most graceful way of sliding into a picture without divulging its highlights or plot. Spoken words with a view to creating atmosphere for the feature invariably are very atmospheric, but also invariably and on their own initiative dim the effect of the picture's atmosphere and foretell its plot basis. Thus speaks Hyman, or Eddie, as he is popularly called, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre.

For "Tess of the Storm Country," wherein atmosphere lies thick, Hyman contrived a fetching prologue, or rather it was not a prologue, but merely an incidental vocal number that vaguely alluded to, and enhanced much, the feature.

The set is a fishing village, consisting of two set houses, fashioned after those in a scene of the picture. These are on either side of the stage. A worn picket fence connects the two, while set rocks, rising sun against a blue neutral background, fishing nets, and oars, and a boat were the other properties. For the front lighting the Nestrum and Klieg floods are medium green upon orchestra; on both sides of the orchestra pit are two transparent windows, also bathed in soft green. Four green entrance spots are focused entirely upon the ceiling. Three people were used in this number, who are costumed as Tess's father, "Tess" and Frederick Graves.

Schedules Them as "Exceptional"

Six attractions released by Associated First National are among the twenty "pictures worth waiting for" listed in "Exceptional Photoplays" issued by the National Board of Reviews for November. The pictures are Marshall Neilan's, "Minnie," "Oliver Twist," "Lorna Doone," "Brawn of the North," "The Masquerader," and "Day Dreams."

Lawrence Editing

First National has engaged Frank Lawrence to cut and edit the next Allen Holubar picture, "The White Frontier," starring Dorothy Phillips, and the new Maurice Tourneur production, "The Isle of Dead Ships," both of which are being made at the United Studios.

Ideas From Two Dollars Up

Is Wednesday night a poor night for you? No night ought to be a poor one if you show good pictures.

There is bound to be some way to attract your crowd and make your weakest day into one of your strongest.

In "Selling the Picture to the Public" you will find hundreds of such ideas. It is a department chuck full of ways for building up patronage. It is conceded to be the best of its kind.

You are bound to find something useful in it every week. It isn't limited to ideas that pull for the big house: the small-town theatre man can find stunts and workable ideas that can be used as they are, or adapted to his particular needs.

Your brother exhibitors are putting it over, and in "Selling the Picture to the Public" they tell you how it's done.

Read it. Make use of the ideas and stunts.

To Help Exhibitors by Big Advertising

Decided by the results that followed the big national advertising campaigns on Richard Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy," Constance Talmadge in "East is West" and Strongheart, the dog, in "Brawn of the North," Associated First National will go in strong for this kind of advertising on its big releases.

The five half-page advertisements written by Ellis Parker Butler in a magazine of national circulation on "East is West" have, it is said, given an extraordinary impetus to the patronage drawing power of this picture.

Associated First National is now preparing national advertising for John Stahl's big production, "The Dangerous Age," made under the management of Louis Mayer, and for the Richard Walton Tully production, "Omar, the Tentmaker," in which Guy Bates Post is starred.

Three pages will be used in the Saturday Evening Post not only to help exhibitors to sell "Omar, the Tentmaker" to the public but also to list those exhibitors who book this production between Dec. 11 and Jan. 6, between Jan. 7 and Feb. 3 and subsequent to Feb. 3.

Sunday newspapers are to be used in addition to the Saturday Evening Post in the heralding of "The Dangerous Age" throughout the country.

For Cosmopolitan Film

For the picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's "The Enemies of Women," now in production under the direction of Alan Crosland, Cosmopolitan has engaged the Salzedo Harp Trio, one of the most celebrated ensembles on the concert stage.

Dwan Starts Work on "Glimpses of the Moon"

Production of "The Glimpses of the Moon," Edith Wharton's popular novel, which is being translated to the screen by Allan Dwan, was started at the Paramount Long Island studio last week in a blaze of color and an investiture of exotic drapings.

The opening setting for this Paramount picture was a fashionable modiste shop in New York in which Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi, the featured actresses, get an opportunity to wear the smartest hats and gowns and lingerie that were obtainable from fashionable Fifth Avenue shops.

In addition to Miss Daniels and Miss Naldi, the cast for the picture includes such well known players as David Powell, Maurice Costello and Charles Gerrard.

Reports Arliss Picture Going Big

Bert Adler, personal representative of Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures' Corporation, has returned from a trip to Chicago, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Toledo, and Cleveland, where he visited the leading exhibitors in the interests of the current George Arliss production, "The Man Who Played God."

Mr. Adler reports that conditions are improving, especially employment conditions, which directly affect theatre business in most of the sections visited. He found that the popularity of Mr. Arliss had been enhanced in the Middle West through the successful run of his stage vehicle, "The Green Goddess" in Chicago. This attraction with Mr. Arliss in person is now touring the West.

Jack Holt in Three Corner Plot

For the first time during his career as a star in Paramount pictures, Jack Holt is playing in a photoplay with a triangle love plot. Previous to "The Tiger's Claw," his current picture, Holt has been seen in fast action pictures.

In "The Tiger's Claw," two women are in leading roles. One is Eva Novak, and the other is Aileen Pringle.

Publish Photoplay Edition of Novel

Grosset & Dunlap have published a photoplay edition of Kate Douglas Wiggin's "Timothy's Quest," illustrated with scenes from the picture which is distributed by American Releasing Corporation.

The Grosset & Dunlap edition is reported to have met with favor among exhibitors in arranging book store tie-ups.

"House of Solomon" Nearly Finished

"The House of Solomon," produced by Cardinal Pictures for distribution by American Releasing Corporation, is nearing completion at the Witman Bennett studios. It is directed by Lawrence C. Windom from the story and continuity by Val Cleveland.

It is described as a comedy-drama of character and chiefly concerns I. Solomon who begins as an East Side tailor and achieves a shop on Fifth Avenue.

J. Frank Shea Back from Boston

J. Frank Shea, exploiteer for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has returned from a visit to Boston and vicinity, where he went in conjunction with first run bookings and an extensive exploitation campaign on "Bulldog Drummond."

Mr. Shea reports that business conditions in Boston are good.

Claire Windsor Added

Claire Windsor, former Lois Weber and Goldwyn star, has been chosen for the role of Patricia in George Fitzmaurice's production of "Bella Donna," in which Pola Negri makes her American stellar debut for Paramount. With Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel, Miss Windsor, Macey Harlam and Claude King in the cast, Miss Negri's support, Paramount points out, comes about as near to being all-star as is possible.

Closes 30-Week Run

The longest continuous run of a motion picture in the history of Australia, and one of the longest on record anywhere, has recently come to an end at the Globe Theatre in Sydney. At this house, one of the largest in Australasia "The Sheik," a Paramount picture with Rodolph Valentino and Agnes Ayres, enjoyed an unprecedented run of twenty-four weeks, establishing a record that promises to stand for some time to come.

To add to this already notable achievement, the picture was transferred five blocks away to the Lyceum Theatre, where it continued to show for six more weeks, a total of thirty consecutive weeks.

F. P-L. Convention Going Along Fine

The district and branch managers and home office executives attending the semi-annual sales convention of the Paramount distribution department in Los Angeles last week were royally entertained during their sojourn in the film capital.

The mornings and afternoons were entirely given over to the business of the convention, with reports from the various district and branch managers, exhaustive discussions of booking, releasing and general sales problems and the completion of plans for the handling of the Paramount product to be released during the second six months of the current picture year.

On Wednesday one entire session was given over to a detailed description of the new pictures by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production. On Friday morning Cecil B. DeMille gave an address on the problems of the producer. At this session also the winners of the fifth annual Paramount Week prize awards were announced.

The social festivities of the convention were inaugurated by the big banquet held in the DeMille prehistoric set on the stage of the Lasky studio, at which an elaborate program of entertainment planed by Jerome Beatty and Herman Wobber was given by some of the stars and leading players in Paramount pictures. Wednesday night the members of the convention were the guests of Sid Grauman at the Hotel Alexandria. The combined orchestra of the Grauman theatres rendered a fine program of classical and popular music, Hugo Riesenfeld conducting one of the numbers on the invitation of Mr. Grauman. There were also singing and dancing numbers and impromptu speeches by Sid Grauman, Marcus Loew, Walter Hiers, Robert Cain, Conrad Nagel and others. Later on in the evening the entire party inspected Grauman's nearly completed Metro Theatre, one of the most magnificent structures of its kind in the country.

Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. Cecil B. DeMille entertained at a reception and dance at their beautiful home in Laughlin Park. This was the only open affair of the convention and was graced by the presence of the most representative group of motion picture celebrities in the history of Los Angeles. Among those present were Charles Chaplin, Gloria Swanson, Pola Negri, Jack Holt, Agnes Ayres, Claire Windsor, Dustin and William Farnum, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Bowes, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Ince, Jeanie Macpherson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eyton, Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, Abraham Lehr, Milton Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Victor H. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Wood, Mildred David, Hal Roach, Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Nagel, Winifred Kingston and scores of others.

Mr. and Mrs. DeMille were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky, Adolph Zukor and S. R. Kent.

On Friday the entire party visited the studio and on Saturday the day was spent in an automobile tour of the beautiful country south and east of Los Angeles made world-famous in motion pictures. Plans for the return trip included a day's stop-over at the Grand Canyon.

Film Critic Weds Leading Lady

Announcement has recently been made of the marriage of Robert E. Sherwood, whose keen understanding of photoplay technique has made his film criticisms in the magazine, "Life," a department of great interest, to Mary Brandon, leading lady in the Triart production, "The Bashful Suitor," released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

A Sale

Weiss Brothers, Clarion Photoplays, Inc., has sold the film exposé of "Sawing a Lady in Half" to Creole Enterprises, New Orleans, La., for the States of Louisiana and Mississippi. Included in this deal are certain towns in Texas, Florida and Arkansas. With this sale only four territories remain unsold.

"Harbour Lights" Is Finished

From England comes word of the enthusiasm with which Tom Terriss, who sailed four months ago for John Bull's island, regards "The Harbour Lights" which he has just completed.

Tom Moore plays the lead in this melodrama. The leading lady is Isobel Elsom.

"The Harbour Lights" will probably be shown in this country around the middle of December.

Will Soon Release Griffith Film

The necessity of closing the Apollo Theatre, New York, to permit remodelling the stage for a German production soon to go into that theatre has forced D. W. Griffith to shorten the Broadway run of his mystery picture, "One Exciting Night," from ten to eight weeks, and this is the final week of the showing. The production will shortly be released by United Artists Corporation.

To Be Leading Woman

Lila Lee, the leading woman for Thomas Meighan in his latest picture, "Back Home and Broke," which will be released soon by Paramount, is having a short vavation in New York while waiting for her new role which also will be in support of Meighan. Miss Lee is doing her Christmas shopping early and seeing all the worthwhile shows along Broadway.

Producers to Handle "Hypocrites"

The filming of "Hypocrites," the famous Henry Arthur Jones story and play, is nearing completion in the Hollandia Studios, and Producers' Security Corporation, which will handle releasing arrangements for it in America, are anxiously awaiting the first prints.

The director, Charles Giblyn, and the star, Wyndham Standing, were sent to Holland several weeks ago to secure important scenes, and advance reports state that "Hypocrites" will be one of the greatest features of the year.

Producers' Security handles all of Hollandia's product in America.

Given High Rating

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has given the Associated Exhibitors feature, "A Bill of Divorcement," a high rating by placing it in its select list of "Exceptional photoplays." Associated has fixed December 24 for the release of this feature, which is a Denison Clift art production.

Lunt to Lead in "Backbone"

Alfred Lunt has been signed to play the male lead in "Backbone," which has been adapted for the screen by Charles Whittaker from the Saturday Evening Post story by Clarence Budington Kelland and will mark the first all-star production of Distinctive Pictures Corporation and the first of the new Distinctive units in addition to the George Arliss pictures, it is announced by Arthur S. Friend, president of the company.

Mr. Lunt, who was co-starred with Lola Fisher in the Savoir-Clare Kummer stage play, "Banco," which has been holding forth at the Ritz Theatre all season, leaped into fame as the creator of the name part in Booth Tarkington's "Clarence," which had a long run at the Hudson Theatre, New York, two seasons ago.

This marks Mr. Lunt's first motion picture appearance. He will have the role of John Thorne, the hero of the story.

Vitagraph to Film "Masters of Men"

"Masters of Men," a stirring story of the sea by Morgan Robertson, has been selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the second of the new series of twenty-four special productions based on stories by the foremost writers of recent years, and all of which will be completed and released in the coming year. It follows "The Ninety and Nine," adapted from the stage play by Ramsay Morris, now being edited and titled for January release, and will be directed by David Smith, who has had charge of many of the Vitagraph special productions since his work with "Black Beauty" two years ago. The cast is now being selected at the Hollywood studios and the actual filming of the picture will begin within a few days.

The Government, it is said, has promised its hearty assistance in the photographing of the sea sequences, so far as navy vessels are concerned.

Morgan Robertson was one of the greatest writers of sea stories this country ever produced. In arranging the novel for the screen C. Graham Baker has followed the original story. The tale is told on the screen just as the author wrote it originally for the Saturday Evening Post, it is stated.

B. B. Reingold Goes to Chicago

Goldwyn announces that it has transferred B. B. Reingold, manager of its Omaha branch exchange, to its Chicago office as resident manager.

Roy Churchill has been appointed resident manager of the Omaha exchange, succeeding Mr. Reingold.

Jack Holt Has Big Supporting Cast

The strongest cast ever given Jack Holt has been chosen to enact the principal characters in "The Tiger's Claw," Holt's next starring vehicle for Paramount. Eva Novak, whose work opposite Holt in "Making a Man," a recent production, was said to be her best, will again play the feminine lead.

George Periolat and George Field are two well-known character actors who will appear in the production, while the remainder of the cast includes Aileen Pringle, Karl Stockdale, Evelyn Selbie, Frank Butler, Bertram Grassby, Robert Dudley, Frederick Vroom and others to be chosen later. Joseph Henabery is directing.

Many Theatres Book Mae Marsh Film

The assertion of Associated Exhibitors officials that the William Christy Cabanne production, "Till We Meet Again," with Mae Marsh, is attracting an extraordinary demand for bookings at the very outset of its exhibition career appears justified, it is stated, by the list of theatres and circuits that already have displayed the feature or are arranging for early runs.

Some of them are the Loew Circuit, William Fox's theatres, the Stanley Amusement Company, Southern Enterprises, I. Libson theatres and Jake Laurie theatres.

Add More Novelties to C. B. C. Film

Novelties for the exploitation of "Only a Shopgirl" are being added to every day, and the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announces that co-incident with the launching of this second of the Six Box Office Winners in any territory all the novelties of an unusual number and variety, will be actually ready for use at the same time.

Listed among these are balloons of varying shapes and sizes imprinted "She may be only a Shopgirl, but she'll keep you up in the air." There are also shopping cards for the women and memorandum cards for the men; two colored blotters; shopping bags; soap, properly imprinted; wrist watch give-aways for tie-ups with local department and jewelry shops. It is also announced that two-color heralds are in process of preparation.

Metro's screen version of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will be shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week beginning December 17.

The first print of the picture, arriving this week from the studios in Hollywood, was reviewed by officials of Metro Pictures Corporation and pronounced even better than the favorable advance appraisals from the Coast staff indicated. It is based upon Charles Felton Pidgin's novel of the same name.

Among those who take part in this Metro-SL Special Production are Blanche Sweet, Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Barbara La Marr, Louise Fazenda, June Elvidge, Hank Mann, Elmo Lincoln, Billy Franey, Edward Connelly and Victor Potel. Clarence G. Badger directed.

All Pathe Product Share in Big Drive

Pathe reports that the Eschmann sales contest, which opened at midnight on November 4 and will close at midnight on December 30, is already showing results considerably beyond expectations. With Los Angeles at present in the lead, all of the thirty-five branch exchanges are responding with a volume of new contracts which indicates widespread optimism regarding the season's business prospects.

Every type of Pathe product is declared to be sharing the benefits of the prompt exhibitor response to the additional selling enterprise represented by this contest. It was expected as a matter of course by the Pathe field forces that both the new and old Lloyd comedies and the whole line of standard and new short subjects would show accelerated activity, and this expectation is said to be fully realized. What was not anticipated, however, was any noticeable advance in bookings of product which has been before the public now for from three to half a dozen years.

A surprise noted in this particular is attributed to the general improvement in picture attendance, and to the existing shortage of standard dramatic features. Reports from many Pathe branches show that its entire list of features is doubling and trebling the ordinary demand.

In this connection, Pathe general sales manager, in whose honor the current sales contest is named, expresses the conviction that, with his steadily increasing attendance, the exhibitor's chief concern is the booking, not so much of untried novelties as of product which both he and his patrons recognize as standard therefore practically certain likely to prove entertaining.

Geddes Praises I

Sir Auckland Geddes, British ambassador to the United States has written an enthusiastic approval of "Oliver Twist." He has added his praise to that given to this First National release by the trade and newspaper critics. Sir Auckland even goes further by declaring that this production "should attain popularity in England," so true is it to the Dickens' story.

The British ambassador and members of the British embassy with their wives were given a private showing of this Jackie Coogan picture in the dining room of the British Embassy in Washington, on Nov. 14.

Pyramid's Third at Cameo Theatre

The week of November 26 marked the opening of Pyramid's third successive picture attraction at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre, on West Forty-second street, when "What Fools Men Are," directed by George Terwilliger, with a typical Pyramid star cast, made its initial New York bow. This is a story from the pen of Eugene Walter, author of Frances Starr's first Broadway success, "The Easiest Way."

F. B. O. Managers to Meet in N. Y.

Branch managers of Film Booking Offices of America from all Eastern cities will meet at the home office on Sunday, December 3, for a division sales meeting to discuss plans for the sale and exploitation of "The Third Alarm," an Emory Johnson picture of fire department life, which will open at the Astor Theatre, New York City, January 8.

Fans Will Name New F. B. O. Star

Film Booking Offices of America this week announces a new featured player. This young lady is as yet nameless, professionally speaking, and will remain so until motion picture fans, through the columns of the national fan weekly, Film Fun, select her screen name.

The contest will be announced to motion picture lovers in the forthcoming issue of Film Fun, which will also carry several photographs of the new leading lady.

The new F. B. O. featured player is no newcomer to the screen. Under the name of Derelys Perdue, she played the leading feminine role in "The Bishop of the Ozarks," a Finis Fox production which will be released through the Film Booking Offices of America in the early spring. The F. B. O. scenario department is now selecting a new story for the unnamed star and this will go into production at an early date, so that both pictures will be available to exhibitors shortly after the close of the Film Fun-F B. O. contest. The star, under her new name, will then have been given an unusual amount of publicity both in Film Fun and in the newspapers throughout the country.

The request for a new screen name was made by Miss Perdue herself, who asked the F. B. O. Home Office to select a name for her which would interest the public and suit her personality. Instead of undertaking the task themselves F. B. O. arranged to leave it entirely to the motion picture fans of the country.

London Acclaims "Masqerader"

Richard Walton Tully has cabled the officials of First National that his production, "The Masquerader," has been received in London with the same enthusiasm that marked its release in this country and Canada. The novel by Katherine Cecil Thurston, from which the stage play and the picture were adapted, was originally called "John Chilcote, M. P.," in England and it has been released there under that title. Mr. Tully will soon leave for Paris to photograph "atmosphere" scenes for "Trilby," in which Guy Bates Post will star in the role of Svengali.

Delegates See Film at Private Showing

A private showing of Pyramid's production, "What Fools Men Are," directed by George Terwilliger with a typical Pyramid cast, including Faire Binney, was held at the Pyramid office for a committee of three, representing Teachers' College of Columbia University on the eve of their departure to attend the Students' Government Conference now being held at the Randolph Macon Women's College at Lynchburg, Virginia. Delegates represent every women's college in the country which confers an A. B. and an F. B. degree.

At this conference, ways and means of making use of certain types of motion pitures to further the aims of this conference and other bodies engaged in the task of improving the deportment of the "modern" girl, are being discussed, with the Pyramid picture, "What Fools Men Are," forming the background.

Famous Players to Star Walter Hiers

Jesse L. Lasky announced in Hollywood Monday that a five-year contract has been signed with Walter Hiers whereby the latter will be starred in Paramount pictures. Hiers' first starring picture will be "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," by Dana Burnet.

Albert Shelby Le Vino has already completed the scenario and work on the picture will be started at once at the Lasky studio under the direction of Wesley Ruggles, who has been specially engaged for this production. Jacqueline Logan, who is just finishing work in George Melford's "Java Head," at Paramount's Eastern studio, will be featured opposite Hiers and the supporting cast will also include George Fawcett, Robert McKim, Clarence Burton, Patricia Palmer and Lucien Littlefield.

Requests from all quarters for comedies of a light, romantic type indicate that the kind of pictures decided upon for Mr. Hiers will be extremely popular. Moreover, in this connection it may be stated that Paramount's decision to star Mr. Hiers followed the receipt of hundreds of letters from exhibitors and fans during the past few months, all of whom emphasized his tremendous popularity with the picture-going public and urged that he be placed in stellar comedy roles.

Popular Comedy Drama Bought by Universal

Following the instructions from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, Leon d'Usseau, eastern scenario chief of that corporation, has obtained the screen rights for Kate L. McLaurin's stage success, "The Six-Fifty," which had a run in New York last year.

It has not yet been determined who will be starred in the picture. It is possible that Virginia Valli may receive the leading role, although present indications point to the possibility of an all-star cast production, with featured players.

The play, when produced at the Hudson Theatre by Lee Kugel, received great praise at the hands of the reviewers. It is expected, however, to make a picture even more forceful than it was as a play. Lillian Albertson played the leading feminine role, and Reginald Barlow took the leading character part, in the stage version.

Miss McLaurin, who wrote "The Six-Fifty," is the author of "Whispering Wires," the mystery play which now is enjoying an extended run in the 49th Street Theatre, New York. She also is the author of two other plays, "When We Are Young," and "The Least Resistance," and many short stories.

"The Six-Fifty" is a comedy drama in three acts. It deals with a young civil engineer and his wife who are obliged to go back to the farm, and of how she pines away because the only excitement in her life is in watching the 6:50 express rush by. How a train wreck brings adventure to their door and results in dramatic complications, forms the motivating force of the plot.

N. Y. Critics Praise "The World's a Stage"

Principal Pictures Corporation's initial release, "The World's a Stage,' with Dorothy Phillips and an all-star cast, was given a rousing sendoff by the most fastidious critics of the trade press last week following a special showing. This Elinor Glyn story, as one writer so well phrased it, is "one of the revelations of the year" and will "make the box offices of motion picture theatres of the country jingle with prosperity."

The Moving Picture World critic said that, in view of the unusual interest taken by the public in the domestic affairs of movie stars, as evidenced by the much notoriety given them by newspapers, "could not help but register as a distinct box office hit." Then he went on to praise the individual acting of the players, praising Miss Phillips, whose services were obtained by permission granted by Associated First National.

Motion Picture News' reviewer was equally enthusiastic over "The World's a Stage" and also predicted a successful run for this production, which he characterized as "sure-fire," brimful of action and clever acting.

Exhibitors Trade Review was also liberal in its praise, particularly concerning the story, while The Morning Telegraph characterized it as one "of the very few truly great pictures of the year." This writer then went into details concerning the nature of the story.

Exchanges who have acquired territorial rights to "The World's a Stage" already report heavy bookings. Gene Marcus, of Twentieth Century Exchange of Philadelphia this week signed the entire Wilmer & Vincent circuit for this feature.

Hyatt Joins Big "U"

Jack Hyatt, of the New York Evening Journal, has been engaged by the Universal publicity department. Hyatt is a newspaperman and free lance writer of many years' experience. Before joining the Journal staff he was on the copy desk of the New York Evening World. He has been associated with various other metropolitan dailies.

"Ebb Tide" Listed for Release Dec. 4

Listed among new records in the record-smashing business of making motion pictures is said to be the achievement of George Melford in conquering every possible natural element during the production of "Ebb Tide," his Paramount picture version of the story by Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne, which is released December 4.

"Ebb Tide" was taken on land, on the water and under the water, while transportation to and from a Pacific Island location required traveling over the water in a hydro-aeroplane.

Scenes on land included a reproduction of the waterfront at Papeete, Tahiti, at night, a scene which required the transportation of sufficient electrical equipment to light a town of 10,000 inhabitants. This constituted a new record for across water transportation and illumination. On the water there was a dramatic scene, in which a 330-foot schooner was burned. And also on the surface one sees the beginning of a strenuous fight with an octopus by Lila Lee and James Kirkwood, which is the big punch.

The octopus fight and scenes of pearl diving are continued under water through the use of a diving bell holding the cameraman, Bert Glennon. Expert Hawaiian divers worked in these scenes.

Strange is the trio of men on the beach at Papette, Tahiti, one an Oxford scholar, who has "made a success of failure"; the second, a mean, slimy, totally bad ex-London clerk, and the third, a mariner, whose ship piled on the rocks while he was drunk in his berth. They are on the ebb tide of life when the story opens—derelicts—and strange are the adventures they experience before the story ends. That the picture has been done in the big way it deserves is assured by an all-star cast, which comprises James Kirkwood, Lila Lee, Noah Beery, George Fawcett, Raymond Hatton and Jacqueline Logan.

Burnett Story for Priscilla Dean

Universal announces the purchase of another well known and popular novel by a famous author to be made into a Universal Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean. It is "A Lady of Quality," one of the best known works of Frances Hodgson.

"A Lady of Quality," besides being widely read as a novel, was dramatized and made into a big stage success with Julia Arthur as the star. The part of Chlorinda, such a sensation with the reading public at a time when "the new woman" was a subject for cartoonists and gloomy stove-side speculation, and which later was the talk of the town as interpreted by Miss Arthur in the stage version, is said to be admirably suited to Miss Dean.

"A Lady of Quality" was the second Burnett book to be dramatized. The author's first success was "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which supplied Mary Pickford with one of her recent great roles.

Dorothy Dalton Says "Wonderful"

Charles de Roche, the French cinema star who has come to the United States to appear in Paramount pictures, has passed his first test. He has won the approval of Dorothy Dalton, the star opposite whom he is to play in his first American picture, "The Law of the Lawless."

"He's wonderful," said Miss Dalton after her first meeting with Mr. de Roche. "He will be marvelous in the role which has been assigned to him in my new picture!"

First National Gives List of Coming Films

Associated First National has just anounced the attractions it will release during the second half of the present season beginning January 1. Twenty-five pictures are included in the list, which carries the set releases of First National well into June, 1923. It is a notable list of stars, directors and big stories.

In the line-up of stars contain such names as Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Richard Barthelmess, Dorothy Gish, Jackie Coogan, Guy Post, Katherine MacDonald, Dorothy Phillips, Douglas MacLean, Strongheart, the famous dog of "The Silent Call" and "Brawn of the North."

Among the directors whose names appear in the list are John Stahl, Thomas Ince, Edwin Carewe, Allen Holubar, John S. Robertson, Frank Lloyd, Victor Schertzinger, E. Mason Hopper, Maurice Tourneur, Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin.

As to stories, these releases will contain adaptations from such stage successes as "Within the Law," in which Norma Talmadge will star; "The Girl from the Golden West," the Belasco play, which will be made in the West by Edwin Carewe; "The Voice from the Minaret," which will also be a Norma Talmadge vehicle; "Trilby," which is now famous as both a book and a stage production, will be made by Guy Bates Post as "Svengali." "The Bright Shawl," Joseph Hergesheimer's latest book, will be a Richard Barthelmess starring vehicle, most of the scenes being made in Cuba. Maurice Tourneur will put on the screen "The Isle of Dead Ships," adapting it from Captain Marriett's fascinating tale of the sea.

With the release calendar all set until next June and with further releases safely mapped out Richard A. Rowland, Harry O. Schwalbe and other members of First National executive committee have gone to the coast to sign up more independent producers for First National release.

As the First National program is now made up the big pictures will be released as follows:

During February: "What a Wife Learned," a Thomas H. Ince special; an Edwin Carewe production, title now being selected; "Bell Boy No. 13," an Ince production with Douglas MacLean; "Daddy," with Jackie Coogan, directed by E. Mason Hopper.

During March: "The Sign," a Murfin-Trimble picture; "Scars of Jealousy," a Thomas H. Ince production; "The White Frontier," a Jeffry de Prend story made by Allen Holubar with Dorothy Phillips starring; a Constance Talmadge production, the title of which has not been selected.

April will bring to exhibitors: "The Lonely Road," with Katherine MacDonald, directed by Victor Schertzinger from a story by Charles Logue; "The Bright Shawl," Hergesheimer's late novel in which Richard Barthelmess will star. The greater part of this picture will be made in Cuba under the directiton of John S. Robertson. "The Sunshine Trail," an Ince production with Douglas MacLean. "Within the Law," adapted from the great stage success with Norma Talmadge as the star and with Frank Lloyd directing. "The Girl from the Golden West," adapted from the famous Belasco play, to be made in the "golden west" by Edwin Carewe.

For May: "Money, Love and the Woman," an original story which John Stahl is making; "The Scarlet Lily," adapted from the story by Fred Sittenham in which Katherine MacDonald stars, Victor Schertzinger directing; James Young's initial First National production, for which no title has as yet been selected. Sam Rorke is Mr. Young's associate in this enterprise.

For June: "The Isle of Dead Ships," a Maurice Tourneur production adapted from Captain Marriott's fascinating story of the sea will be produced at M. C. Levee's United Studios; "Trilby," a Richard Walton Tully production starring Guy Bates Post as "Svengali." Some of the scenes for this picture are being taken by Mr. Tully now in France. A Jackie Coogan picture as yet unnamed.

Allan Dwan's Cast Is Announced

The cast for Allan Dwan's production of "The Glimpses of the Moon" for Paramount is rapidly assuming all-star proportions. In addition to Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi, who have the principal parts, an important role has been assigned to Rubye de Remer, who has been starred in a number of productions.

The male members of the cast selected up to the present are Maurice Costello, who was Vitagraph's leading male star for a number of years, and Charles Gerrard, known as the most interesting "villain" on the screen. The leading man has not yet been decided upon.

The new F. B. O. leading lady, who is leaving the selection of her screen name to the Picture fans of the country. She has appeared on the screen heretofore under her real name, Derelys Perdue.

Filming Interiors for New Picture

During the last week, in a studio near New York City, the photographing has been going on of the interior scenes of "The Broad Road," the first of the productions of Associated Authors for Associated Exhibitors. May Allison is starred in this picture, which is from the story of the same name by Hapsburg Liebe. Edmund Mortimer is directing.

'Strongheart' Lauded in Los Angeles

The dog, Strongheart, received a big ovation in the First National release, "Brawn of the North," at the showing of the picture in the Kinema in Los Angeles. The papers that praised the film highly are the Los Angeles Times, the Los Angeles Herald, the Express and the Record.

Returns to Coast With "Temptation" Plans

Definite plans for the production of "Temptation," third of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation box office winners, have been definitely set, it is announced this week, and Director Edward J. Le Saint has returned to the West Coast production center with plans outlined for immediate casting, and for actual production to begin at once.

It was made known this week that preliminary work on this third feature has been under way for some time and that Mr. Le Saint, who also directed "Only a Shopgirl," brought with him from the Coast the outline of the story and some definite plans lined up by him and Harry Cohn at the Coast.

Fox Opens Exchange Building in Buffalo

New Fox Exchange Building Recently Opened in Buffalo, N. Y.

More than 500 exhibitors from all sections of the United States and Canada, city and state officials, and many men prominent in the film industry attended the musicale and dinner which formally opened the new exchange building of the Fox Film Corporation at 496 Pearl street, Buffalo, last Thursday.

The romantic significance which attaches itself to the event lies in the fact that the imposing, two-story edifice is situated on the very site where Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox organization, and Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager, were born. Buffalo newspapers heralded the opening as one of the gala occasions of the year and a large assemblage of Buffalo friends turned out to greet Mr. Sheehan on his return to the city to attend the ceremonies.

The other Sheehan brothers present were Howard J. of San Francisco, and Norman C., of the Buffalo office.

Telegrams congratulating the organization came from every center in the world where motion pictures are known. Theatre owners in Mexico, Japan, China, Australia, and England, cabled their best wishes.

Governor-elect Alfred E. Smith headed a distinguished list of state and national officers and notable men and women of the state who sent their congratulations.

Among these was Will Hays, who expressed his regrets at being unable to be present and extended his personal well wishes.

Governor Smith's telegram was a gracious compliment to General Manager Sheehan. The wire read as follows:

"The already well-developed world-wide scope and great influence of Fox Film Corporation make its activities of value and growth and success could be presented than the extension of your business to the great city of Buffalo, which you, as a native son, have so signally honored by your own individual and distinguished success in the motion picture world. Upon the opening of your new exchange building permit me to felicitate you and wish you the continuance of the success which your devoted and conscientious efforts to entertain and enlighten the public deserve. Good luck and kind personal well wishes and congratulations."

State Senator James J. Walker, who will be the next majority leader of the State Senate, also wired his regrets at being unable to be on hand.

The new building of the Fox Exchange was handsomely decorated, and lively music was furnished while throngs circulated through the building. An excellent musical program was furnished under the direction of Manager Charles N. Johnston and Frank A. Tierney, of the executive force of Mr. Sheehan's office of New York City, presided.

Another feature of the opening was the fact that it also came as a farewell to Clayton P. Sheehan, who sailed on Saturday for South America to make an extensive tour through the countries of the southern continent in behalf of Fox interests. He will return about March 1. Fox Film Corporation hopes through the missionary work of Mr. Sheehan and other Fox representatives to bring about a closer mutual interest between this nation and the South American governments.

"A Woman's Woman" Highly Praised

"Women will enoy it. So will men," said the critic for the Examiner when 'A Woman's Woman," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, was shown recently at the California Theatre, San Francisco.

"The story of 'A Woman's Woman' is a good story, and so is the picture. It doesn't slacken up for a minute," said the critic for the News.——"'A Woman's Woman' tells in dramatic fashion the story of what might be the home life of the average American family," said the reviewer for the Call.

"'A Woman's Woman' is a film that should work a benefit for the home, and particularly the home where the mother is not appreciated to her fullest worth," wrote the critic for the Bulletin.——"It is a well made picture," said the Chronicle's critic.

Doris Hill in Film

Doris Hill, of San Francisco, who won a "Movie Opportunity" contest undertaken by a San Francisco newspaper in conjunction with Allen Holubar productions, will probably have a small part in Mr. Holubar's new production, "The White Frontier," starring Dorothy Phillips, now in the making for First National release.

Big "U" Workers Boost Sales

Officially designated as Brown Week by the force of the Washington branch of the Universal Film Exchanges in honor of Harry S. Brown, the local manager, the week of November 27th was a red letter event in Universal's Washington office.

From the sales force to the shipping department, everyone did his best to break records previously held in that office, and to make Brown Week a shining light in the history of the exchange. Indications late in the week pointed to many broken records.

Brown recently went to Washington from the Cleveland branch of the Universal Pictures Corp., where he was short product manager. He has served under the Universal banner for more than five years. He is very popular with both his business associates and his employees.

Extended Runs Given "Dr. Jack" Everywhere

Extended runs of "Dr. Jack" at leading theatres from coast to coast were assured for Harold Lloyd's new feature length comedy more than a week in advance of the general release date, November 26, Pathe reports.

Up to November 20 the following "Dr. Jack" contracts for runs of two weeks and longer were on record—while the indefinite run of the comedy at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, was entering its fourth week of capacity business: Denver, Rialto and Princess; Portland, Ore., Majestic; Tacoma, Wash., Rialto; Minneapolis, Minn., Strand; St. Paul, Minn., Astor; Duluth, Minn., booked for the Reuben & Finkelstein Circuit; Newark, N. J., Strand.

In New York City, "Dr. Jack" will have its premiere at the Strand on Broadway. The Strand booking is for two weeks, opening on Christmas Eve.

In quoting the foregoing bookings for extended runs of "Dr. Jack," Pathe states that contracts then under negotiation definitely settle all controversies concerning the status of Harold Lloyd as a screen comedian—placing him, on the highest and most practical authority that exists, at the summit, and in a class by himself.

First National's December Releases

Both Marshall Neilan and Tom Ince have turned to comedy drama for their December releases through First National. For the same month on the First National schedule Oliver Morosco and Richard Walton Tully present straight dramas.

Guy Bates Post is the star in Richard Walton Tully's picture, "Omar, the Tentmaker." James Young directed.

The Morosco picture is "Slippy McGee," adapted from the book of that name written by Marie Conway Oemler—a book that is now in its tenth edition. Colleen Moore and Wheeler Oakman are featured. Wesley Ruggles directed.

Great Praise Given to "Forget-Me-Not"

"Forget-Me-Not," a Louis Burston production released by Metro Pictures Corporation, received unusually laudatory praise from an audience of prominent figures in the religious and social life of San Francisco when it was presented for the first time at the Warfield Theatre in that city. Metro reports. Here are a few of the comments, submitted by prominent San Franciscans:

"The loveliest picture on the screen! A wonderful blending of idealism and realism," said J. Wilmer Gresham, Dean of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco.

"A beautiful, clean high type of play which is what we club women want," said Miss Jennie Partridge, president, City Federation of Women's Clubs, San Francisco.

"The most human—the most real—the most stirring home picture I have ever seen," said Rev. James L. Gordon, First Congregational Church. "Remarkable film, splendidly presented," said Rabbi Martin A. Meyer, Temple Emanu-El.

"One of the most beautiful pictures I have ever seen," stated Mrs. Edward J. Wales, vice-president, California Federation of Women's Clubs. "A picture you cannot forget! It stands alone," said Anna Blake Mequida, author. "A lingering fascination follows a view of this great production," said Mrs. Josephine Wilson, president, San Francisco League of American Pen Women.

"Forget-Me-Not" was written by Henry R. Symonds, adapted by John B. Clymer, photographed by Arthur L. Todd, and directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

To Be at Capitol

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that "The Headless Horseman" or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," the film version of Washington Irving's famous classic, adapted by Carl Stearns Clancy and distributed through the Hodkinson Corporation, will open Christmas week at the Capitol Theatre, New York, N. Y.

Production at Peak in Universal City

Several productions which are said to be of wide appeal are being edited at Universal City All star casts and directors whose names are big in the professional world are being engaged for the making of forthcoming screen stories of superior merit, it is reported.

Activities in the editorial department include the final polishing of "The Gentleman from America," starring Edward (Hoot) Gibson; "The Prisoner," a George Barr McCutcheon story starring Herbert Rawlinson; "The First Degree" and "The Bolted Door," starring Frank Mayo; "The Power of a Lie," with an all star cast, and "The Ghost Patrol," with an all star assemblage.

Preparations are being made for an elaborate production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." It will be directed by Wallace Worsley, and Lon Chaney will lead the cast. The Cathedral of Notre Dame will be reproduced at Universal City and will be, Universal says, the most impressive structure ever built for the screen.

Stuart Paton is directing an all star cast in "The Attic of Felix Bavu," a foreign play by an American, Earl Carroll, which is being made into a Universal-Jewel special. Rupert Julian is entering the last sequences in his filming of "Merry-Go-Round." It will be a Universal-super-Jewell production.

Hobart Henley is well into the direction of "The Abysmal Brute," Jack London's pen picture of the prize ring. Reginald Denny is featured in this Universal-Jewel special. Tod Browning is preparing "Drifting," a stage success, in which he will direct Priscilla Dean.

George Archainbaud is directing an all star production, "Flesh." Edward Sedgwick is starting "Heads-Up," an original story by himself in which he will direct Edward (Hoot) Gibson. He recently completed "The Gentleman from America."

"The Social Buccaneer," starring Jack Mulhall, "The Trail Blazers," starring Art Acord, and "Around the World in 18 Days," starring William Desmond, are three other special subjects in production directed respectively by Robert F. Hill, Edward Laemmle and Reaves Eason.

Big Scenes Filmed for "Vanity Fair"

Director Hugo Ballin is working on the big ballroom scenes for his screen version of "Vanity Fair," starring his wife, Mabel Ballin, in the role of Becky Sharpe, at the Goldwyn studios. He is using several hundred persons in these scenes. The production will be a Goldwyn release.

At the same time Mr. Ballin is preparing for a spectacular reproduction of sections of the battle of Waterloo which plays such a big part in Thackeray's novel.

Besides Miss Ballin, the cast includes Hobart Bosworth, George Walsh, Eleanor Boardman, Harrison Ford, Willard Louis, Earle Fox, Robert Mack, William Humphrey and Tempe Piggott as Mrs. Sedley.

December Releases Scheduled by Fox

Four star series productions, a Clyde Cook Comedy, an Al St. John special two-reeler, two Sunshine Comedies, and two Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, comprise the schedule of December releases for Fox Film Corporation, it was announced this week.

"Catch My Smoke," the Tom Mix picture, will be issued December 31. It was directed by William Beaudine. John Gilbert, the star of "Monte Cristo," will be seen in "A California Romance." It is directed by Jerome Storm. It will be out December 24. "The Great Night" is the December vehicle for William Russell. Howard Mitchell is the director.

David Belasco and Clay M. Greene, authors of the stage play, "Pawn Ticket 210," have sold the picture rights to William Fox, who has starred Shirley Mason in the screen version. Scott Dunlap directed. The picture is to be released December 24.

"The Alarm," the Al St. John fun-maker, is scheduled for December 17. The Sunshine Comedies are "The Fresh Heir," December 10, and "A Poor Fish," December 24. The Mutt and Jeff releases are "The Chewing Gum Industry," for December 10, and "Jim Jams," for the 24th.

Titles by Hopwood

Avery Hopwood, playwright, has written the titles for the First National release, "Slippy McGee," produced by Oliver Morosco from the book by Marie Conway Oemler. It will be a December release.

Kane Finds Conditions in West Improved; Showmen Give Long Runs to Big Pictures

Producers Keeping Step With Theatre Development by Offering Big Attractions

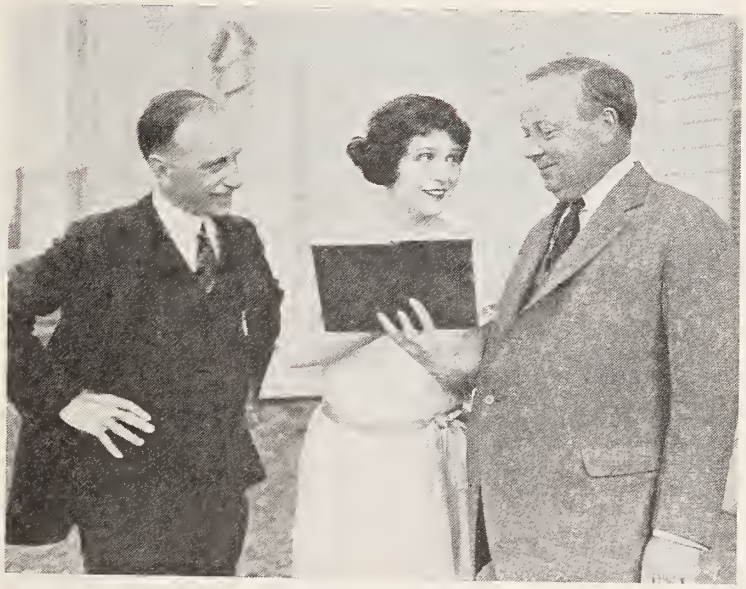
It was a story of prosperity that Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors and of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, brought from the West on his return to New York after a two months' tour of the West. He found that a consistent improvement in business conditions generally is being reflected in the picture industry. The building of many fine theatres has not found producers behindhand and they are meeting the demand upon them as never before.

Mr. Kane's trip took him as far south as Los Angeles, and as far north as Seattle, Butte, and Minneapolis. Throughout the entire wide territory covered conditions justifying optimism revealed themselves.

"So many big theatres of the highest class have been built that great pictures are essential to exhibitors," said Mr. Kane. "It is gratifying to see the producers keeping step with the theatre development. Never before in my experience, covering fifteen years in the distribution of pictures, have I seen such a large proportion of really wonderful attractions as have marked the opening of the present season.

"It now remains for the exhibitors, in their grasp of the possibilities in such outstanding attractions as are being shown in the houses which they control, to bring to bear every resource at their command in the furthering of these great features—effort and vision on their part commensurate to the great thought, time, care, ability, vision and money put forth by the producers.

"The long-run picture is greatly to be desired, and it is the picture that is doing the biggest business for the theatres, but, unless the management has vision and nerve, in many cases the opportunities are wasted. Los Angeles is far ahead of the rest of the country in the development of the long run, but there are other cities that are making progress in this direction. No picture ever ran for three weeks in Minneapolis until Harold Lloyd's 'Grandma's Boy' was retained for that period at the Strand. Finkelstein & Ruben are showmen who are able to visualize the opportunities created by great pictures. The possession of nerve and vision is one of the screts of the high place they occupy in the world of exhibitors. Also, 'Grandma's Boy' is one of only two pictures which, so far as I know, ever ran three weeks in Samuel Harding's Liberty Theatre, Kansas City.



Florence Vidor Reads "Alice Adams" to Willing Listeners—Arthur S. Kane and Miss Vidor's General Manager, Gus Inglis.

"Calvin Heilig ran this attraction four weeks in his Heilig Theatre, Portland, Ore. On the other hand, in Seattle, which has a considerably larger population and greater opportunities, it was pulled off after the second week, though it could easily have run three weeks, even under the rather unfavorable conditions in which it was presented there. In Spokane, 'Grandma's Boy' did an $11,000 business in a single week and was then taken off. The week that followed was the only losing week of the year in the theatre that had played it. Everybody knows that to show a picture that takes in $11,000 in one week in a city the size of Spokane is tremendously profitable and should have been continued.

"In New York a picture has been known to be pulled off when it closed to $45,000 on its second week. Such a thing as this is unheard of in Los Angeles, where exhibitors would rather continue the run of a proved success than take a chance with a new attraction. In that city the long run has been developed principally by the managers of the picture theatres and of stock houses.

"If the Symphony Theatre's management had not those qualities of vision and nerve, 'Grandma's Boy' would never have had its record breaking run of nineteen weeks. In the seventh week the weather became unseasonably hot and business fell off alarmingly. An ordinary manager would have closed the run then, but Dr. Breckwedel kept it going and after the eighth week he was rewarded. In the ninth week the house was packed again and capacity business continued until about the sixteenth week. A man without faith in long runs would have limited that engagement to seven weeks. This exhibitor continued it for nineteen, and, with the possible exception of the seventh and eighth weeks, did a highly profitable business throughout."

Summarizing conditions in various cities which he visited, Mr. Kane said: "In Los Angeles, as I have indicated, business is tremendous in the theatres that show big pictures. That city is experiencing a great building boom, with remarkable activity in the construction of residences. In San Francisco, too, outstanding picture attractions always do a wonderful business. Conditions there are good, although the industry is contending with a vastly increased seating capacity, due to the opening in the last eighteen months of three enormous houses, and the showing of photoplays by the New Curran, a legitimate theatre. That house opened in pictures with 'When Knighthood Was in Flower.'

"Portland, Ore., after a hard summer, is doing a very fine business. Seattle is doing quite well. The picture theatres in Butte are flourishing better than for two or three years previously. In that city, by the way, so convinced were exhibitors that 'Grandma's Boy' on its first run did not show to nearly all the people it would interest, that one of the leading three houses which have never played a second run are now bringing it back for a second time."

Among the important developments of Mr. Kane's stay in Los Angeles was the enlistment of a number of big stars under the Associated Exhibitors' banner, and the completion of arrangements for several new series of productions for distribution by Associated.

Helen Jerome Eddy to Star for F. B. O.

The current release of the Film Booking Offices of America is the initial Ray Carroll production introducing Helen Jerome Eddy as a star. It is called "When Love Comes," and is a story of small town life in New England. Harrison Ford is the leading man. The picture was directed by William A. Seiter.

It was written especially for Miss Eddy after several years of collaboration and discussion.

In addition to Miss Eddy and Harrison Ford the cast includes Fannie Midgeley, Claire Dubrey, Joseph Bell, Gilbert Clayton, J. Barrows, Fay McKenzie and the two "twins," Buddy Messenger and Molly Gordon. The adaptation was made by Winifred Dunn, and the photography is by Lucien Andriot.

Indianapolis Branch Opened by Goldwyn

Goldwyn's new branch exchange at 438-40 North Illinois street, Indianapolis, Ind., was officially opened last week with more than 100 exhibitors from the territory to be served in attendance.

W. W. Willman, resident manager, was the host and he was assisted by G. C. Parish, his office manager, and H. T. Snowden, Goldwynner attached to that exchange.

The exchange quarters are commodious and light and up to date in every respect. "Remembrance," "Sherlock Holmes," "The Sin Flood," "Brothers Under the Skin," "A Blind Bargain' and other of Goldwyn's big new photoplays, prints of which were in the exchange, were run off.

Luncheon was served to the assembled exhibitors.

Brockell Manager of First National Distribution

Appointment Is Part of Firm's Policy of Improving Business With Exhibitors

F. M. BROCKELL

F. M. Brockell has been appointed manager of distribution of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The appointment was announced this week as part of the organization's policy of improving its methods of dealing with exhibitors by centralizing distribution authority and increasing departmental scope and efficiency. Mr. Brockell's duties will comprise complete supervision over distribution, including sales policies and plans.

The selection of Mr. Brockell is in recognition of ability evidenced during his nearly three years' association with First National. He was the first executive in the New York office who devoted his whole time and attention to general sales activities, having been selected because of his wide and successful experience as branch office employee, salesman, exhibitor, exchange manager and home office executive.

His connection with the industry dates back to the days considerably prior to the organization of the old General Film Company. He began at the bottom, serving an apprenticeship in his home town, Cincinnati, under the tutelage of James Steele. When the General Film, of which he was Cincinnati manager, retired as the dominant factor in motion pictures, Mr. Brockell became an exhibitor, successfully operating two theatres in Cincinnati.

Prior to the organization of Paramount, Mr. Steele persuaded Mr. Brockell to return to exchange work, placing him in Chicago, where he successively opened and managed the exchanges of Famous Players, First National and Goldwyn. He held these managerial positions over a period of years, establishing a reputation as one of the most successful sales executives in the industry. Not long after the organization of Goldwyn he was sent to St. Louis for that company as special representative. Subsequently he went to Seattle in the same capacity, resigning to return to Chicago, where he opened and operated a State right exchange.

Mr. Brockell again joined First National shortly after its reorganization about two and one-half years ago. He established the Dallas Exchange and then came into the New York office to assume the position of supervisor of exchanges, which he held at the time of his appointment as manager of distribution.

During his connection with First National the whole plan of exchange management has gradually been altered. The tendency, under his direction as supervisor of exchanges, has been steadily toward centralization and the upbuilding of a strong selling organization. He has seen the work develop until the original exchanges have expanded into forty and his New York office staff has increased from three or four individuals to almost one hundred.

A departmental cabinet, comprising Mr. Brockell, his division executives in the New York office and the district managers, formulates the principal sales policies. This plan, put into operation by Mr. Brockell only comparatively recently, has been found so successful that its continuance is assured. The council meets quarterly, the next session being scheduled for the very near future.

Has Contracted for Entire Series

Announcement is made by the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that Shea's Hippodrome in Boston, Mass., has contracted for the entire series of All Star Comedies featuring Charles Murray, Raymond McKee and Mary Anderson.

Wrote Adaptation

It is not generally known that Miss Adelaide Leitzbach, who scenarioized "Way Down South" for Murray W. Garsson, is also credited with the adaptation and co-authorship of "Success," the big Ralph Ince production, which will shortly be given its first trade showing. Miss Leitzbach is well known as a playwright.

"Kentucky Derby" Plays to Capacity

"The Kentucky Derby," Universal's picturization of Charles T. Dazey's melodrama, "The Suburban," had its premiere in the Detroit territory last week when it opened in the Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit. Despite unusual opposition, it is reported to have done wonderful business.

Immediately after the opening night, Phil Gleichman, manager of the theatre, wired Carl Laemmle, head of the Universal organization, congratulating him upon the box office value of the picture.

"'Kentucky Derby,' opened yesterday in my theatre to wonderful business," reported the exhibitor. "Production well presented with suspense and smashing thrills. Audience greatly pleased, as manifested by rounds and storms of applause of crowds when race horse scene was shown throughout all performances. Strong opposition of 'Robinhood' and 'When Knighthood Was in Flower.' Congratulations."

The picture was equally well received by the press, according to reports which have been received by Universal. The Detroit Free Press was enthusiastic over the thrills and general entertainment value of the film.

From all quarters Universal has received reports of great praise for the great racing thrills in the picture and for the excellence of the actors, especially Reginald Denny, who takes the leading role. Denny, who made quite a name for himself as the hero in Universal's screen adaptation of H. C. Witwer's "Leather Pushers," and who is now making a "New Leather Pushers" series, handled his first big role in "The Kentucky Derby."

To Show Hodkinson Films at School

Washington Irving High School, New York City, will hold an "Irving Matinee" in the school auditorium Friday, December 1, at which time a Hodkinson feature and one short subject will be shown to the entire school.

The program will open with "The Life of Washington Irving," one of the series of "Great American Authors," made by Kineto for release through Hodkinson. The feature will be "Rip Van Winkle," a Ward Lascelle production.

"Between Worlds" a Big Production

"Between Worlds," the unusual feature production which Alfred Weiss is arranging distribution through one of the leading national programs, is said to present a story which involves four complete different episodes.

Incidentally, the main theme of the story is closely woven into these various episodes, and the spectator's attention is focused throughout the picture on two principal characters around which the entire action revolves. With the locales of the opening scenes laid in America, these characters are carried through successive episodes and acted in Arabia, China and Italy.

In each particular instance many spectacular scenes are introduced. The settings in the Arabian and Chinese episodes are said to be extremely massive.

"Between Worlds" unfolds the story of a young girl who makes a strange bargain with "Destiny" in an effort to secure the return of her sweetheart who has mysteriously disappeared on the eve of their wedding day. Her adventure in this strange quest, on which she is accompanied by the character of "Destiny," brings her into the "spirit world."

The elements which enter into the story of "Between Worlds" are unusual in every particular and the quest embraces a series of striking characterizations on the part of the girl, the figure of "Destiny," the old apothecary, the grave digger, the keeper of the candles, etc.

Alfred Weiss, former vice-president of Goldwyn and now at the head of Artclass Pictures Corporation, is particularly enthusiastic regarding the production, and has gone on record with the statement that this picture will prove one of the most sensational offerings of the year when it is released by one of the leading distributors.

Returns to Universal

Nat Liebeskind, one of the best known film salesman in the New York territory, has joined the forces of the Big "U" exchange, the New York branch of the Universal exchange system. Liebeskind worked for the Big "U" exchange for four years, leaving that organization to join another film company in 1920.

He returned to Universal with the understanding he would get his old territory, South Brooklyn, back again.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

The Passing Week in Review

WHAT'S happened to the "fly-by-nighter"?

That, in substance, was a question hurled at this writer not so long ago by a gentleman who had just returned from a country-wide trip. But before we had the opportunity to answer, he furnished his own reply. And, as he had first-hand information, had carefully studied the situation in the interest of his concern, one of the leading in the independent market, we will appropriate his reply for use on this page. Here it is:

THE motion picture exhibitor and nobody else has driven him out of business. The producer has been instrumental in bringing about their elimination, but to the theatre owners must go the credit for their destruction. The opening of the current year, because of the previous disastrous season, prompted 90 per cent. of the theatre men to do some tall thinking. Well, after some study, they ascertained that what the public wanted was "something different."

THEY sought this "something different" and demanded it from every company. The independent producers and distributors, who made it their business to strain every effort to make pictures that would bring money to the box office for the exhibitor, immediately got to work. He went after established stars, standardized and popular books and strengthened this combination with the services of capable directors. This change in heart of the leading independent producers was largely brought about through invasion of that field by men who were previously prominently affiliated with program releasing corporations.

THESE latter gentlemen resigned their lucrative positions to go into business for themselves because of the possibilities they saw in independent distribution. They had ascertained from intimate investigation and observation that what the exhibitor wanted first, last and all the time was productions of box office value, productions that would bring people to his house—and these exhibitors didn't care who made these pictures just so long as they satisfied every box office qualification. These gentlemen set to work at once to effect organizations that would work co-operatively along lines that would guarantee a flow of such pictures.

EXHIBITORS didn't lose sight of this effort, for it was genuine. When the time for bookings came around they did some tall hustling and they did not choke their 1922-23 books with product booked considerably in advance. On the other hand, they safeguarded themselves by signing up with one or two program companies and left much time open for meritorious independent pictures. The Independent Number of MOVING PICTURE WORLD served as wonderful propaganda. Others, I know and the exhibitors know, tried to imitate MOVING PICTURE WORLD's original stunt, by issuing so-called "independent numbers" in the Fall, but these were published for purely selfish reasons and contained nothing of informative value to either exchangeman or exhibitor. MOVING PICTURE WORLD's lineup of 1922-23 product served the purpose and was a splendid press agent for independents, for it gave exhibitors an idea of the nature of productions that would be available in the independent market. I hope, as many others do, that this service will be an annual one with MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

BUT to get back to the exhibitor's part in eliminating the fly-by-night:

Well, with the invasion of these reputable men, with the leading concerns lining up in advance product for the entire year, with this product based on material with which the exhibitor was acquainted, the new era came. The enterprising exchanges of the country tied up with these distributors. Result was that the fly-by-night, the 'cheater' and 'junk exchange' found themselves with nothing but conceded junk stuff at their disposal. They tried all means of interesting the exhibitor, but the latter was so thoroughly busy booking the product of reputable firms, product that compared favorably with the best in the market, that the illegitimates found themselves being starved out of the business.

SO you can readily see that it was lack of exhibitor patronag that brought about their elimination. There still are a few, bu it is only a question of time when they, too, will follow in the foot steps of these has-beens. The exhibitor has certainly rendered great service to the independent and don't you forget it.

ANOTHER co-operative string of exchanges is now in the proces of formation. Its perfection is expected to be announced withi the course of a few weeks. The head of one of the leading independ ent distributing organizations has been on a country-wide trip linin up these affiliations and as soon as he gives the word this depart ment will be happy to announce this new chain. Its members ar exchangemen of reputable standing in their particular localities, me who have done things and who are well known to the trade in general

THE question of re-rating the country, territorially, is agai brought up. This time it is George Fecke, head of the Motio Picture Distributing Company of Boston, who brings up the issue Mr. Fecke strongly contends that New England is not an eight pe cent. territory and is refusing to buy pictures on that basis. It i a fact that in the last analysis, very little attention has been paic to prevalent territorial percentages by both distributors and ex changemen, for the wiser of the former have, anticipating opposition from buyers, set the valuation unusually high and then willingly come down. This method has proved a good one, seemingly, for it has, in many cases made the buyer feel that he has won his point while the distributor has usually left the territory with just what he had hoped he would get out of the territory. Who says this industry does not resemble a game?

OUR tip to the trade in general is to watch Charles C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., and of Affiliated Distributors, Inc. His second Johnny Hines picture, "Sure Fire Flint," is a big box office winner. And the showing of his Whitman Bennett all-star feature, "Secrets of Paris" makes our view of that production absolutely absurd. Eddie Fay, back in Providence, mopped up with the picture and we heard this week that other first run exhibitors were equally as successful in their engagements. The all-star cast is drawing them to the box offce and the picture is seemingly entertaining the public, for reports on hand indicate bigger second-day business, and, after all, that is the real answer to a picture's value to the public as an entertainment vehicle.

BILL KRAFT'S stunt in Passaic, N. J., on "I Am The Law," which the New York Apollo Exchange is distributing in the metropolitan district, was one of the best of the year, for the New Jersey papers were not the only ones to fall. Every New York newspaper "fell" for the story, many of them running it on the first page. It was a prize stunt and brought record-crowds to the Rialto Theatre in Passaic. Elsewhere in this section appears a detailed account of the stunt. Congratulations, Bill.

CHARLEY SEELEYE, who was in charge of Arrow's New York Exchange, is doing business on his own. During the current week he was busy attending to the premiere showing at Ed. Reid's Strand Theatre in Providence, R. I., of "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" starring Liane Haid, billed as "the most beautiful woman in the world." The opening show broke all motion picture house records in Providence. The attendance on Tuesday, when the local newspapers devoted much space to sending off the production, was so great that night it was decided to give seven shows a day, instead of the regular five. Clever exploitation conducted by Messrs. Seeleye and Reid attracted much attention to the picture, which is a wonder cinematographically and with a star that lives up to every claim and what is more certainly can act. Charles Seeleye will surprise thousands in the industry with "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton."

Warner Bros.' 1923 Production Plans Are Already Completed

With the completion of "Little Church Around the Corner," and the Harry Rapf production of the Charles G. Norris novel, "Brass," Harry M. Warner announced that eighteen pictures will be made for the season of 1923-24 at a cost of $5,000,000.

Production of "Main Street," the Sinclair Lewis novel of rural America, the seventh and last picture to be made this season, was begun last week at the Warner coast studios. Monte Blue, who has been placed under a long term contract, has been cast for a prominent role in this picture. Mr. Blue recently played one of the leads in the production of "Brass," which was directed by Sidney Franklin and adapted for the screen by Julien Josephson.

According to Mr. Warner, the concern is at present negotiating with several of the foremost directors in the industry, and expect to sign one to transfer the Sinclair Lewis story for the screen. The production will be made on an elaborate scale, and it is said that upon its completion the entire organization will concentrate upon the production plans for the eighteen pictures.

From present indications the eighteen productions will be made at the West Coast studios. In accordance with the present policy of the Warner organization, the stories will be adaptations of popular novels and stage plays. The first step in the production plans was made recently with the enlarging of the studios. More than nine and a half acres of ground now comprise the studio grounds, and in addition to the present structure a number of others will be erected.

The majority of the books and plays are said to have been secured, and with the consummation of several other deals an official announcement will be made. To carry out the production plan the foremost directors scenario writers and screen players will be engaged for these pictures.

A substantial portion of the $5,000,000 will be utilized in trade paper advertising, publicity and exploitation purposes.

New Lichtman Franchise Holder in Wisconsin

Milwaukee—(Special)—One of the most important film developments of the year was announced this week with the taking over of the Wisconsin distribution of Preferred Pictures by J. L. Grauman, manager of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, of Wisconsin.

Until now, Wisconsin distribution of the Preferred output, which is handled nationally by the Al Lichtman Corporation, has been handled by the F. and R. Film Company, of Minneapolis. This company has also handled the Dakotas, Minnesota, and the upper peninsula of Michigan. The division of the territory has been made in order to secure a more intensive distribution of the Lichtman product in Wisconsin.

Grauman will be the franchise holder. Celebrated Players, of Wisconsin, is affiliated with the Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, of which J. L. Friedman is president. Grauman starts release of the Lichtman output with "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." The first two, "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows," will be handled by the F. and R. Film Company.

Many Sales on Weiss Bros.' "After Six Days"

Following the premier of "After Six Days" at English's Opera House, Indianapolis, recently, where this production met with an enthusiastic reception on the part of the theatre-going public, Weiss Brothers, Artclass Pictures Corporation has commenced an active selling campaign on this picture. It is being offered as a road show attraction, with special score and a complete line of material for use in promoting the picture in legitimate theatres.

The territory of California, Arizona and Nevada has already been disposed of to Jake J. Cone, of Los Angeles, California. Cone has practically completed negotiations whereby "After Six Days" will be presented for a four-week run at one of the leading theatres of Los Angeles, and for a two weeks' engagement in San Francisco. Following these presentations he will send two companies throughout the States of California, Arizona and Nevada. Louis Weiss has announced that "After Six Days" will be given its premier in New York City, immediately following the Christmas holidays. Arrangements have been worked out by Artclass whereby each State right exchange will be able to secure the co-operation and assistance of various fraternal organizations in exploiting "After Six Days," and a series of letters have been prepared by the publicity department of Artclass working out step by step the methods to be used in interesting various organizations and newspapers.

Richard Barthelmess Feature Ready

Announcement is made by Producers Security Corporation, that the final cutting of "Just a Song at Twilight," in which Richard Barthelmess is starred, has been completed and the feature is now ready for distribution on the independent market. It is stated that many applications have been made for franchises by state right operators.

Producers Security exploitation star is preparing a powerful campaign for the picture. It is adapted from the world famous song, "Just a Song at Twilight," and a music tie-up is being made in every city and town in the country.

Evelyn Greeley and Pedro de Cordoba are the featured players in support of Barthelmess.

M. R. Schlank to Go on Trip

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Embarking on his fourth trip of 1922 in the interest of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., of which he is head, Morris R. Schlank will leave his new Hollywood headquarters about December first for his last sales tour of the year.

According to word from Anchor, Mr. Schlank's trip will be wholly confined to alloting territorial rights to the new series of two-reel features starring the little Arthur Trimble.

This series, which will be known as "The Adventures of Prince Courageous," are described as being the most lavishly presented short subjects ever attempted, and are favorably compared with such features as "Knighthood," "Robin Hood" and "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Bessie Love heads the cast, supporting Master Arthur, states Mr. Schlank, in the entire series.

Keaton Comedy Captures Rivoli Audience

Buster Keaton in "My Wife's Relations," a First National Attraction, captured the highest honors at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, this week. Critics of several New York papers, in reviewing the show, placed the Keaton comedy, produced by Joseph M. Schenck, above the feature being shown at the Rivoli.

Walturdaw Buys Output of All Pictures by Preferred for England

An important foreign deal was consummated this week when contracts were signed between Colonel H. A. Browne, chairman of the board of directors of the Walturdaw Company, Ltd., of London, and the Al Lichtman Corporation whereby the English distributing company secures the Preferred output handled by the Lichtman Corporation for England.

This applies to the output of the Lichtman organization for for the first year with the exception of "Rich Men's Wives," the first release which is now being trade shown in England under the auspices of the W. and F. Film Service, Ltd., which controls its distribution in the British Isles.

Walturdaw, under the contract, secures "Shadows" as its first picture. "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" the third is a Gasnier Production which, incidentally has its premiere at the Newark Theatre, Newark, N. J., this week prior to a Broadway run. The fourth is "The Hero," Gilbert Emery's stage play which Gasnier completed at the Schulberg studios last week. Tom Forman, the other featured director of the Preferred organization is now finishing "Are You A Failure?" in California while Gasnier's schedule has so far advanced that he has commenced work on "Poor Men's Wives" a companion piece to "Rich Men's Wives." In all likelihood, Gasnier's next subject to follow "Poor Men's Wives" will be "Mothers-In-Law." The remainder of the production schedule as now planned includes production of "The Girl Who Came Back," "The Mansion of Aching Hearts," "My Lady's Lips" and "The Broken Wing" the stage play for which B. P. Schulberg closed the film rights this week.

Al Lichtman is now en route to California to discuss production plans with Schulberg.

Latest State Rights News

BOSTON (Special)—"Down to the Sea in Ships," the Elmer Clifton production financed by New Bedford capitalists, following a three-week run in Providence, R. I., opened here Monday at the Selwyn Theatre for an indefinite engagement with assurances on the opening day that there would be a week of sell-out performances for the advance sale for the first four days indicated capacity houses during that period. The newspaper reviews were the most commendable ever given any production shown in Boston, with several of the Sunday sheets giving special page layouts to the picture.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (Special)—"The Life of Emperor Hamilton," a costume special, was given its American Premier showing at the Strand Theatre here on Monday, Nov. 27, opening to a turnaway matinee. Charles Seeleye, formerly manager of the New York Arrow Exchange, owns this production, which he exploited extensively, getting 100 per cent. cooperation from the Shepard store, New England's most exclusive and conservative department store. Special hallyhoos were promoted successfully by Manager Edward L. Reed, of the Strand. One of the outstanding exploitation stunts was the tacking of a huge 24-sheet advertising the picture across the front of the Shepard store building on the Washington and Westminster street. The store also broadcasted, via radio, the engagement of the picture.

MONTREAL (Special)—Al Lichtman's initial Preferred Picture, "Rich Men's Wives," played three local houses, week runs, day and date, showing to splendid business at all shows, excepting the supper performances, which are never good in this city, despite the efforts of showmen to plug them.

PHILADELPHIA (Special)—Two independent productions, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's initial "Bix Six" release, and Phil Goldstone's "Deserted At the Altar," are doing a phenomenal business in this territory, thus upsetting the advance dope of the self-elected "wise birds." The Goldstone picture has hung up a couple of house records and is in demand, while the C. B. C. version of the old Charley Blaney melodrama is also going over like a house afire, cleaning up in the smaller towns and neighborhood, where this type of picture seems to be in great demand.

LOS ANGELES (Special)—Local first-run theatres have been for the past three weeks trying to convince independent producers that "tryout" showings at those houses would help them in disposing of their film. However, these propositions, which in addition to assuring the theatre men free film, would also be productive of additional incomes, for they are asking for a "cut-in," are being turned down unhesitatingly, but the managers are still plugging away hopefully.

LOUISVILLE, KY. (Special)—"Notoriety," the Will Nigh special handled by North & Weber, bids fair to set new records in this territory, for the local distributor, Lee Goldherg, is hammering away at this production as he has concentrated on no other picture. He already has signed five representative first-run showing dates in Louisville and other cities.

World Rights to Fecke On "Yankee Doodle, Jr."

World rights on "Yankee Doodle, Jr." have been secured by Geo. M. A. Fecke, of 28 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass.

Mr. Fecke is highly elated at the consummation of this arrangement, for "Yankee Doodle, Jr." is a picture that has fared very well indeed at the hands of reviewers and other authorities who have seen it.

With J. Frank Glendon in the leading role, this story of adventureous Americanism bids fair to make a strong appeal to the public, for it has no sex appeal, no cheap sentimentalism, but depends on clean-cut situations and artistic photography, good direction and a perfect screen story for its punch.

Mr. Fecke expects shortly to get around among the many who are already waiting for an opportunity to "go after" what he considers to be "sure-fire" screen material.

Lichtman Goes to Coast to Complete 1923 Plans

Al Lichtman left New York for Los Angeles on Friday, November 24, for an important conference with his partner, B. P. Schulberg, regarding future releases through the Al Lichtman Corporation. A number of valuable theatrical properties have been lined up and it will be one purpose of the conference to discuss these matters and reach a decision of some sort regarding them. While Lichtman has been looking over the field in the East for worthwhile literary material, Schulberg has been active surveying the professional field in the West. It is understood he has lined up a number of men and women players to appear in the future Preferred Pictures and that when Lichtman and he get together, they will have some interesting announcements to make.

During the past few weeks, Lichtman has received a number of communications from the franchise holders commenting on the calibre of the casts in the Preferred series. Before he left New York, he took occasion to promise to them the maintenance of that standard in future pictures. As a matter of fact, the cast for "Poor Men's Wives," the new Gasrier picture has just been selected and the picture placed in work. Barbara La Marr, Richard Tucker, David Butler, Zazu Pitts and Betty Francisco have been signed. Tom Forman, the other featured director under contract is putting the finishing touches on "Are You a Failure?" an original by Larry Evans who was recently signed by Schulberg. Probably by the time Lichtman reaches the coast, Forman will start work on "The Girl Who Came Back."

Lichtman expects to stay in Los Angeles from four to six weeks. The entire production schedule will be gone over during that period. Lichtman's extensive distribution knowledge and his familiarity with the types of picture the exhibitors want are expected to figure largely in the discussion.

House-To-House Canvass On Alexander's "Woman's Home"

Probably for the first time in the history of motion picture exploitation, an extensive house to house canvass, national in scope, is part of the campaign to acquaint the women of the country with the nature and purpose of the new two-reel subjects produced by Aralma Films for presentation by Woman's Home Companion and distribution through Alexander Film Corporation.

"Direct to the Theatre-Patron" advertising campaigns by producers and distributors of motion pictures are not new, but the lengths to which the sponsors of the "Woman's Home Series" are going to make sure that the mothers and daughters of the country know about "This Wife Business" and the rest of the series of screen dramas and comedy-dramas written around leading articles by well-known writers, appearing in Woman's Home Companion each month, is of unusual interest because of several features new to the national distribution of pictures.

Looks Like a Big Season in the Northwest

SEATTLE, WASH.—(Special).—Al Rosenberg, manager of De Luxe Film Corporation and distributor of the Al Lichtman product, has launched a big drive on his three big specials just received: "Shadows," "The World's A Stage" and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms.' These are three of the higgest pictures of the seaosn and are ready for immediate release. Mr. Rosenberg has sent three salesmen out to cover Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. They are Ned Edris, Louis Rosenberg and Jack Rosenberg.

When asked how he always happened to have a new brother to enter the business, Al Rosenberg explained it this way: "Since I first started in business seven years ago, there have always been three of us boys in together. When Mike went to California and became identified with the Western Pictures Exploitation Co., which has recently been changed to Principal Pictures Co., I took Jack, my youngest brother in. He started in the shipping department. This week I am starting him out on the road. Lou is out and in most of the time. And then—" concluded Al, who is the proud father of a small son, still in the romper class, "There will he my boy to come in with us!" Who knows? One of these days, friend Al may be qualifying for the "Daddy of 'em all" in the independent field.

The Educational two-reel special, "Man vs. Beast," is being featured at the Liberty Theatre this week, where it is attracting much favorable comment. Press notices unite in giving it favorable mention, and the management has featured it in double column ads in company with some of the higgest attractions of the season.

The Seattle Film Exchange reports the purchase of the series of six Squirrel Comedies, from the Lee-Bradford Corporation. Arthur A. Lee and wife, who are touring the exchange centers in the United States and Canada, were here last week.

Burr Says "Luck" Is a Big Picture

Not only will the trade be surprised with the reported entertainment value in Johnny Hines next feature titled "Luck," but it will view with favor the realism of the sets that Producer Burr is building for this production. In order to get the proper locale and atmosphere of one of the big melodramatic scenes of this feature, C. C. Burr, Johnny Hines and the entire supporting cast made a three-day visit to the Buttonwood coal mine, a few miles outside of Wilkes-Barre in Pennsylvania, where some extraordinary shots were obtained not only in the vicinity of the coal mines themselves but immediately inside and 1,700 feet below the surface. Since this particular scene is the nucleus around which the great melodramatic moment in "Luck" is built, no time and pains were spared to make as much capital as possible out of the location. The miners themselves pitched in and supplied the necessary atmosphere, and they acted as if they enjoyed it heartily.

Since it was impossible to spend more than three days in Wilkes-Barre, Studio Manager Manning had drawings of the interior of the Buttonwood mine executed with the result that after a week's work with a highly trained technical force, the lower floor of C. C. Burr's studio in Glendale has been transformed into what is justly reputed to be one of the most detailed and striking mine sets devised in a long time.

The complete set measures about two hundred feet and has been so accurately built as to make it appear as the real thing. Tracks for the donkey carts spread their net-work throughout the entire underground set and the material used to make the walls appear like nature's coal is said to be as real as coal itself.

"Sure-Fire Flint" Gets Many Dates

"Sure-Fire Flint," the latest Johnny Hines feature produced by C. C. Burr, is evidently out on a record-breaking career so far as first-run bookings are concerned. Louis Hyman, of All-Star Features, who controls the distribution of "Sure-Fire Flint" on the coast, wired Producer Burr this week that first-run bookings on this production have already been arranged for the Strand Theatre in San Francisco, Goddards Theatre in Sacramento, the Liberty Theatre in San Jose, the U. C. Theatre in Berkely and the Superba in San Diego. Mr. Hyman is particularly enthusiastic about the entertainment value of "Sure-Fire Flint" and in co-operation with these first-run houses is putting over a publicity and exploitation campaign that is said to be a comprehensive one from every angle.

Edgar Lewis' "Fires of Youth" Ready Soon

Outstanding among the great casts and productions that are gradually blazing their way into the State right market and which give every indication of the further solidity and potentiality of independent production is the Edgar Lewis feature temporarily titled "Fires of Youth," featuring in its cast Mary Carr, screendom's symbol of motherhood, James Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, and little Russel Griffin, the child actor whose polished performances in "Reported Missing" with Owen Moore and in "Sure-Fire Flint" with Johnny Hines stamped him as one of the most talented child actors on the screen.

When C. C. Burr succeeded in signing Mary Carr to a long term contract he not only gave evidence of his growing strength in the industry but he indirectly was the cause of strengthening the position of the independent market as well. Mary Carr's world-wide success in "Over the Hill" and her subsequent triumph in "Silver Wings" and other notable productions stamped her as one of the greatest screen actresses of all time and also attested to her popularity at the box-office, which after all is the only salvation of the exhibitor.

"Blind Justice" Proves Big Feature—Burr

The flood of inquiries that poured into the offices of C. C. Burr following the announcement that he had secured Edward Sloman's masterful production temporarily titled "Blind Justice," which features in its cast Milton Sills, aided by Carmel Myers, Pat O'Malley, Alec Francis, Jack Mower, Walter Long and others, caused Mr. Burr to issue the following statement on this powerfully portrayed dramatic production:

The dramatic sweep and genuineness of "Blind Justice" prompts me to state without equivocation at this time, that "Blind Justice" as a production is as great a masterpiece as the "Miracle Man," which was rightfully hailed by the industry and the public as one of the greatest triumphs of the screen. Realizing the potentiality of that statement it would be an unwise thing for me to make any sweeping comparison between the two pictures unless I was sure beyond any particle of doubt that "Blind Justice" was in the same class as the "Miracle Man." Realizing the exact import of my remarks, I wish to go on record that in my own opinion, which covers an experience of ten years in the industry, "Blind Justice" will go down as a production that is without doubt in the same class as the "Miracle Man."

"David Copperfield" Is Next

The new production of Dickens' "Great Expectations" in which the latest boy star, "Buddy" Martin, is said to establish himself as a prodigy of the serious drama, will be followed by another elaborately staged Dickens' picture of even more pretentious proportions, according to word from the producers.

The generous response of the public to the serious efforts made by picture producers to transfer the world beloved Dickens characters to the screen has prompted the Nordisk company to make "Great Expectations" and also to follow it with "David Copperfield," according to their correspondent. "The story of 'Great Expectations' is nearly ideal for the screen," he continues, "because the simple but powerful plot with little 'Pip' as its central figure is deep and interesting, but not too involved. This also applies to the story of 'David Copperfield,' which is expected to prove exceptionally good picture material."

New Exhibitor Booking Kink

During the past few weeks, officials of the Al Lichtman Corporation have been paying attention to reports from the field force with a particular object in mind.

As a result of their observations, they note what is said to be a new kink in the methods of exhibitor bookings and an indication that exhibitors are reverting to the former scheme of block bookings. Contracts now in New York reveal the fact that showmen all over the country have urged upon Lichtman exchanges, agreements for the Preferred output in series. When the Lichtman Corporation was formed, it was the plan to sell the pictures on an individual basis only. At that time, it was announced to the trade that exhibitors would never be coerced into booking any Preferred Picture which they did not actually want. After "Rich Men's Wives" got into circulation, however, exhibitors in innumerable cases insisted upon signing for the remainder of the Preferred output in bulk.

Leon D. Netter, special sales representative of the Lichtman organization, returned from the Middle West this week and brought home evidence of this condition. He said that all over, "Rich Man's Wives" had proved so successful that the value and prestige of the company was at once recognized.

Preferred Buys 'The Broken Wing' for Release Through Al Lichtman Corp.

In the face of stiff competition from other large producers, B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, Inc., and vice-president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, secured the motion picture rights to a much coveted piece of stage property. The transaction was closed early this week for the film rights to "The Broken Wing," the comedy drama by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, which played for almost a year on Broadway during the 1920-1921 theatrical season and later did excellent business on the road in important cities like Chicago, Boston, Washington, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Pittsburgh and Toronto.

"The Broken Wing" in its stage version contained a thrill that occasioned considerable comment in New York and in the other cities in which it played. The high light of the piece was an actual aeroplane crash on the stage, a bit of business that affords unusual opportunities for film reproduction.

Preferred Pictures, the producing unit of the Al Lichtman Corporation, intends placing the play in production in the early future. In all likelihood, the picture will be an important addition to the list of spring releases. No decision has as yet been made relative to the director. Schulberg has both Gasnier and Tom Forman under contract.

In its stage version, "The Broken Wing" opened at the 48th Street Theatre on November 29th, 1920. It immediately caught on and remained at that house until July 2, 1921. It later went on the road, its Chicago engagement totaling 12 weeks. Other important engagements included runs in the cities named above.

An English company headed by Dorothy Dix and Thurston Hall is playing in it at the Duke of York Theatre in London at the moment. All over the country, innumerable stock companies are including "The Broken Wing" in their repertoire, since the play has already been released for stock. Sargent Aborn, the producer, has disposed of the musical comedy rights to the play. In that form, it will shortly make another appearance on Broadway under the auspices of a producer whose name is familiar to all playgoers.

In the play, the cast included Louis Wolheim, Inez Plummer, Charles Trowbridge, George Abbott, Mary Worth, Henry Duggan, Alphonz Ethier and others. Its reception by New York and out-of-town critics was very gratifying.

Kraft Sets New Mark With "I Am Law" Stunts

For the third time in one year, Will Kraft, advertising and exploitation man for Weber & North, landed on the front page of the local paper with a stunt that was carried by the Associated Press and was given two-column space in the New York and out-of-town papers. Like his two previous efforts on "School Days" and "Your Best Friend," his latest smash was clean-cut and direct, without any kick-back or bad after-effects. The publicity differed from other scoops, inasmuch as the title and description of the picture was mentioned with the story. The tie-up was as direct as an advertisement.

The picture Kraft went out to put over was "I Am the Law," the C. C. Burr special which Bobby North controls for the New York territory. The booking was at the Rialto, Passaic, where it is winding up its full week run. The feature was scheduled to open Friday last. The day before, Kraft showed the feature to the inmates of the Passaic Almshouse. This was the first time that the aged occupants of the institution were shown a movie. The generosity of the Rialto in bringing a picture to the poor won a liberal advance story in the local press, the day before the picture opened.

On Friday—the day of the opening, the newspapers of Passaic came out with a story of the sensational escape of four of the inmates of the Almshouse. As the story ran, these four men, sixty-five years old, had seen a thrilling picture of the Northwest —"I Am the Law"—the night before at the Almshouse. They had never before seen a movie in their life. It was only natural that they mistook the screen characters for real people. When the picture was over, the men were puzzled. "Where did that villain in the picture go to?" they asked. They looked behind the screen — the villain was not there. So they grabbed some rusty rifles and fared forth in the open country, leaving a note—"We won't come back till we get our man." The story got headlines in the Passaic dailies, and was broadcasted all over New Jersey and New York, where the metropolitan dailies gave it two-column space. The next day, the local papers reported that the men had returned. The follow-up story was as prominent as the escape-story.

Producers Security Reports Many Sales

F. J. Hawkins, Secretary of Producers Security Corp., who just returned from a trip to exchanges in the Mid-West, reports several important state right deals, for his company.

H. C. Simeral, Inc., of Pittsburgh, secured Dorothy Gish's "The Country Flapper," and Irving Cummings "On the Trail," and "Tricked," for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Great Western Film Exchange of Cleveland secured "The Country Flapper" and Oscar Apfel's "The Wolf's Fangs," for Ohio and Kentucky. Several other deals are pending.

Mr. Hawkins reports brisk activity among independents and states that big pictures are bringing most satisfactory returns in all territories. He states that Producers Security will place several more features on the independent market in the near future.

H. M. Warner Would Make "Hamlet"

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, this week, recalling the suggestion of Augustus Thomas to Will Hays at the Friars Dinner that the industry should turn out "Hamlet" with John Barrymore in the titular role, announced that he is prepared to make that production. Mr. Warner's statement was: "Warner Brothers would be pleased to produce the literary classic or any other production of equal literary and educational value, without any other recompense than the actual production cost. Wide distribution and exploitation would be given such a picture and we believe that the motion picture industry as a whole would benefit from such a precedence."

Attractive Posters for C. B. C. Pictures

What is said to be an unusual and highly effective layout of posters was completed recently on "Only a Shopgirl," second of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series of Box Office Winners.

Jack Cohn, of that company, announces that more time, thought, and expense have been given to the preparation of the paper on this new feature than to any other releases that company has made, with a view to making this the finest and most effective layout for exploitation.

Refuses Prize; Turns It Over to Hospital

The Los Angeles Children's Hospital has been enriched in the sum of $1,000 through the generosity of H. J. Bradt, of 916 Fedora street, Los Angeles, one of the eight first prize winners in the recent Cecil B. DeMille photoplay idea contest conducted under the auspices of the Los Angeles Times.

Mr. Bradt refused to accept the $1,000 check for himself and asked that it be made out to the Children's Hospital, with the special request that it be used to endow a bed to be named after the idea which had brought him the money. The bed accordingly will be known as "The Ten Commandments Bed."

The uses to which some of the other winners intend to devote their $1,000 prizes are almost equally interesting, according to their letters to Mr. DeMille and The Times. F. C. Nelson, of Lansing, Mich., will use his as the first payment on a new home.

Peter Rasmussen, of Long Beach, will clear off the last of a long-standing mortgage on his home. Marie Michael, of Providence, R. I., who had been obliged to leave high school, wrote that she would use the money for a college education.

Arthur E. Weld Gets Unusual Effects From an Oddly Designed Lobby Display

SOMETHING new in exploitation is getting rare, but Arthur E. Weld, of the Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Ia., sends in a new effect and shows two uses for the same device.

The chief oddity of Mr. Weld's idea is that the most attractive display is virtually hidden from the passerby, who must enter the lobby and either peep in or come before the box office to view the display. Generally the best front is turned toward the street. Here the better of the faces is toward the box office, though the exterior is in itself sufficiently attractive to get favorable attention.

First on Norma

The lattice was built for Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame," and for this diamond shaped openings in the sides gave a view of the interior without requiring the curious to come all the way around.

Within was a shrine effect, with a red compo board heart backing a lighted candle of white wax. A pair of ornamental lanterns were placed in the corners and pedestals right and left displayed flowers; a beautiful rose for "Norma, the wife," and a wilted bloom for "Norma, the flirt." The card in the corner reads: "Is the Eternal Flame still burning in your heart?"

Butterflies on invisible wires fluttered about the flame, moving at the slightest draft. Smaller butterflies were attached to the lattice.

Then came "Grandma's Boy," and the same structure was completely changed to give a serious treatment to this theme. Weld searched the town for some old wall paper and managed to find some that had been in stock for so long that it was almost moth eaten. An old-fashioned what-not, loaded with the curios so dear to the heart back in the seventies, was placed in one corner and was balanced by a table with an old-fashioned album, stereoscope, knitting and a reading lamp. There was a comfortable looking old rocker and a rag carpet that showed wear. It might well have served as a setting for "The Old Homestead" or "The Old Nest."

Holding a Record

We believe that Mr. Weld holds the record for the most serious and careful treatment of a comedy picture, and the Lloyd production was put over as few comedies have been. The patrons realized that there must be something out of the ordinary to the picture to call for this extra care, and they entered the auditorium properly impressed.

Mr. Weld has before this shown himself to be an adroit publicity man, but we think that these two displays mark a new high standard for him. They are decidedly good and out of the ordinary.

How About It?

Oscar Kantner, Paramounteer, claims a record for having landed fourteen merchants for a tieup in thirty minutes. Can anyone beat an average of two minutes and eight seconds?

"Old Homestead" Morality Campaign

When "The Old Homestead" was due in Longmount, Col., Rick Ricketson the Paramounteer, collaborated with the Isis Theatre in getting the town sold on a campaign to play up the "Old Homestead" idea.

Merchants used the angle to plead with patrons to forsake the insidious mail-order houses, and the paper urged a return to the normal standards prevailing in "The Old Homestead." The paper offered a loving cup for the best dressed window depicting the crusade idea and the Isis offered $5 and ticket prizes for the best ideas to tie into the campaign.

The night of the opening a minister preached a sermon on the theme and the Isis loaned him the house quartet to sing old home songs as a part of the service.

No attempt was made to hide the advertising end. It was all frankly a town betterment movement for advertising purposes, but it seems to have accomplished some good to others than the shrewd advertiser, who sold the play to capacity.

Great Climate

They say anything will grow in Southern California. Lately, at the Pasadena, they had a perambulating book for "The Masquerader." A few weeks later, in Los Angeles, it had grown from four feet into a six-foot book for Lorna Doone. It's a fine climate for growing things. Any Californian (southern) will tell you that.

ARTHUR E. WELD CAREFULLY GUARDED "THE ETERNAL FLAME" FROM ALL DRAFTS

He made his display in the lobby of the Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Ia., face the purchaser instead of the prospect. On the left is seen the interior and on the right the display as it faced the spectator from the street. The diamond shaped apertures in the sides gave a view of the interior from the lobby. See the next page for another form.

Sold Lobby Train to Eager Patron

When you want to borrow something for the lobby and the merchant is slow to lend, tell him this story of A. H. Cobb, Jr.

Cobb runs the Alamo Theatre, Griffin, Ga., and is a hustler. When he got "The Fast Mail" he decided on a lobby miniature, knowing what toy trains had done for so many other houses. He built a display ten feet long, making a pretentious rural scene through which an electric train dashed on its way, working back through a tunnel at the rear of the realistic setting. It was a fine job.

The train was loaned by a local concern and when they came to take it back Cobb gave them the name of a patron who wanted the outfit. Probably the purchaser had seen the train many times in the window, but seeing it in motion, he quite agreed with his small son that they needed it to keep house with, and he put in a bid for the entire outfit.

Meantime Mr. Cobb had an attraction which kept a crowd in front of the lobby practically all day, and he bought a fifteen per cent. increase in business for only $9.40.

Made Double Drive on Serial Opening

Most managers are content if they get over the first episode of a new serial, but Charles Morrison, of the Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, was confident that "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" would bring in a return for more effort, so he had two-day parades for both the opening and the second chapter—four in all.

The Mayor gave a parade permit on condition that no shooting be done, and told Morrison to go as far as he liked—after Morrison had argued the educational and historical value of the episodes. Then Morrison borrowed some wild west stuff from a friend and obtained horses and riders for $4 for horse and rider by the seven-hour day.

With these and a home-made prairie schooner he staged his first parade, stopping at the schools to tell the pupils about the history angle. Some of the teachers were disposed to object until Morrison showed a letter of approval from the school board.

On the second week he was able to use a real prairie schooner which came into town the night before from Los Angeles. With a sick sister of a wheel which needed "fixing" about every three blocks, he managed to make the parade last a long time over a short route.

He also formed the Buffalo Bill Club, which is merely a punch card with spaces for the eighteen episodes. All children who have the card full punched will be given an outing at the end of the serial, and Morrison plans to lay off the cost on the merchants who supply the refreshments in return for the advertising they will get out of it, while he believes that he can get the auto trucks in the same way. Meanwhile he has nearly doubled business on these days in a town none too easy to reach.

WELD'S UNUSUAL DISPLAY FOR "GRANDMA'S BOY"

This occupies the same structure erected for "The Eternal Flame," shown on the preceding page, but it was very different and a serious treatment of a comedy theme that is unusual in the exploitation of a humorous picture. See the preceding page.

Red Ink Storm

Combining two old stunts gave the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, a real thrill. Manager C. A. McFarland and Paul Wakefield, a Universal exploitation man, collaborated in the production of a convincingly real eight page paper, The Texas Typhoon with a double line red ink head reading "Storm Sweeps South; to Hit Dallas Sunday," which, of course, was the opening date of "The Storm."

Ever since the Galveston tidal wave storms have had a real interest for Texas and this issue with its big red "extra" and the storm warning was snapped up by the crowds. The red ink is old stuff, but the application on this picture was so marked that it possessed a real drag.

Water With His

James T. Freeman, of the Jefferson Theatre, St. Augustine, used the toy train for "The Fast Mail," and he built up an unusually elaborate effect, including a small lake with a trestle over which the train ran. It attracted more attention than usual, and this, of course, meant more business.

TWO SHOTS OF THE PARADES USED BY CHARLES MORRISON OF JACKSONVILLE FOR "BUFFALO BILL"

He ballyhooed both the first and second chapters of this serial and was told by the Mayor that he could go as far as he liked. The Board of Education approved an approach to the school children because of the historic angle of the episodes, and Morrison is planning an outing for all the children who attend each of the eighteen episodes of the picture. It is an intensive campaign for an eighteen-week run, and it paid.

A BACKED CUTOUT OF THE FOREST FIRE FROM "THE STORM"

Raymond P. Whitfield made this cutout for the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, as part of an intensive campaign, getting the idea from a sister house which used it for another picture.

Whitfield Got Money on "Storm" Exploits

Working like a circus agent, Raymond P. Whitfield, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, put over a campaign on "The Storm" which the exploitation man declared to be one of the best in his territory.

Whitfield started in with blue on white stickers reading: "'The Storm' is Coming" and transferred that to a slide two weeks before the opening, to make sure that everyone was warned. He also put out a 28-sheet; the only good location outside his regular boards.

Then he started a street ballyhoo with a horse-drawn vehicle bannered on three sides and started in with more specific slides taken from the plan book.

One thousand form letters were sent to a select list, and 1,500 heralds were given the departing patrons the week in advance. At the same time he added five 24-sheets, all in good locations. The trailer was started and seven business district windows were painted with storm signals and lettered for star and title.

The central board, shown in the photograph, was a cutout from the paper backed by a hand-painted forest fire scene. Red lights were put behind the figure and whites were used in front. The lights were on a flasher and these ran all Sunday night before the opening when the house was dark. The idea was taken from a "Manslaughter" poster broadcasted by Bill Johnson.

Wakefield, the exploitation man, tied the local paper to a storm story contest and the class in journalism doing practical work on a local paper were given tickets and a prize was offered for the best written review by a member of the class, most of the reviews being printed, which took a lot of space.

C. A. McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Texas, had two old homesteads when he played the Paramount. One was a miniature in the inner lobby. The other was a built up front to the entrance with real smoke coming out of the chimney. The windows were brightly lighted from the rear and made a fine flash. An incense burner supplied the smoke.

Another Page Idea

Something else again was brought in by Brentlinger, of the Strand Theatre, Evansville, Ind., for "Remembrance."

Taking a hook-up page, he divided it into eleven strips across the page, each of which was taken by some merchant. Each of these eleven spaces started with a heavy letter which was also the initial of the first sentence in the advertisement. They were arranged in order to spell a bold "Remembrance" down the left hand side of the page. Two tickets were offered by each merchant for the best substitute for the opening sentence, which must also be begun with the letter he had used. For example, the man who had had "B" assigned to him might have used "Before you install a new heater, look into the merits of" the system he advertised. The winning sentence also had to begin with a "B," and had to be the best phrase to work in with the copy.

This not only gives a contest, but it gives a well displayed title.

The usual hook-ins were used, and by spending about $50 above the usual appropriation many times this sum was brought in the box office.

'Manslaughter' Front Built to Curb Line

Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., hooked on the safety campaign on "Manslaughter," and the police overlooked the fact that he built his front to the curb line. It was part of a public service. The color scheme was blue lettering on orange and the marquise was topped with a cutout on a paneled back.

Just inside the building line was a miniature of which the backing was an enlargement of an 11 by 14 black and white still set into a proscenium frame.

It brought about thirty per cent. over the average at a cost of one dollar for each one per cent.

Improving the Stunt

The Universal men at Winnipeg built up on the bank storage of film when "Foolish Wives" came to Winnipeg. They not only arranged to store the film in the bank vaults, but two policemen met the film cans at the station and acted as body guard to the bank and to and from the house each day. It gave the Lyceum Theatre unusual publicity. The exploiteers do not tell how they managed to swing the police, which would be the interesting part.

CAME CLEAR TO CURB WITH A FRONT ON "MANSLAUGHTER"

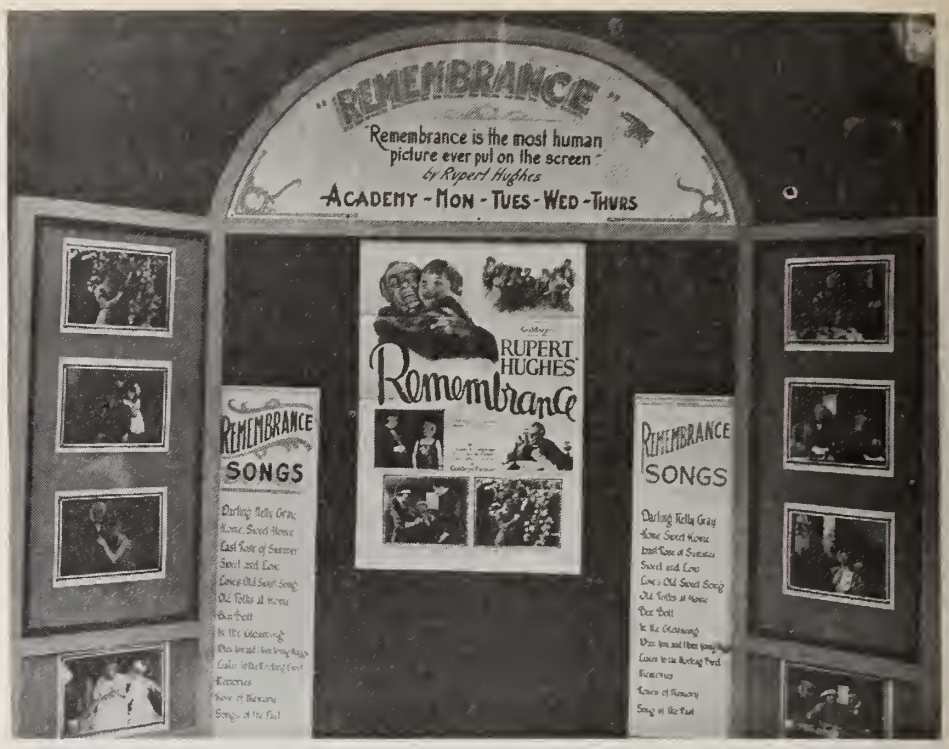
Ollie Brownlee hooked Muskogee, Okla., to the Palace Theatre on the safety campaign for "Manslaughter," and did murder on his house front because it was a public movement and the police approved his efforts to curb motorists.

Split With School to Get Big Special

Manager Accrossinni, of the Academy Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., gave special impetus to his special matinee on "Sherlock Holmes."

He gave a special showing to pupils at ten o'clock one morning, the schools excusing the children that they might attend. The tickets were sold at the regular price of twenty-five cents, of which the house donated fifteen cents to the school funds. Each teacher sold her class the tickets, and the school turned in ten cents to the house, retaining its share. You can work this more easily than you probably imagine. Give it a trial. Most live principals recognize the value of filmed classics and still more keenly appreciate additions to the school funds which are not provided for by the Board of Education.

Mr. Accrossinni did not have time to work up many window displays, but he did land a book store on Doyle's works and a phonograph store on the old time songs. For the latter he made an unusual display, as shown on this page.



A Goldwyn Release.

A WINDOW DISPLAY WITH BOTH DIGNITY AND PUNCH

It is a phonograph hook-up on "Remembrance," with old songs on phonograph records, and was designed by the Academy Theatre, Lynchburg, W. Va. A few records bearing the titles shown might help the effect if attached to the back cloth.

Crandall's Windows Set Big New Record

Milton Crandall, who is pervading the South in the interests of Mrs. Castle in "Slim Shoulders," got two of the prettiest window displays we have seen to put over the Slim Shoulders Fashion Promenade at the Rialto Theatre, San Antonio.

He hooked local clothing merchants to a ten page hook-up, which brought him about half a page a day for the entire week before the run, and he persuaded the leading store to devote three of their windows to the attraction. One was a straight clothes display, but the other two take all records.

One shows the lobby of the Paris Opera with its lavish decorations faithfully reproduced; a brilliant background to a display of new styles. The other, slightly less elaborate, but not less striking, shows a scene at the French Vechy springs. In this six figures were used.

Cuts cannot do justice to the vivid coloring, but they can convey some idea of the pretentious display, and the store found that the extra cost of careful painting was well worth while in the added interest taken in the display; an interest which was capitalized in sales.

Original Lithos for "The Old Homestead"

When Major Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., started in to put over "The Old Homestead," he played in luck. One of the oldest inhabitants proudly displayed to him two of the old one-sheet lithographs used for the Denman Thompson production some thirty years ago.

Holloway had them glazed for lobby displays and then got two newspaper write-ups on the antiques. They attracted more attention than all of the rest of his lobby.

To part of his mailing list he sent slips reading "Can you keep a secret?" and running on "We will give you time to think it over and in tomorrow's mail you will receive the information."

This left the reader in a receptive frame of mind for the next day's card, which announced the four day engagement and added: "It's got to be a good one to play four days. We know it will do better each day." The attention value of the teaser was strong enough to justify the double postage cost. The rest of the mail list received a well arranged postcard.

His best side stunt was a tieup with a paint store to urge repainting "The Old Homestead," the store displaying a miniature house six feet wide by four high and about three feet in depth, done in compo board and brightly painted. The slogan was "It doesn't cost much to brighten up 'The Old Homestead' with Blank's Paint."

Don't forget the midnight matinee on New Year's Eve. It means immediate money and if you spend a little extra to whoop it up, it means an advertisement that will help for a year.

MILT CRANDALL PUTS OVER ONE OF THE PRETTIEST WINDOW DISPLAYS ON RECORD

Working for Irene Castle in "Slim Shoulders" and the Castle Fashion Promenade, he got these handsome displays. On the right is seen the grand foyer of the Opera House, Paris, while the other shows a supposed scene at Vichy, where the continental fashionables go to show and see the styles. Full sized wax figures were used in the displays, which attracted unusual attention.

Black and White Good for Windows

The best angle in this window display of the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, for "Skin Deep" is the black and white background. The display was a drug store and the articles were cosmetics and the stunt carries two cards, with four stills each and two question mark cards.

A First National Release

THE DRUG STORE WINDOW

Adapting an idea already used on several First National productions, starting with Jackie Coogan in "Trouble," a drive was made for clothing for needy ex-service men, hooking to Armistice Day and the war angle of the picture.

It got over because it was played up to the limit, but the clothing stunt promises to become as much of a pest as the newsboy parade.

Exploited by Inches

Persons are said to be dying by inches, but Fred V. Greene, Jr., the erstwhile Paramounteer, who is now out on Long Island, exploited by inches.

He dug out the old film specimen idea and gave it a revarnishing. One frame of film was attached to cards which read: "Here is one inch of 'Pink Gods,' a Paramount Picture. You must not miss the other 85,307 inches at the Rialto Theatre."

And there really was an inch of film, because while a frame is only about three-fourths of an inch high. Fred used slightly more than one frame. Unlike Max Rosenfield, he is accurate in his measurements.

Fred reports that most of the cards went home with the patrons and that the few cards he did find in the lobby had had their film cuttings detached.

Ran Second Week on "East Is West"

H. B. Watts, of the Strand Theatre, Omaha, worked up "East Is West" so effectively that he got a second week of good business out of the Constance Talmadge production.

He used to love boat prologue and dressed his usherettes in chinese dress—which did not mean Japanese kimonas but the trousers and blouse of the Celestial Kingdom. It was more unusual, and so more effective.

The lobby was lavishly decorated in the Chinese style and tea was served by a little maiden properly costumed. A large grocery firm supplied a brand tea in return for the advertising, and the Loose-Wiles people contributed the wafers on the same payment plan. It all worked for the general effect and brought a first week's business which assured a successful continuation.

The tea stand will help in any house, and you can work off the cost if you start early enough, even in a small town. Give your grocer time to write his jobber and you can get the goods free.

Horned In

Omaha is in the throes of a Cleaner City movement, and the populace is being educated to throw trash into the metal containers and not on the sidewalk or into the gutter.

Each container was tagged with the appeal "Help Keep the City Clean." Advertising space on the cans is rented and Harry Goldberg of the Sun Theatre, saw his opportunity. He took the space directly below to tell of "The Silent Call" at his house. The strips were chiefly title, which gave the impression that the Sun was hooking the First National to the movement. It was effective work.

Revived

The clothes line lobby bobs up every now and then, and the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, used a line containing worn garments and new clothes, so disposed that the title "Rags to Riches," represented by gilt cutout letters, rested against the old garments for the "rags" and the new for "riches."

What else do you suppose they did for this Wesley Barry picture?

Of course! A newsboy's matinee. It's no longer very original, but it made a good ballyhoo.

They are Rice Hassan and Muley Ali, and they are getting on this page to give a line on real Arabic dress. You can fake the robes by sewing up the front of a gaily colored bathrobe. The desert head dress on the left is easier to handle than the turban, which requires skillful winding. It is a skull cap of white cloth of several thicknesses, with an extension to cover the back of the head and lower part of the face, preventing the desert sands from working down inside the shirt. The shirt can be a dicky of any bright cloth, preferably pleated. It is really very simple to fake such a costume for the numerous desert plays.

"As human as a hole in your sock—as funny as a baby's first tooth" is the way Ralph Ruffner put over "Clarence" at the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver. It got them despite the fact that Wally is not over popular in B. C.

HOW TOM BOLAND, OF THE EMPRESS THEATRE, OKLAHOMA CITY, SOLVED A DISPLAY PROBLEM

He built up the love boat scene from "East Is West" on top of his marquise, skillfully working cutouts into the new building. To get visibility, he set the display on so sharp an incline that it was completely visible from across the street, as this photograph demonstrates. The same idea can be applied to a dual display facing both ways from the house on the same side of the street. Looks as though Mr. Boland were due to receive a vote of thanks.

Some Capital Ideas for "East Is West"

Bamboo canes instead of the usual white lattice was one of the means used by Richard Doering, of the Arcade Theatre, Paducah, Ky., to get Chinese atmosphere for "East Is West." The cane lattice, with some gay streamers and red and black banners gave more or less the suggestion of a tea house. Only about two dozen canes were required to give the frame. Most florists sell bamboo for bean poles if you want to know where to get them.

Note the use of the explanatory pedestals for the cutouts. That for Miss Talmadge, for example, reads: "I'm Ming Toy. Me speak dignified American language (some Chinese characters). Get me Steve? Portrayed by Constance Talmadge in 'East Is West.'" There were similar feet for the cutouts of Edward Burns and Warner Oland.

A perambulator in the form of a sedan chair, with the celestial dragon forming a frame for the painted sign was carried through the streets by two fake Chinamen.

They were used by Richard Doering, of the Arcade Theatre, Paducah, Ky., for Constance Talmadge in "East Is West." Bamboo and parasols were employed in place of the lattice and vine idea to suggest a tea garden effect.

Perambulating Book Has Practical Page

Tod Browning, of the Grand Theatre, Middletown, Conn., read of the perambulating books used on "The Masquerader" and decided to have one. He decided to have a better one.

His book was three by four feet and one side was provided with an extra panel, hinged to one side. When a crowd was attracted, the perambulator navigator released a catch which permitted the panel to swing out, displaying a two "page" selling talk on the story. Naturally this was a very great deal more effective than a straight perambulating book, and capitalized the interest the cover had aroused.

It is very little extra trouble and it multiplies the result tenfold.

For "The Masquerader" the perambulator man was masked, and wore a silk hat, of uncertain vintage, to match up with the portrait of Guy Bates Post on the outside cover.

Sands and The Sheik

"The Sheik" made good for C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbus, S. C., so he got out the old tent front display on that attraction when he played "Burning Sands," taking care that the title was so well displayed that people would not confuse this with a return date. Then he sold on "The flaming answer—" angle. People remembered the earlier play and figured that they would like to see another. It not only made money, but it saved the cost of a new display, for the awning material had been saved for future use.

Several weeks in advance of the showing Mr. Irvin talked the local music dealer into buying several hundred copies of the plugger song, and the dealer had to make a big display of the music to avoid getting stuck with unsold copies, so he worked almost as hard for the play as did the manager.

Weber and North Have New Trailer

Weber and North, producers of Will Nigh's "Notoriety," insist upon it that newspapers will hook up to the title, since newspapers are the chief source of notoriety.

To prove the point, they have invented a new trailer to supplement the usual effect, which is also supplied.

Taking the scene where the newspaper is read for an introduction, a title follows "Have you read today's ————" the blank being filled in with the name of the co-operating paper. Then follows a flash of the newspaper, and clippings from its pages, each appropriately illustrated with some scene from the play.

Apparently the trailer is remade each day, which involves considerable work, but the co-operation of the newspaper which is supposed to reciprocate with additional news stories of the stunt, is counted to offset the cost.

If it works, it's a great scheme, but it is to be questioned whether the stunt is within the scope of the resources of most houses.

AN ELABORATE FLOAT FOR "THE QUEEN OF THE MOULIN ROUGE"

This was effectively used by the Cameo Theatre, New York, during the run at this house. A red mill with electrically lighted arms, faced in two directions, was used on the marquise roof, about the first time this Moss house has used an attractor.

Too Numerous

So many lobbies for "The Old Homestead" have used the rural setting that the Paramounteers have been instructed not to photograph any more. Looking over the numerous displays sent in by Southern Enterprises it would appear that the lobby miniature gives better results than the full sized lobby. Guy A. Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, offers one of the best of the small settings, but H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., made a very pretty window miniature and A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, used a small design in the lobby for advance work, and then moved it to a store window on the main thoroughfare for the run.

Warren Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., got one of the simplest effects. His lobby is rather narrow and a hut over the box office and two short lengths of paling fence gave him all the atmosphere at small cost. He built his fence with back braces so that the sections could be lifted out of the way before the house was emptied.

A Lichtman Release

PUTTING OVER "RICH MEN'S WIVES" IN YAKIMA, WASH.

The Liberty Theatre made a board for this picture which worked so well that they made it a continued stunt for the time being. To avoid argument with the fire department, asbestos board was used for the foundation instead of compo board.

Used "World" Lobby

Like most of the lobby display suggestions given in this department, the front for "Blood and Sand" has been widely used, but Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla., followed it almost line for line—and gained a pretty effect. He put a balance around the marquise and this was lettered with star and title to face three ways. The lights were dyed yellow and red to match the colorings of the awning cloth. It made a wonderful flash for less than $20.

A song tie-up was effected and a sporting goods house loaned one of its windows to be turned into a bull ring with a cutout of Valentino. Now the Palace has a new big business record.

Let George Do It

Believing in laying off costs where possible, the Orpheum Theatre, somewhere in Rick Ricketson's territory, let an automobile company stage the ballyhoo. In the space in front of the theatre the accident scene was staged, and along side the car was the statement that Lydia Thorne ran down and killed a motorcycle cop and was charged with "Manslaughter," adding that if she had used a car of the advertising make she could have throttled down to three miles an hour, avoiding the accident and the subsequent trouble.

The motorcycle was supplied by another agency, which also got a credit card. The Orpheum supplied the idea and got the business.

Four "Manslaughter" targets were used to fence off the space taken up by the display. The tableau was staged in the street because it was part of a local safety first campaign.

Some Slam!

The First National publicity department starts off a story with the remark that "Even the unlimited resources of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies were taxed to meet the demands" of a 15,000 distribution of fake telegrams.

Something must have happened to the well organized supplies departments of the telegraph companies very lately. They used to print blanks in quantity.

The stunt was used by the Garden Theatre, Davenport, Ia., on "East Is West."

Slick snd Slicker

There was not much cost attached to the stunt used by the Melrose Theatre, a New York locality house. Manager Kraus found a man who owned a yellow slicker, sent him out with a sign on his back telling the world that "The Storm" was coming. Seeing that he was dressed for wet weather, they believed him. Jack Staub, a Universalist, helped him put the picture over.

Hyman's Overture Gets Them Early

Figuring that the earlier they come, the sooner they get out to make room for others Edward L. Hyman, of the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, has been playing up his overtures as a feature, and getting them in earlier than usual. For the first effort he used a self playing piano to reproduce Paderewski playing Chopin's March Militaire, with orchestral accompaniment, working the piano on the production stage in a handsome setting and giving the number importance by playing up the stunt as a feature in his advertising.

The point in the idea is not the use of a reproducing piano—which is old, but in making the overture so important that the crowds come early. That is where the profit lies.

A Change of Front Marked New Policy

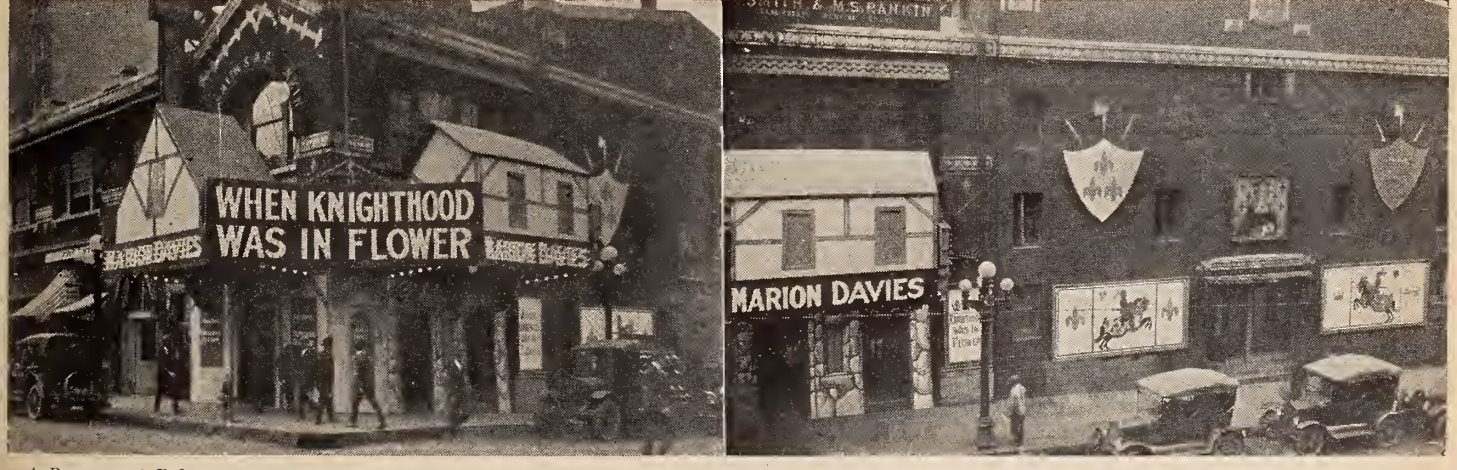
Changing a house over from a thirty cent, continuous policy to two-a-day and a dollar top, plu stax, is something of a problem. William Bedell, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, accomplished the result very effectively by changing over the front.

Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" was to be the attraction. The Hearst paper was back of the engagement, but Mr. Bedell figured that they could not reach everyone. He made over the corner lobby to suggest the old English style of architecture, with dark beams and roughcast plastering, altering the lobby doors to harmonize. These look rather crude in the photograph, but the actual effect was pleasing. After the photograph was made vines were trained over the walls to further enhance the effect and to more accurately carry out the suggestion.

At night the main building could not be seen, and the effect was that of a low-hung, two-story Tudor period cottage, with only the electric lights contributing to the modern aspect.

A double for the star, supposedly in one of the costumes worn in the play, appeared at a fashionable card party and a parade of knights was made between the halves of a football game which had drawn some 15,000 persons.

The net result was that practically no one objected to the increase and the business was well supported.



A Paramount Release.

CHANGING THE FRONT OF A THEATRE FOR "WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER" HELPED A RAISE

The Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, was a thirty-cent continuous house. The Marion Davies feature was to run twice daily at one dollar plus tax. To get the patrons thinking of the house in a new light, William Bedell, the manager, remade the front into the suggestion of an old Tudor house and the change in the familiar corner gave emphasis to the altered policy. At night the lighting is such that the upper stories do not show at all.

Beauteboxes Sell Paramount Players

Tying the Clive paintings of Paramount stars to a new tin container, elaborately lithographed, has put the stars of that company into hundreds of windows for the Christmas season.

The name is the trade designation of a series ot containers produced by means of a new process of lithography on tin. The boxes come in a variety of shapes, including tobacco cannisters, jewel boxes, containers for candy and similar wares and for the toilet table. They are richly colored and tastefully designed and a window display of these will give a better result than a tieup with other merchant articles, since they are a direct hook-up and yet part of the wares of the store and not merely space users. As all of the portraits are of the Paramount players, it makes a direct hook-up, and the boxes are so attractive that the store can clean them out in quantity.

CHRISTMAS CONTAINERS TIED UP TO CLIVE PAINTINGS

This display is from Toronto and shows the possibilities of exploiting through window work with the Beauteboxes, put on the market to anticipate the demand for Christmas dainties.

Blowing It Up

The Queen Theatre, somewhere, probably in Texas, where there are several houses of that title, sends in a baby's rattle with a big-toned horn in the handle. Attached is a baggage tag for "The Five Dollar Baby" with the catchline "A rattling good show," which is decidedly apt.

The rattles are inexpensive, but they get a laugh which is worth much more than they cost.

The novelty came very carefully packed, but there was no "from" card on the address and the sender evidently trusted to the postmark telling the town, but the postmark was illegible and we are unable to give the proper credit and so can merely pass along the idea.

White Mule Helped

What A. O. Gill of Oklahoma, calls "nub-bin wine" put a simple ballyhoo into the front page class in Athens, Ga.

The Palace Theatre picked up a tramp who looked pretty much like von Stroheim, washed him up, stowed him into an old naval uniform and set him out to ballyhoo for "Foolish Wives."

For a couple of days the perambulator did the streets with fine effect, but they gave him his money each night and he met up with a bootleg dealer in corn whiskey, with the result that he was haled into court on a charge of intoxication and was given thirty days.

Of course, the papers hailed the story with delight and it made the front page for two days because it was so clearly not a fake. And the unpaid part of the ballyhoo was vastly more effective than the straight street work.

Well Done

The most effective single bit of work on the "Old Homestead" at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., was an old well with a card at the bottom.

The well was a stock prop of one of the drama houses, moved over into the Imperial lobby and repainted. The announcement card was put on the floor inside the curb and Ray Beall writes that a surprisingly large number of persons read the card. It's old stuff, but well curb or barrel or box it never fails to capitalize curiosity.

Beall made a very effective use of the paper for the lobby, painting out the lettering on the lithos and extending the design. He is unusually clever with the brush and frequently repaints where he cannot get entire figures for his cutouts. For the well stunt he took the upper half of a picture of Roberts and painted in the legs to get a standing figure.

Burned the Lobby

For "The Storm" lobby, W. A. Doster, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., used a silhouette forest of compo board extending almost across the lobby. Strips of yellow and red crepe paper, torn to represent tongue of flame, were pasted to the outlines and kept in motion with fans. Red lamps on flasher sockets set behind the trees illuminated the paper and made a very good forest fire effect.

A cutout House Peters with the girl was placed in front of the trees and lighted with a spotlight.

Another stunt was a set of seven cards set in boxes with cutout lettering on red transparent paper. Flashers were placed in the boxes, which were then set in prominent downtown locations where current for the lamps could be obtained.

These and the usual storm warnings made business all that could be desired.

AN EFFECTIVE HOOK-UP FOR "MY WILD IRISH ROSE"

Cut-outs and copies of the song were displayed in the window of Sherman Clay, Seattle, during the run of the picture at the Blue Mouse Theatre, and interest in the song and records was capitalized for the engagement of the picture.

Papered for Paint

When the Gem Theatre, El Dorado, Kan., played "The Eternal Flame," it felt that it must be first cousin to the gas company, so they borrowed the gas company's window to reproduce the branding scene. The portable forge was constructed of a tin pan, the base of a music stand and a red electric light concealed in some coal. Cutting out the three sheet gave the tableau figures.

But the high light of the story is the fact that using wall paper instead of paint cut the decoration cost to forty cents.

Records Go Blooey on Brisk Campaign

Three times in succession lately the records at the Rex theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., have been badly fractured, the last time with "To Have and To Hold," which, under A. C. Cowles' well-directed campaign, took in more money in two days than the treasurer can remember having had before in a similar period.

Mr. Cowles simply followed the campaign outlined by Lem Stewart for the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, but he used it all, and put back of it the force of his own personality.

Three window displays were arranged, two music stores being induced to wire New York for the plugger songs. They are glad they did, for they sold to a profit.

Two hundred personal guarantee letters were sent to a select list and 300 postcards were also used. These last were endorsements of the picture signed in ink by the Better Films committee.

The hook-up page from the Paramount exploitation was used on Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning, six stores cooperating, and a particularly well built book was used in the lobby. The color scheme was dark green, picked with gold, and the board was extended at the top to suggest the half-opened pages. The lettering was in white, orange and light green, and a cutout was used for a decoration.

New New York Stunts for Goldwyn Release

For the New York opening of "Brothers Under the Skin," the inventive Eddie Bonns developed several good ideas other than the Humiliating Order of the Henpecked.

About the best gag was sending through the theatre and shopping district a furniture van fairly exuding second hand stuff. The side cards stated that it was installment furniture being taken back because of the failure to meet the weekly payments.

It struck home with a lot of those who saw it, and the others felt superior and therefore interested.

The next best bet was a phoney match stuck through a small hand card, the text reading: "The record shows 362,741 divorces in the United States last year. Most matches are failures. Don't get married until——," and the title and theatre.

The "Don't get married until—" was also printed on envelope containers and the card inside continued "until you have seen 'Brothers Under the Skin' at the Capitol this week." The envelopes were sealed to ensure their being opened and the contents read. This was a bit of psychology that helped. Some people will not take the card out of an unsealed envelope, but if they have to go to a little trouble to get the message, they will take that trouble.

Just Quick Thinking

Keeping his right eye peeled, and also giving some attention to the left, gave J. P. Barkwill, of the Mayflower Theatre, Peabody, Kans., an ideal location.

He noted that a department store was being removed to larger quarters. They had nothing left to put in the old windows. Barkwill persuaded the manager of the store that the bare window suggested deadness, and very obligingly framed a display for "Smilin' Through" to call attention to the removal notice.

He got a 20-foot window in a splendid position at no cost, just by staying alive to things that were happening.

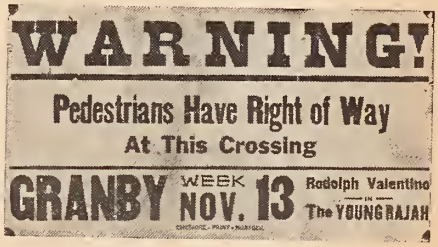
A DOLLAR DOWN BUT NO DOLLAR A WEEK ON THIS

One of the street stunts for "Brothers Under the Skin," when it played at the Capitol Theatre, New York. Parading the theatre district, it got ample attention at small cost simply because it hit home on a majority of the spectators.

Manslaughter Idea Repeated for Rajah

Leslie F. Whelan, the Washington Paramounteer, who originated the "It is manslaughter" warning cards, figured that one good turn deserves another, so he went down to Norfolk, Va., and produced this placard:



The Pedestrian Card

They were attached to every police semaphore in town and where there was no traffic control they were tacked to the nearest telegraph pole or tree at each crossing.

The Granby Theatre had to pay for the cards, but they could have afforded to do them in three colors, in view of the results they obtained. The beauty of this scheme is that you do not have to work it on any particular picture.

Eyes Right

Figuring that Strongheart would be the best appeal on "Brawn of the North" through the connection with "Call of the Wild," Tom Boland, of the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, gave a one sheet cutout with green incandescents of small candle power for eyes and then covered the cutout tongue with red tissue paper behind which was a small light.

This gave a good movement piece, the eye lamps being flashed on and off. If you can get hold of some of those paste jewels known as "cat's eyes" you will not need lamps and will get almost as good an effect. Some bicycle stores sell them for attachment to wheels as a substitute for rear lights. They flash in the reflected light of any oncoming car.

A GOOD EXAMPLE OF STRAIGHT ACCESSORY ADVERTISING

Two painted banners and the typical cut-out from the six sheet were all needed to make a dignified and selling lobby front for the Empire Theatre, Syracuse. It is not always necessary to load the lobby down to get attention.

Gave Added Value to Toy Train Run

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., used a toy train in the lobby for "The Fast Mail."

So have scores of others, but Mr. White went beyond the main idea. Sumter is rejoicing over a brand new "white way"; an illuminated area in the business section. Mr. White made his station a miniature of the local station of the A. C. L. and used small bulbs to reproduce the white way. The result was that his display had many times the value of the usual landscape; and even that is one of the best pullers we know of.

Above the table he placed a picture of the steeplechase and the card below gave the "leaving time" of the train, and added that there was not a dull minute on the entire trip.

After this give the local touch to your train display and you will thank Mr. White. This also makes possible an earlier repeat on the idea.

Novel Lobby Helped "The Eternal Flame"

Because "The Eternal Flame" opened on a Monday at the Palace Theatre, Maryville, Tenn., and the house was closed Sunday, J. H. Everett put out his lobby after the Saturday night show.

This was a built-in lobby of compo board with only one opening, facing the box office. The front was painted to give the castle effect, and a wrought-iron lantern was placed above the opening.

Back of the false front the electric lights were cut off with the exception of one vivid red lamp above the box office. All of the other inside illumination was from candles. People wondered, and then went in to see.

A hit was made by inviting the French class in the public school to attend the opening performance, because the play dealt with life in France. This got good verbal advertising, both from the pleased pupils and because the stunt was unusual.

Mr. Everett spent only $20 and more than doubled his business.

Twisted Treasure

Using the old treasure hunt, the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, combined with the Times to give it a new angle.

Presents and passes were announced, and clues given as to the locations, but the treasure hunter was reminded that "East Is West." Also north was south and south was north and west was east. If you were told to go west and then turn south, you went east and turned north if you were to achieve your quest.

It would be better to use the reversed directions and simply stress the title of the play, leaving the wise ones to guess the rest. Then if the search lags you can, if necessary, add the remainder of the direction. But give the wiser ones first chance to get the cryptic message.

Beat the Original on "Pharaoh" Poster

Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, has been pulling some good ones since he took hold of the house, but this one-sheet in three colors for "The Loves of Pharaoh" tops the lot.

Stuart's Poster

It is better, we think, than the paper designed for Paramount—and that was by no means poor. Herschel is making a noise like a hustler and it is a long-continued sound and not an intermittent series of yawps.

Having already dressed his lobby men and ushers in Spanish costumes to help advertise "Blood and Sand," it cost Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, nothing extra to send them out ahead of the Armistice Day parade, distributing heralds.

It helped the parade and it meant a lot to the theatre.

THE BEST WINDOW DISPLAY USED FOR "BURNING SANDS"

It was planned by H. B. Clarke, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis. All of the material in the foreground was borrowed from a toy shop for a few passes. If the hill were made a ground piece with light effects behind, it would be even better.

Ruffner's Solution on the Long Film

While others have been talking of the long feature and the best way to handle it, Ralph Ruffner has been working it out to his own satisfaction at the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, and doing it in a thoroughly Ruff way. He booked in "Orphans of the Storm" and he wanted to get his money back on it. He knew that an increase in prices would result in a decrease in attendance. He could not give two shows at advanced prices and break it that way. He had to adhere to his maximum fifty-cent top, and he held off the picture until he could play it at regular prices. But even at regular prices he had to sell intensively if he hoped to break with a little profit, so he decided to grind the show. He wanted two night shows, and he is far too good a showman to race the film. He allowed it the full two hours and a half. This made it necessary to stage the first night show at seven, with a second at nine. He put in an extra matinee, which shoved his de luxe matinee up to two o'clock. He did not want such a late start where his patrons had been trained to come in around half past twelve, so he put in a second extra show which started at 11:40 and admission to which was only 25 cents. To test out his idea he gave only four performances on Tuesday, starting at 12:15, 2:50, 5:25 and 8. He writes that he played his morning show to the average afternoon matinee attendance, played to a large house at the regular matinee, got some in for the supper show and played to two large houses in the evening. The Tuesday result proved very conclusively that the other scheme was not only more profitable but more to the liking of the patrons, and he offers this as the solution of the extra length picture. Suppose you try it out on your next long picture. He worked the same idea on "The Old Homestead," giving the de luxe shows at 2:30, 7:05 and 9:15. For this he used some pictorial displays, but we

This Reverse Strip Keeps Dark Secret

J. H. Lichtenstein, Fox exploiteer at Cleveland, send in a strip advertisement he prepared for the Strand Theatre. It shows the house name and the title very clearly, and some of the rest will come up in a good printing, but in the newspaper the most of it was lost in the grey reverse. Only the title stood out. This is 100 lines on seven, which is a lot of money to spend telling one word. In another form it would have made a great display, but the talk and the cuts are alike lost in the mess of black ink. The same thing could have been done in black lettering on white, with some real type instead of all hand letters and it would have been a beauty, but in the reverse does a terrible flop. Advertising men never seem to learn. They always live on in the hope that they will get in the paper what they put into the drawing, and yet they seldom or never do. Here are seven hundred lines of space with only the title and the moral effect of bigness. Only the most interested will stick to the space to puzzle out the lines, and yet it has all the makings of a fine display and would have been a good one had less ink been used.

A few weeks ago the space would have been loaded down with a lot of scene pictures, cuts of three or four of the players and a detailed program. This gives only a character drawing of Roberts, an announcement of some of the other players and a small panel announcing that many of the players in the picture would appear in person in the Grauman prologue, wearing their original costumes. The panel just below the signature announces the last performances of the current attraction, for the Los Angeles houses still open their engagements on Monday instead of starting on Saturday, to get the verbal advertisement of the larger houses. how much more forceful the present announcements are with their strongly drawn figures and with some open space to give better display to the lines. There is little more than a suggestion of a scene cut, yet it gets over the idea of the title more admirably than would a detail cut with a multiplicity of confusing lines. In the same way the advertisement of the new Hollywood Theatre gives only a single dominant figure; that of Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," and a sketchy background which is not permitted to cloud up the announcement of "Robin Hood," which was given its premier at this house. A little type would not be amiss here and the lines below the signature if set in twelve or eighteen point type would not only have stood out better in themselves, but they would have given greater emphasis to the lines above and below through the contrast between the hand lettering and the type. It is the same idea as contrasting three bands of identical color with two bands of one color and another of strongly contrasting shade. It can be figured that red, yellow and red will stand out better than three strips of red or the same number of all yellow. Each will give emphasis to the other, just as cut and drawn work will be different and therefore more distinctive. It is perhaps asking too much for a complete reformation all at once, and perhaps now that they are on the right track they will go the distance and realize the display value of type for some of the lines. Lettering is good for star and titles, but it is best when thrown into greater prominence through contrast with type. The combination display is by far the more distinctive. At any rate Grauman is headed up and not down. For a time the ads were growing steadily worse until it seemed that they could not drop much further.

Had Three Trailers on "Remembrance" Ad

The Majestic did not get much of a hook-up for "Remembrance" when it played Jackson, Mich., but it did hook in the three phonograph stores to the old songs idea, and swelled its space to better than a half page at about a half-page cost. It probably would have been as easy to get a full-page layout with other merchant hook-ups, but there may have been some local reason for the more restricted space. In any event a six-fifteens gives the house plenty of space to put over the picture, and the text is handled with skill. at least partly sold and clinch your decision. They look like pickups from the plan book, but they are cleverly phrased, whatever their origin, and they help to convince you that this is a different sort of story from the average. Sometimes it pays to hold out on a hook-up, particularly if you feel reasonably certain of being able to sell without the aid of the merchants. Let in one line or one or two leaders and let the rest ask why they were not included, and you can apologize and tell them that you'll let them come in next time; then you have them lined up for some feature on which perhaps you feel you will require outside aid to get over fully, and they will appreciate the opportunity the more because their desire has been aroused through their failure to make the last. People appreciate more what is seemingly difficult to obtain, and you can sometimes get a double truck on the strength of the fact that you curtailed the last co-operative page. And it is worth a lot of money to you to have them asking for a look-in instead of yielding a grudging assent and kicking about the price.

Trained Windows

In addition to a three strip banner across the street in front of the theatre, the Strand, Erie, Pa., put toy trains into a number of store windows, each lettered to hook to the store.

One, for instance, announced that "'The Fast Mail' brings us new merchandise every day."

Time and again it has been demonstrated that a toy train in the lobby works better than most exploitation stunts. The cumulative effect of half a dozen trains, in as many windows, can be imagined.

THE ROCHE LINERS

is unusual it gets quick attention, and because it is away from the general advertising style it is read through. The best of the series is one in which Josh figures that he should provide rocking chairs in the lobby for the standees; only there would be no room to place them because of the large crowds. This sort of thing done now and then will carry greater weight than the most carefully written sales copy done along the conventional lines. It is not that it is better, but that it is different. Probably if you write to Dan he can send you the set, even though you may not be in his territory; but it is more than probable that you can get them from the local Paramounteer, since all such material is relayed around. You will note that Dan plays up the cyclone—and the crowds—because the cyclone is the big selling point. People who will come to see "The Old Homestead" do not need to be argued into coming through sales talk centering on the play. They are sold on the announcement of the title. People who think they do not care to see the story again can possibly be sold on the cyclone. So sell the cyclone.

Mayor's Endorsement Sold This Feature

Getting the Mayor, among others, to see a preview of "Manslaughter," and then playing his endorsement in the newspaper work was what brought a substantial increase to the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., though other stunts were also used. The reproduced advertisement shows the endorsement in a panel to the right of the portrait. The Mayor was one of the old-school of Southerners, and his approval carried greater weight than would be the case in many instances where the endorsement is more a political move than an expression of personal opinion. The public knew that the Mayor would say what he thought, and the endorsement carried weight. He was not particularly gushing, at that, for his endorsement reads: "Having at your request witnessed the picture called "Manslaughter," I leave the theatre with the impression that while there are some rather excruciating scenes the general effect of the whole for the moral good generally far outweighs any adverse criticism. The picture is fine and I thank you for the opportunity of enjoying it." Probably this carried greater weight than would one written with an evident intent to make good advertising material. The rest of the display follows the plan book lines, but with a very nice layout. Other opinions were reproduced in smaller spaces for the remainder of the run. A direct hook-up was made with the issue of the Saturday Evening Post containing the national advertising on this picture. The Macon run was early, and each copy sold in town carried a gummed sticker calling attention to the pages, by number, which contained "an announcement of great importance to Macon Movie fans" and adding that the picture would be displayed at the Rialto Theatre the following week. The advisability of this sort of thing is open to question.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

MAN'S LAW AND GOD'S. This feature, while of a Northwest nature, which has become so common, still was well portrayed and held the interest of all. Advertising: ones, threes, 11x14, 22x28, slide. Patronage: factory. Attendance: fair. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. A complete and glorious knock-out that makes the exhibitor's life a joy. Positively perfect entertainment. Draws all classes and sends them away happy. Book and boost it. Advertising: increased newspaper and posters fifty per cent. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: big. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

F. B. O.

CALL OF HOME. Fair attempt at a good picture, though this one wasn't closely enough knit together to compel interest throughout. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. Good enough for any size theatre. Good story value. A family picture; mother love theme; children in it, and very good. A picture that will bring the tear drops. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

SHEIK OF ARABY. Good picture. If you book it, advertise it. Advertising: extra. R. P. Cecil, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

UP AND AT 'EM. A very good light comedy; on an average. Advertising; regular. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

VERMILLION PENCIL. Hayakawa at his best. Excellent story, cast, photography, direction. Bessie Love scores. Many compliments from patrons. Advertising: regular, and extra throwaway. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

First National

BOND BOY. Excellent picture. Good photography, and well acted. A real drawing card and box office coin getter. Star: Richard Barthelmess. Patronage: general. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GAS, OIL AND WATER. For me, no good; trifle better than "Barnstormer," but way off of Reid's standard. Would not play it. Advertising: one, two, threes, slides. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

GREAT ADVENTURE. Nothing to rave about. Good acting on Barrymore's part. No plot. Did not take here. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

INFIDEL. To me, the first good picture by Katherine MacDonald after three years' work. Advertising: very good. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

INVISIBLE FEAR. There are no outstanding qualities of this picture which will cause it to be called great, but it will please ninety per cent. Advertising: billboard and throwaways. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

LOVE'S REDEMPTION. Consider this a poor picture. A shame to put any star in such material. Advertising: regular. Patronage: family. Attendance: bad. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

MAN WORTH WHILE. This was a good picture, but, as usual, no crowd on a Wednesday night. Pleased everybody that saw it. Patronage: middle class. Attendance: poor. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

ONE ARABIAN NIGHT. Eight-reel spectacular picture. Some liked it; some didn't. Several favorable comments from the ladies who enjoy the best in pictures. Too long. Would say it pleased about fifty per cent. Advertising: lobby, newspaper, street signs. Patronage: general. Attendance: poor. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

PRIMITIVE LOVER. They laughed at this and voted it pretty funny; and all in all, from the way the audience accepted this, I shall give the producer the benefit of the doubt and say it was good. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SILENT CALL. A very good feature. The dog is very good in this picture. One of the best I have shown for some time. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. G. K. Nenes, Liberty Theatre, Miami, Arizona.

SKIN DEEP. A good picture. Milton Sills does the best work of his career in this. American Legions should line up with this everywhere. It tells a big, thrilling story that could be true. Play it, brother, and bear down on it. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SMILIN' THROUGH. A wonderful production. Broke house record for two days at 25-55 cents. First real money we have made in two years. Should make money any place. You can shout about this one and make new friends. Advertising: every available means. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: excellent. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. Just as good as they can make them. Book it and raise your price. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

TROUBLE. Ran this two nights in a "one-a-week" town. Drew fair the first night and very good the second. Picture pleased immensely; even the old folks found great entertainment in it. Had to charge special price on account of rental. Advertising: poster, slide, press. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

WIFE AGAINST WIFE. A very good drama. Pleased ninety per cent. Fills a program very well. Advertising: three, six, ones, 11x14, window cards. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

WOMAN GIVES. Good feature. First time we have shown Norma Talmadge, but will say that she's very good. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

Fox

FAST MAIL. If your patrons like speedy action and thrills, here is the picture for them. Always something doing. Drew good at the box office. A great melodrama. Buck Jones starred, with Eileen Percy in support. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

FIGHTING STREAK. Not up to the Mix standard. The people expect fun, not tragedy, from Mix. Advertising: posters. Patronage: rural. Attendance: fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

HONOR FIRST. John Gilbert is fast becoming a favorite with my patrons. Had a lot of comments on this picture. Ran a Sunshine comedy, "Splitting Hairs," with feature. The comedy is a regular knockout. Population of this town, white, 845. Advertising: two ones, one three, 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

LADY FROM LONGACRE. Not as good as other William Farnum features, but holds its share of thrills. Good program picture. Advertising: ones, three, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LIGHTS OF THE DESERT. Mason at her best. A real comedy. Like all Fox pictures, for me—none better. Advertising: photos, ones, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

MONTE CRISTO. Didn't see it myself, but the patrons reported it the best picture I have shown in many days. It's a hard title to draw a crowd on. You just have to use almost every means to put it over. Advertising: float, photos, slides, ones, threes, sixes. Patronage: general. Attendance: extra good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

OATHBOUND. Plenty of pep and speed to this and it went over fine with our Saturday crowds. Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. Did only fair for us. People's curiosity was aroused when we displayed the oil paintings and we kept suspense right up to the last minute. The picture is indeed above the average in construction. Betty also keeps them looking at the screen! Advertising: all I could get. Patronage: country. Attendance: fair. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

STAGE ROMANCE. No good for me. Patrons said they were ashamed to have their money refunded. Farnum always good, but failed in this. Advertising: photos, slide, one sheet. Attendance: fair. J. I. McCarty, Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

STRANGE IDOLS. A good program picture. However, where they get the idea that they should have more jack for these Farnums than for other stars is beyond me. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

TROOPER O'NEIL. Not as good as Buck Jones used to be. It seems, since he changed from "Buck" to "Charles," he is regarded as "stuck up." It's like changing Tom Mix to "Thomas." Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

Goldwyn

ALWAYS THE WOMAN. Too much of a hodge-podge to please here. Query, "What was it all about?" heard in lobby. It pulled fair at the matinee because I have had some pretentious offerings on the Paramount program; but this old Goldwyn won't help you any in establishing Betty Compson. So if you haven't played it and don't have to—don't, for it won't get you anywhere. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: poor. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

COME ON OVER. One of the finest little pictures we have played in some time. It is full of comedy and will please any kind of patronage. It makes them leave your theatre feeling good and they will tell you about it. Thos L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

DOUBLING FOR ROMEO. A very good picture, which drew very good business. Star: Will Rogers. Patronage: general. William Noble, New Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GODLESS MEN. Life aboard a tramp steamer ably handled by Reginald Barker. This is a good picture but I got it on a very bad print. Advertising: one sheets. Patronage: industrials. Attendance: good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

There are two exhibitor organizations:

First, the tried and true M. P. T. O. A. that bands the folks together for betterment, for cooperation, for a finer exhibitor spirit.

Second, the Straight From the Shoulder spirit, that gives freely and accepts gratefully, that promotes good will and an exchange of ideas and opinions, for the same ends.

The first organization is the finest there ever was; the second, within its own field, certainly aims to be the same.

Straight From the Shoulder is a weekly get-together for the exchange of tips on pictures, on advertising angles, on audience attitude, on box office pull.

Make this latter organization your own; demand help of Straight From the Shoulder any time; contribute to its support with reports. Its watchword is—"Service—at YOUR service."—VAN.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. Good picture, but for me not worth the price asked for it; and also it is over the heads of most people in my town. Hard to understand. Advertising: window cards, photos, ones, slide, trailer. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

UNWILLING HERO. A very clean and interesting picture. Rogers is a good drawing card. However, this is not his best. Advertising: ones, newspapers. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. P. S. Nielsen, Rex Theatre, La Loure, North Dakota.

YELLOW MEN AND GOLD. Pleased here as a Saturday night offering. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Hodkinson

GOD'S CRUCIBLE. Failed to register with my patrons. Seemed to be a lack of direction. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Metro

CONQUERING POWER. A fine production. However, my lady patrons gave me a terrible razz on this, as they expected to see Valentino float through five or six reels of love making. At a matter of fact, after the first reel he was exiled to Martinique to grow whiskers, and when he returned to that Dear Old Lunnon he sported a Van Dyke, with which he very much resembled a Yiddisher Cowboy Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

FIGHTIN' MAD. One of the best pictures of its class we have seen for some time. Will please hugely a not too discriminating public. Advertising: one, three, sixes, photos, throwaways. Patronage: very best. Attendance: good. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

JUNE MADNESS. The best picture that Viola Dana has ever appeared in, and a few more like this would make her a better box office attraction. You can go strong on this one and no mistake will be made by booking same. Patronage: general. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FOURTEENTH LOVER. The best Viola Dana I have ever had. You can promise them something when you show this one. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

Paramount

BEAUTY'S WORTH and ENCHANTMENT. Lavish entertainment for any audience. The direction, it seems to us, could not be improved upon. Created by Cosmopolitan, and this means dependable feature. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

BRIDE'S PLAY. Marion Davies is very popular here; but this is no picture, in my opinion. Advertising: lobby, newspaper, program. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

BURNING SANDS. A great picture. Did big business. Boost it for results. Advertising: very good. Patronage: family. Attendance: S. R. O. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. How do they get away with it? For me, it is not even a good program picture. Don't be misled; be sure and buy it right, then you will have a hard enough time putting it over. Advertising: newspaper, threes, ones. Patronage: town of 15,000. Attendance: poor. John G. Pierce, Family Theatre, Mahoney City, Pennsylvania.

EXIT THE VAMP. Just a picture. Pleased as well as most Paramounts do in our town. Star: Ethel Clayton. Advertising: average. Attendance: average. Big Ben Theatre, Ilion, New York.

GAME CHICKEN. Just an ordinary program picture. Pleased, but caused no talk. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FIND THE WOMAN. Nothing to it. It seems as though I am getting all of the junk in a bunch. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

GHOST IN THE GARRET. A real, 100% comedy. Dorothy Gish is great. If you want to make them laugh, don't miss this one. Advertising: usual. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

GOOD PROVIDER. An excellent picture, with a large appeal to the Hebrew folks. I did well with this one, and some said the best ever shown here. Advertising: usual.

HELL DIGGERS. Did not please as well as other Reids. Nothing to it for me. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK. Consensus of opinion: more story with less dressing would have improved this one. Drew and pleased fairly well, however. Advertising: regular lobby, and handbills extra. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK. Good feature. Everyone seemed satisfied. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

IDOL OF THE NORTH. A very ordinary Northern picture. The story is very weak and the ending is poor. It got by in this town only because it was a Northern picture; they eat the snow stuff up here. Advertising: six, three, four ones, heralds, newspaper, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

IF YOU BELIEVE IT, IT'S SO. Not as good as some of Tom Meighan's previous productions, but gets over. The title is not a good one and leads one to expect something else. However, can be classed as a first-class picture. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

LOVES OF PHARAOH. Good picture, but not much drawing power to the masses. Local quartette was all that saved the day. Advertising: very heavy (feature attraction, Paramount Week). Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

MANSLAUGHTER. An excellent picture that pleased everyone. Advertising: twice usual, lobby, etc. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Wm. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

MISS LULU BETT. A splendid picture but failed to get them in. No fault of the picture, however; had several good comments. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

NANCY FROM NOWHERE. Just another movie gone wrong. Very poor stuff. Daniels miscast. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair, one night. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Bellville, Kansas.

OLD HOMESTEAD. I wish they were all as good. This picture is all that is claimed for it by the producers. Roberts, Fawcett, Roy Barnes will be remembered for this picture a long time. Business was good. Advertised about twice as heavy as a regular feature. Editor of one paper got enthusiastic and extended a half column write-up that helped draw for the picture. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. People went out of their way to tell me how rotten it was. Just a big bunch of stuff. My opinion, lay off of this one. Nobody may like it. Advertising: ones, threes, newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

ONE WILD WEEK. Good picture, good star. No lost motion to make footage. Excellent finish. A good comedy drama. Advertising: one sheets. Patronage: industrials. Attendance: good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

ROOM AND BOARD. Good program picture. Advertising: regular. Patronage: resort. Attendance: fair. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

SATURDAY NIGHT. Clever picture; worthy of Cecil B. Well liked. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

SHEIK. Played this to a county fair crowd and it went over big. Had very tough opposition in a '49 show and dance, but got the whole crowd. Everyone very well pleased. Advertising: extra heavy. Patronage: small town. Attendance: very good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

TERROR ISLAND. "It pleased all." Very clear film, but some titles were short. Advertising: heralds, photos, paper. Patronage: town. Attendance: poor. Harry C. Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, South Dakota.

TRAVELIN' ON, Fair, but did not please as well as some of Hart's recent pictures. Adverttising: three onees, one three, set photos, slide, newspaper. Patronage: local. Attendance: fair. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. Not much. Would make a good scenic of the Canadian Rockies. Rubens and Cody miscast. Photography and direction good, but not much story—not sufficient for seven reels. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

WEALTH. A real good one, with a moral of some significance. It will please most any class if they are human in the least. Patrons all seemed well pleased. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

Confidence Justified

"Can say that Straight From the Shoulder tips guided me in booking 'Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?' (Equity). The boys all thought well of it, so I tried 'er out. Fellows, it is Some Picture and I'm glad I played it. Productions like this are our mainstay in the game. Fine direction, splendid cast and good photography. Exploit heavily. You won't disappoint your patrons by raising price. It's worth a little extra." —C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, La.

Use Straight From the Shoulder tips and trust them. AND SEND REPORTS YOURSELF.

Playgoers

HILLS OF MISSING MEN. Not much to this picture. You can't tell what it's about. Advertising: slide and ones. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. T. Edom, Dixie Theatre, Rosboro, Kansas.

PASTEBOARD CROWN. Very ordinary program picture: did not draw. Advertising: usual posters and photos. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

Selznick

CHANNING OF NORTHWEST. Outside the snow scenery, nothing to the story. It didn't end right: but nevertheless it was worth what I gave them. Advertising: photos, slide, ones, newspapers. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

POPPY. The name of Norma Talmadge gets lots of write-ups in nearly every paper of the nation, so this, of course, did fairly well for her first attempt here. This was a story we would class as "fair." Advertising: regular. Patronage. country. Attendance: poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

WHY ANNOUNCE YOUR MARRIAGE? This production couldn't be classed as Elaine's best, but where she is known it will go well. Arthur Houseman puts over some good comedy as the sot. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: only fair. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

United Artists

DOLL'S HOUSE. Nazimova and Alan Hale very good. Story not to the liking of our patrons. Too long and draggy. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. A knockout fighting picture. Great story: great paper. Book it and boost it. Frank Mayo's best. Advertising: six, three, one, slide, lobby. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: capacity. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

THE FOX. Plenty of action and some humor. If they like a Western, full of pep, book this. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

GUTTERSNIPE. Had this been made into a two-real comedy it would have been all right. As a feature, it wouldn't do. If Universal wants to "kill" Gladys Walton, that's the way to do it. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HER NIGHT OF NIGHTS. Very good program picture: not as good as some I have used with Marie Prevost starring. Advertising: ones, threes and newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. S. H. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

THE LOADED DOOR. With Hoot Gibson, a dandy. One that will please them whether they like thrillers or not, as this one has plenty of comedy in it. Vic Potel does some good work. My patrons liked this one and told me so. I am finding that Universal has got good shows and they sure treat you right on price. You can show a profit on their pictures, and some of the other producers are asking more for film rental than the door receipts will bring in. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

MAN UNDER COVER: Real good program picture. As Rawlinson is not so well known, did not draw so well as it should. Crook melodrama of small town. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

OUT OF THE SILENT NORTH. Frank Mayo is great. The picture and the cast were very good. Audiences well pleased. Advertising: newspaper, card, screen. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. Arthur G. Pearson, Auditorium Theatre, Melrose, Massachusetts.

THE STORM. An exquisite picture, splendidly played, to pleased capacity business, and good for two return dates. Star: House Peters. Patronage: general. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TRACKED TO EARTH. Mayo in a fairly good Western that pleased about eighty per cent. We played it to a very poor house as the star is a new one in our town. We think his next picture will go over well here. Advertising: ordinary: Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

TROUPER. Bright little comedy-drama in which Gladys Walton proves herself an acceptable star. Went over good. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

WILD HONEY. Some liked it and some didn't. I consider it a very good special feature with good action and good thrills. Will please seventy-five per c . . - tising: ones, threes, six, heralds, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. -J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

Vitagraph

MY WILD IRISH ROSE. Was record breaker for us, and if it failed to please any one, we have not heard from them. Print positively brand new: and we might further add that in eighteen months with Vitagraph, we have never received a bad print. On this we used mailing list, heralds, ones, threes, twenty-four and window cards, also a music tie-up with local Brunswick dealer on the Brunswick phonograph record of "My Wild Irish Rose." Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

Comedies

SAILOR MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib.). A wonderful comedy: never an idle moment. Every one would have been pleased had the print been good, the only complaint with the picture: just another thing that the small town exhibitor has to live down. Advertising: ones, threes, six, 11 x 14, 22 x 28, screen, and at the school, "100 School Kids Wanted at the Republic Theatre, 3.30 p. m." caps and goggles ready to wear were given away to them at that time, giving me a hundred walking advertisements over town. J. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

State Rights

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (Al. Lichtman). Four days of almost capacity business. Pleased audiences immediately and created much favorable comment. I will say in addition that no picture we have ever played, has created the favorable comment from female patrons that this picture has. It seems that every woman who does not have a party dress wants to see it and every woman who has a party dress and lives in a mansion is equally desirous of seeing it and it pleased the men too. Exploitation: sixteen twenty-four sheets, heavy billing, large newspaper space and one thousand special letters. Admission: matinee, 25c., evening, 50c. C. W. Miller, Youngstown Hippodrome, Youngstown, Ohio.

Consensus of Published Reviews

A Tailor-made Man

(Charles Ray—United Artists—8,649 feet)

M. P. W.—It is one of the best and most human pictures of the year.

N.—One of the finest pictures produced in the history of the silent art.

T. R.—Making his debut as a United Artists' star, Charles Ray signalizes the occasion by presenting a legion of admirers with the best picture of his career.

F. D.—Should bring Charles Ray back where he belongs.

E. H.—He has a first-rate story here and it has been given a good production.

The Village Blacksmith

(Featured Cast—Fox—8 reels)

M. P. W.—It is excellent entertainment for the masses, and contains the kind of material which audiences have shown that they like.

N.—The picture is thickly coated with sentiment, yet it tugs at the heart because of it. Then, too, the thrills have been gathered together in a goodly collection.

T. R.—This is a small-town melodrama, filled with excellent types, a fair sprinkling of humor and a decided number of "weeps."

F. D.—Sob stuff and melodrama; not particularly worth while.

E. H.—So true to homely American life that it should find a ready welcome in most theatres.

Lorna Doone

(Featured Cast—First National—6,083 feet)

M. P. W.—First National production of famous love story a masterful production.

E. H.—Is another Maurice Tourneur masterpiece.

N.—One of the finest offered the shadow stage this year.

T. R.—Viewed from any angle "Lorna Doone" registers as an exceptionally fine feature of warranted drawing power; worthy the attention of all exhibitors.

Without Compromise

(William Farnum—Fox—5,173 feet)

M. P. W.—Ordinary material, but fine cast, in Fox production with William Farnum.

N.—William has in "Without Compromise" a picture admirably suited to his personality and talent.

E. H.—There is quite good entertainment in this latest Farnum opus in spite of the fact that its theme—the conflict between love and duty—is not exactly new.

T. R.—Well directed, cleverly acted feature, full of "punch and pep," and registers as a likely drawing card.

F. D.—Regulation movie stuff with plot hinging on unpleasant murder.

Arabia

(Tom Mix—Fox—4,448 feet)

M. P. W.—Fox production for Tom Mix a fantastic invention with plenty of action.

F. D.—Fine action and atmosphere in latest Mix picture.

N.—It's a rattling good attraction, with the star putting on several new gags to make his Western enjoyable.

T. R.—The story will rank as light entertainment, its degree of quality necessarily depending on the viewpoint of the one to be entertained.

E. H.—A fairly thrilling and interesting picture.

If I Were Queen

(Ethel Clayton—F. B. O.—5,955 feet)

M. P. W.—Aside from the sets and the prominence of the star it is a production of only average appeal.

N.—Because of its good production and the capital acting Ethel Clayton and a capable cast one manages to be interested after a fashion.

T. R.—Should easily win patrons who desire to see romance at its height.

F. D.—Star pleasing in her first for F. B. O., but needs better material.

E. H.—Not an especially strong vehicle.

The Impossible Mrs. Bellew

(Gloria Swanson—Paramount—7,155 feet)

M. P. W.—Handsomely produced, with elaborate sets and striking photography, it only succeeded in arousing mild interest.

N.—The picture is entertaining in spots, but its characterization is false.

T. R.—A well directed society drama with a good deal of heart interest.

F. D.—This is undoubtedly the poorest picture that Gloria Swanson has appeared in in some time, due chiefly to the very weak and uninteresting story.

E. H.—There is an attempt to work up heart appeal and sympathy through several scenes in which the mother is parted from her child, but the picture lacks conviction and punch.

The Secrets of Paris

(Featured Cast—C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett)

M. P. W.—Replete with splendid settings plus cast of names.

N.—It is melodrama undefiled, very little comedy relief, considerable action, great fight scenes. . . .

T. R.—There can be no question that Whitman Bennett has given us a really fine picture—possibly a great feature.

F. D.—With the generally capable cast a fairly satisfying production results, and it should get money because it is the type of story that appeals generally.

E. H.—Should prove an attractive feature for any house.

To Have and to Hold

(Betty Compson-Bert Lytell—Paramount)

M. P. W.—Is in a class by itself, and should be placed among the big ten cinema features of the year.

N.—So far away and ahead of anything of its kind that it beggars comparison.

E. H.—A truly big picture in every sense of the word.

T. R.—It is screen entertainment of the highest order, and should be a notable attraction.

"Dr. Jack"

Harold Lloyd Scores Another Box-Office Knockout in His First Feature Production for Pathe

Reviewed by W. E. Keefe

Harold Lloyd has scored another box-office knockout in Dr. Jack. The story is less dramatic and in a lighter vein than "Grandma's Boy," but it is crammed with laughs galore and is corking good entertainment for any audience. It is sure fire for the big first-run theatres and will get over equally as well in the smaller houses. Lloyd has the role of a sort of a male Mary Sunshine who dispels gloom and makes other people happy, although he keeps poor in doing it.

As Dr. Jack, a physician who cures people of their ills and unhappiness at the sacrifice of personal gain, the spectacled comedian portrays a character that keeps the audience chuckling from the beginning to the end of the picture. There is not a dull moment in Dr. Jack from the time Lloyd starts out from his home eating breakfast from a tray as he runs to get into his trusty Ford until he takes the charming Mildred Davis in his arms for the final fade out.

There is a big laugh when Lloyd starting out on an emergency call in his Ford, changes to a motorcycle, thence to a bicycle and arrives at his patient's house on foot only to find that it is a little girl's doll who has fallen into the family cistern and needs to be resuscitated.

Another big laugh is where Lloyd in falling out of a window lands backward on a cow and is carried over the fields at full speed by the surprised female of the bovine species. One of the best laughs in the picture is where Lloyd, who is examining the eyes of Miss Davis, slips off the stool and ends up with his lips pressed to hers.

The audience at the Los Angeles Mission Theatre almost went into hysterics when Lloyd, disguised as an escaped lunatic, introduces one novel gag after another. It is great in-door chase stuff with the gags introduced simply, logically and in natural sequence.

Lloyd does some splendid acting in Dr. Jack. His ability to register a "nobody home" expression before beginning his transitions is remarkably well done and scored heavily with the audience. The story has been faultlessly constructed. The suspense is worked up perfectly. Dr. Jack contains more laughs than "Grandma's Boy" and furthermore it is a picture that the mothers, kiddies and Sunday school people can go to and enjoy, as well as the typical first nighters. It is clean throughout with no suggestive scenes whatever.

Director Fred Newmeyer has given Dr. Jack excellent direction. His people are well handled and each situation has been developed to the ultimate. There is a little too much footage given to the in-door chase stuff with the lunatic and a little trimming in this episode would benefit the production. Otherwise the picture is flawless.

Mildred Davis is her usual charming self and her splendid interpretation of the "Sick Little Well Girl," in which she does perhaps the best acting of her career, adds much to the success of the picture. The acting of all the principals is good. John T. Price registers well as the Father, while C. Norman Hammond scores heavily as the Lawyer.

The work of Eric Mayne stands out distinctively and he proves a great foil for Lloyd. The photography and lightings are good. The titles of H. M. Walker are great entertainment in themselves.

Synopsis

"Dr. Jack" is a young and cheerful small town physician beloved by everybody for his own sake and for his "Sunshine" system of curing people of their ills, real or imaginary. His best remedy is a mixture of shrewdness and common sense. His ministrations start the picture with many laughs and secure him a call to the city from a rich father to attend his Sick-Little-Well-Girl, who is being scientifically experimented on by the eminent Dr. Saulsbourg. The latter has planted himself very profitably in the family. He receives his young country consultant very haughtily, and is rendered nearly speechless when "Dr. Jack" ignores his theories and charts to jump right into his own "Sunshine" treatment. He tells the pretty patient that she needs excitement. They fall in love—which is the first dose. The effect is marvelous, but gets "Dr. Jack" ordered from the house. With the girl's enthusiastic aid, he is equal to the occasion, starting an "escaped lunatic scare" at night, in which he plays both himself and a fearsomely made-up crazy man, and seeing that the dignified scientist is made the special goat. All over the house "Dr. Jack" plays his double part, scaring the servants half to death, making a mental wreck and refugee of Dr Ludwig von Saulsbourg, showing the girl to be a perfect marvel of health and spirits—and completely winning over the rich father. The wealth of comic incidents occurring throughout, all belonging to the plot, keep the laughter going.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer"

Extraordinary Cast and Combination of Showmanship Elements Makes This Metro Feature an Unusual Box-Office Attraction

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Based on a widely read novel of rural life which in certain parts of the country, particularly New England, is considered almost a classic, interpreted by an unusual cast consisting entirely of players whose names have box-office value, telling a story which combines quaint rural character studies, comedy, heart interest and melodramatic thrills, and possessed of numerous exploitation angles, the Metro production, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," should prove an unusually big box-office attraction.

It is doubtful if there has ever been such a noteworthy cast ever assembled before for one picture. At least nine of the players have been starred and the remainder have all been featured, and not only is the dramatic, but the comedy field represented as well, and though obviously many are cast in minor roles each has been given the opportunity for effective work which adds to the enjoyment of the picture as a whole.

The production is of the general type of a rural melodrama and deals with the romance of a young Boston lawyer who goes to a small town to aid an elderly woman who is being ill-treated and cheated out of her property by an ungrateful daughter and a crooked lawyer. Comedy predominates in the first part. There are some extremely laughable situations, particularly the antics of Billy Franey and Hank Mann when they attempt to cross a stream on a log that has been generously greased. The sub-titles, too, are bright and snappy.

There is a strong vein of heart interest running all through the picture due to the pretty romance between the hero (John Bowers) and the deacon's daughter (Blanche Sweet) who goes blind. Then there is the vamp element supplied by Barbara LaMarr as the ungrateful daughter who attempts to win the hero, the lovable old lady (Claire McDowell) who is being cheated by the crooked lawyer (Lon Chaney), the simple-minded but powerful blacksmith (Elmo Lincoln) whom he uses as a catspaw, and others of lesser note. There is intrigue and melodrama, heart interest and romance, thrills and melodrama, and it is effectively interspersed by effective comedy work by Gale Henry, Louise Fazenda and Victor Potel, in addition to Mann and Franey.

All of these elements have been cleverly dovetailed, handled so that a good runaway scene, a snappy fight where science gets the best of brute force are introduced and culminating in an unusually effective climax where the villain is killed by his dupe, and the blind girl is being carried downstream on a raft and rescued by the hero just before it reached the falls. The raft scene provides a fitting climax to this highly entertaining picture. It has been cleverly photographed from various angles so as to bring out the full effect of the thrills and the tension while the hero is riding madly down the river bank to reach the raft in time is well maintained, though the actual rescue is not so exciting as what precedes.

It is not a subtle story and everything turns out just as you would wish it, but it is a vastly entertaining picture containing about all the elements that good showmanship has shown audiences desire and should please a large majority of motion picture patrons.

With such a cast it is hard to single out anyone for individual praise as they all do consistently good work. It would be unfair, however, not to compliment Clarence Badger for the manner in which he has directed this production.

The Story

Quincy Adams Sawyer, scion of a proud Boston family, meets a girl in the park by chance and is much impressed. To escape an unwelcome marriage he goes to the village of Mason's Corners at the request of a friend of his father's to aid a woman who is being cheated of her property. Her daughter, Lindy, tried to vamp him. He soon learns that the woman's lawyer, Strout, is a crook and an enmity arises between them. It develops that the girl he met in Boston, and who has since gone blind, is the niece of his father's friend and a romance quickly develops.

Strout persuades Stiles, the blacksmith, that Sawyer is after him and, after arranging to have Lindy decoy the blind girl onto the little ferry, he has Stiles cut the rope, sending the craft adrift. Lindy, repenting, rushes to Sawyer, who rescues the blind girl when the ferry comes near the shore just before it reaches the falls. The excitement has caused her to regain her sight and all ends happily for the pair. In the meantime Strout had been killed by Stiles who had learned he had been duped.

"The Super-Sex"

Unhackneyed Theme of Frank R. Adams Story Used by American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

With character-study as its main purpose, this production of Frank R. Adams' story, "Miles Brewster and the Super-Sex" carries a certain appeal to those who appreciate a fine attention to details. Most of it is descriptive rather than dramatic. The action moves slowly, this being noticeable to a faulty degree at times. Cutting would help considerably in remedying this.

In its conception and development of an unhackeyed theme, the picture is particularly commendable. It offers another slant on the flapper love affair. The action distinctly avoids the beaten track and for this reason alone is bound to please many.

Grandma Brewster as played by Gertrude Claire is a character that offers delicious entertainment. She is a grim example of the tyranny of years. When she delivers a caustic remark to her son-in-law, she is so vividly expressive that one can almost hear her speak. Miss Claire's interpretation is the type of comedy that is seen all too seldom. Even in the kinder moods and in the final burst of munificence, she is consistently true to her first unsmiling conception of the part.

The boy and girl flappers are played by Robert Gordon and Charlotte Pierce. As the story goes, their budding love affair is blasted when the girl announces that she is the type who needs worldly experience, who would be bored with marriage and a settled life. Her sweetheart, utterly miserable, is a prey to the first temptation that comes along and invests his entire savings account in oil stock. He becomes suddenly wealthy and popular, then learns that his money is invested in something else. Here Grandma interposes, and the ending is all that he could hope for.

Lambert Hillyer, the director, has been of great assistance in making the characters ring true. The picture holds fine entertainment for discriminating patrons especially if some cutting is done so as to speed up the action.

Scenario and Direction by Lambert Hillyer.
Photography by John S. Stumar.
Length, 5,749 feet.

The Story

Miles Brewster Higgins is a small town youth afflicted with self-consciousness. With the appearance of a flashy automobile salesman, Miles endures the tortures of jealousy because of his sweetheart. When life looks blackest to Miles, Cousin Roy blows into town and persuades the boy to invest his savings in oil stock. Shortly afterward the gusher breaks and Miles is hailed as a Napoleon of finance. He plans, boyishly, to become engaged to the girl, jilt her and break her heart. Word comes that Miles's money was not in Baby Blue but in another stock. Deep in debt, the boy decides to steal away to South America. A short distance away he changes his mind and comes back. Then Cousin Roy returns with Miles's Baby Blue stock certificates. In the general surprise Grandma Brewster says she was responsible for the false news of his investment in Baby Blue. She did it to test him. Miles is really rich and he really loves the girl.

Of outstanding interest in connection with "The Toll of the Sea," which is being distributed by Metro, is the fact that it is photographed in its entirety in natural color, being produced by the new Technicolor process. This in itself is a point that you can exploit and attract business to your house. While all of the color effects are not perfect, the picture is beautiful and many marvelous effects have been achieved.

The delicate tints and shading of the sets and costumes used in this Chinese story are wonderfully brought out and the naturalness of the coloring makes the characters seem very real. The story has been well directed, and though tragic, is interesting. A unique feature is the fact that the leading role is portrayed admirably by a Chinese girl, Anna May Wong.—C. S. S.

"Driven"

Charles J. Brabin Creates Unusually Fine Production Based on Somewhat Tragic Theme.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With "Driven" his first independently produced picture, Director Charles J. Brabin, who is well known for his work with Fox features, has gotten off to a fine start. Though largely tragic it is unusually artistic, intensely dramatic, well directed and acted, finely photographed and tells a straightforward story with no deviation on side issues.

While the entire action takes place in the mountains of Virginia or some other Southern state, it differs from the usual run of stories of this locale and does not deal with a feud. Rather it is a story of supreme sacrifice on the part of a mother of four sons, and she is the central figure though there is a pretty little romance.

The drama is heavy and the atmosphere somewhat depressing due to the tragic role of the mother who dominates the action, and the extreme meanness, cruelty and selfishness of one of the sons whose actions furnish the reason for the dramatic situations. But on the other hand there is strong heart interest and the very tyranny of this son creates unusual sympathy for the younger and lovable son, his mother and his sweetheart. The scene where the brute shoots the girl's father in the back in cold blood, killing him, is not pleasant to contemplate.

Mr. Brabin has spared no pains to make you hate one son and love the other and has brought out these emotions by strong contrasts, none more effective than the unevenly matched fight over the girl between the big brute and the young delicate chap. This is well done and quite realistic but the scenes where the brute kicks the young boy after he is down and out are unnecessarily brutal and can be eliminated to advantage.

It is a picture that will appeal most strongly to discriminating audiences with whom the artistry and stirring drama will outweight the depressing points in the theme. Then, too, the happy culmination of the youthful romance against seemingly insuperable odds will have a big effect on many spectators.

From the standpoint of drama, the climax is tremendously effective and thrilling though not pleasant to contemplate. It is hard to conceive of a more dramatic situation than where the mother, convinced that there is no other way to save the son she loves most, betrays her husband and her three other sons to revenue officers though she knows it almost certainly means their death while resisting arrest. And while showing the extreme depth of her love and sacrifice it is not pleasant to see her accepting money for giving the information even though she knows her husband and other sons are brutes and she, wants the money to aid the younger son to go away and start life anew. So, as a whole, though you will likely be pleased by the general excellence of the production, the work of Emily Fitzroy as the mother is so fine and she establishes such strong sympathey that her meagre reward may have a depressing effect.

Charles E. Mack is excellent as the young son and George Bancroft just as effective as the brutal one, while Elinor Fair is a good selection for the little mountain girl who is the unwitting cause of it all. The remainder of the cast in minor roles give good interpretations.

A feature of the production is the beautiful photography and the fine composition of some of the scenes which resemble works of art.

Mr. Brabin deserves credit for having so handled the theme as to bring out the utmost possibilities from every angle, and in giving to the screen a production which is of a quite different nature from any other American-made production.

The Story

The Tollivers live in the mountains of the South, many miles from a railroad. Lem, the oldest son, is a brutal tyrant. He sees Essie, a neighbor, in swimming, and when she comes out he grabs her but she fights and gets away from him. When her father warns him he kills him in cold blood. Essie comes to live with the Tollivers. Tom, the youngest boy, a lovable chap who differs from his brutal father and brothers, learns to love Essie, but Lem also wants her. They fight and Tom is outmatched and badly beaten. The wedding is to take place soon. Deciding there is no other way, Mrs. Tolliver tells the revenue officers where the father and older brothers are running a still. They are raided and all killed except the father, who makes his escape and comes home to kill Tom, believing he has sold them out. In the meantime Mrs. Tolliver has given Tom and Essie the money she obtained and they start away to begin life anew. Mrs. Tolliver tells her husband the truth and he starts to shoot her but, brought to a realization of her supreme sacrifice, he refrains from doing so.

"What Fools Men Are"

Picture Based on Eugene Walter Play Distributed by American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Flapper psychology is a most interesting theme as handled in this picture. Based upon Eugene Walter's stage drama, "The Flapper," the screen production entitled, "What Fools Men Are," offers something that is worth the attention of every up-to-the-minute exhibitor.

It is probable that the appeal in this case, as with almost any production dealing with one special theme, is limited. But at this particular time when the flapper is the object of much discussion, whether serious or not, a picture showing unusual originality and insight into the question should be highly acceptable. Wherever the nature of the theme is accurately pointed in exploitation campaigns, public interest is sure to be aroused.

Any number of intriguing questions as to how serious an influence is the flapper in modern life, and particularly in the marriage problem can be asked. While the picture is in no sense a preachment, it answers popular queries at least entertainingly. It keeps one guessing throughout many scenes as to the real motives of one particular flapper who seems to be a generally familiar type.

Faire Binney gives a marvellously clever performance, Peggy Hendricks, as she plays her, is a girl with a jazz soul (if any) who is baffling to everyone, including herself. Her favorite style of reaction to an emotional climax is to smile and dance with her shoulders. Still there are serious moments when she makes the spectator feel that Peggy is not incapable of feeling but rather of expression. She is at all times charming, and pleasant to look at.

George Terwilliger, the director, has made good use of the many opportunities for comedy. The rare touches with a deeper appeal he has sharply drawn. Most of the characterizations are real as well as entertaining. Florence Billings seems not entirely suited to her role, especially in the more sympathetic scenes. The picture has been beautifully photographed.

Length, 6,087 Feet.

The Story

Peggy Hendricks, younger sister to Kate Claybourne, is getting some of the attention from Kate's husband, Bartley, which Kate is forfeiting because of her devotion to a literary career. When she learns of the infatuation, she proceeds to get a divorce. Peggy has an ardent suitor in Ralph Demarest, whose wealthy father is opposed to the match. Meanwhile a series of wild parties at Ralph's studios continue. When Kate gets her divorce, Bartley realizes that he has been too hasty. He writes for forgiveness. Peggy, knowing she is not in love with Barley, dodges him and elopes with Ralph. The latter's father offers her a sum of money to give up her husband, and she accepts it. Then she turns over the money to Ralph and tells him to start over again. She agrees to stand by him, and Bartley and Kate are reunited.

Metro's "Quincy Adams Sawyer" is a picture that should prove a big box-office attraction. It is a showman's picture with a large number of exploitation angles. It has many fine points of box-office appeal. Adapted from a widely read novel, it is interpreted by a truly unusual cast, containing several players who have been starred while all of the others are only slightly less well-known, many having been featured. The producers, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, invaded not only the dramatic but the comedy field for this exceptional cast.

There is particularly effective comedy that will bring many laughs, heart interest, romance and thrilling melodrama. There is a corking good fight, a good runaway scene, and an effective climax which will bring spectators to the edge of their seats. It is a crackerjack audience picture that should bring dollars to your box-office.—C. S. S.

"Hungry Hearts"

Sympathetic Story in Goldwyn Picture Featuring Several Fine Performers

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Primarily because of its naturalness, "Hungry Hearts" makes an appeal to the sympathies that few can resist. Moreover for those who are not moved by the pathetic moments there is an abundance of wholesome comedy.

Goldwyn is presenting in this a view of Jewish family life with considerable stress upon the struggle of the immigrant for success in America. In atmosphere, the picture is similar to others that have been produced. That is, it relies lagely upon well-known racial traits as a source of emotional and comedy entertainment. But there is enough originality in the purpose of the story, in some of the types and in the climax to provoke fresh enthusiasm even in those who are familiar with this type of picture.

A series of short stories published under the title, "Hungry Hearts," written by Anzia Yezierska, furnished the material for the photoplay. The pictured version reveals an intimate knowledge of the subject-matter. It has been produced in close sympathy with the dreams and actual experiences of the Russian immigrant so that the poetic, as well as the ludicrous, finds frequent expression.

Atmospherically, the picture gains realism through the sub-titles. These are the work of Montague Glass, and make use of some of the typical idioms, best adapted to comedy.

The action gives generous opportunity to many performers, without featuring any one artist to the extent of eclipsing another. Perhaps Rosa Rosanova's handling of the mother role will be the most impressive to some. It is truly a fine accomplishment. But the many beautiful close-ups of Helen Ferguson are among the most pleasant memories as well, and E. A. Warren, as the father, will be remembered as one of the most gifted performers.

Fine, clear photography helps to make the production thoroughly entertaining. There is a pleasing gradation of settings from the rude Russian hut to the pretty suburban cottage that represents achievement finally. The picture should be a profitable attraction wherever the heart interest feature is appreciated.

The Story

Abraham takes his wife and family to America in search of the golden opportunities with which they believe the new country to be flooded. He is a better scholar than business man as they soon learn. The others, including his wife, are forced to work. Sara, the oldest daughter, meets her ideal in David, nephew of the mercenary landlord, Rosenblatt. When the mother, in an effort to beautify the home, paints her kitchen white, like the one she sees when delivering laundry, the landlord raises the rent. Chaos results, and in a fury she mutilates the walls of her kitchen. The case is tried in court and her testimony proves so heartrending that she wins out. David and Sara find happiness as well.

"The Toll of the Sea"

Beautiful Effects Achieved by New Process of Color Photography—a Metro Release

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Unusual interest attaches to "The Toil of the Sea" which is being distributed by Metro, as it is the first feature produced by the new Technicolor process of natural color photography; and judging from the applause which followed the showing of this picture at the Rialto Theatre, New York, where it is the main attraction during the current week, it is destined to be a big success and its sponsors should feel highly gratified.

The selection of a Chinese story for this demonstration was an excellent choice for the picturesque costumes, flower gardens, sea scenes, and colorful Chinese interiors offer exceptional opportunities for a test of the merits of this process.

While it is evident that perfection in natural color films has not yet been reached, still the results obtained far outweigh the defects. Many of the effects are strikingly beautiful and the process which is fully described elsewhere in this issue appears to be equally successful, in bringing out the delicate coloring of the American girl's face, shading of her dresses, the more pronounced and decided colors and designs of the Chinese girl's costumes and even in the small designs of flowered silk and colored Chinaware. The main defect appears to be in the fact that the green of the trees and plants appears as more of a brown, while in some instances there is an over-vividness in the reds and orange, and a sort of massing of color in some of the scenes where there is a wealth of flowers and foliage.

In a great many instances the effect is all that could be desired, especially some in which the human characters predominate, they appear like exquisite paintings endowed with life, the effect of the natural colors giving them more of the semblance of reality. There was no fluttering or fringing of colors discernable in this picture.

As to the story itself, while it was apparently selected primarily to demonstrate the possibilities of this new process, it has been given an excellent production by Director Chester Franklin, and should please all except those who demand a happy ending. The theme is quite similar to "Madame Butterfly" and ends tragically with the Chinese girl walking out and giving herself to the sea when she finds her American husband will not come back to her.

A unique feature for American audiences is the appearance of a Chinese girl, Anna May Wong, in the leading role. She gives a fine performance, bringing out the emotional points with delicacy and much feeling and holding your sympathy throughout. Kenneth Harlan is satisfactory as the American husband, but he has an unsympathetic role. The remainder of the cast is satisfactory.

Length, 4,600 feet.

The Story

Lotus Flower, near her native home, finds an American washed ashore by the sea. An old man warns her of an old Chinese legend that no good will come of it. Unheeding she promises she will give the sea anything it asks if it will only give her this man's love. He recovers and they are married. Not long afterwards he is called back home and friends persuade him to leave her behind. In America he begins to forget his Chinese wife and after a few years married his childhood sweetheart. In the meantime a boy is born to the Chinese girl and she patiently awaits her husband's return. Finally he does come, bringing his American wife. Disillusioned, the little Chinese woman, after getting the American wife to promise she will always care for the boy, walks out into the water and disappears, thus paying her toll to the sea.

"Only a Shop Girl"

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's New Melodrama Replete with Thrills

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

If your patrons enjoyed and came to see "More to be Pitied Than Scorned," the first of the "Big Six" pictures of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, they will not be disappointed in "Only a Shop Girl." On the contrary, they will like this even better for the reason that there is not a single 100-foot stretch in the entire 6,400 feet of film this reviewer witnessed that does not contain a thrilling episode in the adventures of two lovable couples of the East Side. For melodrama this adaptation of Charles E. Blaney's play of the same title is a knockout in every respect, for it clings closely to the original script and is produced along lines that remind one of the good old days.

In a sense, "Only a Shop Girl" can be classed as a crook picture with ample food to satisfy patrons with great hunger for thrillers. There is a fire, a mysterious murder that is exceedingly well done, involving four people with the onlooker at loss to solve it until the very end—and in this respect this production fits in nicely into a period where mystery plays are seemingly the rage—and a half dozen real fistic battles and what not. There is more thrilling stuff packed into this production than there is injected into the ordinary twelve-reel length special.

The feature is well produced and in production value it is satisfying in every respect, with a cast that works hard and successfully. Mae Busch, as Josie Jerome as the wronged shop girl, is a complete success, her acting standing out like a precious stone. Estelle Taylor, as Mame, is typical of the type she characterizes and acts accordingly. William Scott, as Danny, is at his best, knows how to go about his work with such realism that you fear if you yell "Copper" he will step out of the screen and escape up the aisle and through the exit door. James Morrison, once one of the most popular juveniles, stages a real "comeback" in this picture. Wallace Beery, Tully Marshall, Josephine Adair, Willard Louis and Claire Dubrey all are good. Mr. Louis, as the wealthy department store owner, however, does excellent work, the best in the masculine lineup.

The direction by Edward J. Le Saint is creditable and the photography consistently effective.

The Cast

Mame Mulvey.....Estelle Taylor
Josie Jerome.....Mae Busch
Jim Brennan.....Wallace Beery
Danny Mulvey.....William Scott
Charles Black.....James Morrison
Angelina Jerome.....Josephine Adair
James Watkins.....Willard Louis
Mrs. Watkins.....Claire Dubrey
The store manager.....Tully Marshall

Adapted from Charles E. Blaney's play.
Direction and scenario by Edward J. Le Saint.
Length, 6,400 Feet.

The Story

James Watkins, a wealthy department store owner, frames Danny Mulvey so that he can win over his sister, Mame, who has a craving for fine clothes. On his release, Danny, who is in love with Mame, hears of the "frame-up" and also the story of the affair between Watkins, a married man, and his sister. One night, Watkins seeks to cast off Mame and win over Josie. Meanwhile, Danny and Mrs. Watkins, suspicious of her husband, quietly visit him. Mame, too, comes. Josie repulses Watkins' advances and threatens to kill him by breaking a vase over his head. He turns out the light. A scuffle and then Watkins falls. Josie is arrested. Believing Josie to have committed the crime, Danny confesses. Meanwhile his home is burned, and his sister, Mame, in saving the life of little Angeline, is overcome by smoke and badly burned. Her condition changes from bad to worse and finally she is given up. But before she passes out she confesses to having murdered Watkins, thus exonerating Josie and Danny, who are left to marry.

If you've been looking for something original and clever in the line of comedy drama, here is "Minnie." You can promise your patrons an abundance of laughs and be assured that the picture will live up to your promises.

"Minnie" is the homliest girl in town. If Leatrice Joy (who gives a wonderful performance in this) can look unattractive, what girl can not? This should be an incentive for sensational exploitation. Marshall Neilan has made use of subject-matter in this production that should give inspiration to any ambitious showman. A First National Release. —M. K.

Familiar Material is Cleverly Handled in American Releasing Corporation Picture with Dolores Cassinelli

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A clever use of familiar material here should sell this picture to the average fan. The story of a triangular love affair has been entertainingly presented with a touch of novelty now and then.

Pleasing backgrounds are not the least attraction. The first part shows some thrilling out-door winter sports, mountain climbing, skeeing, etc., in locations that have splendidly photographed. This gives a tang to the picture at the start. What follows is the story of a woman's marriage to an extravagant artist who tastes success through the unknown help of his rival. This part of the story has been developed in conventional style with the staging of a few studio revels and the sentimental appeal of the self-sacrificing wife in the background.

The character of the rival seems not always clearly defined. This appears to be rather because of the author's conception of the role than either the director's work or Warner Richmond's performance. As the point of the picture hinges on this characterization, it would have meant improvement on the whole to have given more footage to this. In its present version, the motive of the unsuccessful suitor is not sufficiently plain to prepare one for the change in decision at the close when he brings husband and wife together again. The object may possibly be to create an effect of mystery in just this way, but if so, it has not been well done.

Dolores Cassinelli satisfies the desire for feminine beauty on the screen. In this she is aided by a contrasting type, De Sacia Mooers, who plays the coquette. Rod La Rocque and Warner Richmond are excellent types, who assisted by good directing, make their characters interesting to anyone.

The Story

Barbara Hastings, hostess at a fashionable mountain resort, has two suitors—Stanley Roberts, an artist, and Ralph Westley, a banker. Her preference for the artist brings the banker's jealousy to a climax. When she marries Roberts and goes to live in New York Westley determines to separate them. First he anonymously purchases Roberts' big picture and sees the artist plunge into extravagance. Then he causes a position to be offered to Barbara. Through it all she remains steadfast in her duty to her husband. Finally when Roberts is brought to him down and out the banker makes his big decision.

"While Justice Waits"

Fox Production Offers Dustin Farnum Typical Role—Irene Rich Gives Fine Support

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Dustin Farnum has one of his typical roles—that of the avenging husband—in this Western "While Justice Waits." The picture has the usual amount of action and melodrama. It relies more upon the appeal of the story and suspense than upon mere physical action, the conflict being somewhat more repressed than usual.

The man who comes back rich after a gold-hunt and finds that his wife, unable to stand the strain of loneliness, has left home with a scoundrel, is the character played by Farnum. His long search for her, the finding of his little son and the final discovery that his wife has spent the years between in an unselfish mission is the drama.

The attempt to keep up the suspense is only partially successful, as the final reunion will be expected by most spectators. But there is, perhaps, a finer quality to the theme than is frequently found in this type of picture. The scene where the hero makes the outlaws get down on their knees to pray is a contrast to what might be expected. This, like several other scenes, shows a reserve. Irene Rich gives a performance that should help substantially to establish her growing reputation. Her emotional art is one of the praiseworthy features of the production. Earl Metcalfe plays a convincing villain and Frankie Lee is charming.

The Story

Dan Hunt finds gold. When he returns home he finds a note from his wife saying that she had eloped with another. Hunt learns that his wife had been seen with the leader of a bandit gang. He joins the gang hoping to catch his wife and her lover together.

One night the church is robbed by the members of the band. They bring the loot to their rendezvous. A dice game follows and Hunt wins all of the loot. He returns it to the church. There he meets a lad of about seven. The Padre tells Hunt that the young boy's mother would some day come for him.

In a nearby town Hunt finds his wife. She explains that the bandit leader kidnapped her, and that the lad is their son.

"The Altar Stairs"

Frank Mayo Has Role That Should Please His Admirers in Universal Drama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This picture's appeal will be confined more or less to Frank Mayo fans. It presents him in one of those ultra-heroic roles which makes him the dominating force of the picture, almost to the exclusion of all other features. The fact that he is an attractive and compelling performer will no doubt overshadow the inconsistencies of the story in the mind of his admirers.

South Sea island atmosphere and ship scenes add pictorial and dramatic interest. The action makes wide leaps from one locale to another, and co-incidence has been considerably stretched in bringing the various characters together again after these changes. There are a few spectacular shots, such as the burning of the island chapel and sea scenes at night. The storm has been effectively produced and the accompanying ship scenes are the most thrilling in the picture.

Frank Mayo has a romantic, daring role that should have a wide appeal. After an adventurous life he falls in love for the first time, then discovers that the woman is married to a scoundrel whom he has every reason to kill. He is prevented from committing this crime by the fateful interference of another, so that the ending is in keeping with popular demands.

The Story

Rod McLean, a trader of the South Seas, saves Tony Heritage, a derelict, from savages. Tony steals Rod's money and leaves for France, where he marries the daughter of a French commandant. The officer learns of Tony's record and repudiates the marriage and takes his daughter to the South Seas. Tony turns up. Rod has fallen in love with Joie, but he discovers that she is married. He goes back to his own post and discovers that Tony has gotten the natives drunk. They are burning the island chapel. Rod discovers that Tony is the husband of Joie and is about to kill him when the minister interferes. Tony steals Rod's boat and escapes, and Rod starts after him, while on the main island Joie waits for the climax that Fate has in store for the three.

"Singed Wings"

Penrhyn Stanlaws Combines Fact and Fantasy in Paramount Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

In "Singed Wings," a Paramount picture, Penrhyn Stanlaws presents something different in motion picture romances. In essaying it, he set himself a remarkably high ideal. Sometimes he approaches it, other times he falls short of the mark. The result is a picture of conflicting interests, a strange mingling of fact and fantasy, a daring and varyingly successful attempt to translate Pierrot and Columbine into daily life.

Pictorially, "Singed Wings" is a delight. In this respect Stanlaws excels. His interiors are marvels of artistic charm. The home of the heroine had to be a humble one, but that was no obstacle to Stanlaws —he made simplicity striking. Again, when fine homes entered into the plot, Stanlaws produced backgrounds that pleased the eye and stirred the imagination. He also saw to it that two other essentials of a motion picture are present—action and capable interpretation by the players.

We liked Conrad Nagel best of all the players. He alone seemed to fully realize what Stanlaws was striving for, and his work is delicate and effective. Bebe Daniels' performance, while generally good, does not appeal as so consistent. She is too real a human being to ever be Columbine. The rest of the cast is satisfactory. Of them, Robert Brower and Ernest Torrence best understood the director's ideal.

"Singed Wings," therefore, can be classed as a somewhat puzzling picture. It interested us hugely and we believe that while theatres with high-class clienteles will find it profitable, it is far too flossy for some people. However—and this illustrates our doubt—the fact that it has to do with the triangle idea and the beauty of its settings may prove us all wrong.

The Story

The dancing girl holds at bay the youth who loves her because of her superstition that when she speaks of her love she will die. A roue assists her in progressing as a dancer, and the youth misunderstands her reception of his favors. A weak-minded clown, who watches over her and loves her, believes she has given her heart to the roue. The youth prevents him from killing the girl. The clown commits suicide and the superstition is exploded.

"Minnie"

Marshall Neilan Scores Once Again—As Both Author and Director of First National Attraction

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Marshall Neilan has distinguished himself once more. "Minnie" is the latest tribute to his creative art. This is a production that offers truly exceptional entertainment in its display of original character studies and situations.

Especially because it is rich in comedy values of a nature that anyone will appreciate, "Minnie" should satisfy all classes of patrons. At times it is uproariously funny and still not broad. Most of the time there is an undercurrent of amusement that is new and delightful. In this consistency of mood and the subordination of the pathetic motive so that there is no effect of depression, Mr. Neilan has shown admirable skill.

"Minnie" is a character that wins your sympathy, even when you are laughing at her. The sentimental appeal is there without calling special attention to it. She is described as the type whom "the Lord has made unbeautiful." No young man flatters her with attentions except of an undesirable sort. She has no mother and her father is too much engaged in getting married (he tries it seven times) and perfecting his new invention to help "Minnie" improve her looks.

The excellent quality of Leatrice Joy's performance is a revelation even to those who admire her. She goes about the task of impersonating an unattractive girl with a thoroughness that insures success. She makes no miraculous conquest and this is another example of the artistic judgment of Mr. Neilan, who is both author and director. Minnie's one and only beau is another whom the God of Beauty has slighted. Matt Moore plays this part most entertainingly. His make-up, clothes and manner, are a clever caricature of his usual self.

There are many other avenues for comedy, some of the best scenes being those which show "Minnie" broadening her knowledge of men while taking automobile trips. There are screamingly funny situations, heightened by Miss Joy's seriousness. The comedy comes to an abrupt end, however, in a scene that stands out as one of the best in the production. This is where she gets caught in the lie about having a sweetheart, and sobs out the truth about her own life. This sounds a human note that emphasizes the sincerity of the whole picture.

Artistically, the picture seems too long. It should end when "Minnie" learns that at least to one man she is beautiful. However, to please the many who like to see their favorites beautifully and conventionally dressed, the author has added a few scenes showing the physical transformation of the homely couple, after a rather far-fetched explanation.

"Omar the Tent Maker"

Artistic Production Distributed by First National is Based on Life of Omar Khayyam

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Richard Walton Tully, who was responsible for the successful stage production, "Omar, the Tentmaker," also presents the screen version which is being distributed through First National, with Guy Bates Post, the distinguished actor who starred in the stage play, also the star of the screen version.

It is a spectacular and an artistic production, surrounded with all of the glamor of Persia of a thousand years ago; the period in which the action is laid. Its main points of audience appeal will be on the spectacular side and because of the fact that it is a story of the life of the Persian poet, philosopher and scientist, Omar Khayyam, best-known in this country as the author of a masterpiece of verse, "The Rubaiyat."

Director James Young has made a picturesque and singularly accurate production with striking scenes and settings, many of great beauty and some of immense size The picture has been beautifully photographed in a soft, sepia brown.

From the story angle, the picture is interesting because of the fact that it shows Omar as a thinker, whose ideas were many centuries ahead of his time and how he persisted in them despite opposition. The dramatic interest, however, has been allowed to be overshadowed at times by a too great stress being placed on the artistic and spectacular side with a consequent weakening in the building up of the characters and development of the dramatic points. For example, for considerable footage the direct story of Omar, himself, is neglected, while the sequences in Teheran, involving Shireen and her baby and the Shah, and also Hassan, are developed. This, together with the frequent and sometimes sudden transitions from one line of development to another, has the effect of breaking the dramatic continuity and lessening the hold of the story on the spectator. The scenes where Omar is strapped in the torture chair and his feet beaten with whips appears to have been unnecessarily prolonged and there is a tendency to extend some of the other situations beyond their real value.

Guy Bates Post plays the title role with distinction, but his best work appears as the young Omar in the early part of the film, and the same is true of Virginia Brown Faire, as Shireen. The cast, as a whole, give good performances, though there is a tendency on the part of some of the players to overdo the use of facial expression, and Noah Beery's portrayal of the Shah makes of him a character which is almost a burlesque, stressing the doddering side with no traces of the power to expect of a man who still is able to hold his always threatened throne.

The Cast

Length, 8,090 Feet.

The Story

Omar with two friends, Nizam and Hassan, study the Mohammedan writ under the Holy Iman and pledge each other to lifelong friendship. Amar falls in love with the Shireen, the Iman's daughter, and they are married, but the Shah, hearing of her beauty, desires her. Taken to Teheren, she pleads for her freedom but is cast into a dungeon where a girl-baby is born to her. Both are ordered to be executed, but her maid rescues the baby, little Shireen, and sends her to Omar who adopts her, believing she is the Shah's child.

Shireen has been sold into slavery and seventeen years elapse. Nizam has become the all-powerful Vizier on the death of the Shah. He sends for Hassan and makes him governor of the city where Omar lives, instructing him to find Omar. He does not try to do so, fearing the fact that he consorts with thieves and assassins and will be discovered. Chance finally brings Shireen to the city, and Omar, in attempting to shield a Christian from the Mohammedan mob, is arrested and sentenced to death by whipping the soles of his feet. Nizam, learning the truth, rushes to Omar's aid. Omar and Shiree are reunited, and he learns that little Shireen is his own daughter. Little Shireen gives her love to the Christian, and Omar, remembering his own troubled romance, gives his consent.

"The Double-O"

Arrow-Ben Wilson Production Stars Jack Hoxie in Western of Mexican Border

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This Western starring Jack Hoxie, which Arrow is distributing, is up to a fair standard of entertainment. A typical story of the Mexican border has been used as the basis for "The Double-O." With "greaser" intrigue and cattle-rustling, a love affair between the foreman and the feminine boss of the ranch, the picture has the conventional balance of thrills and romance.

As the greater emphasis has been placed upon the romantic motive, the suspense lies in prolonging the separation between the man and his "boss." She disapproves of him at first because he accepts payment in kisses for what she owes him in dollars. He spends the rest of the picture in atoning. Finally, when she decides to believe in him, his rivals inform her that he has a squaw wife whom he is hiding. She learns the truth in time to make a desperate effort to save his life. This is the climax of the picture—her race in the car to the place where he is to be shot at sunset. Aided by the resourcefulness of the foreman's pal, she saves him. Evelyn Nelson plays this part charmingly. The star has less opportunity for spectacular action than frequently, which may make some difference to his special admirers.

"The Show"

(Winkler-Cartoon—One Reel)

In this Max Fleischer-Out of the Inkwell comedy, the busy little clown and three partners are rehearsing their parts in a show as they are being rushed to the theatre in Fleischer's automobile. The clown, mischievous as always, leaves the drawing board to tamper with the accelerator of the car, with the result that the arrival at the theatre is a sudden one indeed. The one-reel subject is up to the standard of its predecessors.—S. S.

"Lazy Bones"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Clyde Cook takes part in some exceptionally funny stunts in this Fox comedy. The first part offers more or less familiar amusement in connection with the hot dog industry, but gets some laughs nevertheless in showing how Fido, now a sausage, reverts to type. Lazy Bones finally gets rid of his business establishment by aid of an express train. His adventures with the glue pot provoke some hilarious slapstick. The funniest bit of all is the scene where he is pursued by a skeleton, an effect which has been contrived with unusual cleverness.—M. K.

"The Law of the Sea"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is one of the best of the "Tales of the Fish Patrol" series featuring Jack Mulhall. It concerns his activities in rounding up a gang who are netting fish on Sunday in violation of the California law. This is cleverly done by running a vessel in among the nets, entangling them so that nets, boats and fishermen are carried along with the vessel. There is plenty of action and fighting.—C. S. S.

"Bow Wow"

(First National-Comedy—1,856 Feet)

Mack Sennett's Great Dane dog "Teddy" is featured in this rural comedy of a city slicker, a country girl and her faithful swain. Naturally Teddy has a lot to do in this film and he performs some clever stunts. There is also other good animal stuff, with a goat, a pig, a young donkey, Mack Sennett's cat, and a chicken. It is an entertaining film which will get a lot of laughs and will satisfy the average audience but does not seem to be quite as peppy as some of his previous offerings.—C. S. S.

"Rookies"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Century Comedy Company's clever dog "Brownie" is the star of this comedy which deals with the love adventures of a little girl and two boy rivals. The boys are boy scouts and much of the film deals with their activities and comedy stunts in camp. While Brownie does some clever things, he does not show to as good advantage as in some of his previous comedies and the subject is not as "peppy." It should, however, prove a delight to children.—C. S. S.

"Graphic 2549"

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

Women especially will be interested in a section of this issue which shows a hairdresser building coiffures to fit different type faces. Another section shows a unique orchestra in New Orleans consisting entirely of children between the ages of seven and thirteen. There are also views of a pack of prize Great Dane dogs and an interesting section showing various queer types of fish in the New York Aquarium.—C. S. S.

"The Counter Jumper"

(Vitagraph-Comedy—Two Reels)

This comedy should prove a regular riot with Larry Semon fans and bring a lot of laughs from almost any audience. It is rapid-fire stuff and while there is considerable slam-bang stuff, pastry throwing, falling into tubs of paste, etc., he has also introduced some brand new stuff, notably a scene where a duck egg with two legs sticking out does all sorts of stunts. This is funny and clever and it will mystify you as to how it is done. Another good scene is where a negro sits on a block of ice and it melts immediately and a good effect has been produced with a scene where Larry and the villain go off the top of a cliff; slow motion photography makes them appear to float through the air. There is very little plot, but Larry's troubles occur when he tries to be a clerk in a store and help an heiress who is being sought by a clever villain.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 185

Some beautifully colored effects are obtained in this picture in connection with the filming of scenes in the Pyrenees along the Franco-Spanish border.

There is also an item of rare interest in the showing of a farm where no horses are used, the produce being carried to the regular railroad station by a miniature steam train which the farmer has fitted up. The tracks run to all parts of the farm, so no one of the sections is neglected.

Other items show the animals in the zoo taking their Saturday plunge, and a slow motion dance by a Hindu doctor, who is supposed to cure his patients' ills by his contortions.

The new series is said to be meeting with public and exhibitor approval. The critic of the New York Daily News said: "We're all for five reels of Felix and one reel of other folks."

Pearson Tells of Progress in Field and Announces More Two-Reel Comedies

Additional recognition of the value of short length comedies as business builders for the box-office is contained in a statement issued by Elmer Pearson, general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in detailing the progress already made by that company with short subjects which now comprise the large majority of the company's offerings and forecasting Pathe's plans to increase its comedy output in keeping with the public appreciation of that form of entertainment.

After stating that the present Pathe program consists of the best items of their kind on the market, Mr. Pearson announces the determination of the company to make them not only better, but so much the best that the public will not be satisfied with anything inferior in short subjects. He further states that the company has several contracts under negotiation for comedies now in the making which will be announced shortly, and which will be convincing evidence of Pathe's sincerity and high resolve.

"Having but recently made a real start in the two-reel comedy field," says Mr. Pearson, "we shall not be satisfied until every week we are releasing a two-reel comedy that has as much box-office value as anybody's feature."

After referring to the Harold Lloyd's comedies as the peer of anybody's best, Mr. Pearson calls attention to the series of Hal Roach "Our Gang" comedies which have captured audiences and grown better with each release; also the Snub Pollard two-reelers which are rapidly hitting their stride and which are meeting the company's high standard.

Stating that, with few exceptions, no particular progress has been made in the comedy field for several years, Mr. Pearson says:

"It is our purpose to offer the comedy field the development to which it is entitled and offer the exhibitor an opportunity to relieve the strain on the feature," continued Mr. Pearson, saying: "It is our opinion that the patrons will so relish this variation that the comedy change will far outdraw the feature changes. Anyway, we are going to provide the material and rest our case with the exhibitor and the public."

Educator Praises "The Mirror"

High praise for "The Mirror" novelty reels being released by Universal is contained in a letter to the producers, the International News Reel Corporation, from Ernest L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual instruction of the New York City school system. Stating that this experiment is of particular interest to schoolmen, he calls attention to the fact that history is more and more being taught as a background for the understanding of current events, that news reels have been recognized as a valuable aid in this teaching, but that one of the difficulties was in linking them up with preceding periods. Mr. Crandall praises the skillful handling of such reels as "The Mirror" and says it will go a long way toward remedying this defect without detriment to their entertainment value.

"Mirrors" already released include one showing McKinley's inauguration, one of the San Francisco fire, and one of "The Birth of Aviation."

Educational to Release Special Film Dealing with Romantic Story of Radio

Educational's latest special short subject now in preparation for early release is "Via Radio." It was produced under the supervision of the Scientific American and is said to deal in a clear, simple and concise manner that is intelligible to the novice, with the romantic story of this fascinating and phenomenally popular development of modern science.

It is announced that it will be of interest not only to radio fans and prospective purchasers of sets, but to experts as well. Starting with an actual photograph of the sound waves of the human voice the picture explains how these waves are harnessed, projected into space and picked up by radio sets.

The transmission of commercial messages from powerful transatlantic stations, operation of radio compass and position finding service supplied by the government, and experiments in shore to ship telephony, is shown.

There are interesting views of interiors of broadcasting stations in connection with the most popular use of radio, in broadcasting musical entertainments, sports, news events, etc.

The origin of static, the annoying phenomena of nature's own wireless, which interferes with many an evening's pleasure is shown and its sound when caught is depicted. This film is said to be highly entertaining and amusing and not by any means a dry treatise on the scientific or mechanical side.

Pathe List Offers Ten Subjects

Pathe's schedule for December 10 consists of ten subjects. Heading the list is a Snub Pollard two-reeler, "Newly Rich," and Leo Maloney in a two-reeler, "One Jump Ahead." Pollard's comedy deals with the experiences of a chauffeur who marries a newly rich girl; and the Leo Maloney Western shows the star as a Ranger who trails a cattle gang that also turn highwaymen.

Other subjects include Paul Parrott, with Jobyna Ralston in "I'll Take Vanilla," showing fun in a drug store in which a plumber and a burglar figure prominently. The Hutchison serial, "Speed," reaches its eighth episode. "Young Mr. Jazz" is the current Harold Lloyd single-reel reissue and "The Man Who Laughs" is an Aesop's Fable Cartoon. The Pathe Review No. 185 contains many interesting items. Two issues of Pathe News and Topics of the Day complete the list.

Unusual Praise for a "Christie"

The critic of the Cleveland Plain Dealer in reviewing the program at the Allen Theatre gives first consideration and high praise to an Educational-Christie comedy, "Let Er Run." He particularly stresses the race scene stating that eighteen months ago a showman would have placarded the town for a feature picture containing such a race, adding: "Yet here is a comedy with a knock-'em-cold race, and its only effect is to make the audience fairly raise from its seat. After all, what more could a reasonable producer ask?"

This is just another example of the high quality of material that is being put into short subjects, causing patrons to look more for quality in short subjects, and showing the wide-awake showman that his short subjects are a very important part of his offering to the public, and when rightly selected, are big business builders.

Trade Showing

Pathe announces a special trade showing of the first three episodes of the new Pearl White serial, "Plunder," on the New York theatre roof, Friday, December 1, at 2 p. m, to which exhibitors are invited. Miss White has signified her intention of being present in person. This serial, directed by George Seitz, deals with a treasure buried centuries ago at a spot now covered by a big New York building. It is said to show the highlights and shadows of New York, its splendor and qualor, adventurous characters in finance and the slums with an undercurrent of romance.

Vitagraph Has Fine Nature Subject

One of the charms of the series of Urban Popular Classics, single-reel subjects being distributed by Vitagraph, is their great diversity. The current issue, "Some Wild Babies," is said to be unusually instructive and entertaining. Recorded by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the Bronx Zoo, it depicts the parental instincts of birds and animals throughout the world, dealing with the bluebird, the hawk, prairie dog, deer, hippopotamus, etc., it retells life's story in the animal kingdom, the deserting of the home, building a new one and then raising children of their own. It will interest both youngsters and grown-ups.

Baby Peggy's Newest

Baby Peggy's newest Century comedy release for Universal is titled, "Grandma's Girl." The production is now well under way. Alf Goulding is directing the production and the cast includes Jimmy Kelly, Florence Lee, Hazel Deane, Babe Jose and Captain Cullinan. This little star's most recent picture, originally titled "The Senorita," has been changed to "Sunny Smiles."

Raymaker's Second

Herman C. Maymaker, who has just finished his first picture for Century Comedies, entitled "The Mischievous Pup," starring Brownie, is now working on his second production which will be a tale of an amateur Sherlock Holmes. A strong cast has been selected for this picture, headed by Buddy Messinger and Brownie, and including Jack Earle, Jack Cooper and Ena Gregory.

"In Dutch"

(Educational-Comedy—Two Reels)

What a lad went through to get a secret society emblem for his fiance furnishes the motive for this Christie Comedy. Bobby Vernon, who is starred, decided the surest way to get the coveted Kutta Peesa Pie pin is to join the lodge. His rival is the head man and sees that the stunts he has to go through are unusually severe. Then comes the street work. Bobby, clad in an ancient bathing suit, has to sing "Oh, You Beautiful Doll" to three policemen without being arrested and then has to say to his sweetheart who is a brunette "I love a blonde." Of course everything finally comes out all right. There are a number of genuinely humorous situations which will provoke laughs and the fun is refreshing.—C. S. S.

"A Lot of Bull"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Quite a lot of incident and action has been crowded into this comedy featuring Charles Molina, which has to do with the experiences of an auto salesman in Mexico, and there are several humorous situations. The title appears to refer to a burlesque bull fight in which trained bulls are used, ending with Molina driving four of them from the arena with a broom. Another comedy situation shows the star dressed as a woman and there is a scene in which he dons a beard and takes refuge in a barber shop only to find that the barber who shaves him is the man from whom he is fleeing.—C. S. S.

"The Canyon of Dreams"

(Scenic—Special—One Reel)

This is an unusually beautiful production by Rollin Lester Dixon. In many restful, picturesque scenes the producer has registered his profound appreciation of nature. There are rare fantastic glimpses, as in the photographing of the reflections which the mountains cast in the canyon pools, and altogether a charm that makes the subject well worth while. Appropriate selections from the poem by Odell Shepard are used as titles.—M. K.

"The Beryl Coronet"

(Educational—Drama—Two Reels)

In this number of the Sherlock Holmes' stories the high standard of interest and entertainment reached by previous issues is well maintained, and Eille Norwood continues to add to the good impression he has produced as the delineator of the role of Conan Doyle's famous detective. The story hinges on the theft of a beryl coronet, suspicion points to the wrong party but Holmes ferrets out the criminal and recovers the piece which has been stolen.—C. S. S.

"Urban Popular Classics"

(Vitagraph-Educational—One Real Each)

Several of the series of Urban Popular Classics which are now being distributed by Vitagraph has just been shown for review. They deal with a variety of subjects and are all interesting, entertaining and instructive and should find a welcome on theatre programs. Of the subjects shown, "Alexander Hamilton," "Bending the Twig" and "The Alphabetical Zoo," have been reviewed in previous issues.

"BETTER MILK"

This reel shows the up-to-date scientific methods of producing and marketing high-grade milk. It illustrated the extreme care and cleanliness observed with the cows and how they are made to give more and better milk by being given proper food. Then the handling of milk from the time it leaves the cow including the pasteurizing, bottling and delivery is shown step by step.—C. S. S.

"SPENDING SIX HUNDRED MILLION A DAY"

You are wrong. The title does not refer to dollars but to gallons of water, the quantity used by New York City in a single day. This reel shows the large reservoirs in the Catskills which are the source of the supply and the reservoirs nearer the city in which the water is stored, also the process of aerating the water and the police force which guards it from pollution. It ends with views of different uses to which water is put when it reaches the city.—C. S. S.

"Mirror No. 3"

(Universal—Review—One Reel)

Here is a reel that should prove tremendously interesting to any one. Dealing with the modern miracle, aviation, it brings out the fact that it has been only fifteen years since the Wright Brothers first demonstrated it was possible to fly with a heavier than air machine. There are interesting pictures taken in 1908 showing Wilbur Wright's flights in France also experiments during the same year by Bleriot Farrman, Curtiss and others. There are also for purposes of comparison some views of modern aeroplanes which show graphically the development in this science.—C. S. S.

"One Jump Ahead"

(Pathe—Western—Two Reels)

Leo Maloney is featured in this one and he and others in the cast do a lot of wonderful horse-back riding. The plot is well up to the standard of this sort of production and holds the interest throughout. Josephine Hill, in the chief feminine role, does her part well, and the film comes to a happy, but plausible ending, helped out by a sub-title that falls just in the right place, and is worded just in the right way.

One fault which, however, is not found solely in this film, is to have the "hero," single-handed, whip three or four tough opponents in a fist-fight. Maloney accomplished that usual but miraculious feat in this picture.—T. S. daP.

"The Man Who Laughs"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

That the hard knocks of life should be taken with a laugh is the purpose that this filmed Aesop's Fable sets out to show. It is produced in a way that gives it a certain amount or laughable situations. An old farmer's physician advises him to take life's "bumps" with a smile, and he proceeds to act on that advice.—T. S. da P.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

At Pantages Theatre I met Mr. Stroud, who owns the Savoy and has an interest in the Pantages and Capitol. He manages the Pantages and is general manager for all three theatres. Charles Purcell, secretary of the union, and M. A. Bartlemen are projectionists. The Pantages has a good projection room, Power's projectors and two Transverters. Two clever stunts I noticed here, in my somewhat hasty examination, were a framing light mounted on the dissolving shutter and two wings or vanes mounted on the spot, as illustrated in Figure 5. This is a really worthwhile stunt, as the vanes allow of using a flood to cover the entire stage width without a bit of light striking the orchesra pit or the borders.

Good stuff! It is recommended to all who use spots. The spot also has a joint such as is shown in Figure 4. Here I learned from Brother Purcell that the flanges used are called "Railing Flanges." The men here have also rigged a counterbalance for the spot by attaching a weight to a cord, running same through a pulley on the wall, over the port and attaching other end to back upper corner of spot lamphouse. It, in conjunction with the railing flange, works just fine. It was Purcell who originated the lamphouse window illustrated in Figure 1.

A Good Idea

It was here I found a really clever stunt for moving lamphouse over when it has pipe connecting with the vent flue. It is shown in Figure 6, in which A is an oblong ceiling vent flue opening; in this case covered by an iron grill, B, the lamphouse pipe, and C, an iron rod or bar, bent as shown and bolted to ceiling about as indicated.

It is readily seen that when the lamphouse is shoved over the pipe will slide on the bar, and—there you are. Personally I do not recommend projecting slides with anything but a stereopticon. The loss of light incident to having a slide carrier before the condenser of a M. P. projector itself is sufficient to veto the plan of projecting slides with a M. P.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

projector except under certain conditions. See pages 177 and 801 of new handbook. It just simply does not pay to do it! However, if the exhibitor insists upon it, then the plan shown in Figure 6 is a simple and ingenious one for connecting the lamphouse vent pipe with the vent flue of the room.

FIGURE 5
Vanes on Spotlight

The Pantages has a device such as is shown in Figure 2, though I don't remember whether it is made just that way.

Apologies

In reading further in my notes I see that Purcell and Bartlemen have overcome the slide carrier objection to M. P. projector slide projection in a very unique and effective way. The plan is simple, and is illustrated in Figure 7, in which the bow is a flat spring about 5/8-inch wide. When slide projection is finished the slide carrier is yanked out, pronto, it being held merely (though quite sufficiently) by the pressure of the spring. It is simple and clever. Under the rewind table the men have placed an all-metal drawer—a drawer made of sheet metal, into which all film clippings are swept by a motion of the hand. This plan is recommended to you all. The rewind is geared down; also it stops automatically when the job of rewinding is finished.

I wish I might have had more time to examine things, and to visit all the Hamilton projection rooms. All of them were intelligently painted, and were dark while projection was in progress.

After show time the men foregathered in a food emporium, where an excellent dinner was served, and I talked to them on subjects allied to projection, afterward answering such questions as the men cared to propound until the hour grew very late, or early, if you prefer it.

At the conclusion of my talk the president of the local issued an invitation to me to come again, and come soon, which was deeply appreciated because I have now addressed the Hamilton local three times, and surely they must find real value in my visits or they would not each time not only ask me to come again, but insist upon it.

Toronto, Ontario

From Hamilton to Toronto the road is concrete, and of surpassing excellence. By advice of counsel I refuse to say how fast friend daughter, Nancy Hanks, and your 'umble scribe split the wind. Anyhow God was good to us, and the speed cops were all busy nailing some other feller's hide to the fence.

At Toronto I found those old war horses—Charles Dentlebeck, president, Toronto Local Union 173, Motion Picture Projectionists, and William Covert, fourth vice-president, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada—waiting, with friendly mits wig-wagging a welcome to their city.

Toronto is a city I have liked since my very

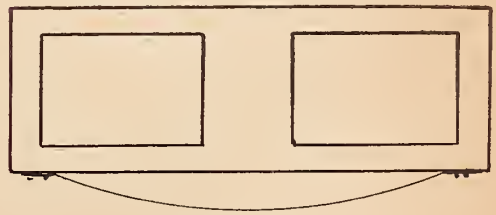

FIGURE 7
Slide Carrier Springs

first visit there. I like the city as a city. I like its open-hearted, whole-souled men and women. And, mark you well, that is no mere bonquet, but just solid fact.

We were the guests of Local 173, and found that they had put us up at the King Edward Hotel, which is the last word in class—and price. Upon arrival, being hungry, we visited the dining room, partook of a square meal, and friend daughter nearly fainted when she saw the bill. "Dad," said she solemnly, "they'll think we've been eating pearl soup frosted with diamonds when they see that!"

In the evening of the first day Messrs. Covert and Dentlebeck gathered friend daughter and my 'umble self, together with their respective bosses (wives), into the midst of a gasoline cart and we visited a few theatres, in all of which I found the screen results to be excellent. At the Palace Theatre, Danforth avenue, I could hardly believe my own eyes. At eight-forty p. m. there was a line two and three abreast, fully a hundred yards long, waiting to get in. The large lobby also was chock full.

And mark you this fact, and mark it well! Charles Querrie is manager and Harry P. Dodson projectionist at the Palace; and, although all that mob was waiting patiently to get in for the last show, the picture was being projected at normal speed—no hurrying at all. I could scracely credit what my own eyes saw—that crowd waiting at that hour in the night, in a suburb, and projection at normal speed. My compliments to Friend Querrie and Projectionist Dodson.

The Palace projection is level, and it actually looked a bit queer to see the Power's projectors setting level. The theatre seats 1,600, all on one floor. There are two double 75 Transverters, a toilet and a wash basin adjoining the projection room. The observation ports were covered with plate glass, set at an angle which killed all reflection.

At the Family Theatre, on Queen street, I was taken up into a billiard and pool hall, marched through it to a door in its wall and stepped through the same into the projection room of the theatre, with Brother W. Holden in charge. He is projecting a really very good picture, which Dentlebeck swears is fourteen feet wide—though it did not look it—at (get this) thirty-five feet projection distance. The projection angle is slight. The equipment is very old (Power's), but the picture is rock steady.

NOTICE

Explanation is due Hamilton Union and all other unions for the absence of the Union label on a recently reproduced letter from Hamilton Local in this department. Upon investigation we find the error was made by the engraver who made the plate. The mistake was innocently made. We are sorry it happened and trust this explanation is satisfactory to all concerned.

I would have enjoyed visting more theatres, but Toronto show shops close Sunday, and as this was Saturday evening we had to call it a day when we came out of the Family in so far as visiting Toronto theatres was concerned.

Sunday afternoon the entire executive board of Local 173 escorted us, via the gasoline route—four cars—around the city, and showed us its wonders and beauties. Some considerable village is Toronto, if you ask me.

At seven p. m. something occurred which would have made my visit worth while were no other good accomplished. For the first time in the history of Local Union 173 its executive board, members and their wives all met socially and became really acquainted.

The place was the Blue Room of the King Edward, and the occasion the dinner the executive board tendered myself and daughter. The fact that it was the first gathering of its kind was commented on frequently, and it was, and is, to be hoped the board will hold a similar meeting at least once each year.

Such gatherings cannot but accomplish good. They have a tendency to bring the working members of a union closer together and to induce team-work.

After the dinner we all adjourned to one of the theatres—I cannot for the life of me remember which one it was—where the local as a whole was gathered. I first listened to a most interesting address by Brother Simpson, an able leader of labor in Toronto, after which we discussed projection matters for an hour or more.

I enjoyed my visit to Toronto, and hope some day to meet you all again.

From Toronto we drove to Kingston, Ontario, and from that city made a ferry trip of two hours and a half back into the U. S. A. at Cape Vincent. From Cape Vincent we drove over most excellent roads to Watertown, where I had a little visit with John Solar, who has corresponded with this department in th past on projection optics.

Our next night was spent in Albany, wher we visited a theatre, the name of which I ar not sure about, but think it was the "Leland. The work of the projectionist himself was ver fair, but the light used by the organist—a ver able organist, by the way—was terrible. H had light enough for three organs, and th eyes of the audience got the full, complet benefit. My own hurt for an hour afterward

The next stop was home, and we were glac to see it come into view, permit me to inform you all and sundry. Taken as a whole th trip was a success. We both enjoyed it, anc feel that it was well worth while.

School Indorsement

The following letter came from A. G. Balcom, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, Newark, New Jersey, under date of November 23:

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS, NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. F. H. Richardson, No. 12 Treno Street, Halcyon Park, New Rochelle, N. Y.

My Dear Mr. Richardson:

I want to express to you personally my appreciation of your contribution to motion picture projection in your new "Handbook of Projection." I purchased a copy of the third edition and have recently purchased a copy of the fourth edition.

My problem is to put over visual instruction in the Newark schools and in order to do that efficiently I have need of knowledge of the projection side of the work.

Your book is most helpful. Our recent installations have been the Power's Six A projectors, equipped with the General Electric lamphouses and current regulators.

To show you how helpful your book has been, I have discovered that not one of our General Electric lamphouses has been set properly, and I have obtained this information through your fourth edition handbook. I went to the New Jersey State Normal School, located at Newark, the other day and set the lamp according to directions given in your book as applied to mirror, lamp filament, condenser and projection lens and got at least twenty per cent. more illumination on the screen than I have ever obtained before.

It is a most illuminating and comprehensive book and we who are in this field of work have many thanks to give you.

With best wishes, I am very truly yours,
A. G. Balcom,
Assistant Superintendent of Schools.

Many Attended the Christening of Frank Hall's Beautiful Twins

THREE thousand representative residents of North Hudson, N. J., exhibitors together with a distinguished group of prominent film men and showmen from New York joined in cheering Frank G. Hall, characterized as "the human dynamo" at the opening of the million-dollar Capitol Theatre, the first of a twin-theatre structure, at Union Hill, N. J., Monday evening, November 27. Governor Edward I. Edwards, Senator-elect of New Jersey; Mayor William Rannenberg and other prominent officials came to congratulate the man who had erected one of the most beautiful and unique theatre structures in this country. Directors of the holding corporation—all citizens of North Hudson county—came to inspect their investment. New York showmen agreed that the Capitol constitutes one of the handsomest buildings within the metropolitan district.

The opening exercises were conducted with much pomp and ceremony in addition to one of the choicest vaudeville bills ever gotten together. The initial bill was a remarkable example of expert booking and served to give the beautiful Capitol an auspicious sendoff, for the capacity audience was continually registering its satisfaction with hearty applause. The hero of the evening was Frank G. Hall. Of that there was no doubt. Everybody agreed that the erection of this enormous structure in ten months constituted a marvelous feat, for the building houses two distinctively different theatres, one is the Capitol, which, with a seating capacity of 2,500 in the orchestra, balcony and boxes, will be devoted exclusively to first class B. F. Keith vaudeville, while the other is the luxurious State Theatre, with accomodations for 1,800 persons, to be devoted exclusively to first-run pictures. The latter house is expected to be ready for opening within three weeks.

Elaborate Precaution Against Fire

The entire structure is fireproof, every conceivable system of fire-fighting apparatus having been installed to make the protection of the public as nearly perfect as is humanly possible. Fire hose lines have been placed in all tiers in glass cabinets in each theatre. These are fed from the high pressure main on Third street and further fed from the 10,000 gallon tank placed 20 feet above the roof over the stage of the Capitol.

The stages of both theatres are protected by a complete sprinkler system having two sources of immediate supply, one being a 15,000 gallon steel tank carrying a water pressure of 70 pounds to the square inch and another tank of 10,000 gallons placed above the larger tank. These tanks are supplied by a quadruple pump having a capacity of 500 gallons per minute. Besides these fire line and sprinkler systems, several dozen fire extinguishers are distributed throughout the auditorium. The heating and ventilating systems are also the latest. The structure was designed by a Hudson county man, Architect Piercie A. Vivattas, of Weehawken. The building was constructed by James Mitchell.

Open for Inspection

Prior to the initial performance the theatres was thrown open to the inspection of the guests, who overlooked not a single corner. The stage is modern in every detail with the best of "back-stage" equipment and every care taken in providing for the comforts of the artists.

Charles Eggett is the orchestra director. His orchestra opened the first show with a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner," followed with "Opera Medley a la Jazz." J. Raymond Tiffany acted as master of ceremonies and introduced the following, who spoke briefly, but were loud and emphatic in their praise of the modern Aladdin—Mr. Hall—and his lamp; Gov. Edwards, John B. Payton, president of the Boulevard Commission; Mayor Rannenberg, of Union; John J. Fallon, Joseph E. Bernstein, treasurer of the Capitol Theatre Amusement Company, and several others. Mr. Hall was the final speaker. He thanked the citizens for their support and made the statement that the future success of the venture is now for them to fix by patronizing the house. There are 100 Unionians who are stockholders and these receive free admittance to the twin houses for life.

An Outstanding Feature

An outstanding feature of the evening's program, which did not close until long after midnight, was a two-reel picture depicting the progress of Mr. Hall's venture from the time he first conceived the idea, through its promotion period, to the purchase of an abandoned schoolhouse, to construction and completion of the twin-theatre structure. Harry P. Diggs, popular and keen advertising manager of the company, conceived, directed and produced this film, which stood out as a distinct novelty.

The executive staff of the Capitol is as follows:

Frank G. Hall, managing director; George J. Riester, circuit manager; Harry P. Diggs, advertising manager; Fred W. Schroeder, resident manager; Jacques E. Horne, booking manager; Gertrude M. Schreiber, assistant advertising manager; John Victoria, house treasurer; Charles Eggett, conductor of orchestra; Arthur T. Quinn, chief cinematographer; Harry Gerken, stage manager; George Doremus, chief electrician; Harry Tryon, property master; W. F. Masden, chief engineer; Toby Brown, chief of projection.

Thanksgiving's Eve of Fifteen Years Ago Recalled by Hallberg

The following paper which was read by J. H. Hallberg at a meeting of the American Projection Society and illustrated by slides gives a view of early conditions and some of the difficulties which prevailed in the exhibiting end of the industry.

We believe it will interest our readers as an illustration of the attraction which the motion picture industry exerts upon bright minds from other fields. Mr. Hallberg furnishes an example of those who came to hear and remained to work in the new field.

Birth of The Hallberg Economizer

"It was on Thanksgiving Eve in 1907, just fifteen years ago, when a friend suggested to me that I accompany him to 14th Street where he had to make a call. At that moment I little dreamed, or much less realized, that I was about to be introduced to the projection department of the movies for the first time.

"We arrived at our destination on Fourteenth street, New York City, opposite the Academy of Music, and after climbing a few flights of stairs entered the offices of one of the pioneers in the moving picture business, Al Harstn.

"I shall never forget that day. It was snowing and around an old stove, in the front of us, a lot of men were sitting, talking "movie stuff," something new to me, because up to that time I had confined my efforts to the consulting and manufacturing electrical business. I had no idea of the electrical problems confronting the moving picture operator. I did not know the difficulties he had to meet unexpectedly almost every day in providing an arrangement for the necessary equipment with which to exhibit his reels.

"While my friend attended to his business with Mr. Harstn I listened with much interest to the discussion which was taking place and in the midst of which the door opened wide and an operator and helper loaded down with equipment walked in. I found that the equipment included a Power's No. 5 Cameragraph, few reels, a folded up screen, rewinder, carbons, rheostat and various other things, and this, gentlemen, was my first intimate view of the parts which at that time constituted a high class moving picture projection equipment.

A Tough Experience

"After unloading his pack, the operator turned to Mr. Harstn and said "I had a H—— of a time last night trying to put this show over and for Lord's sake don't send me out again on that kind of a job unless I know before hand what electric current is to be supplied."

"After a few moments I engaged the operator in conversation and he then described in detail his troubles about the exhibition which he had to make the previous night in a small Pennsylvania town with alternating current at the arc. He told how his rheostat (of only 25 amperes capacity) would give only a glow on the screen with alternating current and during late afternoon, while testing, (in those small towns the electric light plant did not run during the day, starting up at beginning dusk, about 4 P. M.), he realized that there would be no show that night if he did not get busy about some kind of a special current supply for his arc.

Quick Thought of Action

"Operators in those days had to think and act quickly, therefore he secured an old vinegar barrel, put a metal plate with a wire attached to it in the bottom of the barrel and then he hung another plate with a wire attached to it on an adjustable wooden stick. He put mixed salt and water into the barrel and through this means he soon provided a practical working water rheostat which was connected in series with the 110 volt A. C. electric light circuit and the carbons. This, however, did not solve his problem entirely because when he started the arc the fuses blew.

"Fortunately he had the foresight to have one of the electric light company's men on hand so that in a few moments a set of reinforced fuses were put in and then he could draw up to 40 amperes at the arc and he said that he got by with his one and one-half hour show without burning out the transformer or blowing any more fuses but he had to renew some of the water in the barrel because it started to boil after about one hour's operation. I wonder if many of us present here this evening realize the handicap placed upon the old operators of fifteen years ago. These men gained experience in those days which had stood by them and which has served as the foundation upon which modern methods and devices are now constructed.

Became Interested

"I was more than interested in the conversation with this, what I might call, "man of the hour" and after listening to him and to some of the others the fact was brought home to me that in order to make motion picture projection practical with alternating current it was necessary to provide a comparatively light and rugged portable device which should be used for the control of the alternating current applied to a moving picture arc so arranged that it would take less amperes from the line at the higher voltage and at the same time produce more than double the amperes at lower voltage for the arc in order that a shorter arc might be maintained of higher intensity with the double ampere flow and which further would permit the placing and feeding of the carbon points very close together so that both carbon craters could be brought within the focus of the condenser for simultaneous concentration in one spot at the aperture of the projector."

"Up to that time the illumination from only one of the carbon points had been used and focused at the aperture wasting more than one-half of the useful total illumination, and this loss was necessary as a short A. C. arc on 110 volt A. C. line cannot be maintained when controlled by a rheostat on alternating current.

"Way back in 1904, at which time I was engaged in the manufacture of apparatus for and operation of electric arc lamps for street lighting, I took out a patent on a transformer system for the control of street arc lamps. This patent became the foundation for a design and the ultimate construction of an economical and useful electrical device introduced for use in connection with motion picture projection. In its main parts this special transformer consisted of a rectangular core with closed magnetic circuit upon one leg of which there was mounted a primary coil of many turns, requiring a low amperage at high voltage and upon the other leg entirely separated from the primary another coil called the secondary was mounted, consisting of fewer turns of a much larger wire for a high amperage at low voltage.

"The primary or high voltage winding was for connection to the alternating current line and the secondary or low voltage high amperage coil was connected directly to the carbons in the projector lamp and this device when so connected would usually be called a step-down transformer but I realized that an ordinary step down transformer would not do the work because the fuses would blow immediately when the carbons were put together unless a resistance or choke coil was introduced in series with the arc and that would naturally mean waste of energy and unsteady current at the arc.

"All of these points flashed before me on that particular Thanksgiving Eve and I made up my mind to immediately design and construct a special type of transformer for the control of moving picture arc lamps with alternating current and the outcome of this work was the birth of the Hallberg Electric Economizer.

The profits of your house

THE profits you take out of your house depend upon the highlights you put into your pictures. After all, you have but the one thing to sell—pictures in light. Inferior lighting degrades the best picture in the world to worse than mediocrity; an ordinary good reel, it reduces to a fizzle. The most you give your patrons for their money—what you provide to interest, to amuse, to educate, to thrill—they get through their eyes! And they won't keep coming back to see dark pictures. Poor lighting makes every picture poor, and will work more to keep people out of a theater than any other factor in the industry. The direct road to bright, brilliantly highlighted pictures is—Columbia Projector Carbons.

The value of the picture is in proportion to its lighting

On Direct Current: Columbia Silvertip Combination Carbons present richer color values; and the narrow diameter of the silvertip negative lower permits it to burn to a sharp point, holding the arc steady and also keeping the shadow off the lens and screen.

On Alternating Current: Columbia White Flame A. C. Special Carbons yield a sharp and pure-white light, steady, brilliant, absolutely silent.

Use Columbia Projector Carbons to double the enjoyment of what you are showing and keep the profits of your house up to where they belong.

Columbia Projector Carbons are the most satisfactory source of motion picture light in the world!

Standard Film Laboratories have handled more than 25 million feet of release work for us the past ten months---We have received not a single adverse criticism of any nature regarding Standard Prints—Your photographic standard is one you should be proud to maintain—

The name Standard Prints should be sufficient guarantee for any exhibitor. They're all we could ask from a laboratory. "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows" bear out our faith in their excellence.

B. P. Schulberg

"Good Prints Guaranteed"

What a wonderful opportunity awaits the film distributing organization that can declare in its advertising and its sales talk:

"Every —— Company print you get is a good print!"

And then, after saying it, carry out the promise.

This seems a minor matter to the film man whose horizon is bounded by New York's Times Square or Chicago's Loop.

But there are thousands of small exhibitors who would arise to cheer the man or the company that would make good on that slogan—every time, and in every territory.

There are thousands of exhibitors who give strong consideration in their booking to this fact: That experience has shown them that in their particular territory such-and-such an exchange is most efficient and takes most pride in the condition of its prints.

There's no "way out" for the small-town exhibitor who has had to force a butchered print on his patrons. He suffers, he knows it, and he must face the music personally.

A mutilated print of a million dollar picture is worth thirty cents less than nothing.

"ROBERT E. WELSH
in
November 4, 1922."

The guarantee back of Standard Prints is our assurance of satisfaction. The daily service of the Standard Film Laboratories on our last picture was beyond criticism. Standard Prints are the best in the market.

Timothy's Quest

(American Releasing Corporation)

Timothy's Quest is one of Kate Douglas Wiggins' earlier stories, popular in children's libraries some twenty-five years ago. It contains all the materials for a sweet and cute picture, but it manages to come out as something better than that.

The picture is exceptional in that it is the only one most people will recall in which their native New England has emerged with truthfulness from the hands of a picture director. Sidney Olcott has created atmosphere and characters that are the real thing, and put them into pictures that move significantly and are beautiful.

He has had invaluable help from Marie Day in the part of Miss Alvida Cummins. Here is a white-haired, iron-faced old woman who represents remarkably the New England Puritan tradition. Dignity, grimness, repression—she has and reveals all the characteristics of a type that was fine and heroic in its mistaken way. In her younger days she sacrificed her human instincts to her idea of right. In her old age comes something that releases love in her frozen old bosom again, and it warms and swells till it bursts through the barriers her rigid training has so conscientiously built up against it, and at last her womanhood gets something of what it has been starved for all her life. It is a beautifully conceived and beautifully wrought creation, without obviousness or sentimentality. It will not bring the tear that flows so readily for the woes of the ordinary movie mother, but it will stir those who are sensitive to the poetry and the poignancy of beauty breaking up to the light through a harsh and unfriendly soil.

NO HERO, HEROINE OR VILLAIN, YET YOU'LL LOVE THIS FILM

By P. W GALLICO

Title of picture, "TIMOTHY'S QUES"
Story by KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN
Directed by SIDNEY OLCOTT
Distributed by AMERICAN RELEASING CORPORATION
Presented at the RIO THEATRE

"Timothy's Quest" is one of the most charming pictures we have seen in many moons. We took our six-year-old sister-in-law along with us, and we do not know whether she or we enjoyed it more.

Marie Day

We recommend heartily that you acquaint yourself with this film. Especially if you have been seeing a lot of movies lately and feel tired and wearied with them or with life in general. Delve into the SUNDAY NEWS Motion Picture Directory (Adv.) find out where it is playing and see if you do not spend a happy evening.

An intelligent director, two adorable children and a fine actress have made a real picture out of a story which in less competent hands might easily have been made maudlin.

Imagine a photoplay with no villains, no persecuted heroines, no camera struck heroes! Honestly, it's true. Timothy's quest is simply to find a home for himself and Lady Gay. They are both children of the slums. Timothy is played by Joseph Depew, an exceptionally sympathetic youngster, and Lady Gay by Baby Helen Rowland, an attractive and irrepressibly jolly little infant who from now on is our favorite screen actress.

Joseph Depew, Kate Douglas Wiggin authoress, and Baby Helen Rowland

The two, with their dog, set off on a childishly imaginative junket to find some one to adopt them. Fate brings them to the house of Martha Cummings (Marie Day). And from then on the excellent art of Miss Day makes it the gripping story of the gradual awakening to love of a hard old New England spinster.

There are other story threads, but happily the director stressed only the main theme and merely suggested the others. Thus the picture runs smoothly and truly to its goal. Where, we inquire, has Kate Douglas Wiggin been all our movie-going life?

By Mae Tinée.

Good morning!

It doesn't seem to me that anybody who read "Timothy's Quest," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, could ever forget the story of the two forlorn babies who start forth to find a home. Such a simply told, intensely human little tale! Those who did read it and haven't forgotten will be delighted to know that it is out in picture form. Perhaps in the picture they will miss some of the touches that made the book what it was to them, but, on the whole, I think they will find the film a satisfying one.

The three principal characters are a small boy with eyes that drag at your heartstrings, a baby girl you yearn to cuddle, and a dog that is undoubtedly "just dog," but nevertheless a dog who knows how to do considerable to your emotions.

These three who have had only the slums for their surroundings decide that they want a place that is white to live in. Along with the white house they would like, if you please, a white cat and a white cow. Also they would be terribly happy if in the white house was a lady who would like to adopt them.

I am NOT going to tell you all about this quest, for it is something for you to see and not read about. It should not only be seen by smug folks who live in white houses, but it might be a vurr' good afternoon's entertainment for some of these youngsters of ours who, possessed with the spirit of adventure, are leaving the homes they have to try out a world which can be so cold and cruel and indifferent!

Chicago Tribune

, Timothy's Quest, special cast (seven reels). We received letters of indorsement from heads of the local library and churches which brought new patrons. The picture is an exceptional one of heart interest and great characters. Kate Douglas Wiggins' name will draw. The film was new.—Roy McMinn, Capitol, Superior, Wis.

Popularity of "Tess" Should Extend Through Generations

MARTIN J. QUIGLEY, in Following Review, Says New Pickford Film "Will Go on Year After Year, and Is Deserving of It"

Comment on Mary Pickford's "Tess" might properly be confined to a few words. With equal correctness, volumes might be written. It is necessary only to say that what "Way Down East" was to the stage for several generations, "Tess" will be to the screen. On the other hand, a huge task would be encountered if one were to set out to deal fully and consistently with this production. It would take a deft wielder of words indeed to do justice to the consummate art of Miss Pickford except in a very lengthy document.

The Cast

Tessibel Skinner	Mary Pickford
Frederick Graves	Lloyd Hughes
Teola Graves	Gloria Hope
Elias Graves	David Torrance
Daddy Skinner	Forrest Robinson
Don Lotta	Jean Hersholt
Ezra Longman	Danny Hoy
Dan Jordon	Robert Russell
Old Man Longman	Gus Saville
Mrs. Longman	Mme. deBodamere

We shall not be surprised if Miss Pickford's new production of the famous story of "Tess of the Storm Country" becomes the most popular picture ever made. We do not view it as one of those sensational and timely successes which creates a great furore for a moment and then quickly shifts away to make room for another similar sky-rocket hit. This picture is almost here to stay; it will go on year after year—and it is eminently deserving of it!

How has this miracle of the amusement world come about? The answer is chiefly Mary Pickford and partly John Robertson, one of the most able men in the directorial profession. And Miss Pickford, great as she is, has by no means attempted to carry the story alone. On the contrary, she has surrounded herself with a cast of even merit and a tremendously fine production. There are a number of views of sheer gorgeousness and the whole production is decidedly creditable.

In the first place, "Tess" is an ideal story for Miss Pickford. It is difficult to conceive that there has been or that there will be another story which suits her so well and to which she is so well suited.

We think that this new "Tess" should be scrutinized by the most competent dramatic critics of the day in order that authoritative opinions might be written into the history of the drama which we believe would place Miss Pickford with the few really great actresses, past or present. Her pantomime is wholly marvelous. Apparently with no effort she is able to register what she means to convey with an astounding swiftness and certainty. There is a conspicuous absence of reaching after effects which results in her work carrying with it the highest degree of conviction. She proves very pointedly in "Tess" that she is the peerless player of the screen.

In several of Miss Pickford's recent pictures there were flashes of her real artistry, although a few were on the whole somewhat disappointing. The dual role of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," for instance, was a worthy attempt but the result was not altogether satisfactory. In "Tess," however, there are no lights and shades; she is brilliant throughout.

Another scene from "Tess of the Storm Country" (United Artists).

Miss Pickford's "Tess" is a human story that points a fine moral but the moralizing effect is accomplished automatically and without any sacrifice of entertainment. It is a story that is brimful of sentiment, pathos and humor. It is, perhaps, not the sort of thing that drama league enthusiasts get excited about nor yet is it what the ultra-sophisticated seek in the theatre. But we doubt that there is any normal person from nine years to ninety who cannot find in it great interest, entertainment and inspiration. If there be such the wrong is with them and not with the picture.

The story is a real test of the leading player's skill. From the start as a rollicking waif she is quickly swept through almost the entire gamut of human emotions and nowhere does she falter in the least. She brings a tear or a laugh with equal facility and in her tragic moments she is awe-inspiring.

The picture is beautifully executed. There is a great deal of pictorial charm about it and there is a very graphic impress of technically fine direction upon it. For Mr. Robertson it comes as a worthy successor to his splendid achievements in "Peter Ibbetson" and "Sentimental Tommy."

The supporting members of the cast measure up to the responsibilities of their selection. Lloyd Hughes as the "hill-topper" who succumbs to Tess' charms presents a manly and sympathetic figure. David Torrance as his father is splendid. Other very good characterizations are given by Jean Hersholt, Forrest Robinson and Robert Russell. The photography by Charles Rosher is distinctly notable.

Before Alfonso Was Born

TO get a picture of what popularity 15,000 performances of a play denotes, suppose that "Peg O' My Heart" had been given not in many theatres, but in only one.

Had this been so and the play just winding up its run, the premiere would have been back in 1881, the year of the great white blizzard, the year President Garfield was shot—before the Brooklyn Bridge was opened or King Alfonso of Spain had had his turn at being born.

15,000 performances, given consecutively, means a run of 41 years.

"Peg O' My Heart" on the stage has pleased 15,000 audiences and filled 15,000 box-office cash drawers—in New York and other big American cities, in London, in Paris, in Australia, in the Far East and in Hawaii. It is a world-success. No matter where seen, it wins favor.

So too must the picture, starring Laurette Taylor, the original Peg; and made by Metro with the author, J. Hartley Manners, at hand as an advisor.

Percentage insures your audience liking as well as have 15,000 audiences before it, this true and painstaking reproduction in celluloid of the best-loved story of the century.

Mrs. Simpson May Never Leave Homeburg

SHE plans to, of course, as soon as Mr. Simpson is made head of his department and her son Wilbur is through school.

Mrs. Simpson will go to New York then, buy a hat on Fifth Avenue, dine at the Waldorf, and see some plays with real New York casts.

In Homeburg she has no chance to see the great stage stars. Movies and fifth companies of metropolitan hits reach there. "Peg O' My Heart" played at the Opera House, for instance—but not with Laurette Taylor as Peg. When Mrs. Simpson goes to New York she's going to see Laurette Taylor.

But Mr. Simpson isn't head of his department yet, and Wilbur won't be through school for four years. So Mrs. Simpson won't be leaving Homeburg for some time; she may never. And she wants to see Laurette Taylor —as Peg, especially. So does Mr. Simpson. Wilbur, too, for that matter.

These three people represent your patronage. They, and thousands like them, are waiting to see Laurette Taylor in "Peg O' My Heart." The picture's waiting to be booked.

AT BOOK YOU HAD TO READ YOU'LL WISH TO SEE IN FILM

By P. W. GALLICO.

Title of picture, "LORNA DOONE."
Story by R. D. BLACKMORE.
Directed by MAURICE TOURNEUR.
Released by ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL.
Presented at the STRAND THEATRE.

Be you youngster or grownup, we hope that by no means will you permit the fact that R. D. Blackmore's "Lorna Doone" is prescribed reading in many schools keep you from going to see the picture.

John Bowers

It was a great surprise to us when we first read the book to discover that a teacher had actually made us read something we enjoyed. It was no surprise to discover that Maurice Tourneur had made a really fine picture. Certainly there was sufficient story material there, although not all of it might be called adaptable to the screen, and one has come to expect the best when that director's name heads a picture.

Tourneur, however, is rarely content merely to transfer a story to the screen. He takes atmosphere, adds to it some of his genius, and turns out a picture which bears the stamp of individuality, and always some surprisingly beautiful photography.

By the choice of his locations and the handling of his camera Tourneur has rendered the sombre English land and sea scapes as a beautiful pictorial impetus to a thrilling story.

minute rescue of a beautiful maiden in distress and a fierce fight to death on the brink of a black quagmire.

Pictorially, Madge Bellamy is a fine Lorna, but John Bowers, while looking the part, also interpreted the character of John Ridd to us. His was a truer and more effective performance. Donald MacDonald was a vivid Carver Doone, the villain who shoots Lorna as she is about to be married. Credit should also go to Harry Sharp, Mr. Tourneur's photographer.

Madge Bellamy and Donald MacDonald

We do not hesitate to class this among the worthwhile pictures of the year.

Neilan's "Minnie" a Sure-Fire Comedy Entertainment

"MINNIE"

Marshall Neilan Prod.—Asso. First Nat'l Pict.
DIRECTORS ....Marshall Neilan and Frank Urson
AUTHOR ..... Marshall Neilan
SCENARIO BY ..... Marshall Neilan
CAMERAMEN. ....David Kesson and Karl Struss
AS A WHOLE.... ..Original and sparkling comedy feature that offers sure-fire entertainment
STORY.....A first rate idea and contains fine comedy possibilities; it has real laughs and plenty of them
DIRECTION.....Very good; gets genuine humor out of story and plays to the audience from all angles
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... All right
PLAYERS.....One of the best acting parts Leatrice Joy has ever done; Matt Moore in just his type of role; Raymond Griffith excellent comedian; fine cast all the way
EXTERIORS.....Many very beautiful shots
INTERIORS.....Look like the real thing
DETAIL ..... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY....Homely girl's search for happiness which leads into highly amusing complications
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,696 feet

They are going to get a lot of enjoyment out of this picture, that's sure, because Marshall Neilan's latest, "Minnie," is a sure-fire comedy entertainment that doesn't miss the mark. It hits every time and if they cannot be amused by it, there is something radically wrong. The picture is a genuine comedy number with plenty of real laughs; it doesn't merely try for laughs. Neilan's basic theme is fairly familiar—the homely girl who is ridiculed and hasn't a beau like the other girls—but its familiarity ends there. Everything else is original and the idea is certainly cleverly carried out. Neilan has taken the joke about the girl who walked home from an automobile ride and worked it into the story in great style. The first fellow that takes her for a ride runs out of gas and when he asks her for a kiss, Minnie gets out and walks home. The next time she goes for a ride, with another fellow, and they run out of gas at the same place, Minnie knows just what's coming. On the way home she is stopped and invited to ride, but informs the fellow she's just coming from one. But the best laugh comes when Minnie, now in the company of one who loves her, goes riding to the fateful spot and they again run out of gas. Minnie is prepared for the emergency and has brought along a pair of old shoes to walk home in. The telling of this doesn't do the comedy half justice. You have to see it.

Throughout Neilan has taken advantage of every comedy possibility so that the feature offers a first class entertainment with humor that is sure-fire. Besides the troubles of Minnie and her struggle for happiness there is plenty of by-plot. In this connection the director has used a little too much footage in dovetailing the sequences into a climax. Of course it probably gives things a more satisfactory conclusion to finish up each sequence separately and make the hero and heroine beautiful through plastic surgery. However, as far as the comedy goes, it might finish up with Minnie and her lover strolling down the lane hand in hand.

Undoubtedly the role of Minnie gives Leatrice Joy the best opportunity she has ever had for character acting and she does it splendidly. Matt Moore is an ideal hero in a role that just suits him. Raymond Griffith as the fast working gum salesman is fine. The cast on the whole is very good.

If They Want To Be Amused Don't Miss It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The story of "Minnie" is a bit too complicated to give an idea of it in a short synopsis, but it is safe enough for you to book it without knowing the story because if you are out for a sure-fire comedy number, you'll want to get it. If your audience appreciates comedy pictures, they'll surely enjoy "Minnie" and you can make promises for its originality and be sure to let them know it has plenty of laughs.

Do your best to assure them of its humo[illegible]nd say that Leatrice Joy appears in a role very [illegible] differ- [illegible]ent from anything she has done yet. Make promises for her performance and that of Matt Moore, who has the kind of a role that he does best. Use plenty of stills in the lobby and whatever exploitation you can in the way of stunts to get them interested. A girl dressed up like Minnie would attract a good deal of attention and you might invite them in to see how Minnie became the envy of all the beautiful girls. [illegible] should be easy [illegible] the results worth [illegible] all the "Minnies" in your [illegible]

The Training Season

THOSE trips to Los Angeles and back that you read so much about these days, those imposing-sounding sales conferences, those frequent studio items that tell of shifting personnel and changing executives—all have a meaning.

We are on the edge of the second half of the 1922-23 season, and the final lap is going to tell a big, important story.

September saw us take a big jump from mediocrity of product to a level that we can confidently term "sustained excellence." September saw the eradication of much that had been fruitful in criticism.

January will show whether we can maintain the pace—and also another story.

All Starting from Scratch

This Fall saw a happening that will deserve a permanent place in any record of the industry's history. This was the flying start secured by Famous Players and the "famous forty-one."

The stage seemed to have been set in perfect atmosphere. The breaks of luck came the way of the man in a position to use them. And the effects were far-reaching.

But January's story will open with a different chapter. One of the delightful phases of the picture pastime is that each six months can always tell a different story.

January finds a well-balanced list of contestants starting from scratch.

And it's going to be a great race to watch, a thrilling drive for the man with his money up—the exhibitor.

Looking Them Over

Their long-protracted negotiations that ended nowhere left Goldwyn and First National standing flat when September's whistle blew. But both have been in hard training—only an inkling of their big things has reached the black and white of type—and they are ready for the January signal. Watch them.

Some years ago we recorded it as our belief that in a certain twelve months Universal had shown the greatest individual improvement of product. This year we are willing to state that starting with "The Storm" and "Foolish Wives" Universal has shown a sustained evenness of performance that excites admiration. Another contestant who will be in the picture for the "quantity-quality" stakes.

Metro, with such producers as Fred Niblo, Reginald Barker, Rex Ingram; Fox, with a list of Broadway successes about ready for the exhibitor; United Artists, with a number of available attractions, instead of the one current special that has been its lot; Vitagraph, with an interesting schedule announced; Selznick, with new ambitions; and the host of representatives of the independent creator, American Releasing, Hodkinson, Associated Exhibitors, F. B. O.—all face the barrier.

Not to slight a famous forty-one or more that could be put forth by the independent market from the offerings of Warner Brothers, Al Lichtman, Arrow, Charles Burr, Weber-North, etc.

Yes, sir, there has been nothing to kick about in the first lap. But the second lap finds them "better bunched"—and that means a race.

And Don't Forget

Nor should we overlook the dark horses that will be found out there on the track soon after the bell has rung.

J. D. Williams is a factor, for example, who must always be kept in mind. J. D. is back from Los Angeles, saying little and promising less. But it is known that "something will be doing" by the first of the year.

Judging from the performances of the past it can be safely said that J. D. Williams will be found fostering something of interest to independent producers and independent exhibitors. J. D. is the apostle of "independence."

And he is not idle. So there's the dark horse.

Decision Reserved

Famous Players Says It Put Up Bond for Valentino.

The Appellate Division of the N. Y. Supreme Court, has reserved decision on the appeal of Rodolph Valentino, to upset the injunction granted by Justice Wasservogel restraining Valentino from engaging his services to any one else while under contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Valentino's appeal was a recital of his allegations of unfair play toward him by the Famous Players.

Famous Players through its attorney, told the court Valentino's allegations are so trivial as to make them ludicrous. He said Famous Players paid his salary regularly, and money to pay alimony to his wife, and rescued him from attachment proceedings when he was arrested in California, and gave bail for him for $10,000 and it is due to Famous Players' influence that he has gained a position in the realm of motion pictures.

Voice Protest

Theatre Men Want Sole Right to Purchase Pictures

A letter voicing the protest of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, Inc., against producing companies marketing their product through non-theatrical channels, has been sent to all producers and exchanges. It is claimed that exhibitors should have the sole privilege of buying this product.

The letter also makes known the opposition of the theatre owners against granting more than thirty days' protection on any production, and complaint is also made of salesmen bartering contracts between competing exhibitors.

Meeting Is Planned

Look for Big Gathering of Exchange Managers and Exhibitors

A movement is under way among the film exchange managers of Washington, D. C., for a big get-together meeting to be participated in by the exchange managers and the exhibitors of the District of Columbia, Virginia, Maryland, and North Carolina. Initial plans for the event were made at a meeting of the Film Board of Trade on Monday, and a resolution was adopted empowering President Robin to appoint the necessary committees.

It is the idea of the Film Board of Trade to stage a conference similar to the one held in Washington a couple of years ago and attended by over one hundred exhibitors in this territory. The conference will be followed by a banquet at one of the local hotels.

Holiday Tie-Up

Exhibitors Asked to Add Christmas Idea to Better Films Campaign

Exhibitors wishing to promote a spirit of co-operation among influential persons in their communities will be interested in the plan of the National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board of Review.

The Committee suggests that exhibitors send to it, at 70 Fifth avenue, New York, five names of influential people, with dues for these for a year as Associate Members of the Committee, at Two Dollars each; these to receive Christmas greetings and the various publications of the Committee, the idea being to promote among these people of influence a spirit of good will toward the theatre and a general tendency toward the promotion of better pictures in the community.

These advantages for the exhibitor are claimed as the Committee's sole interest in suggesting this method of making local members. It is stated that the residents of your community whom you favor with memberships will recognize that this is no mere advertising scheme on your part, but is indicative of a genuine desire for co-operation in the exhibition and patronage of the finest pictures, wherever they are booked.

Will Fight It Out

Movie Men Not Frightened by "Blue Law" Agitators

Moving picture theatres in the suburbs of Cleveland were open as usual on Sunday, December 3, two days after the owners and managers of them were arrested on a charge of violating the Sunday closing law.

Those arrested were: M. Silverman, Wind-a-Meer Theatre, East Cleveland; J. O. Mellert, Shaw-Hayden Theatre, East Cleveland; James Schwartz, Homestead Theatre, Lakewood; Frank Kinney, Lucier Theatre, Lakewood; J. Schuman, U-No Theatre, Lakewood; Martin Printz, Lakewood Theatre, Lakewood.

Warrants were sworn out against these men by J. H. Locks, acting for N. D. Davis, a lawyer who is conducting a "blue law" campaign, apparently without the backing of any organization. A week previously Davis caused the arrest of ten merchants of Cleveland Heights for keeping open on Sunday. In Cleveland Heights there is a theatre which is not permitted by the local authorities to open on Sunday.

The exhibitors have decided to continue keeping their theatres open on Sunday, and fight the "blue law" agitators to the very end.

Appoint Committee

Several Selected to Look Into All Grievances

J. H. Beaver, manager of Preferred Pictures; Sam A. Galanthy, manager of the American Releasing Corporation, and Sam Black, of the Liberty Film Exchange, have been appointed members of a grievance committee proposed to be formed by the Film Board of Trade of Washington, D. C. These three with Messrs. Reichert and Marks and the officers of the Film Board of Trade, will constitute that organization's executive committee. They will hold an organization meeting shortly for the consideration of routine business and will make arrangements for the next meeting of the association.

A great deal of interest is being taken in the revival of the film organization in the Washington territory. It is the desire of the members to make an organized effort to get closer to the exhibitors in the territory, and the probability is that an effort will be made to have conferences between the two branches of the industry in Washington from time to time. The first of these will take place about the middle of January, when a two-day or three-day convention and banquet will be staged.

Cohen Complains Against Music Society

Contends Copyright Law Does Not Justify Collection of Fees

PRESIDENT SYDNEY S. COHEN and other national officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have made definite moves at Washington, D. C., to prevent the so-called music trust from levying tribute on the theatre owners of the country through the medium of its music license tax.

Formal complaints against the operators of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers were lodged in the office of Attorney General Daugherty and with the Federal Trades Commission in which the declarations were made that this concern was a combination in restraint of trade and that its processes were prejudicial to the interests of the theatre owners and the public.

Theatre owners from all parts of the United States have entered a protest against the license exactions of this society with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and these objections in concrete form were embodied in the complaints made in Washington.

President Cohen met with National Directors H. B. Varner, of Lexington, North Carolina, and A. Julian Byrlawski, of Washington, and M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the National Public Service Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in determining the specific form of complaint to be presented.

It is the contention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America that the present copyright laws do not invest the music society with the right to make the license fee exactions from exhibitors and that the members of Congress who passed the law indicated specifically that it was not to include in its powers the uses to which it is now being subjected by this society.

That it is a veritable embargo on the free expression of American musical genius and strangles effort in that direction, is one of the contentions of the theatre owners and in which they believe the public has a vital concern.

The representatives of the theatre owners also detailed what they termed are the highly obnoxious methods of the music trust representatives, using their assumed advantage to browbeat and threaten exhibitors, and stated that the government department that will handle the matter will be fully apprised of such proceedings.

In advocating the repeal of the music tax, Frank Rembusch says that theatre owners, in a general way, agree that the so-called music tax is unjust and unfair, but pay it because heretofore the case has seemed rather hopeless to refuse. However, he says that after careful investigation he is convinced that with proper effort theatre owners can avoid paying the tax. Various plans to defeat the tax have been advocated. Exhibitors have combined to battle against it.

Mr. Rembusch points out that the music society collects a copyright charge when they sell the printed sheet. They add another charge where their music is played in a place operated for profit.

"We believe," he says, "that the music publishers receive all the rewards they are entited to under the copyright act, when they sell the printed sheet and that their claim to further charge for playing this music is invalid. If necessary, we propose to ask Congress to pass such legislation that will interpret the copyright law, so that copyright rewards shall come in the sale of the printed sheet only.

"The Music Society does not notify the exhibitor that certain musical compositions are copyrighted. Rather they send paid spies into the theatre and it matters not whether you play their music or not they report that tax music has been played. In due time the exhibitor is bluffed into either paying the tax or else he faces trial in the Federal Courts for infringement."

Speaking of his own case, Mr. Rembusch said: "They brought suit on a piece of music that no member of our orchestra ever played at anytime. Yet, to intimidate us they told our attorney they could send us to the penitentiary for playing their music without a license. We did not play it, but must defend ourselves in Federal Court anyhow.

"The Music Society," Mr. Rembusch says, "is composed largely of publishers, who control most of the distribution of so-called popular music, and we propose that the Federal Trade Commission shall investigate whether or not they are operating in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws. The real authors and composers receive very little remuneration, but the Music Society cuts a sweet melon quite regularly. We are not fighting individual composers, but a combine as mean and heartless as ever existed in any line of business.

"The Music Society hires an able general copyright attorney and attorneys in each state to enforce its claims. We exhibitors all hire different attorneys, most of whom never had a copyright case in their hands, and don't know what it's all about.

"We request that every exhibitor refuse to pay the tax and send his case to us, and we will engage one set of attorneys who will look after all our cases at very small cost to each individual exhibitor.

"The Music Society sets an arbitrary price on playing copyrighted music. If you only play one piece of music a year their charges are the same as a continuous use of their music."

To defeat the music tax, Mr. Rembusch says, "the first necessary act is for the exhibitor to refuse to pay the tax. Every exhibitor that pays the tax gives the Music Society added strength to defeat those who refuse to pay.

"We are engaging attorneys of national experience in copyright law to assist us and such other attorneys as are necessary in each state, to defend your and our cases. We plan to carry one or more cases up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and secure a more equitable and just interpretation of the copyright act, if this is necessary."

Attendance Growing

Tax Returns of October Increase Over September

Theatrical attendance throughout the country is steadily improving, according to reports to Washington, D. C., total collections from the tax on admissions in October being $5,396,461 as compared with $4,789,391 for the month of September. The low point was reached in July, when taxes totaling only $4,620,893 were collected.

Total collections from all sources for the month of October were $111,012,494, as compared with $139,575,948 for the month of September. In September, however, much of the excess over the October collections was caused by the payment of the third installment of income and profits taxes for last year.

Big Banquet Held

Charlotte Exchange Managers Body Give Dinner to Employes

Charlotte, N. C., which is rapidly becoming one of the most important film centers in the South, now having within four of as large a number of exchanges as Atlanta, held its first annual get-together social banquet of the film forces that carry on its mammoth traffic in motion pictures on Friday evening, December 1, the occasion being a banquet given by the Charlotte Film Exchange Managers' Association to all employes of the exchanges comprising its membership, the affair being held in the banquet hall of the Selwyn Hotel and one of the most enjoyable and pleasurable social gatherings of the kind ever held in the South.

The idea behind the banquet was to imbue each unit of the film organization of the city with a closer spirit of unity and co-operation and enthusiasm in their work and forty-one guests assembled at the banquet table in response to invitations which had been mailed.

C. E. Peppiatt, manager of Southern Enterprises, Inc., and E. F. Dardine, manager of Universal Film Exchange, Inc., had charge of arrangements for the affair and to these two hustlers, counted among the most popular film men in the Carolinas, is due much credit for its success. The latter acting as toastmaster, kept a ready flow of wit circulating around the table, periodic explosions in a more serious vein, however, being interspersed as the toastmaster called upon different members for brief addresses, E. E. Heller, C. E. Peppiatt and T. A. Branon being among those who spoke to the guests, outlining the principles upon which the film exchange managers' organization had been founded, impressing upon the employes their relative share in maintaining a high standard of efficiency for their different exchanges, touching upon their duty to both employer and theatre owner at all times, and stressing the point that the future of their business and of the great motion picture industry as a whole rested largely upon the shoulders of the bookers, cashiers, inspectors and other employes of the exchanges.

New Theatre Opens

Formal opening of the Forest Hills Theatre, Forest Hills, New York, was held December 5 with an elaborate program put on by the Sheers' Amusement Enterprises, Inc.

Many prominent persons attended among the crowd that filled the house, which has been designed along the most modern lines of convenience and luxury.

Newsy Briefs

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford left for California last Friday. Their last New York stunt was the starting of the official drive of the Santa Claus Association by pushing an electric button that connected with twenty-five cities. Douglas Fairbanks will begin work at once on his next production for which he will build a complete city on the cliffs of Catalina Island.

The New York State Motion Picture Commission's refusal to permit the showing of "Fate," the Clara Smith Hamon film, has been sustained by a decision by the Appellate Division of the N. Y. Supreme Court. The Commission's refusal was based on the ground that it was against public policy to show before girls and young women in theatre audiences the story of events leading up to the murder of the Oklahoma oil man, Jake L. Hamon of which Miss Hamon was acquitted on March 16, 1921. William A. Brady, President of the N. A. M. P. I., had received many protests against presentation of the film from exhibitor organizations.

It is understood that Will Hays, President of the M. P. D. P. A., will be in Kansas City December 5, and plans are being made by the M. P. T. O., of Kansas, and the Film Board of Trade for a meeting with Mr. Hays. The duration of his stay is not known.

The members of the Paramount baseball team this year's pennant winners in the Motion Picture League, will be guests of Arthur Loew at a dinner and vaudeville entertainment at the N. V. A. Club Sunday evening. Mr. Loew was a member of the Metro team which lost its two games with Paramount; otherwise. the Metro team would probably be guests of Eugene Zukor, instead, on Sunday evening.. Incidentally, Mr. Zukor will be among those present at Mr. Loew's dinner.

Cecilia DeMille, young daughter of Cecil B. DeMille, Paramount's director-general has made her first bid for literary distinction. She won first prize in an American Red Cross essay contest conducted at the Hollywood School for Girls as part of the present Christmas drive for that charity.

At a dinner given Thanksgiving Day at 87 Clinton avenue, Brooklyn, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Rispoli announced the engagement of their daughter, Rose, to Vincent Trotta, manager of the art department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Jack S. Connolly, Washington, D. C., representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, on November 28, slipped across the Maryland State line, accompanied by Miss Lucille Maule, and after a visit to the parsonage of the Rev. John Henderson, the latter was Mrs. Connolly.

Charles C. Pettijohn, who has held the position of special assistant to Will H. Hays, head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., has been given the title of counsel to the Hays' office. Mr. Pettijohn is a lawyer of long experience and at one time was prosecuting attorney of Indianapolis.

Frank Lloyd, who directed Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist," is in New York to make some preliminary scenes for the new Norma Talmadge picture, "Within the Law," a First National release. He will return to Los Angeles in a week or so.

Universal Wins

Court Refuses to Grant Injunction Against It.

Universal has received word by telegraph from Denver that it has won the injunction action against its serial, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill."

The case was brought by the W. F. Cody ("Buffalo Bill") Historical Pictures' Corporation against the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.

The plaintiff alleged it had acquired from Buffalo Bill exclusive right to the use of the name in moving pictures, and it had made and exploited a motion picture based on these rights and that the Universal had imitated its advertising and had otherwise infringed upon its rights.

Universal claimed that the plaintiff had no exclusive right in the name of "Buffalo Bill" or the character of Buffalo Bill, and that it had not simulated its advertising or infringed on its rights in any way.

The Century Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., lately remodeled and redecorated, was formally opened on the evening of November 24 by Ackerman & Harris with the world's premiere of the ten-reel animal picture, "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera." The house was packed with a representative audience which included two hundred California editors, headed by Governor-elect Friend W. Richardson, representatives of the consular service of many countries having holdings in Africa, and leaders in civic and educational work.

The event was of special interest locally in that the production was made possible by the efforts of the African Expedition Corporation, a local concern which financed the trip to Africa made by H. A. Snow, of Oakland and San Francisco.

File Affidavits

Two affidavits were filed Saturday in the Morgan Circuit Court at Martinsville against Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., owner of the Grace Theatre at Martinsville, and his manager, Frank Jewell, charging them with violating the Sabbath by operating the theatre on November 12 and November 19. Affidavits against Mr. Rembusch and Mr. Jewell were first filed in the court of Mayor E. L. Avery. When the cases were called a change of venue was asked. The filing of affidavits in the Circuit Court followed.

Salvation of Industry Is in Percentage Dealing

Hodkinson Says Producers and Exhibitors Must Finally Agree to It

IN an effort to help the motion picture industry to further prosperity, to bring it out of the stagnation into which he says it has sunk—in an effort to bring the crowds back to the theatres, to put money in the pocket of the exhibitor, and at the same time to have the producer and the distributor get a fair return on their investment, W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has thought deeply, and investigated widely. And now, in a statement to Moving Picture World, Mr. Hodkinson is giving the industry the fruits of his investigation and experience.

The chief remedy that is needed, according to Mr. Hodkinson, is to be found in the establishment of a system of percentage dealing between the exhibitor and the producer. The distributor, he says, must stand as a neutral element between the two, altogether unbiased, and using his influence to see that producer and exhibitor are accorded a fair deal.

According to Mr. Hodkinson the falling off in attendance at moving picture theatres, which he says statistics show, has been occasioned by the quality of pictures that he says the producer has forced the exhibitor to run. "Machine-made," is the way Mr. Hodkinson describes these films, and says that they are not at all what the public demands. The industry will be retarded, Mr. Hodkinson says, "until such time as producers are definitely rewarded for good picture product through the pulling power of their productions at the box-office, and in no other way. In spite of the difficulties that lie in the way of this plan, I believe that the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages and I believe that ultimately, the adoption of the percentage system is inevitable."

That under the present system the attendance at movie theatres has fallen off tremendously; that small producers are being driven out of business while the big fellows who insist on forcing their "factory-made" product on the public are getting more and more of a strangle-hold on the industry and are profiting inordinately, are some of Mr. Hodkinson's outstanding statements.

Mr. Hodkinson points out another danger to the industry also in the fact that "the gradual acquisition of distributing channels by the mass producers has reached a point where," he says, "the distributor has been almost eliminated as a neutral factor, and the producer, in effect, has a direct contact with the exhibitor. Faced with the necessity of manufacturing a large quantity of product, the producer is exerting every power within his reach to force the exhibitor to pay maximum rentals regardless of the quality of his product.

"Where he has thought it necessary, the producer-distributor has even entered the exhibition field and has purchased theatres for the express purpose of forcing the output of his picture factories, regardless of their fitness."

However, as unbusinesslike as Mr. Hodkinson says the present system is, with its sure progress toward killing the entire industry, he points out with unfaltering fairness the obstacles in the way of changing to the percentage basis, which he sees as the industry's final sanctuary. In enumerating the difficulties looking toward a change, he says:

"The exhibitor is unalterably opposed to percentage bookings, for two reasons, both of them justified.

"First, the producer has demanded of the exhibitor that he pay flat rentals for indifferent product, reserving the lion's share of the better product for himself.

"Second, the exhibitor fears to disclose the records of his business to producer interests that are actively competing with him in the operation of theatres and who might very well use the information thus gained to raise rentals on average product and to guide him in the establishment of competing houses in particularly productive territory.

"The exhibitor, indeed, is between two dilemmas; on the one hand he sees his audience dwindling by reason of the fact that he has found it necessary to play a great deal of inferior product, produced by the factory producers, which product is an effective dam against better producers' pictures reaching him; and on the other hand he fears to trust the producer to deal fairly with him if he opened his books to the examination necessary where percentage contracts are enforced."

But unless something is done to alter the present situation, Mr. Hodkinson sees strong competition looming up for the theatres. He says that "the screen is too great a new medium for expression to be compressed for commercial gain into any particular channel." He forecasts as competitors of the moving picture theatre the home, the community center and the church.

"There is nothing to limit the motion picture to the theatre," Mr. Hodkinson says. "It is chance that has thrown it for the time being into that single channel. As competitors there are other avenues waiting. Just as soon, as by proving itself unfit, the motion picture industry as at present constituted forces upon them the opportunity it cannot itself utilize for the public good, these competitors will come forward."

The present leaders in the motion picture industry are merely average business men, according to Mr. Hodkinson, who are for the most part submerged in commercialism, and who have made money out of the industry, not because of their methods, but in spite of them. Because they have so far made money, he says, they take it for granted that the methods in vogue are the right ones. But he forecasts that they are nearing the end of their rope, that the public has become satiated with inferior product, and he advises the industry "either to clean house or take the consequences."

Mr. Hodkinson says that the public would patronize better pictures—that better pictures would bring the crowds back to the theatres—and says they should be given pictures that would appeal to their intelligence. The reason the public doesn't get what it wants and what it would appreciate, he says, is because the leaders of the motion picture industry don't want to make pictures of that kind. These leaders, he says, have found no reason to bestir themselves as long as they have been able to force on the exhibitor and the public a less expensive, inferior and "machine-made" product.

English Producers Try Flanking Move to Stay American Advance

By ROGER FERRI

MONTREAL, QUE.—(Special)—English motion picture producers and distributors, disgruntled because of the marked increase in distribution of American productions in British possessions in general, will hit at the American industry through Canada. This much is admitted by Canadian exhibitors many of whom have been approached by representatives of British concerns relative to a tieup concerning the release of English pictures at the rate of one a week.

Involved in this new project, which is the subject of general conversation in theatrical circles in this province and in Ontario are said to be a group of French producers, who maintain the same attitude as the British toward American-made pictures. In fact, the campaign now on foot is so determined that there is some talk of a wholesale importation of German pictures, long obnoxious here as well as in other British territories, as a means of so choking the Dominion market that American pictures will find it next to impossible to get dates.

British bankers with affiliations in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg, are at the helm of this movement and some have even gone so far as to offer financial aid to independent exhibitors, who have had anything but a profitable season.

Right now the big man in Canadian producing circles, as odd as it may seem, happens to be an American showman—Ernest Shipman of New York. He has incorporated an all-Canadian producing and distributing organization that promises to be a power in short time in Canadian cinematographic circles. Mr. Shipman has the backing of the people; that is more than this British campaign can brag about, for, after all, American stars are much in demand here.

Mr. Shipman's corporation already has completed "The Man From Glengary" which is being extensively advertised in all the leading Canadian newspapers. He is to produce a series of similar productions in Canada. He is being given every cooperation not only from the people and exhibitors, but from the press in general, for his activities have been the subject of considerable favorable editorial comment.

What Adolph Zukor is to the industry in the States, Ernest Shipman is to the Canadian industry. He enjoys the intimate friendship and confidence of representative local business men and influential members of the Dominion Parliament. In fact, one of the men interested financially in the venture, talking to a representative of MOVING PICTURE WORLD at the Windsor Hotel, expressed it as his belief that the time "will soon come when Canada can make pictures that England and the United States can't help but show extensively."

However, in spite of what Mr. Shipman is doing to put Canada on the cinematographic map, the fact remains that the foreign anti-American film propagandists are much in evidence and, if permitted to go about their destructive work unmolested, will come near to achieving their purpose. The financial backing of this campaign is seemingly unlimited despite the fact that neither public nor press is encouraging its continuance.

Film conditions here have changed but little during the past few months although in the larger centers, like Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, motion picture men report a marked improvement. But this has been of the come-and-go variety, with exhibitors afraid to take chances, as one of them put it.

British representatives here are trying to force the big town exhibitors to come to terms through the smaller communities. In the latter places, they have been fairly successful, for much of the film has been given gratis.

Because of the enormous French-speaking population of the Dominion, the French film industry has been enlisted in the campaign. And what cut-in is being recorded is due almost entirely to the activities of the Frenchmen, who, right now, are sponsoring a movement to operate, either owning outright or via the lease route, a string of theatres in the Dominion showing French pictures exclusively.

Vitagraph Answers

Suit by Doubleday-Page Brings Reply.

Answer to the suit brought in the N. Y. Supreme Court, by Doubleday, Page and Company against the Vitagraph Company of America, Inc., for damages for an alleged breach of contract over the production of a number of the late O. Henry stories in motion picture form, has been filed in the N. Y. County Clerks office, by the Vitagraph Corporation, by its attorney, William M. Seabury, of 36 West 44th street.

The answer sets up a general denial, and alleges that the agreement alleged to have been broken, was succeeded by a modified one, and that under this agreement defendant produced and released a number of films in 1920, none in 1921 and one film of five reels in 1922. It is alleged the plaintiffs were paid $28,000 in royalties, a sum in excess of what it was agreed to pay them, and that the defendants have lived up to all the terms of the modified agreement.

Would Abolish Body

Theatrical Managers Head Favors Setting Aside of Censorship Commission

According to George W. Roberts, president of the Albany, N. Y. Theatrical Managers' Association, his organization will welcome the abolition of motion picture censorship.

"I can speak for every member of the association," said Mr. Roberts, "when I say that we are heartily in favor of abolishing the commission. We were opposed to it when the law was first talked of, and we filed our protest with the Legislature when the bill went through. We object to the principle of the commission, not that it has ever done anything really injurious to us.

"The Albany Managers' Association has never had an opportunity of going on record as against censorship, but I know that every member is in favor of abolishing the commission, and doing away with what I believe there was never any need of."

Injunction Denied

Court Refuses to Prevent Use of Name, "Sherlock Holmes."

Justice Francis Martin, of the N. Y. Supreme Court, has handed down a decision denying the application of William Gillette for a preliminary injunction restraining the Stoll Film Co., Ltd., from using the title "Sherlock Holmes" or "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, in connection with any motion picture; to require an account of profits, and to recover damages for the use of such titles. The decision recites that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is the creator of Sherlock Holmes, and that it is alleged an agreement with him resulted in the character being dramatized by William Gillette, who played the title role, and that this agreement does not appear to have involved a grant of motion picture rights.

The decision says that a contract was executed in 1920 by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle giving the Stoll Film Co., Ltd., the right to produce 46 of his short stories as a motion picture serial.

Powers Says Production Abroad Impracticable

Believes California Will Remain Producing Center

THE production of pictures in Europe by American producers is classified by P. A. Powers, managing director of the Film Booking Offices of America, as impracticable, if a high standard is to be maintained. California, believes Mr. Powers, will continue as the producing center of the world. Not only is foreign production impracticable, but is unnecessary for proper distribution abroad. The European producer will be unable to survive in face of the terrific competition of the American distributor, whose invasion of Europe is complete. These are the main conclusions drawn by Mr. Powers after a study of conditions abroad.

"So much has been said and written in regard to conditions in Europe," said Mr. Powers, who returned recently from a six weeks' foreign visit, "that I feel hesitant about stating my impressions for fear of repeating any of the articles which have already appeared.

"My short visit to Europe has convinced me of something which I had always considered possible. I refer to the results obtained by the various American producers who have gone to Europe in the hope of making pictures there cheaper than in the United States and who have discovered that economical production in Europe is impossible, if one wishes to maintain a standard equal to American productions.

"The ventures of American producers in European production have shown nothing but failure. They have gone there with the idea that it was necessary to make pictures abroad in order to supply the American market with productions at a price to compete with the foreign product. They soon learned that the lack of proper facilities in Europe more than offset any advantages gained by securing low salaried actors. They found that without the supply of trained motion picture artists available in the United States, it is almost impossible to work to advantage. The time spent in training the untrained European talent adds materially to the cost of productions made in Europe.

American Distributors in Control

"The situation as it is developing in Europe at the present time, makes it unnecessary for the American producer to go abroad, as America has already thoroughly invaded Europe with its sales organizations. For instance, in Great Britain today, the following producing companies are represented throughout the Kingdom with distributing offices: Vitagraph, Famous Players, Fox, First National, Universal, United Artists and Goldwyn. The establishment of these sales organizations has resulted in practically dislodging the British renter and just at the present time, the British renter is short of product, due to the elimination of the above companies' productions from the open market. Ready sale can be had on some basis for American productions not represented in the above list of producers.

"As all the product of these companies has been withdrawn from the open market and is not available to the British distributor, he will be unable to survive in the face of the competition from the American distributor, unless he can secure a steady supply of quality pictures. The result is bound to be that the American producer controlling the distribution of films in Europe will also control the production of European pictures or the sale of them to the European exhibitor. This matter evidently has not been taken as seriously by the European distributor as it should be, and I believe it is now too late for him to compete or to offset the result of the American invasion in Europe.

Talent Follows the Money

"As to Europe having any superior talent not available to America, we must bear in mind that wherever money is, talent is bound to go. This is apparent from the fact that the outstanding director of Europe and the artists considered as the best of the Continent are now operating in our moving picture colony in Hollywood. In other words, Europe cannot compete with America in inducement offered to the artist, and if anything is developed in the way of unique or exceptional ability, it is available to the American producer for a price, as it is only the American producer who can afford to pay.

"At the present time, competition in the motion picture business is world wide, with all the advantages on the side of the American producer. This is due to the fact that America alone has the dollars, and the dollar today is more mighty than it has ever been in the history of our country. While no doubt there is a strong desire on the part of some producers in Great Britain and other European countries to make pictures of quality that will be acceptable to America, the competition with which they have to contend is of such proportions that it will require an enormous outlay of money to continue to operate and build up quality pictures. And they would be obliged to market them at a loss until their quality is established. By that time, they will find that the European market will be controlled by American selling organizations, who will then control the foreign market. Consequently, there will be no means of distributing except through the avenue of an American agency.

"I find a great change taking place in Great Britain in the booking of pictures to exhibitors. Heretofore, pictures were booked a year to eighteen months in advance of showing. At the present time some of our pictures are released in Great Britain almost simultaneously with America under the classification of "special features." Some pictures released in this manner have heretofore gone by unnoticed, but now public attention is focused on them by special exploitation, similar to the methods used in this country. This will cause a large number of British distributors heavy losses due to the accumulations of bookings made from a year to eighteen months in advance, which bookings will be cancelled by the exhibitor to take advantage of the public exploitation given to the "special features."

California Always Producing Center

The writer has come to the conclusion that motion pictures will continue to be made in Los Angeles, or the greater proportion of them made there for some time. This is not because of any special advantages of climate or light conditions obtainable in California, but due to the many years accumulations of picture making material and facilities which tend for economical production and quality.

"The only disadvantage apparent at the present time in the location of the picture making industry in Los Angeles is the lack of artists to draw from. No artist will take the chance of a trip to California in the hope of securing employment. At the present time, nearly all the actors of any importance in Los Angeles are under contract which guarantees them a certain amount of money weekly. If their contract expires and none other is available they return to New York, thus reducing the number of people available at the Coast for picture work, the result is that the public is obliged to take the same faces and personalities in all of their pictures, as new material is not to be secured in Los Angeles. This has a certain reaction on the public's mind and at the present writing productions featuring a 'star' are on the wan, and producers are now casting their pictures, or at least endeavoring to do so, where contracts with the stars do not exist, with what they are terming 'all star cast.' This naturally is to the advantage of the production as the story does not have to be sacrificed to conform with the whims and wishes of the featured player. Story material heretofore rejected is made available."

T. O. C. C. Gives Elaborate Annual Party

Prominent Motion Picture People Dance and Dine Until Daybreak

By "JIM" MILLIGAN

We won't get home until morning;
We won't get home until morning, etc.

In the good old days that preceded the B. P. (Before Prohibition) period the foregoing would have been sung with the pomp and ceremony customary at that happy time. But, while the tune was the same, the incentive was different, for the verse, on Sunday morn, December 3, constituted a statement of fact, for it wasn't until morning that the 2,000 film folks who attended the third annual ball and supper of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, at the Hotel Astor, Saturday night, December 2, returned to their usual places of abode.

Everybody who was anybody in the motion picture business in the East —and some from the West Coast— were on hand. Others who were somebody and were unable to attend were there in spirit. Others carried the spirits with them. But at that a good time was had by one and all. They danced and pranced, they ate and they —well, why serve as a helpmate of the Volstead army.

But it was a gran' and glorious affair with the exhibitors and their wives and their sweethearts and daughters and sisters all there in their more than usual Sunday attire. There were women with low cut dresses and men with long coats. They came there for just one purpose, namely, to have a good time—and they had it. The one regret was that the affair, which was the most brilliant and successful ever held under the auspices of the popular T. O. C. C., was not staged somewhere in the Arctic regions where the nights are longer, for it all ended too soon.

The theatre owners say that 1921-22 was a "tough year." Judging from the splendor of the occasion and the gowns worn there was nothing to bear out that statement, but who cared about business. It was sociability that brought everybody together, although a five-minute intermission was declared by His Right Honorable Master of Ceremonies, Harry Reichenbach in "order that exhibitors may call up their theatres and ascertain the gross takings for the evening." Ah, but then exhibitors are exhibitors and business is business.

There were many gala dinner parties that preceded the affair itself, for it was not until very late that it actually got under way. And once it was under way it continued as no other film affair ever went along, much to the pleasure of everybody. Exhibitors rubbed elbows with distributors, exchangemen and producers and producers shook hands with actors and actresses and trade press writers looked on. Nobody stayed at home. They were all out.

J. D. Williams got back from California just in time to attend. His reception was a royal affair, and while his future plans were hidden with a cloak of mystery, the "boys" winked and that was that. But the other half of the Williams domestic corporation, the charming Mrs. Williams, was there and proved to be one of the most popular ladies in attendance.

Why Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, doesn't star his own beautiful daughter, Rosabelle, in pictures is more than everybody who had the good fortune to meet her can understand, for she was one of the belles of the evening.

Nathan Burkan, who spends his time delving in law books for movie and stage folks, forgot judges, courts, etc., long enough to play with the exhibitors. And maybe Nat doesn't know a thing or two about the A. B. C. We should hope to tell he does.

Lewis J. Selznick likened the affair to the party he gave following the premier showing of "One Week of Love" at the Ritz-Carlton last month. L. J., besides turning out pictures, shook a nifty hoof on Mrs. Astor's slippery floor.

Edward Earl, president of Nicholas Power Company, was among the terpsichorean luminaries seen frequently on the floor.

Goldwyn was well represented. Jimmy Grainger and Eddie Bonns, stand up.

There were scores of out-of-town exhibitors on hand—and all had to admit that when T. O. C. C. starts something it usually finishes that "something" in grand style.

This job of writing what happened at the T. O. C. C. had been assigned to our own pal, Roger Ferri, but the latter planted himself in Montreal and refused to move. For all of which there is a perfectly good reason. And Roger and his wicked hoofs were missed by more than one.

Philadelphia film folk were quite in evidence and were the guests of Moving Picture World. Those on hand were John S. Evans and Mrs. Evans, David Barrist, who when he isn't managing his theatre is getting out a regional journal; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Herbst, Mrs. Gladys Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hyman, Dr. Walter Stumpfig, Lou Berman, Mrs. Sarah Farley and Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Neufeld.

Bobby North, of Apollo Exchange and the popular distributing firm of L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, was there. The affair reminded Bobby of some of the blow-offs he attended in his stage days. And remember, Bobby was on the stage since he was 12 years old.

Congratulations to two newly-weds whose wives were introduced to the industry for the first time in New York. They are Jack Meador, the popular publicity director of Metro, and Oscar Neufeld, who with Tony Luchese, operates the De Luxe Film Exchange in Philadelphia. Both gentlemen wore smiles all evening.

If there was anybody absent from Arrow Film Company we failed to remember who it might have been. Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, head of that firm, came back to New York from a trip about the country just in time to attend the ball. Also on hand were W. Ray Johnston, J. Charles Davis, 2nd, and Dick Weil.

Where did Felix Feist learn all those fancy steps. For a golfer, Felix makes a splendid dancer.

Well, it certainly looked like old times to see Charles O. Bauman on the dance floor. And, by the way, who knows but what we may hear something very interesting from Charley shortly.

Adolph Zukor and Marcus Loew both were absent, but they sent their regrets. Both, together with John A. Kent and the other F. P. L. officials, are on the coast attending the annual Paramount convention.

And, of course, there were no few rumors concerning deals, amalgamations, absorptions, etc., etc., floating about all evening and morning.

Among the stars present and introduced by Mr. Reichenbach were Norma Talmadge, Wesley Barry, Edith Roberts, Tom Meighan, Buster Keaton and Leatrice Joy. There were others but we have forgotten.

The program of the event was a work of art and those responsible for it are deserving of every credit. It was well filled with advertising.

Perhaps the most pretentious of the gaily decorated boxes was that occupied by Warner Brothers. Harry Warner was at his best Saturday night and voted the T. O. C. C. a "grand organization." And who wouldn't have smiled like Harry did all night, for only a few hours previously he had tied-up some wonderful 1923 product.

Vincent Lopez and his jazz hounds were on the job and everybody knew it, for there were very few, if any, wall flowers. This contingent made sitting out an impossible task.

There were favors galore. It was around midnight when everybody was ushered into one of the dining rooms where supper was served. And then the dancing started all over again. Fancy paper hats and a racket producing device were distributed among those on hand.

Rodgers Began Exhibiting With New Orleans Store Room Show

Poplar Bluff, Mo.
Editor, Regional News and Gossip:

Replying to yours of November 2, wherein you ask for a short history of my life and of the early days of film exhibition, I will give you a short history of my personal experience as an exhibitor and operator, as I know I am one of the very first to exhibit film in a complete exhibition to the public.

I was born near Mattoon, Illinois, on April 3, 1875, and long before I was of age, I engaged in the show business. My first effort was when the phonograph first began to be popular. I bought an Edison machine and traveled all over the Middle West, South and Southwest, doing exhibition work with it in the school, churches and halls. I made good money and enjoyed it.

Then X-rays came along and I bought one of the first outfits put on the market and did exhibition work with it, did lectures and traveled as Professor I. W. Rodgers, the eminent electrician and X-ray expert. I told the public many things about X-rays that were only guessed at, at that time, and burned one of my fingers severely before it was known that there was such a thing possible as an X-ray burn. I know positively that it is one of the first X-ray burns in the world, and to this day it gives me a great deal of trouble and am told by physicians that it may at some time cause my death. But this is diverting from the subject.

My first experience was in 1896 in New Orleans, La., on Canal street, where I ran a motion picture show in a store room for a month or more at 10 cent admission to all. I could not rent film then, but had to buy each subject straight out. The pictures then were only 50 feet in length and the two ends were cemented together, making a continuous loop or belt (this was before they began to run long pictures and run the film in a bag or barrel in front of the machine). The film was passed through the mechanism of the machine, then up over the lamphouse to a row of spools covered with felt and then up and down on the spool racks and down under the bottom of the machine. When we turned the crank the entire film moved like a saw mill belt.

It only required about one minute to run the film through, which was an entire subject, such as the New York express, street scenes and policeman doing stunts. You can hardly imagine what a picture would look like now that was only fifty feet long. I usually ran the picture through the machine about three times before putting on a new subject. There was no beginning to it or stop, as it started just wherever I happened to get it in the machine, and would repeat itself indefinitely if I continued to turn the crank.

A 10 cent show consisted of three of these subjects, each run through the machine about three times, which would make about nine minutes of actual show, but they had to stay there twenty-five minutes to see the nine minute show, for it required five minutes each time to take the film off all of those spools and put on another subject.

From New Orleans I went to Chattanooga, Tenn., and could not get a place to show down town and was compelled to arrange for a showing at the Coliseum, where I showed for three days, or rather nights, as my curtain was put up out in the open and the patrons sat back in the shed. (Say, boy, that was some show days.) I arranged with the street car people and got a band and put banners all over a street car, and maybe you don't think I ballyhooed that burg to a finish. This was the first time a motion picture show was ever seen in Chattanooga, Tenn.

From there I went all over the South to all the towns that had an electric light plant. I had $4,000 worth of pictures and that was enough to give five shows of one and a half hours each, three minute show and five minute wait; therefore, I made split week stands in the opera house, churches, schools or wherever I could get in, at times showing in the chapel of a college. (Say, boy, those were some show days.) I gave three night performances and two matinees when I could darken the house. The first time Joplin, Mo., ever saw a motion picture, I showed there in a Methodist church for two nights.

After I had shown to all the light towns I could get into, I went to St. Louis, Mo., and got in out at Forest Park Highlands, where I showed until all of St. Louis knew my pictures. Then I put my screen up in the open, where there was something like four or five hundred tables of four capacity each, and gave a free show. My contention to the man who ran the park was, that the people would set around the tables and drink beer and watch my pictures over and over again, and I secured advertising from the merchants in St. Louis which I threw on the screen, which made it remunerative to me. These advertisements were thrown on the screen between each picture.

Well, I was right. They hung around those tables so strong that the scenic railway man, who, by the way, made all of the electricity that was used in the park, cut my wires and refused me light as he said I was ruining his business, as the public sat around and drank beer and looked at my free show in preference to paying to ride on his scenic railway. It was then seven miles from there to the nearest point in St. Louis where I could get current, that put me out of business, as I only had a verbal contract with him for current, so I had to quit.

I then went down in South St. Louis and played for one week in a beer garden that was using stock, but I did not like that and again went south and secured a gas outfit and showed in a lot of fair-sized towns that had no lights in them. After showing the dark towns I had to quit, as it was not profitable to show the same pictures again and I could not afford to buy new film, and it was eleven years after that before they started to rent film and pass it from one theatre to another. In the meantime I had gone into other lines of endeavor and sold my entire outfit to a barn storm troupe for $225, all they had.

I think I am the first man who ever tried to get exhibitors to pass film from one town to another. I told them it would be just the same as rent, that we would buy the films and prorate the cost, but they all laughed at me and said the pictures were only a passing fancy and that we would not hear of them in three years. I made the assertion that the pictures would go on until they got big and that some day they would be traveling around with them with a band like Barnum's circus and they all gave me the merry ha! ha! told me I was a visionary kid, that I had been lucky, made a lot of money and had no sense.

But say, boys, wasn't I right? I had more sense than they had and had I only gone East and got into the producing end of it, I might have been one of the big boys now, for I had the proper vision of the future of this, the most wonderful of all businesses.

After I had disposed of my machine and films, I went into another line of endeavor, but still watched the progress of film, and it was eleven years from that time until there were any film exchanges and film was passed from one town to another on a rental basis to any considerable extent. In the meantime I had been unfortunate and went broke, had to start out again in a very modest way, but went back into the show business just as soon as I could and today I own several shows all doing fairly good, have a fair

Exhibitors Fight Prosecutions

Exhibitors throughout the entire country will watch with interest several cases listed for early appearance in the Federal Court at Utica, N. Y., in which exhibitors are made defendants in actions brought by well-known music publishing houses, which charge that the exhibitors have been guilty of playing copyrighted music, accompanying pictures, without permission.

Among the defendants are: W. H. Linton, proprietor of the Hippodrome Theatre in Utica and treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State; Fred Duffy, of Hibernian Hall, and George Hauf, of the Highland Theatre, both residents of Utica.

"They send us the music," said Mr. Linton, "and then snoop around to see if we are playing it."

Harry Hall, of Troy, one of the old timers, also is included in the list of defendants. It is claimed that Mr. Hall used copyrighted music, without permission, on September 23, at one of his houses. The plaintiffs in the action are: Jerome H. Remick and Company; Shapiro, Bernstein and Company, Inc.; and M. Witmark and Sons.

portion of this world's goods, am comfortable and happy.

I have for a wife, one of the most wonderful little women that it was ever a man's good fortune to have. She buys and books for all of my theatres and I will leave it to the St. Louis exchanges to tell you that she is as shrewd a buyer as comes to their offices. I have one son in his sixteenth year, now at Military Academy, whom I intend to make a first-class exhibitor out of, for I think the motion picture business the greatest of all businesses. It has filled the long felt need of clean, wholesome amusement within the reach of all, and it has inspired more people to try for the better things of life, than any other agency, the ministry included. The trend of all pictures today is to show that right, truth and fair dealings always triumph over evil and wrong doing.

Yours very truly,
I. W. RODGERS.

Daddies of Them All

Here is the way the oldest exhibitors whose biographies we have been publishing line up now:

John P. Dibble, of Branford, Conn.; John C. Green, of Guelph, Canada; each 26 years in the business.

Thomas M. Thatcher, Somerset, Ky., 22 years.

I. W. Rodgers, Poplar Bluff, Mo., started in 1896; term, indefinite.

John Karzin, St. Louis; Jim Jackson, Atlanta; James Howard, Wilmington, Del., each 17 years.

William A. Butler, Philadelphia; Leroy V. Johnson, Seattle; Charles Levenberg, Providence, R. I.; W. F. Code, Seattle; Frank W. Buhler, Philadelphia, each 16 years.

We also published the history of William Finley, of Albany, N. Y., who used to show the Dewey Parade pictures, but we don't know whether or not he has been a consistent exhibitor since those early days. Furthermore, we are not sure it is fair to rank Mr. Thatcher below the first two. Mr. Thatcher exhibited a one-reel picture in 1896, the first shown in Southeastern Kentucky, but he didn't say if he exhibited pictures in the four years elapsing between that time and the time when he took over the Gem Theatre in Somerset, whereas the first two mentioned started in 1896 and have kept right at it up to the present day.

Also, to add to our perplexity, the original announcement said "in the United States." That would leave Mr. Green out of the running, but there isn't any reason why he shouldn't be acclaimed Canada's Daddy, unless some resident of the Dominion pops up with a better claim.

Well, here's how they stand now. And the search is nearing an end. It looks as though there won't be any nominations with better claims than those of Mr. Dibble and Mr. Thatcher and Mr. Rodgers.—SUMNER SMITH.

Chicago Exhibitors Postpone Action in Operator Dispute

The first meeting of Theatre Owners to discuss the operators' wage scale for 1923 was held the day before Thanksgiving, and the small crowd which turned out did not justify any decisive movement on the part of the exhibitors. Another meeting will be held next Friday, and concerted action will be taken to reduce the wages of the operators.

The movement to repeal the daylight savings ordinance has been deferred until after the adjustment of the operators' wage scale. The action will be sponsored by the theatres of Chicago, both legitimate and motion picture, with the co-operation of other trades who desire the repeal of the ordinance.

An entire audience of deaf and dumb people saw "The Man Who Played God" at the Randolph last week. Manager McCurdy sent out invitations to all the deaf and dumb people of the city asking them to be his guests at the Thursday evening show, and a practically unanimous response was made.

George Braddock, manager of the Argmore Theatre, has had another brilliant idea on how to keep the name of his house before the folks in his neighborhood. His programs are well selected—good pictures played not long after their downtown runs—and put on in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired. However, his greatest worry has been the fact that his printed programs, giving the coming attractions for the week, have been littering the gutters of the vicinity of the theatre. Accordingly he substituted for the bulky 6 by 8 program, on flimsy paper, a neat little four-page cardboard affair, just the size of a visiting card. "It is vest pocket size," says Manager Braddock, "and it is really carried in a pocket or a handbag, for not a single one finds its way to the sidewalk."

It is reported that the Ascher Theatre at Peoria, Ill., will be leased to Shubert interests, who expect to use the house for their unit vaudeville and pictures.

There is a movement on foot here to form a co-operative booking agency among some of the outlying theatres, so they will be in a position to secure the new films at a better price than they can individually. It is understood that 35 owners representing 53 theatres have signed up for the company.

The Palais Royale Company has been formed by E. E. Adams, I. E. Erickson and Barnet Hodea as a place of amusement, with a capital of $5,000.

The Elite Theatre at Waukegan has been sold by Carl Mueller to Edward Trinz, formerly manager of the Covent Garden Theatre, of the Lubliner and Trinz circuit. The house will be remodeled and will be conducted as a first class picture house with good musical programs.

C. C. Jones has opened his new house at Cambria, Ill., and he will have first class programs. The new theatre seats 400.

Clyde E. Elliott has taken over the Evanston Theatre at Sherman street, near Davis, in Evanston, and will spend $25,000 in improvements that will make it one of the leading houses along the north shore.

The Palais Amusement Company has been formed by Moe A. Cushman, W. J. Parker and Herman Emerson to acquire and conduct amusement enterprises, with offices at 4750 Sheridan road. The capital is listed at $300,000.

A fire under the stage at the Columbia Theatre at 11 North Clark street was put out without the audience realizing the danger of panic until they reached the street and saw the fire apparatus.

Ohio

E. C. Stueve, pioneer exhibitor of Canton, Ohio, lost his wife by death the middle of November. She had been in ill health for some time.

"In the Name of the Law" broke a record in Fremont, Ohio, recently, by playing an entire week in a three-day town. A tie-up with the police helped put it over at the Jewel Theatre, managed by George Geyer.

Ohio censors have held up for three weeks the new Gloria Swanson picture, "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew." It is likely that they will release it soon, however, with a number of cuts.

A tremendous advertising and publicity campaign was put on for the opening in Cleveland of Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at the Stillman Theatre, November 26.

Knocks and Boosts and an Idea

"You can't beat Moving Picture World's Regional News and Gossip department for downright, genuine interest," says Edward H. Crawford, manager of the Lincoln Theatre, Troy, N. Y. According to him, nine out of ten Troy exhibitors turn first to this feature of the World.

Thanks, Mr. Crawford, say we. And we want to add that any exhibitor who obeys that impulse and sends us a testimonial will assure us a Merry Christmas. But on the other hand, we want the knocks, too. Praise warms the heart; knocks set the thinking apparatus in operation.

This is strictly an exhibitor department. We don't think you can read it and not be impressed with that fact. But, believe me, boys, it can be made much better, of far greater value to you. How? Chiefly through the co-operation of exhibitors for the benefit of brother exhibitors.

When an exhibitor has an idea for its betterment, we want him to send it in and we promise it earnest consideration. If it is something that can be worked out, we'll use it; if there's any doubt in our mind, we'll put the idea up to all exhibitors and await their verdicts.

A real news and gossip department for exhibitors is a brand new thing. It ought to be not merely satisfactory, but a real success; it can only be through the co-operation of exhibitors. Can this co-operation be effected in some such way as this—having an exhibitor write each week for the department his views on topics of film interest? Sort of a leading editorial by an exhibitor?

We wish that exhibitors would give this question thought, judge it according to their experience in motion picture affairs. If it appeals to any as worthwhile, we will welcome word to that effect.—SUMNER SMITH.

Thanksgiving Lives Up to Its Name in Buffalo, N. Y.

Thanksgiving week was one of big business in Buffalo, N. Y. Several of the downtown houses broke attendance records. All box-office totals went by the board at the Lafayette Square where "Skin Deep" was the film feature. The Strand staged a come-back with "Rags to Riches." Loew's State packed them in all week with "While Satan Sleeps." The neighborhood houses also report overflow audiences. It was just like old times!

Al Becker, of the Becker Theatre Supply Company, is feeling better. His Buffalo equipment store is now a hive of industry. He has moved into the Film Row block. Exhibitors on their way to the exchanges once more pass the door and the cash register is smiling. The past week Al installed two Type "S" Simplex projection machines in the new Legion Theatre in Wayland, N. Y., in addition to two half-size projection optics and two Compensarcs. He also installed a Mazda equipment at the Craig Colony at Sonyea, N. Y., and two new Simplex machines in the Elmwood, Buffalo.

Revival week at the Strand, Buffalo, was a big success. Manager Eugene A. Pfeil found "The Sheik" and "The Miracle Man" the two best box-office pullers. The program was changed daily. Mr. Pfeil has had many inquiries from other exhibitors on how the week went over. It is understood that J. H. Michael, of the Regent, is about to duplicate the stunt. The Strand is now the home of Goldwyn attractions. "Sherlock Holmes" was shown the past week and "The Sin Flood" and "Remembrance" will follow.

To gain first-hand information on whether local picture theatres are obeying the fire regulation laws, Mayor Frank X. Schwab make a personal tour of the houses, dropping in unannounced and unexpected. He expressed himself as well pleased with the conditions he found and had no complaint to make. "Sunday is a big night in these places, but they all seem to be sticking religiously to the law," he said.

Buffalo courts are doing much to make the "movies" safe for women. A negro theological student was sent over the road for 90 days one day last week for annoying feminine patrons in a Main street theatre. A couple sentences like this and these fresh folks may be eliminated.

William E. Whiston has resigned as assistant manager of the New Olympic Theatre, Buffalo, to accept the management of a theatre in Pittsburgh. Employes of the Olympic gave a farewell party for Bill before he left town and presented him with a gold mounted Elk tooth.

Chester Raduszsk, 15 years old, 162 Center avenue, North Tonawanda, was arrested in the Avondale Theatre, North Tonawanda, last week for smearing gum on the coats of girls. These "playful" boys sometimes get caught!

Harry D. Crosby, the Batavia, N. Y., actor, is associated with Edward Houghton, owner of the little Hippodrome and Keith's Theatre in Buffalo and also a former Batavia theatrical man, in the lease from William F. Haitz, of the Dellinger Theatre, Batavia, two days a week. Mr. Crosby will act as local manager and Mr. Houghton will arrange the bookings. "The Storm" was the opening attraction.

Adam Federlein, noted Buffalo violin virtuoso, is now concertmeister of the Strand orchestra, which has been augmented for the season of Goldwyn pictures. Prof. Herbert Alvin Houze, one of the leading organists of the country, is presiding at the console of the big organ.

The courts have again ruled against the local Loew interests in the matter of the lobby entrance suit, it being held that the Golde clothes shop was illegally ousted from its location to make way for a Main street entrance to the big Buffalo house. It is expected that some agreement will be reached and that the lobby will not have to be torn out.

Manager Arthur L. Skinner, of the Victoria, Buffalo, has added musical acts to his picture program. He has found the stunt helps at the box office. The Menning Sisters, violin and harp, and "D'Amico, piano accordeonist," both were enthusiastically received last week.

Al Beckerick, manager of the Loew's State, Buffalo, pulled a great publicity stunt the past week when he linked up with the Express in staging The Express Follies as an added attraction at the State. All local talent was in the act. The Express gave the stunt an avalanche of publicity. The act attracted overflow business.

Mike Woods, of Peterson & Woods, announces that the new Strand Theatre in Jamestown, N. Y., will open early in the new year. The Strand will be one of the finest picture houses in Western New York. It will feature a big orchestra and a famous organist.

Harold B. Franklin, former managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, stopped off in the Queen City of the Lakes last week-end on his way home from the coast Paramount conference and visited with several old Buffalo friends. Of course he dropped in to see Vincent McFaul and Mike Shea at the Hippodrome.

Elmer C. Winegar, new manager of the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, is giving his patrons some great bills and attracting a huge amount of automobile business. Elmer formerly managed the Central Park and Premier. He expects to install a big orchestra in the Elmwood the first of the year.

Berinstein, Albany Showman, Will Build in Little Falls

The most important announcement this week in local film circles was to the effect that William Berinstein, owner of the Colonial and the Hudson Theatres in Albany, N. Y., as well as two houses in Elmira, had purchased a plot of ground on the main street in Little Falls, and would erect a modern picture theatre in that place.

For several weeks past, Mr. Berinstein, generally accompanied by George Roberts, his Albany manager, has been scouring the country looking for another theatre to add to his chain. Only a short time ago, Mr. Berinstein visited several of the eastern states, but failed to find the house he wanted at the right price. After looking over the situation in Little Falls, which is one of the most enterprising manufacturing towns in the Mohawk Valley, Mr. Berinstein decided to erect a house there which would be a marvel in its appointments.

It is understood that the work will get under way at once, and that the house will be ready for occupancy within a few months. Mr. Berinstein moved from Albany to New York several months ago, and is now making his headquarters in the metropolis, booking his pictures as well as the vaudeville he plays in Elmira.

There was a big special matinee at the Mark Strand, in Albany, on Saturday, December 2, for the children of the Capital City.

The annual meeting of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association will be held the fore part of December, according to present plans.

The Majestic, which runs pictures up to a few months ago, is now running a program of burlesque, a feature and a comedy, running from 12 noon until 11 o'clock at night, with prices ranging from 28 to 55 cents. According to Ollie Stacey, manager, the program is a money-making one.

Oscar Perrin, managing the Leland in Albany, is making a special play these days in advertising his musical programs with Stephen E. Boisclair at the organ. Mr. Boisclair was formerly connected with the Dawes at Bridgeport, Conn. Experts were in town this week readjusting the organ, which has been rather loud for the size of the house.

William Gauthier, former proprietor of the theatre bearing his name in Gouverneur, N. Y., which was destroyed by fire last summer, is now holding down the job of business manager of "The Screen and Studio," a weekly publication in Miami, Florida.

Dr. J. Victor Wilson, of Watertown, manager for the Robbins unit in that city and the author of a playlet entitled "A Lord for a Day," was the recipient of many compliments following its presentation on November 22 and 23 at the Olympic in Watertown.

SPIRITED LOBBY TABLEAU ON "ZENDA"

A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace, Memphis, used a spirited cut-out and pasted other material in a semingly real book as his advance work on "The Prisoner of Zenda." The book idea is unusual.

Lew Fischer, of Ticonderoga, a well known exhibitor, while shopping in Albany this week, declared that the small towns were enjoying much prosperity at the present time, and that practically every picture house in such places was making money.

The International News Weekly has just been booked by Edwin O. Weinberg, manager of the State, in Schenectady, which will open on December 9.

Harold Filkins has purchased his partner's interest in the Rialto at Ticonderoga, a house that was formerly operated by Filkins and Brown.

It is now expected that the new theatre in Hudson Falls, erected by the Cohoes Amusement Company, will open about December 15.

In the fight for patronage going on in Watertown, N. Y., between Charles Sesonske, of the Avon, and Nate Robbins, of the Olympic, it has just been announced that four acts of vaudeville, combined with a big feature picture, will be the policy at the Olympic after January 1. This policy is practical identical with that of the Avon.

From now until after the holidays, split weeks will feature at the Leland in Albany. Up to the present time, with a few exceptions, straight week runs have been the rule.

There is a well founded rumor in Albany that the Select Exchange will close within a few days, although Emil Wilkinson will probably be retained. It is understood here that the company will close nine of its offices and that some other concern will handle the distribution. In connection with the rumor, it is said that Goldwin will in all probability take over the quarters now occupied by Select, for its exchange here.

William Sample, manager of the Village Theatre in Schaghticoke, has just booked "Human Hearts" and "The Storm," although playing but one day a week. While in town this week, Mr. Sample declared that his box office receipts have convinced him that it was good business to book big pictures even in the smaller places.

Elmer Crowninshield, who runs the Bijou in Troy and the Hudson in Watervliet, is ill from a threatened attack of pneumonia.

The biggest deal in picture circles this week, at least so far as bookings were concerned, took place Wednesday afternoon when Nate Robbins booked "Doctor Jack" for an early showing at the Avon in Utica, the Olympic in Watertown, and the Robbins-Eckel in Syracuse. It is said that Mr. Robbins, having the courage of his convictions, for this picture paid the highest rental in the history of Syracuse.

"The Kentucky Derby" has been booked by the Leland for a run in January. This picture went across big last week at the Olympic, in Buffalo, when the girl ushers were dressed as jockies, each carrying a short whip.

Having booked a number of big pictures, including "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the Strand in Schenectady is taking steps to fortify itself against any inroads on the opening of The State, in the near future. "A Doll's House," however, failed to pull this week and was taken off Tuesday.

Generally speaking, business at Albany picture theatres has been good this week with banner crowds at all houses on Thanksgiving Day. Reports from some of the places along the Canadian border, however, are to the effect that the cold weather has made inroads upon the crowds. Many of these houses coin their money during the summer tourist season.

Gaspar Battaglia, of the Palace in Troy, is in New York this week to meet a nephew from Italy, who, he expects, will develop into a first class exhibitor.

The neighboring village of Pittsfield, Mass., one of the greatest places in this section for welfare work, has some fifteen or twenty schools, churches and Y. M. C. A.'s equipped with projection machines. These places are giving shows very frequently, and as a result, the local Pathe exchange has built up a big business.

The Rialto Theatre in Glens Falls, in conjunction with the Glens Falls Times, is now running a contest in connection with the presentation of "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Several cash prizes will be awarded Glens Falls girls who most closely resemble Marion Davies.

Samuel Goldstein, who with his brother runs a chain of eleven houses in New York and Massachusetts, was in Albany this week, visiting some of the film exchanges. It is rumored that Mr. Goldstein is planning to acquire a house in Pittsfield.

Ben Apple, of the Griswold in Troy, has booked "Grandma's Boy" for a straight week's run beginning December 17. This feature was shown at Proctor's Troy theatre for a week, a short time ago, but after witnessing what Fred Elliott did in booking the feature at the Clinton Square almost immediately after a straight week at Proctor's in Albany, Mr. Apple decided that he would establish a precedent in Troy in running the picture at a first-run theatre in spite of a previous showing.

As an evidence of the prosperity which characterizes the Albany territory at the present time, two houses, long closed, one in Rotterdam and the other in Mohawk, have just opened with pictures.

The Troy, which will open some time in February, announces that it has booked the Pathe News Weekly.

The Happy Hour and the Pearl in Schenectady, run by Morris Silverman, played Harry Carey in "Man to Man" on Thanksgiving Day, to the biggest crowds of the fall. At the conclusion of the day, Mr. Silverman remarked that nothing short of a blizzard could have kept them away.

The first prologue attempted in some time in Schenectady, was presented this week at the Albany in connection with "East is West," Several girls were featured as Japanese Geisha girls.

Fred Elliott, of the Clinton Square, added considerably to his musical program this week by giving a vocal solo, as well as a banjo solo along with the week's run of "What's Wrong With the Women."

Schine Adds Another

The Schine Theatrical Enterprises, which has its principal office in Gloversville, N. Y., now owns fourteen picture theatres, having taken over the new Oneonta, one of the finest playhouses in the central part of the state, and located in Oneonta. The house has been owned and managed by O. S. Hathaway. It was remodeled and enlarged last year at a very heavy expense.

Wideawake Ben Apple of Troy Proves He Has Right Method

"No house will ever run itself," remarked Ben Apple, owner and manager of the American, Troy, N. Y., the other night, as he stood at the front of the house welcoming patrons, at the same time with one eye on the ushers and the house generally.

"The man on the job is the man who gets there all the while," continued Mr. Apple.

And judging from the crowds that were jammed in front of the house, waiting for a chance to see "Broadway Rose," Mr. Apple comes pretty near being right. Next week, Mr. Apple has booked "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew."

The Alpine opened again Friday, at 10 cents admission, and appears to be doing well.

Workmen are now putting up the ceiling at the New Rose, and judging from appearances the house will open some time in January.

Manager Crawford, of the Lincoln, found business so good with "Till We Meet Again," booked first for four days, that he held it over for the entire week and established a box office record for Thanksgiving Day. Along with the picture, Mr. Crawford provided a musical novelty by the orchestra, probably the best musical organization in the Collar City.

Harry Symansky, son of the owner of the Lincoln, attended the Colgate-Syracuse football game. He is a graduate of Syracuse University.

Troy exhibitors were talking this week along organization lines, and it is now expected that an association will be formed within the next few weeks. All of the exhibitors appear to be in favor of such a move.

The Lincoln scored a hit this week with its employes, when flowers and candy were sent to the Samaritan Hospital, where one of the ushers, Miss Anne Wisper, is recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

A Vitagraph Release

THE GIRLS ARE USHERS AND NOT A DISPLAY

Eugene O'Keefe, of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Seattle, just brought them out to dress his pretty lobby display on "My Wild Irish Rose." The front is merely a straight painting, with one cut-out.

Sprague, Lyric, Goodland; District 40, chairman, C. M. Weston, Star, Phillipsburg; R. E. Lawrence, Smith Center Theatre, Smith Centre.

A. K. Boussad, owner of the World-in-Motion Theatre, a downtown house in Kansas City, was held up recently as he was putting his car in his garage and robbed of about $60 in cash and a diamond valued at $200.

The executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas have been moved from the first floor of the building at 109 West Eighteenth street, to the second floor of the same building.

C. A. Rehm, who owns the Majestic Theatre at Baxter Springs, Kas., dropped into town the other day.

A. H. McLaughlin, recently manager of the Criterion Theatre of Oklahoma City, Okla., was in Kansas City recently and was greeting his old friends among the exchange colony. Mr. McLaughlin was formerly a manager of the Select office here.

H. C. Linesberry opened the Yale Theatre at Corder, Mo., Thanksgiving Day.

The Newman Theatre presented a miniature musical revue in conjunction with the presentation of "Clarence" last week. The week was designated as "Syncopation Week" and a great number of special features were added.

Al H. Schlazer is the new manager of the picture theatre at Concordia, Mo. The house was recently taken over by the American Legion.

John Tackett, of the Tackett Theatre at Coffeyville, Kas., was shopping for film last week. He remained in town several days.

The Linwood Theatre, a suburban theatre of Kansas City, was formally opened to the public Thanksgiving Day. Capitol Enterprises purchased the theatre in the early summer and closed the house for complete remodeling. "Human Hearts" was the feature at the initial performance. The new $20,000 organ is a feature. Ted Meyn is the organist.

Frank L. Newman, who owns the Newman, Royal and Twelfth Street theatres in Kansas City, and a string of other theatres in different towns, attended the convention of the Paramount distributing organization held at Los Angeles.

Ben Levy of the Hippodrome Theatre, Joplin, Mo., made a trip to Kansas City last week.

Clair M. Patee, of the Patee Theatre, Lawrence, Kansas, visited the film exchanges this week. The Patee Theatre has the distinction of being the first picture theatre in the West. Mr. Patee is keeping it somewhat as it was at first, in order that people may have an idea of the early theatres. Won't he tell us something about it? That would interest the old-timers.

Robbins Expands

Plans for a great expansion of the theatrical interests controlled by the Robbins Amusement Company, of Utica, N. Y., were announced this week, following the incorporation of a company through the secretary of state's office at Albany, with a capitalization of $3,000,000. Tentative plans reveal that the expansion will affect Utica, Syracuse, Watertown, and other places.

Architects have already been engaged to draw plans for several new theatres which the company will shortly erect. Just where these houses will be built was not announced by Mr. Robbins.

W. H. Weber of the Echo Theatre, Great Bend, Kas., has purchased the Lakin Theatre in Great Bend. He will take charge of the Lakin December 11.

Ollie Savin's Death Robs Southeast of Good Showman

Ollie A. Savin, one of the best-known theatre men of the Carolinas, for several years past connected with different Southern Enterprises houses and more recently manager of the Princess and Majestic, Ashville, died on November 18 at his home in Asheville. J. C. Duncan, formerly manager of the Strand there, will take over the other two houses, being succeeded at the Strand by Frank Strozier, formerly assistant manager of the Howard, Atlanta.

A. N. Cooper, with the closing of pictures at the Alhambra, Charlotte, leaves the Southern Enterprises organization and his successor has not been named.

With the closing of the Universal Theatre, the Strand, Southern Enterprises' second Charlotte house, the Alhambra, reverted to tabloid musical comedy on December 4. Manager E. F. Dardine conducted the affairs of the Strand in addition to his duties as Universal exchange manager.

Again does Dardine, champion theatre manager, exchange handler and publicist break into this club for prevention of white space. He entertained Ed Pearce, owner of the Amuzu, Winston-Salem, over the last week-end. Pearce wouldn't fall for a game of golf, so Dardine took him out to his farm where they spent a regular old fashioned week-end.

W. E. Stewart, of the Pastime Theatre, Concord, was a Charlotte visitor during the past week.

Ernest G. Stellings, for the past two years manager of the Grand, one of the Howard-Wells Wilmington theatres, has accepted a position as manager of the New Garden Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., and has already gone to his new post.

Ross Barkley, manager for several years of the Crescent, Statesville, N. C., has been appointed manager of the Garden, Bennettsville, S. C., which was recently purchased by Mr. French of Rockintham, N. C.

J. L. Goodenough opened his new Branwood Theatre at Greenville, S. C., last week. Opening attraction was Universal's "Human Hearts," which he put over with a whale of an exploitation campaign.

Don't forget that this department was founded and is conducted on the idea of service to exhibitors.

What's the Answer?

Robert E. Welsh, our editor, has received an interesting letter from "Kansas" that, we think, earns mention in this department. He writes, in part:

"Being a business man of experience before going into the show business, and having a fair line of credit, I have never been able to understand why the picture business could not be carried on the same as any other line of business. It really seems outrageous to claim that men who have thousands of dollars tied up in theatres, can't or won't pay their bills.

"Take my own case as an example. I can order any amount of goods from any supply house and the goods will not come C. O. D. or with any strings attached to them. Can also step in any bank within reasonable distance of my home town and get a personal check cashed. But have been doing business with Kansas City exchanges for twelve years and can't buy a measly one-sheet without cash or without its coming C. O. D.

"Now who is to blame for this state of affairs? Mr. Branch Manager says he gets his orders from the New York office or some other 'point' and so passes the buck, as he rightly figures we won't carry it up to them and he is fairly certain we won't get any place if we do."

What would you do about it?

Richards Improves the Rex; Other California Jottings

H. J. Richards is improving the operating room of the Rex Theatre at Niles, Cal., and has purchased a couple of Power's projection machines from Walter Preddey, San Francisco.

The Balboa Theatre, being erected in the Westwood District, San Francisco, by Sam Levin, of neighborhood house fame, will be ready for occupancy some time in December.

A $10,000 contest was recently brought to a close by Herbert L. Rothchild, chief owner of the Granada, Imperial, California and Imperial theatres, San Francisco, for the sale of books of tickets good for admission to these houses. More than 5,000 persons entered the contest and $10,000 was distributed in prizes in the form of bank accounts, the largest of these being $1,200.

Leon Schwartz, a picture magnate of Soerabaya, Java, is visiting San Francisco on a tour of the United States to inspect picture theatres and to arrange for film service. The largest theatre operated by him has a capacity of 750 white people and 500 natives. The screen is placed in the center of the house and the natives view the picture from the rear of the screen, the fact that the letters of the titles appear in reverse, making no difference to them. Music is furnished by orchestras of Russian musicians, but Mr. Schwartz plans to take an organ back with him. About 80 per cent. of the films shown in the Dutch East Indies are American, and next in popularity are those of French manufacture.

Lukan to Manage Hamrick's Theatres in the Northwest

The outstanding news of the week of November 29 was the resignation of L. O. Lukan as manager of the western division exchanges of Associated First National Pictures. Mr. Lukan held this post for one year. Prior to that he had been for three years manager of the Seattle Exchange, and has been for years one of the leading film men of the Northwest, coming from Minneapolis to Seattle thirty-two years ago.

John Hamrick, who owns a chain of Blue Mouse theatres in the Northwest, has announced that, effective December 1, Mr. Lukan, will become general manager of Blue Mouse theatres in Seattle, Portland and Tacoma. Offices of the Blue Mouse theatres are now being opened in the White-Henry-Stuart Building.

"Since taking over the management of the western division exchanges for First National," says Mr. Lukan, "I have spent but two weeks at home with my family. There is no prospect of any change along this line. I have always wanted to get into the exhibition end of the game, and was quick to take advantage of this opportunity. Mr. Hamrick and I are old friends. I leave behind me no hard feelings at First National. We are the best of friends."

The return of J. G. Von Herberg, moving picture magnate, from a three months' vacation in Europe, was heralded by interviews in all the papers, concerning the leasing by Mr. Von Herberg, for a period of years, of the 50,000 acre estate, Ischl, formerly the game preserve of Emperor Franz Josef of Austria. Mr. Von Herberg told the press he had leased the famous estate as a place to send J. & V. heads of departments and house managers, when they felt vacations coming on, subsequently admitting that, since his return, First National, of which he is a director, has requested permission to use Ischl for exterior locations for one of the series of big pictures the corporation plans to make in Europe. He at once placed the entire estate at their disposal. The question which has been agitating many since announcement of the purchase was cabled from Berlin, is answered.

The opening of the new Mack Theatre at Port Angeles on November 24 was a brilliant affair. The theatre is one of the most modern in the Northwest, and embodies elements that make it a community center. Most of Seattle's film folk went up for the event. One of the nicest tributes paid to the new house and its owner, Mack J. Davis, was the voluntary closing of his competition house, the Lincoln Theatre, by Mr. Hallberg, who attended the opening of the Mack himself.

Speaking of exploitation, Manager John Danz of the Colonial Theatre, a high class second run house in the downtown district, this week put over a three-day run of "School Days," with tieups, not often exceeded by the first run houses. The big tieup was arranged with one of the papers, conducting a "Freckles" contest. The stunt got most of the front page of the paper, and the "Freckles" matinee was a winner and cost nothing but the seats. Mr. Fox, exploitation man at the Colonial, went right after this one.

A decidedly small and unworthy attempt to embarrass the management of all the leading first run theatres in the downtown district is shown by the liberating of odor bombs during performances

John Spickett, theatre manager of Juneau, Alaska, is in Seattle picking up an orchestra to take back with him.

Manager C. S. Jensen, of Portland, was in Seattle to greet his partner, J. G. Von Herberg.

Valentino Will Appear in St. Louis Despite Courts

The wires from New York have carried the sad news that the New York Supreme Court has issued an injunction that restrains Rodolph Valentino from fulfilling his engagement with the Delmonte. The attorneys for the Famous Players Lasky Corporation have insisted, so New York advices are, that Valentino must not appear except under the management of Paramount. He was to have delivered an address on "Americanization" at each performance of the Delmonte the week of December 3.

Although the court injunction against him is said to be the most drastic ever issued, Valentino plans to appear at the Delmonte Theatre, Sunday evening, December 3 and personally explain the legal obstacles to his carrying out the contract with Cornwell. He will pay all his own expenses to St. Louis and is making the trip on advice of counsel.

The Delmonte management in large newspaper advertisements has explained the court developments to the St. Louis public, so that the cancellation will not reflect on the theatre management. The promise is made when the court proceedings are finally disposed of, an effort will be made to bring Valentino to St. Louis.

Spyros Skouras, of the St. Louis Amusement Company, has announced that the Pershing Theatre, Delmar boulevard, west of Hamilton avenue, has been leased to Douglas Fairbanks for the St. Louis presentation of "Robin Hood." It will be shown the week commencing Christmas Day. The advance sale of tickets will open on December 18. A general admission of $1 will be charged.

St. Louisians were grieved to learn of the death in New York City a few days ago of Walter Sanford, who managed the old Olympic Theatre, one of St. Louis' most famous dramatic houses, which closed its doors several seasons ago. Sanford succeeded Pat Short as manager of the Olympic and was in charge when the theatre closed for the last time.

Al Rabenick has sold the Liberty Theatre, Union, Mo., to Hersefield & Kloppenberg. The latter firm recently sold the Ozark Theatre, St. Clair, Mo., to William Casey of that city.

Arch Bamberger, manager of the Empress and Bleich theatres in Owensboro, Ky., is regarded as one of the liveliest exhibitors in the St. Louis territory. He is especially noted for his unique and extraordinary lobby displays. Many residents of Owensboro visit his shows just to see the way his lobby is dressed up. Many displays are worth the price of admission alone.

Harry Greenman, manager of the William Fox Liberty Theatre, will put on a benefit for the needy members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars the week of December 9. The program will include views of fighting on the Western Front.

H. W. Leiweke, of St. Clair, Mo., was a visitor.

Tom Reed, of Duquoin, Ill., made one of his regular calls to town.

William Goldman, former manager of the Missouri Theatre, was in town for a few days. Left for Chicago to meet Adolph Kukor and his party.

Leon De La Mothe, of the Mid-West Productions, will present "A Day in the Movies" at the Columbia Theatre the week of October 18, concluding the run on Christmas Day.

Many Pies for the Same Finger

R. D. Craver, of the Broadway, Charlotte, N. C., recently attended the annual convention of the American Association of Bottlers (which is entirely different since prohibition). Craver, besides owning and operating the Broadway, handling the executive end of the First National office in Charlotte and spending a goodly portion of time on a million dollar hunting preserve in the Carolina mountain fastnesses, owns the Midas Mineral Springs, on his extensive farm near Charlotte, and operates a dozen or more delivery trucks, supplying pure drinking water to Charlotte and surrounding suburbs.

"Omar, the Tentmaker" goes into the Capitol the week of January 7.

Sam Barrett, of Metro, and Jake Schrieber, of the Blackstone Theatre, Detroit, left on November 25 for Grayling, intent on getting their share of the deer in that part of the state. Sam promised the head to the Michigan Screen Club.

A bold daylight robbery of the Fuller Theatre at Kalamazoo was recently frustrated on the afternoon of November 28, when Lee Tilson, manager of the house, recognized one of the would-be robbers as Benjamin F. Steers, former president of the Kalamazoo Exchange Club, and refused to be held up. Police captured the robbers before they could make their escape from the foyer of the theatre. At police headquarters they gave their names as "Big Dick" Steketee, Frank Stikes, alias "Gyp, the Dud," "Coal Ben" Steers and "Long John" DeRight, all members of the Exchange Club of Kalamazoo, seeking funds for the poor kiddies' Christmas tree. They obtained their release from custody after collecting contributions from the staff at police headquarters.

Ellsworth Harmon, manager of the Strand Theatre at Lansing since last May, has assumed charge of the Franklin Theatre at Saginaw. Mr. Harmon was recently married to Miss Gladys Apgar, who has been serving in the capacity of treasurer for the Strand and Arcade theatres.

George Trendle, of the Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, was in New York last week where he conferred with Richard Rowland and the finance committee on First National affairs. Mr. Trendle was later appointed a committee of one, to act with Robert Lieber, president, on a number of big financial projects.

Canadian Exhibitor Exchange to Undergo a Reorganization

The Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., the film distributing agency established five years ago by the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Ontario, with headquarters at Toronto, is to undergo a reorganization, the board of directors to have a number of new faces. The name of Meyer Fisher has been linked up with the report that the company is to have a new general manager. Tom Scott, originally the secretary of the exhibitor association, has been manager of the Toronto branch exchange and will likely continue in that post.

The reopening of the Hippodrome at Toronto as the leading theatre of the chain of houses controlled in Canada by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, proved to be a gala event. The feature was "The Young Rajah," this being shown during the week of November 27. Official announcement was made that paid admissions for the first day's performances totalled 7,325, which was claimed as the largest single day's attendance at an exclusive picture theatre in Canada. The artistic and luxurious furnishing of the Hippodrome, as compared with its simplicity of appearance when under the control of M. Shea, aroused wide interest and comment. For the week of December 4 "The Masquerader" was the film attraction.

Manager Hazza, of the Capitol Theatre, Calgary, conducted a fencing competition for local swordsmen for a large silver cup during the week of November 27 in conjunction with the presentation of "To Have and to Hold" as the week's feature.

The Princess Theatre, Calgary, has been reopened as a municipally owned playhouse under the management of W. J. Reid. The name of the theatre has been changed to "Variety Theatre" and it has been leased from the city by D. G. Walkley under an arrangement whereby a percentage of the receipts, week by week, will go into the civic treasury. For the reopening the Variety was thoroughly renovated and redecorated. The house had been taken over by the city some time ago for nonpayment of taxes.

Frank Gilbert has sold the Manitou Theatre, Manitou, Manitoba, to John Buckham and has moved to Souris, Manitoba, where he has purchased the picture theatre from Alex McIntyre, who has retired from business.

Oral Cloakey, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, for two years, has been transferred to Hamilton, Ontario, by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation to take over the management of the Capitol Theatre in that city. The Hamilton Capitol was formerly Loew's Theatre, the latter having been taken over by N. L. Nathanson interests two months ago. H. M. Thomas, general supervisor of theatres for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, has gone to Winnipeg from Montreal to conduct the Capitol there temporarily. Mr. Thomas is the resident manager of the Montreal Capitol, and during his absence in Winnipeg the house there will be directed by S. Dunlop, assistant manager.

Announcement has been made by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., that the Regent Theatre, Toronto, formerly the parent house of the corporation's chain in Canada, will be reopened shortly as a straight picture theatre.

The exhibitors of Winnipeg, Manitoba, have decided to postpone their "Go to Theatre Week" until the early spring. Arrangements had been made to hold this celebration before Christmas and Will Hays had been invited to attend. The shortness of time for preparation and the fact that various local houses were doing good business as it was induced the managers to postpone the event until later in the season.

Atlanta Business Is Good With About Two Exceptions

Business, on the whole, for the past two weeks, has been good in Atlanta theatres, despite weather that has not helped the show business to any great extent.

The Howard Theatre played "Clarence" to a weeks good business, folowed by "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew." Business for the second week was immense, but due credit must be given to the "extra added attraction," a jazz band.

The Metropolitan played "A Fool There Was" to good business, and likewise on "Rags to Riches."

At the Rialto business was just fair, "The Top of New York," followed by "Anna Ascends," drawing average houses. The management expected something of a reaction from the almost sensationally successful two weeks' run of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," and so they faced the "just fair" business calmly.

At the Strand "Moonshine Valley" was the most successful picture of the two weeks and an unusually effective lobby helped. "The Fighting Streak" drew well.

The Tudor enjoyed good business, the best being for the week of November 27, when the features were "The Girl Who Ran Wild," on Monday and Tuesday; "Another Man's Shoes," for Wednesday and Thursday, the week closing with "De Luxe Annie."

At the Grand, "Always the Woman," "The Man from Downing Street," "The New Teacher" and "The Man with Two Mothers" played to uniformly good business.

The most interesting announcement of the week is that made by the Howard and Metropolitan theatres, of an advance in admission prices. Heretofore, these two theatres have had a 40 cent top price, but during the past week the admission has been raised to 50 cents.

Manager T. R. James, of the Grand, reports "nothing of interest—uniform good business." The personal appearance of Virginia Pearson at the Grand recently packed them in until the sidewalls of the theatre seemed to bulge.

Not that we are unduly curious, or like to be inquisitive—but we wonder why it is so extremely difficult to ever "catch" Mr. James Jackson, manager of the Tudor, on the telephone? It's great hunting weather, nowadays, and Mr. Jackson is quite a hunter—so perhaps—

Manager Sol Samuels, of the Alamo No. 1 reports that business has been "on the bum" for the past several weeks, and believes that the weather is to blame.

Manager W. T. Murray, of the Alamo No. 2, has worked up a clientele composed, for a great part, of families and people who are regular almost daily attendants. He has a wonderful memory, and whenever he speaks a cheery word to a patron, and calls him by name, it makes a warm, little friendly feeling that brings that patron back again and again.

Manager Darley, of the Alpha Theatre, says that he thinks the best thing he can do with the Alpha is to close it and open a meat market in its place.

Manager G. M. ("Pup") Williams, of the Strand Theatre, is busy collecting bets. The basketball team of girls, of which he is coach, played their first big game on November 28 and "mopped up" the opposing team to the heart-warming score of 26-13.

Manager John Thomas is enthusiastic over the increase in business at his Vaudette Theatre, since extensive alterations and remodelling, which included a $1,000 screen, have been completed.

Augusta

There have been numerous complaints in the past of the lack of amusement in Augusta, Ga., but the complaint is no longer true.

Manager Frank Miller, managing director of the Imperial, Rialto and Modjeska theatres, states that this is only the beginning, and that if Augusta really wants entertainment and will support it, she will certainly be given the opportunity. The city once more has vaudeville. Keith's vaudeville opened at the Imperial Theatre on Thanksgiving Day, and will be presented every Thursday, Friday and Saturday, as long as Augusta supports it.

The Rialto reports fair business for the past week. Monday and Tuesday, the feature picture was "The Primitive Lover" and House Manager Creislein arranged a simple but effective lobby display, which had for its center, a huge pair of hearts, bright red and entwined. In these hearts were pictures—scenes from the picture, and photos of the star. Over the twin-hearts and chaining them together was a giant club. The whole was encircled with electric lights and was most effective.

The Modjeska Theatre, of which the house manager is Mr. Shields, played, for the first two days of the week, "Hurricane's Gal," which drew fairly well; the last four days of the week, the feature was "The Young Rajah," which played to very good business.

The Dreamland Theatre, with a daily change of pictures and an admission price of 10 cents, is always filled to the doors, but plays to capacity business particularly on Friday, the special drawing card for that day being a Harold Lloyd comedy—a one-reel reissue. Manager Edenfield reports that Friday is his heaviest day, and he gives credit for it to the Lloyd comedies—even though they are single reels, and re-issues.

Milwaukee's First Citizens Pay Tribute to Exhibitors

High tribute was paid during the week of December 3 to 9 to Milwaukee exhibitors by civic leaders who conducted a "Boost Milwaukee Week" in which the theatre men joined hands with the Association of Commerce and other organizations in "selling Milwaukee to the world."

A committee headed by Mrs. Edna J. Dunlop, prominent Milwaukee advertising woman, reported it had found that exhibitors had performed a noble service recently in helping to save Wisconsin's monster potato crop. When it was found that millions of potatoes would rot on the ground unless their sale was stimulated, exhibitors immediately proclaimed "potato week," during which all theatres flashed slides on their screens urging the purchase of winter stocks without delay.

Walter Baumann, secretary of the Wisconsin Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, and J. H. Silliman, of the Downer Theatre and the recording secretary of the exhibitors' organization, were especially commended for their work when the committee reported that the two have always taken active part in drives for the betterment of conditions.

"Boost Milwaukee week is only one of the many instances in which motion picture men have taken such a generous hand," the report stated.

Milwaukee exhibitors are joining hands with Santa Claus. Already two of the largest playhouses have announced their plans to help the kiddies on Christmas Day, while several others have the matter under consideration.

The playhouses at which Christmas stunts have been mapped out are the Alhambra, Grand Avenue and Fourth Street, under the management of Leo A. Landau, and the Strand, Grand Avenue and Fifth Street, managed by Ed Weisfeldt.

Mr. Landau has donated the use of his theatre for one day to the Milwaukee Elks who will hold a combination vaudeville and picture show to raise funds with which to conduct a party for the poor kiddies of the city on Christmas Day in the Milwaukee Auditorium.

Mr. Weisfeldt has agreed to turn over his theatre to the Santa Claus Association on December 23. On that day as many orphans as can be found in the city will be guests of the management and the association. Special vaudeville acts, some of them featuring the orphans themselves, will be offered in addition to a run of pictures. During the morning hours it is planned to have inmates of the various old home institutions as guests.

The New Milwaukee Theatre, pride of Milwaukee's outskirt houses, will also have a special Christmas stunt, although the details have not yet been worked out, according to George Fisher, manager.

The Butterfly Theatre, Grand avenue and Second street, has abandoned its policy of second run and revival pictures and is now showing first run features. Stuart Walker is manager.

"Dr. Jack" has broken all records at the Strand Theatre, managed by Ed Weisfeldt. The picture is one of the few comedies which enjoyed a two week's continuous run in Milwaukee.

Les Hoadly, of Chicago, has been engaged as the new organist by George Fisher, manager of the New Milwaukee, newest outskirt house which is situated on Teutonia avenue.

The Garden Theatre, Third street and Grand avenue, managed by Leo A. Landau, who also has the Alhambra, has been taken over by Pathe for the period of one month for the showing of "Nanook of the North."

Announcement has been made of the transfer of the interest of Claude Robinson, proprietor of the Robinson Grand Theatre at Clarksburg, W. Va., in the Blue Ridge Theatre at Fairmont, to Charles C. Robb, with whom Mr. Robinson was associated in the management. Mr. Robb will continue as proprietor with Reno Fleming as house manager. There is to be no change in the policy of the theatre, which will continue at present four acts of Keith vaudeville and motion pictures regularly.

Milan Salowich, of the National Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., is a live-wire. He built this 700-seat house a year ago at a cost of $55,000. Three months ago he spent an additional $3,500 for a stage and necessary equipment. Now he has purchased an organ, which cost him $7,100.

Paul Thomas, well-known Greensburg exhibitor, is back again on the job after a few days in the woods chasing the rabbits.

S. L. Driggs, of the Globe, Liberty and Driggs Theatres, Clearfield, has improved somewhat in health, and at the present time is in Florida on a motoring trip.

Fred Gohrs, manager of the Aris Theatre, Erie, was married recently to Miss Gladys Marie Love, an Erie girl.

L. Moogerman's new Lincoln Theatre on Wylie avenue, Pittsburgh, was opened on Saturday, November 25. This is a brand new house, a two-story brick building with apartments on the upper floor, a storeroom on the street level and billiard parlor at a cost of $50,000. The house seats 400 and has been supplied with ample standing room, and so arranged that another hundred seats can be installed if the occasion demands. Frank Ray is manager.

Alterations having been completed and the seating capacity of Aleck Moore's Hilltop Theatre, Pittsburgh, having been increased by 250 seats, the house is again open for business.

National Get-Together Being Held Every Week

Exhibitors used to depend on infrequent meetings of their various organizations for a chance to swap stories, gather the gossip of the trade, meet old friends or learn where these were "hanging out."

Now these exhibitors hold a weekly get-together, where they can all keep in touch with one another's activities, learn about old friends and their doings, and fraternize with their fellows to foster the human side of the exhibiting game.

Want to sit in on these get-togethers?. It's easy. All it costs you is the time it takes to read Moving Picture World's newsy, breezy "Regional News and Gossip" Department.

Business in Toledo Shows Increase, Reports Brailey

That business conditions in the picture houses in Toledo and this territory are rapidly improving and that the present winter will show all the leading houses making good profits was the statement made this week by Ora Brailey, owner of the Princess Theatre and dean of Toledo exhibitors.

Mr. Brailey states that since October 1, for the first time since the war closed, he has been able to see profits coming in.

"I believe we have passed the crisis and from now on will see better business," he said. I have made a little money on every picture shown during October and good money on all pictures in November, especially the week I played 'Rich Men's Wives.' I believe we have made the turning point and from now on I can see nothing but good results ahead."

Mr. Brailey is the champion duck hunter in Toledo. He says the shooting this year has been the best in years and that over 7,000 wild ducks have been brought down on the shooting grounds near Toledo this season.

Manager Fageley, of the Rivoli, made a great hit with his clientele the past week when he booked Betty Blythe for personal appearance. She appeared for three days and was given a grand ovation at each performance.

Manager Gerstle, of the Valentine, put on a special screening of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" one night last week at midnight for the convenience of the theatrical folks in the city.

Eddie Zorn, of the Temple Theatre, is pulling off a cute stunt with the Toledo News-Bee. Each night a child's picture appears in the News-Bee. All the child has to do is to cut out the picture, take it to the News-Bee, identify herself as the photo shown and receive a ticket to the Temple, entitling her to take her family, not exceeding six persons, to the Temple any day of the week. She also has an opportunity to write a criticism of the show. The best criticism of the show received during December will win $25 for writing it. Second prize, $15; third prize, $5; and fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth prize, $1.

Motion picture owners in the small towns in this territory intend to open up a fight on the Sunday closing laws. Lakewood, Findlay, Bryan and several other cities will open their shows on Sundays and are confident they will win out in the fight.

Harry O. Thomas and Frank G. Nafus, both from Toledo, this week took over the Rivoli Theatre at Defiance, Ohio, following the completion of a deal with Harold Wendt, who has operated the house for the past several months. Thomas has been connected with several Toledo theatres, but this is Nafus' first venture in the business.

The Rivoli recently has been managed by Mrs. Wendt, in the absence of her husband, who has been working with a film booking company in Cleveland. Wendt soon will be transfered to the New York office of the booking agency, and will be joined by Mrs. Wendt.

Nixon-Nirdlinger Theatre in Baltimore Is Rebuilt

Nixon's Victoria Theatre, 415 East Baltimore street, Baltimore, has been entirely rebuilt and redecorated after the plans of J. Lowther Forrest, architect, and reopened to the public under the management of A. M. Seligman, who formerly had charge of the playhouse. This theatre was badly damaged by fire about six months ago and has been closed since that time to allow for reconstruction. It is operated by the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests and the Stanley Company of America, who also control Ford's Theatre in Baltimore, under the management of Harry A. Henkel. Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger and Jules Mastbaum were present at the reopening.

Ed A. Lake, who has been associated with the Marcus Loew Theatrical Interests for eight years, has succeeded Robert Wayne as manager of Loew's Hippodrome Theatre, Baltimore. Mr. Lake comes direct from London, Canada. He managed three of the Loew theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y., for some time. Mr. Wayne has become associated with the Marshall Players at the New Lyceum Theatre, Baltimore.

Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, who is ever on the alert to give his patrons the best in pictures and music in his delightful theatre, arranged with Victor Herbert, renowned composer of musical comedies, to come to Baltimore during the week of December 4 and conduct the orchestra at the Rivoli.

Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests, brought back those two excellent singers, Justin Lawrie and Fernando Guarneri, to sing at the Century during the weeks of November 27 and December 4.

So near completion is the Metropolitan Theatre, North avenue at Pennsylvania, which is to be operated by the Metropolitan Theatre Company, of which Dr. F. W. Schanze is president, that they are now renting the store, office and floor space in other sections of the building.

Indiana

The Sunday situation at Wabash, Ind., which has been more or less of a one-sided quarrel for the last nine months between Wabash ministers and William and Perry Dickson, proprietors of the Eagle Theatre, has developed into a real issue with the apparent organization of proponents of the Sunday shows, as a result of the arrest and jailing on Sunday, November 26, of the Dickson brothers.

After the Dicksons had been arrested, the sheriff announced that he could not accept bail and would confine the two theatre men in the jail until Monday. Attorneys and friends of the Dicksons then filed a habeas corpus suit and bonds of $100 then were filed for the prisoners' release. Following their release, the Dicksons announced they would give another show Sunday evening.

By 7:30 o'clock the theatre was packed. The sheriff and his deputies arrived a short time later and rearrested the Dicksons, who were then taken back to the jail. Proceedings similar to the ones taking place in the afternoon followed.

Two affidavits were filed Saturday in the Morgan Circuit Court at Martinsville against Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, owner of the Grace Theatre at Martinsville, and his manager, Frank Jewell, charging them with violating the Sabbath by operating the theatre on November 12 and November 19. Affidavits against Mr. Rembusch and Mr. Jewell were first filed in the court of Mayor E. L. Avery. When the cases were called a change of venue was asked. The filing of affidavits in the Circuit Court followed.

Where All the Adjectives Originated

WE should have acknowledged long before this the receipt of several oldtime posters and clippings from ancient negatives sent us by John P. Dibble, of the Park Theatre, Branford, Conn. They are interesting and it is hard luck that we haven't the space to devote to reproductions of them. Perhaps later on we can show the film clippings and see how many exhibitors recognize them.

Particularly interesting of all the posters is one that Mr. Dibble used in Putnam, Conn., in 1904. This reads, in part, as follows:

"7th annual tour! See the new colored moving pictures. 100 new novelties. We would mention The Haunted Inn—where no man rests. The most spectacular moving picture ever made, a laughing success, the original production just imported from Paris. See the great Baltimore Fire Scene. The conflagration at its height—most sensational moving picture ever made—actually taken at the fire. (That makes two 'most spectaculars' on one program.—Ed.) See the realistic Japan & Russia War Scenes. The latest on land and sea. The great naval battle. See the wonderful electrical illusion, the mystic flame, introducing The Only Melies, the prince of French magicians. An exhibition of the most marvelous moving pictures in the world, some of which are fully One Thousand Feet each in length, others Beautifully Colored, marvels of art and accuracy; produced on a scale of magnitude never before attempted."

The poster goes on to relate that "over 40,000 tickets have been sold in Utica during the past six years for Dibble's moving pictures, 35,000 in Schenectady, 33,000 in Amsterdam, 30,000 in Poughkeepsie, 30,000 in Rome, 50,000 in Hartford." Mr. Dibble also advertised then a special attraction, "The World's Fair at St. Louis."

Oh, boy! Now we know where the superlatives in present-day advertising came from.—S. S.

"Monte Cristo" to Be Given Special London Showing

To the number of Fox Film masterpieces now being shown in England will shortly be added their magnificently produced screen version of "Monte Cristo," adapted from the world-famous novel by Alexandre Dumas. According to a recent announcement, it will commence a special season at a leading London theatre in the very near future.

Some time ago this picture was presented privately at the London Alhambra to a representative gathering of the press, and the criticisms were unanimous in praising the masterly way in which the novel had been reproduced.

Rawlinson Stars in "The Prisoner"

The latest production of importance to go into the editorial department at Universal City is "The Prisoner," starring Herbert Rawlinson. It was adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, "Castle Craneycrow," by E. T. Lowe, Jr. Jack Conway directed. Eileen Percy played opposite Rawlinson.

To Make Plans for First Runs

While in the Middle West Mr. Lubin will confer with the district supervisors of Metro Pictures Corporation exchanges in that territory, for the purpose of co-operating with Metro in the placing of certain first runs.

Invited Audience Views Films

Under the personal direction of S. L. Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, "Quincy Adams Sawyer" was presented to an invited audience on Monday evening, November 27, in the grand ballroom of the Bancroft Hotel, Worcester, Mass., Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures, sponsored the showing, which marked the world's premiere of the initial production of Associated Pictures Corporation. Mr. Rothafel made a special trip to Worcester for the purpose of the presentation.

Scenes from "Fleeced for Gold," which Pathe will release on December 17 as a one-reel special.

Heavy Bookings on "Headless Horseman"

Following the announcement of the booking of "The Headless Horseman," or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the Hodkinson Corporation, distributors of the production, state that many bookings have been coming in on this Washington Irving classic from all over the country. It is further stated that at the present time the majority of the contracts have been secured in the Central West and New England States, but that the South and other sections will be heard from in short order.

Boston, Holyoke, Lowell and New Bedford, Mass., and Buffalo and Syracuse, N. Y., are all scheduled to play "The Headless Horseman" immediately after the Capitol showing. The Central West bookings include such cities as Minneapolis, Chillicothe, Kansas City, Springfield, Denver and Grand Rapids, all of which have contracted for this Hodkinson special, with the Pacific Coast bookings represented by Los Angeles, Long Beach, San Diego, Berkeley and Sacramento.

According to the inquiries that have been made and the amount of interest that is manifest throughout the territory in reference to the production of "The Headless Horseman," the Hodkinson organization feels that the success of this filmization of Irving's most widely read story is assured.

Anniversary Marked by Much Joviality

The second anniversary of the opening of Paramount's two-million dollar studio on Long Island was celebrated recently during the filming of a scene for George Melford's new production, "Java Head." While the scene was staged especially for the picture, studio officials joined the merry party, between "shots," and made an anniversary celebration of it.

The Paramount studio occupies an area of three square blocks in Astoria, L. I., and is said to be the largest motion picture studio under one roof in the world.

Of the thirty-three productions filmed in the Eastern studio, twenty have been Paramount pictures and thirteen Realart pictures.

Exhibitors Will Find in "Regional News and Gossip" all Showmen Items Worth Publishing.

Distinctive Signs George MacQuarrie

George MacQuarrie has been signed by Distinctive Pictures Corporation to play the role of the Constable of France in the French episode of "Backbone," the first all-star production of this company, which is now in the making at the Biograph Studios.

Mr. MacQuarrie came to the screen from a long and successful stage career, having been leading man for Grace George, Janet Beecher and Marie Cahill.

Engages Adrian

Adrian, the nineteen-year-old designer, who arrived in New York from Paris two months ago to design a number of the costumes for the new edition of the Music Box Revue, has been engaged by Arthur S. Friend, head of the Distinctive Pictures Corporation, to design the costumes for the French episode of "Backbone," the all-star production which Edward Sloman is now directing for that company.

Complete Camera Work

The camera work on "Java Head," George Melford's Paramount production of Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, has been completed at the company's Long Island studio. The final scenes to be filmed for the picture were those of the Manchu temple and the villa and garden of a Manchu nobleman, the home of Taou Yuen. This Chinese sequence added much color and beauty to the picture, which is rich in historical background of Salem, Mass., in the period of 1850, as well as strong in drama of a compelling form.

Goes to R-C Studio in Los Angeles

P. A. Powers, managing director, and J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of Film Booking Offices of America, left on December 2 for the R-C Studio in Los Angeles. Mr. Powers, who returned ten days ago from a six weeks' trip to Europe, will remain on the Coast for an indefinite period, where he will shape the F. B. O. production policy and line up product for the ensuing year.

Curtis to Make Stills

E. S. Curtis, artist-photographer extraordinary and considered the peer of all photographers of the American Indian, was specially commissioned by Cecil B. DeMille to secure a set of stills on the huge prehistoric forest set which is a feature of "Adam's Rib," Mr. De Mille's new Paramount picture.

Selznick Will Soon Put Into Production Chambers Serial Story, "The Common Law"

Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle and Elliott Dexter Engaged for Stellar Roles

Robert W. Chambers' "The Common Law," announced as one of the big super specials to be released by the Selznick company as a part of their 1922-23 offerings is about to be put into production. The picture is to be made in the company's West Coast Studios under the personal supervision of Myron Selznick, president of the company. Production work will be concurrent with that on Sir Anthony's Hope's "Rupert of Hentzau" which is now in the making and the shooting of these two big pictures at the same time will make the Selznick company one of the busiest producing organizations on the Pacific Coast.

The cast for the production has been selected in accordance with the announced policy of the Selznick company. Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle, and Elliott Dexter will be co-starred. Other screen artists of almost unusual prominence will support them. George Archainbaud will direct.

"The Common Law" is conceded to be one of the most valuable pieces of motion picture property in existence. Written by Robert W. Chambers as a serial novel for one of the big national magazines, it appeared when the author was at the height of his popularity and created a sensation throughout the country. It was subsequently published in book form and at once took rank as a "best seller"; the book is still selling in large quantities. Robert W. Chambers magazine stories and books are still immensely popular and each new story seems to have given new impetus to "The Common Law" which is pretty generally regarded as the most human and dramatic tale which Mr. Chambers has ever written.

The announcement that Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle and Elliott Dexter will appear in the stellar roles in the photoplay version will prove of great interest to exhibitors giving further proof that the Selznick Pictures of the future are to be exceptional in every way. It is doubtful if there are three other motion picture players now before the public so ideally suited for the parts which have been assigned them. Each has behind him a record of notable successes—and each stands for a particular type of screen portrayal which will at once be seen to be admirably adapted for "The Common Law." Corinne Griffith—for the past few years the biggest boxoffice bet of the Vitagraph company—is adding new success to a notable career with each succeeding production in which she appears. Conway Tearle's reputation as one of the best actors before the motion picture camera has been established in notable performances on both the speaking stage and screen. Elliott Dexter, featured player in a score of the best photoplay productions ever turned out, stands alone in his class as a portrayor of just the kind of role he has been given in "The Common Law."

The announcement by President Myron Selznick that the direction of the big Robert W. Chambers story has been entrusted to George Archainbaud is of equal importance to the announcement of the cast. Mr. Archainbaud stepped into the select circle of foremost American motion picture directors when he turned out the big Selznick picture, "One Week of Love," co-starring Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle, which is now playing so successfully in the leading theatres of the country.

The probable release date of "The Common Law" has not yet been discussed. Production work is being started immediately and the picture will be ready for distribution, subject to the plans of the company, before Feb. 15.

Holah, President of Growing Business

C. E. "Doc" Holah has resigned as special representative of the Literary Digest's "Fun from the Press" to devote his entire time to the Cleveland Motion Picture Company, in Cleveland, Ohio, of which he has become president and general manager.

The company completed arrangements in November to move into larger quarters so as to be able to take care of its growing business. It now occupies a space of about 4,000 square feet on the sixth floor of the Film Exchange Building in Cleveland. It is planned to install a complete commercial studio.

During the coming year the company expects to go into business on a larger scale, one feature of the enlarged business being a mail order department.

Many Wired Praise of Metro Picture

Arthur H. Sawyer, of S-L Pictures and supervising director of Associated Pictures Corporation, is reported to have been the recipient of a flood of congratulatory telegrams and letters since the screening of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" by Metro in New York, prior to its general release throughout the country. Under the personal supervision of Mr. Sawyer, Clarence Badger, directed.

Among those who wired felicitations on the success of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" are S. L. Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol Theatre; William Atkinson, general manager of Metro; Jack Meador, Metro's publicity chief; Alfred Weiss, president of Artclass Pictures Corporation; Lennie Abrams, one of the executives of Craftsmen Film Laboratories, and a host of others well known in various branches of the motion picture industry.

Sawyer will immediately begin work on "Your Friend and Mine," a starring vehicle for Willard Mack.

Contest Brings Big Rush of Business

Associated First National salesmen of United States and Canada have just finished a merry contest for "played and paid for" business. This contest was planned by Floyd M. Brockell, who was last week appointed manager of distribution for First National. The contest began on October 1 and ended November 25. The prizes offered to "pep" up the entire sales force were $300 for the best increased "played and paid for" business, $200 for second best, $150 for third and $100 for fourth, in each district. There being six districts, the total amount of the prizes was $4,500.

"Played and paid for" business has come into the First National New York offices so fast that today with the contest closed it will take a couple of weeks to decide on the winners.

Contrast of Appeal in Hodkinson Films

Variety is again expressed in the distribution plans of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation following the announcement that "The Kingdom Within" will be the feature release scheduled for December 24. Quite unlike "The Headless Horseman" and "Bulldog Drummond" in general appeal, this picture is very strong.

"The Headless Horseman," a quaint comedy based on "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow"; "Bulldog Drummond," a story that is melodramatic throughout; "The Kingdom Within," a tense drama, offer the exhibitor, in combination, plenty of variety.

New Yorkers Refuse Money at Half Price

Goldwyn's publicity force kicked another exploitation goal last week with "A Blind Bargain," repeating their coup for "Brothers Under the Skin" of a week or two ago. The Gallagher and Shean of press agentry (Howard Dietz and Eddie Bonns) wanted another big splash, for "A Blind Bargain" this time—as big a splash as their "Brothers Under the Skin" Club had made.

So they went calmly to work and grabbed off front page space—on Thanksgiving Day—in the Times, the Herald, the Globe, the Mail, the World and the whole caboodle. With the connivance of W. R. Ferguson they engaged a man named Jack Cohen, of 58 Manhattan avenue, to sell half dollars at the price of twenty-five cents to sophisticated New Yorkers. The half dollars were in small envelopes marked "Blind Bargain," and Cohen attempted to sell them in front of the Capitol Theatre and along Broadway. The curious crowded around him and listened to his spiel, but they didn't buy—not even one.

Finally Cohen was arrested and fined $2.

The reporters, not realizing it was a publicity stunt, "went to it" and the big newspaper stories were the result.

Real Chinese Color in Hyman Prologue

Real Chinese in native costume served as supers in the elaborate stage introduction prepared at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre for Constance Talmadge's "East Is West." In addition to reproducing behind the footlights the love boat scene from the film for this atmospheric prologue, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman used two operatic stars and a pair of classic dancers, all of who were dressed in Chinese robes.

The night Chinese setting contrived was futuristic with contrasting lights to aid the effectiveness of the dances and songs. Mr. Hyman reproduced as nearly as possible the scene and costumes from the film. Strings of odd Chinese lanterns added to the color.

The prologue stepped right into the film furnishing the advance atmosphere and eliminating an abrupt break.

Mr. Hyman used the Chinese type of lettering as a trademark for the advertising done by the Mark Strand for "East Is West." This letter motif prevailed in newspaper display, in lobby cards and in stands in front of the theatre.

Ballin Still Adds to "Vanity Fair" Cast

Hugo Ballin is still adding to the big cast which he is assembling at the Goldwyn studios for his photoplay version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," starring his wife, Mabel Ballin.

Adele Rowland, famous musical comedy star, has been signed for an important part. Doris Stone, an English musical comedy star, has also been engaged, as have Leo White, James Marcus and Otto Lederer.

This makes one of the longest and ablest casts ever assembled for an American picture. Other players engaged are Hobart Bosworth, George Walsh, Eleanor Boardman, Harrison Ford, Willard Louis, Earle Fox, Robert Mack, William Humphrey and Tempe Piggott.

Director Ballin has nearly finished the great ballroom scene for "Vanity Fair" and will soon begin on the battle of Waterloo section in which thousands of extras will appear.

"Outcast" Listed for December

As its release of December 10, Paramount presents Elsie Ferguson in "Outcast," a picturization of one of Miss Ferguson's greatest stage successes. This play was written by Hubert Davies and it was in 1914 that Miss Ferguson starred in it in New York.

One of the features of the picture which should prove especially attractive to women is a fashion show held in a setting presenting an ultra-exclusive modiste's shop.

Jack Pickford's "Garrison's Finish" Set for Release January 15

A definite release date for January 15 next has been set for Jack Pickford's "Garrison's Finish," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release which marks Mr. Pickford's formal return to the screen as a star after two years directorial work with his sister, Mary Pickford.

"Garrison's Finish" is based on W. B. M. Ferguson's famous racing novel of the same title—a story that has been read and loved by many hundreds of thousands. It is a big picture in every sense of the word, and for its racing scenes has the actual running of the last Kentucky Derby won by the great Morvich at Louisville, as well as the last Metropolitan handicap at Belmont Park.

"Garrison's Finish" has been booked for a pre-release run at the Grand Theatre, Pittsburgh. After the theatre management had seen the picture everyone was strong in congratulations for Jack Pickford and heartily endorsed the film as an excellent box-office and entertainment feature.

Arrangements were made for a private showing of "Garrison's Finish" to all the member of "Sally," the stage play in which Marilyn Miller (Mrs. Jack Pickford) is starring, as well as for members of all other theatrical companies playing in Pittsburgh. Because the Grand Theatre print had not yet reached Pittsburgh plans were made for having a print sent on by special messenger for this private showing.

Marion Davies Busy on Christmas Gifts

Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan star, will be one of the busiest girls in New York City during the month of December. Besides starting work on her new picture, "Little Old New York," soon after the first of the month, Miss Davies is dressing one thousand dolls to be given away on Christmas Day to New York children. Five hundred of the dolls will be given out through the New York American Christmas Fund and five hundred will be given away by Miss Davies herself at the gigantic holiday celebration she plans to hold on Christmas Day at the Cosmopolitan studio at 127th and Second Avenue.

The sick children are not to be forgotten, as the little ones at St. Joseph's Hospital, 143rd Street and Brook Avenue, Bronx, New York City, are Miss Davies' special proteges. They look upon her as a fairy godmother as they have but to express a wish for some particular thing and it will be forthcoming. The Cosmopolitan star has told them that if they will write her letters telling just what they want, their wishes will be granted on Christmas Day. Twenty-five hundred children will be given presents at the celebration at the Cosmopolitan studio.

On Christmas Day Miss Davies will entertain six hundred ex-service men at a big Christmas dinner, to be followed by a theatre party at the Cort Theatre to witness "Merton of the Movies." Over one thousand men will be included in the latter invitation as the entire house has been bought out for the Christmas matinee. The ex-soldiers to be the recipients of Miss Davies' hospitality will be selected through the Reconstruction Hospitals and the American Legion.

Big Circuit Books Hodkinson Picture

An important booking announcement has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that the Fox Circuit has booked the melodrama, "Bulldog Drummond," adapted from the stage success by "Sapper" and featuring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, into seventeen theatres in Greater New York and vicinity.

This contract, which, according to the distributors, is one of the largest and most important of its kind, covers twelve theatres in New York City and Brooklyn, among them being some of the largest and best of the Fox Circuit, including the Academy of Music, Audubon, Jap Garden, Nemo, Washington and others.

Furthermore, it is stated that this contract covers theatres controlled by Fox in New Jersey and Connecticut. Among the most important of these are the New Britain Theatre, New Britain, Conn.; American, Paterson, N. J.; Terminal and American, Newark, N. J., and Liberty Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J.

It is further announced that Bim's Schuyler, 103d Street, West End and Standard have also contracted for this Hodkinson release.

Saw No Wickedness in Hollywood

Back in New York after a six weeks' tour of the United States, Lord Louis Mountbatten, son of the former Prince Henry of Battenberg and cousin of the Prince of Wales, declared that he looked everywhere for signs of wickedness while at Hollywood, but failed to see it. Accompanying Lord Mountbatten on the journey, which was made in a private car, was Lady Mountbatten, England's wealthiest girl. Speaking of his experiences in Hollywood, Lord Mountbatten said:

"We stayed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks. Charles Chaplain was our distinguished host, as Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks were in the East. There is a private theatre in the Fairbanks home, and we saw films which have not yet been produced. We liked Charlie Chaplin's new picture, 'The Pilgrim,' and enjoyed Jackie Coogan in 'Oliver Twist.'"

Meantime "Oliver Twist" has been generally released by First National. "The Pilgrim" will shortly be released also by First National.

"Broken Chains" Is Booked at Capitol

Goldwyn's production of the prize winning scenario in the Chicago Daily News $30,000 scenario contest, "Broken Chains," by Winifred Kimball, is booked for showing at the Capitol Theatre next week.

This story was selected for first prize by the judges out of 32,000 manuscripts submitted. Goldwyn engaged Allen Holubar to direct the production and gave him a cast including Coleen Moore, Malcolm McGregor, Ernest Torrence, Claire Windsor, Gerald Pring, Beryl Mercer and other well known players.

"Broken Chains" is the story of the redemption of an Eastern youth, who is a physical and moral coward, through his pity for a brutally treated young wife whom he stumbles upon in a little Western cabin, chained and padlocked so she cannot leave the house.

The production is an elaborate one and contains many beautiful shots among the California redwoods.

Fox Releases for Early December

Fox Film Corporation announces its release program for the week of December 3 to consist of a William Russell feature, a Sunshine Comedy, a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon and two issues of Fox News

"The Great Night" is the title of the only Russell vehicle which will be distributed during December. It was directed by Howard M. Mitchell Eva Novak plays opposite Russell.

The Sunshine Comedy is "The Fresh Heir." The Mutt and Jeff release is titled, "The Chewing Gum Industry." Fox News will have its bi-weekly publication.

Carl Laemmle Takes Progressive Step in New "Look-Before-Booking" Policy

To Sell "New Leather Pushers" Only to Exhibitors Who Preview All Six

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, this week inaugurated one of the most sensational and radical policy changes which has struck the motion picture industry in many years. He has taken the first step in a move to assure a "look before you book" policy on the part of exhibitors. He has gone even farther than this by making it obligatory for exhibitors to see certain Universal pictures before booking them.

Taking "The New Leather Pushers," a new series of six two reelers made from H. G. Witwer's popular prize ring stories, as a working try-out for the new policy, Mr. Laemmle has instructed all Universal exchanges that no bookings are to be taken on any of the six new pictures until the prospective purchaser has seen the entire six. "The New Leather Pushers" series was chosen because, in a limited way, it corresponds to series of big feature productions. The six pictures, made by Harry Pollard, with Reginald Denny as the star, are listed as Universal Jewel Productions.

Mr. Laemmle long has preached a "look before you book" policy to exhibitors and has been foremost in facilitating for Universal's exhibitor patrons the adoption of this policy. He has consistently inveighed against the fallacy of booking a year or six months' supply of pictures at once, and has time and time again urged the theatre owner to have pictures screened before contracting for them.

The Universal chief, when interviewed concerning his latest innovation in the distribution of Universal pictures, explained in detail just what he hopes to accomplish by what he characterizes as his experiment to determine the extent to which exhibitors will cooperate in the progressive policy of buying only on sight.

"I have taken a radical step, and I realizing how far-reaching it may be," said Mr. Laemmle. "But if it serves to bring to the attention of exhibitors the importance and desirability of seeing the pictures they buy, before they sign up for them, I will be vindicated. I don't expect an immediate revolution in the distributing end of the industry. Neither do I expect a country-wide demand that every picture be screened for every exhibitor.

"I know only too well that there are many exhibitors who find it inconvenient and sometimes almost impossible to screen the pictures they buy. No two exhibitors are surrounded with the same conditions. But I do know that in a majority of the cases the exhibitor could preview his probable bookings for a month or so in advance and assure himself that he would be getting value received.

"Many exhibitors who today are signing up for big blocks of pictures, some of which are not even on paper, and who mortgage the future of their theatre for a mess of pottage in the shape of some alleged 'super' production, could 'shop' for their screen and buy only what they know will be box-office hits if they but took the trouble to do so, and took the stand that they were determined to do so.

"As the producer and distributor of 'The New Leather Pushers' series, I consider that it is my right to request that each man who wants to buy this series should see it first. I do not feel that this is in any way an imposition on the exhibitor. Primarily, I am making this request for the benefit of the exhibitor. Any merchant has a right to show his wares to a prospective purchaser. It protects both the merchant and the customer. The merchant is protected because the customer has seen and accepted the goods. There can be no come-back. The customer is protected because he sees and knows what he is getting. There should be no need of a come-back.

"This is just as true in the film industry as in any other industry. In practice, however, it has been disregarded, to the great disadvantage of the exhibitor. No class of business men on earth buy a 'pig in a poke' to the extent of the otherwise keen and able business men in the motion picture industry. Every time an exhibitor puts his name at the bottom of a contract for a picture he has not seen, he is buying a 'pig in a poke' and he knows it only too well. No company, no artist, no director can guarantee 100% results.

"I have established this 'look first' rule for 'The New Leather Pusher' series because I hope that it will bring home to many exhibitors the great advantage of knowing in advance just what they are going to show to their patrons. It not only removes much of the element of doubt and worry from the exhibitors' mind concerning his coming programs, but also enables him to adjust his advance campaigns and exploitation to suit the circumstances.

"I hope, by means of the policy established for the 'Leather ushers' series to win many converts to the common sense of previewing all pictures. This policy should be as much the policy of every producer as of Universal. Universal's stand is based on the fact there are no Universal pictures which we are not glad to have the exhibitor see before he books.

"I chose 'The New Leather Pushers' for the inauguration of a policy based on the fore-going sentiments because the series consists of six high class two-reelers, which in quality and price, are comparable to a program of five-reel features, and which, because of their current release, will soon show the workability of the plan.

"There are many exhibitors in this country today who would no more think of buying a picture until they had seen it, than they would think of buying a residence, 'sight unseen.' They are all successful exhibitors, too. In fact, that is probably the reason they are successful. There is no reason why any exhibitor can go an equal distance in assuring his success.

"Nothing could make me happier than to have every exhibitor see every Universal picture he buys before he signs up. It would mean one hundred per cent. satisfaction. It would be of immeasurable advantage to Universal because there could be an immediate determination of just what pictures are salable and what pictures are not salable. In turn, it would mean a quicker change in production policies and a correspondingly rapid change in pictures to meet the ever changing wants of the average exhibitor.

"It is the only way that the producer and distributor and the exhibitor will ever be able to transact business on a one hundred per cent. mutually satisfactory basis with complete satisfaction for both parties. I know this to be true because I know the results in exhibitor friendship Universal has obtained in the working out of the policy as far as we have gone up until now."

A scene from "Through the Skylight," a Syracuse Motion Picture Co. special, co-starring Henry Hull and Mary Thurman. To be handled through Producers Security Corporation.

Strong Support in Heirs' Newest

For his first picture as a Paramount star, titled "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," Walter Hiers will have a strong cast enacting the leading roles. Featured in support of Heirs will be Jacqueline Logan.

George Fawcett, one of the screen's foremost character actors, has a powerful characterization in the role of a leader of an insurrecto gang. Patricia Palmer, whose work in "The Cowboy and the Lady" attracted favorable comment, also has a good role. Robert McKim, who was seen in many Thomas H. Ince productions for Paramount, will work for the first time at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in this picture.

Others who enact leading roles include Clarence Burton, George Field, Lucien Littlefield, Guy Oliver, Joseph Swickard and Edward Patrick.

Wesley Ruggles has been engaged to direct "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime."

Dorothy Dalton started work Monday on her first Paramount picture to be made in Hollywood in some time. Victor Fleming will direct, and Charles DeRoche, French actor, will play one of the leading supporting roles, the other being in the hands of Theodore Kosloff.

Mr. DeRoche reached Hollywood last week. This was his first visit to America and after looking at the Paramount West Coast studio he declared that he had no words to express his delight at the prospect of working there.

The picture which Miss Dalton has started is "The Law of the Lawless," from the story by Konrad Bercovici, adapted by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

Taking the Guesswork Out of Booking

An exhibitor dreamed that he had a highly trained corps of experts looking at all the pictures and advising him about the booking qualities, the box-office values, the audience appeal, the advertising angles on all of them.

He woke up and found that his dream had come true when he realized that Moving Picture World's "Newest Reviews and Comments" gave him just what he needed.

Take it from him, he gets his three dollars' worth from this one department every week; he has found the reviews dependable prophecies of picture value, written by a staff unbiased and highly specialized.

If you've dreamed of finding a way to take the guesswork out of booking, here it is—read and profit by "Newest Reviews and Comments" and "The Pep of the Program" appearing in Moving Picture World every week.

Erlanger to Confer on "Ben Hur" Picture

A. L. Erlanger, the theatrical producer who guided the destiny of "Ben-Hur" on the speaking stage for the past twenty-five years, left last week for the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal., to confer with F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, on the motion picture version of Gen. Lew Wallace's famous novel, which is being made by Goldwyn in association with Mr. Erlanger. Mr. Godsol left for the Pacific Coast a week ago.

It is the purpose of the Goldwyn company and of Mr. Erlanger to turn the famous stage play made from the novel into the most magnificent motion picture ever produced. Mr. Erlanger, on account of his long familiarity with the play, "Ben-Hur," will advise on the screen version.

The continuity, now in its finishing stage, was prepared by June Mathis, recently appointed editorial director for Goldwyn, in close conference with Mr. Erlanger.

It is expected that the name of the man who is to direct "Ben-Hur" for Goldwyn will be announced soon, as it is believed this will be one of the first matters settled definitely after Mr. Godsol and Mr. Erlanger confer with the production executives.

F. B. O. Changes Date of Film's Release

Harry Carey's production of "Canyon of the Fools," a Saturday Evening Post story by Richard Matthews Hallett, has been advanced on the Film Booking Offices of America program and will be available to exhibitors at an early date in 1923. "Canyon of the Fools" will be the third production starring Carey to be released by F. B. O. The story has also been published in novel form by Harper Brothers.

Marguerite Clayton plays the leading role opposite Carey, with Carmen Arselle cast in the role of the "lady heavy." The remainder of the cast includes Fred Stanton, Joseph Harris, Jack Curtis, Charles J. LeMoyne, Vester Pegg, Murdock MacQuarrie and Mignonne Golden. The screen adaptation was made by John W. Grey. Val Paul directed with William Thornley, with Robert DeGrasse behind the camera.

Associated's Film Is Highly Praised

Since the special showing in the grand ball room of Hotel Astor, New York, of the Associated Exhibitors' feature, "Breaking Home Ties," every mail has brought to E. S. Manheimer, who presents the feature, letters extolling the picture as one meriting the widest possible support These come from persons in various walks of life, whose activities cover a wide range.

George P. Kennedy, vice president of the Chatham & Phoenix National Bank, wrote: "It is without doubt a remarkable picture and one which everyone should see."

Abraham J. Herrick, attorney, of 99 Nassau street, said: "This production should have a wonderful future." M. Rosenstein, Ph. G., of Brooklyn, wrote: "'Breaking Home Ties' expresses most superbly that warmth and unity which is such a strong trait of Jewish folk. It should also appeal strongly to everybody of all creeds, because of the human law it so vividly expresses."

Mrs. David Lion, 220 West 98th street, well-known in settlement work, said: "I have rarely seen such an interesting picture." L. J. Feldman, who is financially interested in various theatrical properties, wrote: "Your truly wonderful picture, 'Breaking Home Ties,' is paramount to any I have ever witnessed."

David Goldstein, of Goldstein & Goldstein, counsellors at law, said: "There are very few pictures that I have seen as a movie fan that impressed me more."

Charles J. Egler, of McGovern & Egler, motion picture distributors, wrote: "A picture that can tug at the heart strings and hold one's attention, such as 'Breaking Home Ties' held mine, is, I feel certain, a really big picture, and one no doubt that will appeal to every race and creed."

On Exploitation Staff

James Loughborough has joined the exploitation staff of "Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood'" as assistant to Pete Smith. Loughborough will take charge of the publicity and advertising for the New York engagement. Smith left last night for Boston, where he will make the advertising arrangements for the opening.

Forest Is Built in Studio for Picture

In the next film decade Mahomet will have accomplished the believed impossible, and the famous immovable "mountain" will come to heel at any one of a score of cinema studios.

Such is the prophecy of Cecil B. DeMille, producer of Paramount pictures, in the course of a discussion concerning the huge prehistoric forest, erected by Art Director Paul Iribe for the current DeMille production, "Adam's Rib." The building of the set was expensive—it is the largest indoor affair ever made, it is said—and Mr. DeMille was asked why he didn't go to the actual giant trees to get his caveman sequence.

"I had been in the giant forest to make pictures four times," says Mr. DeMille. "The trees are wonderful, but it's impossible to put their beauties adequately upon the screen. Nor is it possible to find in a logical radius a variety of shots sufficient to carry the drama of a big picture.

"In our constructed forest we have all the beauty of the redwoods, with their massive trunks, fifty feet in circumference."

Prominent Persons at Picture Showing

Four members of the party accompanying Georges Clemenceau, famed "Tiger" of France, were among many distinguished guests at a private screening last Monday evening, December 4, at the Grand Theatre, Pittsburgh, of Jack Pickford's "Garrison's Finish," this star's first photoplay production since his return to the screen after a long term of directorial work for his sister, Mary Pickford.

Seventeen hundred persons were present at the showing of the picture, an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, which has been booked for an extended prerelease engagement at the Grand. It will be formally released January 15.

There were in the big audience many persons prominent in the public life of Pittsburgh, the State of Pennsylvania and the Nation.

Film Fully Equipped for Wide Publicity

Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation is offering "After Six Days" to the independent exchanges as a road show proposition fully equipped in the way of useful advertising material. All of the accessories, the newspaper copy and the supplies have been designed with one idea in mind: to provide suitable exploitation material for presentations in legitimate theatres.

A ninety-six page campaign book contains every help in the way of ready-made ads. a supply of stories for advance, current and reviews, etc. Special attention is devoted in the book to methods of obtaining the co-operation of churches, schools, fraternal organizations and leading civic officials. Letters have been prepared, means of approach dealt with and a list of organizations in each leading city is given for the help of the road showman.

Begins Mix Film

The Western studios of Fox Film Corporation announce that William Beaudine, the director, has begun work on "Catch My Smoke," a Tom Mix vehicle. Lillian Rich, who was featured in "A Fool There Was," the Fox special, will support the star.

Universal Company to Start Year 1923 With Pictures Adapted From Popular Novels

Lewis, Chester, Davis, McCutcheon Among Authors Whose Works Are Used

An imposing array of pictures adapted from well known plays, popular novels and other published stories is listed by Universal in its forecast for the opening months of 1923. The pictures form the schedule of Universal Attractions, to be released one each week beginning on January 1st. In the list is included pictures written by such well-known authors as Sinclair Lewis, George Randolph Chester, Richard Harding Davis, George Barr McCutcheon, and the internationally heralded Norwegian author, Johan Bojer, as well as pictures by other writers of national prominence.

The first Universal release of the New Year will be "The Flaming Hour," a story by Mrs. George Randolph Chester, in which Frank Mayo is starred, and of which Edward Sedgwick is the director. Following this will come a special cast production, "The Ghost Patrol," adapted from Sinclair Lewis' celebrated story of that name. Ralph Graves, Bessie Love, George Nichols are in the cast, which was directed by Nat Ross, maker of several hilarious Hoot Gibson comedy dramas.

The mid-January release, "Kindled Courage," directed by William Worthington from a story by Leet Renick Brown, with Edward (Hoot) Gibson as the star, there will be released a Herbert Rawlinson picture adapted from "The Scarlet Car," one of the celebrated "Scarlet Car" stories of Richard Harding Davis. Stuart Paton directed it.

The last January release will be a special production adapted from "The Power of a Life," a world famed novel by Johan Bojer. This story ranks as one of the strongest ever penned in any tongue. It was crowned by the French Academy. Universal has filmed it with a top-notch cast including Mabel Julienne Scott, Earl Metcalf, June Elvidge and Maude George and David Torrence. George Archainbaud directed it.

Among the February releases will be "The First Degree," a Frank Mayo picture adapted from "The Summons," a story by George Patullo, directed by Edward Sedgwick, "The Love Letter," a Gladys Walton attraction directed King Baggot from a story by Bradley King, and "The Gentleman From America," a side-splitting Hoot Gibson picture written by Raymond L. Schrock, Scenario Editor at Universal City, and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

It is probable that the last February release will be "The Prisoner," an adaptation of George McCutcheon's novel "Castle Craneycrow," with Herbert Rawlingson as star.

In addition to the aforementioned pictures which now are in production, Schrock recently has acquired an unusual selection of new story rights, which are being put into production as fast as they can be translated for the screen.

These forth-coming productions are "The Chicken that Came Home to Roost," a short story from the November Cosmopolitan, written by Frederic Arnold Kummer, which will be used as a Gladys Walton starring vehicle; "Nobody's Bride," a magazine story by Evelyn Campbell, which Albert G. Kenyon is preparing for Herbert Rawlinson's use; "Mirage Land," an original by Roy Myers which George C. Hull is adapting as a vehicle for Edward (Hoot) Gibson; "The Ninth Man" by George Randolph Chester, another future Rawlinson story; "The Winning Hand" by John Russell, published first in the Red Book Magazine and then in a volume captioned "Where the Pavement Ends," which will be an all star production; "His Good Name," a Collier's magazine story by William Slavens McNutt which Frank Beresford and Schrock are preparing as an all star special to be directed by Harry Pollard; and "The Six-Fifty," a successful New York play by Kate McLaurin which Doris Schroeder is preparing as an all star production.

The character of these stories indicates the general trend toward better starring vehicles and bigger all star stories, in line with Universal's announced policy to top the international market in 1923.

Second F. B. O. Sales Meeting in Chicago

Following the sales meeting in New York held last Sunday in the F. B. O. home office which was attended by all Eastern branch managers, a second meeting will be held in Chicago on Sunday, December 9, in which the Mid-West and Southern exchangemen will meet Mr. Harry Berman, general manager of distribution and Nat G. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director.

These meetings are being held primarily in the interest of the new Emory Johnson production "The Third Alarm," which is opening at the Astor Theatre in New York on January 8. Mr. Rothstein will address the branch managers and acquaint them in detail with the advertising and exploitation campaign planned on this special production. Mr. Berman will preside at the meeting and discuss the sales possibilities of the picture.

The New York meeting brought together the enthusiastic branch managers and exploitation representatives of F. B. O. from all the Eastern cities. They responded whole-heartedly to Mr. Rothstein's statement that "The Third Alarm" was a box office production, perfect from every angle—with entertaining and exploitation possibilities unexcelled by any picture of the year.

The New York meeting was held at the Astor Hotel and was attended by Charles Rosensweig, of New York; R. S. Bendell, of Albany; U. T. Koch, of Atlanta; E. W. Kramer, of Buffalo; S. E. Fitzgibbon, of Boston; C. E. Penrod, of Cleveland; J. M. Flynn, of Philadelphia; A. H. Schnitzer, of Pittsburgh; E. Gettleson, of Washington; William Conn, of the new Charlotte office; and the following exploitation representations: Herbert Weill; Gilbert Josephson, Harold Wendt, Charles Geigerich; Frank Leonard; A. J. Cherry, Wallace L. Rockwell and James C. Cherry, special representative.

The Mid-West managers will meet at the Blackstone Hotel. Fourteen branch managers and nine exploitation representatives will attend. They are: J. J. Sampson, of Chicago; E. T. Gomersall, of Cincinnati; L. E. Harrington, of Dallas; A. M. Elliot, of Detroit; E. M. Booth, of Indianapolis; F. W. Young, of Kansas City; M. J. Weisfeldt; H. N. Holmes, of Omaha; Milton Simon, of St. Louis; Wm. Benjamin, of Des Moines; and Sherman Fitch, of Sioux Falls. "Curley" Clavert, special representative will also attend. The exploitation men will be Kramer, Smith, Weill, Hull, Weil, Hickey, Barnes, Greenberg and Heath.

"Straight from the Shoulder" Van tells how the pictures draw. See Page 663. Why not send him your opinions?

Back with Exterior Scenes for Picture

With an interesting collection of new photographs of Thomas Hardy in his home in Max Gate, Dorset, and all of the exterior scenes for the screen version of his novel, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" Frank Urson, assistant director for Marshall Neilan, and David Kesson, camera man, have just returned to New York from England.

Urson and Kesson said the feature of their English visit was their talk with Hardy at his home.

Urson and Kesson added that their chief difficulty in England was the bad weather. Kesson said that he kept a record and that during their five-week sojourn there were only 42 hours of sunshine.

"But we have some beautiful shots," he concluded. "One long shot of the town of Beaminster is one of the most beautiful I ever have seen."

Barrymore Said to Stage Great Fight

What Cosmopolitan describes as the most realistic hand-to-hand battle ever staged before the camera is that fought by Lionel Barrymore and Iven Linow in "The Enemies of Women," the super special feature which Cosmopolitan Productions is now picturizing from Vicente Blasco Ibanez's latest and, as many consider, his greatest story.

This screen battle, which was "shot" at the International Studios, Jackson Avenue, the Bronx, this week, is said to even surpass in tense thrills, earnestness and action Barrymore's fight with Louis Wolheim in Cosmopolitan's "The Face in the Fog," a fight which was hailed by the critics and public as the most exciting battle ever screened.

Linow is a champion Russian wrestler. He is a giant in size, measuring six feet three in height and weighs 225 pounds. Despite this fact, Lindow admits that Barrymore, recognized as one of the most proficient boxers in motion pictures, gave him the hardest tussle of his screen career. Alma Rubens is featured with Barrymore.

Logan Returns

Jacqueline Logan, who has completed her work as Nettie Vollar in George Melford's latest Paramount picture, "Java Head," has left New York for the coast, where she will have the principal feminine role in "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," a forthcoming Paramount picture with Walter Hiers as the star.

Increased Sales

As a result of the widespread attention accorded the Cosmopolitan picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, sales of the book by Charles Major have gone up by leaps and bounds in every city where the picture has been shown. Book sellers and libraries have a hard time keeping enough copies of the famous romance on hand.

Records Broken

Two box-office records of two Chicago theatres, operated by E. E. Benesch, were shattered by two recent Metro releases, "The Five Dollar Baby," starring Viola Dana, and the Louis Burston production, "The Forget-Me-Not." "The Five Dollar Baby" surpassed attendance records maintained for seven years at the Bell Theatre; and "Forget-Me-Not" showed the best day's receipts during one year of operation at the Liberty Theatre.

Ben Carre Starts on New Film

Ben Carre, Pyramid's art director, returned to New York several days ago and immediately began work on a new Pyramid production entitled, "Wife in Name Only," to be directed by George Terwilliger at this company's Long Island studio.

"Knighthood" Breaks Record

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, broke all records for attendance for three performances at the Criterion Theatre, New York, Thanksgiving Day, when it also started the twelfth week of its sensational Broadway run. Not a single seat was vacant during the three showings and extra chairs were placed in the rear of the theatre to meet the insistent demands of patrons.

In creating a new record for attendance and receipts in the twelfth week of a run, "Knighthood" has again struck a new note in motion picture circles. The capacity audiences which viewed the production on Thanksgiving Day evinced all the enthusiasm at its beauty of settings and lavishness of production that has led critics and leaders of art and literature to characterize it as a masterpiece in photodramatic art.

Weak Wednesdays

Exhibitors have complained that Wednesday never saw turnaway business in their towns, or even fair crowds.

Wednesday needn't be a poor show day. "Selling the Picture to the Public" is packed every week with ideas that other exhibitors have tried and found to be a tonic for business. Many ideas and stunts are being published in this practical department that you can use to build up your poorest day; ideas that cost as low as $2 to put over.

There won't be any weak Wednesdays for the man who avails himself of the practical helps found every week in "Selling the Picture to the Public."

Visits America to Investigate Market

L. Schwartz, concessionnaire for Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the Dutch East Indies, and owner of several theatres in Java, has just arrived from the Far East, expecting to stay a couple of months in America to investigate the market.

"The American productions are most liked in the Dutch East Indies." France comes next, followed by Italy and Germany. The last German productions imported at very low prices do not seem to satisfy the taste of our public.

The picture houses are mostly owned or controlled by four film importers, and a few individuals, viz: the Universal Film Co., the Australasian Film Co., the Middle East Film Co., the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and recently a new branch of the Paramount (Sydne's office). These firms have their head office in Soerabaya or Batavia; they import about 80 per cent. of the American production suitable for the requirements of the country, and are generally desirous of obtaining the sole right for any big film outside of their own production.

"Censorship is handicapping business to a great extent."

Navy and Vitagraph Co-operate on Film

The United States Navy Department has promised Vitagraph its full co-operation in the filming of the sea scenes for the forthcoming feature, "Masters of Men," adapted from the story by Morgan Robertson. The arrangements were made recently through Assistant Secretary of the Navy Theodore Roosevelt.

As one of the important sequences in "Masters of Men" is the Battle of Santiago Harbor near the close of the Spanish-American War, the coming U. S. naval maneuvers are very opportune. Vitagraph will send the cast and directors and mechanical staff to the Panama Canal to make these pictures.

"Masters of Men" is the second of the new series of special productions by twenty-four of the foremost authors planned by Vitagraph for the coming year. The first, "The Ninety and Nine," adapted from Ramsay Morris' famous melodrama of the stage, will be released during January.

American Tactics Amaze the British

Associated First National is said to be creating quite a stir among British exhibitors and the British picture public through its exploitation and advertising campaigns. Bruce Johnson, First National foreign manager, who has been in England for several weeks, has transplanted First National American methods into the British market without the least hesitation and this policy is winning out.

The big First National product now is being released almost concurrently with the releasing date in America. One of the first pictures put out, "Smilin' Through" is now doing big business wherever it is being shown.

"Oliver Twist," "Lorna Doone," "The Bond Boy," "The Eternal Flame," "The Masquerader" and other big First National pictures will soon be before the British public.

"Kentucky Derby" Has Premiere

"The Kentucky Derby," Universal's Jewel screen adaptation of Charles T. Dazey's celebrated stage melodrama, had its New York premiere during the past week at the B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. The premiere was slated for the Capitol Theatre, but the earliest date for that theatre available was in January, and Universal refused to hold the picture after its release date, December 4.

The crowds which filled the Broadway Theatre the past week formed a composite mixture. There were those who wanted to see a good race, now that the racing season has moved southward from New York. Others remembered the thrills of Dazey's old melodrama and knew they would get the same thrills, and more, perhaps, in the screen version. Others crowded to the theatre because they knew from the advance campaign on the picture they would find an appealing story of romance and adventure.

Goldwyn Buys Novel

Goldwyn has purchased the motion picture rights to an early story by Joseph Hergesheimer, author of "The Three Black Pennys," "Java Head," "The Bright Shawl" and other outstanding novels. The story which Goldwyn is to picturize is "Wild Oranges." The screen rights to Edgar Wallace's new mystery novel, "Captains of Souls," have also been purchased by Goldwyn.

F. B. O. Signs Baxter to Contract

Warner Baxter, who appeared opposite Ethel Clayton in her first Film Booking Offices of America release, has been placed under contract with F. B. O. to appear as leading man in future R-C productions.

Films Exteriors of Fred Niblo Film

All of the exterior scenes for the Fred Niblo photoplay version of "The Famous Mrs. Fair," have already been photographed, according to information received at the New York offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, which will release this motion picture.

PatheMakesDeal

Pathe reports the closing of a record booking deal with Southern Enterprises, whereby "Dr. Jack" will be played over that entire circuit at rental prices said to be the highest ever paid by that extensive organization for any picture. The contract covers first-run and repeat showings in many towns.

Big Campaign for "Lorna Doone"

A big campaign in connection with Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone," a First National release, is being put on throughout the country by Milton Bradley Company, publishers, of Springfield, Mass. The Bradley firm is putting out a de luxe edition of Blackmore's "Lorna Doone," and is making bookstore displays wherever the First National picture is being shown.

Engage Clark Robinson to Design Sets

Clark Robinson is engaged in designing the sets for "Backbone," now being made in New York by Distinctive Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Robinson was responsible for the settings of "Disraeli," starring George Arliss, the first picture to be made by Distinctive. The absolute fidelity to detail and period which marked the settings for this production, was one of the big factors in the great success of this picture.

The Canadian and English press, always a little loath to give praise to American products, especially in the case of those with an English locale, were particularly enthusiastic in their praise of the veracity, beauty and restraint of the settings of "Disraeli."

Selects Leads for Coming Film

Maurice Tourneur announces that Anna Q. Nilsson and Milton Sills will enact the leading roles in his forthcoming picturization of "The Isle of Dead Ships" for First National release.

Dorothy Gish in New Feature

Dorothy Gish will support Richard Barthelmess, in a picturization of Joseph Hergesheimer's story, "The Bright Shawl," which will be a First National release. This is Miss Gish's second appearance with Mr. Barthelmess, as they have just finished "Fury," soon to be released by First National.

Circus Used for Film Sets

The entire Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus was used in filming "Shirley of the Circus," the latest Shirley Mason production under the Fox banner. Many of the important scenes were "shot" under the real "big top," it is announced, during the recent visit of the big circus to the Pacific Coast cities.

Fox Film Started

Fox Film Corporation announces that production on "Man's Size," the William McLeod Raine story, has been started at the Hollywood studios with William Russell in the starring role. The scenario was prepared by Joseph F. Poland and Howard M. Mitchell will direct.

Sheehan to Tour South America

Clayton P. Sheehan, who for the past several years has been district manager for Fox Film Corporation with headquarters at Buffalo, has sailed for South America on the S. S. American Legion on an important mission for the organization.

Mr. Sheehan, whose extensive tour of the Latin American countries will be over a period of several months, is scheduled to visit Fox branches and agencies at the following points: Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Buenos Ayres, Argentine and the capitals and various important cities in Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Many important matters are in the hands of the Fox representative, and his mission is the result of the vast and rapid growth of the corporation in every exchange in the United States and Canada.

Begins Filming of "Woman of Bronze"

Filming has been started in Hollywood of "The Woman of Bronze," the stage play which will be picturized with Clara Kimball Young as the star. The photoplay is being produced by Harry Garson for release by Metro.

King Vidor, who recently directed Laurette Taylor in a Metro screen version of "Peg o' My Heart," has been engaged to serve in a similar capacity for Miss Young. In the supporting cast are John Bowers, Katherine McGuire, Lloyd Whitlock, Edwin Stevens and Edward Kimball.

"The Woman of Bronze" will be photographed by William McConnell. Joseph Wright is the art director. The story was translated by Paul Kester from the French novel by Henry Kistemacher and was adapted for the screen by Hope Loring and Louis Lighton.

Picture Is Proving to Be Big Success

Edward A. MacManus's production of "The Woman Who Fooled Herself," the Associated Exhibitors' feature in which May Allison and her husband, Robert Ellis, are featured, is proving a big hit with exhibitors, according to advices received at Associated's home offices.

Places where the picture has scored heavily are Chicago, at Barbee's Loop Theatre; in P. W. Scarborough's Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati; at Ben Apple's American in Troy, N. Y., and the Strand, Dayton, Ohio.

A few of the many other contracts which have been signed with Associated Exhibitors call for a week's showing in Jack Farran's Victoria Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., and three days in J. Elliott's Hippodrome, Youngstown, Ohio. In New York the photoplay has made the rounds of the Marcus Loew time, scoring a success everywhere, the statement from Associated says.

The story, by Charles A. Logue, who with Robert Ellis, also directed the production, is said to be a fast moving romance. In it May Allison has her first heavy dramatic role.

Books Series of Bible Films

With the idea of definitely combatting those elements hostile to motion pictures, and raising program standards as well, Finkelstein & Ruben have booked "The Voice of the Land" series of Bible pictures which are distributed by American Releasing, for Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. The initial picture of the series was shown November 25.

Pyramid Picture at Cameo Theatre

Friday, December 1, was gala night at the Cameo Theatre where Pyramid's "What Fools Men Are" was the attraction, supplemented on this occasion by the Hotel Ambassador orchestra of ten.

Sigrid Holmquist Chosen for Patricia Role

Sigrid Holmquist, instead of Claire Windsor, as previously announced, has been chosen for the role of Patricia in support of Pola Negri in "Bella Donna," George Fitzmaurice's current production for Paramount.

Miss Holmquist, who is one of the best known European screen stars, having appeared in Swedish Biograph productions, which have been widely distributed in foreign countries, is not new to Paramount audiences. She played the leading feminine role in Cosmopolitan's "Just Around the Corner," by Fannie Hurst.

Arranging Handling of Lloyd Film

J. C. Ragland, secretary of Associated Exhibitors, is in the South consulting with branch representatives of Associated and conferring with leading exhibitors regarding the handling of "Dr. Jack," Harold Lloyd's latest, big comedy feature.

Playgoers Closes Contract

Playgoers' Pictures closed a contract this week with Reginald Ward, under which it will distribute "A Pauper Millionaire," a comedy drama which he controls. The production was directed by Frank H. Crane.

"A Pauper Millionaire" is from the well-known story by Austin Fryers.

Preparing for an Extended Run

The Portola Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., which is on record as the first to book "Dr. Jack," is preparing for its extended run of Harold Lloyd's new five-reel comedy in an elaborate way—so Pathe has been notified. The "Dr. Jack" opening at the Portola will be about the middle of December. In the meantime the house is closed for alterations which will cost at least $75,000.

Metro Film Given Big Publicity

More than 4,000 lithographed sheets were posted in Dallas, Texas, in connection with the presentation at the Palace Theatre there of the Rex Ingram production for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda." This unusual advertising campaign was augmented by a proportionate amount of newspaper publicity, and it is the opinion of Dallas showmen, Metro says, that few productions have ever received such complete city-wide heralding.

Will Play Lead

Willard Mack, author of "Your Friend and Mine," which S-L (Sawyer-Lubin) Pictures is to produce for Metro, will enact a leading role in this production. This sketch was produced in vaudeville under the title of "The Rat."

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

Newsy Bits

Bobby North of Apollo Exchange, Inc., of New York, this week closed for the metropolitan rights to "Malcolm Strauss' Salome." He will exploit the picture elaborately. George H. Wiley, Inc., is distributing this feature in the independent market.

Eastern Manager Irving Lesser of Principal Pictures Corporation announces the acquisition by that company of a new special, entitled "Mind Over Motor." Further details concerning this picture will be available next week inasmuch as announcement of its acquisition was not made known until late this week.

The Lester Cuneo western pictures were sold this week to the Cuban Film Company of Havana for Cuba, according to a statement made by Irving Lesser.

Abbey Pictures, Inc., will produce a series of six pictures annually. Lola Lee is completing the continuity on the first picture on which production will be started next week in New York.

Oscar C. Bucheister, the art title writer, announced this week that he has moved his quarters to 130 West 46th street, New York. The quarters have been equipped with a new Bell & Howell camera and a complete outfit for making printed titles.

Independent film men are finding considerable satisfaction in the success being achieved by Eddie Bonns, now in charge of Goldwyn's exploitation department. Eddie was formerly with Warner Brothers. Since joining Goldwyn he has negotiated a series of stunts that have taken New York by storm, the best and hardest-boiled newspapers in the metropolis falling for his valuable stunts.

Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, returned to New York on Monday from Boston where on Sunday evening he attended the premier showing of "Oliver Twist," starring Jackie Coogan, at the Tremont Temple, where it will run for five weeks. "Oliver Twist" succeeds D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" at Tremont Temple, where that picture closed Saturday night.

While in Boston Mr. Lesser negotiated a deal with Franklin Film Exchange there, that company acquiring the New England rights to the two Principal Pictures, "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips and based on a story by Elinor Glyn, and "Chicago Sal," the Irving Cummings production, with Alice Lake and Milton Sills.

"After Six Days" will go into one of the legit Broadway theatres in New York after the first of the year, according to a report made by Bert Ennis, publicity director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, which owns the picture. Louis Weiss this week disposed of the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to the picture to Jake J. Cone of Los Angeles.

Carl Harthill, who for some time has been with the National Cosmopolitan Exchange in Chicago, has gone into business for himself. The exchange is known as Harthill Pictures, Inc. The first release is the Russell production, "Saved By Radio."

It is definitely known now that the next Equity production based on a story written by Daniel Carson Goodman will be entitled "Something for Nothing."

Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Tex., has moved to 1914 Main street.

The Week in Review

THE best evidence in the world that the independent has arrived is demonstrated in the willingness of the conceded "hard-boiled" first run exhibitors to play independent pictures. A careful compilation of first run engagements in key cities during the month of November shows that virtually every important theatre in the country during that four-week period showed an independent production. This is, indeed, a fact of which independents as a whole should be proud.

THREE letters were received from various distributors this week enclosing publicity and a note to the effect that "the buyers have been promised by me that they will get the usual trade paper publicity." What these gentlemen infer by the words, "usual trade paper publicity," is more than we can fully make out. Sufficient, however, none of these gentlemen was authorized to make any promise whatsoever. This department will positively not be concerned with promises made by any one other than executives of MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

GEORGE FECKE of Boston last week announced his acquisition of "Yankee Doodle, Jr.," for national independent distribution. Well, we hope Mr. Fecke will succeed in his efforts to properly merchandise this production. The manner in which this picture has been handled was shameful. It is a difficult task that Mr. Fecke has assumed, for much harm has been done and many buyers, who sought the picture months ago, became disgusted with the tactics utilized and abruptly terminated their negotiations.

A CERTAIN film man who is in the habit of handling one or two mediocre pictures annually met the writer in the lobby of Hotel Astor the other evening and protested against what he characterized "the rotten way his publicity was mutilated." We were indeed sorry for the gentleman. However, it would have been an insult to the intelligence of our readers to publish the "publicity" he submitted. We informed him, too, that what other trade papers did with his copy did not interest us. We strive to serve our readers and give them news and information in concise and readable style. If his "pieces"—as he put it—were not published it was because they lacked news value and were without any information in which the trade was interested.

WHEN we said months ago that we would do whatever we could to eliminate the "junk dealer" we meant what we said. And the gentleman above is a member of that notorious army. His "publicity" concerned "junk film" and we, for one, refuse to be a party to any movement that will encourage the operation of these get-rich-quick promoters.

UNLESS the unexpected happens the A. B. C. versus syndicate booking situation that has developed in New York will work to the best interests of anybody but exhibitors who are principally concerned in the venture. The A. B. C. bookers this week tied up some of the biggest product schduled for January and February release, but humor is reflected from the fact that the competitive bidding has brought about better prices for independent pictures in the metropolitan circles. Also, it is making the independents absolutely independent of the syndicate booking offices, which had been in the habit of fixing their own rental figures.

YES, as Al Lichtman said in an address he delivered Monday in Los Angeles, the "independent has arrived." Careful study of data published on the following pages will furnish proof in substantiation of this claim.

ERNEST SHIPMAN has grown to be quite a power in Canada. He started producing there about seven months ago and this week he announced the perfection of a distributing organization. Congratulations and greater success, Mr. Shipman.

WARNER BROTHERS again emphasized their enterprise this week when they had a special messenger, Dave Warner, make a flying trip to New York from Los Angeles with a print of "The Beautiful and Damned," which will be shown for the first time at the New York Strand Theatre next week. Mr. Warner arrived on the Twentieth Century Thursday morning and returned to California that same afternoon. Harry Warner, we understand, will return to the Coast within the next ten days to close several important deals he started under way when last in Los Angeles last month.

Trade Notes

William Fairbanks' westerns are going over strong in this territory, while the Richard Talmadge's are mopping up, particularly in the small town and neighborhood houses where this new star has worked up an unusual clientele of boosters.

The Hallroom Boys comedies are in big demand in this territory.

Carl J. Sonin, manager of Warner Brothers' Detroit Exchange, visited New York this week.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, and his assistant, J. Charles Davis, 2nd, returned to New York last week.

Leon D. Netter, special Al Lichtman sales representative, is making a tour of New York cities in the interests of his firm.

Joe Brandt, president of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, in a statement he gave out this week, said that Sherman S. Krellburg was in no way connected with his firm and that George P. Bromley and not Krellburg had been added to C. B. C.

George H. Callaghan's office this week disposed of Malcolm Strauss' "Salome" to George H. Wiley, Inc., for distribution in the independent market.

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has acquired from Jesse A. Levinson the United British Kingdom rights to the current release, "The Playthings of an Emperor."

W. Ray Johnston, vice-president of Arrow Film Corporation, reported this week the sale of "Night Life in Hollywood" to Frank Fay, of Southwestern Film Corporation, of Dallas, Tex.

Thomas Curran, special Arrow representative, who is on an extended trip, wired this week from Dallas, Tex., that business in that territory is on the jump. He is this week in Denver. He is studying conditions for Arrow as well as co-operating with exchanges handling Arrow pictures.

The title of the next Richard Talmadge special, according to a message from Phil Goldstone, has been changed from "The Fire Eater" to "The Smoke Eater."

Bobby North is authority for the statement that a novel will be written around Will Nigh's latest picture, "Notoriety."

Franklyn Backer, president of East Coast Productions, Inc., is planning a series of children showings of the first Frankie Lee comedy, "Robin Hood, Jr.," made by Clarence D. Bricker.

John N. Weber, manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, this week joined Sam Zierler's Commonwealth Film Corporation. Gustave F. Myers, general assistant to Mr. Weber, going to F. B. O., replacing Howard Estabrook in the Sales Promotion Department. David A. O'Malley, lately affiliated with P. A. Powers, will succeed Mr. Myers. Louis Baum, general manager of Equity, announced these changes this week.

Albert Dezel, of Master Advertisers, is now looking after the advertising and exploitation campaign for Frank Zambreno's Progress Pictures Exchange in Chicago. Zambreno has acquired Arrow's two latest features, "Streets of New York" and "Night Life in Hollywood."

C.C. Burr Activities Attracting Attention of Entire Industry; 3rd Hines Film Ready

What promises to be one of the most formidably leading producing and distributing concerns in the business is now being perfected with C. C. Burr at the helm of the enterprise, which already is the talk of the industry. Since the release of the first Johnny Hines production, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., Mastdon Films, Inc., and Master Films, Inc., has organized a string of independently operated exchanges through which he is releasing his product. With the advent of the new year, this organization will be considerably augmented. While no official announcement was available this week, this department is in a position to state that Mr. Burr's pretentious 1923 plans call for the production and distribution of at least 15 specials. Some of these are already in the making.

For some time the attention of the industry in general has been focussed on the meteoric progress of independents, but despite this general jump forward the fact remains that C. C. Burr with his enterprises has managed to keep his organization in the foreground in a season that can be justly characterized as a season of remarkable accomplishments. That Mr. Burr's organization will be one of the most important factors in the industry is a foregone conclusion, for by the first of the year he will have perfected a producing and distributing organization that will compare second to none in the business. He has engaged the services of R. W. Baremore, a well-known trade paper editor and an experienced exploitation and publicity expert, to take charge of the new exploitation department, with Lester Scott taking charge of the sales department.

In addition to distributing feature productions, Mr. Burr's corporation owns its own studios out in Glendale, Long Island, where it is producing several productions, namely, a third Johnny Hines production, "Luck," and another, under the supervision of Edgar Lewis, entitled "Fires of Youth." Burr is also producing a series of "Torchy" comedies starring Raymond McKee, but these are being released through Hodkinson Corporation. The current releases are the Johnny Hines feature, "Sure Fire Flint," which has proved sure-fire at its first runs, having set no less than 32 new records out of something like 50 first run showings. The other current release is "Secrets of Paris," a Whitman Bennett special, with a splendid array of stars. Another special that Burr and Affiliated Distributors are now releasing via independent exchanges are "The Last Hour," an Edward Sloman picture with Milton Sills, Carmel Myers, Pat O'Malley, Walter Long, Alec Francis, Jack Mower, and others.

Another week of concentrated production by Edgar Lewis on "Fires of Youth" was completed this week with the cast working all hours to keep up with the production program. James Kirkwood is bending every effort to give as great a performance in this feature as he did opposite Priscilla Dean in "Under Two Flags" and in his latest release, "The Ebb Tide," which is playing this week at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre in New York. Others in the all-star cast engaged by Director Lewis for "Fires of Youth" are Doris Kenyon, who did such splendid work in "Sure Fire Flint" and who is now appearing at a Broadway theatre in "Up the Ladder"; Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Mary Carr, whose wonderful mother characterizations have been the subject of much conversation and favorable comment, and little Russell Griffen, whom Burr recently signed for a long term. The first two weeks of production on this feature were spent in Up-State New York, the company returning to Glendale, L. I., only this week.

After seven weeks of hectic production, C. C. Burr announced this week that the third Johnny Hines special, "Luck," with Hines, Violet Mersereau, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Warner Richmond, Charles Murray, Flora Finch and Polly Moran, had been completed and has gone into the cutting room for final assemblage and titling. This task, it is estimated, will probably consume another two weeks, with the result that "Luck" will be ready for general release about Dec. 15 or shortly thereafter.

"Luck" was written by Frank R. Adams and adapted for the screen by Doty Hobart.

Business Booming Everywhere, Report of Principal Scouts

Representatives of Principal Pictures Corporation in various key centres, in reports received this week in New York by Eastern Manager Irving Lesser, point out that motion picture theatre patronage, despite the advent of the holidays, is increasing steadily. The Middle-western cities are recovering rapidly with many of them at present considerably more business than a year ago and within a short distance behind records attained during the recent world war.

These representatives or scouts were sent out to ascertain conditions and the attitude of exhibitors concerning independent productions. The reports of these scouts indicate a heavy demand for pictures with "names" and the feeling that exhibitors are not concerning themselves with what companies make these pictures so long as they fill their requirements.

That "name" pictures backed by stories written by well-known authors whose identity carries box office value are in demand is made apparent by the unusual interest being manifested by exhibitors in the first two releases of Principal Pictures, "The World's a Stage," which is the very latest story written by Elinor Glyn, and the Irving Cummings production, "Chicago Sal." Through the courtesy of Associated First National Exhibitors Circuit, Principal Pictures was able to star Dorothy Phillips in the Glyn story. Others in the cast are Bruce McRae, who is now starring on Broadway in "The Awful Truth," and Kenneth Harlan. In "Chicago Sal" Miss Alice Lake appears in a role that is entirely different from those she has been regularly enacting. However, those who have seen the picture characterize her work as the best of her career. Milton Sills is her leading man.

"Independent's Day Here"—Al Lichtman

LOS ANGELES— (Special) — The independent production has arrived.

Exhibitors now recognize the worth of pictures made outside the wing of the so-called "big league" producers and are holding time open for them.

Despite statements to the contrary, the market will never close for good pictures.

This summarizes what Al Lichtman and B. P. Schulberg said at a dinner tendered by them to the visiting First National executives at Marcel's Cafe on Monday evening, December 4. Preferred Pictures, Inc., producers for the Lichtman Corporation also make the Katherine MacDonald pictures which are released through First National.

About 200 guests were present, among them many notables in the local film world, including Marshall Neilan, Irving Thalberg and Abraham Lehr.

The Al Lichtman Corporation was launched in June. Lichtman mentioned this fact when he spoke about his complete faith in the future of the independent field. He said, in part:

"I have kept careful pulse on the independent field and I think I know in what direction it is traveling. I tell you without any attempt to disguise the facts that the independent production has arrived to stay. Exhibitors everywhere recognize the worth of good pictures, no matter what the source. They are fast approaching the realization that worthwhile pictures are to be supported no matter what their source. In every section of the country exhibitors are holding time open for pictures to come.

"Since I have entered this business I have heard about the closing of the market and the freezing out of the small fry. No such thing will ever happen. It can't happen because good pictures backed by the proper sales effort will go over and go over with a decided wallop."

When Schulberg spoke he delved into the sentiment among independent producers on the Coast and said that he felt he accurately gauged their thought when he said they were much encouraged over the manner in which independently made pictures were catching hold.

"The measure of success that this company may have attained in the short time it has been in business is shared by others. It is by no means confined to ourselves. That in itself is a healthy indication. The fact that important theatres are playing pictures originating in studios aside from those of the powerful producers is exceedingly encouraging. It is bound to result in the production of better pictures. I know that, so far as Preferred is concerned, we are going ahead with the fullest sort of confidence in the future. Our production units are working at capacity. They will be kept that way."

New Gotham 'Change Opens

With the official opening of the Renown Pictures, Inc., on Thursday, December 7, a new exchange organization took its place in the New York territory serving New York City and State and Northern New Jersey. J. Bellman is manager.

A carefully selected list of meritorious productions are scheduled for release by the new organization. Its initial offering will be a Principal Pictures Corporation special, Dorothy Phillips in "The World's a Stage." This production will be followed by Edward Dillon's "Women Men Marry" in which E. K. Lincoln, Florence Dixon, Hedda Hopper and Julia Swayne Gordon play the leading roles.

"A Woman in Chains," with E. K. Lincoln, Martha Mansfield and Mrs. Rodolph Valentino will also be available.

Lichtman-Schulberg's 1922-23 Plans; West Coast Independent Studio News

LOS ANGELES (Special)—Al Lichtman and B. P. Schulberg are holding daily conferences at the Mayer-Schulberg studio over future Preferred product. Lichtman arrived last week and has been in conference with Mr. Schulberg ever since his arrival here. One of the matters under discussion concerns the production of "The Broken Wing," the stage play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, which Schulberg purchased last week. This picture will be an early Spring release of Al Lichtman Exchanges.

Shortly after his arrival here Mr. Lichtman viewed "The Hero" and "Are You a Failure?" The former was directed by Louis Gasnier and the latter by Tom Forman. These will be the fourth and fifth Lichtman releases. Following these showings Lichtman wired the exchanges as follows:

"Just experienced the extreme pleasure of reviewing our next two productions, 'The Hero' and 'Are You a Failure?' and without mental reservations of any kind I am proud to state that these two pictures are superior to any you have had from us to date and will both prove outstanding box-office successes fit for every class of theatre anywhere. You may without any hesitancy spread this information to all exhibitors in your territory, as the pictures themselves will say more than I can convey to you in mere words.

"I am also happy to inform you that our next two productions, 'Poor Men's Wives' and 'The Girl Who Came Back,' now in course of production, are being prepared deliberately with the attempt to turn out even greater pictures and with exactly the peculiar appeal contained in 'Rich Men's Wives,' only bigger. From the rushes on 'Poor Men's Wives' seen to date I believe this result will be accomplished."

"Fatty" Karr, who is to be starred in a series of two-reel comedies to be marketed by Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, started work last week on a second comedy, entitled "Long Skirts."

Phil Goldstone has reengaged William H. Howard, who directed "Deserted at the Altar," to direct a big suner special, production of which will start about the first of the year, featured with an up-to-date unusual theme and an all star cast. Announcement of title, which is from a popular book, will be made shortly.

The first of the new series of Richard Talmadge productions, "The Speed King," will be a December release. It is said to be the most spectacular picture that Richard Talmadge has been seen in, and all who have viewed it believe that it is going to make a big hit.

Ben Wilson, one of the most important directors on the West Coast, who is engaged in creating pictures for Arrow release, suffered a twenty thousand dollar loss and a severe setback when the cutting room of the Berwilla studios, where Mr. Wilson produces, was destroyed by fire.

Eddie Lyons, who is also producing his Mirthquake Comedies—released by Arrow—in the Berwilla studios, lost a new comedy which he had just completed with Bobby Dunn. Both Mr. Wilson and Mr. Lyons are speeding up production, in order to make up for the loss which was imposed upon them. It is said that the material losses were covered by insurance, therefore the only thing they have to contend with is the time element.

Morris R. Schlank, president of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., announces that the A. & R. Film Exchange of Dallas, Texas, presided over by Jack K. Adams, has purchased the entire line of features released through Anchor.

Frederick G. Becker, producing director of the two-reel features starring little Arthur Trimble, now being released through the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., is very ill with pneumonia at his Hollywood home. Mr. Becker suffered shock and exposure when he rescued Master Arthur from a watery grave when the boy was thrown into a lake near Los Angeles. The boy star recovered at once but Mr. Becker caught a severe cold, which slowly developed into pneumonia.

The latest production starring Hobart Bosworth, entitled "The Law of the Sea," has been acquired by the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., according to Morris R. Schlank, head of Anchor. "The Law of the Sea," which was produced by the Motion Picture Utility Corporation, was directed by William H. Clifford and is a five-part story with the principal scenes laid at sea. Clarence Badger, well known director and formerly of the Goldwyn staff, wrote the continuity from an original story by Ethel Gillett.

Harry Beaumont has been engaged by the Warner Brothers to direct the screen version of Sinclair Lewis' novel, "Main Street," according to an announcement. According to reports from the Warner coast studios Monte Blue, Harry Meyers and Louise Fazenda have been signed to play prominent parts in the production.

"Main Street" is declared to be the greatest novel ever written or rural America. It serves to reveal the bitclash of new, free ideas against the entrenched complacence of small town tradition. The novel was picturized by Julien Josephson.

Los Angeles—Karl Struss, one of the expert cameramen under contract to B. P. Schulberg of Preferred Pictures, Inc., received word this week from Stattle that he had again won the annual prize for pictorial photography at the Frederick and Nelson exhibit there. Struss was former cameraman for Cecil De Mille. Since joining the Preferred he has been attached to the Gasnier company, for which he filmed "Rich Men's Wives," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "The Hero."

Los Angeles—Tom Forman has started work on "The Girl Who Came Back" for Preferred Pictures, Inc. The film is an adaptation of the stage play by Charles E. Blaney and Samuel Ruskin Golding, and calls for certain episodes dealing with New York life. These will be filmed in the East, but the bulk of the production will be made at the Mayer-Schulberg studio here. "The Girl Who Came Back" will be Forman's release through the Al Lichtman Corp. to follow "Are You a Failure?"

Los Angeles—Betty Francisco has been signed by Gasnier to appear in his new production, "Poor Men's Wives." This rounds ont the cast for the picture, which includes Barbara La Marr, Richard Tucker, Zasu Pitts, David Butler and Miss Francisco.

Los Angeles—When Preferred places "The Broken Wing" production, the aeroplane crash to earth which is the climax of the story, will be put on in an elaborate manner. Charles W. Goddard, the co-author with Paul Dickey, is the author of two popular Pearl White serials, "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine."

George H. Wiley Acquires Malcolm Strauss' "Salome"

George H. Wiley, Inc., has acquired Malcolm Strauss' "Salome," a magnificent screen version of the immortal story, with a distinguished cast of players, for distribution in the independent market, according to an announcement just issued from Mr. Wiley's office.

Heading the list of featured players are Diana Allen as Salome, Vincent Coleman as the Prince of Egypt, and Christine Winthrop as the wicked Queen Herodias. Among those supporting this well-known trio are Ben Probst, Tom Cameron, Al Stuart and Ailan Hardy.

Arrow Has a Mystery Feature

Arrow's first contribution to the current quota of mystery plays will be "A Woman's Faith," which is now ready for screen inspection, having been completely re-titled and re-edited by J. S. Harrington and Richard Weil of the Arrow organization.

"A Woman's Faith" is said to be a combination mystery and society drama, with its scenes laid in India and in London. It centres about the discovery, by a noted physician, of an almost miraculous serum which is capable of effecting incredible cures.

Shipman Forms New Canadian Release Firm

MONTREAL— (Special) —Negotiations were concluded this week, whereby a new distributing unit throughout the Dominion of Canada was formed for the purpose of giving exclusive exploitation to the Canadian-made productions of Ernest Shipman. The new organization will be known as the Ernest Shipman Film Service.

The productions will be released at the rate of one a month, the first five scheduled for distribution being "The Man from Glengarry," "Glengarry School Days," "The Rapids," "Blue Water" and "Latin Love."

The franchise for this product in the province of Ontario and Western Canada has been acquired by William Cranston, who established the United Artists in Canada; while the franchise for Quebec, the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland has been awarded to D. A. Burpee, formerly with Price, Waterhouse Company, and Maurice West, formerly with the Fox Film Corporation and the Mark Brook enterprises. The latter have opened offices on the ninth floor of the Albee Building, Montreal.

The new all-Canadian campaign will be inaugurated Sunday, December 10th, with a showing of "The Man from Glengarry" at the Capitol Theatre, Montreal. Both Ernest Shipman, the producer, and Ralph Connor, the author of this stirring story of the rivermen's fued, are expected to be in attendance at the opening.

Seeleye Film Is a Winner

BOSTON (Special)—Charles Seeleye, formerly manager of Arrow's New York Exchange, was in New York Saturday negotiating for the sale of the New England rights to his picture, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," which played to a splendid financial week at the Strand Theatre, in Providence, R. I., last week. The picture is said to have grossed $3 900 during the first four days at 35 cents night top prices. Extra performances had to be given.

News that George A. Fecke, of Motion Picture Distributing Company, had taken over the national distribution of "Yankee Doodle, Jr.," caused no surprise in local film circles, for there was a rumor circulated to that effect for several weeks.

The Elmer Clifton special, "Down To the Sea in Ships," opened the second week engagement at Selwyn Theatre here Sunday. This is the first big time picture to play this house, and for opposition has "One Exciting Night" and "When Knighthood Was in Flower." However, it played to capacity all week.

Negotiations are under way for a premier showing of the Burton King production "Shylock of Wall Street," at the Bijou Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., late this month, with the star, Zena Keefe, who formerly was a stock leading woman in that city, appearing in person.

Betty Blythe, in "How Women Love," was the headline attraction at B. F. Keith Boston Theatre here this week. The picture was cleverly and heavily advertised for miles about.

Warner's Buy Foreign Rights

Warner Brothers have purchased the foreign rights to "The Tie That Binds," according to Gus Schlesinger, general manager of the foreign department.

The story is said to deal with one of the most vital problems of today with an appeal as broad as humanity itself.

The cast, containing a number of popular screen players, includes Barbara Bedford, Walter Miller, Raymond Hatton, William P. Carleton, Robert Edeson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Marion Swayne, and Effie Shannon.

Pioneer Film Exchange and The Crescent Film Corporation of Omaha have consolidated with Al Kahn, who also operates the Crescent Exchange in Kansas City as the head.

Unique Exploitation On "Rags to Riches"

LOS ANGELES (Special).—Two exploitation campaigns in different sections of the country were put over in connection with the Warner Brothers picture, "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production featuring Wesley Barry. Loew's State Theatre, inaugurated a number of street ballyhoos and a Salvation Army "Rags to Riches" drive. In Buffalo, New York, the Mark-Strand Theatre utilized the many novelties available with the feature, in addition to conducting several contests in the local dailies.

For a street ballyhoo Loew's State used a trick buggy with a swayback horse, placing banners on the sides and back. It was driven by a man in rags with another person arrayed in full dress at his side. The buggy was paraded down the main streets three days before the showing of the picture, and during the first two days of its run.

Thousands of kids wearing false faces of Barry and carrying banners paraded the streets, Salvation Army trucks carried banners on both sides, and booths were opened at prominent corners for the public to deposit old clothes. Over 500 window cards were placed in downtown stores. Six foot cut-out letters outlined with chalk and filled in with shellac were painted on twelve main boulevards leading into the city of Los Angeles.

Burr Closes Many Deals On "Luck" and "Last Hour"

Evidence of the rapidity with which C. C. Burr is disposing of territory on his various features was illustrated this week when it was announced that Johnny Hines' latest feature, "Luck," was sold to Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures for New York State and Northern New Jersey, to Skirboll Brothers Gold Seal Productions of Cleveland, to Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh for Western Pennsylvania territory, and to Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

"Blind Justice," now definitely titled "The Last Hour," was also purchased by Metro Film Exchange for its territory, as was "Fires of Youth" and "Secrets of Paris," both C. C. Burr products. "Secrets of Paris," which just completed a record-breaking week at Fay's Theatre in Providence, has been sold to Skirboll Brothers Gold Seal Productions of Cleveland, Major Film Company of Boston for the entire New England States, Supreme Film Company of Los Angeles for distribution on the Coast, and all foreign rights with the exception of Alaska and Newfoundland to William Vogel, New York City.

Warner Buys New Pictures to Star Wesley Barry

Wesley Barry, the Warner Brothers' star, arrived in New York last week after completing a ten weeks' vaudeville tour in a juvenile skit. The tour was cancelled in order to give the youngster an opportunity to enjoy the holidays prior to returning to the Warner coast studios to begin the first of three features for next season.

Two plays that made George M. Cohan famous, and one of Charles Dickens' masterpieces have been secured for Barry. The Cohan plays are "Litt le Johnny Jones" and "George Washington, Jr.," the Dickens masterpiece being "David Copperfield."

Will Re-Issue "Border Legion"

Following the success of T. Hayes Hunter's "Desert Gold," the recently reissued Zane Grey story, Hopp Hadley announced this week the reissue of another Zane Grey story which is also a T. Hayes Hunter production. "The Border Legion," starring Hobart Bosworth and Blanche Bates, will now be given a chance to try to duplicate its former triumphs.

Between Ourselves

THANKS
For cards.
We were thankful
For hundreds of things:
Fact every independent had
Everything to be thankful for.
And now that the turkey has been Consumed we'll talk plain turkey about
A lot of things we saw and heard last week.
While chatting with our friend, Harry Crull, who Now manages the E. F. Albee interests in Little Rhody,
We were informed via a long distance call that Dr. W. E. Shellenberger
Of Arrow Film Corporation had taken over Burton King's newest picture,
"Shylock of Wall Street," which we will say is some grab for the Doc who Had just got back from an important trip about the country. But then Doctor
Is one of those gentlemen who never waits—he goes after things in a big way
And the best thing about that policy is that Shellenberger gets what he goes after.
Hot cookies! Look at those Warner "boys." There's no grass growing under their feet.
Their next special, "Beautiful and Damned," opens at the New York Strand on Sunday. Great cast!
And some advance lobby display. Attractive frames and novelties that keep Strand lobby jammed continuously.
See where George Fecke of Boston, is branching out. Nothing surprising about that, for George's a hustler 100 per cent.
"Yankee Doodle, Jr.," needed a real daddy. Good picture, but it was amateurishly handled. George should make money with it.
Charley Seeleye is another film man who has Providence to thank for the premiere showing of his picture, "Affairs of Lady Hamilton," at the Strand there was a knockout, financially.
Al Lichtman's on the coast and when he gets back, we, for one, are looking forward to some big news. "The Broken Wing" should make a good picture. And making good pictures seems to be a B. P. Schulberg hobby.
By the way, B. P. Schulberg, is a daddy again. Yep, "Sonya Gladys and Seymour Wilson Schulberg announce the birth of their brother, Stuart Harding, Friday, November seventeen, nineteen hundred and twenty-two."
Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, is angling for the screen rights of a number of successful plays now playing Broadway theatres. Looks like Principal Pictures is going to do real things.
Their first two pictures, "The World's a Stage" and "Chicago Sal," tentatively titled that, are wows, too. But in the language of Savoy-and-Brennan "you don't know the half of it, dearie." You must come over and see these Lesser boys hustle—you must.
And just pipe Charley Burr. There's a hustler if ever there was one. He's lined up a program of pictures, now in production, that promise to outdo anything he has offered in the past. Hear Dell Henderson is about to sign up with C. C. to make another picture.
Joe Brandt's another live-one, who with Jack and Harry Cohn, is accomplishing and carrying out every promise he made. That's the big thing. The wise-ones were skeptical about "More To Be Pitied," but, gosh, what a flop they did, for the picture's a clean-up everywhere.
Bobby North, Bill Nigh and Larry Weber are an unbeatable combination. Bobby knows show business backwards. Nigh's an Al showman-director-producer, and Larry's the last word in anything pertaining to amusement. No wonder "Notoriety" is going like hot cakes.
No use kidding yourself; the public knows what it wants. And it doesn't want junk, either. That's being proven every day. For the junk is to be relegated to the scrap heap. And that won't break anybody's heart. But 'sfunny, business isn't as good in spots as it was in the hot weather.
'S a fact.

WELL STAGED—SUSPENSE—A FIRST-CLASS MYSTERY—ESPECIALLY ATTRACTIVE FOR THE WOMEN—EXCELLENT CAST—FINELY PLAYED—GOOD DIRECTION in

are only a few of the good things George Blaisdell says about it.

Warner Brothers' Broadway Break-in Proof of Independent Film Demand

First run engagements of independent pictures have come so fast and furiously during the past six weeks that the attention of the entire industry is focused on this branch of the business. The Warners have concluded an important deal with the Mark Strand interests whereby their five specials will be given first run showings at the Strand Theatre in New York. The first Warner picture to go into that house will be "The Beautiful and Damned," with Kenneth Harlan and Marie Prevost. This run starts on Sunday and will be followed with the Wesley Barry special, "Heroes of the Street." It is possible that Wesley Barry will make personal appearances during this engagement.

But the phenomenal showing of independent productions is confined to no one section nor one concern either. The Warner Brothers, inspired by the remarkable success of the past months, have announced a schedule of 18 productions in addition to the seven announced last Spring. Al Lichtman Corporation is equally enthusiastic about the future. This enthusiasm was inspired through the splendid support given the Al Lichtman initial releases, "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows." C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., has joined the producing-distributing faction in the independent field and, because of the encouraging support his efforts have received, he, too, has augmented his plans and today is at the helm of an organization that is progressing in leap and bound fashion.

Arrow Film Corporation is also preparing for an unusual new year of added activity. Dr. W. E. Shallenberger returned last week from a trip throughout the country and negotiated important tieups with important exchanges. Details of these deals will be published in a later issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD. He also has acquired in addition to the regular Arrow output, two Burton King productions, "Streets of New York" and "Shylock of Wall Street." In production are "The Little Red Schoolhouse" and "Lost in a Big City." There are several pictures now being made. Equity Pictures Corporation, according to General Manager Lou Baum, is lining up an extensive list of features, the next one of which will be a Daniel Carson Goodman special entitled "Something for Nothing." Principal Pictures Corporation, according to announcements appearing elsewhere and made by Eastern Manager Irving Lesser, will release something like 24 productions of high class order. Other companies are also planning an increase in productions.

"Streets of New York," the Burton King special which Arrow is releasing, received its metropolitan premiere the first three days of this week at Loew's spacious State Theatre business being reported as capacity at every show.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," Charles Seeleye costume production dealing with Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton, proved a huge box-office winner Thanksgiving week at the Strand Theatre where it grossed the remarkable amount of about $7 000 on a week considered generally weak in this city. Manager Reid and Seeleye co-operated on the exploitation campaign, which was productive of unusual tieups.

CHICAGO (Special)—The Lubliner & Trinz circuit here has booked the initial Al Lichtman special for its entire circuit. "Rich Men's Wives" played the Senate Theatre to one of the biggest weeks that house has had in some time.

CHICAGO (Special)—"Rich Men's Wives" was the attraction at Barbee's Loon Theatre and, despite the hitter opposition, four opposition houses, playing Rodolph Valentino pictures, did a tremendous business on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, at which latter time this despatch was wired to New York.

BALTIMORE MD. (Special)—Warner Brothers' "Rags to Riches" did a turnaway business at its local premiere showing at the New Theatre here this week. The picture opened on Monday afternoon to a turnaway attendance with business holding up Tuesday and Wednesday, and indications that it would equal the house's mark if not better it.

TOLEDO, O. (Special)—The Irving Cummings production, "The Man's From Hell River," starring Irving Cummings with Eva Novak and Wallace Beery, surprised local showmen, for this picture promises to be one of the most consistent money-making productions shown at a downtown picture house, judging from the gross takings for the first few days.

PITTSBURGH (Special)—H. C. Simeral Inc., of Pittsburgh, Pa., who purchased recently from Arrow Film Corporation many of their biggest and best pictures, are meeting with much encouragement from the exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory, who show themselves as being thoroughly sold on Arrow product. The Minerva Theatre, a Fifth Avenue house in Pittsburgh, has hooked "The Streets of New York" for an early showing, while "Night Life in Hollywood" got away to a big start at the Globe Theatre in McKeesport on Monday, November 27th.

WASHINGTON (Special) — "Shadows," a Tom Forman production for the Al Lichtman Corporation, opened at Moore's Rialto on Sunday and played to 2,676 paid admissions more than "Rich Men's Wives" at the same theatre. Moore, in a wire to Al Lichtman, said:

"'Rich Men's Wives' pleased our patrons immensely, but 'Shadows' opened yesterday (December 3) at the Rialto playing to two thousand seventy-six paid admissions over 'Rich Men's Wives.' Congratulations and many thanks."

NEW YORK—Contracts for first-runs on "Shadows" continue to pile up at the Lichtman Corporation's offices. New contracts from the Liberty, Long Beach, Cal., and the T. D. and L. Theatre at Pasadena have been received. The Isis at Topeka, Kansas, and the Liberty, Wheeling, W. Va., have also contracted for the picture. Reade's Hippodrome, Cleveland, and the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, open with the picture on Sunday. In each city it will play for one week.

Anderson May Do Comeback

KANSAS CITY (Special) — Fred Church recently was here discussing the future production plans of G. M. (Broncho Buster) Anderson, who, it is understood here, is planning to do a comeback in the form of a series of western pictures in which he will be starred. Church conferred with Al Kahn, of the Crescent Exchange, while in this city last week.

Business during the past week in this territory held up particularly well, with indications that it will shoot upward again after the holidays which always put a crimp in local theatre attendance.

Truly B. Wildman, of the Enterprise Exchange, announced this week that the exchange will move into new quarters directly opposite those of Paramount Exchange.

Al Kahn, who is handling the Warner Brothers product in this territory, finds a heavy demand for "Beautiful and Damned," a print of which has not yet been received by him. This picture is seemingly the most popular of the entire Warner output, insofar as exhibitors are concerned.

George Behan is in this territory making personal appearance in conjunction with first-run showings of his "The Sign of the Rose."

"The Love Nest" to Producers Security

Arrangements were completed this week that places Wray Physiog's heart interest drama "The Love Nest," with Producers Security Corporation for distribution. The feature players are Richard Travers and Jean Scott.

Joe Brandt Tips to What Public Wants

An interesting statement comes this week from Joe Brandt, President of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, to the effect that if motion picture producers will feel the pulse of the reading public, they will have a definite gauge whereby they can judge the probabilities of success or failure for a motion picture.

It is his belief that any producer or distributor would do well to follow closely the periodicals and newspapers of the country which carry short stories, novels, or serials, and to watch the trend their contents takes from time to time, because just so surely as this trend varies in any degree, so the trend not only of motion pictures but even of the current stage plays will be reflected and variegated.

It is to the result of such study that the production of the C. B. C. features "More to be Pitied" and "Only A Shopgirl" were due. It has always been Mr. Brandt's own policy in making his various trips throughout the country and from Coast to Coast to make a study of the attitude of the public toward various publications and to note the newstand sales of the fiction magazines, keeping in mind the feature story of the publication. And he has found that whenever a new story of a particularly dramatic type has been featured, there has been a brisk demand for that particular publication as against others that feature stories of a banal character or one that does not from its title or quick reading indicate virile situations with red-blooded characters.

Berman to Give Special Warner Picture Showing

PHILA[illegible] (Special)—All arrangements have been completed for an invitation world premier showing of Warner Brothers' latest Wesley Barry feature, "Heroes of the Street," at the Knickerbocker Theatre here Sunday evening, Dec. 10. Lou Berman, owner of Independent Film Corporation, which is handling the distribution of Warner productions in this territory, will be in charge of the special showing at which Wesley Barry, Harry Warner of New York, members of the Police Department, mayor and other Philadelphia officers will be present.

Business in this territory has run into the usual before Christmas status, with indications that that period, however, will show a better return, based on the figures compiled last season.

Many of the Philadelphia independent exchangemen went to New York Saturday to attend the annual hall and supper of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at Hotel Astor.

The Al Lichtman Exchange here, on the basis of business done on its first release, gives promise of setting a record for gross bookings and net business done on the single product of one company, for bookings on "Shadows" and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" are pouring in.

Metro Exchange is now handling three of Charles C. Burr's big productions, namely, "Secrets of Paris," "Luck," the next Johnny Hines feature, and "Blind Justice," with an all-star cast.

Southerners Start Aggressive Campaign

ATLANTA, GA. (Special)—Southern States Film Company, with offices here and in New Orleans, Memphis and Dallas, is announcing an unusual lineup of feature films for the current month. These include Warner Brothers' "The Beautiful and Damned" and "Heroes of the Street" and C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" and "Only a Shop Girl."

With the Charlotte office of Enterprise Distributing Corporation now open, that concern is concentrating on the Lon Chaney special, "Flesh and Blood," which is making an unusual showing in the southeastern territory, according to reports from exhibitors.

A canvass of exhibitors in this territory shows that western pictures are in big demand in this section, with light society ranking second in popularity.

Principal Pictures Corp. Closes Deal Involving Approximately $340,000

Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, this week announced the receipt of a lengthy telegram from Sol Lesser, on the Coast, concerning the acquisition by that company of screen and stage rights to Harold Bell Wright's novels. The deal, according to the Coast dcspatch received by Mr. Lesser, fixes the amount involved in this deal at approximately $340,000. Nine volumes are involved in the transaction, and these are estimated to have been read by more than 14,000,000 people, for that many copies have been published and distributed in all parts of the world.

The books that will go down into history via the silver sheet route include the following popular works: "The Eyes of the World," "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," "The Uncrowned King," "The Winning of Barbara Worth," "The Calling of Dan Matthews," "The Shepherd of the Hills," "The Printer of Udell's," "When a Man's a Man" and "Their Yesterdays."

Principal Pictures Corporation, through its officers, Sol Lesser as president, Michael Rosenberg as vice-president, A. L. Core as secretary, Irving Lesser as Eastern manager, and Adolph Bemish as treasurer, plan to start production on the first story at once. "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" has been selected as the first picture, and casting already is well under way. Frank Lloyd, director of the latest Jackie Coogan picture, "Oliver Twist," has been signed to assist in the continuity.

Sol Lesser, in a later statement received in New York this week by Irving Lesscr, said that Principal Pictures Corporation intends spending approximately $250,000 on each production.

Principal Will Remake Two H. B. Wright Stories

Announcement was made in New York this week by Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, that that firm, because of the popularity of the subjects, will re-make two famous Harold Bell Wright stories that years ago, when adapted to the screen attracted wide attention. These are "The Eyes of the World" and "The Shepherd of the Hills." These, like Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country" and Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist," will be refilmed with each and every modern improvement that only the years that have elapsed in this industry can give.

Meanwhile, Eastern Manager Irving Lesser is concentrating on the distribution of the company's two initial productions, the Elinor Glyn special, "The World's a Stage," with Dorothy Phillips featured, and Bruce McRae and Kenneth Harlan, and the Irving Cummings feature, "Chicago Sal," co-starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills.

Shallenberger and Al Kahn Have Big Deal Under Way

OMAHA, NEB.—(Special).—Al Kahn of the Crescent Film Exchange has augmented his staff. Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, while on his tour of the country, was in this city aud was here for four days, conferring daily with Mr. Kahn. It is reliably learned that Messrs. Shallenberger and Kahn effected au agreement wherehy Mr. Kahn will in the future handle most of the big Arrow features in this territory. No official announcement was given out, however, from either party after the conferences.

That the Shallenberger visit to this city was an important one insofar as Crescent Exchange is concerned is accepted as being a fact among film men in this city. Dr. Shallenberger while here visited no other exchange. In fact, after the four days' of conferences Kahn went to New York while "Bud" Barkey, manager of the local Crescent Exchange, went down to Denver.

That there is a strong probability that Arrow may be associated with Al Kahn and his associates in the operation of exchanges in this city, Kansas City and in Denver is more than probable.

Fontenelle Film Company of this city is authority for the announcement that it has purchased twelve new pictures for distribution in Nebraska. The first subject is "Easy Street" and represents the first of the Charles Chaplin classics this exchange has acquired for distribution in this territory.

Fontenelle Film Company also has acquired the new David Butler series. The first two issues are "The Milky Way" and "According to Hoyle." This exchange is specializing on short subjects, on which it is doing an enormous business.

Business in this territory is picking up considerably with reports from exchangemen and exhibitors equally enthusiastic concerniug the future. Until the latter part of October motion picture patronage had been very slim. Particularly true was this in the rural sections of the territory. Business in Omaha and Des Moines has been steadily improviug.

Exhibitors in Nebraska and Iowa are about to witness the greatest campaign ever executed on a special motion picture. Outdoing all his previous exploitation achievements, Harold Horne, head of Horne's Exploitation Service, has just completed a bewildering campaign on D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," which will be soon released hy Liberty Films, Inc., of this city. Candy manufacturers, nationally known oil companies, cigar manufacturers, biscuit makers, dry goods concerns and many others have been lined up.

Independents Are Progressing in Canadian Houses

MONTREAL, ONT.—(Special).—Independent productions have grown in exhibitor demand in the Dominion, judging from reports that have been pouring into the independent distributing offices in this city, Toronto, Wiunipeg and Vancouver. There are two independent producers now making Canadian pictures. However, the most popular of these is none other than Ernest Shipman of New York, who has the patronage and financial backing of some of the shrewdest business men and capitalists in the Dominion He already has completed two pictures and from the schedule announced recently it is evident that he will make a series of six with David Hartford assuming the directorial reins.

Arrow Film Corporation's independent productions in the Dominion will be released by Stephenson Attractions, Ltd., of Toronto, which, by the way, is making rapid progress.

"Night Life in Hollywood," Arrow newest picture, opened at the Grand Opera House in Toronto, Ont., on Monday night to a turn away business. The box office statement on Tuesday night indicated a record-breaker for this picture at its premier showing in Canada.

Another motion picture producing company is well under way with roots in Montrael. This company is being promoted by Harry Kaufman, formerly assistant manager of Regal Films Corporation. It will be known as the Anti-Narcotic Film Company, Limited, and is being formed to combat the drug and white slave traffic in Canada. Co-operating with Mr. Kaufman is said to be Judge Emily Murphy and S. Morgan Powell, dramatic editor of the Montreal Star, the latter writing the scenario for the first picture which will be photographed in Quebec.

"The Rapids" is the latest Ernest Shipman production announced as completed. Mary Astor and Harry Morey are co-featured in this production.

Busy Independent Producing Season; Eastern Studio News

The current season is the busiest production year in the history of independent production, judging from observations made during the past week at various New York and vicinity studios. Not one studio in New York City, New Jersey and Long Island is idle, and most of them are busily engaged turning out independent productions. Something like twenty-four productions are now being made in the metropolitan district for independent distribution with as many more being planned to be made early next year.

John Adolphi has started production on the next picture, "The Little Red Schoolhouse," starring Martha Mansfield and E. K. Lincoln. Edmund Breese also appears in the cast.

Kenneth Webb, who directed "Secrets of Paris" for Whitman Bennett and Charles C. Burr, will shortly start for Miami, Florida, where he will start production on a new independent picture.

Nell Shipman and her director, Bert Van Tuyl, are in New York.

Edward Earle, the popular leading man, has signed a long term contract with Burton King, in whose future pictures he will appear. Arrow will release the King productions.

"Jacqueline," the latest Dell Henderson-directed James Oliver Curwood special which Arrow will release, is in its third week of cutting. More than one hundred and fifty thousand feet of film were taken, and this quantity is being cut down to six reels.

Will Nigh starts production on his second picture for Bobby North-L. Lawrence Weber release this week at Tilford studio.

C. C. Burr, with two productions now being made at his spacious Glendale, L. I. studios, is planning for several other big pictures that will be made under his supervision and distributed by him in the independent market.

Plans for the annual frolic of the Green Room Club are now being made. It is expected that the annual frolic will be held some time in January.

The Motion Picture Directors' Association also is planning for its annual supper and dance, which as in the past years will in all probability be held late next month or early in February at Hotel Astor in New York. This is the organization that last year introduced officially Will Hays to the motion picture industry.

Directors, producers, stars and photographers are urged to keep in touch with this department in view of the many inquiries being received daily from independents concerning the whereahouts of independent directors, stars and photographers.

Selling the Picture to the Public

Unintentional Generosity in Passes Brings an Unexpectedly Large Result

ONE of the most remarkable incidents that we recall in a long experience has resulted in the stupid break of a man in the exploitation departments of one of the larger companies.

As part of the plan book scheme for a certain play they desired to push hard, he developed a stunt for a hook-up page attractor, with prizes to all who fulfilled the conditions of the contest. He later explained that he thought the contest so difficult that few would be able to claim free admission.

Flooded the Town

A large number of houses adapted the scheme without due scrutiny, either through pressure of work, or because they took it for granted that any scheme offered by the home office had been tested. The results were startling in two ways.

To take a couple of concrete examples, one theatre in a city of considerable size put on the hook-up, and gave the matter no more thought until the day after the page appeared.

Almost as soon as the office opened, the co-operating merchants, through whom the prizes were to be distributed, began to call for more passes. A fresh supply was sent out, but still the demand was for more.

Officials tore their hair and cursed with deep and heartfelt earnestness, but they decided that the only thing to do was to stand on their error and make good their promises. Before the day was over several thousand passes had been distributed. The number of free admission was almost equal to one-third the average business of the house.

Where the Smile Came

They settled down to lose about half the house income on a feature costing them more than the average. It looked as though the joy had gone out of life, and they would have small cause for gratitude when Thanksgiving day came around.

But by the middle of the week it became apparent that their fears were ill-founded. They were literally snowed under with "paper," but they were getting cash, too. As the days passed, and the supply of passes was exhausted, more and more money came in.

The Saturday count-up showed that the business was above the average. The house had enjoyed one of the most profitable weeks in its career.

Small Towns, Too

Another house, to select one record of many, put on the picture for a run of only two days, though it has frequently played one attraction for three days when the picture could be booked in for the Thursday-Friday-Saturday term.

Experience had shown that it did not pay to run a single attraction the first half of the week, and but two days were given this feature.

The house is of small capacity, and while the distribution was well under a thousand admissions, it was perhaps even greater, in proportion, than the much larger number in the city theatre.

The free seats were about what the house expected to draw on the average business, and the manager figured that he would draw the difference between the average business and the little extra money he anticipated on the more important offering.

Works Again

He, too, was mistaken. The net receipts on two days the early and less well patronized portion of the week were larger than the three-day, week-end runs of the two pictures which so far have held the record not for the season, but for the history of the house.

These records are taken from the reports of the exhibitors and are not sent in by the exploitation department in question. The results have been duplicated in other sections of the country and no one seems able to offer a lucid explanation.

It is to be presumed that the excessive distribution awoke a widespread interest It is known that about seven out of ten passes will bring in additional paid admissions, but here the paid admissions were greatly in excess of that average. Probably the verbal advertising given a better than usual picture was what brought in the cash, but the magnitude of the distribution also contributed to the unexpected result. It is certainly the most amazing development in the history of picture theatre exploitation.

Max Is Thorough

Max Doolittle, the Paramounteer, believes in being thorough in all he does. Having decided to get pneumonia, he had a regular doctor's delight, where they pulled him back from the gates of death by his coat tails. And just as he was getting along on the road to recovery, he took an encore. He developed an intestinal trouble which called for the intervention of a couple of the Mayo specialists from the Rochester institution, and they had quite a time to persuade him to stick around on this side of the Great Divide for a while longer.

Mrs. Doolittle writes that he is now coming along slowly, but doing as well as his double handicap permits, and that she has hopes that in the course of a couple of months he will be his own hustling self again. The letter was not intended for publication, but Mrs. Doolittle speaks most appreciatively of the kindness of the Paramount heads from Kent down to the district manager.

Tied to Drama

When Guy Bates Post was on the road with "The Masquerader," he stood them up at the Grand Theatre, Topeka. When the First National film production came to the Cozy, the Grand management recalled the sage success to its patrons and added that the screen version would presently be seen at the other house. This is a good stunt where you are friendly with the drama theatre.

A First National Release

USING A BILLBOARD AS A TEASER WORKED FOR THE SIGMA THEATRE, LIMA, OHIO

Manager Ritzler controls a sign in the business district, and when he booked in "Smilin' Through" he painted only the name of the star and let that ride for a week, while patrons wondered just what was to come, and hoped for a personal appearance. Then he added the details of the engagement and played to a great deal more than his usual business.

Gained Two Days on Special Week

Ordinarily the Majestic Theatre, Dresden, Ont., has been opened but four nights a week, but they were sold on the idea of a full week with an all-First National program and special stunts. It went over.

Monday was "Ladies Night," when each woman was presented with a flower and a card from Norma Talmadge. Tuesday was "Club Night," with special numbers presented by members of various societies.

Wednesday was "Jazz Night," with kazoos, balloons and community singing, and two vaudeville acts made Thursday "Vaudeville Night."

Pop Contest Too

A popularity contest, launched earlier in the week, was ended on Friday, the winning man and girl being presented to the audience by the Mayor, and Saturday was nominated "Out-of-Town Night," and a successful effort was made to round up the rural patronage.

It not only drew extra business for the extra nights, but it brought the entire town out at least once, since the stunts were framed so that at least one would appeal to practically everyone.

Pigs Is Publicity

Ellis Parker Butler wrote that "Pigs is pigs," but Jack Staub, Universalist, argues that they are publicity.

He invaded Paterson, N. J., recently, in the interest of "Human Hearts," playing at Fox's American.

There was a big school football game on, and he persuaded the managers that a little diversion in the intermission would help along, so they let him stage a greased-pig chase over the gridiron, and he also threw out one hundred balloons with passes attached. Pre-announcement of these features helped the attendance at the game, and it put the picture over as well, since the field was sniped for the attraction.

Get This, Bill

John E. Kennebeck, the Omaha Paramounteer, put over "The Ghost Breaker" for the Strand Theatre, by offering $25 to anyone who would sleep all night in a graveyard.

It's been a good stunt ever since "Bill" Yearsley of First National originated the idea for "The Greatest Question" some years ago. It still works, for Kennebeck got a good front page story out of the Bee.

Capsules Revived

One of the earliest exploitation stunts was revived by H. T. Browning, of the Grand Theatre, Middletown, Conn., when he issued capsuled circulars on "East is West."

In case you do not know the stunt, you print your selling talk on very thin paper, roll it compactly, preferably so that a catch word shows through, and put it into a gelatine capsule of fairly large size. In Mr. Brown's case the attractor was the word "Dope," which was appropriate to a Chinese play and at the same time conveyed the suggestion of information.

It is something of a job to fold the circulars, but it makes a striking appeal.

What Meighan Saw

Fortune telling naturally connects with "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," so C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., borrowed a small tent of striped cloth from a fortune telling booth.

The centre piece was a small table on the front of which was a banner reading, "Your future foretold by 'The Man Who Saw Tomorrow.'" On the table was an upturned arc light globe with a tiny Hawaiian dancer inside. When the lights flashed on, the dancer was clearly revealed.

Back of this was a one sheet of Meighan so placed that his glance seemed to be directed to the globe, and when they saw the dancer no one wondered at the intentness of his gaze. It was simple and inexpensive, and it told a story.

His Burning Sands Were All Red Hot

Major I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., got a double business on "Burning Sands" through exploitation.

He got a table about three feet square, with a glass top and a shadow box below. On the table he built a tent of black and white striped material about the same size as the table top. The open flaps showed the sanded interior.

In the shadow box he placed red lamps and these, shining through the thin layer of sand, gave a real meaning to the title.

This was used a week in advance for the foyer and then moved to the outer lobby, where it was supplemented with the title cut from board. This was the only unusual work he did on the title, but it gave him twice the usual business.

A Daily Change

Effecting a hook-up with a store, the Valentine Theatre, Toledo, got a fine window in which the single wax model was dressed in a new evening gown each day of the week run.

The model stood in front of a dark paneling against which the costume was effectively displayed. A small framed card gave the title, "The Eternal Flame," the house and the playing dates. A framed photograph of the star was also used in an oval in the background, set in back of the two-plane structure.

Two Miniatures

Two miniatures were used by Barry Burke, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, for "The Storm." One showed the log cabin, banked with snow, and the other side of the box office displayed a forest fire almost warm enough to melt the snow on the cabin. Burke also dressed a window in a sporting goods store to hook-up the outdoor idea.

PRIZES FOR WINKERS PUT OVER "EAST IS WEST" AT THE REGENT THEATRE, PATERSON

The management of The Regent tied the local paper to a winking contest, using the one-sheet wink of the star as a starter, and adapting a stunt from the United Candy Stores, which recently gave boxes of candy for the most pleasant smiles. The centre picture shows the poster, the surrounding frame the results obtained. You can use a still camera just as well.

A Pathe Release

YOU HAVE HEARD OF AIRSHIPS, HERE'S A REAL ONE

The Republic Theatre, Great Falls, S. C., made this craft for Harold Lloyd, in a "Sailor Made Man" and made it so light that they could hang it from the lobby arch, out of the way of the crowds. A cutout of the star captains the craft.

Boasts Again

A sailboat on a truck was used to advertise "The Sin Flood" at the Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit. The truck was bannered "The Sin Flood is coming," and the house and date, and the sail bore the legend: "The flood will sweep over you." A man in the boat excitedly hoisted and lowered the sail, giving more action to the otherwise dead display. It might be well, where the truck moves slowly, to confine all advertising to the sail, to make them watch for the message. It is more apt to be impressed on the mind.

Played Local Angle

A local herald, dealing with the possibilities of a rise in the river, was also gotten out. This will prove a good stunt wherever there is a sufficient body of water, and the reminiscence contest idea can be adapted to memories of past floods.

A New Tag Idea

We have had the door knob and the auto card. Now comes Russell Moon with a variation.

For the Palace Theatre, South Norwalk, Conn., he had 3,000 baggage tags printed up and then hung them to fence palings, the spikes in telegraph poles and anywhere else he could get them up, putting five to ten in the same place, so they could be lifted and carried away.

Most of the text was in type so small that the outstanding lines were "Boy Hung," "The Face in the Fog" and the house name and date.

The text read: "Boy hung around his father's neck and begged for a ticket to see 'The Face in the Fog' etc." It's elemental, but it sold many tickets, so it's good.

Numbers Again

The "21" gag, which had quite a run a few months ago, was dug up by the Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, and pinned to "The Artful Dodger" to help put over First National's "Oliver Twist." In the form used there were five rows of six figures deep, one each of ones, threes, fives, sevens and nines. The stunt, as usual, was to add up any six numbers to total 21.

Here Is Its Answer

There are numerous ways of combining four of the figures to add twenty and the one is arrived at through a fraction as seven, three, nine and one make twenty and three-thirds will give the desired 21.

If you never tried the stunt and it is new in your town, you can get a lot of talk by putting it on cards and passing around.

A Display Idea for Music Window Sales

New ideas for the display of plugger songs are rare. Most of them are simply stacks of the song displayed on racks or cards. The Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Mich., sends in something new from the ten cent store.

A First National Release

The Window Idea

Eight or ten of the sheets of music are clipped at the bottom and then set together (with more clips) in the form of a rosette. The centre is formed of a cutout from the title page. The idea is particularly useful where the supply is limited and a big flash must be made with a few copies.

Must Be Good

Kenneth O. Renaud of the Paramounteers dropped into Evanston, Wyo., and found I. H. Harris, of the Strand Theatre, wondering how he could combat the election excitement. The town is too small for a newspaper, and Harris thought he could use something stronger than a throwaway.

Renaud found an escape artist who would do a suspended straight-jacket escape for $3, and Renaud put him to work, megaphoning a ballyhoo while the man worked. Renaud had carefully explained to the kinker that the longer it took the better it would be, so it required eleven minutes.

Renaud says the merchants locked their stores and followed their possible customers to see the show. And the whole town was talking about the straight jacket—and "Burning Sands."

A Paramount Release

THE FOYER DESIGN AND THE LOBBY ON "BURNING SANDS," FROM OKLAHOMA CITY

S. S. Wallace, Jr., started the foyer picture (on the left) two weeks before the showing, and the opening day used three cutouts in the lobby. Backed by an extensive billboard and newspaper campaign, and through references to "The Sheik," he built business up forty per cent. with little extra outlay.

Filled a Window With a 24-Sheet

Dan Roche, the Chicago premier Paramounteer, thinks he has made a record by being the first man to land a Chicago store on a full sized 24-sheet for a window display.

He was trying to put over "The Old Homestead" at McVickers, and it struck him that if they painted in one word, the 24-sheet would be available for radio and telegraph offices, so he sold the idea to a well-located radio company. As the cut shows, the lettering is done in the exact style of the lithograph and was so well done that it seemed to be all a part of the store scheme and the slogan "Wire the Old Homestead" motivated a fine display of apparatus and parts.

This is a hook-up that can be worked almost anywhere, for radio is practically universal, but it will serve best in the larger places.

A Paramount Release

AN ENTIRE TWENTY-FOUR SHEET BACKED THIS WINDOW

It's part of the exploitation of Dan Roche for the Chicago run of "The Old Homestead," and he says it is the first time he recalls such a use of so large a poster. The word "wire" is painted in to match the regular lettering.

Simple

Somehow the old Chinese "cash" seems to have dropped out of sight of late, though a quarter century ago almost everyone had one of the brass coins and everyone knew what they were.

But the Grand Theatre, Pittsburgh, playing "East Is West," used a reproduction of the coin in cut form and offered prizes for the correct identification, and it got over.

Nocturnal Float Sold in Topeka

According to the First National exploitation, the first night ballyhoo to be used in Topeka was a float on "The Eternal Flame," which was used for six nights.

Imitation candles, tipped with small bulbs, were used at the four corners and red flares were burned in a fireproof basket before the shrine of the star.

There was a convention of 7,000 teachers in town, and the Cozy Theatre wanted some of that business, so went after it.

Worked the Legion From a New Angle

Generally when a manager wants to use the American Legion he either gives them a commission on ticket sales or parades them to a special showing.

George A. Sine worked it in a new style for "Skin Deep" when that came to the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville.

He knew that the Jefferson Post was after new members. He turned the house over to them for a recruiting drive one evening when business is not as good as on Saturday and Sunday.

They packed the house, at regular prices, held a little rally and added some fifty names to the roster. Then the new members were taken out into the lobby and photographed, and the print rushed to the newspapers, where it was classed as local news and not theatrical advertising, so it made the front pages.

It's very simple. All it needed was a little hard thinking and some imagination.

A First National Release

THIS IS NOT A PARADE FLOAT, BUT JUST A PERAMBULATOR

It was used for a week by the Cozy Theatre, Topeka, with bulb-tipped candles at the four corners and red flares in the centre. It is said to be the first night ballyhoo used in the town. A convention explains the extra effort.

Worked a Window

Putting a supposed East Indian in a cigar store window was the ballyhoo for "The Young Rajah" at New London, Conn., when it played the Crown Theatre.

The impersonator sat in the window, surrounded by signs, and fooled with a pack of cards until he drew a crowd, when he made a display of a series of twenty stills, which were held against the window one by one until the series was run through, when the crowd drifted away and a new one gathered.

Peddled Bills

Now and then he would step out on the sidewalk and distribute heralds so folded as to show only the line "Your prophecy foretold," which is better advertising than it is good English.

The stunt was the joint effort of Walter Murchy and Paramounteer Russell B. Moon.

The marquise was decorated with a cutout head from the 24-sheet, and smaller cutouts were placed either side of the entrance. Red and green bunting was also used in the display; evidently a holdover from "The Sheik."

Store and Theatre Combined on Window

Something new comes up from Charleston, West Va., where Phil Gersdorf, the Goldwynner, collaborated with John E Fernkoess, of the Capitol Theatre, and J. B. Tewskbury, his publicity man.

They hooked the phonograph store to the old time songs for "Remembrance," but they bettered that. They got a vacant store on a prominent corner. One window called attention to the old songs and to the play. The other was masked in and a magnavox was run through to reproduce the old songs listed in the other window.

Wanted More Jazz

The Post Office employees across the street were then moved to complain that they lost their jazz sorting letters to the plaintive strains of Silver Threads and When You and I Were Young, Maggie. That made a corking good press story, which gained a laugh and centered attention upon the play and the songs.

Two other phonograph dealers, a florist and a shoe store were tied up to windows and an insurance man took a quarter page display on the insurance angle.

His miniature setting was a big attraction at the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., and was very well done. A miniature of the regular 24-sheet is shown to the left of the arch. Handkerchiefs were given with appropriate text as to laughs and tears

A Simple Window Sold the Books

A single window card, with a still from the play, turned a store display into an advertisement at Newport News, Va.

The Rialto Theatre had "Remembrance" and made a hook-up with the bookseller, who gave a display of the Rupert Hughes books along with the more recent best sellers. He figured that he could sell Babbitt on the Goldwyn play, too. And he did.

A Goldwyn Release

The Book Store Card

It not only sold the books, but it sold the play to book lovers who naturally knew the author and were interested in his work. The cost was small and the return considerable.

Novelty Float a Hit With Football Crowd

Doing the usual differently brought the usual good results in Atlanta, when De Sales Harrison sold a football crowd on "To Have and to Hold." Notre Dame was playign Georgia Tech; one of the important games of the season, and Harrison, himself an old Tech man, arranged with the college to put out a float.

During the intermission a four-horse float drew onto the field a book seventeen feet by eight, lettered with the title and a little selling talk. The horses were blanketed "Welcome Notre Dame." The Tech band served as escort.

The sides of the book were made of paper, and when the float came abreast the grand stand a small boy broke through the cover and presented the sponsors of the local team with bouquets and the compliments of the Howard Theater. At the same time some 7,000 heralds were distributed through the stands by students, who were paid in passes.

Making it something more than a float made it a great deal more of an advertisement.

A hook-up page was made with the title, merchants offering things "to have and to hold," and it served to alibi a ticket distribution to get verbal advertising.

Exploiting every picture is the same as exploiting none of them, just as a full page ad every day is not much better than a two sixes. Exploit the big ones and make them seem big.

Helping Julius

Julius K. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, used a bannered trolley for "Lorna Doone," with a locomotive bell for a noise maker, and the publicity department of First National remarks that getting the bell from the railroad required every argument short of grand larceny before the officials would consent.

Next time Julius wants a bell, he can probably borrow one from a hardware jobber with no trouble. They stock them for the farmers.

Johnson also hooked the Lorna Doone biscuit to the food show and got some thirty windows, and the coming of the picture was played up by cards in the libraries.

YOUR LOBBY MAY NOT BE AS ELABORATE, BUT YOU CAN GET AN IDEA FROM THIS DISPLAY

This was the decorating done by the Liberty Theatre, Pittsburgh, on "East Is West." It is all done with material within the reach of the average exhibitor, though he does not have to make so pretentious a decoration. He can select from the suggestions the stunt he can work best, the large fan, the parasol or the lanterns, and build up with streamers and vines.

Shook Up Cocktail in Lobby Display

Realizing that he should make a nice piece of money out of "Manslaughter," J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, felt it would be worth while to spend a little money on his display.

He had large cutouts of Meighan and Leatrice Joy on either side of the opening, and in the centre was another cutout of Miss Joy, quietly dressed in green and red velvet. Her right hand held a wineglass and the arm was kept in motion by a motor with eccentric wheel. The glass was one of the once-popular trick glasses, blown double and with the liquid sealed between the two skins, so there was no danger of spilling a drop. It helped to bring a 20 per cent. increase in the receipts and please that many more patrons.

SHE SHOOK A COCKTAIL, NOT THE SHIMMY, IN "MANSLAUGHTER"

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome, Waco, made a special cutout of Leatrice Joy in "Manslaughter," with an animated arm which shook a wineglass containing some liquid presumed to be more or less alcoholic, to match the play.

A Scare Card

Down in the southwest they take the Ku Klux Klan more seriously than they do further north, because they are better organized. This gave C. A. Runyon, of the Runyon Theatre, Barnsdale, Okla., a chance for a fine stunt.

He overprinted red cards with three yellow Ks, and made each the initial of one of the "keeps" in the text, which reads: "It matters not how the election went. Keep your mouth shut. Keep your eyes open. Keep watching for 'I Am the Law.'"

As it was the first shot on the Curwood picture, and as they were distributed in sealed envelopes, slipped under doorways, it not only stirred up the town but was made the basis of a dispatch to the county seat daily paper, and came back to the town through that.

The card will not reproduce, but the three initials are about one inch high on a card 2¼ by 4½ inches and the yellow form is printed first with the black above it.

Hooked the Police

M. F. Estes, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., used the theme of "Manslaughter" to sell the police the idea of a free advertisement. Every motorcycle cop in town carried a banner asking "What Is Manslaughter?" and the Beacham used enough street stuff to hook up the answer.

Mr. Estes also borrowed a police uniform which he put on a dummy as part of the accident tableau in the lobby, and says that people not only took notice, but they brought their friends to see, and business went up a full hundred per cent on a three-day run.

On the face of this it would seem to be good exploitation, but we think that it is risky to get a gruesome display in the lobby of a theatre where the associated idea is entertainment. This tableau, which has been used extensively all over the country, is best retained in the Chamber of Horrors in the waxwork show.

It may attract many persons, but it will turn away others and give them an impression that will react against coming displays.

Don't throw away your patrons by exploiting a poor picture, and do not bore them by not booming the good ones. Do your best work on the best show.

Steam Heated Sands for Paramount Play

J. M. Edgar Hart has been at it again. He used a desert miniature for "Burning Sands," and the sands were really hot.

To achieve this effect he sank a tank into a bed of sand which formed his desert, the sand base being four by seven feet. The tank had an opening two by three feet, covered with fine mesh copper gauze with a thin layer of sand on top.

An electric heater in the tank not only heated the water, causing vapor to rise through the sand, but it heated the sand itself and gave the shimmering effect of heat waves, which he enhanced with careful lighting. Of course it did not make the play any better, but it certainly bettered business, and then they liked the play and told others.

And the stunt set him back only six dollars.

All for Six Dollars

Getting an essay contest and a window, along with a lobby display for the net sum of $6 was what R. P. Whitfield did for the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas.

He could not tie the local paper to a contest on "The Cradle," so the house offered prizes for the best essays on "Why does the Power within the cradle rule the world?"

A department store took the long end, giving the first prize, selling the others for the six dollars and making a display of the entire outfit in one of its windows. It also loaned Mr. Whitfield enough toys and nursery furniture for a lobby display.

Took It Seriously

Bill Johnson, Lem Stewart's Texas proxy, sends along the prize wining essays, and they are not at all poor, showing that the public took the stunt seriously.

The contest closed the day before the picture opened, to get the climax of interest at the proper time. Essay subjects which require the contestant to see the picture never have the same general interest and do not, as a rule, pull as much money. Whitfield planned to bring them down to the opening day all warmed up.

Cater to Clarence

Each section is taking up the Clarence club idea, but we think that Denver made something of a miscue in the formation of a Clarence club there.

Homer Ellison and Rick Ricketson foregathered on a letterhead which is headed "The Crusade of Crucified Clarences" and started off with the statement that it is "Devoted to the defence of good men unfortunately named Clarence, etc." and terminates with "Membership limited to He-men struggling against great odds under the handicap of Clarence."

This seems to us to be the wrong idea. The clubs should defend the name rather than admit the onus attaching the moniker. There are a lot of men who are rather proud of their name, for family or other reasons, and this will not appeal to the very men it is supposed to reach. Defend the name. Do not add to the attack.

Has Local Angle

Few towns are without local pride. Some towns are almost offensively confident, but they all have faith in the community to some degree and Maj. I. C. Holloway capitalized this in Columbus, Ga.

He had "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" at the Rialto and he tied a newspaper to a contest on "The Columbus of Tomorrow." The word limit was 300, a trifle too low, and contestants were warned that their stories must be based upon fact and not imagination.

Airplane landings on the roofs of office buildings and the rest of the H. G. Wells' stuff was not wanted. Instead the paper urged a study of the location and resources of the town and a story based on the possibilities of these resources developed.

You can get the average chamber of commerce back of this with very little effort. If there is no chamber, try Rotary or Kiwanis.

Ready to Light

Perhaps it is a bit far fetched, but if you wanted to start burning sands down in Fort Smith, Ark., all you had to do was use one of J. B. Robertson's match scratchers.

He used 11 by 14 cards with a three-column plan book cut, printed in red, the Palace signature and playing dates in black, and with two panels of sandpaper, one either side of the cut.

These were given display wherever men scratch matches, such as at cigar stands, barber shops, lunch rooms and hotels, and they got a lot of comment, which gave emphasis to the title.

His lobby display was part of the poster reading, "The answer to 'The Sheik,'" below a miniature scene in a shadow box, and the title and stars bannered above. Red lighting was used in the shadow box, and it made a very pretty display.

EIGHT DIFFERENT STUNTS USED BY THE ROYAL THEATRE, PERTH, ON "QUEEN OF SHEBA"

As recently told in this department, the Royal Theatre opened with this production, and gave a ballyhoo such as Australia has seldom seen. A Novelty Postcard Has Decided Kick

Evidently getting his hint from the telephone cards used on "Remembrance," Evert R. Cummings, of the Fort Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., got out a novelty postcard for the same attraction. The card is the regular Government card, printed in red and green. It does not differ much from others save that at the top runs the line, "Tie this string around your finger so you will remember to be at the Fort Armstrong Theatre" to see the Rupert Hughes picture. "This string" is about four and a half inches of purple string pasted to the card. It shows in the reproduction as a black line, but it is real cord and not a piece of rule. It is our understanding that anything pasted to a postcard makes it liable to the letter rate, but Mr. Cummings managed to get away with it. If you copy the design you would do well to consult with your local postmaster as to his ideas on the subject, or you may find an entire batch of cards turned back on you for more postage. If you can get away with it, it makes a fine novelty. If you cannot, it at least gives the idea for a good card for hand distribution. If you cannot use postcards, perhaps you can send private mailing cards, or knot a string through a punched hole. The latter would not make as neat a job, however, and the novelty of this idea makes it worth while arguing about to put it through. The string seems to be soaked in paste before being affixed, and we imagine that it is not as much of a job to paste them as it may sound, though certainly it must be a messy one.

Roth and Partington Revive An Old Form

We are glad to note that Roth and Partington, managing directors of the leading San Francisco theatres, have returned to an old form for their Saturday and Sunday displays This is the cross page drop, with the three houses displayed and with a couple of columns of straight talk about the attractions to hold them apart. We said when this form was first developed that we believed it to be a valuable device, and we are glad to see that they are returning to the idea, which was dropped when the Granada was opened, possibly in the idea that the Granada needed to be handled apart from the others to put it over. This is a drop of 140 lines across the page—a ten-inch display, but it is worth the additional money it costs to get over the chat. Those two spare columns work even harder than the display ads, and this is in no disparagement of these displays, for Bubar is back in his old good form in all three of these. For a time Bubar seemed to be out of form, but he is on the job again, and at his best no one can beat him. Even at that there are patches of hand lettering where type could have been inserted to better effect, though possibly Bubar is not to blame for this. At any rate his proportioning is nicely done and he does not override the space with his drawings. It's a pity we cannot reproduce some of his lobby work, for this is where he goes over the top, but sheets are too large to be shipped safely, and you will have to go to the Golden Gate to get the effect of these. They are almost worth the trip.

This Sectional Cut Will Get Attention

Nelson B. Bell knows that sometimes part of a cut will be more of an attractor than the full size and he shaved a portrait cut of Norma Talmadge to get attention for "The Eternal Flame" and got more of a display than would have been the case had he used the entire cut. the face shown, it stands out more prominently than had the entire cut been used. It is different, and the reader looks into the matter where he might pass the same cut were it shown in its entirety. It is merely another application of the "different" idea, but it gets more for less money than had another column of space been used to put in the full face. It is interesting to note that Bell fills his text space pretty full and yet throws up the star and title with almost as good a value as though he had used white. This is because he uses a light italic for his reading matter, which does not fight down the black lines. Even the regular roman might kill them off, but the light, unshaded italic is less obtrusive and permits a lot of talk to be offered without trespassing upon the display lines. Had straight roman been used, it would have been necessary to use fewer lines, to hold them away from the black type, but these italic lines are set to within a pica of the black without hurtful effect. And it might be noted that there is more white space above the lines than below. This is because the idea is to get you into the heavier lines. You can use one-third less white space below the line than you do above and still get away with it. It is on appreciation of nice points such as this that good advertising is built. Bell is taking a very modest space; only 80 lines by two, yet he shows as well on the page as some larger three column displays from other houses. Knowing how saves his employer money.

THE OLD STYLE ROTH AND PARTINGTON HALF PAGES

the original was a mate to the Gish picture on the left and the shield was by itself. The local printer did the cutting and made so neat a job that you cannot detect the joint. Every line seems to have been overlapped by the reverse cut. A toolmaker or die sinker could not have made a better fit. It is a simple matter to notch a right angle, but if you think this is easy, try it. This is a five tens and a better than usual display, though nothing unusual for the America. A better display could not have been turned out by an art department, and this layout is offered for the inspection of managers who figure that they have to employ a high-priced artist to get results. A clever press agent who can handle cuts intelligently is often better than an artist—and usually he will not want to do hand lettering. G. R. Stewart, the manager, does his own layout work, and this matches up well with his usual performance, though it is no better than a lot of others he used to send in. We are using past tense because Mr. Stewart has been rather remiss of late. He is still using the name stunt to make sure that everyone reads his announcements, and that little panel to the right of the shield reads "Admit O. H. Meyers and One to 'Orphans of the Storm.'" A new name is used for each display.

town sit up and take notice—also tickets. About the time "On the High Seas" was booked, the local papers were filled with stories of an ocean disaster and the Post-Dispatch took a streamer for the headline. The front page was made the frame for a display for "On the High Seas," linked in with "These headlines tell the story of the most amazing scenes ever photographed." At small cost they had a frame that was better than the most elaborately drawn display, and one which hooked directly to a current news event. They did not do quite as well with the display for "To Have and to Hold," for the design is too heavy for the title to fight through and it is effective only in the degree in which the design gets the attention of the reader to the point where he will puzzle out the title. He is apt to be impressed with the design and read to the point of information, but it is taking almost too much of a chance. The important lines are almost entirely obscured, but the remainder is nicely put in type where it will show to advantage. The bottom design gives an open book effect with the legend that millions have read the book and millions will applaud the picture. But the book shows blank pages. It would have been better had the slogan been divided and half placed on each page of the open book. Then the book could have been made a little larger and there would have been more point to the drawing. And the lines would have been pulled out of the obscurity of the black. We are not going to like Mr. Olmstead until he comes to realize the greater display value of the black letter as opposed to the reverse. He seems to be a bit old fashioned in his ideas, and we hope that he is open to reason, for his work is promising from many angles.

Used Trademark Cut for Scatter Work

The black silhouette used as a sort of trade mark cut for "The Masquerader," was employed by the Strand Theatre, Schenectady, for a series of scatter ads, using the single column size. These two happened to get into the dramatic page side by side, but there were a number of others in that page in different position, so that half a dozen of them stared up at the reader from the various columns. They made very effective showing in the page and got more for the money than had a single larger cut been used. Small scatters of the average sort would have been fairly ineffective in a single fifty, unless used to back up some larger display, but this has such a strong display value that it cannot become lost on the page; indeed, they are better in these small sized cuts than in the larger dimensions, where the black mass becomes almost too much, until the three column limit is passed when the black again becomes effective. In two or three column sizes only the lettering saves the cut from being too strong, and where lettering is not put in it is best to work in some white lines to relieve the mass of black. But taken by and large this cut is one of the best advertising aids the First National has turned out lately, because it will work on almost any form of advertising and produce results. It is not out of place on the three sheets, makes a good one sheet and in the same design can be reduced to a two-inch cut without losing effect.

A First National Release

presume that the advertisers had a hand in the preparation of the copy. A local baker advertised Grandma's bread, and a real estate concern opined that he would probably want to settle down in Newark and would buy his home from them; a food products concern decided that he would make immediate demand for their goods, but the store which advertised that he would probably want some "nifty negligee" for grandma probably got the old lady confused with Gloria Swanson. It helped swell the page, and probably Newark readers did not wonder what Grandma would do with the sort of stuff that classes under that heading. Somehow we cannot imagine that dear old lady in pink undies. But it made a good page and it differs from the usual in that space is taken for a lot of text. It was worked in a neighborhood paper and not in one of the larger dailies. This is a field little worked, and yet the rates are lower and the circulation is held to one section, which gives the city exhibitor an opportunity to put over a hook-up where he could not persuade the nearby merchants to advertise in a paper of general circulation. The locality paper, like the neighborhood house, has its own place in the scheme of things, and hook-up pages in these would often work if only the exhibitor had the nerve to get after the advisers.

SONG OF LIFE. An extra good seven reel picture; one that will reach the hearts of humanity. Ran two nights. A picture like this one draws good second night. Advertising: as usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Walter Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

Fox

CHASING THE MOON. This is something different. Good comedy drama: will please. Can't see where they get the title. Advertising: ones, six, photos. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair (big rain). Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

FAST MAIL. Melodrama all the way through. If you are looking for a fast picture of this type, use it. Advertising: three ones, one three, six sheet and slides. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

FOR BIG STAKES. Have run all of Tom Mix's pictures, but believe this is the best to date. They nearly raised the roof. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

JUST TONY. The best picture ever made: in fact, I've never seen a bad Fox picture. Book it. You can't lose. Advertising: six, one, photos, slides. Patronage: small town. Attendance: broke all records. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

LAMPLIGHTER. A wonderful little five-reel picture. True and compelling as "Mother Love." A great lesson. Book this; a little old, but print good. Advertising: regular, photos, one and three. Attendance: fair. J. I. McCarty, Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

MONEY TO BURN and BUCKING THE LINE. The first double-feature program the burg has ever witnessed, it being the Lyric's Second Anniversary under the present management. Russell, in the first feature, was not up to standard, but passed. "Bucking the Line" made a hit and gave Maurice Flynn a good start in the community. It was similar to a serial for thrills. The first a Class C, the latter a Class B, at our theatre. Advertising: plastered the territory for miles around. Patronage: country. Attendance: excellent. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

PERJURY. Not as bad as some have remarked it was. Did well for us and seemed to please the majority. Farnum's superior ability at portraying trying roles is again prominent. Advertising: one six, three ones, three, slide, cards, paper. Patronage: country. Attendance: good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

RIDING WITH DEATH. Not as good as the average Buck Jones production, but should draw. Advertising: ones, three, slide. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. The only good picture for me that Farnum has made this year in his regular series. If they had kept him in that blue shirt a little longer they would have called it a Special, like "Over the Hill." Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

STRANGE IDOLS. A good picture and will please most any audience. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TRAILIN'. Tom Mix surely holds the interest of all my patrons in pictures like this. "Trailin'" is absolutely one of his best. Book it; you will like it too. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: pretty fair. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Goldwyn

COME ON OVER. A sure fire audience picture. Had more comments about it being good than any picture in a long time. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. L. Hepp, Idylhour Theatre, Greeley, Nebraska.

GODLESS MEN. A very good picture that comes close to being exceptional. Worth while playing in any house. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MR. BARNES OF NEW YORK. A very good program picture in which Tom Moore takes an entirely different part. Patronage: the best. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

REMEMBRANCE. An excellent and most remarkable picture, full of human pathos and sentiment and showing, to a remarkable degree, the frailties of human life from a father's standpoint and the ingratitude of some families. A great picture, excellent in photography and execution and one that every person should see, both old and young. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SNOWBLIND. A very good production. Fine scenery of the North. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

WATCH YOUR STEP. Not the best, but a good picture. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. Zane Grey story which would have done better under it's real name—"Wildfire." This picture has no class to it but the story is simple, acted by people who look and act the parts, has audience appeal and pleased all who saw it. But it is a cheap production. It gets the people, so why worry? Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Hodkinson

JANE EYRE. For me, rotten from start to finish. My people walked out on it. Keep away from it. Advertising: ones, three, six, 11x14, heralds. Patronage: family. Attendance: fair. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

KEEPING UP WITH LIZZIE. Seemed to please. Star not very well known here. Pretty good, taken as a whole. Advertising: ordinary. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. L. A. Hoover, Star Theatre, Aster, New Mexico.

Metro

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. Excellent for me. You can't go wrong on this one. Advertising: twenty-four, six, three, ones. Patronage: resort. Attendance: good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre,, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

FOURTEENTH LOVER. Not much story; but the photography was excellent. It was a pleasure to look at this. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

MATCH BREAKER. A fair program offering. They do not tear my doors down in order to see Dana, as the film Hounds would lead you to believe. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Believe this is an overrated picture. Drew, for me, ordinary business; seemed to please those who saw it. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. Stupendous, wonderful. One of the best this year. Keep it up, Metro, and you will be on top. Direction good; great cast. Advertise this big. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones, window cards, heralds, twenty-four sheets, newspaper, postal cards. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

THEY LIKE 'EM ROUGH. Best picture Viola has made since "Glass Houses." Once very popular here, but poor pictures have killed her drawing power. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De-Queen, Arkansas.

YOUTH TO YOUTH. Excellent; star, cast and direction of the highest order. Will please all classes. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Paramount

ABOVE ALL LAW. Another foreign made picture with elaborate mountings. A story of India in which many characters wander about with little or nothing to do. Action seems unreal and forced. Does not suit my house. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

ABOVE ALL LAW. Had we to do it over again, we should pay and not play. It is a foreign production: the acting is wonderful and the sets can not be described, but the true artistry of this picture is over their heads; that is all I can find wrong with the picture. Part of our small houses thought of it as I did but we had too many walk out to please a show manager. This picture, I judge, should go well in larger towns and the cities, but it is not a country town proposition. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. Reid and Roberts at their best in this. Wonderful entertainment; not a giant but fine from every angle. Patrons' praise unanimous. Advertising: lobby, lithos and news space, usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: full houses. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

AT THE END OF THE WORLD. Good. Not much of a story, but interesting. Story laid in Shanghai, and that kind always seems to please. Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: poor. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

BACHELOR DADDY. Comments on this picture have been so favorable that I thought it a knockout. I was disappointed and think it has been over praised. The public luckily disagreed with me and turned out in force to see it. Advertising: ones six, photos, throwaways. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

BEAUTY'S WORTH. Pleased everyone. The best picture Marion Davies has been seen in, in a long time. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. I told them about this picture; what the "crickets" said, what the public had stated—and invited them to give their own opinion on this picture with Rodolph Valentino and Gloria Swanson. My patrons were divided in their opinion; the "flappers" said Great! because of Valentino, no doubt; personally, it's a "gorgeous lime" that will do business if properly exploited—but play fair with your audience! It's the authoress and the cast that will pull at the box office. Advertising: mailing list, heralds and programs. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

BLOOD AND SAND. They just did not come in for this one. We were all prepared to handle a crowd but we did not even come near doing capacity business. Picture not bad but rental out of reason for me. Valentino dies at finish. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

DON'T TELL EVERYTHING. In every sense of the word a 100 per cent. attraction. Pleased all and people left the house talking and laughing. There are three good stars in this one and this alone should draw them in if you will let them know about it. Advertising: posters, heralds, photos. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

We've been having an average of three pages to three pages and a half filled with Straight From the Shoulder tips each week.

Now we can have MORE ROOM for tips—if you folks will help to keep it packed with good stuff.

This is one department of Moving Picture World that has been called by one exhibitor, "My OWN Department."

He's right. You all own it. It's your tips that make it good; it's your suggestions that give it chances to improve its columns.

Come on, now — everybody! Send in all the reports you can spare time for, and keep the good work going and GROWING.

VAN.

RENT FREE. Just about as weak as they can make them. Had a nice business as Reid always draws good, but will hurt on next one. My patrons knocked this one. Advertising: lobby and six. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY. Eight reels that, in my opinion, would disgust almost any audience, no matter what class. No one stayed over for the beginning of the next show. Such stuff will kill your business if you have many like it to run. Advertising: papers, photos, slide. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: fair. J. I. Wright, Rex Theatre, Bevier, Missouri.

SIREN CALL. Plenty of action in this one, and pleased immensely. Advertising: usual, extra ballyhoo. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

THREE WORD BRAND. Good Western. Went over good with the men. Usually draws men; never gets the ladies in. Advertising: newspaper, ones, threes. Patronage: mostly men. Attendance: good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

WIFE TRAP. Oh Boy! Look out for this one. For me, positively the poorest picture. Mia May might go over in foreign countries, but why Paramount would release this is beyond all comprehension. My advice, don't run it if you get it gratis. Advertising: regular. Attendance: rotten, and glad of it. A. Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

WOMAN GOD CHANGED. Starring Seena Owen and E. K. Lincoln; this is one of the finest and most satisfying features we have shown in a long time. We had many favorable comments on this and they asked for more like it. Advertising: threes, ones, photos. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: excellent. E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. A very well produced and worked picture. Dorothy Dalton makes good in this one. Support is also excellent. Patronage: general. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. Not as good as some of Reid's, still I did good business owing to the star. Very few kicked. Advertising: ones, threes, newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

YOUNG DIANA. Marion Davies in a Winter and Summer fashion show; may please the women, the men said "Blah." Advertising: mailing list and heralds. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Playgoers

MAN SHE BROUGHT BACK. Here is a good one; just as good as, or better than Curwood's "Man from Hell's River," and costs less than one-third of the latter. Advertising: regular. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

RUSE OF THE RATTLER. Good Western picture. Pleased the entire audience. Film in A1. condition. Advertising: slide and posters. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. T. Edom, Dixie Theatre, Rosboro, Arkansas.

Selznick

GREATEST LOVE. A great production; should take anywhere. Would have made money if weather permitted, as I bought this right. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor, account rain. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

REPORTED MISSING. Score a knockout for Owen Moore but don't forget to give the "coon" the credit due him, for he sure deserves all he gets. If it hadn't been for him the rest would sure have looked punk. The scenario on this was very good and should be what every company should do, design articles to put them over right. Advertising: extra. Patronage: country. Attendance: good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

REPORTED MISSING. Good program picture, nothing extra for me; had some people walk out on the silly stuff. The plot didn't seem to grip at all. Advertising: ten ones, window cards, trailer, slides, newspaper. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

UNDER OATH. Very good program picture. Nothing too great about it, nothing too bad about it. A pleasing light offering. Advertising: ones and slide. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

WONDERFUL CHANCE. Did excellent business throughout the week in spite of the weather. Stars: Rodolph Valentino & Eugene O'Brien. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

United Artists

HIS MAJESTY, THE AMERICAN. Quite old, but good. For me, though, these pictures are too high. Advertising: posters, hand bills. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. A very fine picture but did not get over very will in this town. Here they fall for the Western stuff. We played the picture on percentage and just broke even. Advertising: extra heavy. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

Universal

BLACK BAG. Here is a dandy program picture and one that you can tell them it is worth their time to see and then not disappoint them. And best of all, Universal sells so that you can make a profit. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

DON'T GET PERSONAL. Another good one from Universal. Pleased the flappers immensely, and the old folks just had to like it. Keep it up, Mr. Laemmle. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

THE FOX. Very good Western and pleased Western fans. Film in absolutely poor condition. Advertising: ones, threes, six, heralds, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. F. Fruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

GIRL WHO RAN WILD. A very good Walton picture. Star draws very well for me. Advertising: one, three, 11x14, dodgers. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. T. J. Hicks, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

HEADIN' WEST. A Western picture with Hoot Gibson that is sure a hummer. Lots of action with a good story and a fine cast throughout. Gibson is a real star and a drawing card here. Advertising: two sixes, two threes, five ones, newspaper, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

HUMAN HEARTS. A truly great picture and one of the best heretofore shown at the Criterion. Patrons seeing this picture are sure to recommend highly, and well worth while the time spent in seeing it. Star: House Peters. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUMAN HEARTS. A good program picture; for me, nothing extra. Advertising: above the average. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Wm. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

MAN WHO MARRIED OWN WIFE. Better than a good many Specials for a small town exhibitor. Has some real thrilling sea stuff at first. Advertising: regular program and lobby. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

Vitagraph

FLOWER OF THE NORTH. Here's a James Oliver Curwood that went over big. Pleased them all and did a nice business for one day's run. Vitagraph sold me this so that I could make a profit. Print in good condition. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellsville, Kentucky.

SEA RIDER. Pleased about 80 per cent. —film somewhat old and dirty and photography not up to Vitagraph's present standard; but was a fair program picture. Vita. could not furnish me paper on this, hence a poor house. Advertising: four star posters, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHEN DANGER SMILES. William Duncan never fails to please. They like his acting and stories. This one pleased a fairly nice crowd. Advertising: posters and slide. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Comedies

COLD FEET (Educational). Very good comedy. A two-reel satire on Mounted Police stuff that is a scream from start to finish. Makes 'em enjoy thirty minutes of life. Advertising: slide and 11x14s. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

FULL O' PEP (Pollard-Pathe). A real "Snub" Pollard comedy based on monkey gland operations. Raised lots of laughter. Advertising: ones. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Chasing Censorship

There's more ways than one of giving Censorship the razz. R. S. Moore of the Gem, Snyder, Oklahoma, hints a way that producers might well take to heart when he comments on JUST AROUND THE CORNER (Paramount):

"Absolutely A1. More like this one and the local censors will have to get a new hobby."

Good pictures are the surest poison for the censor bug. Report on the pictures that will help to put some sense into censors.

NONSENSE (Educational). It lived up to its name, yet a good Mermaid comedy and well received. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

SAILOR MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib.) The best comedy we have ever run. Two nights. Pleased 100 per cent.; splendid business both nights. You should play it by all means. Raise your admission and boost it. Advertising: novelties, posters, heralds, etc. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Serials

IN DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (Universal). Exceptional serial. A sure money maker. Played to the largest crowd I have ever had on serial. Advertising: threes, ones, photos, hats and heralds. Patronage: general. Attendance: very good. T. J. Hicks, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

WHITE EAGLE (Pathe). Holds up well. Plenty of action throughout. Advertising: cards, ones and threes. Patronage: best. Attendance: fair. G. W. M. Tocky, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

Short Subjects

SELIG-ROBK 2 REEL DRAMAS (Educational). Played these four subjects. All of them good fillers. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

State Rights

DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (101 Ranch). Fairly good. Pleases all. Business very good. Print a little bad in places. Ran two days—first day good, second day off. If you run it, put a good two-reel comedy with it. Don't advance price. We played it 50-50. Posters and photos in bad shape, but you can make up a good lobby with some Indian stuff. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

PEGGY (Friedman). For us, a "special lemon" which we had to play in order to clean up our deposit. Wished we had let it go. For us it's terrible—it's hot—don't touch it. Advertising: good. Patronage: village and country. Attendance: poor. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

RICH MEN'S WIVES (Lichtman). Wonderful production and beautiful picture in all respects. One that we are proud to highly recommend. Finely colored art titles lend color to perfect story. Good business at twenty-forty. Advertising: lithos and lobby. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: very good. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

SHADOWS OF CONSCIENCE (Pioneer). Played this on a Saturday eve. It got by—and that's all. No box office appeal. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). Here's action, comedy and romance; well cast and directed, and a winner. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

TAKING CHANCES (Goldstone). Played this subject featuring Dick Talmadge, at the Empire, but did not see it myself. Ever since we moved to the Lafayette the boys have been after me to repeat it but did not see why, but thought I would take a chance (like Richard Talmadge did!) and swipe at it. Now that I have played it (here) I see why they made me repeat it; many of the people like him as well as Doug Fairbanks. He is a real stunt artist. Fair paper on this subject. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

WEST vs. EAST. (Standard). A dandy Western. You can run this as a Western or Society—it's different than other Westerns. Has Western, Society and Comedy. Above the average. Advertising: ones, sixes, photos. Patronage: middle class. Attendance: fair. Prices: 89-20c. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Consensus of Published Reviews

When Knighthood Was in Flower

(Marion Davies—Paramount-Cosmopolitan—11,618 feet)

M. P. W.—Marion Davies scores big success in Cosmopolitan's magnificent production, based on popular novel.

T. R.—To say that "When Knighthood Was in Flower" is Marion Davies best is only to start the story of this remarkable film. It has a great many other qualities that will make for its box-office success.

N.—A worthy example of photoplay excellence is "When Knighthood Was in Flower," an achievement which marks an important milestone in motion picture annals.

F. D.—In the list of the year's best pictures.

E. H.—Will be compared with the finest things that have been done for the screen—and it has nothing to fear in the comparison.

The Love Gambler

(John Gilbert—Fox—4,682 feet)

M. P. W.—John Gilbert's attractive personality the popular feature of this Fox Western.

N.—The spectator who has become a follower of Gilbert will certainly be disappointed.

T. R.—It will satisfy patronage where the star has a following.

F. D.—Weak story; suffers from inefficient direction.

E. H.—The story is not especially original, and shifts from one thing to another without much logic.

The Broadway Madonna

(Featured Cast—F. B. O.—5,602 feet)

M. P. W.—A highly sophisticated drama, rich in audience appeal.

N.—There have got to be some average pictures.

E. H.—Holds but slight interest due principally to commonplace treatment of material offered.

T. R.—Slips into the slot which once upon a time was labeled "fair program offering."

F. D.—Not particularly attractive both in production and material.

Broad Daylight

(Featured Cast—Universal—4,691 feet)

M. P. W.—There are splendid moments of suspense, and situations that keep one intensely interested.

T. R.—A bully crook drama, with clever sidelights of comedy to relieve the serious stuff.

E. H.—An altogether pleasing and interesting story, with an unusual twist to the plot.

N.—The picture carries a fair quality of suspense and good incident here and there and manages to offer fair entertainment.

F. D.—Fairly familiar theme, but makes satisfactory entertainment.

West of Chicago

(Charles Jones—Fox 4,694 feet)

M. P. W.—Plenty of swift action.

N.—Does offer new thrills and it offers them in a way that the average picture audience seems bound to approve.

F. D.—Pretty good story in Jones' latest Western.

T. R.—A speedy story, with plenty of good action to satisfy and keep the audience interested.

Honor First

(John Gilbert—Fox—5 reels)

M. P. W.—"Honor First" has an appealing story, is well directed, artistically mounted, finely photographed and unusually well acted. . . . Exhibitors may safely promise a picture that holds the interest throughout the entire five reels.

T. R.—Viewed from every angle, this attraction presents box office possibilities of a kind that should tempt all exhibitors.

E. H.—Thoroughly satisfying feature.

N.—This is a mixture of old ones. . . . And the subject matter in "Honor First" is not startling either in its newness or its presentation.

Her Majesty

M. P. W.—Mollie King pleases in dual role.

E. H.—High in all essentials, cast, story, settings, costuming, suspense and general appeal.

N.—This is a harmless bit of filmplay which serves to bring back to the screen Mollie King, one of our old shadow stage favorites.

T. R.—There is little to be said in favor of this picture, which offers an unconvincing plot, based on a time-worn dual identity theme.

The Country Flapper

(Dorothy Gish—Producers Security Corp.—5 reels)

M. P. W.—Good, clean and wholesome entertainment of the comedy brand.

N.—May be called fairly amusing.

F. D.—Some good amusement despite pretty weak material.

E. H.—The name of the popular Griffith star, surrounded by an exceptional cast, together with a good box-office title, should make "The Country Flapper" an exceptional offering to state right buyers.

"Forsaking All Others"

Cullen Landis and Colleen Moore Head a Fine Cast in Universal Attraction

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Universal has a first-rate attraction in "Forsaking All Others.". Cleverly acted, and originally conceived, it is the type of feature that is almost without limitations in the scope of its appeal. Neighborhood audiences will be sure to enjoy it and it is a sufficiently strong attraction for the first-run theatre as well. It is not a big special, nor is it presented as such, but it is an excellent program picture.

Although no one of the several fine performers is starred, Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis prove capable as usual with such good team work that they will probably be the most popular. June Elvidge, however, gives an exceptionally attractive performance that is second, in talent, to none in the picture. Add to these, May Wallace as the pampered mother, Sam Degrasse and David Torrence, and some estimation can be made of the high standard of acting. The direction of Emile Chautard is responsible to a great degree for the picture's success.

Aside from the cast, there is another important angle of exploitation. The story is an entirely new variation of the mother-love theme. Without underestimating the value of real mother love, the author has shown an example of a woman who was too much devoted to her son for his own welfare. Her love became the most arbitrary factor in his life. It came between his sweetheart and himself, and between his mother and the man who loved her. The story is convincingly told with an undercurrent of light satire that is most entertaining.

The picture has been attractively staged and lighted. It shows the best of taste in details as well as in the broad perspective. It is a proud tribute to Emile Chautard's directing.

The Cast

Penelope Mason.....Colleen Moore
Oliver Newell.....Cullen Landis
Mrs. Newell.....May Wallace
Dr. Mason.....Sam Degrasse
Enid Morton.....June Elvidge
Mr. Morton.....David Torrence
Cyrus K. Wharton.....Melbourne McDowell
Mrs. Wharton.....Elinor Hancock
May Wharton.....Lucille Ricksen

Based Upon the Story by Mary Lerner.
Scenario by Doris Schroeder.
Direction by Emile Chautard.
Photography by Charles Stumar.
Length, 4,462 Feet.

The Story

Oliver Newell has been raised under the shelter of a jealous mother love. But with manhood the love of Penelope Fearing intervenes. The mother takes him to a fashionable resort to get him away from Penelope. Oliver becomes infatuated with Enid Morton, her suspicious husband enters his apartment unexpectedly and there is a tense scene with Enid in the room and Oliver hidden undiscovered in a closet. Now the frantic mother appeals to Penelope for help. Penelope nobly responds to the mother's appeal and races to the resort. Oliver courts death by asking the married girl to meet him in a lonely cabin and the husband listens at the switchboard. Oliver, waiting for her, has a change of heart, and when she comes to the cabin he tells her he cannot go through with it. Just then her husband enters with a gun in hand, and the gods that run domestic situations take the reins.

"The Great Night"

William Russell Assisted by Pretty Eva Novak in Fox Comedy Drama.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This Fox production for William Russell utilizes a familiar plot with fairly entertaining results. This is due mainly to good directing and a capable cast.

It is the story of the man who must marry quick or lose a fortune. Frequent versions of this theme in the past have probably detracted from its present value as an attraction. Naturally there is no great suspense and the interest is confined more to the style of the performance and the comedy effects. "The Great Night," for the most part, moves along in breezy style with now and then an original flash.

Eva Novak is one definite reason for liking the picture. Her appealing personality transforms a colorless role into something that is more than casually interesting. When she cooks flapjacks for instance, it seems for the moment a new and absorbing art. William Russell's role, like all of his more recent ones, is of the conventional type and will carry an appeal to those who have tired of him in the more usual outdoor characters.

Story and Scenario by Joseph F. Poland.
Direction by Howard M. Mitchell.
Length, 4,346 Feet.

The Story

Larry Gilmore is son of the late head of the Gilmore jewelry establishment. According to the terms of his father's will, Larry must marry within thirty days or lose his share of the estate. This causes a rush of females to the Gilmore establishment, each anxious to be the lady selected to assist in getting the money.

Larry has no intention of entering the field of matrimony, so he persuades his friend, the police commissioner, to appoint him to the police force. It is as the policeman that Larry meets romance. She is a little girl working in a cheap restaurant. Larry eventually marries her, but it is only a few seconds before the time limit is expired.

"A Blind Bargain"

Lon Chaney's Marvelous Acting Is Feature of Goldwyn's Thrilling But Gruesome Melodrama.

Th vogue for gruesome thrilling ... melodramas on the stage makes it hard to forecast with any great degree of accuracy as to how this production will be received by the general public. Those who are fascinated with the weird stories of Edgar Allen Poe and to whom thrills and gruesome melodramatic situations outweight the implausible nature of the story will undoubtedly enjoy it immensely for it has been well made and the tension well handled. Everything has been subordinated to the one theme, the doctor's experiment, whether he will be able to perform it and what the result will be. There is a romance, but it is kept in the background for the happy ending. It certainly would not appear to have a strong appeal for those who go to the theatre for relaxation or expecting to find light entertainment, and it would therefore be well to let your patrons know in advance just exactly the type of picture and what they may expect.

Lon Chaney's work in this picture is really marvelous and he again demonstrates that he is one of the best if not the very best character actor on the screen. As the ape-man, his portrayal and likeness to a huge chimpanzee is wonderful and sends chills up and down your spine. As the eminent but half-mad doctor scientist, with his distinguished manner, Mephistophalean make-up and very erect carriage he is also excellent but this does not give the same opportunities for unusual work as the other character does. Never for one moment do you think that it is the same man portraying both roles. The remainder of the cast is entirely satisfactory.

Built entirely on one situation, the action and tension is stretched considerably but this appears to have been purposely done in preparation for the big climax which is undoubtedly thrilling; where the doctor has his intended victim strapped to the operating table when he is set-up and his life crushed out by a gorilla like monster who has been freed from his cage by the ape-like hunchback. In keeping with the general tone of the picture, most of the action takes place in the doctor's home, amid various implements of surgery, drugs, operating rooms, etc. In a word, everything in the picture appears to be fashioned with the thought of producing a thrilling melodrama which will fascinate because of its mystery and sensational, gruesome theme. The title refers to the fact that the intended subject does not know the nature of the bargain which he makes with the doctor for saving his mother's life.

"Outcast"

Elsie Ferguson Does Best Work of Her Screen Career in Paramount Version of Her Stage Success.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In the Paramount production "Outcast," Elsie Ferguson appears again in a role which she created on the stage, and her fine work is the outstanding feature of the picture. It affords her fine opportunities for her undoubted talents and should bring her a host of new admirers. Dominating nearly every scene, her performance as the girl evicted for non-payment of rent, who walks the street hungry, finds shelter, then material success, and via a rocky road eventually finds love also, is excellent. So fine is her acting and use of facial expression that the meaning of every move is clearly brought out, necessitating the use of only a minimum number of subtitles.

Miss Ferguson's portrayal, backed up by fine work by the others in the cast makes it an interesting offering which should find favor with average audiences in both large and small houses. The story is not at all times convincing, and the excellence of the acting only serves to emphasize these points. For those who demand a thrill and melodramatic climax, the chase of the steamer by an aeroplane and the star's rescue just as she is attempting to drown herself, will fill the bill, but it appears a trifle incongruous compared with the quite deliberate tempo of the majority of the film.

A point of strong appeal to feminine patrons will be Miss Ferguson's handsome gowns which she certainly knows how to wear to advantage, and there are a lot of these stunning creations.

Miss Ferguson appears in the rather unconventional role of a woman who becomes the "pal" and business partner of a man but she has a hard fight to win his love as he still loves a girl who has married another for his money and tiring of her bargain seeks to win him back. David Powell appears as the man in the case, a rather unsympathetic role, and Mary MacLaren portrays the other woman.

Length, 7,309 feet.

Story

Deserted by her husband, Miriam Moore works as a model but loses her job and is evicted for non-payment of rent. Wandering the street hungry she is accosted by a ruffian as she passes Sherwood's home. His friend Tony rescues her, and Sherwood, blue and drinking heavily because his sweetheart, Valentine, has married for money, has Tony invite her up. Her sad story causes Sherwood to minimize his own troubles. They decide to become pals, he helps her, gets her an apartment and finally makes her his business partner. With her help they achieve great success and finally wealth. She learns to love him, but he still continues to love Valentine. Finally Valentine decides she has tired of her husband and comes to Sherwood. Miriam saves the couple by her quick wit when Valentine's husband appears, and Valentine goes back to her husband. Miriam boards a vessel bound for South America and leaves a note that she will jump overboard. David then realizes he loves her, follows in an aeroplane and rescues her from the water and all ends happily.

"When Love Comes"

F. B. O. Picture With Helen Jerome Eddy is Poignant With Star's Appeal.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In this F. B. O. attraction, Helen Jerome Eddy does not disappoint the many who have come to expect a fine quality of sincerity from every performance with which she is associated. "When Love Comes" has an appeal that is deeper than the average picture.

It realizes to an excellent degree the standard of material that is best suited to the star. One of its best qualities is its consistency. It belongs definitely in the class of features that rely upon emotional appeal rather than material display. It is a love story, simply and effectively told and will be refreshing to those who criticize the screen for placing too much emphasis upon superficial glamor and beauty without talent. There is a particular class of patrons who will be most enthusiastic over this.

The romance and disappointment of an old-fashioned girl is the theme. The director has been unusually successful in making her unhappiness seem real instead of purely sentimental and in suggesting the passing of time. Her five years of dull waiting seem an eternity. This serves as an effective prelude to the full realization of her dreams which comes after a melodramatic climax.

Helen Jerome Eddy's charm of naturalness is the chief inspiration of the picture. The close-ups are eloquent with sympathetic appeal. Harrison Ford heads the supporting cast which shows fine directing.

"A Daughter of Luxury"

Paramount Release Starring Agnes Ayres Offers Attractive Entertainment

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Attractively produced and presenting Agnes Ayres in a part that exquisitely frames her personality, this Paramount release is decidedly appealing to the eye. "A Daughter of Luxury" is the screen title for "The Imposter," a stage play by Leonard Merrick and Michael Morton.

The script has been well handled and embraces a chain of interesting events. There is somewhat greater merit to the story than might be imagined from the title. "A Daughter of Luxury" may suggest to some the sort of attraction with no particular individuality except a sumptuous material display. But it does not belong in that class. The situations are involved, the sequence logical and the climax is effected in quiet, convincing style.

The part of Mary Fenton reduced temporarily from a prominent social position to stringent poverty, calls striking attention to Miss Ayres' grace and culture. In humble surroundings she seems more lovely than ever. Most of the settings, however, are far from humble, so there is an abundance of pleasure for those who enjoy luxurious backgrounds.

One of the picture's charms is the graceful and unsensational manner in which the entire story is handled. Even in the comedy touches, this is evident. Paul Powell, the director, has shown excellent judgment and the cast has intelligently responded. Tom Gallery, as the young heir to a diminished fortune, gives a refreshing performance—one that exploits his engaging personality.

The Story

Mary's parents die, and her inheritance proves to be nil. Mary is forced to live in a cheap lodging house.

The landlady forces Mary out and she walks the streets seeking work. She is almost ready to faint from hunger and fatigue when she meets Charlie Owen, a stranger, whom she mistook for an acquaintance. He got her into much trouble, which began when in innocent circumstances she was discovered by a gossipy friend of Owen's in his room with her hair down putting on her shoes. As a result of this she is forced to pose as a wealthy heiress. Her imposture is revealed and there is more trouble, excitingly topped when she is accused of being implicated in a jewel robbery.

There does come on the scene later a nice young man, but it is Mary herself who pulls her reputation out of the fire.

"Affairs of Lady Hamilton"

Sterling Pictures Corporation's Stupendous Costume Special Introduces New And Beautiful Star.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

The passion and exquisite femininity of that historic woman, Lady Hamilton, who, rising from obscure peasantry, a blacksmith's daughter, to power and wealth only to die in poverty, proved the inspiration and the saviour of Lord Nelson, England's naval hero, are vividly embodied in this wonderful costume production, appropriately entitled "The Affairs Of Lady Hamilton." The wonder of this production—and it is a splendid production in every detail—is that it treats a difficult subject in such refreshingly entertaining fashion that one marvels at the extremes to which producer Richard Oswald went in giving civilization at this time such an excitingly interesting picturization of the affairs of a woman whose adventures have inspired poets, artists and sculptors to honor her with works that are counted among the masterpieces of art.

This production itself is worthy of a place in this select art circle, for it goes the works of arts, poets and sculptors one better by introducing this humble girl who became enmeshed from early girlhood in fate's web, so that she fairly lives once more—to the delight of the audience. One particularly commendable feature of this Sterling production is its apparent adherence to fact, leaving the task of formulating conclusions and opinions relative to the status of the affair between Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson to the individual. As visualized in this production the one outstanding thing is that the producer had one thought in mind, that of giving the world a vehicle of maximum entertainment.

If your patrons enjoyed "Passion" they will want to see "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," for in our humble and personal opinion, the latter is a far greater production. It is just as elaborate, pretentious and extensive in scenic settings and with an enormous cast.

Its distributors are claiming that there are some 100,000 people appearing in the picture. This writer is satisfied to take their word for it, for there were innumerable scenes where it seemed as if whole cities had been let loose to participate in the production, which is colorfully well photographed. The story is particularly fascinating and can not help but entertain, for it involves a romance that possesses charm and beauty, sincerity and grips because it is convincingly interpreted by an unusually talented cast of foreign players who knew what they were doing at every turn. The settings are truly massive in every sense with the battle of Trafalgar presenting a climax that is far superior to any ever re-enacted in an American or foreign made production heretofore shown in this country. Picturesque to the 'nth degree the scenic background, most of them in Naples with the volcanic Vesuvius playing no little or unimportant role, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" should create much more favorable discussion than either "Passion" or "Deception."

Directorially, the production is everything one would hope it to be and were it not for the advance notices of the producer one could in no way identify it as the work of a foreign producer. The cast is a capable one throughout with the premier honors going to Liane Haid, who in assuming the titular role, gives as fine a piece of superlatively artistic characterization as this writer as seen on any screen. Certainly, she goes about her work with a charm that is grippingly fascinating. Whether or not she is the "most beautiful woman in the world," as the advertising claims, is problematical; however, she fits the role of Lady Hamilton to a nicety and makes a picture good to look at. Conrad Veidt as Lord Nelson and Werner Kraus as Sir William Hamilton are equally effective. The support of the rest of the cast is consistently good and in keeping with the high class quality of the production as a whole.

The Cast

Lady Hamilton.....Liane Haid
Lord Nelson.....Conrad Veidt
Sir William Hamilton.....Warner Kraus

Produced by Richard Oswald.
Edited by Randolph Bartlett.
Length, 13 Reels.

The Story

The pangs of bitter experience have found Emma Lyon, the village maid, daughter of a poor blacksmith, before she ever dreamed of meeting Lord Nelson. She pleaded with a sea captain for a youth who had been shanghaied. Then she first realized the hunting instinct in man. There entered into her life that same day an insatiable desire to be revenged on men. And she was fairly successful until she met Lord Nelson. She plays an important part in Nelson's first great naval victory. He returns to Naples, acclaiming the now Lady Hamilton as the real winner, she sharing with him the honors of both court and populace. From that day on Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson became inseparable. But the big climax comes when Nelson's wife, having consented to a separation, and Lord Hamilton having disinherited Lady Hamilton on his deathbed, Lady Hamilton, in poverty, with her baby in her arms and mortal anxiety in her heart, goes to the public bulletin board and learns that Nelson has won Trafalgar, one of the most decisive battles in the world's history. She is transported with joy—now the gates of happiness are wide open—now the English court must officially recognize both her and Nelson. Then comes the second bulletin—"Nelson is dead."

"Gun-Shy"

Comedy is Dominating Motive in Phil Goldstone Production for Franklyn Farnum

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A slightly different motive from the type usually found in Franklyn Farnum features governs the action in this Western, "Gun-Shy." It has been done in a light vein. The stellar role affords Farnum continued opportunity for comedy instead of heroics, as he is cast as a physical coward.

To many the change will be agreeable, as "Gun-Shy" lacks the implausible and one-sided effect of the star's recent vehicles. It presents in rather human style a timid character fighting for his rights against a lawless gang. A Western girl's admiration for him bluffs him into thinking that maybe after all he can be a hero, and before he knows it he is made deputy sheriff.

There is no great suspense and only an average display of riding and action. Comedy is the most popular angle. The action winds up with a climax of a more or less familiar nature—the gallant defense of a mine in the hills. Farnum is good as the worried Easterner and Florence Gilbert proves a vivacious heroine.

The Story

"Gun-Shy" is the story of the advent of two strangers in the almost deserted town of Los Palos. One bears the markings of a typical Easterner. He is taken for a U. S. marshal, sent to Los Palos to stop the raids which have been going on. He is afraid of his very shadow and only awaits the first opportunity to leave town. The mysterious stranger soon introduces himself to the Easterner as Bill Williams, the real U. "Pawned"

Selznick Releases J. Parker Read Production With Tom Moore and Edith Roberts.

Reviewed by Marguerite Kemp

"Pawned," is a frank melodrama with a rapid sequence of stirring scenes. It is enlivened with a number of free-for-all fights and comes to a crashing climax with the plunging of an automobile from a ferry boat. It offers the type of entertainment that proves unfailingly popular.

The story remains true to the title, for it deals with a series of pledges, made voluntarily or unwillingly. One character pawns his life to the services of a gambler, another pawns his soul to drugs, another to drink and the heroine pledges her soul to save the life of the man she loves.

The featured players are not given an opportunity to rise to very dramatic heights, and go about their business with an air of "putting it on heavy" as befits a spectacular story. The sub-titles aid the audience in getting out of the maze of characters and intrigue.

The characters are well selected, the various types being well portrayed, particularly that of James Barrows as the self-sacrificing cab driver. Mr. Moore's famous smile is conspicuous by its absence, in fact, there are no comedy touches. Edith Roberts is unusually charming. The play is well staged, with regard to settings and street scenes, and the direction shows a good understanding of melodramatic values. The author, Frank L. Packard, will be recalled by many for his great success, "The Miracle Man."

The Story

John Bruce pawns his services to the owner of a chain of gambling clubs for as long as the employer wants his services for the fare from the South Sea Islands to the States with a job at the end of the trip. The job is that of investigator of suspected misdeeds of club employees. His investigation of a traveling pawnshop leads to a meeting with Claire Veniza, who later saves his life by promising to marry a drug-addicted doctor who dresses the wounds acquired by Bruce in a free-for-all fight. The doctor refuses to release Claire from her promise, threatening to expose her supposed father who had been guilty of a crime in the past. On the day of the wedding, Old Hawkins, who is the girl's real father, redeems himself and his drunken life by plunging the car containing the doctor and himself over the edge of the ferry boat. The girl is rescued by Bruce.

"Ben-Her"

(F. B. O.—Novelty—One Reel)

Anyone who has labored through the long series of introductory comments that herald the average screen feature will appreciate the humor in this subject. It is a timely burlesque on this custom as practised in the extreme by some producers. After no end of references to the producing staff and the cast the first scene of the picture is flashed on the screen. It is also the last. For the producers in this case evidently regarded the drama as of secondary importance. The characters are Ben and Her and their romance is short but sweet. It is done in a cleverly satirical vein without any objectionable sting, and is a worthwhile novelty. —M. K.

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Johnny Jones Comedy Heads List of Eleven Pathe Films for December 17

On the Pathe program for December 17, which contains in all eleven subjects, is one of the Johnny Jones series entitled, "Wanted—a Story." This shows a woman author reading her scenario to a bunch of youngsters who plainly register enthusiasm and then the story itself is produced. It shows the company with a flivver and some furniture finding refuge on a cannibal island. They start to housekeeping and have such a good time that they don't want to leave.

There is also a screen novelty, one of the Oregon Trail series made by Kiser studios, entitled "Fleeced for Gold," which embodies a romance on a big sheep ranch. Introduced into the film are many scenes showing thousands of sheep and how they are counted, washed, shorn of their wool, branded and the wool carted away.

The current Hal Roach comedy is a one-reeler called "Fair Week," with Paul Parrott and Jobyna Ralston. Parrott appears as a farmer's handy man who is "as loose as cement with his money." At the fair, his employer's daughter gets him into a shell game and reforms him.

The Lloyd reissue is "Heap Big Chief," with Snub Pollard and Bebe Daniels, in which the star, after he outwits his savage foes is surrounded with an embarassment of fair savage affection.

"Henry's Busted Romance" is an Aesop Film Fable in which the various animal characters appear, it deals with a wiser and better husband after a series of vamping experiences. "Screen Snapshots No. 15" shows a number of prominent persons, including Hall Caine, Maurice Tourneur, Nazimova and Will Hays greeting several screen celebrities. Another section showing movies of the early days, features the following popular players Mack Sennett, Ford Sterling and Mabel Normand.

The Pathe Review No. 186 shows more "Living Paintings;" also Florida natives catching sharks, and wonderful rope-climbing at Chimney Rock, N. C., as well as other subjects of interest.

"Speed," the Hutchison serial, reaches its ninth episode, "Hit or Miss" which contains daring stunts with a train and motorcycle. Two issues of Pathe News and one of Topics of the Day complete the list of eleven releases for the week.

Radio Broadcasting Planned to Aid in Exploiting Educational Special

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., in collaboration with Scientific American, has arranged an elaborate exploitation campaign on the one-reel special subject, "Via Radio." A. C. Lescarboura, managing editor of Scientific American, is sending material for talks on this picture to every broadcasting station in the United States and, it is said, several will broadcast this material. Scientific American will also carry a story on the instructive value of the picture, advising everyone interested in radio, either as a science or as an amusement, to see the production. The story will appear in the January issue.

Educational has prepared a comprehensive advertising campaign incorporated in a combination press sheet and broadside. Several novelty advertising and exploitation ideas are suggested, among them being a teaser card bearing a message written out in international code. In addition to the posters, lobby photos, cuts, mats, slides, etc., a specially designed window card will be issued.

Radio editors of all of the metropolitan papers will receive press material on this picture, and it is believed many will carry notices of its showing in their own particular territory.

Century Schedules Four Comedies for Release During the Month of January

A fine program is offered by Century for the holiday season. Some of the subjects are: January 3, "American Plan," with Lee Moran, Blanche Payson and Betty May. The story of love and cooking in a boarding house under difficulties. Direction, Al Herman.

On January 10, "Sting 'Em Sweet," featuring Brownie, supported by Jack Cooper, Ena Gregory and Jack Earle. Nothing fits Earle, the giant; not even the role of a lover in which he is sadly impeded by little Jackie Morgan and Brownie.

Direction, Al Raymaker

January 17 sees "Hee Haw," featuring Arthur Trimble and Harry Sweet in search of a home. Directed by Herman, and on January 24 there is "Farm Follies," the story of a stranded troupe of theatrical girls forced to earn their keep on the farm, much to the worry of the farmer's wife, played by Blanche Payson. Jack Cooper and the Century Beauties do good work putting jazz and pep in farm life.

One January 31, "Atta Boy," a baseball story starring Lee Moran, who by accident gets into the clubroom of a baseball team, and is forced to go out on the field and play for them. He steals the bases literally and when told to run home does so. Direction of Al Herman.

"Heeza Liar" Back

J. R. Bray, president of Bray Productions, Inc., announces the return of "Colonel Heeza Liar" to the screen for a farewell tour in a series of "blood curdling" single-reel adventures under the title of "Bray Comedies," to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. His first appearance will be on December 10 in his own version of "Treasure Island." Other releases will follow at intervals of four weeks.

C. B. C. to Expand, Engages Havez

Harry Cohn of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, announces the engagement of Jean Havez to write and take active charge of comedy scripts for C. B. C. The engagement of Mr. Havez, one of the best-known comedy scenario writers in the industry comes as the forerunner of an announcement by Mr. Cohn of augmenting to a large degree his comedy producing units and to add in the near future at least two more comedy units to that now engaged in the making of the Hallroom Boys' Comedies.

Mr. Havez has been known for a long time as one of the most successful furnishers of laugh material. He contributed the stories for the first series of the Buster Keaton comedies, and was co-author of some of Harold Lloyd's successes, including "Grandma's Boy" and "Dr. Jack."

While the production of feature comedy-dramas will be an important part of the C. B. C. output it is Harry Cohn's intention to continue to specialize, as always, on the production of two-reel comedies.

Brooks Jubilant Over "Plunder"

The forthcoming Pathe serial, "Plunder," which brings Pearl White back into this field, furnished the occasion for Serial Sales Manager E. O. Brooks' trip to Chicago. He reports that heads of the Junior Orpheum Circuit there saw the first three episodes and expressed their approval. He was particularly impressed with the result of a showing to Branch Managers Martin and Gillick, of the two Chicago offices; Aschmann, of Milwaukee; Moray, of Indianapolis, and representatives of their sales forces.

"I have been present at a good many previews for salesmen," said Mr. Brooks, "but never have I witnessed such enthusiasm as was evidenced at this showing. Salesmen are cautious with respect to all new product. But 'Plunder' made them sit on the edges of their seats, wondering what was coming next. Several expressed their disappointment at not having the chance to see the whole serial."

Two New Films for Bull Montana

"Glad Rags," the next comedy starring Bull Montana, will be this comedian's best, according to Hunt Stromberg, producer of this series. The photoplay is based on two stories. One is "Silk Purses and Cauliflower Ears," by Rene Reviere, which appeared originally in the Argosy-All Story Magazine. The other is an original story by Hunt Stromberg called "Lowry of the Bowry." In the cast are Otis Harlan, Tom Gallery, Betty Francisco, Max Davidson and Chuck Reisner.

"They Call it Dancing" has been selected as the title of a forthcoming Bull Montana comedy. The comedian will be seen as a distinguished dancing master, at the head of a school of classical dancers. The famous Denishawn dancers will appear in the picture.

Universal Has Attractive Schedule of Short Subjects for End of Year

Universal announces that to meet mid-winter demands and to provide a strong program for December 24 to 30, "Universal Joy Week," an unusually strong selection of short subjects is offered for release during December. In addition to the regular release schedule there are two "New Leather Pushers" and two new editions of "The Mirror."

The month's output will include four high class Universal comedies of one reel each and four Century comedies of two reels each. The Universal comedies will consist of two featuring Lew Sargent, the boy comedian, and two featuring Neely Edwards. The Sargent comedies are "A Rip-Snoring Night," released December 4, and "A Dog-Gone Day," released December 18. Both are from the "messenger boy series." The Neely Edwards comedies are "Rail Birds," for December 11, and "Where's the Parade?" for Christmas Day.

The four Century comedies for the month are "Women First," "A Small Town Derby," "Me and My Mule" and "The Tattle Tail."

The two "New Leather Pushers" mark the beginning of a new series of six of the popular two-reelers made from H. G. Witwers funny prize ring stories, with Reginald Denny in the leading role. The first is called "Young King Cole," and was released December 4. The second one, "He Raised Kane," will be released December 18.

So popular have the first two issues of "The Mirror" been, that International News Reel Corporation is placing two new ones at the disposal of the exhibitor for Yuletide. "Mirror No. 3," released December 4, is titled "The Birth of Aviation," and shows the Wrights and other aeronautical pioneers making the first bird-hops of history. These are contrasted with the latest models in military and commercial planes. "Mirror No. 4" will deal with the ceremonies attending the death and burial of King Edward VII. of Great Britain, and the crowning of his successor, the present King George V.

The Universal short subjects for December also includes "The Siege of the Lancashire Queen," a two-reel Fish Patrol picture, starring Jack Mulhall and taken from one of Jack London's famous stories. "Kings of the Forest," a two-reeler starring Roy Stewart. It is another of the stirring lumberjack stories.

Added to these two short dramas, Universal has re-edited and re-titled two of Harry Carey's most popular pictures of several years ago. They are "The Texas Sphinx" and "The Golden Bullet," originally three-reel Westerns which have been quickened to two reels. They will be released on December 9 and 30, respectively.

Other subjects scheduled for December by Universal are issues 97 to 102 (1922) and Issues No. 1 and 2 (1923) of the International News reel; chapters 13 to 16, inclusive, of "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," and chapters 6 to 9, inclusive, of "The Radio King," starring Roy Stewart.

"Rod and Gun" Films Now Ready

The first four of the series of six sport films entitled, "Days Afield With Rod and Gun," produced by Mr. Eltinge E. Warner, publisher of "Field and Stream," are announced by Hodkinson.

"The Goose" is the first, scheduled for December 24. This film deals with a goose "Safari" on the lower Mississippi. The January 21 release is "The Quail," in which hunting for Bob White in the Sedge and Pine Woods of the Mississippi Valley is shown. The third, February 18, is "Salmon Fishing With a Dry Fly on the Restigouche River in New Brunswick." The fourth release on March 18 will show "Duck Shooting on Waponoca Lake."

"Fighting Blood" in Book Form

H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" stories, which are now running in Collier's Magazine, will be issued shortly in book form and will carry a special jacket advertising the F. B. O. film version of these stories. In addition the book will be illustrated by stills of "Fighting Blood" in picture form. The third of these stories, "Six Second Smith," is now in production at the R-C studios in Los Angeles. Eleven of the twelve stories have already been published in Collier's Magazine. The book will be placed before the public in February.

"Bray Magazine"

Entertainment and Instruction is Attractively Mingled in New Bray Magazine Series

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Varied items of interest plus an animated cartoon comedy comprise each issue of the recently inaugurated "Bray Magazine" which will be distributed on the State right market by Bray Productions, Inc. The first three issues show careful selection and contain items which are entertaining as well as instructive. In each of these issues there is at least one item which is decidedly out of the ordinary and which should be strong in audience appeal. Taken altogether this series should prove an attractive addition to any program.

"Bray Magazine No. 1"

The opening section, "Scraps," pictures fights of various kinds, rooster fights, parrot fights, kitten fights, and then Japanese with jui jitsu; also a boxing match between women. An instructive section shows by diagrams the cause and origin and by photographs the effect of cyclones and tornadoes. The cartoon, Inkraving," entitled "Strap Hangers," will appeal especially to city dwellers who experience transit discomforts as it deals in a fantastic way with weird ideas for getting around the necessity for straphanging.

"Bray Magazine No. 2"

A unique section shows highly magnified pictures of strange plant like animals that live at the bottom of the sea. Then there is a section showing odd uses for motorcycles, another picturing the weird costumes and dances of the inhabitants of the island of Bali in Polynesia, which after all are not so different from the modern "shimmy." The cartoon deals humorously with Bobby Bumps experience at school.

"Bray Magazine No. 3"

There is an unusually interesting section in this reel which shows how character may be read by the study of a person's hands, the different shapes and characteristics, each having their own peculiar significance. Another section is a nature study dealing with the life and habits of a bird, the scarlet tanager. A fantastic cartoon comedy dealing with the subject of possibilities of taxes of air, walking, etc.

"Women First

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

There's a quantity of funny stuff in this one. Especially comical is the "stunt" that Lee Moran "pulls" when he notifies automobilists that the road ahead is closed when he wants to attract patrons for a roadside hotel. Alberta Vaughn, as the girl, adds the necessary touch of beauty.

The captious might find some fault with Moran's long chase after an old maid while a house is burning, and his eventual return in time to rescue the heroine, but taken as a whole the production can be classed as very good.—T. S. daP.

Unusually Thrilling Serial Produced by George Seitz Marks Pearl White's Return to Pathe

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

To signalize her return to the serial fold, Pathe has provided Pearl White with a production which should thoroughly satisfy serial fans, and if the pace set in the first three episodes is maintained should prove a fine business-getter. This serial has cleverly sustained mystery, action galore, stunts and melodramatic thrills, in fact, about everything that experience has shown is demanded by audiences that like this type of entertainment.

Pearl White's name is one to conjure with in the serial field for not only was she a pioneer in this kind of entertainment, but consistently maintained her prestige as one of the best of the serial stars, and her temporary absence from serials to appear in features is of such recent date that sufficient time has not elapsed for her to lose her hold on chapter-play fans. Then, too, her work in features has kept her constantly before the public.

This production is the work of George B. Seitz, who can safely be classed as the peer of all serial producers, and having seen practically every serial which he has produced in the last few years, the writer unhesitatingly pronounces the first three episodes of this serial as the best thing that he has turned out.

The star's personality and attractiveness is too well-known to need dilating upon, but in this picture she displays such zest and enthusiasm as to make it appear as if she is glad to be back in the serial fold. Fans are also well acquainted with Harry Semels because of his work in previous Seitz serials, and he is as villainous as ever in this one. There is a newcomer, Warren Krech, a graduate from the stage who is now appearing in "The Town That Forgot God." His work is entirely satisfactory, and the role that he portrays strikes an unusual note as, though he appears whenever needed to help the heroine out of her difficulties, the conclusion of episode three leaves you in doubt as to whether he is her friend or foe and whether he is not actuated by selfish motives in his desire to thwart the villain.

This serial is well produced and finely photographed and attains and maintains an unusually high pitch of interest and excitement. The customary suspense at the end of each episode is well handled and in addition to these stunts each chapter also contains one or more melodramatic thrills.

The plot involves the attempts of rival forces to obtain from a number of different stockholders their stock in a New York office building, beneath which is buried treasure of enormous value. In the first episode you are treated to a thrilling auto ride up a wet street filled with traffic and a stunt where Pearl drives her car right into a big building. Then in a chase she leaps through a skylight and ends in a taxi with the villain.

Episode two finds Pearl in the clutches of the villain and accused of murder. She escapes in a dramatic manner but is lured back and locked in a tower which is then set on fire. In the next episode she escapes by jumping to a tree. This scene is not as well handled as some of the other stunts, but the director makes up for that in a cleverly conceived scene where, faced by a gorilla, she plays on his aptitude for imitation by making the animal shoot itself. Her adventures then lead her to an underground cave where she is confronted by a sinister looking giant arising from a bier.

For thrills and excitement and sustained interest, "Plunder" certainly is there.

"All-Star Comedies"

Burr's New Series Distributed by Hodkinson Should Prove Attractive Box Office Material.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Judging from the first two of C. C. Burr's All Star Comedies which are being distributed by Hodkinson, this series of two reelers should find favor with exhibitors. They contain a lot of sure-fire material which will bring laughs and while there is a certain amount of slap-stick there is also a definite idea or plot running through each and much of the humor is naturally built up from the comedy situations. While some of the material is not new, it has all been handled from an audience standpoint to bring out the humorous possibilities and they should prove a good box-office bet, though in "Social Errors" some may have their ideas of decorum jarred by the situations where Charles Murray has difficulty with his trousers and finally goes around without them in a sleep walking stunt.

In keeping with the brand name, Mr. Burr has selected excellent players who are well-known, including Raymond McKee, Mary Anderson and Charles Murray, and in "Social Errors" Flora Finch also appears. Charles Murray has the sort of roles in which he gained a reputation, and Raymond McKee, who we believe is a newcomer in short comedies, makes a good impression though he showed a tendency to make his work broader than is necessary. Mary Anderson is attractive but has not very much to do.

"Faint Hearts"

This comedy deals with a bashful suitor who when he attempts to ask father is mistaken for a man who is seeking to get revenge. Father, who is a judge, gets scared stiff and when the boy accidentally learns of his own power and gets up his courage, a chase occurs which lands father in the hospital. They boy tries by various means to get there, but gives up in disgust, the girl accepts him anyway and then he slips on a banana peel and the hospital gets him after all. It is a broad farce with some slap-stick. There are many humorous situations some of which are burlesqued as when the boy swings from one house to another and goes all the way through landing in the yard. His attempts to get into the hospital are well done and will bring laughs from practically everybody. This comedy is above the average as a mirth producer.

"Social Errors"

The story of the comedy is built around the adventure of an inquiring reporter who in attempting to solve a series of mysterious hotel robberies finds that the robber is a bogus baron who is being lavishly entertained by the new-rich parents of his sweetheart whom he thought was still in the country waiting for him. There are the usual comedy complications, chases, juggling of the swag from the thief to the hero, etc. The title appears to cover the girl's mother's admonition to her husband that he must not commit a social error at the banquet. Charles Murray as the father has a lot of trouble with his dress suit particularly in keeping his pants up and is put out in disgrace. Wifey takes his trousers away from him, but he walks in his sleep, goes along a narrow ledge outside a window, enters the room of a woman while her husband is out and finally, sans trousers, enters the ball room, causing consternation. There is considerable humorous material in this number, but Murray's running around minus his trousers may offend some of your patrons, this and the trouser falling business is ancient material which many fail to find hilarious.

"The Blacksmith"

(First National—Comedy—Two Reels)

Buster Keaton in this release keeps up his good record for turning out snappy comedies, full of humor and clever situations which are sure to bring laughs from the most hardened spectators. It starts off like a burlesque on "The Village Blacksmith," but soon branches off. The way in which Buster "sells" a fancy pair of shoes to a beautiful white horse, going through exactly the same stunts as a shoe salesman would do for milady is a scream. The magnet stuff is good, so is the way in which he and his boss manage to utterly wreck a new auto. The stunt where he is caught on the railroad track and runs in fright after he discovers the train has stopped just behind him will surely bring laughs. In fact, it is filled with sure-fire, laugh producing material. —C. S. S.

"The Man With the Twisted Lip"

(Educational—Drama—Two Reels)

A novel feature of this picture in the Sherlock Holmes serics is the fact that the celebrated detective himself for once seems to be working at one time on the wrong theory. This release is high in interest and entertainment value and should hold the attention of almost any audience, even though many will guess the outcome before it is flashed on the screen. Norwood's work as Holmes is fine, as usual, an another unique point in the film is the scene showing how he removes the make-up and disguise he used. The story deals with the disappearance of a reputable citizen and the discover by Holmes of the fact that the man is living a double life, being during the day a well-known begger, known as the man with the twisted lip.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 186"

(Pathe—One Reel)

This one-reel subject shows some wonderful rope-climbing at Chimney Rock, N. C., pictures Florida natives taming man-eating sharks, in "Living Paintings" presents another illustration of the marvels of expert camera work, and shows the "City of Watchers," Bonifacio, Corsica, in Pathecolor.—S. S.

"Timberland Treachery"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

An exceptionally interesting film is this, that has a fine dramatic story for its primary motive, but that nevertheless brings a message and instills a lesson.

Fine photography goes a long way in adding to the other laudable features of this number of the "Timber Tales." "Shots" of the redwood trees in California give the spectators interesting views of these giants of the forest, which have been heard of in almost every quarter of the globe, and among which the story's plot is laid.

There are some exciting moments, too, such as when Roy Stewart as "Buck Connors," on two occasions rescues the heroine, Esther Ralston, from certain death in terriffic explosions.—T. S. daP.

"The Natural Born Liar"

(Educational—Scenic—One Reel)

Fine photography and unusual and beautiful scenic shots which characterize all of Robert C. Bruce's pictures are strongly in evidence in this one. These he has introduced by having his hero, who is a natural born liar, tell of some of his wonderful experiences. There is a disappearing river in a desert; also a scene where the heavy rolling clouds lower than the mountain tops resemble ocean billows, a stream filled with enormous trout, a place in the hills where a man suddenly disappears from view, and a humorous section where the donkey refuses to go forward and has to be led backward all the way to camp. Trick photography and printing aid in some of these effects, and altogether the treatment has made this a picture of more than average appeal.——C. S. S.

"The Chickasha Bone Crusher"

(Universal—Series—Two Reels)

Reginald Denny's winning personality and boxing technique insure the popularity of this number from the "New Leather Pushers" series. The story is a good selection not lacking in "punch" and the comedy finale. Kid Roberts, the champion thoroughly beats a tough Westerner who follows him from city to city, determined to get even. The man taunts the Kid, by insisting that he is afraid to fight without gloves. Finally his wife appears and begs the Kid to refuse to fight her husband because he is neglecting his ranch and family. The Kid's sweetheart and the ranchman's wife do some scheming and succeed in ending the fights, but not until the Kid has beaten his opponent with his bare hands. —M. K.

"Wanted: A Story"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Johnny Jones and his fellow kids appear at their best in this two-reeler for Pathe release. The subject is not one which will greatly interest adults, but it ought to make a hit with children. The scenes are laid in a children's vision of a South Sea island, and the natives instead of being ferocious, succumb to the charms of jazz music and make Johnny their king.—S. S.

"Fleeced for Gold"

(Pathe—Educational—One Reel)

Spectacular is this one-reel Pathe scenic in the Oregon Trail Series. It is aptly titled "romance and realism of the sheep industry." Thousands upon thousands of sheep are shown grazing on the Oregon hills, being driven by dogs and being sheared. A slight love story runs through the scenic. One gets the idea it is propaganda in favor of the Northwest, but this doesn't matter, for it's hugely interesting.—S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Question

T. Edgar Beard, Coalville Opera House, Coalville, Utah, propounds an inquiry which it is very difficult to reply to without referring to the new handbook, unless I use an enormous amount of space. Readers will please understand that when I refer to the handbook in replying to questions it is NOT to compell you to buy one (though I would be quite willing to do that very thing FOR YOUR OWN GOOD, but merely and simply to enable the intelligent answering of questions which could not be otherwise answered intelligently without consuming a great deal of space. Friend Beard says:

Have just sent a check for the "Blue Book of Projection." There is one point on which I want information, which it may or may not contain, viz.: I use a Mazda outfit—an Argus. What shutter should I use with it to obtain best results—meaning maximum illumination with minimum flicker.

Have an 8 per cent slant (presumably you mean an 8-degree projection angle.—Ed.) from projector to an Argus beaded screen. What shutter will give most pleasing results to my audience. I want the best, no matter what the cost, though our town is only 625 population and I only run shows Tuesdays and Saturdays. I run the show because of my love for projection! Not for the money in it, for it (money) is NOT in evidence when the books are balanced at the end of the year.

I feel that you know what is best, hence my query.

Anything which works improvement is to be a big thing. Is there any improvement over the old corrugated condenser? If there is a better one I want it, no matter what it costs. Kindly have the concern making it send me one C. O. D.

Found Another

Whatdoyouknowaboutthat? ? ? I'm so excited over finding a man other than my old friend John Auerbach, who loves to reproduce photoplays just for the love of reproducing them (projection) so thoroughly that he is not especially interested in making money through the process, that I forgot to make spaces between the first six words! John Auerbach, Member New York Stock Exchange, Senior member of the firm of Auerbach, Pollak and Richardson, 60 Broadway, New York City, AND high class projectionist, Edgar Beard, Coalville, Utah, meet each other.

Though widely separated as to distance, there should be a bond of friendly interest between you and between us three. Incidentally the "Richardson" in Mr. Auerbach's firm, is neither of or any relation of mine.

As to the shutter, there are three types, viz: Extralite, plain metal three-wing and plain metal two-wing. The only thing the Extralite will do is give you more light, though with the Mazda I don't quite know what the percentage claim is in light gain.

First, let me advise you to STUDY General Instruction No. 22, pages 611 to 626 of your new handbook. Don't merely read it, mind you, but STUDY IT THOROUGHLY. If you do this you will understand about all the underlying principles involved in the matter of the revolving shutter, and will be able to apply the instructions under "Aerial Image" and "How to Trim Shutter Blade," pages 618 and 620.

The Next Step

Having prepared yourself to do this by study, I would advise you to obtain from your local printer a sheet of dark colored cardboard of the thickness and grade business cards are printed on. If he has no dark colored, then get white and a bottle of ink (draughtman's black preferred) and blacken its surface, being careful to use the ink sparingly, so as not to warp the sheet.

Now cut from it an exact pattern of the shutter blade you have and install it on one projector in place of the metal blade. Next cut from the cardboard a shutter blade with equal blades and openings, except that if it be a 3-wing blade you would better leave the master blade half an inch wider than the other two. Lay out the blade with equal openings and wings, but leave the opening on each side of one of the blades, which will be the master blade, ¼ of an inch narrower than the blade itself, so that the blade will be a total of half an inch wider than the other two, and the opening on each side a quarter of an inch narrower than the opening between the other two blades.

Now install this shutter on the other projector, or if you have but one projector, then get a second shutter hub and install it in that.

Trim Master Blade

Having done this, trim the master blade down a little and try it. Keep doing this until travel ghost begins to appear. When this occurs you will be getting just a trifle more than the maximum amount of light, and as nearly as I could tell you, the minimum amount of flicker. If it is a 2-winger you should trim both blades equally.

There is an uneven balancing of openings possible which I believe makes for a somewhat less flicker tendency than the equal openings, but its application by you in such a case would hardly be possible. It consists of making the opening between the two flicker blades of a 3-wing shutter a certain amount less than the two other openings. You can get the proportion from any Simplex 3-wing shutter, but whether it would properly apply to a shutter of other proportions I do not know—I doubt it.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Real Progressiveness

Recently I received from W. A. Oswald, Vancouver, British Columbia, as strong a letter of approval of the new handbook as even its author could wish for.

Mr. Oswald is, as you may remember the first government official of any country, up to this time, to put on a real, honest-to-gosh projectionists' examination—an examination which has made many a man who thought he knew quite a bit get down and scratch gravel good and hard.

In the aforesaid letter Mr. Oswald inclosed a copy of the "Regulations Governing the Operation of Moving Picture Theatres, Moving Picture Apparatus and Connections and Film Exchanges in the Province of British Columbia," with request that I "examine same and make such comment as seemed proper thereon." And it is that which I now propose to do.

In the first place, the British Columbia law and rules are progressive, in that they do NOT cling to out-worn names which have been discarded by up-to-date folk long ago. For instance, the projection room is called the projection room, NOT the "booth," as it is dubbed even in the laws of my own supposed to be Empire State of New York, which lays claim to being a leader and progressive. The front wall openings are called "Ports," as is right and proper, and so it is all through the book. But here is one that will make you all sit up and take notice. I quote verbatim from page 11 of British Columbia Regulations:

Projectionists

Section 26. The term "operator" and "apprentice operator" being now obsolete, the terms "projectionist" and "apprentice projectionist" replace them in these regulations.

There! I guess that will hold you for a minute! In replacing the rather idiotic term "operator" (idiotic because its application to the man who reproduces photoplays upon the screen is misleading and wrong, from any possible sensible viewpoint) I now have the backing of not only the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, but also of that great empire of the Northwest, British Columbia.

I have carefully examined the regulations and, while there are a few minor points on which I would take issue, still as a whole they are most excellent. As to the points I take issue with, for instance: On page 3 is the following: "SHELVES—all shelves, fittings and fixtures shall be either non-combustible or metal-covered throughout."

Rather Useless

Now there is nothing especially wrong with this requirement, but it has always seemed to me to be rather useless. A projection room is in itself, as a whole, fireproof. There is and can be no danger to an audience from a fire, as such. The danger is PANIC.

A wooden shelf, or half a dozen of them, can make no particular difference at all, even though they do burn. In any event, if the fire is bad enough to set a wooden board ablaze, by the time that occurs all the damage to both the audience and the contents of the room that can be done has been done. That wooden fittings, such as shelves, shall be of hardwood only is good sense, because hardwood will not catch easily and its use causes no extra bother; also that it be required that wood shelves be soaked in a solution of ammonia phosphate, which makes them to all intents and purposes non-combustible, could not be criticised. But covering them with iron—well, I can't see the need for that, and iron-covered shelves, etc., are more or less of a nuisance.

However, this and such other matters as I would take issue with are, after all, minor matters. Authorities all over the United States would do well to procure a copy of the British Columbia regulations and study them.

Handling Technicolor

Projectionists will soon be called upon to handle the new color process film known as "Technicolor." This film has just completed highly successful and satisfactory runs at some of the larger theatres in New York and elsewhere. Projectionists who wish their theatres and themselves to be credited with getting the best effects as already obtained in other theatres will do well to carefully examine their projectors before projecting this film.

Technicolor is a double coated film—a photographic emulsion on both sides. It therefore follows that, whereas an ordinary black and white film something may rub slightly on its celluloid side without causing serious damage, if Technicolor rubs against anything on either side there will almost certainly be ruined film. Examine your projector in the following items:

First:—Be certain that the upper and lower magazine fire trap is clean, and that the rollers thereof revolve freely. Failure in this may not work serious harm to black and white (though it is a bad condition and one which no true projectionist would or will tolerate) but, will certainly bring about damage to Technicolor.

Sprocket Idler Rollers

Second:—Examine all sprocket idler rollers and make certain that they are turning freely; also that they have no flat spots. If they don't turn freely, then do whatever is necessary to make them turn. If they have flat spots put on new rollers.

Third:—If you have a Simplex, examine carefully and see to it that the film does not rub on the guard which is sometimes provided between the lower take-up sprocket and the crankshaft. Any rubbing here will be very serious indeed, and will be entirely due to the guard being out of correct adjustment—too far from the crankshaft. This guard does sometimes, due to loosening of the holding screws or to bending, drop away from the shaft a trifle. Be very sure this is not the condition before you project. Some projectionists remove the guard and place a piece of brass tubing fitting snugly over the crankshaft. This is said to work very well. Technicolor is slightly thicker than ordinary film—about half a thousandth. Its emulsion is not a flat surface, but lies in what might be called hills and valleys, though the differences in thickness is, of course, infinitesimally small. The emulsion is coated with a varnish which makes the actual surface level, and to some extent protects it.

Now, gentlemen, if the foregoing points are carefully observed, you will not only avoid trouble and explanations as to why you allow your projector parts to be out of order at any time, but you will have no greater difficulty with Technicolor film than with any ordinary film. After all, these are only the points that should be observed in any good projection.

Loew Men to Banquet

I am in receipt of an invitation to attend the annual banquet to be given by the Loew Theatre Projectionists at midnight, December 16, in the Rustic Restaurant, Twenty-fourth street and Sixth avenue, New York City. The affair will be in honor of Mike Campbell, chief projectionist of the Loew circuit.

I am well pleased to be able to accept, because in the past the Loew projectionist banquets have been most enjoyable affairs—enjoyable and valuable as well, because they have served to bring all the men into personal contact.

I am informed that all large projector manufacturers in this territory will be represented; also all accessory dealers. Certainly those who have the opportunity to attend should account themselves as fortunate.

It Seems to Me

It does seem to me, though, that the producer, above all others, ought to be either represented, or be there in his own august person. Oh! yes, I really mean it! Why not? It is upon these men and men like them the producer is compelled to rely for the showing of his product to the public at 100 per cent. value, and encouragement by such a courtesy would bear goodly fruit. The producer is careful to be "represented," or to personally attend many affairs in which he really has much less actual concern than he SHOULD have in affairs such as this one.

I say that, because the producer is literally obliged to depend upon the energy, enterprise and knowledge of these men to place his production before Loew audiences as a brilliant, sparkling photoplay, in which the actors do the things they did before the camera, AS they did them before the camera, or as a dim, shadowy, shaky, imitation picture, in which the actors do the same things they did before the camera, BUT do those things very differently, thus more often than not utterly ruining the whole effect of the finest scenes in the production.

As for me, I'll be there, and will be expecting a corking good time, too. Any further information relative to the affair may be had from Louis Feldman, projectionist, Loew's American Theatre, on Forty-second street at Eighth avenue.

Notice of Meeting

On Monday, December 11, 1922, at 11.30 P. M., a descriptive lecture on OPTICS, as applied to motion picture projection, illustrated by stereo. slides, will be given at our Headquarters. The lecturer will be Mr. E. A. Taylor, Optical Engineer of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company. All interested are invited.

The foregoing is the notice, just as handed me by Secretary Ross of the I. P. A. I would strongly advise all projectionists to attend this meeting. You cannot fail to come away with a better knowledge of projection optics. By all means go.

Better Equipment

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

Is the Specially Designed Lighting Fixture Actually Worth Its Cost?

IN its issue of December 2, the Moving Picture World gave a resumé of motion picture theatre building activities during 1922. During the period mentioned, we published itemized reports showing where over $94,000,000 had been appropriated for new picture houses.

An unduly large percentage of this expenditure was devoted to that portion of house equipment coming under the head of lighting fixtures.

We say "unduly" advisedly, because, with a few exceptions, we believe that the sums expended by many of our modern picture theatres for lighting fixtures is considerably greater than the results obtained justify.

From time to time, we have noted, in the descriptions of new theatres which we have published, emphasis laid upon the cost and the elaborate construction of the lighting fixtures installed and this, in many cases, seemed to be out of proportion to the cost of other items of furnishing and equipment.

Why the Condition Exists

The reason for this state of affairs appears to lie in the fact that many exhibitors insist upon equipping their houses with specially designed fixtures which cost considerably more than would have been necessary to procure equally artistic stock patterns.

Individuality is, up to a certain point, something well worth striving for, but there is a point, beyond which it fails to pay a dividend.

The average man does not insist, when renting, buying, or even building, a home, that the lighting fixtures with which it is equipped be of exclusive pattern especially designed for him.

And yet, the average man must spend considerable portions of each of the three hundred sixty-five days and the three hundred sixty-five nights per year beholding the lighting fixtures with which his home is equipped.

And it is to the average man—perfectly satisfied to gaze on stock fixtures in his home—that the average exhibitor caters.

It is doubtful if the average picture theatre patron, beyond the fact that the house lighting fixtures are pleasing and appropriate, pays any great attention to them. Certainly, a very small percentage, outside of those in the fixture business, are likely to appreciate any great expenditure to which the exhibitor goes in the way of providing elaborate designs in chandeliers, wall lights and the lamps in lobbies, foyers and rest rooms.

As a matter of fact, it is largely due to the insistance of the exhibitor that heavy expenditures for these items are saddled upon the house.

The fixture manufacturers, as a general thing, cannot be held responsible for it, because it is to be doubted if they derive any great profit from catering to the demand for exclusive designs.

Although the cost for such exclusive designs is many times that of stock fixtures, the time of high priced designers, the cost of special patterns and individual operations must all be met by the price of one set of fixtures which will probably never again be duplicated.

At the Show-Down

And when it comes to a final showdown, it is doubtful if the manufacturer has made any more real money on the contract than he would have obtained on a straight stock fixture deal of equal magnitude.

Conditions have so changed during the past few years that it is no longer necessary for the exhibitor to feel that, unless his fixtures are individually designed for his house, they will fail to harmonize with it or do it justice.

Stock fixtures today must be made in quantities in order to distribute the cost of designing, pattern making and other processes over as wide a field as possible. And artistic designs and high quality of workmanship are necessary to insure the popularity of designs so produced.

It is a comparatively easy matter for the exhibitor today to equip his house artistically and most satisfactorily from stock designs of lighting fixtures, which may be varied sufficiently in finish to harmonize with the interior decorations, and it is to be doubted if the average run of one's patrons would be sufficiently enthused over specially designed equipment, as compared with stock fixtures, to warrant an increased expenditure, which the former involves.

Stock Fixtures Pleasing

The artistic and pleasing effects produced by stock fixtures in many of our smaller theatres is sufficient guarantee that the same results could be obtained, by the same means, in our larger and more costly houses.

Nothing is too good for the modern picture theatre and no expenditure that tends to make it more profitably popular with its patrons is unwise, but the time has come when it is well for the exhibitor to sit down and figure as to how much of an appropriation in the way of decorations is producing actual value of the sums spent upon them.

It would appear that the modern stock fixtures are so good and so artistic and those specially designed are so expensive that the small appreciable difference in quality between them does not compensate for the anything but small difference in their cost.

Boston's New 2,000 Seat Capitol Open

"Omar the Tentmaker," starring Guy Bates Post, was given its Boston premiere on Monday night, December 4, as the opening feature at Gordon's new Capitol Theatre, on Commonwealth avenue, near Harvard avenue, the newest and most magnificent of the Olympia Theatre chain which already has so many notable links at vantage points throughout New England.

The opening was attended by an audience that filled the auditorium to its capacity of 2,000 seats, and included the mayors and city officials of most of the cities in the Greater Boston district.

A symphony orchestra of twenty pieces, and an organ, built specially for the theatre, provided the musical program of the evening, including the interpretative scores that went with the picturizations. Edward Wittstein and Hyman Fine conducted the orchestral program, and Francis J. Cronin was at the organ.

Thanksgiving Eve of Fifteen Years Ago Recalled by Hallberg

WITHIN about ten days after the conception of the idea of using a special transformer for the control of projector arc lamps, a complete model was finished and tested and the result was an efficient and reliable device which came up to my expectations, and of which the following is a brief description:

"An iron core was provided built up from thin sheets of high grade transformer steel approximately as illustrated in Figure 1. Several hundred of these sheets were stacked on top of each other in order to form the magnetic core for the economizer and Figure 2 gives an end view.

"In ordinary step-up or step-down transformers which are of the constant potential type the primary and secondary windings are equally divided so that part of each primary and part of each secondary will be on each one of the two iron core legs as illustrated in Figure 3. The characteristics of this kind of a transformer, therefore, are not at all suited for the control of a carbon arc because at the instant the carbons are put together the transformer will be under a practical short circuit on account of the fact that the magnetic lines of force set up in the core by the primary winding would also be included within the secondary coils or turns of wire.

Different Arrangement Necessary

"An entirely different arrangement had to be used in order to allow leakage of the magnetic lines of force so that all the magnetic lines set up by the primary winding would not have to pass through the secondary coil. In consequence thereof a new design was developed as illustrated in Figure 4 in which the primary was put on one leg and the secondary on the other leg of the transformer core, said coils being separated by several inches. The result of this arrangement would be that the lines of force set up by the primary would pass through both legs of the core as illustrated by the arrows in Figure 4 as long as the secondary winding was open or not loaded and under this condition a very small amperage would be taken from the line through the primary because of the great self-induction of the device.

"When load is put on the secondary, such for instance, as an arc between two carbon points the magnetic lines of force no longer flow entirely through both core legs but some are shunted through the air space between the two coils and only the necessary amount of magnetism passes through the second core leg of which the secondary is placed, as illustrated in a general way in Figure 5.

"If we stop for a moment and analyze what happens in Figure 5 we will find that when the carbons are separated and no current flows in the secondary then when the primary is connected to the line, practically all of the magnetic lines of force will pass back and forth through both core legs, when the carbons are put together practically all of the lines of force which start in that part of the core surrounded by the primary winding pass through the air around the primary coil and if the short circuit is maintained this condition will continue, at which time a properly designed transformer of this type will allow slightly more normal full load current in amperes to flow through the primary winding.

Counter Effect Lessened

"If the carbons should be separated, which increases the resistance of the arc circuit, then the counter effect on the secondary core is lessened and some of the lines of force instead of passing on the outside of the primary coil begin to crowd through the second leg of the core generating voltage and current in the arc circuit, which phenomena increases only when the arc has been established at the proper length with the proper number of amperes flowing at which time the transformer and the arc are in balance. If an impurity passes through the arc lowering its resistance the current does not go up materially but a less number of lines of force pass through the secondary coil, therefore, reducing the voltage for that instant and thus maintaining a practically constant current at the arc.

"This is a very desirable feature because it not only makes the device perfectly safe but on account of the entire principle of operation being electro magnetic with a very low resistance in the coils there is comparatively little heat generated and it is impossible to blow fuses and during operation the automatic feature of shunting the magnetic lines of force through or away from the secondary coil stabilizes the arc and permits the carbon points to be held quite close together so that both craters may be focused upon the aperture in one spot of practically double the intensity through no other means with A. C. at the arc.

The First Model

"On the first model made the primary coil was provided with one leading-in wire connected to the line and on the end of the coil three leads or taps were brought out so that the second line wire could be attached to a lesser number of turns for low line voltage or for high amperage at the arc, and likewise a greater number of turns could be included by moving the line wire to the last tap so as to include maximum number of turns in the primary coil for high line voltage or for low amperage at the arc.

"The first Hallberg Economizer was placed in a wooden cabinet with the primary and secondary terminals coming out through insulating porcelain bushings in the top and with ventilating openings in the bottom and on the sides. It seems strange to replace a hot rheostat which would glow red in service with a device in a wooden box but notwithstanding this fact the economizer was approved and the first one was installed in a Jersey City theatre during the Winter of 1907.

"Well do I remember the afternoon when the try-out was made. An old 25 to 30 ampere rheostat with several coils short circuited on 110 volt 60 cycle alternating current with 40 ampere fuses as regularly installed for service was first used for the test during one reel of the afternoon show. Then before the second reel, the first Hallberg Economizer was substituted and with an ampere meter in the line and another one in the lamp circuit, the line switch was closed, indicating 2 amperes. When the arc was struck the current taken from the line was about 26 amperes and the current at the arc was 45 amperes and with 5/8" cored Electra pink labeled carbons the illumination on the screen with the second reel was practically three times as brilliant as with the rheostat taking more amperage from the line during the first reel. The improvement was so marked that when the show was over I stood with the exhibitor in the doorway and many of the patrons stopped to inquire what the new improvement was which made the picture so brilliant after the first reel.

Early Model of Economizer

"After that, things moved swiftly and before long the economizer was placed in a circular metal case with perforated brass cover, Figure 6, and that type remained the standard for almost five years.

"The wider application of the economizer in places where the line voltage varied and where it was desired to change the amperage at the arc during the performance it was found inconvenient to shift the line terminal to the different transformer taps and in consequence thereof a switch with three points was provided so arranged that the second line wire could be disconnected and connected instantaneously for or to any one of the three line taps on the economizer primary.

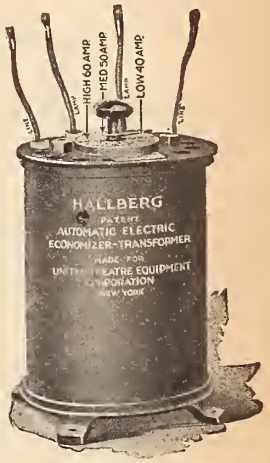

FIGURE 7
Present Model of Economizer

"With this design and construction only two line and two lamp leads were brought out as the connections were made internally and then the control handle for the three point switch was mounted on top of the economizer case for quick adjustment and that is the type now in regular service as illustrated in Figure 7."

F. H. Elliott Enters the Accessory Field

Frederick H. Elliott, who organized the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and served as its executive secretary for over six years, has been elected a member of the board of directors and executive committee of the Feaster Manufacturing Company and has assumed his new duties at the general offices of that company, 16 West Forty-sixth street, N. Y.

Mr. Elliott brings to the Feaster Corporation a wide experience and knowledge of the motion picture industry, gained from his years of service with the industry's national organization. This is particularly true in connection with the fire prevention work of the National Association, which Mr. Elliott directed and which resulted in the adoption of many precautionary measures and policies affecting the studios, exchanges, laboratories and motion picture theatres and with a resultant protection to the lives of thousands of employees in the various branches of the industry.

FOREWORD

PARAMOUNT herewith makes its regular semi-annual announcement of its product—definitely fixed and set for release in the coming six months.

The task has been a tremendous one of bettering the picture values and of topping the box-office power of Paramount's first half-year's releases, the "Famous 41"—such pictures as "Manslaughter," "Blood and Sand," "The Old Homestead," "To Have and To Hold," "The Young Rajah," "Nice People," "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," "Kick In,"—to mention only a few of Paramount's big releases of the past few months.

I sincerely feel, however, that this task has been accomplished. I believe that the new pictures herein described will be found of even greater money-making proportions for exhibitors than the best of the "Famous 41."

The selection of stories, the choosing of strong casts, the assignments of famous directors, the elaborate details of luxurious production, the popularity of Paramount stars—all has been combined with one thought in mind—to make the finest pictures the screen can produce. Not art for art's sake alone, but box-office value as well.

Certain it is that there has been no effort or money spared to make these "Super 39," the greatest pictures Paramount has ever released.

Adolph Zukor

I Pledge—

SIX months ago we issued the Paramount Booklet. In that Booklet we listed forty-one pictures—the most sweeping promise ever made to the exhibitors of America.

In the front of the book, nailed down in black and white, I pledged my word that this group of forty-one Paramount Pictures would be immeasurably better than any like number of pictures ever produced before.

The performance of that pledge—its performance to the last letter—is recorded in the box-office of every theatre that has played or is playing the "Famous 41."

But we cannot rest there—this swiftly moving business will not let us. So I make this new pledge:

Just as this "Famous 41" outstripped all previous records so this second group of Paramount Pictures will be better than the first—better collectively, better individually.

And, just as I kept my last pledge, so I know I will keep this pledge, too; for back of me, alert, untiring, resourceful, is the great Production Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, better organized than ever before, functioning like a machine and manned by the greatest organization of picture producers ever grouped in one company.

Each member of this organization—directors, writers, stars, leading players, executives, studio employees—is keenly alive to the importance and magnitude of our task. Each has pledged me his unswerving support and loyalty, and each one knows, as I know, that with "Paramount's "Super 39" we shall exceed our promise in this, our greatest work and greatest opportunity.

A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION

"HOLLYWOOD"

Based upon the novelette, "Hollywood, and the Only Child" by Frank Condon

WITH A CAST INCLUDING
ALL THE STARS ON THIS PAGE AND OTHERS

Paramount is making this story—a comedy-drama about a girl who tried to get into the movies, but didn't—with a cast that when listed will be a duplicate of the top sheets of the Lasky Studio payroll.

Angela, the heroine, is the counterpart of a million American girls, and she goes to Hollywood to try to get into pictures. There is melodrama, love, mystery, humor.

She leads a life that a million girls will envy, that will make every motion picture patron laugh and thrill.

There have been hundreds of successful plots laid in New York, but not one in Hollywood. And Hollywood is the most interesting city in the world.

This production shows "everything and everybody."

The leading characters will be prominent. But the supporting cast will be so important and so large that no theatre on earth will have enough electric lights to announce all of the names.

There will be no propaganda, no expose of the secrets of picture-making. It is not a moving picture tour of Hollywood. It is a real, fast moving story. And the cast!

Just about everybody big that you can think of.

Directed by the man who made "The Old Homestead."

Without any question, "Hollywood" will be the box-office sensation of 1923!

"The Light to Leeward"

THE author of "While Satan Sleeps" has written a sea story with a tremendous punch in "The Light to Leeward." The two stars appear in splendid roles and make an ideal combination. Scenes of shipwreck, battles with the elements, amazing rescues, provide thrill upon thrill.

Some press comments on

"When Knighthood Was in Flower"

"When Knighthood Was in Flower is one of the greatest film epics ever made in America; in fact, the picture merits visit after visit to grasp all its glories."—N. Y. Telegram.

"The most amazingly beautiful motion picture ever screened. Moves swiftly, never wearying, and leaving at the last a regret that it is over."—N. Y. Mail.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower is all that has been claimed for it; the people burst into applause again and again. Don't miss it."—N. Y. Tribune.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower ranks high alongside of the best in romantic screen drama with a beauty of background which has not to our knowledge been surpassed. The scene showing Marion Davies in an attitude of prayer is one of the finest moments which we have seen in the cinema."—N. Y. World.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower is dazzling to the eye, splendidly impressive and apparently true to the time and places of its settings. Marion Davies really outdoes herself, while Lyn Harding is a joy. Such a King! Such a King!"—N. Y. Times.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower is everything that a spectacular photoplay should be. It is beautiful, exciting, vivid and authentic. It is a great picture."—Robert E. Sherwood in "Life."

"The Counter Jumper"

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

December 9, 1922

"Fast and Furious" Is Larry Semon's "Counter Jumper"

Instead of "The Counter Jumper" Larry Semon might have named his comedy something like "The Walking Egg." For it is an egg with a protruding pair of legs, much resembling those ordinarily associated with a frog, that provides the larger element of mirth in this Vitagraph release. The egg steps out of a basket filled with its kind and proceeds to perform. It leaps from crag to crag in the country store, it eludes pursuit by dodging in and out among the barrels and baskets and defies the club wielded by the agile Larry, finally landing on the pate of a stovewarmer. As the accustomed tile is replaced upon its usual foundations thereby imprisoning the egg the ruthless club descends. When the battered headgear finally is lifted it is a full-fledged duckling that emerges.

Oliver ("Babe") Hardy is catapulted out of a window at the crest of a sharply inclined sandbank. He turns over and over, slowly as if half floating—and it is funny. Just to show it is no accident he does it again. A clerk filling an order by inadvertence drops a lot of cartridges into a stove. Things happen. A colored boy gets into difficulties. In fact, any number of things take place in these two reels that ought to make fun for the crowd.

The atmosphere is of the country store, with its loungers and its indescribably jumbled arrangement of stock. The picture will go strongly in the city, but it is not risking much to wager it will do even more than that in rural sections. G. B.

"The Counter Jumper"

(Vitagraph-Comedy—Two Reels)

This comedy should prove a regular riot with Larry Semon fans and bring a lot of laughs from almost any audience. It is rapid-fire stuff and while there is considerable slam-bang stuff, pastry throwing, falling into tubs of paste, etc., he has also introduced some brand new stuff, notably a scene where a duck egg with two legs sticking out does all sorts of stunts. This is funny and clever and it will mystify you as to how it is done. Another good scene is where a negro sits on a block of ice and it melts immediately and a good effect has been produced with a scene where Larry and the villain go off the top of a cliff; slow motion photography makes them appear to float through the air. There is very little plot, but Larry's troubles occur when he tries to be a clerk in a store and help an heiress who is being sought by a clever villain.—C. S. S.

"The Counter Jumper"—Larry Semon—Vitagraph

Type of production.....2 reel comedy

This latest Semon comedy has some brand new stunts, and despite the fact that a lot of the footage is slapstick and rough, there are laughs aplenty. The action takes place in a trading post in the Northwest and the store gets pretty well smashed up before the finish. One of the funniest stunts is that in which an egg suddenly sprouts real little legs and walks around, jumps from place to place and eludes all pursuers. They will wonder how it's done. Another funny incident is that in which a coon falls from a balcony onto a red hot stove and then bounces up and down from the ceiling to the stove like a jumping jack on a pole. When he finally escapes he sits on a big cake of ice which melts almost instantaneously before one's eyes, letting the coon down on the floor with a bang. This will surely get a laugh. In the cast are Lucille Carlisle and "Babe" Hardy.

Motion Picture News

December 9, 1922

"The Counter Jumper"

(Vitagraph—Two Reels)

IN the category there may be better comedies than "The Counter Jumper" If so, they are in the offing. Gauging possibilities of a comedy upon its laugh provoking merits, this one hits the bull's eye for speed, development of situation and fun. While at times it may border upon "slap-stick," a more accurate description is "exaggerated farce." And with it all, there is somewhat of a production.

Most of the happenings occur in connection with the star-comedian's activities in the role of a misunderstood clerk of a general store, described as the marketing headquarters of a Northwest Trading Post. The property is the inheritance of an attractive heiress, which has little to do with the sequences involving most of the fun, incidents that start innocently enough, ending in veritable riots. These are so distinctly varied, it is difficult to realize that so much action and fun can possibly be crowded into two reels. One novelty embracing a walking egg, one that is so strong it sprouts legs and leads the comedian all over the place trying to catch it, is more than funny. It is decidedly clever.

Those who enjoy comedy will undoubtedly approve of "The Counter Jumper," a clean, fast and thoroughly entertaining farce.—LILLIAN GALE.

Mr. Myron Selznick,

New York, N. Y.

My Dear Mr. Selznick,

Rarely have I enjoyed a picture more than "One Week of Love." It opene with great vivacity and brilliance, then suddenly develope a situation that seizes and holds to the last moment.

Elaine Hammerstein, as a beautiful flapper abruptly plunged into a wilderness of dangere, meets every opportunity with remarkable power and restraint. Conway Tearle givee a magnificent performance with the effect of a volcano, silent but ominous. The conflict between these two characters, one a reckless girl, the other a reckless brute, and the resulting influence of each on the other, give the picture high dramatic value.

The production is gorgeous in its interiors and majestic in its landscapes. The photography and titling are perfect, and the picture ought to have great success with the public.

Sincerely yours,

Rupert Hughes

Rupert Hughes writes:

"Rarely have I enjoyed a picture more than 'One Week of Love'"

As you see, it isn't so much that another critic has pronounced "One Week of Love" a great photoplay as it is that this noted writer, himself a producer of motion pictures, should lay aside his own important affairs to sit down and voluntarily type a word of praise for the production.

We liked his letter and are proud of the picture that inspired him to write it. Almost every mail brings us letters of appreciation from personages the country over.

This attraction will hold up to any statements you make regarding its entertainment value.

WYNDHAM STANDING gives one of the most striking performances of his career as a weak-kneed student who finds his manhood when taunted with the title of coward.

Leading support is given him by DOROTHY MACKAILL, who won much praise for her recent work with Mary Alden in "A Woman's Woman." Also featured is J. BARNEY SHERRY, lately seen in "Till We Meet Again," "Secrets of Paris," etc.

GUSTAV VON SEYFFERTITZ, the villain, was an outstanding figure in "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "Sherlock Holmes" and "The Face in the Fog."

With such a cast interpreting a story which deals with the arousing of a man's instincts from timidity to raw courage; culminating in a fist battle which vindicates his manhood, and closing with the fulfillment of a wonderful romance; "The Inner Man" is one of the current features every exhibitor can jot down as a good bet.

Ellis Parker Butler

THIS is the first of a series of six advertisements to appear weekly in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, written by Ellis Parker Butler, world famous humorist and author of "Pigs is Pigs," telling America about a new screen play, "East is West." Mr. Butler accepted this commission only on condition that he be permitted to say exactly what he pleased on the subject.

Why shouldn't I tell the world about "East is West" if I want to?

Thousands and thousands of people have already laughed and wept over the adventures of little Ming Toy "99% American girl" and her athletic lover Billy Benson in the stage play "East is West." Everybody that saw Fay Bainter, as the first Ming Toy, being hustled down to the gorgeous but hideous Love Boat because her father thought too many daughters were a curse unless he could cash in on their beauty in the matrimonial slave market, will admit it was a great play. Since its first night on Broadway the play has had a two-year run at the Astor, played many consecutive weeks the sixth time it returned to San Francisco, and is still a success on the road. Nearly every American willing to pay two dollars or up for a seat has seen it, and it has made a fortune for its authors, Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer, and for Wm. Harris, Jr., its producer. And they deserve it for providing so much good fun to a world that needs all it can get. Of course, the Motion Picture people were quick to ask for the screen rights of such a hit but the authors and producers knew its value and let the movie men bid against bid for two long years before they cried "SOLD" to Constance Talmadge's Manager, Joseph M. Schenk.

Now, I haven't the least bit of diffidence in saying I am being paid for writing this series of articles, which will run for six weeks in The Saturday Evening Post. I don't think it will hurt my standing as an author. Magazines and newspapers pay authors to write about the stage and screen, and all I am asked to do is to tell the truth about "East is West" as I see it. Honestly, I think it is going to be fun to be able to tell some ten million people what I think about a motion picture play. So here goes—more about "East is West" next week.

When it comes to a matter of love and hate, good and evil, 'est is East, and East is West. And that's true. To prove it story takes an altogether delicious little China maid, who n't feel China," and puts her in danger of the hideous things : can happen to a Chinese girl whose father sells her as a e. In the picture this little Ming Toy, who later boasts she 9% American-girl," is Constance Talmadge, and all through icture she seemed to me just about the most charming ; I have ever seen on the screen.

'he story begins in China with little Ming Toy flashing most un-Chinese and thoroughly American bit of temper hoeshop because the shoe merchant dares hint that her e too large for beauty. By the time she has said her say her tongue and her paper umbrella the street before the looks as if China had just had a bad spell of riot and bellion. This, naturally enough, attracts the attention Benson who happens to be "seeing China." Billy is an young American, son of the American Minister, and as oy has about forty-seven parcels to manage, as well as little sisters and her temper, Billy sends them all home haws" or whatever the things are called in China. That e meets Ming Toy and is all he sees of her just then, re in mysterious China and know some thrilling thing to happen. And it does.

ll you what, next week.

The Famous Love-Boat Auction Scene in "East is West"

"She is Ming Toy—The Beauteous One—and her price is most reasonable, your Excellency."

The "Love-Boat" scene in this "East is West" motion picture is a flash of real drama, and for two reasons. The first s the eye reason. By the time the love-boat appears we have een enough of China to feel that we are actually there, but it is he mean China of cheap streets and small shops and one-horse olie-peasant farms. Then, suddenly, we are whisked down to us beautiful and gorgeous Chinese love-boat, as bright and owy as the gayest New York cabaret. That is a clever use scenic contrast.

But the scenic contrast would be paltry if the reason for it e not inevitable. By the time the love-boat appears we are thily interested in what is going to happen to the charming le Ming Toy (Constance Talmadge) and are worried about If Ming Toy were an ordinary Chinese girl, brought up to uder being sold at auction a possible fate, we might not care h, but Ming Toy "don't feel China" and does feel "99% erican-girl," and we do care. We hate like sin to see her eyed wretch of a father dress her up for sale and drag her to the love-boat, which is a sort of all-night Chinese et with a slave auction annex. We hate the fat mandarin ooks her over as if she were mere live stock before he bids r, and we would like to give him a punch in the eye. So, e, the love-boat scene was inevitable. It had to be there. a part of Ming Toy's life story. And, just as Wellington terloo prayed for "night or Blücher," we want to know uch more of this Ming Toy has to stand, and why that ur young American lad, Billy Benson, doesn't get busy. tell you more next week.)

Seeing this "East is West" motion picture has increased m interest in the screen just about 99%. By nature and professi I am a humorist and I have sometimes felt that no humor b pie-slinging humor could be put on the screen successfully. T "East is West" picture satisfies me that any humor can filmed. Given the right treatment, humor can be as laughable the screen as on the stage or in a book. I see that now.

"East is West" is the story of an averted tragedy but it humor from start to finish. Not a pie is slung and yet laughs are innumerable! Notice: This is the sixth and last of a series of six consecutive weekly advertisements in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, written by Ellis Parker Butler, world-famous humorist and author of "Pigs is Pigs," telling America about a new screen play, "East is West." Mr. Butler accepted this commission only on condition that he be permitted to say exactly what he pleased on the subject.

"She—Ming Toy—belong to Charlie Yong—" "Not if I know it," says Billy Benson

This is the last of the six advertisements I was to write about "East is West," and it has been good fun to talk to ten million people, writing what I pleased, and getting paid for it. I think I have done pretty well as an advertisement writer and I'm going to be disappointed if at least ten million do not go to see "East is West" because of these advertisements. My whole family will go—and we are seven—so there are only 9,999,993 to be accounted for.

And now for my grand finale and bow. Before I agreed to write these advertisements I went to see "East is West." If I had not thought it was a good picture I would not have agreed to write anything. I did like the picture. I only remember one picture I liked better—and I wrote that one myself. "East is West" has drama, thrill, fun and pathos and some of the best acting ever photographed. Constance Talmadge as Ming Toy reveals shades of emotion—from broad fun to appealing pathos—such as she has never shown before. Her Ming Toy will be one of the best loved characters on the screen, or I miss my guess. If I am not mightily mistaken "East is West" is going to be a tremendous success. That's what I think. I wish every one of my 9,999,993 readers who see the picture could tell me whether they think as I think—the other seven will. What I think is that it is a delightful motion picture and I do not hesitate to urge you to see it at the first opportunity. You'll thank me.

And I thank you!

Action is Coming

IT had to happen. It wasn't possible for the picture calendar to roll around from September to December without something in the way of excitement, something portending storms.

The formation of the A. B. C. and the rumblings incident to it gave the first intimation that this film year was not to differ from its predecessors.

Now it turns out that the A. B. C. was only a "stolen march" on the part of a group of New York exhibitors; the telegraph wires from Chicago tell of the organization of the "Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation," with national aspirations, and guided by the same hands that hold the reins on the M. P. T. O. A.

"Things are beginning to happen."

Moving Picture World is the only trade paper which has continued to present news items showing that the organization distribution plan discussed two years ago at Minneapolis and last summer at Washington had not passed into the land of limbo.

Cooperative distribution is the rock upon which previous organization attempts have floundered; but it remains the goal towards which all exhibitor organizers aim.

The sponsors of the "Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation" are capable men; they have planned slowly and deliberately; it must naturally be surmised that they have chosen the moment of launching with the greatest care.

They are men not given easily to many of the mistakes that have ruined the efforts of their predecessors.

But they have many of the same obstacles to overcome.

So the prospect is bright for those who believe that "action" within an industry makes for prosperity, combats stagnation, and prevents the successful carrying out of the slow process of evolution that seems always to be headed towards benevolent monopoly.

We are going to have plenty of action.

Definite announcement by the Sydney Cohen group of the birth of the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation interjects a new element into the booking combination discussion that has been waxing so interesting.

First news that the booking combination idea was spreading to other cities besides New York had many editorial writers fearing for the poor producer, who faced the prospect of being held up by the united buying power of the combinations.

Then Hiram Abrams announced that he would encourage booking combinations wherever possible—and the discovery was made by those who should have known it in the first place that all distributors are not preeminently satisfied with conditions as they exist.

There are others in the Hiram Abrams position, but their strength is not so impregnable that they can afford to talk.

But the proposal of a distributing machine backed by the organized exhibitor presents competition—competition for the now existing independent distributor, the booking combination, and the more solidly intrenched producer-distributor.

The booking combination doesn't seem to be "a dreaded monster" any longer. To the distributor it presents by far the lesser of the evils—if it is an evil.

Detailed comment on the new Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation must wait on more definite word concerning its plans and proposed method of operation than has yet come from Chicago.

Detailed comment may not then be wise, if it turns out, as now appears, that the new machine is merely a business organization intended for competition with existing business organizations.

For it is not the place of the trade paper to discuss the pros and cons, merits or alleged demerits, of competing business organizations in its field.

A Big Success

Expects Cumulative Effects of Movie Week to be Highly Beneficial

"Go-to-the-Movies-Week," December 3 to 9, in St. Louis, Mo., has passed into history. It was perhaps the most successful campaign of its kind ever staged in the Mound City and reflects great credit on Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; Fred Wehrenberg, vice president and chairman of the league special "Go-to-the-Movies-Week" campaign committee, the other officers and individual members of the league.

Its success cannot be gauged entirely by the receipts taken in at the box offices, though it was a decided financial success. But the cumulative effects of the movement over the weeks, months and years to come will tell the story of this movement for the screen's benefit and to convince the theatre-goers, and especially the stay-at-homes, that the modern moving picture industry is worthy of their confidence.

The calibre of the pictures shown has seldom been equaled anywhere. "Tess of the Storm Country," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "I Am the Law," "Human Hearts" and "The Secret of the Storm Country" were a few of the offerings held out to the movie lovers of St. Louis. But it was in the neighborhood houses that some of the best results were obtained.

A Radical Change

Roth Foresees Elimination of Orchestra from Movie Theatres

Forecasting that the demands that musicians in San Francisco theatres are making may bring about the entire elimination of orchestral music in theatres, Eugene H. Roth, of the California, Granada, Imperial and Portola Theatres, says it is likely that such music will be entirely superseded by pipe-organs, together with a few players who will be called on to render the necessary jazz.

The demands of the musicians are now centering on a six-day week. Their former demands for more money having already been granted, Mr. Roth states.

Paramount Wins

Rodolph Valentino, prominent screen star, suffered a defeat recently when the Appellate Division of the N. Y. Supreme Court handed down a decision denying his appeal from the decision of Justice Wasservogel of the lower court, restraining him from appearing with any other motion picture concern but the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the period of his contract with them.

Censorship Vote

The final vote on the motion picture referendum in Massachusetts as certified by the Secretary of State is as follows:

Against Censorship...	553,173
For Censorship.....	208,252
Majority against Censorship	344,921

Against "Blue Laws"

District of Columbia Officials Favor Sunday Recreation

The Government of the District of Columbia is not in favor of the "blue laws" which have been proposed for Washington and will take no action to press for their adoption by Congress. According to the District commissioners, Washington does not need any Sunday blue laws and there will be no efforts made by District officials to repress innocent amusement and recreation on that day.

In the opinion of Cuno H. Rudolph, president of the Board of Commissioners, it is much better for the general public to have moving picture theatres and other amusements open, affording them an outlet for a normal desire for recreation.

Arrange Meeting

Date Set for Gathering of Exchange Managers and Exhibitors

January 22, 23 and 24 are the dates that have been fixed for the big get-together meeting of the exchange managers in the District of Columbia territory and the exhibitors of Washington, Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina. At a meeting of the newly-formed Film Board of Trade on December 11, committees on the part of that organization were appointed and the secretary requested to invite the exhibitors' associations in the places named to form committees to co-operate in this movement.

The officers of the Film Board of Trade are R. Clinton Robin, Pathe, president; J. Harry Brown, Universal, vice president; J. A. Bachman, Educational, secretary, and Samuel Galanty, American Releasing, treasurer. The executive committee members are J. H. Beaver, Preferred Pictures; Sam Gallanty; and Sam Flax, Liberty Film.

The affair is to be financed through contributions from the home offices of the film companies whose Washington managers are members of the Film Board of Trade and from the independent companies of local origin. In past years exhibitors' organizations have also contributed to the general fund.

Censors Appointed

Louisville Decides on Closer Watch on Theatricals and Movies

Stage shows in Louisville, Ky., recently have called down the wrath of the censors, and in the general admonition which has been issued moving picture shows have been included. This is not, however, because moving picture bills in Louisville have been at fault, but the censors felt impelled to include them in their blanket warning, when they issued their criticism of the stage.

This latter criticism was brought about by the dancing of Isadora Duncan, against which the city authorities have strenuously objected. The Board of Public Safety has named Policewoman Alice Dunlop and her assistant, Mrs. Mayme Oldham as a committee of censors to prevent "indecent shows and moving pictures from exhibiting in Louisville." Posters which advertise shows, are also to come under the jurisdiction of the censors.

The move to have the Board of Safety interfere by the appointment of the two censors was started by a delegation of churchwomen who objected to the Duncan dancing.

Exhibitors Form $5,000,000 Distributing System

True Explains Functions of New Co-operative Bookers

By ROGER FERRI

CONCLUSIVE official confirmation of the exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World following the national exhibitor convention in Washington that a movement had been inaugurated secretly during the session having for its purpose the organization of co-operative exhibitor booking units in various territories was given this week in a report from Chicago that the exhibitors there had formed the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation with a capital of $5,000,000. The formation of the A. B. C. in New York followed the Washington convention, but this movement was sponsored by exhibitors, who, while at that time hostile to the national body, were on the "inside" of the campaign and in the vernacular of show business started the ball rolling by establishing their own system, which is already functioning and bidding for productions against syndicate bookers in the metropolitan district.

Will Widen Scope

However, the first official independent co-operative booking unit sponsored by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was formally organized on Tuesday of this week in Chicago. Announcement of the organization of such a unit in Chicago also was exclusively published in Moving Picture World three weeks ago. The Chicago organization of a direct distributing system is the forerunner of others that are now under way in various other sections, namely in Philadelphia, the South, Massachusetts and Michigan. If the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan carry out plans they formulated last week it is only a question of about two weeks when they will have formed a direct regional distributing organization similar to that incorporated in Chicago this Tuesday, following one of the most enthusiastic meetings of exhibitors ever held in that city.

That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are now determined to carry out the distribution of pictures is a fact that is generally accepted in well-informed circles. In fact, this direct exhibitor distribution plan has been carefully prepared and represents several months of conferences among members of the national council of the M. P. T. O. A. and various executives of the local exhibitor organizations. These meetings have been held secretly in New York City. At these meetings the conferers had before them a mass of papers containing data concerning rental prices on various pictures, together with comparative statistics covering a period of about four years, as well as figures touching in every detail on the distribution problem.

The contention of some exchangemen that the local co-operative booking units could in no way dictate has been also considered by the national organization, which, when the local units have been organized, will purchase, lease or book pictures direct from producers or distributors and in turn deliver them to the exhibitor distributing units for direct local distribution. In that way, argue exhibitor leaders, the units while local in their functioning, will be able to guarantee producers a specific number of play dates throughout the country. A system to gauge run engagements also is being considered with each territory systematically divided into sections and first, second, third, etc., runs will be fixed accordingly.

Ample Finance

That the exhibitors are seemingly prepared to finance this undertaking is also accepted as a fact among those who happen to know what is going on in the inner circles. If necessary, one official pointed out to a representative of Moving Picture World, the exhibitor can get unlimited funds from banking institutions which, they say, have refused to invest in film distribution until "some sort of real system had been devised within the industry itself." They point out, too, that exhibitors can finance their local co-operative booking units with the financial support of these banking institutions, which, in a number of instances, have approached exhibitor organizations in several territories to promote a direct-to-the-exhibitor distribution policy.

With the direct-to-the-exhibitor policy in vogue, say leaders of the exhibitor movement, producers will be in a position to ascertain immediately after their productions have been accepted by the theatres the exact amount of money their pictures will gross in rentals.

The official statement substantiating the exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World several weeks ago follows:

"Somewhat of a sensation was occasioned in motion picture circles Tuesday when it was announced that the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, a company owned and controlled by independent exhibitors, was formally launched at a meeting held in Hotel Sherman. Many independent exhibitors, in no way connected with the exhibitors' organization, in the main took the initiative in this proposition and invited the officers and members of the exhibitor organization, notably the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to meet with them in formulating a new line of action.

"While the move tending toward this end was known in 'inside' exhibitor circles for several days, yet no inkling of the real situation reached the industry generally until Tuesday's session was held. The meeting was attended by about 100 leading independent theatre owners from different parts of the United States. By request, William A. True, of Hartford, Conn., presided after the meeting had been called to order by W. D. Burford of Aurora, Ill., who welcomed the exhibitors to Chicago.

"Mr. True stated that letters and telegrams were on his desk from various independent exhibitors who were most enthusiastically in favor of the new movement, but were prevented from being present because of the great distance to be travelled or for different business reasons. The Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation is chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware because of the many business advantages associated with this line of incorporation. It has an authorized capital of $5,000,000. It will be entirely co-operative in character.

Exhibitor Stockholders

"A demand for a company of this kind on the part of independent theatre owners has been repeatedly made for several years because of the tendency within the industry to effect lines of centralized control. The independent exhibitor saw his position in the business imperiled and the desire for an exhibitor controlled distributing corporation was expressed at the Minneapolis convention of the M. P. T. O. A. in June, 1921, and reiterated with much emphasis at the Washington convention in May of this year, and was at that meeting referred to the Board of Directors.

"Many State and other meetings of exhibitors, allied to this national organization, went on record as favoring such a move, and similar action was taken by different regional bodies. Finally, the Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. A. decided that that organization would not of itself make such a move, but that the formation of an exhibitor owned and controlled distributing corporation was imperative to insure the safety of the independent theatre owners.

"Then came the formation of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation. In presenting the plans and purposes of the new company to the exhibitors at today's meeting, Mr. True made a number of interesting statements relative to the manner in which the company would operate. Meetings will be held in different cities throughout the country soon to afford all independent exhibitors an opportunity to become affiliated with the new company. Definite arrangements will be made for the establishment of exchanges or the acquiring of exchanges now in operation in all parts of the country, and also for the general extension of business."

The following constitute the Board of Directors of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation: William D. Burford, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois; Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, owner of a string of theatres in the Steel City and vicinity; L. J. Dittmar, head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kentucky, and himself owner of theatres in various parts of the South; Sydney S. Cohen, of New York, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and William A. True of Hartford, Conn., president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut.

In his address to the exhibitors in Chicago Mr. True, according to a printed copy of his speech forwarded to trade papers, said, among other things, that subscribers for stock will have no voting power, this privilege being given to a board of "seven voting trustees" to be elected by the stockholders. Messrs. Cohen, Burford, True, Dittmar, and Davis have already been elected members of this board with two others to be elected within the near future. Each stockholder, according to Mr. True, will be obligated to exhibit all pictures procured by the new corporation.

Mr. True's Chicago address, in full, follows:

I have called this meeting at the request of several men, brother exhibitors, who with myself have long since arrived at the conclusion that the entry of a new and independent distributing company into the motion picture field was essential to the safety and prosperity of the thousands of exhibitors who at present are not allied with any of the large chains of producer owned and controlled motion picture theatres or with any of the distributing companies.

It will be sufficient for me to state at this time that my associates have become so convinced of the necessity for the organization of a new distributing company that we have caused a company to be organized under the laws of the State of Delaware known as "Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation" with an authorized capital of five million dollars. The stock of the company is all common stock and consists of one hundred thousand shares of the par value of fifty dollars each. We have completed the organization of this company to the extent of subscribing for some of the stock and electing a board of directors in order to accelerate progress. The board of directors will consist of seven men, five of whom have been elected. Their names are as follows:

William D. Burford, Aurora, Ill. Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; L. J. Dittmar, Louisville, Ky.; Sydney S. Cohen, New York City; Wm. A. True, Hartford, Conn.

It is the desire of this company to arrange for obtaining and distributing to motion picture exhibitors, stockholders of this company, a grade of pictures of consistent quality which can be supplied to exhibitors at a price that will enable them to realize a profit on their investments.

My associates have undertaken this gigantic enterprise for the purpose of affording protection to the independent exhibitors throughout the United States, and with this purpose in mind it is the fundamental idea of the incorporators to make the company strictly co-operative. This meeting is, therefore, called for the purpose of inviting all independent exhibitors of the United States to become stockholders of this company and aid in the advancement and perfection of this enterprise so essential to the business welfare of all independent exhibitors.

You can realize how many problems have already forced themselves upon the attention of the incorporators calling for solution and how many more problems will arise from time to time as the organization and operation of the company progresses. We cannot submit, and I feel that you do not expect, a statement in detail of all these problems that have arisen and of the disposition of the same by the incorporators. One of these problems, however, was to insure equality of interest in the company to the exhibitors. We have felt that it would be unjust to allow a majority of stock of this company to be owned by a few large exhibitors and that it would be equally unjust to permit a large and well-to-do exhibitor to obtain the benefits of this co-operative company without contributing a fair portion of the capital. We, therefore, have concluded that the allotment of stock to the subscribers must be based up a schedule of minimum and maximum requirements so that a theatre owner in a town of a given size will be required to subscribe for at least a certain minimum of stock for each theatre and that he will not be permitted to subscribe for more than the maximum limits fixed.

Minimum and maximum limits for stock subscriptions are contained on attached schedule.

It has also been determined, in order to secure absolute equality of representation and in order to insure the company from attacks without or disturbances within, that all subscribers for stock must be required to enter into a voting trust agreement and pursuant to the terms thereof assign all of their stock to the voting trustees therein named. The incorporators have decided that a board of seven voting trustees is best adapted to the needs of the company, five of whom have been elected.

The company hopes to maintain direct and constant relations with all of its stockholders who will also be the customers of the company, by causing to be organized a national advisory committee consisting of one man from each of the twenty-nine, more or less, distributing zones in the United States, each of said men to be selected by the subscribers for stock. The company also hopes to cause to be established a local committee of seven exhibitors selected by the stockholders themselves in each zone through whom the company will adjust disputes and from whom the company will obtained information and suggestions for the betterment of the service it intends to furnish.

Each subscribing stockholder will also be obligated to exhibit the pictures released by the company upon the terms and conditions that will be incorporated in a standard form of contract. It is the hope of the company to prepare a standard form of contract which will be fair and equitable in all its terms and which will insure to the exhibitors the opportunity for exhibiting pictures for which they have contracted

It is our hope that we will be able to have our product ready for release beginning with September, 1923, and prior to that time the company will be engaged in organizing exchanges in all of the principal exchange centres in the United States or acquiring exchanges now in existence, contracting with producers, directors and stars for the distribution of material suitable for exhibition by the exhibitor and at prices consistent with the general purpose of the company and with the desires and hopes of the exhibitors throughout the United States.

Distributors in New York declined to discuss the situation, some of them preferring to wait for further developments and a more detailed account of the purposes of the organization. Efforts were made this week to secure a statement from Mr. Cohen in New York and Ben Moeller, business manager of the national organization, but at the M. P. T. O. A. offices it was stated that the national exhibitor leader would not return to the metropolis until Friday, while Mr. Moeller was in the West.

Metropolitan exhibitors manifested a keen interest in the project, which did not take them by surprise. Surprising, however, was the fact that the move had been taken by independents in Chicago, for it is a well known fact that similar regional co-operative booking projects are now under way in other sections. But those who know what they are talking about and not inclined to discuss at random, have it that these regional organizations will function through the Theatre Owners Distribuing Corporation along the booking lines now utilized by the bigger and successful vaudeville booking offices.

Pennsylvanians Start Censorship Fight

By ROGER FERRI

THE battle of co-operative independent exhibitors' booking officers versus syndicate bookers has spread to all parts of the country with the interest centered about the activities of the A. B. C. in New York. The latter already have acquired rights to United Artists' "Tess of the Storm Country" with Mary Pickford, and Marcus Loew, together with other syndicalists have grabbed the old "Tess" picture which will be used as opposition for the new version, according to information obtained in well-informed circles.

Word comes from New England, the South, Missouri and Middle West this week that similar independent booking movements are under way with the theatre owners consulting the New Yorkers, who are progressing encouragingly with their program. That the Keith-Moss-Loew-Fox and other circuts will combine in bidding against the independents for big pictures in New England is accepted as a fact, but it is known that the new syndicate already has tied up some of the best product of the year under its new plan, which guarantees something like 500 days in New York City and Northern New Jersey.

Speculation is rife in Pennsylvania that some sort of legislation will be passed by the new Legislature restricting the powers now enjoyed by the czarical Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censorship. Some of the independent exchanges are arguing that unless the powers of these commissioners are restricted they will be forced out of business. The exhibitor organizations of Eastern Pennsylvania and Western Pennsylvania will hold a joint convention in Harrisburg, Pa., either in January or February for the purpose of visiting the Legislature, while in session, and demanding a hearing on a number of radical measures that are being threatened to be presented.

The next Paramount convention will be held in Kansas City, according to a wire that was sent this week to Mayor Cromwell, of that city, by Frank Newman, an exhibitor in that city. Adolph Zukor and Marcus Loew, together with John A. Kent and other Paramounteers, were royally entertained when they recently stopped off in that city en route to Los Angeles where the convention was held.

The M. P. T. O. of Missouri is still complaining about unfair competition there. The organization is accusing certain producing interests of discouraging and wrecking its plan to bring about closer relationship between theatre owners and exchanges. At the next meeting of the Board of Directors this alleged movement will be thrashed out. The meeting is expected to be held some time late next week, according to word received in New York.

A. B. C. Adopts Policy Change

The Associated Booking Corporation issued the following statement this week:

"A change of policy has been adopted by the A. B. C. due to the conditions that the members think has made it necessary. The fact that these independent exhibitors have received an absolute lack of co-operation from most of the larger producers, despite the fact that they have demonstrated that they are ready and able to handle large productions, and the antagonism which has been shown them by several of these producers who are financially and otherwise interested in opposition circuits has made it, in the opinion of the members, necessary to discard their first policy of remaining completely out of the distributing or producing end of the industry and they are now laying their plans for State right purchases of all suitable productions which they are offered.

"The immense buying power of this group of first-run exhibitors and the fact that immediate playing dates and cash returns are possible should make them a big factor in the New York State and Northern New Jersey territory.

"Immediate action along these lines is contemplated by this corporation."

United Artists' Corporation have completed a deal whereby they get a lease on the Pershing Theatre in St. Louis from the St. Louis Amusement Company. This house will be opened on December 25 for an indefinite engagement of Douglas Fairbanks' "Robin Hood." Two shows daily will be given with the top admission fixed at $1 for night shows.

If Rodolph Valentino is prohibited by court from appearing in American productions, he will go to England where R. H. Cochran, the British theatrical magnate, will feature him in his annual revue at the Coliseum in Hippodrome. Negotiations, embracing this proviso, already have been closed. Several British concerns are also dickering with the popular star with the plan in mind of featuring him in British productions if he decides to desert America.

Wildwood, N. J., a resort near Atlantic City, N. J., will be the scene of the next convention of the New Jersey Theatre Owners. This convention will be held late in the summer, just before the national convention of the M. P. T. O. A., which is slated to be held in Chicago some time late in May or early in June.

Gallant Fight Lost

Lawmakers Refuse to Guarantee Industry Freedom from Censorship

The fight put up by the motion picture men of Missouri to safeguard the industry of that State against censorship has failed.

The industry and its friends, led by L. M. Henson, of Poplar Bluff, and Paul S. Conwell, of Kansas City, attempted to have the State Constitution amended to guarantee the screen the same freedom as that accorded to speech and to the press.

With this in view a move was made before the Constitutional Convention sitting in Jefferson City, December 11. But the motion, known as the Conwell-Henson amendment, was rejected by the convention.

The Rumor Season Is Here

THE closing days of the year are bringing the rumors.

On Wednesday evening the New York Globe printed a "Wall Street rumor" to the effect that Vitagraph and Pathe were to merge, adding a lot of "inside" details about the downtown financial interests involved.

On Thursday morning the New York Herald came forth with its contribution to the effect that J. D. Williams was to take over the reins of the Vitagraph Company.

None of the parties concerned had seen either of the stories until called to their attention by Moving Picture World. Vitagraph and Pathe gave an emphatic denial to the story concerning them, both saying, "It must have been made up out of thin air." Vitagraph and J. D. Williams were just as unqualified in denying the rumor that linked them.

The official statement from Vitagraph follows:

Public statements that J. D. Williams, formerly manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is to be associated with the Vitagraph Company of America in some capacity are "absolutely untrue and without foundation in fact," according to a statement issued just before press time by Alfred E. Smith, president of Vitagraph.

"Mr. Williams is not associated with Vitagraph in any capactiy nor has Mr. Smith entered into any negotiations whatsoever with him," the statement said. "The stories being made public that there will be changes in the personnel of Vitagraph are undoubtedly being circulated by unscrupulous competitors. The only change in policy recently inaugurated by Vitagraph is the policy of the deposit system, which has long been a thorn in the side of all exhibitors, due to the fact that under the deposit system approximately $3,000,000 of exhibitors' money is in the hands of producers, for which the exhibitor has received no adequate benefit."

The Wall Street reporters will return to their rumor factories and try again.

J. D. Williams, before leaving for Los Angeles on the "Century" Thursday, said that he would be ready to announce his plans within a couple of weeks.

Ask Ban Lifted

At a meeting of the Ottawa, Ontario, Public School Board on December 7, it was decided to ask the Underwriters' Association to raise the ban against the use of moving picture films in all Ottawa public schools. Under present restrictions imposed by the Board of Underwriters, films of an inflammable nature cannot be used in any school building for any purpose.

Complete Plans

For Big Welcome Prosperity Dinner —Many Notables to Be Present

Plans were completed this week for the big Welcome Prosperity Dinner and Dance of The Motion Picture Industry that will be held at Hotel Astor in New York on January 11. Representative leaders of not only the motion picture industry, but of other industries as well have accepted invitations submitted by Chairman David R. Hochreich, who was sponsor, in co-operation with the Motion Picture Directors' Association, of the formal welcome dinner of the industry to Will Hays last March.

The coming dinner and dance, according to reports, promises to be one of the greatest affairs of its kind held in New York, for in attendance at the affair will be leaders of finance and mercantile business. Every industry will be represented. Prominent motion picture and stage stars also will be on hand. Charles M. Schwab, David W. Griffith, Adolph Zukor, Governor-elect Alfred E. Smith of New York State, United States Senator-elect Edward I. Edwards of New Jersey, Marcus Loew, Jules Mastbaum of Philadelphia, William Randolph Hearst, B. S. Moss, P. A. Powers, F. J. Godsol, United States Senator-elect Royal S. Copeland of New York, Governor-elect George S. Silver of New Jersey, Harry Heher, David Belasco, Paul Block.

Second Annual Banquet of the Allied Film Laboratories Association held at Delmonico's on December 7.

Speeches were made by General Charles Cole, who led the Massachusetts censorship fight; Courtland Smith of Will Hays' office; L. M. Boynton, of the Exhibitors Trade Review; Jules Brulatour, of the Eastman Kodak Company; William A. Johnson, of the Motion Picture News; Martin J. Quigley, of the Exhibitors Herald, and J. A. Coram, of the Bay State Film Company. Major Tom Evans acted as toastmaster.

Those present were: Courtland Smith, George Blair, Richard Brady, Jules E. Brulatour, W. J. German, W. A. Johnston, E. K. Gillette, Robert E. Welsh, W. E. Milligan, J. Dannenberg, L. M. Boynton, H. McLellan, General Charles Cole, J. A. Coram, M. J. Quigley, R. W. Baremore, G. W. Yates, A. C. Snyder, S. Schneider, P. J. Sweeny, G. Barth, Ross Coram, Ben Goetz, Abel Cary Thomas, Francis Doublier, Edward W. Ulmer, Monroe F. Mannheimer, H. Glickman, H. LeRoy, G. L. Pinkham, Charles Urban, Henry San, J. H. San, Ralph Ittelson, C. C. Cooper, R. Brophy, E. F. Murphy, P. Rodes, Grant Dan Duys, Maj. Tom Evans, Herbert J. Yates, William. K. Hedwig, Allan A. Lownes, Harry Goetz, O. W. Biarmer, L. J. San, M. E. A. Tucker, Edward Horne.

Vitagraph Abolishes Deposits; Play Dates Required

Smith Sees 97 per Cent. of Exhibitors as Responsible Men

VITAGRAPH will abolish the deposit system entirely beginning with the new year. This important step is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the organization, and comes after careful consideration. Its effect is of the greatest importance to every exhibitor, and should aid materially in relieving a situation that has become to many exhibitors almost unbearable.

In making the announcement Mr. Smith added that the action of the Vitagraph company was not retroactive and that no deposits already received under existing contracts would be refunded, but that every dollar of deposits so received would be applied strictly according to the terms of the contracts as they read at the time the contracts were made. Contracts made after the new year will require no deposit, but the Vitagraph Company, Mr. Smith said, would expect and demand the same fair treatment on the part of the exhibitor as the exhibitor received from Vitagraph.

Necessary Years Ago

In explaining this very important change in the method of dealing with the exhibitor, Mr. Smith said that ten years or more ago, when in the majority of cases the exhibitor represented only a small theatre with a few hundred seats and under a short lease, it was deemed necessary to require a substantial advance payment from the exhibitor, not that the money might be in the hands of the producer or distributor for use, but in order to insure the performance of the contract by the exhibitor.

Today, Mr. Smith said, the conditions are different and the situation is entirely changed. The exhibitor of today, with but few exceptions, Mr. Smith said, has a very substantial investment in the theatre which he operates. He is responsible and means to live up to the contract which he signs.

97% Thoroughly Responsible

Fully 97 per cent. of the exhibitors today are thoroughly responsible, Mr. Smith said, not only in their financial ability to meet the obligations in their contracts, but in their desire and intention to meet them. He declared that the Vitagraph Company had experienced no trouble in dealing with the great majority of exhibitors and he held that the great majority of 97 or more per cent. of exhibitors should not be required to pay advance deposits amounting to millions of dollars annually, because of the unreliability of the almost negligible minority.

Vitagraph, however, intends to enforce its contracts with such exhibitors who are not thoroughly reliable, by requiring them to live up to the letter of their contracts. To carry out the plan of exacting the same treatment from the exhibitor that Vitagraph gives him, the exhibitor will be compelled to meet his obligations and pay the full amount due under all contracts regardless of whether or not the pictures are played.

Secures Judgment

The delinquent will be brought to terms, Vitagraph says. Already many delinquent exhibitors have learned that a breach of contract does not mean merely the loss of his deposit. Only last week Vitagraph secured a judgment against one theatre for more than $6,000. The court sustained the legality of the Vitagraph contract and gave judgment in the full amount although the theatre never played the pictures.

Beginning the new year, Vitagraph will accept contracts from any exhibitor with the complete understanding that full payment for each picture to be played will be made seven days before the play date designated in the contract. When the exhibitor, for any reason, desires to postpone the original play date named in the contract, it will be necessary for him to pay the amount due on the contract in full at least seven days in advance of the original play date named in the contract, before Vitagraph will consent to the change, and then the exhibitor in each case will have the privilege of playing such pictures at a later date. No contracts will be accepted unless a definite play date is given for each picture at the time the contract is signed.

In making the announcement regarding the change of policy, President Smith expressed the hope that it would not be necessary to bring suit against many exhibitors to induce them to meet their obligations and pay the full amount under any contracts they have signed previous to the new arrangement. But, he said, the industry had reached that point where it was absolutely necessary for every exhibitor to thoroughly understand and know that every contract signed must be honored.

Smith Optimistic

Mr. Smith was exceedingly optimistic over the non-deposit method of booking. He freely predicted that by the close of 1923 there would be no necessity of bringing suit against any exhibitor to force him to respect the terms of the contracts he has signed, because the rapid elimination of irresponsible exhibitors has convinced him that it will not be long before every theatre will be in the hands of a thoroughly reliable exhibitor. And the reliable exhibitor, booking under the no-deposit contract, will feel in honor and duty bound to respect and live up to the contract he has signed

---

The verdict received by Vitagraph in Boston against the Park Theatre owners there is a vitally important one insofar as all exhibitors are concerned, for it settles once and for all the question of the extent of managers' rights. Tom Soriero, manager of that house, is alleged to have signed contracts to play certain Vitagraph pictures. The house owners maintained that Soriero had no right to sign contracts, but the plaintiffs showed that other pictures for which Soriero had signed were played at the Park, thus offsetting the authority argument, the outcome of which was the object of considerable interest in New England.

Barred from Mexico

The Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., has received from Mexico a complete list of the moving picture concerns whose films are now barred from that country as a result of pictures distributed in Mexico which contained scenes unfavorable to that country or its Government.

The list includes the Metro Pictures Corporation, Warner Brothers, Educational Films Exchange, Selznick Pictures Corporation, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Vitagraph, Aywon Corporation, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, C. M. Van Buren Corporation, Artcraft, Supreme Film Company, Richard Kipling Enterprises; Enterprises Distributing Corporation, and Rex Pictures Company.

Admission Tax Resume Shows Territories Hit Equally

ALTHOUGH the admission taxes collected by the government during the fiscal year ended June 30, last, were some $15,000,000 below the receipts from the same source for the fiscal year 1921, no one section of the country suffered more than another from the depression which last year hit the theatrical industry such a severe blow. A study of the tax returns for the past three years made by the Washington Bureau of Moving Picture World shows that theatrical attendance in every state fell off in very nearly the same ratio.

At present, admission tax collections indicate a much greater theatrical attendance than was the case six months or a year ago, so that the figures dealt with in this report are of interest more as history than as an indication of future business. Their chief interest lies in the estimates which exhibitors can make for the purpose of comparing their business with that of other states during the period of depression.

The high point in theatrical attendance, according to the report filed with the Bureau of Internal Revenue, was during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, when taxes aggregating $88,355,518 were collected. In the preceding fiscal year, 1920, the collections from this source had totaled only $75,966,166, and during the fiscal year 1922, ended June 30, last, they amounted to $72,535,143. It will be seen, therefore, that admission tax collections during the fiscal year 1922 were more than $15,000,000 below those of 1921, and nearly $3,500,000 below those of 1920.

At the present time admission tax collections are still running about $1,000,000 a month below those of the corresponding period last year, but are considerably higher than they were a few months ago, and while, for the first four months of the fiscal year 1923 the total admission taxes collected amounted to only $19,517,216, as compared with $24,291,289 for the corresponding period last year, it is believed that by next June the theatrical attendance, based on the tax returns, will be somewhat higher than for the fiscal year 1922.

Some months ago Moving Picture World published the first tables showing the extent to which theatrical attendance had fallen off throughout the country. Again Moving Picture World is first to publish a table showing the tax collections for each state over the fiscal years 1920, 1921 and 1922, from which exhibitors can see not only how the theatrical business in their states fared, but also how their fellow exhibitors in other parts of the country suffered from the general business depression:

Must Have Permit

But California Town Thwarts Censorship Feature of Ordinance

A new moving picture ordinance has been adopted at Berkeley, a suburb of San Francisco, Cal., and seat of the State University. It provides that no person, firm, association or corporation may hold a moving picture exhibition without first receiving a permit from the Bureau of Buildings and Inspections. No person under eighteen years of age will be permitted to operate a moving picture machine.

Efforts to include in the ordinance provision for an advisory board or censorship committee was thwarted at the last minute through the watchfulness of the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade, which sent its legal advisor, Milton A. Nathan, to attend the final hearing before the City Council. Mr. Nathan pointed out the injustice of censorship, and prevailed on the Council not to include it in the ordinance.

Refuses Injunction

Justice Robert Wagner, of the New York Supreme Court, has denied the application of Douglas Fairbanks for an injunction restraining Hyman Winik from reconstructing, re-editing, advertising and exhibiting pictures in which Fairbanks appeared in 1915 for the Majestic Motion Picture Company, which pictures were made under the supervision of D. W. Griffith.

Production for 1921 Valued at $80,000,000

MOVING pictures to the value of nearly $80,000,000 were produced in this country during 1921, according to statistics gathered by the Census Bureau of the Department of Commerce. For the first time in the history of the industry it has been classified with steel production, shoe making and other lines of manufacturing, and statistics have been compiled similar to those for other industries of the country.

The figures compiled by the Census Bureau show that there were 127 establishments engaged primarily in the production of moving pictures in 1921, with products valued at approximately $77,397,000. This does not include establishments which reported production valued at less than $5,000, of which there were eight.

The establishments listed by the bureau have been divided into two classes; producers of motion pictures, of which there were 83, and producers of projection films (positive), of which there were 44, the latter classification including the development of exposed films and other laboratory work. Of the producers of motion pictures, the majority were engaged exclusively in the production of the pictures, their laboratory work being done by independent companies, or in the case of some of the larger concerns, in separate plants of their own.

The cost of materials as reported by these establishments included amounts paid for the unexposed films, for building materials, for the construction of scenery, etc., for wardrobe, purchased or rented; expenses for locations, light and storm effects, titles and inserts, scenarios, stories, etc. A few establishments did both kinds of work, though the motion picture work was limited to short scenic subjects, educational, advertising and business films. The other 44 establishments did laboratory work only, reporting as materials negative stocks, positive raw films, developing chemicals, dyes, artists' materials, miscellaneous supplies, containers, etc.

More than half of the moving picture establishments, of course, were located in California, 68 being reported from that state, while New York was a poor second with 20. The remaining establishments were located as follows: Eight in Illinois, 13 in New Jersey, five in Pennsylvania, three each in Michigan and Minnesota, two in Ohio, and one each in Indiana, Iowa, Oregon, Rhode Island and Washington.

With more than 50 per cent of the establishments, California led in production, reporting 61.5 per cent of the total value of films recorded. The combined output of all establishments, the reports show, was approximately 65 per cent of the maximum capacity, based upon a demand requiring full running time.

No estimate of how the industry's activities in 1921 compared with those of 1919, the date of the last previous census, can be made because no attempt was made in 1919 to obtain data covering the production of motion pictures. In that year, statistics were collected in regard to the reproduction or printing from the negative of motion picture projection films, and were published in connection with statistics of photographic materials. Reports of this nature were received from 50 establishments, showing products valued at $36,705,000 in 1919, but these figures cannot be used for comparison as some of the establishments reported other than laboratory work.

The census showed that in 1921, there were 10,659 persons employed in the production of moving picture films of whom 8,498 were in motion picture producing establishments and 2,161 in establishments manufacturing and reproducing film. Salaries and wages totaled $37,693,000, of which $34,229,000 was for employes in motion picture producing establishments and $3,464,000 for those in the other class; $563,000 was paid for contract work, all by motion picture producers. The cost of materials totaled $31,190,000, of which $16,150,000 was for the producing establishments and $15,240,000 for the manufacturing establishments, and the total value of products was $77,397,000, of which $57,112,000 was reported by motion picture producers and $20,285,000 by manufacturers.

Association Formed

Producers of San Francisco Join in Movement

The Motion Picture Producers' Association of San Francisco was formally organized last week at a meeting held in the Press Club and is asking the approval of Will H. Hays, head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The meeting was called by N. Dragomanovich, general manager of the West Coast Films Corporation, and officers were chosen as follows: President, N. Dragomanovich; vice-president, Paul Gerson; secretary, L. S. Jennings; treasurer, Aaron L. Jaffe. These officers compose the board of directors, with the addition of Max Graf. Eight of the ten regular producing companies in San Francisco have joined the movement, these being the West Coast Films Corporation, Gerson Pictures Corporation, Golden Gate Productions, Fisher Productions, Graf Productions, Northern California Photoplays, Inc., Harry Revier Productions, and Belasco Productions, Inc.

Will Co-operate

Post Office to Expedite Film Shipments During Holidays

Assurances of co-operation have been given the Washington, D. C., exchange managers by Postmaster Chance in the movement without delay of incoming and outgoing film shipments during the coming holiday period. The matter was taken up with Mr. Chance by a committee consisting of Sam Flax, Liberty Film Corporation, chairman; Walter Hayner, Associated Exhibitors, and E. A. Sherwood, Exhibitors' Film Corporation, on behalf of the Film Board of Trade.

The exchange managers offered to furnish a man to assist the postal authorities in handling film shipments, but their offer had to be refused because of the requirement that all men working in the post office buildings shall have a civil service status. Mr. Chance, however, promised to detail a man specially for the film business.

Firemen in Movies

Chief Engineer Recommends Precautions for Theatres

The assignment of a uniformed fireman to each of the larger moving picture houses, similar to the detail now made to all theatres involving the use of movable scenery, is recommended in the annual report of the Chief Engineer of the District of Columbia Fire Department, just submitted to the District Commissioners.

The report points out that the fire department at present details a uniformed member of its force at each performance given at any "legitimate" theatre. This detail, it is suggested, should be extended to include the larger motion picture houses, as the necessity for supervision of the handling of the audiences and the enforcement of fire prevention is fully as important in the latter as in the former.

The present force, however, is numerically insufficient to provide for these additional details.

Williams "Busted" Into Game When Shows Ran 12 Minutes

Speaking of a long, varied and colorful career as an exhibitor, this fellow, George E. Williams, manager of the Linden Theatre, Buffalo, and president of the Western New York unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., certainly has had such.

George busted into the business way back in 1902, serving in minor positions in various houses, but in 1905 he assumed his first managerial post at the New Theatre, one of the first houses in the Queen City of the Lakes. Here the show consisted of one reel of pictures. The admission price was 5 cents. The piano accompaniment and the singing of illustrated songs were big added music features. In those days the show ran all the way from eight to twelve minutes. At this house was showing the first print of the original Passion Play, which ran for 18 solid weeks at one dime, ten cents.

In discussing the film exchanges of the time, Mr. Williams says that one of the first, if not the first, was operated by Joseph A. Schuchert, on Genesee street. Then came P. A. Powers with his independent exchange. Mr. Schuchert now is interested in several Buffalo theatres as well as many out of town, while Mr. Powers is one of the leading lights of the industry. Mr. Williams says that P. A. once operated the old Temple Theatre on William street. It was at the Powers exchange that Mr. Williams first got his Bison 101 pictures. Fred M. Zimmerman, now president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures, furnished Mr. Williams with his first feature production. It was a three-reel western, which Mr. Zimmerman peddled under his arm, his exchange being in his hat.

Theatre operation in 1908, says Mr. Williams, consisted mainly in getting 'em in and then getting 'em out as quick as possible. The New Theatre seated 180. It was always necessary to open the side doors to let folks out. It was caused by the one entrance feature. Patrons in their eagerness to see the movies always crowded the house to capacity.

Steve Clark, who was in charge of the "booth" at the old New Theatre, which, by the way, has long since passed out of existence to make way for the march of progress, is now in charge of projection at the Linden Theatre, where he has been for the last three years.

From the New Theatre, Mr. Williams went to the Dreamland on Broadway. One week after he arrived there, a fire visited the house and burned out the booth and much equipment, as well as several thousand feet of film.

In 1914, Mr. Williams went to Bradford to take over the management of the Lyceum, and in the three years that he remained there turned a flivver into a live one. It was here that he presented the first General Film special, "A Million Bid," starring Anita Stewart. He followed it with the Hippodrome Spectacle. He boosted prices, installed an organ and orchestra and turned the whole town toward the doors. The Lyceum was owned by Frank D. White, formerly of Colon, Panama, and now a resident of Buffalo.

In 1916, Mr. Williams returned to Buffalo and took up the reins at the Globe Theatre at Main and Ferry, where he went through a storm session. The Globe is now a first class garage. In 1918, Mr. Williams heard the call of his country and enlisted for overseas service with the 26th Engineers. He served through the war and returned to this country with most of the relics left on the various battlefields.

It was not long, however, after getting back into civies that he sought a position in the film business and soon connected with the T. R. Gardiner exchange. Serving here for some time, he resigned to accept a position with the Niagara Pictures Corporation. Then he was manager of the Star, Tonawanda, relieving Dan Buss during an extended illness. The Family in Albion, N. Y., was his next post. This house was put on its feet by Mr. Williams. So successful did the house become in fact that the owners were able to sell it for several thousand more than they had formerly asked.

Returning to Buffalo, Mr. Williams last year assumed the management of the Linden on Jefferson street. At the time he took over this theatre, there was a bank balance of $50 in favor of the house and a nice fat mortgage. Now the Linden has a large bank balance and a big slice is paid off on the mortgage every three months. As a reward for his good work at the Linden the owner has given him a half interest in the house. So, after some twenty years, Mr. Williams has arrived at his one great ambition—to be a theatre owner.

We are indebted to John P. Dibble, of Branford, Conn., for these interesting clippings from old-time films.

Fred Wehrenberg Known as South St. Louis' "Daddy"

Fred Wehrenberg, owner of the Cherokee Theatre and the Melba Theatre in South St. Louis, has the honor of holding more titles than any exhibitor in St. Louis. He is also a district "Daddy of Them All," although he hasn't been in the business of exhibiting as long as some of the other boys in these parts. Fred is the Daddy of South St. Louis, having had the honor of opening the first picture theatre south of the Hindenburg Line which is officially known to the Street Department of the city as Chauteau avenue.

Besides owning the Cherokee and Melba, Wehrenberg is president of the Exhibitors' Direct Service Exchange, the Exhibitors' Film Service, distributors, and the Exhibitors' Sign and Poster Company. All are exhibitor organizations designed primarily to reduce film and advertising costs to local exhibitors. He also is vice-president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Back in November, 1908, when the industry was a real infant prodigy, Wehrenberg was operating a grocery, meat market and saloon at Jefferson avenue and Cherokee streets. He was a successful business man and won the confidence of his fellow citizens, a trait he has never lost. When he saw other business making a success of the movies he decided to give the game a whirl and opened the original Cherokee

Who can identify the two films shown here? One ought to be easy to guess, the other not so simple.

Theatre in a little bakery shop at 2900 Cherokee street. The store measured 20 by 48 feet and had benches seating 99 persons.

A few years later Wehrenberg built the Best Theatre in back of his grocery store at a cost of $5,000. It was the first picture theatre erected in South St. Louis. It seated 260 and was looked upon as a big show. The building cost $3,500 and measured 40 by 50 feet. The equipment cost $1,500. It was operated two years when business was so good Wehrenberg expanded again and installed the Best Airdome at 3148 South Jefferson avenue. It had 1,000 seats.

That fall Fred opened the Best Tent Show on an adjoining lot. About that time movies were on the wane and it looked for a time that they would lose out entirely. In fact the St. Louis Post-Dispatch interviewed the various theatre owners of the city on that subject, the paper entertaining the idea apparently that the movies would not become a universal or successful rival of the legitimate theatres.

It was during that period that dramatic stock companies were popular with the tent show fans and movies were used merely as a filler between the acts. Wehrenberg's company was known as the Boyce Stock Company. His tent was 50 by 110 feet and had 900 seats. It was the last tent to come down in St. Louis and did not pass until the fall of 1914, when the city proscribed tent shows.

In the fall of 1914 Henry and Sol Koplar induced Wehrenberg to become interested in the Cherokee Theatre. He bought an interest in the house and operated it on a salary and percentage basis. He then turned his grocery, meat market and saloon business over to his brothers and devoted all his time to his picture interests.

When the Famous Players Missouri Corporation was organized Koplar asked Wehrenberg if he was willing to sell the Cherokee. He was, provided the price was right. Koplar then sold the Cherokee to the new company but Wehrenberg refused to deliver.

When representatives of the Famous Players attempted to take possession they were met by armed representatives of Wehrenberg. Later Harry Koplar used similar tactics in trying to hold the Arco. The result was that when the final settlement was reached between the Koplars and the Famous Players Missouri Corporation the Cherokee was not included in the deal.

Wehrenberg later filed a suit for an accounting, claiming that receipts of the Cherokee during the period of controversy had been turned over to the Famous Players without his consent. This case is scheduled to come up in the Circuit Court next month. About $7,600 is involved.

The Melba Theatre was purchased from the Melba Amusement Company in 1918. The Cherokee, at 2708 Cherokee street, has 1,300 seats while the Melba located at 3608 South Grand boulevard has accommodations for 1,258 patrons.

Green Attacks Gyp Artists and Moralizes On Happiness

John C. Green, manager of the Capitol-Regent Theatres, Guelph, Canada, whose motion picture experience dates back to 1896, promised to write us again in ten years when we heard from him about a month ago. That he is a little better than his word is evident this week when he answered our request for his picture.

Mr. Green inclosed his photograph, which we're going to print soon with those of other oldtimers. It shows him 25 years ago.

"I will find time," he promises, "to have one taken as the old wizard appears today—not much change except, perhaps, my hair is snow-white and I wear the Harold Lloyds in order to see properly, as years of operating have not improved my eyesight."

Continuing, Mr. Green says that when he gets on the subject of the old days, many memories loom up. Many present-day exhibitors were "forced into the game with a gold spoon in their mouths," he finds, "and don't give the oldtimers the credit due them for their pioneer work in educating the public to like pictures."

"The great trouble," Mr. Green believes "is caused by the gyp artists with whom this business is infested—people who really do not belong in the show business but just crawl in on their bellies and leave a trail of muck and slime in their wake.

"I refer principally to both the producer and exhibitor who try to make and exhibit filth films. The censor-proof, clean picture is the only one that will endure, and any firm that produces pictures of any other brand deserves to spend its money and then have them killed by the censor boards. It's the only way to rid an industry of its leeches and undesirables; in other words, a ship goes into drydock to have the barnacles scraped off and rides much more smoothly after it has gone through this purification."

Right there Brother Green risks an argument, for we are certain there are few members of the industry who believe in any form of censorship and none who can justify it. But he has a right to his opinion and this is no place nor time for a debate.

"Many people tell me I should be worth a million, with my long years of service in this game," continues the writer. "But I made the same fatal mistake that hundreds of real showmen have made—I stuck to the road with a picture and magic show, and fought the little nickle and dime dumps with their kitchen chairs and cotton sheets instead of acquiring a chain of said dumps myself, until it was too late.

"However, I am making three meals per day and have earned my salary for several years for this big company (Paramount Theatres, Ltd.), and expect to be in harness yet for many moons —may even yet acquire a box of tin known as a Henry Ford.

"So you see, Smith, after all there are other things in this old world besides money; in fact, the happiest people I have ever seen in all my travels live down in the small villages in the Province of Quebec right here in Canada—families of the old-fashioned variety, sometimes with 25 children. Poor? Yes, but happy the year 'round."

All in the Family

When it comes to keeping the business in one's family, few, if any, exhibitors have anything on the proprietors of the Alpine Theatre in Troy. The house reopened only this week, after having been quite badly damaged by fire. The theatre charges 10 cents, and is proving a little gold mine. While the head of the family takes tickets at the door, sold by the wife, the music is rendered by an orchestra, consisting of three girls and one boy, children of the proprietors. The only outsider is the operator.

Los Angeles

A new theatre is to be erected in Los Angeles by Turner, Dahnken & Langley. It will cost in excess of $1,250,000 and will be located in the Broadway district of the Angel City. The seating capacity is to be more than 3,600.

Turner, Dahnken & Langley at present own a chain of nineteen theatres in Southern California.

L. H. Keene, general manager of Marcus Loew theatres on the Pacific Coast, has arrived in Los Angeles and is going over coast conditions with E. C. Bostick, manager of the Loew's State Theatre.

Bill Clune, one of the first exhibitors of motion pictures in Los Angeles, has contracted for second-run Paramount films at his Broadway Theatre. In the early days Clune booked Griffith's best features in the days of the old Mutual, at his Broadway showhouse.

Clem Pope, at the Symphony, has booked Buster Keaton's offerings to succeed Harold Lloyd's features, which have been contracted for by Harry Davis, manager of the Mission. The Symphony's first Keaton comedy was "My Wife's Relations" and is run in conjunction with "Sure-Fire Flint."

"My Wife's Relations" is now in its third week at the Symphony and Pope says the all-comedy bill is making a big hit.

Roy Miller, at the California, has booked "Broken Chains" for an extended run.

Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack" is now in the fifth week at the Mission, and Harry David, manager, says he expects it to run until after the holidays.

Sid Grauman celebrated anniversary week at the Rialto with the statement that 316,673 persons had paid admission to see "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

"Robin Hood" is still packing 'em in at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre.

No Place for George Washington

Howard James, of Voluntown, Conn., handed our office such a good laugh this week that it would be a shame not to pass it along. In a letter written to "Van," of the Straight from the Shoulder Reports" department, Mr. James termed Van's department "a great medium for exhibitors" and went on to say that "most of the pictures today can be classed as good and this kind of classification doesn't mean much."

Here's the laugh:

"I ran a picture the other night," Mr. James wrote, "and for me it was just 5,000 feet of film (did not look them in the face when they passed out) and the next morning a chap said, 'Hello, James, darn good picture you had last night,' and he meant it, too.

"Well, I dunno. Maybe he was right, but I don't believe it. But I answered 'sure.' Exhibiting motion pictures would have been no business for George Washington."

Schenectady's State Theatre Opening Draws Large Crowds

The official opening of the State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., the latest in the Strand group of houses, constituted the chief event of interest in the Albany-Troy-Schenectady section this week. The house opened on Saturday evening to city and state officials, exchange managers, exhibitors and others conected with the film world. Every one, who is anyone, was present at the opening, many exhibitors attending from distant points. The lobby was a mass of floral tributes from exchanges and friends.

Paul Alberts, of Schenectady, paid a visit to Albany's Film Row this week and said that business had been topnotch for some time.

Goldwyn will open an exchange in Albany on December 16, with Charles Walders in charge.

The Maxey house, Oneonta, opened this week under most auspicious conditions. The new house seats 1,200, and makes the third house now running in Oneonta.

In spite of a spell of bad weather, including the first real cold snap of the season, Manager Perrin, of the Leland in Albany, did an excellent business this week in "Under Two Flags." Mr. Perrin went after business in a big way, with the result that the S. R. O. sign was on display early each night.

Much exploitation is being done in preparing the way for a week's run of "If I Were Queen" at the Clinton Square in Albany next week. The picture has been tied up with the local lodge of Knights of Pythias, and one of the local papers is also running a co-operative page advertisement.

The new theatre which William Berinstein will shortly erect in Little Falls will cost about $200,000, and will be known as the Strand. It will seat 1,600. Plans have already been drawn by C. J. Cummings, of Norwich, and the work of excavating will begin as soon as the weather permits. There are now three houses in Little Falls.

No one from here attended the annual dinner of the T. O. C. C. in New York. Samuel Suckno and George Roberts had made all plans to be present, but unexpected developments prevented their making the trip.

Coming within twenty dollars of the best day's business in the history of the houses, Morris Silverman, proprietor of the Happy Hour and the Pearl in Schenectady, N. Y., played to a whopper of a business on Thanksgiving and the day following. Mr. Silverman, who is one of the old-timers in the business, ran Harry Carey in "Man to Man" for the holiday attraction. He plays a picture one day at the Happy Hour, and two days at the Pearl, and is making money on his two theatres.

The village of Ballston Spa will hold a special election within a day or so to determine whether or not Sunday movies are to be permitted. All this week there have been meetings in various churches in the village, with red hot discussions. The whole trouble started when the Capitol Theatre, a new house, announced a policy of Sunday shows.

Ballston Spa, N. Y., will have Sunday pictures. Citizens at a special election on Saturday, December 9, voted 848 to 750 in favor of the proposition. All persons over 18 years of age were permitted to vote.

The election was the culmination of a long and bitter fight which started when the board of trustees gave its permission for Sunday movies. The ministers of the village entered a protest and denounced the trustees from pulpits. The board then rescinded its action and submitted the matter to a referendum vote. There then followed as strenuous a campaign as ever occurred in the history of the village.

Expect Early Completion of $29,000 Newcastle Theatre

Ground has been broken for the new Perriello Theatre to be located on Fifth avenue, New Castle, Pa. Plans call for a thoroughly modern and fireproof structure, 100 by 28 feet, seating 260 people. The floors will be reinforced with steel and the ceiling will be all metal. The decoration of the interior will be as fine as seen in any other picture theatre in this section of the state. The exterior wall of the building will be faced with variegated shades of tapestry brick.

The building will be two stories high. The second story will be used for living apartments. The approximate cost of the new play house will be $29,000. Work is to be rushed with all possible haste.

John Moskola, on December 1, took over the Luna Theatre at Brackenridge, Pa., formerly owned by Mrs. A. J. Evans.

The newly enlarged Liberty Theatre on the South Side, Pittsburgh, was opened Saturday, December 9. The house has been lengthened, with no interruptions of performances, and about 400 seats have been added, bringing the capacity to 900. Louis Michaels is manager.

Sandy Ridge, Pa., has a new picture theatre just opened, and a new one is in the course of construction at Natrona, Pa.

John S. Sanford, former salesman for the Pittsburgh Fox exchange, succeeds Jack Rainey as manager of the Rialto Theatre at Erie.

N. W. Fredericks will take over the management of the Garden Theatre, Lock Haven, Pa., on January 1, 1923.

Manager J. Paul Jones, of the Rowland and Colonial theatres, Wilkinsburg, announces that the latter named house has been closed and will immediately be dismantled preparatory to the erection of a handsome new theatre on the same site. The new house will have a capacity of 750 and present plans call for its completion next May 1.

Work on the new Liberty Theatre, at Ellwood City, has been rushed as rapidly as possible during recent weeks, and the owner, T. V. Barnes, says he hopes to formally open his new amusement palace on Christmas. However, the doors will be thrown open to the public as soon as the theatre is completed, and this may be before the holiday season.

N. C. Wagner, well-known exploitation man for the local First National office, is no longer connected with the exchange, having resigned to take over the management of Rowland & Clark's Perry Theatre in Erie.

The original owner of the Garden Theatre, Lock Haven, a Mr. Frederick, has purchased the house from the Excel Amusement Company, which has been the owner for some time. The change of management takes place the first of the year.

Wm. A. Ashe has sold the West Park Theatre, McKees Rocks, to John Lang. The new owner took charge December 1.

A. Linde, owner of the Star Theatre, Mt. Jewett, is recovering from pneumonia. He has been confined to his bed for the past four weeks, and we are glad to report his convalescence.

Charlie Baird, of the Pastime theatre, Portage, besides taking care of his house, is now also doing the booking for the Central Theatre at Central City. The last named house is owned by a coal company of Windber.

Manager Kester, of the East Liberty Cameraphone, Pittsburgh, puts on a fashion show with living models co-operating with East Liberty merchants, each Thursday evening. The stunt is proving a big success, and "Kes" says it has turned his weakest night into one of the best.

New England Business Off Despite Great Attractions

Despite the fact that exhibitors are admittedly furnishing bigger bills and literally choking them with better productions at a top figure of 35 cents, business in New England has been decidedly off during the past five weeks with the current takings not up to the figures compiled at the box offices in the latter part of August. However, this latter drop is due entirely to the holiday season and an increase is looked for after New Year's. With that belief in mind, New England exhibitors are booking unusual bills for the season.

That conditions over which exhibitors have no control are the cause for the slump of the past month is accepted as a fact among the theatre owners who have studied their audiences and compared carefully their box office statements. The weather, which has been dreadful, the breaks on the week-ends for the past four weeks being against theatre patronage, also has hit the box office hard.

That a little more aggressive exploitation such as is practised by exhibitors in other sections of the country will help theatre patronage in New England was again proven to be a fact. New England movie theatres do little or no exploitation. Boston exchangemen do not encourage it. And yet every well exploited picture has made money in New England. "The Birth of a Nation," which holds the New England gross business record, went over as big as it did because it was cleverly advertised. "Ten Nights in a Barroom," admittedly a freak with box office possibilities, mopped up because it was unusually well exploited. And there are many others that were exploited and they all came out ahead at the end of the week. Yet, in spite of this fact, little or no attention is being paid in New England to exploitation.

Bookings at first run houses in Boston, Providence, Manchester, Springfield and Worcester of independent pictures right now are at their best. Concerns like Federated handling Bobby North productions, American Features handling Al Lichtman productions, the Franklin taking care of Warner Brothers, Bill McConville handling Arrow, etc., are all doing a wonderful business, and while many of the exchangemen are carefully guarding their business reports, the fact remains that independent productions in New England never were in bigger demand and never in the past received the rentals they are drawing today from exhibitors.

Insofar as has been ascertained, D. W. Griffith's latest, "One Exciting Night," which closed recently at the Tremont Temple in Boston after a long run, will play straight first run houses in New England, most of the runs being on a percentage basis. For some reason or other there is very little exploitation being done locally on this picture. Why this should be so is more than exhibitors can understand, for the reason that "One Exciting Night" looks like a big winner as a straight picture attraction at New England houses.

Take, for example, the experience of Eddie Reid at his Strand Theatre in Providence, R. I., two weeks ago. He was aided by Charley Seeleye of New York. Charley tried his darndest to get a booking for a premier showing of his costume picture, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton." They all turned him down except Reid. The two got together and spent $2,000 on the exploitation campaign that covered every section in Providence and vicinity. Result: the picture grossed a little less than $8,000, which, on a 50-50 basis, earned a net of more than $2,000 each for Reid and Seeleye. And "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" is now pretty well known in New England.

The J. J. and Lee Shubert lease on the Shubert-Majestic, Providence, R. I., which is owned by the Emery Brothers—Burton and Alton—expires on December 31. This house has had a somewhat ragged legit career during the past year or so. The trouble has been in the price scaling. The management has been issuing tickets with three prices quoted thereon, the box office man charging what he wanted. This practice has proven far from popular and the people have stayed away. The house has been poorly advertised. Col. Felix Wendelschaefer, who reaped a vast fortune at the old Providence Opera House, has managed the house, but the Shuberts have pulled the strings.

Unless the Shuberts agree to pay an increased rental there is every probability that the Shubert-Majestic next month will be converted into a first run picture house. The theatre is ideally located and seats over 3,000, with every facility for picture projection. If the Shuberts balk, the Emery brothers, who also operate the Rialto and Emery Theatres in Providence, will use the house for big pictures and give de luxe presentations fashioned after the shows given at the big Broadway houses. Right now there is no de luxe first run house in New England properly conducted and the proposed Emery venture should be a huge money-maker.

Gordon's new Capitol Theatre in the exclusive Back Bay section of Boston should prove a real money-maker. This house is only two weeks old, but at that it has caught on marvelously well in a particularly dull season. Hyman Fine is conductor of the 20-piece symphony orchestra, while Francis J. Cronin is the organist. Two shows daily are given at this house with the policy a fairly successful one thus far. However, it is yet a little too early to judge the status of this new first run house.

With "Tess of the Storm Country," the Mary Pickford special, the talk of New England exhibitors, opposition houses are urging First National to re-issue several of the more famous Pickford pictures. "Tess" promises to be one of the big money-makers of the season here.

"The Four Horsemen," the Metro super special that introduced Rodolph Valentino to the public as a de luxe star, is still very much of a draw, for some of the first run houses have booked the picture for return engagements. Manager Bill Mahoney, one of the shrewdest managers in New England, will feature that production at his Christmas week show, at the Rialto, Providence, R. I.

Connecticut is due for another battle, for the reform and fanatic element in the Nutmeg State is again stirring up trouble there and it is the intention of this crowd to make another effort to establish a state censorship commission. The Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners, under the leadership of Bill True of the Strand in Hartford, Conn., will have the situation well in hand, for they have negotiated important and co-operative tieups with representative civic organizations.

There is some talk in exhibitor circles in Providence, R. I., that a new neighborhood house will be erected in the Smith Hill section of that city at the junction of Smith street and Chalkstone avenue. This is an ideal spot for a neighborhood house, for it would have a draw among about 50,000 people.

Speculation in Rhode Island is now 3 to 1 that 1923 will bring Sunday shows to that state. Governor-elect Bill Flynn is one of the most liberal men in Little Rhody and has always been a plugger for Sunday shows. With both branches of the legislature in the power of Democrats, who swept Rhode Island at last election, and with a Democratic governor at the helm of the government, it is fairly certain that picture houses in 1923 will open their week's shows on Monday and run them through to Sunday night.

Harry Crull of the Albee interests in Rhode Island, Bill Mahoney of the Rialto Theatre and Martin Tuohey of the Emery Theatre, together with the managers of the other houses in Providence, constitute the important executive and arrangements committees which are in charge of the benefit that the Elks Local will put on at the Shubert-Majestic Theatre in Providence, December 18, 19 and 20.

Harry Crull and Martin Tuohey also are busy these days preparing everything for the annual professional dinner to be given by the Providence Managers' Association to all professionals playing Providence houses during Christmas week. The dinner, which will be followed with an entertainment furnished by the guests themselves, will be held at the Dreyfus Hotel. Dancing will also feature the all-day and night festivities for which Harry and Martin are laying plans.

Bill Canning, manager of the Strand and Park theatres in Manchester, N. H., in a comparatively short time has made both these houses among the best paying propositions in Northern New England. Bill is one of the very few New England exhibitors who backs his pictures with aggressive exploitation.

New Year's this year falling on Monday, exhibitors generally throughout New England are going to take advantage of this good break and give special shows beginning at one minute after 12 (midnight) Monday morning. This will draw the celebraters of the night-before festivities.

In proportionate comparison, the movie houses in New England, despite the slump of the past few weeks, are doing a considerably better business than the legit theatres. In fact, there are very few legitimate attractions touring New England. Most of them confine their travels to Boston and play three nighters in Providence and one night in towns like New Haven, Hartford, Springfield, Worcester and Fall River. A majority of them are steering clear of the off-cities like Burlington, Taunton and Pittsfield, while some of the bigger companies are breaking their New York to Boston jumps at Bridgeport, New Haven, Hartford and Providence, playing one nighters in the first three towns and three days in the Little Rhody capital. The money-makers thus far this season, however, could be counted on the fingers of both hands.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," an Elmer Clifton production financed by New Bedford, Mass, capital, is playing its last week at the Selwyn Theatre, Boston. This engagement was made possible through an unexpected cancellation at that house. The picture is a good draw and its business has surprised theatre folk in general, for very little attention was paid to the engagement, most people accepting the Selwyn engagement as a flivver for the reason that that house is not centrally located and never played pictures successfully.

Next week is "Old Home Week" at the Bijou Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., an Edward F. Albee house, playing a double bill. For an extra attraction Zena Keefe, the star, who appeared as leading woman in stock here years ago, will make personal appearances in conjunction with the showing of one of her pictures, probably "The Broken Silence."

Wally Griffith, who for some time was with S. Z. Poli in Waterbury and Meriden, Conn., is now managing the house at Bristol, Conn.

Bill Strong, who is handling the exploitation and advertising for the Emery and Rialto theatres in Providence, R. I., is winning much praise among New England showmen for his newspaper display advertisements, which are neatly and attractively designed.

President Jacob Lourie, of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Theatre Owners, is promoting a series of Tuesday luncheons with the hope that in this manner interest will be stimulated in the organization, which should be one of the strongest in the country.

Although he has sold out his Star and Sterling theatres in Concord, N. H., Jacob Conn, who still operates the Gaiety Theatre in Providence, R. I., has purchased a site in the former city with every intention of erecting a big first-run house there. Plans now under way call for a 1,500-seat theatre.

Right now the Rhode Island exhibitors are co-operating in a drive to raise $850,000 in ten days for the erection of a so-called Providence Lying-In Hospital. The theatres up to Monday of this week had been instrumental in raising about one-tenth of the total amount in seven days in contributions and pledges.

The Better Films Council of the Rhode Island Council of Women's Clubs, of which Mrs. Charles J. Fletcher is chairman, has selected Eddie Fay's Theatre in Providence, R. I., as the place where they will look at pictures.

Kansas City's Doric Wrecked Second Time by Gas Explosion

For the second time since its completion, the Doric Theatre, Kansas City, was wrecked by a gas explosion December 7. The explosion occurred when the janitor attempted to light a gas heater in the basement of the theatre. There was very little fire, but the force of the explosion was so great that the walls of the offices, private projection room, rest rooms and basement were torn away. The explosion also tore the steel moorings away from side girders and twisted the iron stair rails. The ceiling above the main auditorium was torn away and daylight could be seen where the roof had been.

Adjoining offices and stores were damaged to the extent of $100,000, according to the estimates of the owners and the fire chief. Of this, $60,000 was sustained by the owner of the building, Mrs. E. C. Ridge, and by Sam Harding, who has the lease on the building. Mr. Harding said that his loss was fully covered by insurance.

Every window glass was broken in buildings adjacent to the Doric, and the sidewalk in front of the theatre was torn up. Two years ago an almost identical explosion occurred at the theatre. The house has been closed during the summer, but was reopened Thanksgiving Day for an indefinite time.

Jack Johnston, who operated the Isis and Mecca theatres at Augusta, Kan., has taken a long time lease on the Liberty Theatre, the third picture house in Augusta. The Isis and Mecca will be operated on the same policy as before, but the Liberty will be open Fridays and Saturdays only.

The building and equipment of the Liberty Theatre and the building occupied by the Isis is owned by D. A. Biscagno. Mr. Biscagno plans to completely remodel the Isis Theatre in the spring. A marble front will take the place of the present front, and the capacity will be increased. Complete new interior decorations will also be a feature.

Fred Hayter has reopened the Highland Theatre, Kansas City, which has been closed during the summer months. Mr. Hayter recently returned here from Springfield, Mo.

H. H. Murdock, a salesman for the local branch of Metro, has sold his Murdock Theatre at Pleasant Hill, Mo., to Benken and Garrison, who are merchants of Pleasant Hill.

O. K. Mason, who has the Regent Theatre, Wichita, Kas., was a Kansas City vistor ths week. He came up to look over some of the new releases.

The Forty-fifth Street Theatre, Kansas Cty, is another house to reopen with the coming of the cold weather. L. C. McElroy is the new manager.

T. C. Goodnght of the Star Theatre at Warrensburg, Mo., dropped in town the other day.

H. L. Gees of the Mystic and Rex Theatres at Mulberry, Kas., was visiting in Kansas City last week for films.

Claire M. Patee of the Patee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas., make his weekly visit Tuesday. Mr. Patee is one of the pioneers of the industry.

Lee Gunnison of the Crystal Theatre at Atchison, Kas., was also a visitor.

North Carolina Mid-Winter Meeting Comes December 27

The regular mid-winter meeting of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. will be held at the O. Henry Hotel, Greensboro, December 27 and 28, according to announcement made this week by Henry B. Varner, of Lexington, secretary of the organization. Mr. Varner in his official call freely predicts another strong effort on the part of the reformers to put over a state-wide censorship bill at the January session of the North Carolina general assembly, and stresses as one of the important matters to be taken up at the Greensboro meeting, the arranging for strong representation in Raleigh during the entire time the Legislature is in session, and the raising of ample funds to fight the menace.

Harry Sommerville, formerly manager of the Pryor-Leitch theatres in Durham, has resigned his position but has not announced his future plans.

Announcement from New York that the Charlotte office of Select would close at an early date, brings regret to the exhibitor friends of Manager McCormick, of the Charlotte office. The road force was called in from this office some weeks ago.

Charles G. Amos, of the Strand, Spartanburg, has been sent to the Alhambra, Charlotte. Both are Lynch houses.

Colonel Henry B. Varner's new theatre in Lexington is nearing completion. The colonel will be a regular "circuit magnate" with five theatres under his management, with the opening of the new Lexington house, which is going to be the last word in appointments.

Joe Goodenough's new theatre, the Branwood, Greenville, S. C., has a private enclosed parking space for 100 automobiles. Claim checks will be issued for all cars parked while patrons attend the show. By the way, Greenville is now rated as the best show town of its size in the South—over two hundred cotton mills alone, there!

Friends in the Carolinas were glad to learn that Ernest G. Stellings, formerly of the Grand Theatre, Wilmington, N. C., has been made publicity and booking manager of Carl Kettler's theatres in Palm Beach and West Palm Beach, Florida, and the Palm Beach newspaper "wrote him up" extensively upon his arrival there.

A Profit of $822,500

Through the purchase of the fee to the site of the Columbia Theatre, Sixth and St. Charles street, St. Louis, the Columbia Theatre Company, controlled by Frank R. Tate, the Louis A. Cella estate and Joseph E. Martin, is said to have realized a profit of $822,500.

In 1897 the theatre company obtained a 99-year lease on the site, with option of purchase on the basis of the annual rental of $14,500. The property was owned by George S. Meyer estate. A few days ago the theatre owners decided to exercise their right to buy. On the usual per cent. basis real estate men figure the site cost them but $362 500. Conservative relators say the property is worth no less than $1,185,000, or $822,500 more than they paid for it.

It fronts 79 feet on Sixth street and 123 feet on St. Charles street. A few weeks ago the company bought the site of the Strand Theatre adioining. It measured 26 by 123, giving them a total frontage of 105 feet on Sixth street. That site on the rental basis is estimated to have cost them $225,000.

Charles Sella, president of the theatre company, said there are no plans at present for additional improvements on the site.

Baltimore

The New Gem Theatre, 617 Duncan Place, Baltimore, has been purchased by David Greenberg and is being operated under his management. Joseph Robbins, former manager of that house for the Greater Baltimore Theatres Company, has taken over the Gilmore Theatre (colored), 314 North Gilmore street, formerly operated by Oscar Scherr.

The first large fashion show ever staged at a Baltimore theatre was put on at the Century during the week beginning Monday, December 4. Arrangements were made with The Hub, one of the large women's and men's clothing stores, to co-operate.

Lyric Company Incorporates in Texas-Oklahoma Territory

Of interest to theatre men in the Texas-Oklahoma territory is the incorporation in Tulsa of the Lyric Theatre Amusement Company, with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are John Brown, J. C. Scully and Elizabeth Brown, of Tulsa.

The Popular Amusement Company, members of which are building a magnificent new theatre in Dallas, recently increased its capital stock from $50,000 to $125,000.

G. M. Sells, J. O. Sims and H. L. Brown have incorporated the Orange Recreational Company at Orange, Texas. The capital stock, at the start, is shown by papers to be $37,500.

Karl Hoblitzelle, president of the Interstate Amusement Company, controlling a string of Majestic theatres over the Southwest, has announced that the new Majestic Theatre in Houston, Texas, will be opened during the first week in January. It was originally contemplated to open the theatre on Christmas Day, but the work of interior decorating could not be finished by that time.

The Interstate adopted a new policy in Dallas and other cities this season, in cutting off about one act off regular bills and substituting instead first-run pictures. This policy apparantly has taken in Dallas.

In addition to the new theatre building at Houston, announcement was made on November 25 that the Interstate interests would at once begin the erection of an office building on a site adjoining the Majestic, to be from six to ten stories in height.

Ministers of Henryetta, Okla., have circulated a petition to close theatres on Sunday. The exhibitors and other proprietors of places of amusement are fighting this Blue Law agitation as a unit.

A First National attraction will be the opening feature of the new theatre in San Antonio being erected, says Louis Santikos, long a veteran independent exhibitor in the Southwest. The new theatre cost $400,000, seats 2,500, and has an orchestra of 23 pieces. Mr. Santikos announces the house will open soon after January 1.

Among recent visitors on the Dallas mart were H. T. Hodge, of the Gem, Abilene; H. C. Houston, Gem, Sherman; J. Goodfriend, of Caddo, who is opening a new house at Moran, Texas; Boston Campbell, new manager of the Judia, Cisco, Texas, and W. P. Gibson, new manager at the Lilly Theatre, Grand Saline, Texas.

Among recent theatre changes in the Dallas field are the following: Andrews Brothers have taken over the Queen at Richland, Texas; Mrs. W. H. Helfer has returned to the management of the Itasca Theatre at Alice, Texas; Messrs. Gunn and Walker have leased the Crystal at Loraine, Texas.

An important deal in the Southwest was that whereby the Musselman interests took over the Palace Theatre in Corsicana, Texas, from the Southern Enterprises, Inc., giving the Musselman firm two houses in Corsicana, the other being the Grand. W. W. Grist, former manager of the Palace, will be transferred to Dallas, while Mr. W. Hays, the Musselman manager, will manage both houses. The deal was announced by Johnny Paxton, for years Mr. Musselman's right hand man.

Several large independent exhibitors—yes, that creature still exists in the Southwest—met in Dallas recently with the formation of a booking circuit in mind. While spasmodic attempts toward an independent circuit have been made in the Dallas area, somebody invariably has jostled the Bostonian product, with the result that the circuit went to where second-hand one-sheets go. That there is a definite and growing movement at present, however, cannot be denied.

Reopening of the Liberty Theatre, Ranger, Texas, was announced recently by J. M. Palmer, in association with M. H. Hagaman. The Liberty was one of the first opened during the boom days of Ranger, when the town grew from 400 population almost overnight to 20,000, due to discovery of oil at the very door of the village. The Liberty seats 700. When matters settled at Ranger, as they invariably do after the first flush of oil fever goes, Mr. Palmer, through business acumen and a fine sense of showmanship, gradually bought out all other competitors, and now practically controls the amusement situation there.

With a capital stock of $25,000, the Ardmore Park Amusement Company of Ardmore, Okla., has been organized, with U. S. Joines, W. R. Hinight and A. Eddleman, all of Ardmore, as incorporators.

Losses estimated at $70,000 were entailed at El Dorado, Arkansas, recently, when an entire block on the west side of Washington avenue, between Locust and Cedar streets, was fire-swept by a blaze which originated near the operating room of the Rex Theatre, one of the buildings destroyed, its loss being $12,000. The Rex Theatre was recently overhauled and a $15,000 pipe organ had been installed. Manager M. C. McCord barely escaped with his life.

Associates of A. D. Saenger, member of the powerful Saenger Amusement Company, and one of the best known picture men in the South, have extended condolences to him and his wife on the death of A. D. Saenger, Jr., their year-old son, who died last Friday at Los Angeles. Mr. Saenger is also head of the drug interests in Shreveport, La., bearing his name.

The Palace Theatre, Marshall, Texas, in the Elk's Building, previously under the management of Norman & Cole, on December 1 went under the management of G. T. Trammell, the lease of Southern Enterprises, Inc., having expired and not being renewed.

In a recent notation concerning the Dallas Amusement Company, which has been incorporated with $50,000 capital stock by John T. Jones, millionaire Houston lumberman, W. O. Huggins and others, it should have been mentioned that the company was organized to operate the Melba Theatre, Dallas, which now is under the active management of P. G. Cameron.

Exhibitor Loses

A decision to the general effect that film exchanges are not liable for failure to deliver films to destinations was handed down by the Oklahoma Supreme Court in a case affecting Vitagraph and other exchanges, instituted by W. S. Billings, exhibitor of Enid, Okla.

"Over the Top," the Vitagraph special, had been booked for July 4, 1921. Advertising had been placed over Enid, but the picture failed to arrive. The exchange had valid reasons why the picture failed to arrive on scheduled date.

Seattle Enjoys Distinction of Three Hold-overs in Week

Three holdovers this week of December 3, all playing to excellent business, is a record for Seattle. "Knighthood" at the Strand was reported, in its third and final week, to be drawing good houses. "Tess" at the Blue Mouse broke every house record during its first week, and entered the second playing to capacity. At the Liberty, "The Young Rajah," which has been widely heralded as Valentino's last for a long, long time, is drawing to the close of a splendid ten days' run. Seattle is one of the few large cities that is not over-seated, which probably largely accounts for the fact that good patronage is enjoyed by all.

M. A. Atwood will open his newly remodeled and redecorated American Theatre in Kirkland, December 17, with "Black Beauty." He has booked the entire season's product from Vitagraph, and is promising his patrons some fine programs. Kirkland is a short ferry run across Lake Washington from Seattle.

Miss Dorothy Jentoff, cashier at the Columbia Theatre, was recently the inspiration of Heinrich Roth, famous artist, connected with a leading newspaper, in his contention that the most beautiful women in America live on Puget Sound. Artist Roth has been portraying types of young women who work for their living.

Articles of incorporation were filed at Olympia, Wash., November 29, for "Seattle's Blue Mouse Theatre—J Hamrick, L. O. Lukan, C. E. Gates, 50 years, Seattle, $250,000."

Mr. Alsace is to open his Art Craft Theatre, which is the recreated Lee, Saturday, December 8. The house seats about 300, and is in the Meridian district of Seattle.

Charles H. Code, brother of W. F. Code, and himself an Alaska picture man, has joined the Hodkinson sales staff, working out of the Seattle office.

Crandall's Public Service Work Scores in Washington

Having successfully launched its public service work in conjunction with each of the children's organizations represented on its advisory board, having established a systematized method of conduct of the special Saturday juvenile matinees and put in operation the community service hour in each residential theatre one day each week, the Public Service and Educational Department of the Crandall Theatres in Washington, D. C., Mrs. Harriet Hawley Locher, director, has devoted its recent attention to perfecting plans for the most elaborate free Christmas parties ever given children of the Capital by any amusement organization.

The idea of the Christmas parties at his Metropolitan, Savoy, Avenue Grand, York, Lincoln and Apollo theatres originated with Harry M. Crandall, and is being put into execution by Mrs. Locher in co-operation with Messrs. Fallas Broche, Robert Etris, Harry E. Lohmeyer, Nat Glasser, John B. Upperman, and J. Williams Clifford, managers of the respective Crandall neighborhood houses.

The parties will be given Christmas morning at 11 o'clock, and there will be a distribution of gifts, candy, fruit, etc., to all children who attend. In order that there may be a definite indication of the number of guests to be provided for, a special engraved invitation has been prepared for distribution to those attending the theatres in which the Christmas celebrations are to be held. The invitation must be presented at the door on Christmas morning as a ticket of admission.

William C. Ewing, Crandall staff artist attached to the publicity department under the direction of Nelson B. Bell, has designed three-color Christmas seals and tags upon which the greetings accompanying the gifts will be inscribed.

The annual custom of free matinees to orphans will be continued this year despite the conduct of the Christmas parties. In order that every institution in the district may be included in the invitation to the free Christmas outings for the inmates, the Crandall organization secures its lists from the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia and draws no line as to sect or creed. The Crandall policy in this regard is extended to the Lincoln Theatre, the finest playhouse in the East devoted to colored patronage, so that the Crandall Christmas benefactions may be said literally to cover the District of Columbia.

Sichel Still at Old Stand; Other New York City Items

Abraham Sichel, who is the manager of Loew's Fulton Theatre, Brooklyn, is still at the same old stand, where he has been for the last seven years. "Abe" is by no means new in the business, having been with the Loew corporation for seventeen years. He tells with pride of the olden days, that he enjoys to look back to, when he was up in Harlem in charge of one of the penny arcades and when Loew and he were just starting in. It's a pleasure to meet him. He's always the same and has the smile that won't come off.

Making 15-cent Pictures on "The Bowery." That's just what Albert S. Goldberg did, and that's only four years ago. He is the owner of the Atlantic Theatre, on the Bowery, near Canal street, and his theatre has a history attached to it. It has stood there many years and is one of the old landmarks of New York City. In fact, it is safe to say that it is the oldest now, since the passing away of Niblo's Garden, at the corner of Prince Street and Broadway.

He has made many changes in the old place and enjoys the distinction of having one of the best equipped theatres in that part of the city. At the time he took the house, all houses were charging 5 and 10 cents, and the 10 cents seemed to be the Sunday price. He was, of course, laughed at and it was thought that it never could be done, but things went his way of thinking. Mr. Goldberg has been in the business nine years, and is also the owner of the Washington Theatre in Brooklyn.

Beg to call your attention that Simon Barr is the owner of the Subway Theatre. This house, for some reason, was always a Jonah; in fact, it was never run by a real showman. It was condemned by the fire department several times. Mr. Barr took hold of it and has made it a place worthwhile. After lots of fixing up and a clean cut management, he has what we would call, "got them coming." Although Mr. Barr is really a young man, he is indeed old in the business, because he started young. He ran the Grand Opera House in Brooklyn for three years—where now stands the Namm store—both as a dramatic house and for pictures until it was torn down. In that house he claims he learned the business from A to Z.

Barnet Zuckerman, formerly of the Nostrand Theatre, Brooklyn, has joined the staff of the Regent Theatre, Fulton and Bedford avenues, of which Conrad J. Ruby is president. The company is known as the Regent Enterprises, and Mr. Zuckerman will act as booking and exploitation manager. The house is called the Cameo of Brooklyn and has recently been renovated and remodeled at a cost of $15,000. Barnet won the third prize of the "Seeing It Through" contest for submitting the best article on how to increase theatre patronage and overcome business depression. He was the only contestant in the East that won a prize.

Bad Weather Hurts Business in Louisville; Flexner Sui

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 5.—Business hasn't been quite so good the past ten days due to bad weather, there having been snow, rain and cold weather, which has materially reduced night attendance during the week days, although Saturday business has continued very fair. Suburban business as a whole has been good and as a whole conditions are very satisfactory.

Adolph Reutlinger, of the Walnut Street Amusement Co., and interested in the Broadway Enterprises, has been nominated as a director of the Louisville Board of Trade.

Dennis Long, of the Alamo Theatre and Broadway Enterprises, has recently returned from Union County, Ky., where he and Dr. Mechling, spent several days hunting and inspecting a joint coal mine venture.

The plan for widening Fourth street, from Broadway to Chestnut, has been virtually blocked by property owners. Col. Fred Levy, who owns property on that block, objected, as did the Kentucky Theatre lessees, and others who would have been injured.

The Flexner Real Estate Co. last week attached funds in the box office and local banks of the Shubert Theatrical Co., against whom the Flexners have another suit of $99,600 pending. The attachment proceedings are to recover $4,818.65, alleged by the Flexner interests to represent money due them for expenses of operating the Shubert building in Louisville while agents of the Shuberts, and that the Shuberts have failed to pay this sum.

James Carrigan, operating the Arista Theatre on Second street, recently made an attempt to stage Sunday picture shows in the Parkland Theatre, which has been a white elephant for the past several years, due to the community preventing shows from being staged at the house. Two years ago Mayor Smith ordered Sunday shows stopped, and recently Carrigan, representing fresh control of the house, opened on Sunday. A complaint was made by residents and Carrigan ordered to desist. Carrigan had 1,986 names on a petition asking that the house be opened.

San Francisco

An organ is being installed in the Orpheum Theatre, Oakland, Cal., and one has been purchased for installation in the Hayward Theatre at Hayward.

The California Theatre, Redwood City, has been closed, and the projection equipment taken over by Walter Preddey, San Francisco.

Miss Frances McGill, secretary of the Allied Amusement Industries of California, with headquarters at San Francisco, is seriously ill with appendicitis in a local hospital.

Bayard Bros. have taken over the Pollack & Boyd Circuit, which conducts theatres at Arcata Ferndale and Blue Lakes, Cal.

Sol Lesser, the new owner of the Lyceum Theatre, San Francisco, has installed Charles Kurtzman as manager.

Paul Guttman, formerly of Illinois, has purchased the Lyric Theatre at Manteca, Cal., from A. A. Richards, who will shortly open a theatre at Modesto.

H. P. Koppell Leaves Chicago; $500,000 House for Pearlman

H. P. Koppell has resigned as manager of the Astor Theatre, Clark and Madison streets, and now is in charge of the Village Theatre at Wilmette. Koppell is a veteran manager here, and has been connected with several of the leading circuits at various times. R. Rodin is managing the Astor now.

The Majestic Theatre, formerly the home of Orpheum vaudeville, now is running continuous vaudeville, opening at noon and closing at eleven each night. Eight acts and a feature picture make up the program, and the house has been doing a good business since the change was made.

A new 2,000-seat house is projected for Halsted street, between Sixty-ninth and Seventieth streets, by Rudolph P. Perlman. The cost of the new theatre is estimated at $500,000, and the plans are by David Saul Klafter. The front will be terra cotta trimmed, and the plans call for a modern picture theatre that will be a credit to that part of the city. In addition to the theatre there will be twenty offices and eight stores, and bids will be called for soon as it is expected to have the building finished by October 1 next year. The name of the lessee of the theatre has not yet been disclosed.

Harry Weinstein brought the Harvard Theatre at Harvard avenue and Fifty-third street from Sax Marx for a reported sum of $256,000. The house was sold by Weinstein to Samuel Grossman for $282,000. The property has fourteen stores, ten offices and eighteen apartments in addition to the theatre.

L. L. Lewis, who owns the Sharum Theatre at Walnut Ridge and the Gem at Pocahontas, is making several improvements in the Gem which will make it a modern theatre when completed.

The Tent Amusement Corporation has been organized by J. R. Garden, F. P. Buchheit and A. O. Knittel with a capital of $10,000. The main office is located at 4823 North Kedzie avenue.

Lee Morrison, Grover E. Holmes and A. J. Devos have organized the Central Amusement Company with a capital of $10,000, and offices at 127 North Dearborn street.

The main offices of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who operate several well-known houses in the Loop, have been moved from the Rialto Theatre to the New McVickers Theatre, where the various departments will have more room.

Manager Sam Atkinson, of the Calo Theatre, is putting on a six weeks' radio contest for the youngsters from ten to sixteen in connection with the film "Around the World in Eighteen Days," and the boys are sure packing the house to take advantage of the novel advertising stunt.

The Marigold Garden Company has increased its capital stock to $200,000, and it is planned to put on more elaborate shows in the future.

As yet nothing definite has been done about the projected picture theatre for Broadway and Sheridan road. The plans given out call for a houes seating 5,000.

George DeKruif, of the Exhibitors Supply Company, has returned from an extended business trip to the west coast.

A. C. Linenthal, Jack E. Dwork and Harry P. Munne have formed the Leear Amusement Company, with offices at 109 North Dearborn street. The new company is capitalized at $50,000.

The Chicago Theatre this week is putting over John Barrymore in "Sherlock Holmes" in great shape, and Paul Sternberg's amplified syncopation is making a hit with the crowds.

The New McVickers packed them in this week with "Clarence," and the management made a departure from the regular program by featuring the Yerkes Flotilla orchestra instead of the usual presentation. The Christie comedy, "Chop Suey," caused plenty of laughs, so the whole bill was full of humor.

The Tivoli and Riviera theatres, of the Balaban & Katz chain, did a fine business with "The Dangerous Age" last week.

Barbee's Loop Theatre had an exclusive Loop showing last week of "Rich Men's Wives," while the Pantheon did good business with it in the Wilson avenue district, and the Senate showed it on the West Side.

Charles Fecher and Fred Nortman, who now operate the Drexel, the Lexington and the Harvard theatres here, have bought the Kimbark Theatre at 6240 Kimbark avenue from Harry T. Leper, who has operated the house for some time. The Kimbark seats 800 and some improvements will be made by the new owners.

J. Rodin has assumed management of the new Astor Theatre at Clark and Madison street and his brother, C. Rodin, will act as assistant manager.

The Adams Theatre on East Adams street is now operated as the Levins Adams Theatre and the management reports a good holiday business.

When it comes to advertising, you have to hand it to Balaban and Katz, for they use plenty of large space in the daily newspapers here that no doubt cost them plenty of money, but Publicity Manager Hollander says that capacity business is the rule with the houses and this big broad publicity pays for itself many times over. The latest announcement says that all acts and presentations put on by the organization are put on with special scenery, costumes and lighting effects to conform with the style adopted by them, and no expense is too great to achieve the effects wanted for the occasion. Inventive stagecraft plays a large figure in the presentations and the statement goes on to say that is one of the reasons why 18,000,000 people patronize the Balaban and Katz theatres every year.

The run of the Griffith film at the Illinois will end this month as the house will be turned back to legitimate fields after the first of the year.

Minhinnick General Manager of Canadian Theatre Chain

J. R. Minhinnick, manager of the Grand Opera House, London, Ontario, has been appointed general supervisor of all theatres throughout Canada of the Trans-Canada Theatres, Ltd., Montreal. Mr. Minhinnick, who is an outstanding showman of Canada, will have general direction of the booking of road show and film attractions to be played over the Trans-Canada circuit. It is expected that he will continue to make his headquarters in London, but he will be on the road extensively throughout the season. Trans-Canada claims to be booking features into 116 theatres in the Dominion.

Massey Hall, Toronto's largest music hall, has been engaged for eight days, starting December 22, for the presentation for the first time in Canada of the English production, "The Game of Life," which is being offered as the "first English super-features." Evening prices for the engagement range from 25 cents to $1; matinees, 25 and 50 cents.

A singular feature was the "American Night" which was staged at the Allen Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, on Friday evening, December 1, under the direction of Manager Miller Stewart and Conductor Charles Manning, when an orchestra of thirty musicians rendered a program of patriotic airs of U. S. origin. A crowd that packed the large theatre gave vent to its enthusiasm in marked fashion.

In the midst of a civic election campaign in Ottawa, Ontario, Manager Frank Goodale of Loew's Ottawa Theatre sprang a mystery stunt for "Our Leading Citizen" which was the attraction at the theatre during the week of December 11. For several days prior to the announcement of the week's program, Manager Goodale sent out automobiles bearing large signs "Who is 'Our Leading Citizen?'" Then followed, in due time, motorcars having the sign announcing the title of the theatre's attraction.

George Rotsky, Montreal representative of Allen Theatres, Ltd., was a visitor in Ottawa, Ontario, during a portion of the week of December 4, following up the visit locally of Bernard Allen, father of Jule and J. J. Allen, Toronto. It is understood that Mr. Rotsky's visit had to do with recent improvement developments in the Ottawa Valley in the taking over of the O'Brien chain by the Allens personally.

Simon Meretsky, owner of the Windsor Theatre and originally part owner of the Walkerville Theatre, has closed the deal with the stockholders for the Loew's Theatre at Windsor, Ontario. He started operating it on December 11 as the Capitol. The company consists of B. Meretsky, Edward Glassgo, owner of the Empire Theatre, and the Hon. Dr. Reaume.

After December 11 the Empire was closed and the Windsor, which was formerly a vaudeville and picture house, was made a straight picture house. In the past the best pictures were shown at the Empire and that policy will prevail at the Capitol.

Kansas City Exhibitors Sued

A number of weeks ago a number of Kansas City exhibitors were served with notices that suits had been brought against them by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers for the collection of the so-called music tax. The complaints recited that on certain dates the theatre owners entered into contracts for a three-year license, and after paying for the first year, have failed and refused to pay for the remaining two years.

Among the theatres filed against are the Bonaventure, Bijou, Prospect, New Centre and Idle Hour. A total of twelve suits were filed. Many of the cases were set for December 4 before Justice Edward J. McMahon. The case of the Bijou Theatre, owned by Edward Costello, was the first to come up. After hearing the evidence Justice McMahon took the case under advisement and announced that he would render judgment December 11.

The theatre owners are represented by Lawrence E. Goldman and Duval Strother, attorney for the Scoville estate, which operates the Idle Hour Theatre.

May Boycott St. Louis House Because of Negroes' Meeting

The National Baptist Convention of Negroes held its annual convention at the Kings Theatre, 822 North Kings Highway, St. Louis, beginning December 6, and now residents in the vicinity are threatening a boycott on not only the Kings but the Missouri Theatre, owned by Famous Players Missouri Corporation, and all local houses showing Paramount pictures.

Here is how the trouble started. The negroes originally planned to meet in Los Angeles last September, but Dr. Elias Clark Morris, president, died on September 5, the eve of the convention's opening. The gathering was postponed, but arrangements could not be made in Los Angeles for a later date. The convention was then transferred to St. Louis.

Those in charge found that the Coliseum, Odeon and other large, centrally located meeting places had already been engaged. Then city officials prevailed upon Nathan Frank, president of Famous Players Missouri Corporation, to permit the use of the Kings, which has not been opened this season.

Later property owners in the vicinity learned of the arrangements and a protest meeting was called. A telegram was sent to Famous Players-Lasky explaining the sentiments of the organization on the use of the theatre by negroes. In the meantime, Frank had left town on business, and it was impossible to arrange for a cancellation of the contract renting the theatre. So the negroes met there on December 6, as planned.

The race question is a ticklish one in St. Louis just now. The city officials have a problem on their hands trying to solve the situation created by protests on the use of O'Fallon Park by negro picnics.

"Go-to-the-Movies-Week," December 3 to 9, proved very successful, and the officials of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis are seriously considering making it an annual affair. All of the houses booked special attractions, and reports generally are that satisfactory business was enjoyed. One unexpected and unpleasant result of the movement was an editorial comment from the Post-Dispatch questioning why anyone should go to the "movies."

On Saturday, December 2, St. Louisians contributed $20,733.87 to the St. Louis Saturday & Sunday Hospital Association, which operates for the benefit of the worthy sick poor. Of that sum, $2,511.03 was collected by the theatres of the city.

Twenty-nine picture houses had collection boxes in their lobbies and these collected $1,741 from 11,453 persons. The Missouri Theatre led all amusement places with $369.47 obtained from 2,017 patrons. The New Grand Central across the street collected $112.85 from 536 patrons. Seventeen houses in which Skouras Brothers are interested collected $633.48.

F. L. Cornwell, owner of the Del Monte Theatre, has been advised by his physician to take a rest. Too much work, etc., in putting the big West End house over, which he has done in fine shape. But it is not very likely that he will follow the M. D.'s advice, at least for long. He keeps moving at full speed at all times. He showed his speed when he brought Rodolph Valentino to St. Louis for a personal appearance at the Del Monte, Sunday evening, December 3, and not only packed the theatre to the doors, but blocked traffic on Delmar boulevard as well. The Del Monte was regarded as a dead one by some wise folks, but Cornwell has made them revise their views. It can be done if you know how.

Elmer Brient, manager of the Illinois and Grand theatres in Centralia, Ill., was a caller. He formerly was manager for Associated Exhibitors in St. Louis.

If a chap flashes an official looking badge on you and starts to edge into your picture theatre without first paying his compliments to the box office in the form of coin of the realm, be sure he has a perfect right to wear said official looking badge.

For sometimes they don't, as witness: A fellow walked into the Frank Adams Stamp and Seal Company's shop in Sixth street, St. Louis, a few days ago and ordered two badges for which he agreed to pay $2. The first was to read, "Inspector of Buildings, City of St. Louis," and the second, "Asst. U. R. Co., No. 122, Foreman."

The company's clerk became suspicious and consulted the police. Two detectives were waiting when the chap who placed the order called for his badge. To the desk sergeant he explained. It was simple enough. Badge No. 1 would permit him to work the theatres for free shows and Badge No. 2 would take care of his street car transportation. There are other ways of solving the cost of living besides working.

Expect Dygert to Invade Two More Western New York Towns

It is reported in Buffalo, N. Y., that Harold G. Dygert, president and general manager of Associated Theatres Corporation, is about to invade two more Western New York towns with picture theatres. Associated now has theatres in East Rochester, Fairport, Canandaigua, Salamanca and Newark.

G. W. Gates has broken ground for a new picture theatre in Holley, N. Y. Mr. Gates has been operating the New Lyric in the same town for a long time.

Buffalo exhibitors as well as many from surrounding towns were the guests of W. A. V. Mack of Pathe at a big screening party in Shea's Hippodrome, Friday night, December 9, when Pearl White's new serial, "Plunder," was shown for the first time.

The Pastime Theatre in Depew, N. Y., was partly destroyed by fire last week. Mike Lescynski, former owner of the house, saved the films. The interior was badly burned.

Manager Fred M. Shafer of the Buffalo Lafayette Square has arranged a tie-up with the Buffalo Commercial through which readers finding their names in the news or feature columns of the newspaper any evening of the week will be entitled to free tickets.

Al Beckerich of the Buffalo Loew State has arranged with the Buffalo Enquirer to have that paper publish a cut up photo of a screen star in its columns. To those who paste the pieces together making the complete photo and then guessing the name of the star, Mr. Beckerich through the Movie Puzzle Editor offers two free tickets. Of course, Al always selects the photo of a star in his current film attraction.

Benjamin Franklin, 37 years old and colored, told Manager Fred M. Shafer that he wasn't big enough to put him out of the Lafayette Square Theatre, Buffalo, it is alleged. He also was charged with calling Mr. Shafer vile names. It cost Mr. Franklin $25 when he was arranged in city court.

The coming to Buffalo of Winnie Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film company, for the opening of the new local exchange, recalled to one of his old newspaper associates in town the story of the time when Winnie got a job on the Courier at some $18 a week, he demanding his exorbitant salary because of experience on New York dailies. One night he was sent out to cover a fire at the stockyards. All went well, until he called up to give the story. Then came the difficulty. Winnie refused to talk to anyone but the managing editor. Which proves that Winnie was a big man even in those days.

A shortage of plastering material and delay in shipments has made it impossible for Peterson & Woods to open the new Palace Theatre in Jamestown, N. Y., before the holidays, as was first planned. Plasterers are now working overtime, and much of the interior decorating of the walls, panels and ceilings has been done. The lighting system is nearly installed, and the stage is complete for the laying of a hardwood floor. The mezzanine floor and the cement floor in the large balcony are being rushed to completion. The Palace will open, it is hoped, early in 1923. When completed the Palace will be the finest theatrical building in Southwestern New York.

The Family Theatre in Mount Morris, N. Y., spread itself on a four-day showing of "Grandma's Boy." Jenks' orchestra was engaged for the evening presentations and matinees were given two afternoons. The Family packed 'em in at every showing.

T. Cecil Leonard, manager of the new Buffalo Olympic, reports much interest among patrons over the Mary Pickford re-issue, "Going Straight," which was made in 1910 and which was a special novelty on this week's bill. Mr. Leonard got a lot of publicity on the film.

Dewey Michaels, manager of the Plaza Theatre, Buffalo, reports that Dainty June, the juvenile screen star and her company of child players, made such a hit on the two days she appeared that patrons prevailed upon him to hold the attraction over for last Sunday's show, when the house was jammed to the doors.

Who will have Prominent Roles in First National Productions

Barbara Bedford at Head of Cast

Among the independent productions now being finished, the one based on Charles K. Harris's famous song, "The Tie That Binds," is said to be of unusual interest because of the story that Mr. Harris has prepared for this picture and the cast of stars that are appearing in it.

At the head of the cast is Barbara Bedford. Other noted actors in the cast are Robert Edeson, Effie Shannon, Raymond Hatton, William P. Carlton, Marion Swayne, Walter Miller and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Rex Ingram Picture Called Best Film

"The best picture that has ever played Springfield," is how H. A. Loper, manager of the Lyric Theatre, in the Illinois city, designated Rex Ingram's production for Metro of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

This message of approval is said to be exemplary of the hundreds which have been forwarded to the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation in New York.

Katherine MacDonald Next

Katherine MacDonald's next picture for First National release will be "Refuge." The supporting cast, as announced by B. B. Schulberg, will include Hugh Thompson, Fred Malafesta, Arthur Edmund Carewe, Grace Morse and Eric Mayne. Victor Schertzinger will direct.

"The Toll of the Sea," the Technicolor production in a new natural color process which was first shown publicly at the Rialto Theatre, New York, has received the highest praise from newspaper critics, who acknowledge the photoplay as marking the highest development of color photography and who lavish equal commendation on its appeal as a dramatic and moving story.

A few extracts from the criticisms of New York newspapers follow:

"The people who have made this new colored picture have done something so beautiful that it is rather awe inspiring and criticizing it is like dissecting a butterfly. Never have we seen such perfect color as this. If this process is not perfect then at least we could find no flaws in it—the perfect picture."—Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.

"Picture of rare beauty—greatest advance made in color photography—scenes of surpassing loveliness. Won a burst of applause from the audience." — Evening Mail.

"Really something quite marvelous. There never has been a full length picture in color which approaches it in effectiveness. The combination of lovely natural color and a touch of courage in faithfulness of play construction makes this a fine picture."—World.

"May be counted as a distinct achievement. Possesses the quality of genuineness and is convincingly acted."—The Times.

"Created a sensation . . . proved fascinating entertainment and won enthusiastic applause."—Telegram.

"Should revolutionize film dramas. It is an achievement in natural color films, and, without doubt, is an advance on all previous attempts at color photography."—New York American.

"It is a distinct step in advance and one which promises much for the future of the motion picture in general. . . . The gasps of delight at the beauty of the pictures were continuous."—Globe.

"The picture, even if shown in the drab greys and whites of an ordinary movie, would have pleased the Rialto patrons, but enhanced as it is with its natural coloring it is infinitely more attractive."—World.

"The Flirt" to Be Shown at Rivoli

"The Flirt," Universal's Jewel production of Booth Tarkington's celebrated novel, will have its premiere showing in the Rivoli Theatre, New York, during the week of December 24—Christmas Week, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, manager of the Rivoli, was so enthusiastic concerning the prospects of big box office business with "The Flirt," despite the holiday season he arranged for an option on the picture for a second week's showing.

Immediately after the picture's run at the Rivoli, it will be released for general booking. It is scheduled for country-wide release on January 1.

"The Flirt," has been characterized as one of the greatest pictures of the year, by those who have seen it. Not only is it considered to be the film masterpiece of Hobart Henley, who directed it, but it is praised because of its humanness and the fidelity with which Tarkington's characters have been transferred to the screen.

Eileen Percy and Helen Jerome Eddy, the featured players in "The Flirt," will find themselves established as actresses of the highest quality, when this picture has had its country-wide showings. Several other players are destined to become famous by reason of their work in "The Flirt," it is predicted. Among them are George Nichols, who plays the father role, and Buddy Messenger, the youngster who plays the role of the "flirt's" mischievous young brother.

Pick "Lorna Doone" for Benefit

The ministers of the Protestant churches in Albany—thirty in all—have selected Maurice Tourneur's First National release, "Lorna Doone," as the entertainment for their benefit week at the Mark Strand Theatre, Albany, beginning December 11. The proceeds of the benefit are to go toward the quota of the Albany churches for the fund for the colleges of the Orient for women. This is an unusual tribute to "Lorna Doone" and to motion pictures in general.

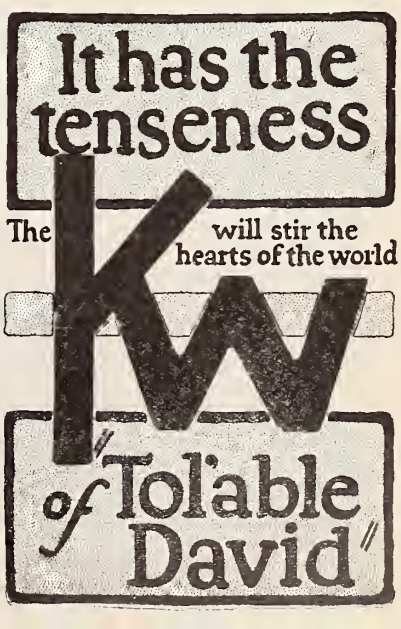
Lloyd Picks Part of Cast Here

Frank Lloyd, who is directing "Within the Law," a Joseph Schenck production, in which Norma Talmadge will star, is taking no chances with his cast of characters. One of the principal reasons for his trip from the coast to New York was to get the best players possible to complete his cast.

He selected some in Los Angeles, but he felt there were some in the East he could use to advantage. Therefore, while here, he signed De Witt Jennings for the part of Inspector Burke, a part Jennings played in the stage version.



Prison Wardens Praise Effect of Motion Pictures on Convicts

Following the release of "Skin Deep," a crook play, First National made a survey by questionnaires to learn the effect of motion pictures on persons whose moral fibre is not of conventional strength. These questionnaires were sent to wardens and chaplains of penitentiaries throughout the United States, and the opinions, without an exception, were to the effect that motion pictures tend to make convicted men more patient in their surroundings; more eager to work, more amenable to discipline, happier and more ambitious to do right.

Convicts are prone to hiss the villain and applaud the righteous hero.

Most of them dislike crook plays and are always eager to see right triumph over wrong.

That, to use the words of Warden Lewis E. Lawes, of Sing Sing Prison, who delighted his charges with "Oliver Twist" as a Thanksgiving film treat, "The cinema undoubtedly is the greatest blessing mankind has been given since Magna Charta. The power of the film is enormous. Constant picture-going creates a brain activity which leads to a knowledge of things along other lines; it creates a demand for books, a wish for thorough scientific knowledge."

Warden Robert J. McKenty, of the Eastern State Penitentiary, writes:

"We regard motion pictures in this institution as the highest type of entertainment. The benefit derived for the men therefrom cannot be measured. The motion picture has brought the outer world. society, into their midst. Hence, 'Stone walls do not a prison make'."

There is a note of pathos in some of the replies. Warden W. H. Martin, of the Arkansas State Penitentiary, states:

"We have no amusements or school facilities in this institution."

Warden Sanders, of the State Penitentiary at Columbia, S. C., declares:

"I am sorry, but we are not fortunate enough to have motion pictures in our institution."

The wardens and chaplains of penitentiaries where films are shown are warm in their praise of the motion picture industry for what one offical terms "Liberality in helping bring the outside world to men in despair." An official of one of the biggest government penitentiaries wrote First National, in behalf of the prisoners, asking for a program of pictures that will successfully entertain during the winter months, adding: "The moving picture seems to be the only satisfactory answer to our problems."

J. C. Harrison, chaplain of the State Penitentiary at Montgomery, Ala., says of motion pictures that "their effect on convicts is better than that of music. Many instances in which convicts have been influenced to do good."

Thomas H. Rynning, warden of the State Prison at Florence, Arizona, says the inmates "like dramas above other plays, comedies next and melodramas third," and adds that he finds "motion pictures very effective as helpful factor in administration."

"Trifling Women" Making Hit

Anything but trifling has been the box-office performance of Metro's Rex Ingram production, "Trifling Women," Metro says.

Metro's evidence of this has come in the form of exhibitors' reports, made either to the company's several exchanges or communicated directly to the home offices in New York.

The following telegram from Morris Fitzer, manager of the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., is said to be representative of such testimonials from the field. "'Trifling Women,'" Mr. Fitzer wired, "surpassed all expectations. The biggest Sunday's business we ever had."

To Show Picture in Christmas Week

What is said to be another record for quick playing dates in England is the showing of Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist" during Pantomime Week (Christmas Week).

This First National attraction was released in the States this fall, but owing to the policy of quick play dates adopted by Ralph J. Pugh, British managing director of Associated First National Pictures, Ltd., the British public will not have to wait a year or eighteen months before seeing the clever Jackie in Dickens' famous character.

Opens Headquarters in Toronto

William Cranston has opened headquarters in Toronto, Canada, for the Ernest Shipman Film Service which will distribute Canadian made pictures throughout the Dominion.

The inaugural booking in Toronto is "The Man from Glengarry" which will be shown at the Regent Theatre, beginning Christmas Week, to be followed by other Canadian made productions.

R. W. Tully to Film "Trilby" for First National Release

Richard Walton Tully is to produce "Trilby" for First National release. Plans for the production of this famous book and stage play were announced this week when it became known that Mr. Tully, who want abroad to attend the opening of "The Masquerader" in London, was in Paris photographing atmosphere scenes of the Latin Quarter for what is claimed will be his most pretentious work.

Out on the coast the Tully organization is actively preparing the ground work for "Trilby" so that as soon as Mr. Tully returns to the coast he will be ready to start filming this big production.

"Trilby" as a stage play was one of the great successes of its day and it has had successful revivals. Mr. Tully plans to put on the screen a lavish, powerfully dramatic picture of the story.

He has already chosen some of his cast, but will not announce names until his return to this country. It is hinted on the coast that he may bring a star from Europe to portray the title role, but it was known before he departed that he had several American women of fame under consideration.

Another big choice still to be made, or perhaps it is better to state, still to be announced, is that of the man to enact the difficult but greatly desired role of Svengali.

First National is counting on this Tully production as one of its most important next year releases. It is expected to be one of the outstanding 1923 attractions. The story is known internationally. It will have a big cast and Mr. Tully is known to be ready to put all of his resources behind it.

When She Asks You Again

That flapper who always picks an aisle seat at the rear of the house is going to ask you "What is Owen Moore going to be in next?" and "Is Mary Carr going to be in another picture soon?"

Her mother and her brother want to know things and the theatre manager who can answer them is going to make boosters for his house.

Moving Picture World caters to this need for information in "News from the Producers." One man has an "Answer Box" where questions dropped in by patrons are put with replies in an envelope addressed to the querist. That brings back the want-to-know crowd—and they talk for you.

Preacher Praises First National Film

Whenever H. E. Browne, manager of the T. and D. Theatre at San Jose, Cal., gets a picture he likes himself he invites Dr. Charles Pease, minister of the gospel in San Jose, who in addition to his pastoral work writes for the San Jose Evening News. He asked Dr. Pease to see "Kindred of the Dust," a First National release. Dr. Pease liked "Kindred of the Dust" so much that, as he told Mr. Browne, he "just had to write about it."

In sending the article to First National, Mr. Browne wrote:

"Read this and weep, for one can't buy this kind of publicity."

Dr. Pease began his article with:

"You will want to see 'Kindred of the Dust' at the T. and D. because it is a remarkably good story, admirably done for the screen. There is much about the picture to gratify the critic and plenty of human interest to please everybody—and his wife. Excellent judgment has been shown in the screen version. Such departures as have been taken from the story as written (by Peter B. Kyne) have in no way detracted from the force of it. . . . For one departure from the original I was thankful. The written story recovers the 'lost documents' to clean Nan's name from its fancied shame. The screen version is stronger.

"Take it all in all, 'Kindred of the Dust' is one of the finest pictures that has ever been shown here."

Browne adds, in his note, "Business was great all week because of this unsolicited story."

Metro's Next Two Month's Offerings One Big Picture After Another, Says Atkinson

"Not Ready-Mades, But Custom-Made" Production, States Firm's General Manager

Business life for the exhibitor during the next two months is going to be just one big attraction after another in so far as Metro's offerings are concerned.

This is the gist of a statement given out this week at the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, in New York, by William E. Atkinson, general manager.

Summarizing Mr. Atkinson's outline of the schedule for December and January there appears to be, in addition to the current Metro successes, no less than a dozen pictures of exceptional entertainment value in the immediate offing.

Grouped about the junction of the year 1922 with the year 1923 are the Metro-SL special production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," Laurette Taylor in "Peg o' My Heart," the sensational Technicolor picture, "The Toll of the Sea"; Ben Ames Williams' sea drama, "All the Brothers Were Valiant"; the Reginald Barker production, "Hearts Aflame"; Robert Z. Leonard's presentation of a new Mae Murray picture, "Jazzmania"; the Fred Niblo production of "The Famous Mrs. Fair"; Viola Dana's latest comedy of youth, "Calico and Romance," and, somewhat later, Rex Ingram's production, "The Passion Vine." In addition to these features are several Bull Montana and Stan Laurel comedies — short subjects of novel appeal, which, if they come up to the performances of their predecessors, will prove invariably welcome to audiences.

"Making motion pictures," said Mr. Atkinson, "may be likened to making a suit of clothes. There are two distinct sorts of clothes: the factory-made and the custom-made. The factory-made motion picture has done more harm to the industry than any other element. The public needs not so much to be protected against sensational pictures as against die-cut pictures. No man needs to be warned against wearing a black-and-white checked dinner coat—and that's sensational enough. But if there are too many ready-mades in the market the buyer—who is the theatre-goer — becomes reluctant about spending money for something that gives him only mediocre satisfaction.

"Metro has not only long since realized that the custom-made movie is the desirable one, but it has insisted, in translating this observation into action, that, in making pictures of distinction, all elements must be of the first grade.

"In clothes there are four things to watch for: the quality of the goods, the design, the workmanship and the fit. It is the same with pictures. The quality of the goods is the cast; the design is the story; the workmanship is found in the scenario and direction, and the fit is the suitability to the box office. There are other elements which enter into the making of a season's output: variety and originality. No one wants half a dozen suits of the same pattern, and no one wants a suit made over from some one else's.

"Going over the Metro releases for the next two months or so the showman can check up and observe that the pictures mentioned conform to the necessities of success as entertainment.

"Take, first, 'Quincy Adams Sawyer,' the Metro-SL special. The cast is little short of astonishing—Blanche Sweet, John Bowers, Lon Chaney, Barbara La Marr, Louise Fazenda, Hank Mann, June Elvidge, Edward Connelly, Joseph Dowling, Elmo Lincoln, and several others as well known. The story is the most famous home-folks romance ever written — Charles Felton Pidgin's novel. The scenario is by Bernard McConville, who did 'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court' and other pictures as successful. Clarence G. Badger, director of the picture, had much to do with the popularity of the series of Will Rogers pictures, such as 'Jubilo,' and others. The picture is clean; it's funny; it's human, and it has the biggest dramatic punch at the climax I've ever seen.

"Right after 'Quincy Adams Sawyer' comes 'Peg o' My Heart,' with Laurette Taylor in the star role. This actress, one of the most distinguished of American stage stars, has heretofore refused all offers of an appearance on the screen; and it is doubtful whether, had it not been in the character of Peg, her most famous role, she would have ever consented to act before the camera. The play itself is undoubtedly the most successful the modern stage has seen. Still being performed, its total number of presentations has passed the 15,000 mark. America, England, France, Italy, Spain, Australia, South Africa, Holland, the Scandinavian countries, cities in the Orient—all have seen 'Peg o' My Heart' in the theatre. In play form it has been uniformly a hit, and all doubt as to its faithful reproduction in pictures is dissipated by the fact that the author—J. Hartley Manners — was present at the Metro studios throughout the making of the film. The scenario is by Mary O'Hara, who did the continuity for Rex Ingram's 'The Prisoner of Zenda.' The direction is King Vidor's.

"Metro is privileged at this time, too, to issure a picture which marks as new an era in progress as did the Wright brothers' flights several years ago. The release is the Technicolor picture, 'The Toll of the Sea,' the first color picture to prove realistic. It is the result of seven years' experiment and invention in color photography — sixty patents protect it—and one only has to glance at the notices in the New York papers to know that it is a success. Nor is it merely scenic; the metropolitan press commented no less favorably upon the interest in the story itself than upon the superiortiy of the color process over all others.

"These are but the first of the big ones. Next in line comes Ben Ames Williams' great sea story, 'All the Brothers Were Valiant,' produced by Irvin V. Willat, who has a reputation for knowing how to make sea stories, and who proves that reputation merited in this one. The cast includes Lon Chaney, Billie Dove and Malcolm McGregor. The scenario is Julian Josephson's.

"Following this is Reginald Barker's production, 'Hearts Aflame,' a tremendous thing—not only filled with the most human, vital drama, but presenting on the screen perhaps the most remarkable scenes of catastrophe, such as a great fire and an earthquake, ever done. Robert Z. Leonard, who directs Mae Murray, and who presents this star's pictures, wires us that the newest one, 'Jazzmania,' is going to make 'Broadway Rose,' 'Fascination' and 'Peacock Alley' look like primer stuff. We don't see how it can be done, but Mr. Leonard ought to know.

"To all intents, too, Fred Niblo's first production for Metro, now being made at the Louis B. Mayer studios, is going to be even better than the play upon which it was founded — James Forbes's New York dramatic hit, 'The Famous Mrs. Fair.' Harry Beaumont has finished directing Viola Dana in a new comedy of youth, 'Calico and Romance,' and it's more than up to the record of earlier ones. And down in Florida Rex Ingram has about completed the outdoor scenes of his newest, 'The Passion Vine,' from a story of the South Seas by John Russell. The author, by the way, has been with the Ingram company throughout the work to aid Mr. Ingram in obtaining absolute fidelity of atmosphere and customs and native life in Samoa. Playing in the picture are Ramon Novaro, Alice Terry, Harry Morey, Edward Connelly, and others whose names mean money at the box office.

"In addition to the feature-length pictures Metro is going to have ready more of the highly successful Bull Montana comedies, produced by Hunt Stromberg; and of the Stan Laurel series, made by Amalgamated Productions. They've been getting the laughs and the receipts, and the ones to come are even better.

"The Metro offerings in sight make it look to us that life for the exhibitor of them is going to be just a routine of cashing in on one big picture after another."

Fox Announcements for Week of Dec. 16

Fox Film Corporation announces a program of two star features, two star-comedy specials, a Lee Kid re-issue, a Sunshine Comedy and a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon for release during the week of December 16.

"Lights of New York," the special production, directed by Charles J. Brabin, which was originally scheduled for distribution October 22, was released December 10. This is the last of the scries of eight specials announced by Fox Film Corporation early this year to be issued to the exhibition field.

For the present week, John Gilbert will be seen in "A California Romance," directed by Jerome Storm. The story is by Charles Banks. On December 24, "Pawn Ticket 210," starring Shirley Mason, will be released.

"The Cyclist," a Clyde Cook two-reeler, will be ready December 24. Al St. John will be seen in "The Alarm," on December 17. The Sunshine Comedy is "A Poor Fish" and the Mutt and Jeff Cartoon "Jim Jams."

Records Broken by Pathe's "Dr. Jack"

With respect to "Dr. Jack," Pathe reports that exhibitors, patrons and reviewers are "sold" in the fullest meaning of the term. The statement is made that booking contracts for Harold Lloyd's new feature comedy accepted at the home office up to December 6 broke all records for any type of picture, and that no section of the country is omitted from this claim.

An extraordinary number of extended runs of "Dr. Jack" at important houses throughout the United States are reported, says Pathe, to be under negotiation, inspired in many instances by bulletins of the popular furore for the Lloyd comedy in Los Angeles, where the Mission Theatre run is now entering its fifth week. In the smaller cities bookings for an entire week, and longer, by houses which usually limit their feature showings to three or four days, are shown to be surprisingly numerous, it is stated.

Laemmle Flays First Run System as Industry's Greatest Menace

Denunciation of the present method of first run showings and a warning that the first run system is the greatest menace to the business, are contained in a statement just made public by Carl Laemmle, head of the Universal organization. The statement is a verbatim copy of a letter written recently to an exhibitor who solicited Mr. Laemmle's personal views on the first run situation. Mr. Laemmle's answer impressed him so forcibly, he urged the Universal head to carry the same message to every exhibitor.

"You are making the mistake of your life if you are booking your pictures according to what the first run house in your territory is showing!

"You know as well as I do that nearly every first run house in the United States and Canada is controlled, either by some producing company or by some distributing concern, and you know mighty well that the purpose of controlling first run houses is to exploia pictures there so you will book them.

"In the great majojrity of cases nowadays, the quality of a picture as precious little to do with the case. If a company produces a picture and the same company owns or controls theatres, it is going to run that picture in those theatres for the sake of the impression it will make upon you!

"There was a time, when first run houses were really owned by individuals, that the first run meant something. In those days, if the man who owned the theatre and made his living out of it picked out a picture to exhibit, it was safe bet for you to follow his lead and book the same picture.

"Evidently 'them days is gone forever.'

"Today, in most cases, first run does not mean first run but it simply means first exploitation.

"I know what I'm talking about, because the Universal in its time has tried out the scheme of controlling a handful of theatres in order to exploit pictures. The only place we ever tried the stunt was in cities where Universal pictures were frozen out of first runs because competitors controlled all the good houses in the zone. The only place where Universal will ever own or control a theatre is in such cities as that! Heaven knows, he want to stick to the producing and distributing end of the business and never compete with our own customers but in a few cities we have been driven into the theatre end of the business in self-defense.

"Therefore, I am speaking as an exhibitor as well as a producer when I tell you that in all except a mighty few instances first runs are bunk. They are the greatest menace to the business and they are a double menace to you, because they not only compete with you but they mislead you into booking pictures that you should not book.

"There is only one safe booking system and that is all summed up in the Universal slogan, 'Look before you book.' I have been telling you this for years. It is even truer today than when I first told you.

"If Universal has no first run in your territory, you know why. It is not because of the quality of the pictures. It is because the people in control of the first run houses are not running their theatres for profit but for exploitation of their own pictures in the hope that you will book them. That's where the profit comes in.

"Remember:—Nowadays most first runs are pure punk!"

Title of Picture Is Changed

The new Syracuse Motion Pictures Co., feature starring Henry Hull and Mary Thurman, which is now in production under the working title of "Midnight," has been definitely titled "Through the Skylight."

Director Hamilton Smith reports rapid progress on the feature which will be handled through Producers Security Corporation.

"Daddy" Is Jackie's Next

"Daddy" will be Jackie Coogan's next First National release. It is being booked now for February showing. Jackie has started another under the direction of Eddie Cline.

Falkner Appointed

The home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation reports that G. A. Falkner has been appointed branch sales manager of their Washington, D. C., office. He replaces Sam A. Galanty, who has resigned.

Works on Another

B. B. Schulberg announces that the shooting of "The Scarlet Lily," Katherine MacDonald's starring vehicle for First National release, has been completed under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

Flagg Praises Highly Doug's "Robin Hood"

James Montgomery Flagg, artist and student of the technique of motion pictures, recently saw Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," a United Artists release, which is having a record-breaking run at the Lyric Theatre, New York. He was so impressed that he wrote to the New York Times as follows:

"I don't owe Doug Fairbanks a cent nor do I want anything he has, but I would like to compliment him in print on his 'Robin Hood.' Do you mind?

"I was nuts on 'The Three Musketeers,' but when I sat in on 'Robin Hood' nothing but superlatives expressed my appreciation. I had a hunch when that huge drawbridge was lowered right out into the audience at the opening shot that Romance would pour over it—and it did. The picture is a gorgeous delight from start to end—the burly ruffian King Richard gnawing on the hind leg of a sheep, or whatever it was, while he watched the tourney—the wonderfully satisfying villainy of Prince John—the winsome frailness of the Lady Marian—the fairyland beauty of the ladies in waiting as they threw themselves at Huntingdon—just as they do today at Earls and such—the brilliant magnificence of the scenes at the jousting—the wonderful castle—the gigantic curtain, a mile or so long, that 'Robin Hood' slid down to escape John's retainers—the mystic forest with the beautiful giant trees—the sunlight and the velvet shadows where the robber band hid—the pitiful tragedy of the court jester done with the impressiveness of superb art—the thousand satisfying niceties of direction—and last but first, the inimitable Doug as the gayest and most chivalrous and humorous and astonishing 'Robin Hood' imaginable!

"It is one of the few really great pictures I have seen on the screen, and I hope everybody who loves fairy tales, adventure, romance and beauty will see it, no matter what their ages or sex, or whether they believe in the Republican Party or Bacardi cocktails or Postum, or blanket legislation for women or Santa Claus, or bran on their oatmeal, or anything, because they will be thrilled in spite of themselves."

J. N. Naulty Joins Distinctive

Mr. J. N. Naulty has become affiliated with Distinctive Pictures Corporation in the capacity of studio manager, it is announced by Arthur S. Friend, president of the company.

Mr. Naulty entered the motion picture industry in 1898 with the original Edison Company in West Orange, N. J.

Fox Music Lauded by Noted Composer

Eastwood Lane, one of America's foremost composers, in a letter to Mr. William Fox, gave an unsolicited testimonial to the musical arrangements used at the Astor Theatre, New York, where "The Town That Forgot God," the Fox special, is now in the sixth week of an indefinite engagement.

Mr. Lane, whose letter follows, is the author of "The Sleepy Hollow Suite," "Five American Dances" and "The Adirondack Sketches."

"There is a world old dispute among musicians as to the relative merits of absolute music and program music. The academicians have always sneered at the latter—even Wagner did not convince them. The pure classicist resents any assistance in the shape of descriptive notes or even a title: he wants to weave his own dreams in his own way. In spite of the extreme contempt in which program music has been held by some, however, the leit motif idea continues to grow in favor and there seems to be ample reason for this. A few evenings ago this was emphasized to the writer's satisfaction at the Astor Theatre.

"I am not a movie fan—in fact 'The Town That Forgot God' is the third feature film (is that the term?) that I have seen. Naturally the music interested me very much; arranged, according to the program, by Mr. Erno Rapee. This gentleman knows a great deal about music. He recognizes a very important fact; that the emotional appeal of music is in direct ratio to the musical sophistication of the listener.

"But the picture. After alternating light and shadow, having to do with relatively quiet phases of rural life, there suddenly sounds a more portentious note—a smouldering, ominous undertone suggesting a vague terror. I partly realize that the orchestra is playing the awesome opening bars of the 'Erl King.' Schubert indeed had the program music idea when he wrote this great dramatic song. Does the audience recognize the music? Better, they feel it without recognizing it.

"The music was brass and percussion, but now one floats along on a lovely melody for strings. What were they playing during the storm? I have no idea. The storm was the music, the music the storm. The program music idea. Mr. Erno Rapee surely believes in Wagner."

F. B. O. Production "Thelma" Meets Demand for High Class Society Film

Jane Novak's Most Pretentious Picture Is Based on Marie Corelli's Novel

The accomplishment of Chester Bennett in producing "Thelma" has been acclaimed, in the few weeks it has been before the trade and the public, as one of the best examples of a combination of dramatic values with pictorial beauty. The consensus of opinion is unanimous—"Thelma" definitely establishes Jane Novak as a high grade actor, and places its director, Mr. Bennett, among the ranks of the screen's greatest directors.

Mr. Bennett, six months ago, first announced that he had acquired the screen rights to "Thelma," Marie Corelli's most famous novel, and the book which first brought her world-wide prominence. The book had a circulation on its first printing which exceeded at that time anything ever given a novel. Its daring and vivid characterizations immediately caused a maelstrom of discussion, and later, when dramatized, "Thelma" was one of the stand-bys of stock companies throughout the country. It is probable that every town that has ever housed a stock or repertoire company has seen "Thelma" enacted on the stage at least once every two years.

The locale of the story is in a Norwegian village and in London. This diversity of settings permits Miss Novak to appear first as a Norwegian peasant maid, and later as the favorite of London society. For the first sequence an entire village, extending for several blocks, was especially built. It was constructed near the Pacific Ocean, several miles north of Santa Monica, where the scene strongly resembles that of Norway. Boats of special Norwegian design were also built for the ocean scenes of the production.

The many readers of the book will find that Miss Novak is the "Thelma" of Marie Corelli's novel in every way. Her long blonde hair, which braided, reaches below her waist, and her fair complexion, makes her an ideal type for the part. It was, in fact, her personal fitness for the role that induced Mr. Bennett to select this story for picturization. When Antony Anderson, a well known painter and art critic, first met Miss Novak a year ago, he stated that her exquisite coloring and tall, regal beauty represented the exact type necessary to properly envision a daughter of the old Norwegian Viking kings. This hint to Mr. Bennett resulted in a painstaking search for a suitable screen story representing a Norwegian heroine, which ended with the purchase of "Thelma."

The second sequence, which is laid in London, was taken advantage of by Mr. Bennett, who incorporated in it one of the most elaborate fashion displays ever seen on the screen. This was a distinct innovation in a Jane Novak picture inasmuch as she has heretofore appeared most often in Northwest and outdoor pictures of all descriptions. Miss Novak found the magnificent sets depicting a Parisian modiste establishment and a London drawing room in distinct contrast to her usual log cabin. The most gorgeous and beautiful creations that could be found with a valuation of more than $25,000 were secured to make Miss Novak's first appearance before the camera in beautiful gown really an auspicious event. Arrangements were made with Vogue, foremost Pacific Coast stylist, for the loan of their most costly up-to-date and exclusive patterns of women's wear from Paris to be worn by the members of Miss Novak's company during the society scenes; while Miss Novak wore her own latest creations and importations.

Willard George, furriers to the few of unlimited means, furnished the furs, including a Hudson seal cape, a squirrel cape and a Beige fox, the total of which alone represented more than $15,000. Several plain-clothes detectives were engaged to keep guard over the gowns and furs day and night while the scenes were being filmed.

In speaking of the fitness of Miss Novak for the role, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD reviewer stated: "It is doubtful if a better choice than Jane Novak could have been made for the flowerlike role of Thelma; in fact, she seems the embodiment of the author's idea. Bert Sprotte gives a striking performance as Olaf, her proud old father, a vigorous man who is proud of his descent from a line of Norse kings and still worships their god, Odin." In conclusion, the reviewer states: "The fact that this production is based on a standard book which for a number of years has been very widely read all over the world, is an exploitation point which the exhibitor should not overlook as there are a large number of persons in every town who will want to see the story in its film form."

Lillian Gale in the Motion Picture News wrote: "From a production standpoint, 'Thelma' will win new friends, since necessary background and appropriate sets have been provided in addition to the well balanced cast selected. Jane Novak delivers a splendid characterization of the old fashioned Norwegian girl and assumes the role of Lady Errington with admirable poise. The direction and photography are above the average and in view of the mass of detail identified with the original story it may be said that "Thelma" is a splendid screen version of Marie Corelli's popular novel.

The Film Daily reviewer said, under the heading of "You can please a good majority" that Director Bennett secured many ideal shots for his exteriors are very well done. Excellent photography is another good feature of the picture, stated the reviewer.

Many reports of big bookings on "Thelma" are now reaching the F. B. O. home office and branch managers everywhere state that the two previous Chester Bennett productions, "The Snow Shoe Trail" and "Colleen of the Pines," have greatly increased the star's following.

Big Cast Supports Jane Novak in "Thelma"

A cast that is far stronger than those generally known as "all-star" casts supports Jane Novak in "Thelma," her third production for Film Booking Offices of America, produced under the direction of Chest Bennett production. Every role in the play is filled by a player established standing and popular appeal.

In the leading male role, opposite the star, Vernon Steele appears to excellent advantage. Barbara Tennant, one of the most beautiful leading women of the screen, appears as "Britta," an important role. The other outstanding members of the cast, all of whom are well known in the picture world, are Wedgewood Nowell, Harry Lounsdale, June Elvidge, Harvey Clark, Bert Sprotte, Gordon Mullen, Jack Rollens and Peter Burke. Little Virginia Novak completes the cast.

Put Over Big "Word-of-Mouth" Exploitation Stunt for Doug

An excellent "word-of-mouth" exploitation stunt for Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," which is showing at the Lyric Theatre, New York, recently was put over by Pete Smith, publicity representative for Mr. Fairbanks.

Mr. Smith arranged with the New York Globe, which specializes on educational matters, to act as host for 600 public-school children in witnessing a special performance of Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood." The Globe detailed T. W. Metcalfe, its edueational editor, to work with Mr. Smith and John Fairbanks, personal representative of the star.

For more than a week Mr. Metcalfe ran advance announcements of the special showing and notified every public school teacher in Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn that children with the best records of consistent attendance at school would be eligible to see the picture. At first it was figured that about 400 school children would attend, but numerous "ties" in good attendance developed and more than 1,500 names of eligibles were submitted.

Mr. Smith, keeping in mind that he was building up "word-of-mouth" publicity for showings of the picture by exhibitors, limited the number of youngsters to 600. This gave about two classes to each school. Next he deeided to have a big parade of the children up Broadway and, a permit for that having been obtained, he arranged for a detail of 100 Boy Scouts to escort the children to the Lyric Theatre. The Scouts also furnished a fife and drum eorps. Through his assistant, J. M. Loughborough, Mr. Smith also obtained a detachment ot Regular Army soldiers from Governor's Island, wearing helmets and earrying rifles, belts and bayonets.

The parade started from Madison Square and proceeded up Broadway to Forty-second street, thence to the Lyrie Theatre. All along the line of mareh big crowds gathered to watch the children. When they crossed Thirty-fourth street at Broadway, one of the biggest traffic centers in the world, there was a terrific jam and thousands flocked around the marchers to see what it was all about. They found out from the following huge sign which was carried by three Boy Scouts:

N. Y. Public School Pupils.
We Are Going To See
DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS
in
"ROBIN HOOD"
at the LYRIC THEATRE
As Guests of the Globe.

At the theatre the Boy Scouts acted as ushers. As soon as the pupils had entered they sang "The Star Spangled Banner." Then the United States soldiers were introduced to the youngsters as representing the modern fighter, compared to fighters of the Middle Ages, whom they would see in the picture.

Next John J. Ryan, president of the Board of Education, spoke to the children. Then the following telegram to the juvenile guests from Douglas Fairbanks was read:

"Today you will see a picture play which shows how people lived in the Middle Ages. You will see warriors starting out on a crusade. You will see treachery, heroism, the true love of a brave man for a beautiful girl. And you will see how bravery and virtue triumphed over evildoers, just as those traits triumph today and always will triumph. In 'Robin Hood' you will find a lesson. It is: 'No matter how difficult life may seem always be true to yourself and loyal to your friends and you are then sure to succeed.' Hard work is what wins and laughter is the salve that heals all heart bruises and disappointments. I am with you in spirit today while you see me on the screen."

After the applause that greeted the reading of this message had subsided the picture was shown.

Goldwyn to Open New Haven Branch

Goldwyn announces the openin; of a new branch exchange on De cember 18. It will be in New Haven Conn., where quarters have bee obtained in the Kilfeather Building 134 Meadow street.

A. Interrante, formerly sales rep resentative for Goldwyn in the Con nectieut territory, has been promote to be resident manager of thi branch.

Completes Cast for "The White Frontier"

After a eareful combing of the field of available players, both in the East and in the West, Allen Holubar has finally completed the selection of the east which will support Dorothy Phillips in "The White Frontier." This pieture is based on an original novel by Jeffery Deprend, and was adapted by Violet Clark.

The exterior shots are now being made at Truckee, Cal., after which the company will go to Montreal and the Canadian backwoods, returning thence to the United Studios (M. C. Levee, president) to film the interior scenes of this stirring tale.

"The White Frontier" will follow "Hurricane's Gal" as the second Holubar-Phillips production to be distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated.

Judge Doroscher, the male lead of the story, will be played by Lewis Dayton, hitherto unknown to American audiences, but established as a big favorite abroad. He brings to the American screen an artistry and a forcefulness of technique which, it is believed, will speedily make him a screen favorite here as he has been abroad.

Mayme Kelso, one of our best known character actresses, plays Nanette, the confidante of the stellar role. Miss Kelso has been in and out of the theatrical world for many years.

George Seigman, soon to be seen as Bill Sykes in "Oliver Twist," plays Scarborough, the heavy in "The White Frontier."

Robert Anderson, another film favorite, plays the important role of Dr. Emile Molleur, the man who befriends the heroine in her flight from slanderous tongues.

Inez Seabury was a child actress in 1912, appearing on the stage for David Belasco in "Madam Butterfly," and starring in her own company with "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Mary Jane's Pa," and similar vehicles. At four she commenced her screen career with D. W. Griffith in "The Battle," an early Biograph release, and while at that studio supported most of the favorites of the time.

William A. Orlamond, another favorite character actor of such roles as the director in "Doubling for Romeo," Nordling in "The Sin Flood" and M. Duval in "Camille," plays the role of the stranger.

Geno Corrado will be seen as Tetreau. Here is an interesting illustration of the great training enjoyed by the comedy actor. Sinee an Eugene Correy this player was in numerous Christie Comedies.

The role of Yvonne Desmarest, which will be portrayed by the star, gives Miss Phillips an opportunity for a characterization which will be entirely different from her past contributions to the silver sheet. The story is of a girl who has become entangled in the web of circumstanees surrounding a murder of which she is an innocent witness.

This experience drives her to a determination to forsake the society of all human beings, and, accompanied only by a faithful nurse, to dwell in the untracked forests of Northwestern Canada. There many adventures befall her which form the interesting plot of this story.

Critics Give Lloyd Film High Praise

Los Angeles newspaper reviews of the Mission Theatre premiere of Harold Lloyd's new five-reel eomedy, "Dr. Jack," are pervaded by an atmosphere of unqualified appreciation, according to Pathe. Doris Anderson, writing in the Los Angeles Examiner, says in the eourse of a lengthy artiele:

"Nothing is more significant of the increasing popularity of the motion picture comedy and its laudable development from pies to profundity than the advent of a Harold Lloyd picture. The opening of 'Dr. Jack,' his latest, at the Mission Saturday was the occasion of Managing Director Harry David roping off his lobby for the crowd and of great rejoicing.

"This picture is another score for Lloyd. 'Dr. Jack' is a splendid production."

"For that tired, run-down theatre-going feeling—'Dr. Jack,' alias Harold Lloyd," says the Los Angeles Evening Herald. "One dose of the effervescent, electric, effulgent, energetic, edifying, ecstatic, ennui-destroying film comedian and you are at once a new fan again."

Katherine MacDonald Puts Prominent Cast in "Refuge"

Katherine MacDonald is being surrounded by an unusual cast for her next First National attraction, "Refuge," described as one of the most colorful and thrilling stories it has been her good fortune to obtain.

The company that will support Miss MacDonald, according to an announcement just made by B. B. Schulberg, will include such well-known screen favorites as Hugh Thompson, Arthur Edmund Carewe, Victor Potel, Fred Malafesta, Eric Mayne, Grace Morse, Matilde Brundage, Gordon Russell and J. Gunnis Davis.

Although several of the names have been seen in electric lights as stars or picture players in their own productions, all were selected solely because of their fitness for the dramatic roles provided in this original story from the pen of Lois Zellner.

All of the action of the story is crowded into a period of twenty hours, but Miss Zellner and Director Victor Schertzinger have combined to make this the most thrilling day it has ever been the lot of any mortal to experience.

The story is laid in a fictitious kingdom in Central Europe—one of those fascinating places where romance and adventure are popularly supposed to thrive as readily today as in the distant past.

A. H. Sawyer Begins on New Picture

Following the great reception accorded "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the Metro special produced by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin with a cast of stellar names, Mr. Sawyer has commenced production of the next S-L Picture at the Metro West Coast Studios. This film is an elaboration of the well known vaudeville playlet, "Your Friend and Mine," written by Willard Mack, author of "Kick In," and other stage successes. It will be directed by Clarence Badger, under the supervision of Mr. Sawyer.

A cast even bigger in reputation than that gathered together for "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will portray the various leading roles in "Your Friend and Mine." Willard Mack, a stage star in his own right, will head it. The production will be released some time in February.

Leah Baird Feature Is Finished

Word was received from the west coast this week that work on "When Civilization Failed," in which Leah Baird is featured, has been finished, even to the insertion of all sub-titles, and that the film will be shipped to Associated Exhibitors soon.

The shipment will not be made though until the picture has been shown, unannounced, in several theatres in Hollywood and a number of towns near Los Angeles.

British Prize Winner Here to Make Productions with Norma Talmadge

Norma and Constance Talmadge and their prize winning protegé, Margaret Leahy, are off to the coast this week to start work on new First National releases.

Miss Leahy, a London girl of Irish parentage, arrived here on the Aquitania, December 1, after a triumphal tour of personal appearances throughout England and Scotland There are many prize winners in pictures in this country, Leatrice Joy, who is appearing in Marshall Neilan's "Minnie," a First National release, is one, but the conditions that surround this British prize winner make her important to the industry. She is to have a part in Norma Talmadge's new picture, "Within the Law," which Frank Lloyd has already begun putting on celluloid.

She has had international exploitation and is, therefore, important to exhibitors in this country in general, but she is, of course, particularly interesting to the British exhibitors. For Miss Talmadge backed by Joe Schenck, intends to make of this pretty Britisher, a star whose pictures will have an international sale just as do the Talmadge pictures.

Miss Leahy was chosen from 80,000 girls, who entered the contest conducted by the Daily Sketch in London. This 80,000 was gone over carefully and from this number, one hundred girls were picked by twenty committees, composed of mayors, mayoresses, members of parliament, newspaper editors, exhibitors, etc., throughout all Great Britain and Ireland. The hundred girls, called in London, "Norma Talmadge's Lovely Hundred," were brought to London and there the choice dwindled to twenty. These were "tested" in a studio and the tests screened. Three great possibilities stood out. The choice was a difficult one, but Miss Leahy finally won.

Miss Leahy was to have come to this country with the Talmadges, but a few wise exhibitors decided the girl would help business and induced Mr. Schenck to allow her to make a tour of the provinces.

Probably the big work, for the present, of "educating" Miss Leahy will fall on Frank Lloyd, who will direct Miss Talmadge. She will be in the hands of a countryman, for Mr. Lloyd is a Glasgow man.

Selden Saw Need of First Class Stories

In selecting the Paul Dresser song, "On the Banks of the Wabash," for Madge Evans's first production for Associated Exhibitors, Edgar Selden, of Worth-While Pictures Corporation, adhered to his policy of obtaining stories or plays of proved entertainment and box-office value, Associated Exhibitors says.

"Ten years ago, when I began to take an active interest in motion pictures," said Mr. Selden, "I recognized quickly the importance of the story on the screen. With very few exceptions pictures projected at that time were barren even of primitive plot, and almost utterly unintelligible both in continuity and construction.

"My particular province was to promote the story. It was uphill work and I met with many discouragements, but I clung to the conviction that the biggest returns eventually would come from the use of the best and finest story material possible to obtain. It is a source of gratification to me that, in the comparatively few years which have intervened, the story has come into its own."

"The Eternal Flame" Breaks Records

Norma Talmadge, in "The Eternal Flame," broke all records for several years at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, for both the first and the second week, according to a letter received by Felix Feist, of the Norma Talmadge forces in New York, from Fred Desberg, general representative of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc. Desberg finished his letter with:

"Furthermore, our patrons are unanimous in their approval of the picture."

Galloway Made Cleveland Office Head

A report comes from the office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that W. O. Galloway has been made office manager of the Cleveland branch, replacing E. R. Little, temporarily assigned. This appointment was effective December 4.

It is also stated that E. H. Steele has become office manager of the Denver branch, effective December 4. He replaces P. G. Morris, who has resigned.

Many Theatres Have Booked This One

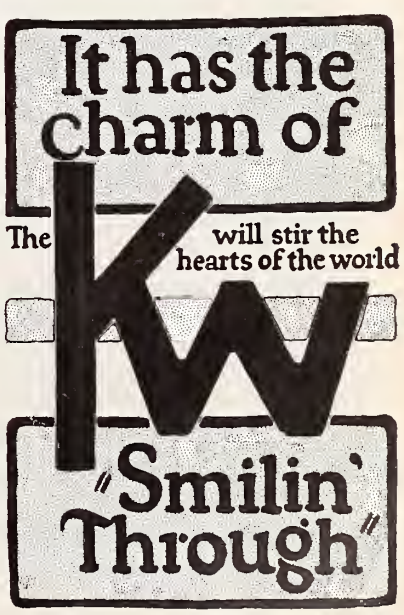
"Conquering the Woman," the Associated Exhibitors' production, which is Florence Vidor's latest starring feature, is now making the round of the Loew Circuit of Greater New York, the Marcus Loew booking department having closed the contract with Lester W. Adler, of Associated's New York exchange.

Exhibitors First

Serving the entire moving picture field, Moving Picture World thinks first of the man whose theatre makes the existence of the industry a triumphant fact.

Proof? Observe the departments conducted by specialists for the exhibitor: "Newest Reviews" and "Pep of the Program" to wise you up on coming features and short subjects; "Selling the Picture to the Public" to give you ideas for pulling patronage—ideas that cost from two dollars up; "Straight From the Shoulder Reports" that tell you how audiences liked pictures and how the pictures pull; "News From the Producers" that keeps you aware of activities that will eventually benefit your bookings; "In The Independent Field" where the newsiest facts about independent production activities is spread before you; "Current and Advance Releases" from which you can tell at a glance the producers' output, star, footage, and when reviewed in Moving Picture World.

That's an array of convincing proof that Moving Picture World is the exhibitor's own trade paper!



Newspapers Praise Arliss Picture

The Distinctive Pictures Corporation production starring George Arliss was given exceptional praise by the Chicago press when it was shown at the Randolph Theatre in the Windy City during the week beginning Sunday, November 19.

Rob Reel, of Chicago Evening American, said: "It is fair enough to say George Arliss is the most popular actor in town. . . .'The Man Who Played God' is a title intriguing enough to entice the man called by many 'the most finished of actors.' It takes an Arliss to portray a role such as this one."

Genevieve Harris, of the Chicago Evening Post, wrote: "'The Man Who Played God' is not a pretentious offering such as 'Disraeli' or 'The Devil,' his previous productions, but is a story refreshingly novel, and it is well produced."

Virginia Dale, of the Chicago Daily Journal: "The altogether magnetic Mr. Arliss takes possession of the Randolph screen in 'The Man Who Played God.' One of the very few persons who transfer themselves successfully from stage to screen and back again, George Arliss has made his voiceless moments count. Not believing he knew all there was in the world about acting he sought to learn more. And, nightly, after the studio's work of the day he saw himself as others were to see him and judged himself more harshly than any one else would have done. . . . The remaining players in the picture are good, and the direction equally so."

The Observer of the Chicago Herald-Examiner: "One leaves the theatre after having seen 'The Man Who Played God' with a feeling of exhaltation, of being better for having seen this film, of good-will toward all mankind. It appeals to all the best there is in you without making you feel that anyone has been preaching to you.

"Any picture or play in which George Arliss appears always leaves you with a gratifying sense of having your artistic and dramatic taste completely satisfied."

Gloria Swanson in "Prodigal Daughters"

Glorious Gloria in the role of a girl of today who has revolted against the time-honored social conventions and ideals of conduct governing the feminine sex—that's "Prodigal Daughters," a Sam Wood production. The theme of the novel by Joseph Hocking, which was adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn, is the revolt of modern woman.

A modern home is disrupted through the reckless whims of its members, who include three women who have cast aside the rigid traditions of propriety. A flapper, a salamander and a socially ambitious mother are caught in a web of unrest and discontent of their own weaving. There is a terrific punch in this picture when Gloria is rescued by airplane from a runaway locomotive. Theodore Roberts and Ralph Graves are in the supporting cast.

Harold Lloyd Film Is in Heavy Demand

The Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors super - attraction, "Grandma's Boy," will furnish one of the chief holiday diversions of thousands of persons throughout the country, Associated Exhibitors says. Exhibitors, as usual, have been alert to secure for the Christmas week showing features as nearly as possible in keeping with the spirit of the season, and large numbers have hit upon "Grandma's Boy," it is stated.

"Our reports show that 'Grandma's Boy' is in heavy demand in picture houses in all parts of the country as the Holiday Week feature," said Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors. "This demand is a very great tribute to this photoplay. To begin with, the autumn season of 1922 has witnessed the release of a larger proportion of outstanding features than ever were released at the outset of any previous season. The exhibitors, then, had a much wider range from which to make their Christmas selections, and that the Harold Lloyd feature should be the choice of such a large number as our contracts indicate is a recognition which we appreciate deeply."

Big Circuit Books "Headless Horseman"

An announcement of unusual interest has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that "The Headless Horseman," based on "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," C. S. Clancy's production featuring Will Rogers as Ichabod Crane, has been booked to play the Crandall Circuit of theatres in Washington, D. C. It is understood that this production has made a good start in the Southern territory, and it is believed that many of the larger and better class of theatres throughout the South will follow in the footsteps of the Crandall organization.

It is also stated that the Pantages Circuit in Minneapolis has also booked "The Headless Horseman." This is of particular interest inasmuch as the Pantages chain of theatres form an important nucleus in that section of the country.

These are only a few of the many bookings that are swamping the home office of the Hodkinson Corporation on Washington Irving's famous classic. It is understood that the officials of the district organization as well as Mr. Clancy himself are very well pleased with the rapid strides forward that this production is making.

Bigger Demand Noted for American Films

The demand for American films and the business of the film industry generally in France, Belgium and Italy is improving. So reports Maurice Gaillot, who represents Pathe Exchange, Inc., in those countries. Mr. Gaillot sailed for France on the Aquitania recently after a short visit to this country, during which he exchanged ideas with officials at the Pathe home office regarding prospects of export of standard and new product.

"In France," said Mr. Gaillot, "the picture business has been poor for some time past, reflecting conditions of general business. Latterly there has been improvement in an encouraging degree, which seems likely to continue, as it appears to be the effect of familiarity with the disturbed financial situation due to unstable rates of exchange and more experience in dealing with this disadvantage."

Picture Is Set for December 24 Release

With release set for December 24, the feature coming as a Christmas gift to the public from Associated Exhibitors, uncommon interest has been aroused among exhibitors, it is stated, in "A Bill of Divorcement," in which Constance Binney is starred.

As a stage production "A Bill of Divorcement," with Allen Pollock starring, played at the Times Square Theatre, New York, during the entire 1921-22 season, and proved one of the outstanding hits of recent years. Since the close of its long run in the metropolis it has continued its successes in a tour of the country, and is now drawing packed houses in Chicago. The adaptation to the screen is said to have been made with remarkable fidelity to the original.

Caldwells to Assist June Mathis

The Goldwyn Pictures Corpo ation announces that Kathari Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell ha been placed under a long-ter contract as personal assistants t June Mathis, who was recenti appointed editorial director of th Goldwyn Studios. They will b in charge of the film editing an art title departments.

This announcement follows th signing of Eric von Strohein Frances Marion and other celeb rities.

Mrs. Hilliker and Capt. Cald well, who are in private life Mr and Mrs. Caldwell, have just ar rived from New York. They ar accompanied by their seven months-old son, H. H. Caldwel Jr., who was born since their las visit to California and who i their proudest production to date

Mrs. Hilliker first made he reputation by the clever title which she wrote for the Chester scenics. By the introduction o humor into these films she in augurated a new school of trave pictures. Since that time she has titled many notable features, including "Passions" and "Theodora." Since the formation of the matrimonial and literary alliance of Hilliker & Caldwell they have written the titles for "The Glorious Adventure," "Free Air," "Rembrandt," and "The Dancer."

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine"

Mary Miles Minter is the star of this picture, which is a screen version of the immortal story of the feul country by John Fox, Jr., read and loved by millions. The scenario is based upon the stage adaptation by Eugene Walters, who wrote "Paid in Full" and "The Easiest Way," and Charles Maigne is the director.

Miss Minter, being a Southern girl, is at home in the type of rugged role in which this picture presents her, and it will be recalled that her greatest success was in "A Cumberland Romance," a story similar in general type. A great supporting cast, headed by Antonio Moreno, former Vitagraph star, was chosen and the production promises to be one of the outstanding hits of the year.

Hughes Making Film for Goldwyn

Rupert Hughes has begun photographing for Goldwyn his screen version of his novel of motion picture life at Hollywood, "Souls for Sale." After shooting on the Goldwyn lot for a week he will take the company of seventy-five persons to Palm Springs, Calif., where the desert scenes will be filmed. Dale Fuller has been added to the cast.

Marshall Neilan is greatly pleased with the exteriors for "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," which his assistant, Frank Urson, and cinematographer David Kesson "shot" in England. Thomas Hardy advised with them on locations so that the scenes were filmed on the exact spots named in the novel.

F. B. O. Presents "Thelma," Based on Marie Corelli's Famous Novel

More Scenes From Constantinople

More scenes from Constantinople picturing important developments in the Near East have been received by Selznick News from E. B. Schoedsack and are included in Selznick News Number 1100. The cameraman was in Constantinople when Abdul Medjid, chosen by the Kemalist Government to replace the Sultan of Turkey as ruler of the Moslems, ascended the ancient throne of the Mahomets.

Revival Released By Select

Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure" is the most recent of the Selznick Pictures Corporation's revivals; the picture was released through all Select branches Sunday, December 10.

Release of Griffith Film Arranged

The immediate release of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" by United Artists Corporation in many states throughout the country is announced by Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists.

This great picture may now be booked through United Artists exchanges for the following states:

New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana, New Jersey, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia and Kentucky.

Students Will View Bible Picture

Through the courtesy of National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., 130 West 46th Street, New York, Columbia University students of the class of Photoplay composition, conducted by Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson, will be given an interesting opportunity, Friday evening, December 15, to view in the Hall of Journalism, a screen production of "The Story of the Old Testament."

Company Cut Off by Snow Storm

As a result of the heavy snow which has blanketed the California Mountains, the Universal production unit headed by Edward Laemmle, which is making "The Oregon Trail," a new historical chapter picture with Art Acord, found itself isolated in the Big Bear Valley region. It was not until the executives at Universal City sent an aeroplane from the Roger Airport Field in Hollywood to carry messages and instructions to the Laemmle unit, that liaison was established by the serial company and its base.

"The Oregon Trail" is expected to be a worthy successor to "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," Universal says.

"Garrison's Finish" Released January 15

Few casts in current motion pictures are made up of such well known screen favorites as that in Jack Pickford's first independent photoplay production, "Garrison's Finish," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, and marking this star's formal return to the films after two years directorial work for his sister, Mary Pickford. "Garrison's Finish" has been set for release January 15.

Almost from top to bottom, every player whose name appears is either a popular screen artist of many years' standing or among the best known of the younger stars, it is stated.

The veteran in the cast is Charles Ogle, who has been continuously on the screen for sixteen years.

Clarence Burton, another star loaned to Mr. Pickford for this one picture, has been long established on the screen as one of the greatest "heavies" ever developed in the silent drama. He plays the villain in "Garrison's Finish."

Another pioneer, although still quite young, is Ethel Grey Terry, who has been before the public professionally ever since she was a babe in arms in dramatic stock.

Tom Prior, also a celebrity of the screen, has done much of his best work while supporting various members of the Pickford family. He played important roles in several Mary Pickford releases.

Among the comparative newcomers who have achieved fame early in their careers is Madge Bellamy, who is Jack Pickford's leading lady in "Garrison's Finish." Two others in this cast who are favorably known are Audrey Chapman and Dorothy Manners.

Earle Will Direct "The Easiest Way"

David O. Selznick, under whose supervision Eugene Walter's "The Easiest Way," starring Theda Bara, is soon to go into production in the East, has announced his selection of Ferdinand Earle to direct the big special photoplay. The contract with Mr. Earle had been pending for some time and was finally closed only a few days ago.

George D. Baker, among the best known of contemporary authors, directors, and scenarists, has been employed by Mr. Selznick to provide the script from which Mr. Earle will work. The actual work of "shooting" will be begun the first week in January.

Paramount and Fox Sign Hope Hampton

Following Hope Hampton's success in "The Light In the Dark," which was released in October by the Associated First National Pictures Corporation, she has decided to appear in more pictures during the coming year than heretofore.

In line with this her first contract has been signed with the Fox Film Corporation by which she will be featured in an all star production to be made in its Eastern studios. Work on this picture will be commenced before the first of the year. Following this Miss Hampton will then go to the Hollywood studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to play the featured role in "Lawful Larceny." Miss Hampton's acceptance of these contracts will not interfere with the productions to be made by the company which has produced her other pictures when suitable material is found, it is stated.

A Fox Release.

MORE AUSTRALIAN EXPLOITATION FOR FOX

This is the front of the Globe Theatre, Sydney, all dressed up to go "Over the Hill." The banner is a wonder and there is a painted scene in the center of the lobby which we like even better.

"Knighthood" Ends Long Run

Owing to the fact that a longe tenancy of the Criterion Theatre cannot be procured, the Cosmo politan Corporation will bring the long run of its picture, "Wher Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, to an end at that theatre on December 30.

With "Knighthood's" closing a the Criterion it will have completed fifteen and a half consecutive weeks at that theatre, for a total of 245 performances in 108 days. For a time four performances a day were given, to accommodate the demand for seats.

Edwards Begins on New Picture

J. Gordon Edwards, who directed "Nero," the giant Fox special of the 1922-23 program at the Fox headquarters in Rome and "The Shepherd King," the date of release of which has not been named, has begun work on a society-melodrama at the New York studios of the corporation.

The story, "The Net," is an adaptation of the famous work of Marvene Thompson. Olga Linek Scholl wrote the scenario. Barbara Castleton, Raymond Bloomer and Albert Roscoe will head the cast.

A Solid Week for Universal Film

W. C. Hermann, sales manager of the Big "U" Exchange, reports a solid two weeks' run of Universal pictures in the Strand Theatre, Yonkers, N. Y. The Strand program for this period includes a Universal-Jewel, several Universal attractions and a varied selection of short subjects. The closing picture was "The Kentucky Derby."

Popular Song for Film Tie-Up

"Human Hearts," the fox trot ballad, written by Vic Nurnberg and Milt Hagen as a tie-up for the Universal-Jewel picture of that name, has been taken up by the orchestras and jazz bands in the leading New York cafes and cabarets, and rapidly is becoming one of the most popular dance melodies, Universal states.

"Gentleman of Leisure" Is Reid's Next

The original story of this play which has been adapted by Albert Shelby Le Vino was written by P. G. Wodehouse and was published in book form under the title, "The Intrusion of Jimmy." It was subsequently dramatized by the author and John Stapleton and was produced on the stage by William A. Brady, with Douglas Fairbanks in the stellar role.

It is a rapid-fire comedy drama about a young man who is hopelessly afflicted with the "go" fever. Finally, on a wager, he disguises himself as a burglar, and getting a real burglar to help him finds himself mixed up in a series of screamingly funny situations.

Fox Has New Set of Six Super Specials as a Second Series for Season 1922-23

Company Calls Attention to Ex cellent Cast in Each Picture

Fox Film Corporation this week makes an announcement of great importance to exhibitors. In January Fox will release a new set of six giant photoplays as a second series of specials for the season of 1922-23. They are: "The Village Blacksmith," "A Friendly Husband," "Paradise Road," "The Face on the Barroom Floor," "The Net," "Does It Pay?"

This announcement, Fox says, gives it the distinction of being the only organization to make public its intentions of releasing a second series of six super-special productions as a supplement to the original program of big feature pictures of the current season. According to the statement, this preparation for release of the second list is the result of the demands made upon the organization by the hundreds of exhibitors who have already benfited from profitable runs with the first group of specials.

Fox states that a large proportion of the important exhibitors in America have already contracted for and played the original set of pictures and are now ready for the additional releases. It is in compliance with this demand that Fox Film Corporation has decided to release at this time six special features announced for distribution early in 1923.

Exhibitors who have already played the entire or greater portion of the first series, which included "The Fast Mail," "Silver Wings" with Mary Carr, "Monte Cristo," "A Fool There Was," "Nero," "My Friend the Devil," "Who Are My Parents?" and "Lights of New York," have been insistent in their demands that the Fox Company does not hold back the specials hinted at in their former announcements, but release these special pictures for immediate play dates now while the season is good.

"The Village Blacksmith," which is a 1923 melodrama directed by Jack Ford, is based upon the famous poem by Henry W. Longfellow. This, the first production mentioned on the list, recently completed a month's run at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York. William Wailing has the role of the blacksmith and has given to the screen a character long honored in the poetry of America. The exceptional cast includes Bessie Love, Virginia Valli, David Butler, George Hackathorne, Gordon Griffith, Tully Marshall and Ralph Yeardsley.

"A Friendly Husband," the feature length comedy starring the agile Lupino Lane, is the second of the series. It was directed by Jack Blystone and is without doubt one of the funniest comedy specials ever offered the exhibitor.

"Paradise Road" is the third. It is an adaptation of the widely-read novel, "The Custard Cup," by Florence Livingston Bingham, and was directed by Herbert Brenon. Mary Carr, who is featured, will be seen in a production which is entirely different from the "mother" story which has made her famous. The character of a woman who possesses the rare quality of always seeing the bright things in life and doing all within her power to help others is that of Mrs. Penfield, "Penzie" of the book. The picture has thrills, mystery and melodrama and presents one of the greatest boat explosions ever filmed.

With Mrs. Carr is an assemblage of excellent actors including Miriam Battista, Peggy Shaw, Ben Lyons, Myrta Bonillas, Jerry Devine, Ernest McKay, Henry Sedley and Frederick Esmelton. Previous mention to "Paradise Road" has been made under the working title of "Penzie."

"The Face on the Barroom Floor," which was formerly announced under the title, "Drink," was also directed by Jack Ford. This is a melodrama. The exterior scenes were all "shot" in an exceptionally picturesque section of the coast, and many of the vistas are on a par with the best of scenics. The story is that of a painter who voluntarily accepts the blame for another man's wrong and who thus loses the one woman he loves. Henry B. Walthall and Ruth Clifford are the leads in a brilliant cast, which also includes Alma Bennet, Walter Emerson, Frederick Sullivan, Novel McGregor, Michael Dark and Fus Saville.

The fifth of the announced series is "The Net," from the story by Marvene Thompson and adapted by Olga Linek Scholl. J. Gordon Edwards, who recently returned from the Fox studios in Rome, Italy, after the completion of "Nero" and "The Shepherd King," the latter of which has not yet been scheduled for release, will direct the super-special. In the cast are Barbara Castleton, Albert Roscoe, Raymond Bloomer, Alma Bennet and a long list of well-known actors. The story is of the society-melodrama type.

"Does It Pay?" is the seventh of the new list and boasts one of the most prominent casts in pictures. It is a comedy-drama of modern life. Hope Hampton heads the cast, in which are Robert T. Haines, Mary Thurman, Florence Short and Peggy Shaw, the famous Follies girl. Charles Horan will direct. The scenario is by Howard Irving Young.

Hergesheimer Story Made Into Picture

"Java Head," adapted by Waldemar Young from the story by Joseph Hergesheimer, author of "Tol'able David," is said to be one of Paramount's biggest pictures of the season.

The story is laid back in 1850, with the quaint old city of Salem, Mass., as the chief locale. The action, however, carries half way 'round the world, for it was in China, whence he had gone on a sailing ship, that Gerrit Ammidon, Salem shipmaster, met and married his pretty Chinese wife who was destined to lead such a stormy existence back in the old New England town.

To make this picture Mr. Melford brought his entire producing unit from the West Coast to the Long Island studio, and in order to get true "atmosphere" he took his company up to Salem where all the exterior scenes were made.

Selznick Presents Patten to Industry

Thomas G. Patten, former postmaster of the City of New York, now representing the Will H. Hays organization in the motion picture industry in Los Angeles, made his first official appearance before the heads of the big film companies on the Pacific Coast Friday evening, December 8, at a dinner given in his honor at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles, by Myron Selznick and A. G. Volck, respectively president and vice-president of Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Patten, who served with Mr. Hays when the latter was postmaster-general, handling the biggest job of its kind in the world, recently joined the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., and has been assigned to the industry's service in Los Angeles.

First National Sends Out News by Radio

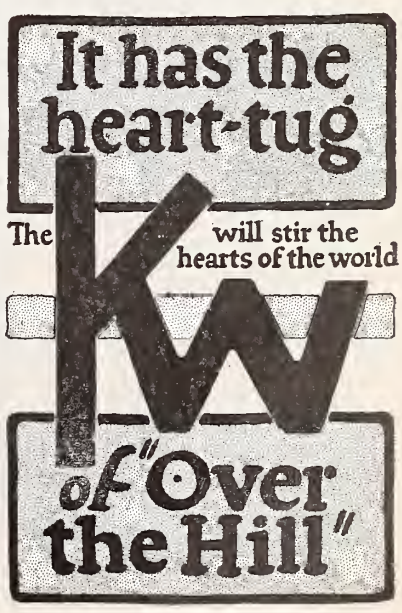
First National has begun broadcasting fan news by radio, using the station WHN at Ridgewood, L. I., which gives the news a radius of at least 1,000 miles and at times radio fans on the coast will be able to listen in. It is hoped also to reach London where the radio fans have been listening in recently on nights when atmospheric conditions were perfect.

The first broadcasting was done on Thursday, Dec. 7, when a fashion story about the gowns given to Margaret Leahy, Norma Talmadge's British prize winner, was sent out. A story on the thrilling horse racing scenes in Tom Ince's picture "The Hottentot," was sent through the air the next day, after a special showing of the picture at Wurlitzer Hall. A talk on "Minnie," Marshall Neilan's new humorous feature of life in a small town, was sent out later.

First National is using the radio daily as an exhibitor help in putting the big attractions over. With the Saturday Evening Post ads, and the radio, First National is now reaching millions of picture fans.

Universal Finishes Another Serial

Another chapter play directed by Robert F. Hill has been finished at Universal City. It is "The Social Buccaneer," a romantic serial based on the novel of the same name by Frederic Isham, laid chiefly in New York and an imaginery kingdom in central Europe. Jack Mulhall is the star.



Regards New Press Book as Its Best

Goldwyn regards its big press and service book for the first picture Marshall Neilan has made in association with that corporation, "The Strangers' Banquet," as the best of the series of bigger and better service books which it has been isuing with its Big Twenty productions for the current season. On its mechanical side it is said to be a thing of beauty and a perusal of its pages leads to the belief, it is said, that it will be a joy to every exhibitor who shows this film.

The set of lobby cards, reproduced on page 2, are unusually dramatic and indicative of the engrossing quality of the story. The jacket for Grossett & Dunlap's cheaper priced reprint of the story, got out for distribution to book stores coincident with the release of the screen version, is reprinted. It is unusually attractive.

The subject matter of Donn Byrne's original novel, and its title, lend themselves readily to out of the ordinary exploitation features, it is stated. The page devoted to exploitation is filled with meaty suggestion. Two pages of the service book are devoted to the reproduction of a full-page newspaper ad.

"Nanook" Presented to Museum by Pathe

In connection with its acceptance from Pathe and Revillon Freres of a print of "Nanook of the North" for its Department of Public Education, the New York Museum of Natural History gave a special showing of the Eskimo screen classic for school children on Wednesday afternoon, December 13. As was anticipated by Curator George H. Sherwood, the announcement of the "Nanook" showing, together with the facts of the presentation, brought responses from the New York public schools that proved the capacity of the museum's auditorium far from equal to the demand for seats.

The audience of children and teachers overflowed into the corridors and into adjoining rooms, where the museum's large collection of Eskimo utensils, weapons and curios received more attention than they had ever received before.

Fox Will Soon Issue Important Statements

With the release by the Fox Film Corporation of the "Lights of New York," the last of the big special productions on its program for 1922—the latter part of this month, comes the information from Fox that many important announcements will soon be issued.

The success which the seven big productions, "The Fast Mail," "Silver Wings," "A Fool There Was," "Monte Cristo," "Who Are My Parents?" "My Friend the Devil," and "Nero," have attained throughout the country, bears out the contention, William Fox says, that it is best in the long run to spare no expense in production. As a result of which he inaugurated a campaign by securing the motion picture rights to famous novels and stage plays.

As was the case with the above-mentioned seven productions, Fox Film Corporation intends to have a Broadway presentation for each of the six new specials slated for release during January, 1923.

Sennett Makes New Releasing Contract

A long term contract has been executed by which Mack Sennett will release his forthcoming motion picture product through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, the subsidiary organization of United Artists Corporation.

The contract was arranged and signed by Hiram Abrams, president of Allied Producers and Distributors, and Mr. Sennett. The first picture to be released under the new arrangement will be "Suzanna," in which Mabel Normand will star. The picture is set for an early release.

This new releasing arranging perfected between Mr. Abrams and E. M. Asher, representing Mr. Sennett, is said to come as a surprise in the motion picture industry.

Will Make Film of Frank Norris Novel

"McTeague," Frank Norris' famous realistic novel, will be Eric Von Stroheim's first production for Goldwyn, according to an announcement just received from that company.

"McTeague" was one of Frank Norris' early novels; it is very realistic in its account of a San Francisco dentist's life. In fact, it was written while Norris was still under the spell of the great French realist, Emile Zola, and possesses many of his characteristics. Norris afterwards, in "The Octopus" and "The Pit," returned partly to his earlier romantic style, although the sternest realism abounds in many episodes in both of those novels.

Goldwyn feels that in "McTeague" it has a great story, one that will give Mr. von Stroheim's abilities as a producer full scope.

Garyn Joins Goldwyn's Sales Force

W. P. Garyn has joined the sales staff of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in an executive position as special representative. Mr. Garyn was for three years assistant to Winfield R. Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation.

Before his association with Fox, and for a short time afterward, he was with the Keith vaudeville circuit and opened many new theatres for that circuit. He has been connected with the amusement business for the past fifteen years.

Mr. Garyn has already assumed his new duties and has his office at Goldwyn headquarters, 469 Fifth Avenue.

Will Celebrate Fox Anniversary Week

Fox Anniversary Week, which marks the nineteenth year of the activities of William Fox as a producer, will be celebrated January 28 to February 3. Louis Rosenbluh, the executive of the New York exchange, has, it is said, been assured already that the Fox banner will float from a larger number of theatres in his territory than ever before, the banner proclaiming a full week's program of Fox entertainments.

The Rosenbluh sales force is working shoulder to shoulder to go over the top of all sales records as a compliment to their chief, and according to all reports the results achieved so far are more than gratifying.

An innovation in the Rosenbluh exchange household are tri-weekly meetings held by the salesmen for the interchange of sales ideas and improving business relations with exhibitors.

STREET BALLYHOO ON "NOTORIETY"

Exchange Heads to Attend Meeting

Exchange managers and the salesmen in the Washington, D. C., territory are planning to attend the coming convention of the North Carolina Theatre Owners' Association to be held in Greensboro, N. C., at the O. Henry Hotel, December 27 and 2. An invitation to these members of the industry was extended them through the Film Board of Trade by the exhibitors' association.

Miss Katherine Ladd, secretary to Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has left Washington for New York from which place she is to sail for Europe. Miss Ladd will return here some time in March.

The last meeting of the Film Board of Trade was disrupted by the appearance of Sam Flax coupled with the announcement that another film-industry recruit had arrived at his home to call him "Daddy."

Corinne Griffith Productions Will Be Released Through W. W. Hodkinson

Report Firm Will Adapt Only Popular Novels That Fits Acting Ability of Star

What is considered to be one of the most important announcements for the new year for the independent market comes from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation relative to the fact that early spring will see the presentation of the Corinne Griffith Productions under the Hodkinson trade-mark. This fact, it is stated, will bring another star of exceptional magnitude into the independent field with her own producing unit.

It will be the purpose of the Corinne Griffith Productions, according to the reports, to adapt only popular novels for the screen that will fit the acting abilities and personality of Corinne Griffith. These will be selected with a viewpoint of establishing money-making attractions for the exhibitor and give the screen entertainments designed to develop fully Miss Griffith's great ability. It will be the effort of Corinne Griffith Productions to supply the motion picture demand with bigger and better productions, the kind that will have wide box-office possibilities.

Edward Small and Charles R. Rogers, who have formed the Corinne Griffith Productions, need little introduction to the motion picture industry, and, Hodkinson says, it is felt that with this combination money-making attractions will be assured. Mr. Small has guided the destinies of many of the greatest stars and directors for years. He has an intimate knowledge of production. Mr. Rogers has had wide experience in the distributing of motion pictures. He was for years general sales manager for the Select Pictures and later was general manager of distribution for Robertson-Cole. He resigned from the latter organization in order to devote his time to the Corinne Griffith Productions.

The Corinne Griffith Productions, it is stated, will be produced in a series, and will cover a long period. While the titles will not be announced for a while, it is understood that the stories selected will be of the society variety, which will afford Miss Griffith an opportunity for the display of charming gowns, as well as a characterization that will exemplify her dramatic abilities. It is further stated that the supporting cast will consist of big names with box-office possibilities. The productions will be directed by Webster Campbell, who has directed many successes for other companies. The Corinne Griffith Productions will be made in the East.

The report further states that production will start soon after the new year, and will be ready for private screening on or about the first of April or May.

Special stress will be laid, it is said, upon the exploitation and advertising campaign which will be inaugurated for each of the productions.

Corinne Griffith, who will be starred in the productions, has, it is stated, a wide following among motion picture fans. She began her motion picture career as ingenue in support of Earl Williams in Vitagraph productions. Later she was made a star, and appeared in many successful features, during which time she became quite popular throughout the country. Some of her most important productions in which she has been starred are: "Thin Ice," "The Unknown Quantity," "The Climbers," "The Whisper Market," "Human Collateral," "The Broadway Bubble," "What's Your Reputation Worth?" and "Divorce Coupons."

Mr. Rogers, in commenting on this contract, said: "Mr. Small and myself feel particularly gratified at the outcome of our negotiations with Mr. Hodkinson. A careful study of his organization convinces us that all the product he handles receives equal attention. Having no product entirely his own his sales force can apportion their effort fairly among the features they handle, and in this way the true neutrality of distribution is assured. We found the Hodkinson organization encouraging to work with and in hearty accord with our ideals."

F. P.-L. Convention for Kansas City

Kansas City will be the scene of the next convention of the Department of Distirbution of Paramount pictures, according to an announcement made at Hollywood following the close of the Paramount sales convention by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution.

Both of these officials remained over in Los Angeles when the "Paramount Special" left with all the other delegates to the convention on board. They planned to remain for at least a week working out with Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the corporation, the important steps decided on at the convention.

The first thing done by the three executives was to select the meeting place of the 1923 convention. When they made their decision, they despatched a wire to Mayor Cromwell, of Kansas City, who met the Paramount special when it passed through his city en route to Los Angeles. He headed a big delegation which gave the film men an enthusiastic welcome, and officially extended an invitation to hold the next convention in his city. The gathering will be in May.

"The highly successful convention which has just come to a close," siad Mr. Kent, "will be patterned after in all our conventions hereafter.

"We of the Distribution Department make it our first business to learn what the public wants when it goes to a motion picture theatre. At the convention just closed, we passed on this information to the Production Department, headed by Mr. Lasky, and the two branches of the corporation worked out what I believe will be the most successful program in the history of the motion picture industry."

Beautiful Scene in "Enemies of Women"

One of the most remarkably beautiful scenes ever screened was filmed during the past week at Cosmopolitan Productions' studio as a part of the forthcoming super-special, "The Enemies of Women," from the famous story by Ibanez, author of "The Four Horsemen." It is the interior of the Russian palace of Prince Lubimoff, the chief character in the story, impersonated by Lionel Barrymore, during a wild revel just prior to the revolution in Petrograd, the capital of Russia.

Joseph Urban, celebrated scenic artist, has fashioned a set that, for sheer magnificence, has probably never before been equalled. It is supposed to exemplify the utter extravagance of the upper classes in Russia and the total disregard for expense while the populace starved.

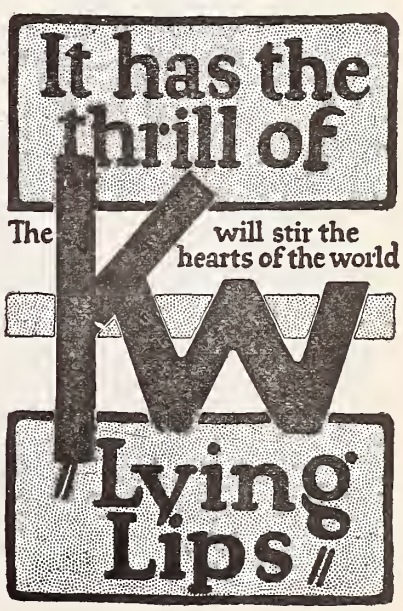
In this palatial hall Lubimoff is giving what proves to be the last of his wildly extravagant parties.

Where Is My Wandering Audience Tonight?

How many weeks does it take to get the people back into your theatre after you have passed them a "pill" that makes them ill?

Moving Picture World wants you to know where your audience is—to help you keep it where it belongs, in your theatre. That's why a host of dependable and sincere exhibitors contribute voluntary reports on the films they play and "Straight From the Shoulder Reports" is the department that publishes them.

Read this department. Learn what pictures have displeased the audiences and which films give them that "come-again" feeling. Then you'll know how to book sensibly and your audience will always be with you.



Agnes Ayres in "Racing Hearts"

Remember those wonderful automobile pictures—"Too Much Speed," "The Roaring Road," "Excuse My Dust," "What's Your Hurry?" "Across the Continent," etc.—that Wally Reid made from the stories of Byron Morgan? Will you ever forget them? Well, here you have Agnes Ayres risking her precious life in just that kind of a picture by the same author.

Like the others, it's a comedy-drama with thrill following thrill upon the automobile racetrack and boulevard. Some famous drivers take part in the race, which Agnes wins in a most sensational finsh.

Yes, Theodore Roberts, with his familiar cigar, is here again as the father, with Richard Dix playing the leading man's part and Robert Cain doing a lot of dirty work. Paul Powell directed this one—one of those triple-guaranteed speed pictures that can't go wrong.

Dorothy Dalton in "Law of the Lawless"

This is a story by Konrad Bercovici, the Bohemian author whose writings are creating a furore in this country. "The Law of the Lawless" was first published in Pictorial Review and attracted wide attention. The setting of the story is unusual and picturesque, depicting the glamor and romance of gypsy life.

The character played by Miss Dalton is that of a gypsy woman, as fearless as she is beautiful, who recognizes no law save that of her own desire. In short, it is an absorbing tale of primitive people and elemental emotions. In the chief roles supporting Miss Dalton are Theodore Kosloff and Charles de Roche, the famous French screen star who recently came to America to appear in Paramount pictures. E. Lloyd Sheldon wrote the scenario and Victor Fleming directed.

Alice Brady in "The Leopardess"

Henry Kolker, producer of "Disraeli," in which George Arliss was the star, directed this picture, which is an adaptation of Katherine Newlin Burt's novel. J. Clarkson Miller wrote the screen version. This is a story of the South Seas, in which is related how a strange power which is being exercised by a wealthy and unscrupulous adventurer over a white girl brought up among the natives is broken by a worthy young friend of her tormentor.

Edward Langford is Miss Brady's leading man, while the chief heavy role is played by Montagu Love. Other well-known people in the cast are Charles Kent, George Beranger and Marguerite Forrest. The picture was made for the most part in Florida, with some beautiful shots in which the palatial yacht of J. Ogden Armour, loaned by the owner, figures prominently.

Big Cast Picked for "Little Old New York"

Work was started this week at the Cosmopolitan studios, 127th street and Second avenue, New York, on Marion Davies' next picture, a super-special of the celebrated play "Little Old New York," by Rida Johnson Young.

"Little Old New York" will be made on the same elaborate scale that characterized Miss Davies' present picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower." As in the latter production, one of the most remarkable casts ever assembled will support the star.

Miss Davies will, of course, appear in the role of Patricia O'Day, the little Irish girl, who landed in New York only to find that, in order to obtain the family fortune, she would have to be a boy. Included in the supporting cast are the following famous actors: J. M. Kerrigan, Mahlen Hamilton, Courtney Foote, Harrison Ford, Norval Keedwell, George Barraud, Sam Hardy, Montague Love, Riley Hatch, Charles Kennedy, Spencer Charters, Harry Watson, Charles Judels, Pauline Whitson, Mary Kennedy, Thomas Findlay and Marie R. Burke.

New York as it appeared a century ago will for the first time be faithfully depicted in this film masterpiece. To that end experts have been busy for the past three months gathering historical data of the early metropolitan days. One of the most important of the scenes will be the first trip of the Claremont. The builders are now at work constructing a replica of Robert Fulton's first steamship.

Among the most gigantic sets of the picture will be a scene at the Battery and another of the Bowery, which was at that time the principal thoroughfare of the city. This latter set will occupy the entire floor space of the Famous Players' studio at Long Island City, and will cover two city blocks.

"Little Old New York" will be directed by Sidney Olcott, with Phila Carle as first assistant director. The cameramen will be Harold Wenstrom and Joe Morgan.

"Adam's Rib" Said to Be Unique Film

Those who argue that there is nothing new in the photoplay are due for a surprise, Paramount says, when they see Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Adam's Rib," which is another original story by Mr. DeMille's talented scenario writer, Jeanie Macpherson.

This romance is played out, for the most part, against a strange setting of skeletons of animals that lived somewhere around fourteen million years ago. These reconstructed prehistoric monsters are exact copies of those treasured in the American Museum of Natural History and the Smithsonian Institution. In connection with these curiosities Mr. DeMille has gone back farther than ever before in the making of scenes which represent how people lived, or might have lived, in the days before history dawned.

Schedules Release of Three Pictures

Alfred Weiss, president of Artclass Pictures Corporation, has announced the release of three films by this organization during the coming year. These pictures will include "After Six Days," "Between Worlds" and the "Woman Who Believed." Mr. Weiss has arranged national distribution for the latter two named films, and "After Six Days" will be state righted on a large scale to the independent field.

"After Six Days" is the nine-reel version of the Old Testament from Adam and Eve to the Songs of Solomon. "Between Worlds" is a picture dealing with spiritualism. "The Woman Who Believed" is a six-part melodramatic feature, presenting an all star cast headed by Walter Miller and Dorothy Bernard.

Max Graf Will Make Films at San Mateo

Max Graf, whose first production, "The Forgotten Law," is a current Metro success, has taken up headquarters at the Metro studios and is preparing for the production of his next three pictures. They will be made at the San Mateo studios in San Mateo, California.

"The Fog," a story by William Dudley Pelley, will be Mr. Graf's next production and he expects to begin filming within the next four weeks. H. H. Van Loan is preparing the screen adaptation of this story.

Following this is to come "Beans," an original story by Mr. Graf and Mr. Van Loan.

The third production will be "The Gamble in Souls," a story on which Mr. Graf and Mr. Van Loan collaborated.

Frances Marion Now with Goldwyn

Frances Marion is the latest celebrity to be added to the Goldwyn fold. Marshall Neilan, now producing in association with that Company, has placed her under contract to write the subtitles for "The Strangers' Banquet," his picturization of Donn Byrne's novel. It is also reported that the young producer has other important work in mind for her.

Miss Marion has written and adapted some of the screen's most successful productions, including "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Pollyanna," "The Love Light" and "Humoresque." She has been associated with Mr. Neilan on several of his notable pictures.

Mr. Neilan has decided on "Red Lights" as a release title for Edward Rose's mystery melodrama, "The Rear Car," which he recently acquired. He has not yet announced what his next production will be, although he has already engaged Ray Grfiffith to play in it.

To Aid in Filming "Ben Hur"

A. L. Erlanger, the theatrical producer, arrived at Goldwyn's studios in Culver City, Calif., last week. He was accompanied by F. Richard Anderson, who, with Mr. Erlanger, superintended the creation of the Erlanger circuit of theatres. His presence in Los Angeles at this time is to aid Goldwyn in the filming of "Ben Hur," the theatrical destinies of which he has guided for a quarter of a century.

"Ben-Hur" has been one of the most popular plays in the world, as well as one of the most popular novels and the sponsors of the motion picture version intend to leave no stone unturned to make it the greatest photoplay ever produced, they state.

"It was part of the agreement that I should render any assistance in my power in the filming of 'Ben Hur,'" said Mr. Erlanger. "Mr. Godsol wants me to keep in close touch with him and June Mathis in turning the play into a picture.

"It is going to be a real screen drama and will be produced in a most elaborate way."

Exploits "Broken Chains" in Chicago

Eddie Boons, manager of Goldwyn's exploitation department, is off on a trip to Detroit and Chicago to superintend special exploitation campaigns for Goldwyn pictures.

Goldwyn's going to put over the biggest exploitation campaign ever known for the showing of "Broken Chains" in Chicago in connection with the Chicago Daily News, and Mr. Boons will have charge of it.

"Broken Chains" was the prize-winning scenario in the Daily News' $30,000 motion picture scenario contest. He will work in co-operation with Walter D. Nealand, Goldwyner, attached to the Chicago Goldwyn exchange.

Quota Exceeded

At the end of the third week of the Eschmann Sales Contest, Pathe reports that the weekly quota set for the eight weeks' period is exceeded by more than ten per cent. The Portland, Ore., branch was then leading, with Los Angeles second and Denver, Milwaukee, Newark, Salt Lake City, Spokane, Dallas, Charlotte and Memphis following in the order named.

Every mail is said to load General Sales Manager E. A. Eschmann's desk with evidences of increasing enthusiasm felt by the contesting branches.

"The Storm," a Film That Is Praised by All Nations

"The Storm" is breaking world records, reports Universal. From all quarters of the globe first-run houses are sending word of capacity crowds and extended engagements with the big Universal-Jewel production. It is just as popular in foreign countries as it has been in America, where it has been one of the best money-makers of the season, Universal states.

Recent reports received at the Universal home office include returns from the showing in Great Britain, France, in Panama, in Tasmania, in Cuba, Australia, South America and in Holland. All communications acclaimed the picture for its drawing power, it is said.

Universal officials see in the present vogue of "The Storm," both in this country and elsewhere, indications that it will prove to be the most widely shown picture ever made by Universal. Its appeal has been found to be international.

In London "The Storm" had a gala showing at the New Oxford Theatre, the famous Cochran show house recently taken over for film productions by the European Motion Picture Company, Universal's British releasing agency. It created a very favorable impression in London, it is said, and was highly praised by both newespaper and trade paper reviewers.

In France the big Universal feature was played at the Cine Max Linder in Paris, where it was accorded a highly successful run. When "The Storm" played in the Strand Theatre, Colon, Panama, it went over with a bang, reports state.

In far-off Tasmania the picture tripled the box-office figures of the Palace Theatre, Hobart, and broke records in the Picture Theatre, Launceston. On the mainland of Australia "The Storm" had its premiere in Hoyt's De Luxe Theatre, Victoria, where it made a big hit.

"The Storm" has played in several South American film centers with great success, it is reported. In Holland "The Storm" opened at the Cinema De Mundt in Amsterdam, and was so successful that the run was prolonged for a second week, Gus Hager, Universal manager in the Netherlands, reported.

Big Publicity for S-L Production

Bert Ennis of S-L and Bessie Mack director of publicity for the Capitol Theatre, New York, are co-operating on an exploitation drive in the interest of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the S-L special which begins an engagement in the Capitol Theatre on Sunday, December 17.

The usual advertising space taken in the New York newspapers by the Capitol management has been doubled and special publicity is being devoted to the long list of star names in the cast.

Had Merry Time at Entertainment

The First National Club, of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held its annual entertainment and dance last week and had a merry time in Kismet Temple, Brooklyn. The entertainment was called "The Follies of Forty-eighth Street," and was put on under the direction of Francis G. Conklin. The impresario was Mort Blumenstock and the musical director Clive Waxman.

Bob Dexter wrote a skit called "A Thousand Miles from Home," and Mort Blumenstock a movie number, entitled "Krazy Katzenberg."

"Minnie" Is Called Marshall Neilan's Best

Marshall Neilan has again hit the bull's-eye of fine entertainment, according to the critics who have had a pre-view of his latest First National release, "Minnie," in which Leatrice Joy and Matt Moore are featured.

"Neilan has surprised us again with 'Minnie.' Real heart appeal and novel situations," declares one critic. Another writes: "Neilan has distinguished himself once more. Exceptional entertainment. Should satisfy all classes of patrons."

"'Minnie' happens to be the kind of story that brings out the Neilan best all the way through," is part of the laudatory comment of the National Board of Review.

"Hats off to Leatrice Joy," an enthusiastic critic declares. "She was good in 'Manslaughter,' but she has arrived in this picture. As 'Minnie,' the village 'ugly duckling.' Leatrice contributes to screen literature one of the most human and appealing bits of character portraiture."

Matt Moore also comes in for high praise. "Matt Moore plays his part most entertainly. His make-up, clothes, manner are a clever caricature of his usual self."

"Minnie" is said to be a picture for the whole family of motion-picture-goers, and it is also declared that the "high-brows" will enjoy Neilan's cleverness.

S-L Pictures to Issue Booklet

An appropriate Christmas remainder will be issued by Sawyer and Lubin of S-L Pictures concerning "Quincy Adams Sawyer," their recently produced special film for Metro Pictures Corporation. It will take the form of a booklet, incorporated in which will be the unusual trade press reviews accorded "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Make Film of Life of Swedish King

The heroic life of Charles XII. of Sweden, in his time one of the most feared warriors of Europe, is now being picturized by a Swedish corporation organized especially for this purpose. The dashing Charles ruled Sweden at the period of her political greatness, and, taking to the field in person, conquered the Russians on one hand and the Danes on the other, falling in action in 1719, at the early age of thirty-six. The film will be true to history in depicting the king's career, with the addition of a slightly fictionized romantic element.

Historic Films, Ltd., is the name of the new corporation which is filming Charles XII. The president is Rear-Admiral Wachtmeister of the Swedish Navy, and the directors include a number of army officers, which augurs well for the historical sincerity and accuracy of the film. The actual taking of scenes and general studio work is being done in Sweden, Norway and Germany under a contract with a German company.

It is expected that the first reels of "Charles XII" will be ready for exhibition in February or March, 1923.

Big Demand Brings Follow-Up of Policy Begun with "Famous Forty-One"

It was just six months ago that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation made its announcement of the forty-one Paramount Pictures which it intended to release to the public through the motion picture theatres during the six months following August 1. Following a long period of business depression which had been felt quite as keenly in the theatres as anywhere else this bold stroke aroused keen interest.

The plans for that big program of motion picture production had been conceived by Adolph Zukor, president of the company, and Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, months before, when the industry as a whole was in the doldrums.

The history of "The Famous Forty-One" is now nearly complete. As that first announcement awakened new hope and confidence in the future, so have the finished pictures fulfilled every promise made for them, Paramount says and goes on to state that the record is written in the box-office results scored by "The Dictator," "If You Believe It, It's So," "Nice People," "Blood and Sand," "The Valley of Silent Men," "Manslaughter," "The Old Homestead," "Burning Sands," "To Have and To Hold," "The Young Rajah," "Clarence," "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew" and all the rest, right down the line.

Confident of the wisdom of their policy the Paramount executives made no amendment of their previous action. Before the release of the first of the forty-one on August 6, work had actually been started on more than a dozen of the Paramount pictures to be included among the releases of the second six months starting next February 5.

So now come "The Super Thirty-Nine."

To insure a continuation of the constant flow of super-pictures to satisfy the demands of the public the resources of the Paramount organization were expanded and more perfectly systematized than ever before.

Despite the fact that the Paramount studios in California had been enlarged and production efficiency there had been greatly increased it was found that even those facilities were inadequate. It was found necessary to re-open the company's huge studio at Long Island City, which had been closed for many months, in order to accommodate the expanding production. This was done during the Summer and both Western and Eastern producing organizations have been working virtually to capacity ever since.

The staff of writers necessarily had to be increased, for the rights to some of the most valuable literary and dramatic properties had been obtained for picturization.

Pola Negri, the European star of "Passion" and "Gypsy Blood," was brought to America where she has made, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, "Bella Donna," Robert Hichens' great story of the desert.

In order to obtain the exact "atmosphere" called for by Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, "Java Head," Director George Melford and his entire producing unit were brought East from California and sent to Salem, Mass., there to film the important scenes.

Julia Crawford Ivers, while vacationing in Hawaii, wrote a story, "The White Flower," for Betty Compson. When it came time to make the picture, Miss Compson and the entire company were sent to the far-off Pacific islands to work before the backgrounds the story described.

James Cruze had been assigned to produce a Paramount picture from Emerson Hough's epic of the Great West, "The Covered Wagon." His entire unit, augmented by hundreds of extra players and supplied with trainloads of equipment and supplies, was sent out to the Western plains.

To provide the proper "atmosphere" for the screen version of Rex Beach's story, "The N'er-Do-Well," Alfred E. Green, the director, Thomas Meighan, the star and the entire company are off to Panama to film the exteriors.

These are but a few of the things that Paramount has done in order to provide America with its entertainment for the remainder of the picture season of 1922-23. Moreover, its own product will be augmented by a number of pictures produced by the Cosmopolitan Corporation, all of which will be distributed through the thirty-six Paramount branch exchanges.

Most of the "Super Thirty-Nine" either have been completed or are now in course of production. As for the rest, every detail has been planned, and the actual dates upon which they will first be shown to the public have been set.

Here they are:

Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," a Cosmopolitan Production. Adapted from the novel by Charles Major. Directed by Robert G. Vignola, with an all-star cast including Forrest Stanley, Lyn Harding and Pedro de Cordoba supporting Miss Davies.

Dorothy Dalton in "Dark Secrets," from an original story and scenario by Edmund Goulding, directed by Victor Fleming. Robert Ellis and Jose Ruben head the supporting cast.

Gloria Swanson in "My American Wife," a Sam Wood production, by Monte M. Katterjohn, based on a story by Hector Turnbull. Tony Moreno appears opposite Miss Swanson.

"Adam's Rib," a Cecil B. DeMille production. Written by Jeanie Macpherson and featuring Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Kosloff, Pauline Garon, Julia Faye and many other screen favorites.

Mary Miles Minter in "Drums of Fate" an adaptation by Will M. Ritchey of the novel, "Sacrifice," by Stephen French Whitman. Directed by Charles Maigne. Supporting cast includes George Fawcett, Casson Ferguson and Robert Cain.

Big Paramount Advertising on the Super Thirty-Nine to Break Records

From the time when Paramount inaugurated its present national advertising policy, some eight years ago, Paramount advertising admittedly has been one of the features of the motion picture business.

At the outset of its national advertising campaign, which has done so much to sell motion pictures to the public, the company spent in the first year a sum of money which was regarded skeptically in some quarters as extravagant. Time has proved the falseness of that view; Paramount has kept on expanding and expanding the scope of its national campaign, and in 1923 the company will spend just about ten times as much in selling Paramount pictures for the exhibitor to the public as it did that first year.

A. M. Botsford, advertising manager, with the co-operation of Hanff-Metzger, Inc., advertising agents, has completed his plans for the national advertising of The Super Thirty-nine—a campaign greater in magnitude than Paramount ever before launched. As usual, The Saturday Evening Post, with its circulation of more than two million copies every week, will carry the message in greatest volume.

The Post campaign for The Super Thirty-nine will start in the issue of January 13. This will be a full page in colors, the Paramount trademark dominating the illustration, and the text being captioned "The name that earned fame through thousands of hours of wonderful entertainment!" In a box at the right is text calling attention to the complete announcement of The Super Thirty-nine to be found in the Post of January 27.

In the issue of the 27th, immediately preceding the initial release of the six-months' product, the listing of all the pictures will be carried in a double-page spread in colors. Double-page spreads in black and white will be run on each of the following six special productions, set for day and date release, the advertisement in each instance appearing in the Post, dated the day before the release of the picture: "Adam's Rib," "Java Head," "Bella Donna," "The Glimpses of the Moon," "Hollywood" and "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife."

Copy on "You Can't Fool Your Wife" and "The Rustle of Silk," also day and date releases, will consist of single pages in colors; while the big James Cruze production, "The Covered Wagon," will be handled in a unique manner. Several weeks before the release of that picture a series of quarter-page teaser advertisements will be started, and they will culminate in a double-page spread in colors. Incidentally, color pages on "The Covered Wagon" will be run in many other national magazines.

Supplementing this production advertising in the Post there will be a page in colors every four weeks. These will consist of good-will copy, and each will carry the complete Paramount schedule for the following month. The decorative and human interest features of this copy in each instance will center around a great motion picture theatre, the list of houses including, among others, the Rivoli, in New York; the Grenada, in San Francisco; Grauman's Metropolitan, in Los Angeles; the Palace, in Washington; McVicker's, in Chicago, and Newman's in Kansas City.

In addition to the campaign in the Post, all the leading fan magazines will carry at least one full page in each issue, with two-page spreads on some of the bigger pictures. The Ladies' Home Journal will also carry a page each month, while Pictorial Review will have a special advertisement on "The Glimpses of the Moon," the story of which ran serially in that magazine.

The January issue of Pictorial Review, now on the news stands, has an interesting article by Nina Wilcox Putnam, entitled "What's Right With the Movies?" embodying comments by Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Samuel Goldwyn, W. W. Hodkinson, D. W. Griffith and other prominent figures in the picture world. Paramount has taken advantage of the fan interest aroused by this article and on the page opposite the start of the story there is a full-page advertisement, "Shopping for the Best Pictures."

Compson and Tearle in This Production

"The Rustle of Silk" is a George Fitzmaurice production, and tells just the kind of story that Mr. Fitzmaurice revels in producing on the screen, Paramount says. Cosmo Hamilton wrote it and Ouida Bergere adapted it. Betty Compson and Conway Tearle are the featured players.

It is a tale of a poor young English girl who falls in love with a famous statesman at first sight. His station in life being far above her own, she obtains employment in his household as lady's maid to his wife in order to be near him. Spurning the love of a worthy young man of her own circle, she resolves to win the object of her admiration. She dons one of the gowns of her mistress and goes to the Savoy, where she knows he is to dine, and there, through a ruse, procures an introduction to him. She continues her masquerading, and at last succeeds in winning his attention and later his love. His wife discovers what is going on, and the triangular situation develops most interestingly, it is said.

Gloria Swanson in Sam Wood Picture

"Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," a Sam Wood production, is made from a scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn, based upon Charlton Andrews' adaptation of the famous French comedy by Alfred Savoir. A year ago the play was presented at the Ritz Theatre, New York, with Ina Claire as the star, and scored a big success.

This "Bluebeard" is a modern American millionaire who has gone to Biarritz to wed a famous French singer. He has been married before no fewer than seven times, his first wife having died and he having divorced all of the other six. But he meets another young French girl, becomes infatuated with her beauty, and decides to marry her rather than the girl to whom he is engaged. His attentions are not welcomed by the young woman, but her father and sister, learning of his immense wealth and the fact that he always settles 200,000 francs a year on his wives, make arrangements for the marriage, which eventually is performed.

As in the case of the former wives, the millionaire tires of this one and seeks to divorce her; but she, even though she is not in love with him, decides obstinately to hold him — and does by many amazing stratagems.

The Super Thirty-Nine Will Prove Greatest Boon to Foreign Trade

E. E. SHAUER

Assistant Treasurer and Director of the Foreign Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

That no announcement in the motion picture trade throughout the world will be received with greater interest than that given Mr. Lasky's production program for the remainder of the year 1922-23 is the opinion of Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in discussing plans for world distribution of The Super Thirty-nine.

"Although it will be several months before these forthcoming Paramount specials will be available for foreign distribution," said Mr. Shauer, "we are finding everywhere throughout the world a constantly increasing interest in the future production plans for Paramount pictures.

"The foreign exhibitor is becoming more and more keenly alive to the development of the motion picture industry in this country, and announcements of the sort made by Mr. Lasky at the Los Angeles Paramount convention will be received with particular gratification the world over. Perhaps the most interesting feature of this announcement is the action of the production department in continuing the policy of producing the highest grade super specials. A number of the group of forty-one specials have been released in various parts of the world in the last few months, and have met with the most enthusiastic receptions everywhere.

"Perhaps the most striking development in the foreign field during the last year has been the conversion of the leading exhibitors to the policy of screening special productions of the highest calibre. These exhibitors are learning, as has been the case in this country, that their patrons want nothing but the best in motion picture entertainment. For this reason the foreign department welcomes the opportunity to distribute, through its own offices and through leading distributors elsewhere, the splendid list of thirty-nine Paramount pictures promised by Mr. Lasky for the coming six months.

"During the past twelve months the foreign department has taken particular pains to enlarge its distributing facilities throughout the world to obtain the proper presentation of such great Paramount specials as 'Blood and Sand,' 'To Have and to Hold,' 'Manslaughter,' 'While Satan Sleeps,' 'The Old Homestead,' 'The Impossible Mrs. Bellew,' 'Clarence,' 'Kick In,' 'The World's Applause,' and others of the superb forty-one. This policy will be continued during the coming year.

"In France branch offices have been opened in Lille, Toulouse, Bordeaux, Strassbourg, Marseille, Lyon and Nancy, and the same organization is distributing Paramount pictures from recently opened offices at Brussels, in Belgium; Basle, Switzerland; Algiers, Algeria; Cairo, Egypt, and Constantinople, Turkey, with Adolphe Osso, of Paris, in charge. In Denmark, Norway and Sweden arrangements were completed for the distribution of Paramount pictures through offices operated by Carl York and Walter LeMat in Copenhagen, Christiania and Stockholm. Ingvald C. Oes is Paramount's representative in these offices.

"On the other side of the world it has become necessary for the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of which John W. Hicks, Jr., is managing director, to open exchanges at Singapore, Straits Settlements, and Batavia, Java, to take care of the increased demands for Paramount pictures. Recently offices were opened in Tokyo, Japan, under the management of Tom D. Cochrane.

"In Great Britain arrangements have been completed by John Cecil Graham, managing director of Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., for the immediate release of four Paramount specials—'Saturday Night,' 'Bought and Paid For,' 'The Young Diana' and 'The Good Provider.' This policy has met with an enthusiastic reception on the part of the film trade and the public, as it foreshadows the coming of the day when the British release schedule will be brought down to within six or eight months of the American schedule."

Rex Beach Story to Be Filmed in Panama

Alfred E. Green, who has made all of Meighan's recent Paramount pictures, including "The Bachelor Daddy," "Our Leading Citizen," and "Back Home and Broke," is the director of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," a Rex Beach story, while Tom J. Geraghty, Paramount's supervisor of production at the Long Island studio, adapted the story for the screen.

"The Ne'er-Do-Well" is a story of regeneration. A young fellow who is more or less notorious for the scrapes he has got himself into and who has come to be regarded by his father as a ne'er-do-well, is drugged by a bunch of rollicking friends and wakes up to find himself on board a ship bound for Panama, without a cent. In Central America he falls under the influence of an adventurous woman and everything seems to conspire against his reform.

Director Green is taking the entire company to Panama to film all the scenes.

"The Nth Commandment"

What more need be said for this picture from the Cosmopolitan studios than that it was made by the same trio that was responsible for "Humoresque"? Fannie Hurst wrote the story, Frances Marion wrote the scenario and Frank Borzage directed it. Like all the other stories by Miss Hurst, this one carries tremendous human appeal and consequent box-office value. Three wonderfully capable young players are featured—Colleen Moore, James Morrison and Eddie Phillips.

Division of Exploitation Is Set and Ready to Go on the Super Thirty-Nine

Paramount's Division of Exploitation, under the direction of Claud Saunders, points to the fact that its slogan, "It Has Been Done," has been lived up to in connection with "The Famous Forty-one." Its record of performance, therefore, is cited as embodying the strongest assurance to exhibitors that they may expect the same kind of co-operation on "The Super Thirty-nine."

No story of the success of "The Famous Forty-one" is complete without at least a brief story of the activities of this department, which maintains a staff of thirty trained showmen scattered throughout the country. The duty of these men is to see that the exhibitor takes in as much as possible on his Paramount productions.

For "Her Gilded Cage" the exploiteers developed a cheap and inexpensive lathe work which transformed lobby fronts at little cost. This novel flash worked perfectly everywhere the picture played.

For "Nice People" the exploiteers sold the title to merchants of the town on the angle that "'Nice People' trade at this store," and secured page after page of solid advertising at no cost to the theatre. "Nice People" has probably the largest double-truck record of any picture ever exhibited.

For "Blood and Sand" the exploiteers developed a fake bull-fight gag that set every town on its ears. This was just one of hundreds of stunts that put this picture over to some of the biggest receipts in the history of filmdom.

For "Manslaughter" a safety-first tie-up was arranged, which secured a civic backing for the theatres, choice locations for billing, free newspaper publicity and advertising and word-of-mouth advertising at practically no additional cost. The soundness of the exploiteers' work is best demonstrated by the fact that the federal police of Washington, D. C., backed "Manslaughter," the first government co-operation in the history of the national capital. Just before they had refused to co-operate with two other pictures.

For "The Old Homestead" the exploitation men worked up teasers and a system of co-operation, which culminated in a real estate agency in St. Louis spending $3,660 to put the picture before the public. Many other campaigns were executed by the exploiteers which insured a healthy box office.

This is only to mention work on five of the "41." Other campaigns, fully described in the trade papers, have boosted receipts on every one of the pictures. For "The Loves of Pharaoh" the exploitation men combatted the prejudice against costume pictures, and showed conclusively anybody will enjoy an historical production, and that such a picture will get many people into the theatre who wouldn't come otherwise.

The Division of Exploitation, under the direction of Claud Saunders, knows where it is "at" on the new "39." However, it is not the policy of the department to send exhibitors on a wild-goose chase. The stunts will be put into actual operation, and if they are good the exhibitors will be informed through the columns of the trade papers and in The Paramount Exploiteer.

Paramount Opens Seven Additional Branches

During the past year seven new Paramount distributing offices have been opened in the United States, bringing the total number to thirty-six, and placing the company in a position to render more efficient service to exhibitors of Paramount pictures than ever before. Of the seven new offices six are fully equipped branch exchanges, and the seventh a shipping station, which serves an immense, though thinly populated, territory.

The new exchanges are as follows: Milwaukee, located at 119-121 Seventh street, managed by G. A. Durlam, and serving territory in District No. 5; the Maine Exchange, located at 263 St. John street, Portland, Me., managed by J. H. MacIntyre, and serving the northern part of District No. 1; Peoria, Ill., at 113 So. Monroe street, managed by M. M. Hirsch, and serving the extreme southern section of District No. 5; Columbus, O., at 251 No. Fifth street, managed by Harry W. Dodge, and serving Central Ohio in District No. 10; Wilkes-Barre, Pa., at 62 No. State street, managed by E. W. Sweigert, and serving the north-central section of Pennsylvania in District No. 3, and Sioux Falls, S. D., managed by A. B. Leak, and serving the northwestern section of District No. 11.

The shipping station is located at Butte, Mont., at 49 W. Granite street, and facilitates distribution throughout an immense part of the Rocky Mountain territory, known as District No. 8.

The entire Paramount exchange system is now at the highest point of efficiency in personnel and physical equipment. In its entirety it is directed by S. R. Kent, general manager of the department of distribution. The country embraces three sales divisions, each in charge of a divisional sales manager, with headquarters at the home office in New York, and each having jurisdiction over the district managers in their divisions, who in turn are in charge of the several exchanges in their districts.

The machinery of the whole system moves with a minimum of friction; good-will permeates the relations between exhibitors and the exchanges, and the rendering of prompt and satisfactory service is the one ambition of the entire organization.

"Hollywood" Not a Propaganda Picture

"Hollywood," Paramount says, is something unique in the realm of the cinema. When Frank Condon submitted to Jesse L. Lasky the script of his novelette, "Hollywood, and the Only Child," Mr. Lasky was amazed by its novelty, charmed by its story and enthused in the contemplation of its wonderful possibilities.

Ask any motion picture fan which she would rather see. Hollywood or New York, and Paramount says, the answer will be, "Hollywood, if I can see everything and everybody when I get there." And "Hollywood," directed by James Cruze, shows "everything and everybody," it is stated.

But make no mistake. "Hollywood" carries with it no propaganda, no expose of the secrets of picture-making. It is not a moving picture tour of Hollywood. It is said to be a real, fast-moving story, a human love romance of a girl who wanted to get into the movies—and doesn't succeed. The heroine is, it is stated, the counterpart of a million American girls, with a consuming ambition to act in moving pictures.

Paramount Features Embody Practical Visual Salesmanship

Practical visual salesmanship of motion pictures is about to be an accomplished fact. Paramount's sales featurettes have solved the problem, and for the first time exhibitors everywhere will be afforded the opportunity of seeing on their own screens what they are asked to buy.

It is not always convenient, or even possible, for an exhibitor to attend a screening of a picture before buying it. Even less often is it possible for him to screen what he buys in his own theatre before signing his contract. Moreover, Paramount recognizes the fact that the best of salesmen cannot tell the exhibitor everything he ought to know or wants to know about a picture, especially the larger production that, because of its very nature, does not represent on its face the same stabilized value that the exhibitor knows he is getting when he buys pictures with stars who have an established patronage at his box office.

That's the reason for the featurettes. Starting with The Super Thirty-nine every Paramount salesman will carry with him a film of necessary length, which will tell the exhibitor, better than he can be told by words, what he would like to know about each of the season's big special productions. It is not a tabloid version of the feature; it is more than that. It tells him not only the picture story in abridged form, but it visualizes to him the salient selling points connected with its production. And in addition it shows glimpses of all the big scenes which have been introduced to lend box-office value to the production.

The featurette on the James Cruze production, "The Covered Wagon," may be cited as an example. The film opens with a reproduction of the copy of the Saturday Evening Post, in which the story started as a serial. The first page of the story, showing the title and the name of the author—Emerson Hough—together with the manner in which it was displayed to the Post's millions of readers, is reproduced. Then follow quickly one or two of the succeeding installments, and then a copy of the book published by D. Appleton & Co.

Next is shown an animated map of that section of the Great West which is the locale of the story. A line is started at Kansas City, which at that time was known as Westport Landing, and follows the course of the great wagon train migration across the mountains and plains to the coast—the historic journey which furnished the author with his theme. Then from Hollywood, Cal., another line moves across in opposite direction, showing where the Cruze company went, in Utah and Nevada, to make the big scenes for the picture. The huge preparations for the picture, the assembling of the vast equipment and the marshalling of the hordes of extras and technicians, the actual roping and breaking of the hundreds of steers used to draw the covered wagons in the picture, are all emphasized pictorially.

Then follow glimpses of the big scenes, such as the departure from Westport Landing, the attack by the Indians on Fort Bridger, the buffalo hunt and the exciting fording of the swollen river, together with the big intimate scenes more directly connected with the unfolding of the dramatic plot. Short sub-titles give supplementary information concerning the cast and story, as well as everything of advertising and exploitation value directly connected with it.

"See for yourself" is the implied slogan of the featurettes, and it is the opinion of S. R. Kent and other Paramount sales executives that they are going to revolutionize the business of film selling as applied to special productions.

"Bella Donna" Made Into Paramount Film

Pola Negri, George Fitzmaurice, "Bella Donna"—here, indeed, is a combination which, Paramount says, is wonderful to think about. Robert Hichens, author of "The Garden of Allah," wrote this great novel of Egypt in 1909. Dramatized by Bernard Fagan, it was produced by Charles Frohman in 1912-1913, with Alla Nazimova in the title role and created a sensation.

It is the story of a fascinating adventuress who marries an Englishman and goes with him to Egypt. There she comes under the influence of an Arab chief and plots the death of her husband by slow poisoning. The plot is frustrated and the woman is cast upon the hands of her Egyptian wooer who in turn spurns her and leaves her to walk across the desert to oblivion.

Famous Stage Play Filmed by Paramount

William DeMille directed "Grumpy," the play by Horace Hodges and T. W. Percyval, which provided one of the greatest character studies in the history of the modern stage, Paramount says. Clara Beranger, who has written the scenarios of nearly all the recent William DeMille pictures, wrote the adaptation of this play.

"Grumpy" was first presented at the Theatre Royal in Glasgow in September, 1919. Later that same season it opened at Wallack's in New York, where it ran for 180 performances. All the next season it ran in London and in 1915-16 it was brought back to New York for a return engagement. In the film production Theodore Roberts has the title role.

Gloria Swanson in "My American Wife"

This is another of the Sam Wood productions in which Miss Swanson has scored so sensationally ever since she was elevated to stardom by Paramount and made her stellar debut in "The Great Moment." This picture is from an original story by Hector Turnbull, who wrote "The Cheat," and the adaptation was made by Monte M. Katterjohn.

It is the romantic story of a love affair between a rich young American girl and a young Spaniard from the Argentine, who are brought together through the defeat of the latter's favorite race horse by one owned by the girl.

There are some gorgeous scenes laid in the Argentine capital and fans are promised some of the best racetrack and race stuff ever filmed. Antonio Moreno, former Vitagraph star, plays opposite Miss Swanson and Walter Long is also in the cast.

Efficient Publicity in Steady Flow from Offices of Famous Players-Lasky

Information that keeps the public constantly apprised of Paramount's activities comes in a steady flow from Paramount's publicity department, headed by Charles E. McCarthy. The machinery of the department is geared to its highest development in situations where publicity is most needed. For instance, a tremendous publicity campaign has attended the American debut of Pola Negri. Comparatively little known before her arrival in America, this European actress has, in a few months, become the most talked of screen player in the world, and her first American picture, "Bella Donna," is being awaited eagerly as one of the biggest screen events of the season.

Moreover, the half-hundred other screen stars, directors and leading players appearing in Paramount pictures are being kept constantly before the public in newspapers, magazines, theatre programs, and other forms of publicity.

Sheet music and books are also being utilized to bring them favorably to the attention of new audiences. From your piano Paramount players smile at you from the covers of such popular music as "Singed Wings," "To Have and to Hold," "Burning Sands," "The Young Rajah," "The Old Homestead," and other songs.

From your library table you are reminded of Paramount pictures by the illustrated photoplay editions of such books as "Manslaughter," "Blood and Sand," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "The Young Diana," "Burning Sands," "Java Head," "The Covered Wagon," "Bella Donna," "Miss Lulu Bett," "The Glimpses of the Moon" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Forty-eight million newspaper readers learn about Paramount pictures each week from the news service issued by the Paramount publicity department, this being the combined circulation of 860 newspapers who have requested a weekly news service.

The Paramount fashion bureau serves 210 newspapers with a mat service illustrated by the gowns worn in Paramount pictures.

Magazine editors are finding the library of several hundred thousand photographs of Paramount players and productions of increasing value to illustrate their pages with circulation-building material.

The home office staff, consisting of Samuel D. Palmer, J. M. Jerauld, Austin Parker and Glendon Allvine, edit and distribute the photographs and text material prepared at the east and west coast studios. E. W. Wingart handles the publicity matters at the Long Island studio. At the Lasky studio in Hollywood publicity is handled by Adam Hull Shirk, Arch Reeve, Barrett C. Kiesling, A. D. Wilkie, Arnold Prince and James Fidler.

The publicity department works in close co-operation with the advertising department, headed by A. M. Botsford, and with the staff of Paramount exploiteers, directed by Claud Saunders.

"Bohemian Girl" Is a Spectacular Film

American Releasing Corporation has acquired for distribution "The Bohemian Girl," a spectacular picturization of Balfe's famous old opera, directed by Harley Knoles.

The cast is one of the most interesting seen in recent pictures and was recruited from leading lights of the British stage. It is headed by Gladys Cooper, noted alike as the great beauty and the premier dramatic actress of London; Ivor Novello, easily one of the most handsome young men on the screen, who is now in this country under contract to D. W. Griffith; Constance Collier, distinguished on Broadway for performances which ranged from "Nancy Sikes" to "Thais"; C. Aubrey Smith, who made his first New York appearance over twenty years ago with Lady Johnston Forbes-Robertson, then Gertrude Elliott, in Kipling's "The Light That Failed," and who played in the screen version of "As a Man Thinks"; and last, but far from least, the revered Ellen Terry, for years co-star with Sir Henry Irving in plays that made stage history the world over, in this picture making her film debut; with Henry Vibart, Gibb McLaughlin and a hundred others.

"The Bohemain Girl" is a production of more than ordinary magnitude. Brilliant settings, elaborate costumes and marvelously beautiful views of English countryside, with historic old castles and gardens, are photographic triumphs achieved by Rene Guissart, long associated with Maurice Tourneur.

The story is a lively one of considerable heart appeal, concerning the daughter of a nobleman who is reared by a gypsy tribe and is loved by a Polish refugee of noble birth who is also living the nomadic life. It is replete with melodramatic situations and pretty sentiment and its musical accompaniment will bring fresh delight to those who never tire of "I Dreamt That I Dwelt in Marble Halls" and "The Heart Bowed Down." "The Bohemian Girl" is in seven reels and is announced for nation-wide distribution January 14.

"Only 38," a de Mille Production

Elliott Dexter, May McAvoy, George Fawcett and Lois Wilson are featured in this comedy. Suggested by a story by Walter Pritchard Eaton, the idea was dramatized by A. E. Thomas. The screen play is by Clara Beranger, and there are laughs, sentiment and pathos combined in a story of real life as we all know it. It is all about a young widow of a minister, only 38, who decides to "step out" and fairly shocks her own grown-up children. And to cap the climax, she falls in love. It is a typical William de Mille production, with its laughs, chuckles and real pathos.

Thomas Meighan in "White Heat"

Everybody who reads the Saturday Evening Post is familiar with the stories of the steel mills by R. G. Kirk. The author wrote this one especially for Mr. Meighan and is the story of a young steel engineer who runs a small steel plant. There are scenes actually taken in the Pennsylvania steel mills.

The story is a most human one, depicting the rise of a worker through every obstacle, and it will have an appeal for everyone. The love element plays a most important part in the development of the theme and there is a lot of comedy as well as plenty of thrills. Percy Heath is the scenarist and Alfred E. Green the director.

Agnes Ayres in "Contraband"

There is probably no present-day fiction writer who possesses more of the human touch than Clarence Budington Kelland, whose stories appear in Red Book.

This one was published serially, starting in the issue of May, 1922, and is the story of a young girl, charming, attractive, but poor, who suddenly finds herself, through the death of an uncle, owner of a small-town newspaper. She moves in and runs it, and runs it right, without fear or favor, thereby provoking the anger of a wealthy old rascal who holds a mortgage on the paper and is determined by hook or crook to own and control it.

Three More of the Stars Appearing in Famous Players-Lasky Productions

Top to Bottom: Marion Davies, Alice Brady, Pola Negri.

Mary Miles Minter in "Drums of Fate"

Since Mary Miles Minter put up her hair and became a young woman—in the pictures—her popularity has gone forward by leaps and bounds. "Drums of Fate" affords her still greater opportunities than ever before to demonstrate that she is possessed of rare dramatic ability as well as beauty. It is an adaptation of Stephen French Whitman's novel, "Sacrifice," published by D. Appleton & Co.

The story is described as thrilling in the extreme, the locale being Portugese East Africa. M. B. (Lefty) Flynn, former Fox star, who scored so heavily in suport of Dorothy Dalton in "The Woman Who Walked Alone," is Miss Minter's leading man, while George Fawcett, Robert Cain, Casson Ferguson and Bertram Grassby help round out a supporting cast which is hard to beat. Charles Maigne directed.

Marion Davies Film First on Schedule

To "When Knighthood Was in Flower," from the studios of the Cosmopolitan Corporation is accorded the honor of first place on Paramount's February schedule, introducing "The Super-Thirty-Nine" to the public. On this picture Cosmopolitan spent more than a million and a quarter dollars, it is stated.

The success scored by George Fitzmaurice's "To Have and To Hold" and other recent productions of similar type has proved, Paramount states, that the public is educated to the costume picture and will flock to it if it is something more than a spectacle, as many costume pictures of the past have been. Competent critics have given "Knighthood' high praise, and it has been doing big business at the Criterion Theatre in New York and in several other leading cities where it has been playing long runs. Marion Davies has the leading role.

"Children of Jazz" Tells Unique Story

"Children of Jazz" is a story by Harold Brighouse, bearing a title, Paramount says, that in itself is enough to bring people to the box office in droves. Moreover, it is the first Paramount picture to be released as an Alfred E. Green production. Mr. Green has come rapidly to the front since he became a Paramount director, it is stated. His first picture, "The Bachelor Daddy," starring Thomas Meighan, was classed among the best of the past year, according to Paramount, which states also that it enjoys the unusual distinction of registering a full 100 per cent. in entertainment and box-office value in all the hundreds of reports from exhibitors, both the published ones and those received through confidential channels. Since then, Paramount says, Mr. Green has come through with three more big winners, all with Meighan as star—"Our Leading Citizen," "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" and "Back Home and Broke."

In this comedy the lives of the present younger generation and those of the preceding one are vividly contrasted when the children of jazz — some oddly mixed young couples typical of the jazz-mad age —are cast up on an island where a ceremonious old gentleman is living alone in the memories of the past. The natural consequence is that the jazz babies are brought to their senses. In other words, it is a story of regeneration, underlaid with a rich vein of comedy.

Emerson Hough Book Made Into Picture

For the amount of expenditure involved in a successful endeavor to make one of the great classics of the screen, for the number of people employed steadily from the start to the finish of the picture, for the difficulties encountered and overcome and for the mighty theme of the story, "The Covered Wagon," a James Cruze production exceeds anything ever before attempted by Paramount, that producing organization says.

The picturization of Emerson Hough's story of the conquest of the great West was made in Nevada and Utah. Hundreds of people were transported to the big Baker ranch in Nevada, consisting of 200,000 acres. The whole West was combed for every available prairie schooner still in existence and nearly two hundred of them were procured. Their transportation, along with that of the rest of the vast amount of equipment, required thirty special trains. A thousand Indians were rounded up for the staging of a realistic Indian battle, and a real buffalo hunt was held.

"Best Seller" Made Into Paramount Film

Paramount has picturized Edith Wharton's novel, "The Glimpses of the Moon," the first installment of which appeared in Pictorial Review last May. Running serially through the August number, the story was published by D. Appleton & Co. simultaneously with the last installment and has topped the best sellers of fiction every month since, it is stated.

Allan Dwan, who directed "Robin Hood," starring Douglas Fairbanks, was engaged to direct, and Bebe Daniels was chosen to play the leading role. Opposite her is David Powell, while Nita Naldi is seen in a vampire role. Rubye De Remer and Maurice Costello are also in the cast. The picture breathes luxury and wealth, with thousand-dollar gowns by the score set off in lavish backgrounds.

CECIL B. DE MILLE
Director General Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

Pola Negri in "Declassee"

Acknowledged by all as the greatest stage play in which Ethel Barrymore ever appeared, its picturization by George Fitzmaurice with Pola Negri as the star is sure to prove a top-notch box-office attraction. The play was written by Zoe Akins and was presented by Charles Frohman, Inc., at the Empire Theatre, New York, in October, 1919.

There it played to standing room only for many months until it was necessary to give over the theatre to another production. Thereafter it played to records in Chicago and other large cities.

It is the story of a beautiful and fascinating woman with a lofty sense of justice and fair play who is divorced without just cause by a brutal husband. Impoverished, she sinks almost to ruin, but is sustained always by her love for a young man who is not entirely worthy.

The denouement is tragic, the role being just the kind best suited to Miss Negri's wonderful dramatic talent. The scenario is by Ouida Bergere.

Cosmopolitan Films "Vendetta"

There is probably no piece of modern literature more wonderfully suited to the screen than Marie Corelli's famous novel, "Vendetta." It is probably literally true that millions have read it, for it is probably the most successful of all the stories by the widely read author of "Thelma," "Wormwood," "The Young Diana" and "The Sorrows of Satan."

It is the thrilling story of a man who, supposedly dead, returns with a fabulous fortune and wreaks vengeane upon his enemies. Cosmopolitan has given it a magnificent setting, fully worthy of the great story. Frances Marion wrote the scenario and Alan Crosland directed.

Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens are the featured players.

Dorothy Dalton in "Dark Secrets"

After an absence of many months, Dorothy Dalton returns to the Paramount schedule in "Dark Secrets," to renew her acquaintance with her legion of admirers whose numbers were so increased by her pictures of the past year, "The Siren Call," "The Woman Who Walked Alone" and "Moran of the Lady Letty." Edmund Goulding, talented not only as an actor and director but also as an author, wrote the story of "Dark Secrets" and Victor Fleming directed.

The action carries the spectator from a magnificant Long Island estate to London and then to Cairo. A thrilling feature of the picture is a battle between Miss Dalton and an untamable Arabian horse which throws her and makes her a hopeless cripple, it seems. Robert Ellis is leading man and Jose Ruben shines in the supporting cast.

Jack Holt in "Nobody's Money"

No star in all the Paramount galaxy has come forward faster than Jack Holt, according to an announcement from Famous Players-Lasky, and here is a picture which is bound to make him more secure than ever in the hearts of fans. On the legitimate stage this play by William De Baron had a long run last year in New York, and with its crook plot and underlying comedy it has lent itself admirably to picturization.

Yes, "Nobody's Money" is a comedy-drama. Wallace Worsley was specially engaged to direct and a fine cast was assembled for the picture. Wanda Hawley, star in her own right, plays opposite Mr. Holt, with Robert Schable, Walter McGrail, Julia Faye, Charles French and Will R. Walling prominent in the support.

Betty Compson in "The White Flower"

The beautiful scenery and romantic atmosphere of Hawaii are transferred directly to the screen in "The White Flower," which will be Betty Compson's first picture in the Super Thirty-Nine. It is a Hawaiian story, replete with native romance revolving about a half-caste native girl.

Julia Crawford Ivers, known to the picture public only as a director up to five years ago, but who since then has been a leading member of the Paramount scenario staff, wrote the original story as well as the scenario, and then directed the picture.

She went to Hawaii for material for her story and then took the entire company over there to make the picture. Edmund Lowe, Edward Martindel, Arline Pretty, Sylvia Ashton and Arthur Hoyt are among those who will be seen in the cast.

The Paramount Date Book, 1923

Unique among advertising booklets is the Paramount Date Book which has been prepared by the advertising department.

Covered in limp cloth binding and printed in colors, this booklet contains a full-page or two-page illustrated announcement on each of The Super Thirty-Nine and these are followed by short illustrated official buildings and brief synopses of all of The Famous Forty-One.

There are also brief seasonal announcements by Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and S. R. Kent, but the main feature of the booklet is a complete exhibitor's booking guide and cost sheet for the entire year 1923. Each page covers a week's bookings with ample space allotted for entries covering each day's feature, comedy and miscellaneous films; accessories, including lithographs, lobby displays, heralds, etc., the cost of picture, cost of advertising and day's receipts.

This handsome and handy souvenir of The Super Thirty-Nine is now being distributed through the exchanges to all Paramount exhibitors.

Betty Compson in Veiller Story

"Setting a thief to catch a thief," or the regeneration of a clever girl crook who helps a young lawyer to bring to justice some powerful millionaires who are defrauding the people of their rights, is the theme of this story by Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair."

With its absorbing plot, fine dramatic situations, well worked up and surprising climax, its love interest and with Betty Compson in the title role, it comes close to perfection as screen melodrama. Among other big dramatic scenes it offers the unusual spectacle of a convict escaping from prison by means of a rope lowered from an airplane.

"Light to Leeward" Is Jack Holt's Next

Remember what a good picture "Cappy Ricks" was? This story is by the same author, Peter B. Kyne, who also wrote "The Pride of Palomar" and "While Satan Sleeps," and like "Cappy Ricks," it is a sea story.

It is a story of shipwrecks and battles with the elements, in which Jack Holt, in the he-man role of the skipper of a lumber schooner, not only saves a steamer in distress in a Pacific storm, but the life of his young wife as well. The scenario is by Jack Cunningham, and Joseph Henabery is the director.

Daniels and Lytell in "The Exciters"

This adaptation by Julia Crawford Ivers of the play by Martin Brown which ran this season at the Times Square Theatre, New York, is best described as a melodramatic comedy. It is a flapper story with a new twist, and Bebe Daneils is ideally cast as the girl whose whole life is spent in a search for excitement.

Bert Lytell lends his attractive personality in the role of a handsome young detective. The cast is a large one, and some of the foremost Paramount players will be seen in support of the stars.

Walter Hiers in Big Comedy

With this picture Paramount introduces a new star in the person of Walter Hiers, his entrance into the select circle being in deference to numerous requests from exhibitors as well as in recognition of his pronounced talent as a comedian. Dana Burnet wrote this story of a necktie salesman who spent his last dime and then found himself embroiled in a life of adventure and romance. The part was made to order for the jovial Walter.

The story was published in Red Book and contains a surprise every minute and a laugh every second. Albert Shelby Le Vino wrote the scenario and Wallace Worsley directed. Jacqueline Logan is featured opposite Mr. Hiers, and Clarence Burton, George Field and Lucien Littlefield are in the cast.

Marion Davies in "Adam and Eva"

Cosmopolitan has made a fine picture out of this play by Guy Bolton and George Middleton which was a big success on the New York stage and found its picture rights in brisk demand. Luther Reed wrote the scenario and Robert G. Vignola, who produced "When Knighthood Was in Flower," directed.

It is the story of a man who turned his family over to a young go-getter and came back to find them all changed. Its theme is universally popular, the laughs are many and the love interest is most appealing. Probably no other screen actress is so well adapted to the leading role as Miss Davies, and Cosmopolitan has surrounded her with a fine cast, including T. Roy Barnes and Tom Lewis.

Alice Brady in "The Snow Bride"

This story of the Far North was written by Sonya Levien and Julie Herne, two talented members of the Paramount scenario staff, and Miss Levien wrote the screen adaptation. Miss Brady has a great emotional role, that of a fur trader's daughter.

"You Can't Fool Your Wife"

This is a George Melford production, enough in itself to ensure its box-office success. And what a punch that title carries! What possibilities for exploitation and advertising! Waldemar Young wrote the story, basing it upon an original by Hector Turnbull.

The theme is one that always attracts, albeit the eternal triangle is given a new twist. Leatrice Joy, who leaped into the spotlight of popularity with her performance as Lydia Thorne in "Manslaughter"; Nita Naldi, the alluring Dona Sol of "Blood and Sand," and Lewis Stone, one of the finest dramatic actors on the screen, are the featured players.

Dorothy Dalton in "Fog Bound"

The story of "Fog Bound" was published in the Argosy-All Story Magazine, Jack Bechdolt being the author. The scenario is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. The role which Miss Dalton plays is a most picturesque one, that of a girl who lives alone on an island out in the straits that lead to the Pacific working a truck farm that her father has left her.

Known as an independent, pugnacious individual, she is left alone until one day when her peace is disturbed by the arrival of a criminal and his pursuers.

Jack Holt in "Tiger's Claw"

This is an original story by Jack Cunningham, one of the most talented of the Lasky studio staff of scenario writers. Joseph Henabery directed and the cast includes Eva Novak, leading woman; Bertram Grassby, George Periolat, George Field, Aileen Pringle, Evelyn Selby and others. Holt plays the part of an engineer in the jungles of India, who eventually is called upon to choose between the love of a true white girl and that of a faithless native with whom he allows himself to become infatuated. The atmosphere of this picture is essentially Indian, with such interesting details as a tiger hunt, East Indian magic and native dances, all supervised by experts who have spent many years over there.

"The Go-Getter"

Peter B. Kyne, author of "Cappy Ricks," "While Satan Sleeps" and "The Pride of Palomar," wrote this story and it is one of his best. It possibly has been more widely read than any other story ever written by that popular American fictionist. Its theme is most inspiring, relating how a certain man surmounted many obstacles and finally got the thing he was sent for.

The Cosmopolitan Corporation has given it a splendid production, entrusting the scenario to John Lynch and the direction to E. H. Griffith. A fine cast was chosen, headed by Seena Owen, T. Roy Barnes, Tom Lewis and William Norris, all of whom are featured.

In the Independent Field

Newsy Items of the Market Here and There

Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, left on the Twentieth Century Tuesday afternoon for the Coast, where he will remain until after the holidays. He will spend the holidays with his folks and incidentally confer with Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg concerning Principal's 1923 plans.

Another independent distributor who left for the Coast this week was Harry M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers. Mr. Warner left on Thursday and is slated to arrive in Los Angeles next Monday. He has several important deals to close there. This is his second trip to the Coast in three weeks.

Sam Grand of the Federated Film Exchange of Boston, following a trip to Chicago where he conferred with Joe Friedman of Celebrated Film Players Corporation in connection with Federated Exchanges' matters, visited New York. He is negotiating with George Wiley for the New England rights to "Malcolm Strauss Salome," which will be distributed in the independent market.

The Loew Circuit in New York starts to show Al Lichtman's "Shadows" about January 8. The opening will be at the State Theatre on Broadway. It is said that Mr. Lichtman placed the picture with the Loew Circuit without awaiting a first-run engagement because he did not want an opening at a big Broadway house, for it would have delayed the picture's general relcase until late in January.

C. C. Burr's "Sure Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, will be the New Year's week bill at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre in New York, according to announcement made this week in New York.

Edward Earle, star in Burton King's two Arrow pictures, "Shylock of Wall Street" and "Streets of New York," is making personal appearances in conjunction with the showing of those pictures at metropolitan theatres.

The November list of "Pictures for Selected Programs," used by the National Committee for Beter Films, in affiliation with the Natioual Board of Review, have selected four Arrow comedies. These are "Why Not Now?" an Eddie Lyons two-reeler; the Broadway comedy, "Stay Down East," featuring Eddie Barry, and the Mirth Quake comedies, "One Stormy Orphan" and "No Luck," starring Bobby Dunn.

Hopp Hadley this week completed arrangements whereby Oscar Lund's production, "Love's Old Sweet Song," will be realesed through Norca Pictures, Inc. The picture features Louis Wolheim and Donald Gallagher.

Independent Pictures Corporation, of which Jesse J. Goldberg is the head, announced this week that it had acquired the world rights to twelve two-reel Nick Carter detective stories, made by Murray W. Garsson, Inc., the first four of which have been completed.

Post Nature pictures this week were sold to Balaban & Katz for northern Illinois, according to a report made by Holmes C. Walton, who is handling the distribution of these pictures.

Kenneth Webb, who directed "Secrets of Paris" for Whitman Bennett, has completed his latest vaudeville sketch. "The Moth and His Flame," which Joe Hart Enterprises will produce for vaudeville house presentations.

The Week in Review

THAT New Year's week will be one replete with important announcements concerning the independent market in general is a fact with which those on the "inside" are well acquainted. Deals under way provide for the appearance in independent pictures of some of the best known stars on the screen. Because of the status of these deals, this department cannot at this time even hint at their identity. But their acquisition will further substantiate the contention that the "independent has arrived at last!"

ANOTHER week and Christmas will have been here. And for the independents who worked conscientiously, industriously and energetically it will indeed be a merry, merry Christmas. We have everything to rejoice over. We are proud of the independent market and those interested in it. Its leaders have proven themselves real generals, they have overcome one of the most trying seasons this business has ever known—and what is more, they have emerged from the struggle triumphantly, stronger and far more powerful.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD takes this opportunity of thanking all those who so kindly and so willingly co-operated with us in giving the trade a newsy and up-to-date section. We have received hundreds of letters from exhibitors, exchangemen, producers, distributors, stars and directors praising our department. But you—Moving Picture World readers—are responsible, for without your co-operation, without your encouragement, without your material assistance we could not have prospered, we could not have given you the newsy section we have tried to present to you week in and week out.

IF we have served you, we have you to thank, for you have been the inspiration and you have furnished the material. Independents have no one but themselves to thank for their progress. Their struggle has not always been the encouraging one that it is today. The future was not as bright nor as promising as it is today. They had to fight every inch of the way. And they did, honestly and with a sincerity that has blessed them with an enviable place in an industry that is truly just coming into its own.

THE independent market has encouraged truly big men to come into its midst. And we have welcomed these gentlemen with wide open arms for they have already accomplished wonders for the market. They have set a pace that only the truly sincere workers have been able to keep up with. We are proud of Warner Brothers, because they set a pace that marked the beginning of a new and greater era for independents. They stimulated an interest that has prompted us to do big things.

ALL about us we see signs of prosperity. We have been particularly careful in our observations of play dates allotted independent pictures. We have instructed our correspondents in principal cities in every State in the Union to furnish us weekly with reports and lists of pictures playing in those territories. We have carefully compared these reports and lists from week to week. We have seen big circuits, that a year ago absolutely ignored the independent, contracting for our product for showings at theatres that in the past were closed to independent pictures.

NEVER before have there been such notable productions submitted to exhibitors by the open market. Al Lichtman Corporation has furnished two of the greatest pictures of the year in "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows." The latter production will rank as one of the most artistic pictures ever turned out in this business. But more than anything else, independent pictures of quality have found a ready audience.

THE production end, too, has made rapid strides. We find men like B. P. Schulberg, Louis Gasnier, Tom Forman, Wallace Worsley, Harry Rapf, C. C. Burr, Will Nigh, Dell Henderson, Whitman Bennett, Daniel Carson Goodman and many, many others producing box office attractions for the open market, sparing neither money, time nor effort in procuring the proper talent. We see about us a group of progressive men like Al Lichtman, Harry Warner, C. C. Burr, Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, Irving and Sol Lesser, Louis Baum, Bobby North and others, all planning for bigger and even better productions for 1923.

BUT the greatest victory of independents in 1922 came in the form of exhibitor confidence and patronage. Exhibitors today are patronizing exchanges with quality pictures. The independent product of 1922-23 has proved a profitable investment—and today we find exhibitors clamoring for more pictures like "Shadows," "Heroes of the Street," "Rich Men's Wives," "Ten Nights In a Barroom," "Sure Fire Flint," "What's Wrong With the Women?" "The World's a Stage," "Secrets of Paris," "Rags to Riches," "I Am the Law," and "Notoriety."

Many First Runs Arranged for Chaney Picture

The following theatres have signed contracts to run "Shadows," second release of the Al Lichtman Corporation:

The Southern, Columbus, O.; Keith's Theatre in Dayton, O.; the Virginia, Charleston, W. Va.; Strand, Cincinnati; the Hippodrome, Youngstown, O.; the Rivoli, Toledo, O.; the Garden, Muskegon, Mich.; the Rialto, San Antonio, Tex.; the America, Denver; the Apollo, Indianapolis, Ind.; the Butterfly, Milwaukee, Wis.; the State, Jersey City; the State, Union Hill, N. J.; the Rialto, Passaic, N. J.; the Bijou and Capitol, Atlantic City, N. J.; the Carman and Knickerbocker in Philadelphia; the Lyric, Allentown, Pa.; the Main, Uniontown, Pa.; the Nemo, Johnstown, Pa.; the Delmonte, St. Louis; the Strand, Worcester, Mass., and Fays's, Rochester, N. Y.

Many bookings for "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" have also been received, these including the Strand, Worcester, Mass.; the American, Troy, N. Y.; the Strand, Altoona, Pa.; the Nemo, Johnstown, Pa.; the Strand, Bayonne, N. J.; the Capitol and Palace, Passaic, N. J.; the Garden, Muskegon, Mich.; the Alcazar, Birmingham, Ala.; the Capitol and Strand, Cincinnati; the Southern and Colonial, Columbus, O., and the Keith Theatre in Dayton, O.

Business Booms in Michigan

DETROIT (Special)—Bookings at local independent film exchanges indicate a steady improvement in business in this territory. The first-run situation is gradually solving itself, according to observing showmen.

Manager Carl Sonin, of the Warner Exchange, reports that "Rags To Riches" and the seven other Warner features have been sold first-run in Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Lansing and Jackson, which practically completes the key towns in this territory.

Jess Foshman, manager of the Detroit Standard and Al Lichtman exchanges, is back on the job following a two-week vacation spent in Cleveland. Fishman is one of the most popular exchangemen in this territory and the vacation was his first in ten years.

Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand Theatre here, has booked "An Old Sweetheart of Mine" for a world premier showing here, this week.

Exclusive Film Exchange here has started exploitation on the first Bobby North-Larry Weber special, "Notoriety," produced by Will Nigh.

Bookings on the first Al Lichtman special, "Rich Men's Wives," extend away into February, according to Jess Fishman, of the Detroit Al Lichtman Exchange.

Edward J. Le Saint, producer for C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, arrived on the Coast early this week and will start production on the third picture, "Temptation." This is the second of C. B. C.'s "Big Six" program.

Creole Enterprises, Ltd., of New Orleans, has purchased the Weiss Brothers' feature one-reel novelty, "Expose of Cutting a Lady in Half," for Louisiana, Mississippi and parts of Texas, Florida and Arkansas.

"The Hero" Lichtman's Next Release; Closes for Many New Productions

"The Hero" is the December release of Preferred Pictures through the Al Lichtman Corporation. The picture is a Gasnier Production and is that director's third for Preferred. The others were "Rich Men's Wives" which launched the Lichtman Corporation and the second, "Thorns and Orange Blossoms."

The new Gasnier release is based on the stage play of that name by Gilbert Emery which was first given in New York at special matinees in the Spring of 1921. It was then taken off the boards and put on that fall when it had an extended run. The legitimate version had Richard Bennett, Robert Ames and Fania Marinoff in the principal roles. In the screen version, the major parts are portrayed by Gaston Glass, Barbara La Marr, John Sainpolis, Doris Pawn, Martha Mattox, David Butler, Ethel Shannon and Frankie Lee.

The story deals with the return to a small town of Oswald Lane who joined the Foreign Legion at the opening of the war while his brother, a dull, good-natured plodding sort of an individual remained at home with flat feet and a job of keeping a roof over his family and mother. In the excitement over Oswald's return the family forgets the grief caused by him previous to the war. After Os gets settled, he makes advances to Hester, his brother's wife and when Andrew, the brother is entrusted with the safeguarding of $500 raised to launch a building fund, Oswald discovers it and leaves the house despite the pleadings of Hester, who discovered him in the act. The next day the schoolhouse starts afire and before Andrew has a chance to discover the theft, everyone rushes to the scene. There Oswald saves the life of his little nephew Andy but in so doing endangers his own. Skin grafting is necessary. Andrew volunteers and while this is underway, Hester manages to return the money undetected to the original hiding place. Oswald recovers still admired by everyone but Hester discovers a new sort of heroism in her husband, Andrew. Oswald is reunited with Marthe, a Belgian girl who had been taken in by the Lane family as their "bit" to help humanity.

Wesley Barry to Make Personal Appearance

Following the premiere presentation of the Warner Brothers picture, "Heroes of the Street," a Harry Rapf production featuring Wesley Barry, at the Strand Theatre, New York, during the week of December 17, the freckled youngster will start on the first lap of a twelve weeks' personal appearance tour, according to Harry M. Warner.

The tour will take Barry from New York to Los Angeles. En route to the coast he will appear in a specially written skit at a number of first run theatres showing his latest picture, "Heroes of the Street." "Freckles" is expected to arrive on the coast about March 1, after which he will begin the first of three productions scheduled for next season.

Mr. Warner has secured for the youngster, as starring vehicles, two of George M. Cohan's stage successes, "Little Johnny Jones" and "George Washington, Jr." and Charles Dickens' fiction masterpiece, "David Copperfield." It is said that the Dickens novel will be the first production to be directed by William Beaudine, who has been placed under contract to direct the three features under the supervision of Sam and Jack Warner.

"Environment" Title of Principal Feature

Announcement was made this week by Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, that the latest Irving Cummings production tentatively entitled "Chicago Sal" had been permanently entitled "Environment." This is the production starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills and dealing with the underworld of Chicago and rural life in Indiana, involving the redemption of a woman who had inherited the leadership of a crooked gang from her father, only to find peace, love and happiness in the Hoosier country.

Whe nthe picture was completed Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg together with Producer Cummings decided that a change in the title, which at that time was "Chicago Sal" would increase the exploitation value of the production, which has been highly praised by critics in New York and on the Coast. Consequently, Eastern Manager Lesser arranged a special showing at which editors, reviewers and writers representing all the trade papers and metropolitan newspapers together with a number of film folks were present. As an inducement Mr. Lesser announced that the person whose title was finally accepted would be given a prize of $100.

Something like two hundred different title suggestions were received from the newspaper fraternity. It required two weeks and considerable telegraphing between Principal Pictures Corporation's New York and Los Angeles offices before the title "Environment" was finally selected. The successful applicant was M. H. Hoffman of Tiffany Productions, Inc., who this week received a check for $100.

Production Starts on New Equity Special

Daniel Carson Goodman's second production for Equity Players, to follow "What Wrong With the Women?" was put into production last week by Mr. Goodman at the 44th Street Studios, New York. The title, "Something for Nothing," which was announced several weeks ago, has been changed to "Has the World Gone Mad?" and will be released under that name.

Daniel Carson Goodman is the author and the producer of this new production. His director is J. Searle Dawley. In accordance with Mr. Goodman's policy the cast will be all-star in his own right; Robert Edeson, Hedda Hopper, who played in "What's Wrong With the Women?"; Elinor Fair and Vincent Coleman.

While Mr. Goodman is not as yet ready to announce the theme of his new production it is understood that it will be a modern society drama, built around a powerful and vital theme. Mr. Goodman's reputation as an author was established by his past work for D. W. Griffith and other prominent productions. His own production, "Thoughtless Women," produced three years ago, was a forerunner to "What's Wrong With the Women?" which was successfully released by Equity as one of the biggest independent specials of the past year.

News From Eastern Studios

The Independent Finance Corporation has been incorporated for the purpose of financing independent productions. Headquarters have been established at 522 Fifth Avenue. Schuyler C. Hodge is President, B. E. Peck, Vice-President and E. G. Munz, Secretary-Treasurer. Walter F. Tilford, President of Tilford Cinema Corporation, owners of Tilford studios, is on the Board of Directors. Sidney Olcott, President of the M. P. D. A., and Robert E. Sherwood, motion picture editor of The New York Herald, are on the Advisory Board.

"Sally in Our Alley" will be produced sometime next February by the Arthur Maude Productions, Inc. The story is based on an old English song of that title. Maude is also planning to make a series of twelve two-reel pictures based on famous paintings.

Just what the next picture that Amalgamated Productions, Inc., will make is not made known. No publicity whatsoever regarding the activities or plans of this company, which set out to release twenty-six pictures annually, has been given out, either at the New York office or New Rochelle studio, which was leased for the making of the first picture, "The Woman in Chains."

J. Searle Dawley was signed this week to direct the second Daniel Carson Goodman production for Equity Pictures Corporation. The picture is now being produced at the 44th Street Studios in New York City.

B. B. Productions, Inc., with the second Betty Blythe production, "Darling of the Rich," completed and ready for delivery of prints to exchanges, this week started work on the third Blythe feature. This production has been entitled "The Garden of Desire." William T. Carlton, Tyrone Power and Fred Jones also are in the cast. Lawrence Windom, formerly with Essanay, Famous Players and Goldwyn, will direct.

With the second Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., feature, "Lost in a Big City" completed, Lulu Case Russell, author of the screen version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and "Lost in a Great City," has completed the continuity on "The Broken Violin" for Atlantic Features, Inc. Jack Dillon is directing this feature, which Arrow Film Corporation will release.

"Oh, Ye Fools" is the title of the second production that Edgar Lewis will make for distribution through Mastodon Films, Inc., of which C. C. Burr is President. The story for this production was written by Mr. Lewis. The first Edgar Lewis picture for Burr is "Fires of Youth."

Production is now well under way on the second Daniel Carson Goodman picture which Equity Pictures Corporation will distribute on the independent plan. While it was stated last week that the title "Something for Nothing" had been accepted, it became known this week that while Goodman had copyrighted that title, Equity has not definitely passed on it.

A new independent producing company is being formed in Boston, Mass., for the purpose of producing two-reel comedy subjects for the independent market. Several directors of the new company were in New York this week seeking material.

As soon as Elmer Clifton has completed the task of arranging for the distribution of "Down to the Sea in Ships" he will return to New Bedford, Mass. and make another picture which capitalists there will finance. This is not expected to happen, however, until sometime next year.

J. Barney Sherry and Edmund Breese have to their distinction the fact that they hold the independent picture appearance record. Mr. Sherry has appeared in more than thirty productions that have been released during the current year.

Dell Henderson starts production on the fourth Pine Tree Pictures Corporation picture some time next month, according to an item that was published last week in a Portland, Me., newspaper.

Weiss Brothers are planning an extensive production program for next season. This firm already has two big costume spectacles: "Between Worlds" and "After Six Days," the latter a Bible feature.

School Children, Policemen and Others Aid Warner Brothers' Exploitation Stunt

Over 2,000 children of members of the New York Police Department were accorded an unusual reception this week at a special morning performance of the Warner Brothers picture, "Heroes of the Street," a Harry Rapf production featuring Wesley Barry, at the Strand Theatre. A preview presentation of the feature was held at the Knickerbocker Theatre, Philadelphia, on December 9 by Lou Berman, of the Independent Film Corp., who is handling the Warner series of seven productions.

The youngsters at the Strand showing were particularly thrilled when Wesley Barry appeared in person to greet them. The reception was made possible through the efforts of several officials of the police department and Mrs. Julia M. Loft, Hon. Deputy Commissioner, who acted as hostess.

A special permit was secured from the police, and a brass band composed of 100 boys marched from Columbus Circle to the Strand, headed by Barry who was arrayed in the uniform of a juvenile policeman. Behind this procession came the Warner Brothers float, advertising their seven productions for this season, carrying a special display for "Heroes of the Street."

As Barry came to view police caps were distributed to the youngsters who cheered the freckled star for several minutes. Just before the picture was shown, Barry appeared on the stage and greeted his little friends. He was followed by six of the bravest heroes of the police and fire departments who were awarded cash prizes through the courtesy of Harry M. Warner. The six men had performed conspicuous feats of heroism during the past year, and the cash award was made to serve as an added inspiration to other members of their respective departments.

Magnates Journey to Coast Homes

LOS ANGELES — (Special)— With the advent of the holidays many independent distributors with headquarters in New York are slated to visit their old stamping grounds in Los Angeles. Al Lichtman, of Preferred Pictures Corporation and Al Lichtman Exchanges, is here and has been holding a series of conferences with Producer Benjamin P. Schulberg. Another important meeting of independents is set for late next week when the officials of Principal Pictures Corporation get together for a pow-wow to fix production schedules for next season. This new corporation will produce something like 26 pictures next year and all of them will be released in the open market.

There is something big brewing at the Warner Studios, for next week Harry M. Warner is slated to make his second trip here in three weeks. He will immediately go into conference with Abe, Sam and Jack Warner and Harry Rapf concerning a number of productions for next season. The Warner forces are completing work on the seven 1922-23 releases and it is expected that the last of these will have been completed by the first of the year, when work will start on the 1923-24 product, which calls for eighteen productions.

Warner Brothers have spent an enormous amount of money on "The Little Church Around the Corner," which was completed several weeks ago and shown to some officials here last week. Those who have seen this production characterize it as the best picture the Warners ever handled, while several writers who were privileged with seeing the picture at the studio projection room, report it to be one of the greatest pictures ever made. A new story has been worked around the title.

When Al Lichtman returns to New York this month he will make a number of important announcements concerning the production plans of that company. The firm already has acquired possession of a number of plays which it will adapt to the screen, but these, in all probability, will not be included in the 1922-23 schedule.

Arthur Trimble, whose two-reel starring vehicles, "The Adventures of Prince Courageous," are being distributed on the independent market through the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., is preparing to make a series of personal appearances in New York, Cleveland, St. Louis, Chicago and San Francisco, according to Morris R. Schlank, President of Anchor.

Casting on "Temptation," which is scheduled to be the third release on the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series of Six Box Office Winners, is going forward rapidly. Edward J. LeSaint, who directed the first two features of the series, "More to be Pitied" and "Only a Shopgirl," and who will also direct "Temptation," is himself preparing the continuity on this third feature.

East Coast Productions, Inc., announces that "Robin Hood Jr.," the first of the new Frankie Lee series of comedy dramas, has been completed on the West Coast and is now on the way to New York. The director of this comedy drama series is Clarence Bricker, who has been associated in production with several of the country's biggest stars and directors.

Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast states that "Robin Hood Jr." is by no means a slapstick comedy, or in fact a straight comedy, but is a comedy drama. This will be the form of the subsequent two-reelers, also, in which little Frankie Lee is starred.

"Fatty" Karr, who is being groomed to succeed Roscoe Arbuckle on the screen, has already started production on his second comedy of his two-reel series. The first one, "Weight For Me," was completed last month and has been shipped East. Franklyn E. Backer, President of East Coast Productions, Inc., states that the initial comedy fulfills every expectation and predicts that within a few months Karr will build up a tremendous following.

In his second comedy, which is called "Long Skirts." Karr has for his leading woman Lilymae Lyle, who has appeared in a number of big productions.

Many Changes in Publicity Forces

A number of changes will go into effect in the publicity departments of several independent distributing companies in New York, it was learned this week. E. O. Van Pelt, well known in the distribution and production field, after serving Producers Security Corporation as promotion and foreign department manager, resigned this week. No successor has been mentioned. Mr. Van Pelt has not divulged his future plans, although he has several deals under way. Prior to invading the picture business Mr. Van Pelt was associated with road shows.

R. W. Baremore has resigned from the editorial staff of the New York Morning Telegraph to take over the direction of advertising and publicity for the various interests of Charles C. Burr. He will assume his new duties on Dec. 18. Baremore was one of the original members of the Exhibitors Trade Review during the Haring-Blumenthal regime. He for a time was also publicity director for United Picture Theatres and Productions. Lately he has been editing the exhibitor department for The Morning Telegraph. He was advertising manager for several other concerns and is one of the most competent and best-liked publicity men in the business and should do much in the way of bringing the C. C. Burr attractions to the front.

Boone Mancall, former newspaperman and for the last several years engaged in special picture publicity and exploitation work, has been appointed press representative for Mastodon Films, Inc., according to an announcement made this week by C. C. Burr. He will work under R. W. Baremore. Mr. Mancall is well known as a newspaper man and was at one time exploitation manager for Universal in New Orleans.

Dr. Shallenberger Denies Kahn Deal

In a letter to this department, received this week, Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, denied the report received from Omha, Neb., last week that a deal was pending between his firm and Al Kahn of the Crescent Exchange of that city. Mr. Shallenberger said: "There was no deal made with Mr. Kahn whil I was there (in Omaha) and so far as I know Mr. Kahn has no better chance to handle our product in that territory than any other exchange."

Anchor Film Co. Head Busy

Inquiries for territorial rights to productions released through the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., are pouring into Morris R. Schlank's office, according to advices received from Frank Cavender, assistant to Mr. Schlank, the latter now being en tour. Letters are being received daily by Mr. Cavender.

"Notoriety" Proves a Box Office Landslide in Big First Run Theatres in Three Cities

Will Nigh has done it again. This time he has done it with the Bobby North-L. Lawrence Weber special, "Notoriety." The man who made "School Days" and "Why Girls Leave Home," has come out seemingly with another smash that was tested at two houses last week and at another first run house this week. At Edward F. Albee's spacious Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I., this week "Notoriety" on the same bill with another North & Weber production, "The Curse of Drink," gave every promise of breaking the house record, established last year by Arrow's "Ten Nights In A Barroom." The double bill proved a good plug on Monday for the house, according to a wire from Manager Matt Reilly, was jammed at every show. That the pictures entertained satisfactorily was demonstrated by the huge turnout on the following days when Monday's business was equalled and an extra show had to be shoved in. The press criticisms were laudatory with "Notoriety" getting the greater space. One of the papers—The Providence News—grabbed the feature possibilities of "Notoriety" and used them in connection with the news break relative to the big drug raid in New York and involving Evelyn Nesbit, formerly Mrs. Harry Thaw, whose alleged letters to the suspected drug trafficker were seized by the police. A personal wire to the writer indicated that with the turnaway crowds on Tuesday night and the early turnout Wednesday morning as criterions, the North & Weber pictures would set the season record, at least for this house. This, despite the fact that the management did little or no outside exploitation on either production.

Nigh's uncanny intuition of the box office appeal was demonstrated again last week when "Notoriety" was given its first showings in the country at the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, N. Y., and at the Alamo Theatre in Louisville, Ky. Without the blare of trumpets "Notoriety" entered on its full week run at both theatres and surprised its own enthusiasts when it held the audience under its spell and kept them coming continuously. Handicapped by a bad break in the weather when sleet and snow threatened to keep picture patrons at home, "Notoriety" proved its appeal by standing them in line from the opening of the doors until late in the evening. In both Albany and Louisville the other houses fell off in attendance while "Notoriety" picked up steadily.

The exceptional endurance of Weber & North's Will Nigh production can only be realized when it is borne in mind that the Christmas shopping season was on its way and the dreaded Yuletide season was making its influence felt as a detraction from picture patronage. The Clinton Square Theatre, Albany, which opened on a Monday, the blue-day of the week, lined them out beyond the box-office with standees filling all balcony and orchestra seats. As the patrons came out they expressed their surprise at being treated to a picture that was "different."

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—(Special)—"Intrigue," the Pola Negri special, was booked into the Strand Theatre this week following much local publicity given the Pola Negri-Charles Chaplin press yarn. Cleverly exploited, the picture went over big at the opening.

INDIANAPOLIS—(Special)—Despite the Christmas shopping season, Equity's "What's Wrong With The Women" opened at the Apollo Theatre here Sunday night to one of the biggest day's business that house has recorded in some time. The Monday turnout was also big, with indications that the engagement would prove a big financial success.

INDIANAPOLIS—(Special) — Jack Hoxie, the western star, is characterized locally by showmen as the best western star draw playing in pictures hereabouts. The star appears this week at the Isis Theatre in "Riders of The Night" and the opening show was a profitable one. The matinees were in many cases as big as the evening.

PITTSBURGH—(Special)—The Rowland & Clark circuit has booked both C. C. Burr features, "Sure Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, and "Secrets of Paris," with an all-star cast. The latter picture got its premier showing in this territory at the Blackstone Theatre here Monday.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(Special)—Arrow's "Ten Nights In A Barroom" was given its local premier showing at the Leader Theatre this week. The picture was elaborately exploited.

BOSTON—(Special)—Al Lichtman's "Shadows," with Lon Chaney starred and topped in all billing, got off to a flying start Sunday at Gordon's Beacon and Modern theatres. The picture was given wonderful newspaper notices.

BOSTON—(Special)—Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships" continues setting new marks for attendance at picture shows at Selwyn's Theatre here. The picture is now in its third week, the engagement having been made possible through the cancellation at that house of a legitimate attraction and the failure of "It's A Boy."

CHICAGO — (Special)—Three important first run engagements for the C. C. Burr special, "Sure Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, were closed this week. The million-dollar Chicago theatre will show the feature on January 8, with the Riviera and Tivoli theatres playing the same feature day and date week of January 22.

DETROIT—(Special)—"Shadows" is playing at the Broadway-Strand Theatre. The notices given this Al Lichtman release by Detroit critics were very favorable. The picture opened big Sunday night.

PAWTUCKET, R. I. — (Special) — Zena Keefe will make a personal appearance at "Old Home Week" at the Bijou Theatre here next week in conjunction with the showing of "The Broken Silence," in which she appears.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—(Special)—Arrangements were concluded here this week whereby all the Principal Pictures Corporation's specials will be given premier showings at the Kinema Theatre. "Mind Over Motor" is booked for a showing here. This is the January Principal release.

Independents in Southwest Boom

DALLAS, TEX. (Special) — Independent productions here are gaining steadily in popularity, judging from reports made by various leading State rights exchanges here. The demand, however, seems to be for the bigger ballyho productions, exhibitors here pointing out that in order to put over an independent production they must necessarily have something they term "big" on which to hang their exploitation.

A. & R. Film Exchange here is using a catchline that is serving a good purpose in all its advertising matter. It is as follows: "We have emergency programs, so when you are held up get in touch with us." This exchange has stocked up with racing and western productions and next year will enlarge its short subject department.

True Film Company is still making money on pictures that have been played out in seemingly all other territories. These pictures include C. C. Burr's "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," with Johny Hines; "His Nibs," with Chic Sales; "Heart of the North," "The County Fair," "Yankee Doodle," "The Whip" and "In the Days of Buffalo Bill."

P. A. Bacon, formerly advertising man with the Ringling Brothers' Circus, has opened a new advertising and exploitation agency here, working on a number of independent accounts at present.

"His Nibs," with Chic Sales starred, has been booked by the Hohlitzelle circuit, playing the Majestic in Dallas, Dec. 10; Majestic, Houston, Dec. 17; Majestic, San Antonio, Dec. 24, and Majestic, Fort Worth, Dec. 31.

Frank Fay, President of the Southwestern Film Corporation, is moving his exchange into the new Film Exchange Building, having taken over a lease for the entire third floor.

Ben Y. Cammack, Manager of the Southern States Film Company Exchange here, has announced Dec. 15 as the date for the release of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature, "More to be Pitied Than Scorned." The second "Big Six" special, "Only a Shop Girl," will be released late in January.

H. E. Fulgham is now associated with the local A. & R. Exchange for the past few months he was with R. D. Lewis Film Company and prior to that was with Specialty Film Company.

A. V. E. Wessels, formerly president of the Art-O-Graf Film Company which made several pictures handled by the Pioneer Exchanges, is now a full-fledged exhibitor, taking care of the Orpheum Theatre in Steamboat Springs, Colorado.

William Oldknow, owner of the Southern States Film Company Exchange, was a visitor to Dallas last week.

Stars' Presence in Big Demand

With the 1922-23 season in full swing exhibitors are booking stars to make personal appearances as they never have before. The better type of pictures lacking exploitable titles are being put over by personal appearances. The holiday season, now current, has resulted in the booking of many stars, with the New York agencies unable to fill many of the demands, for the reason that never before have independents been so busy with production, either in New York or on the Coast, as they are at this time.

Harry Cruli, formerly of Brooklyn, now in charge of the Edward F. Albee interests in Rhode Island, this week hooked Zena Keefe to make an appearance at the Bijou Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., Dec. 18, 19 and 20, in conjunction with an "Old Home Week" stunt at that house. Arrow's "The Broken Silence," in which Miss Keefe is starred, is the attraction. Miss Keefe was formerly leading woman in a stock company that played at the Bijou.

Edward Earle, who plays a leading role in Burton King's productions, "Streets of New York" and "The Shylock of Wall Street," is making personal appearances in conjunction with the metropolitan showings of the first picture. Following these engagements he will appear at several out of town dates now being arranged for the other special, "Shylock of Wall Street."

Frankiyn Farnum last week made appearances in southern New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania houses. This western star has heen making appearances for the past three months and early next month will go to the Coast to resume production.

It is more than prohable that when the next Principal Picture starring Jackie Coogan is released for distrihution in the open market, that juvenile star will make a personal appearance tour of houses playing that picture, according to plans now under way.

Wesley Barry, whom Warner Brothers have signed for several years and who recently completed a tour of the Orpheum Circuit, will play houses showing "Heroes of the Street." Since Barry's arrival in New York, exhibitors have clamored for his services, hut until his scheduie has been fully completed no announcement can be made as to the places and houses where he will appear.

Betty Blythe, star of "How Women Love," the Whitman Bennett picture and incidentally her first independent production, was making personal appearances this week out in Indianapolis, where her picture played to capacity houses. Miss Blythe is one of the cleverest stars in the business, her act being a big time order.

Miriam Cooper Signed by Schulberg

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Miriam Cooper has been signed by B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, Inc., to appear in the title role of "The Girl Who Came Back," the new Tom Forman production which has just been placed in the works.

Miss Cooper will head a cast composed of Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Zasu Pitts, Joseph J. Dowling and Fred Malatesta. "The Girl Who Came Back" is a stage play written by Charles E. Blaney and Samuel Ruskin Golding and will be the third in the series of Forman director specials for release through the Al Lichtman Corporation. The first is "Shadows," which is now playing first runs throughout the country, and the second, "Are You a Failure?" This will be released in January while "The Girl Who Came Back" will be released in March.

Preferred Buys Two More Stories

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—B. P. Schulberg this week closed for the motion picture rights to "The Parasite," the novel by Helen Martin and also announced he would make a picture titled "Sunshine Alley." Schulberg's production schedule at the moment is an extensive one. Gasnier is working on "Poor Men's Wives" and Forman on "The Girl Who Came Back." Material on hand but not yet produced includes "The Broken Wing," recently acquired, "Mothers-in-Law," "A Mansion of Aching Hearts," "My Lady's Lips," and the two new ones, "The Parasite" and "Sunshine Alley." Larry Evans is on the Preferred staff.

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION announces that its second big Goodman Special Production is rapidly being completed and will be ready for pre-review in less than three weeks from this date.

Equity's first big Goodman Special—"WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN?"—is grossing more actual cash for exhibitors than any other Independent release now on the market.

This second big Goodman Special will entirely outclass "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN?" in dramatic power and box-office value. Its title will be announced next week. Its cast includes such favorites as Mary Alden, Charles Richman, Robert Edeson, Hedda Hopper, Elinor Fair, Vincent Coleman and Lyda Lalo. A guarantee of its super class and box-office power is the fact that it was

C.C. Burr, with 1922-23 Program Almost Complete, Laying Plans for New Season

With "The Big Six" program he announced early this Fall almost completed, there being but one production on which work has not yet been begun, C. C. Burr, President of Mastodon Films, Inc., this week stated that he is making elaborate plans for his production schedule for next season. During the past week Mr. Burr announced that, while the first Edgar Lewis production, "Fires of Youth" was still in production, the second picture that producer would make for independent distribution through Mastodon Films, Inc., will be "Oh, Ye Fools!" Mr. Burr is at present dickering with the producers of a number of well known productions and authors whose works will be embraced in the 1923 program.

Meanwhile reports on the current C. C. Burr attractions, "Sure Fire Flint" with Johnny Hines starred, and "Secrets of Paris" with an all-star cast, are scoring well at the box offices of representative first run houses. This statement is borne out by reports received by special correspondents of this department and from exhibitors' reports published in Van Powell's "Straight From the Shoulder" section. Mr. Burr this week concluded a deal whereby "Sure Fire Flint" will be given its Broadway premiere at the Cameo Theatre in New York.

"Secrets of Paris" also will shortly be introduced on Broadway, a deal for one of the big first run houses now being under way, according to Mr. Burr. This is the production made by Whitman Bennett. Mr. Bennett had long planned this production which is none other than Eugene Sue's famous Apache romance "Mysteries of Paris." The several years of preparation which Mr. Bennett put into it before starting actual production have served to bring forth a picture which is a great story and a work of art.

"Sure Fire Flint," the second Johnny Hines feature ("Burn 'Em Up Barnes," that famous money-maker was the first) has already been released and has proven as huge a box office attraction as its predecessors.

Johnny Hines is also adding lustre to a third feature picture called "Luck," which is still in production. "Luck" is based on the story of the same name by Jackson Gregory. There is no doubt if example is to be taken from Johnny's two earlier features that the personality of this versatile young man will make this third feature another good box office bet for the exhibitors.

Two Edgar Lewis productions are included in this program, one fast nearing completion and called "Fires of Youth" and the other entitled "Oh Ye Fools" as yet in script. It is announced from the office of C. C. Burr however, that Mr. Lewis will begin work upon this second feature immediately after he has finished with "Fires of Youth."

On the program of the "Big-Six" announced by Mr. Burr is "The Last Hour." It is based on the story of the same name by Frank R. Adams, which ran serially in Munsey's magazine. This picture was directed by Edward Sloman and is already completed. It is awaiting a definite release date.

The "Big-Six" program does not include the series of All Star comedies which have become a feature of the C. C. Burr productions. These comedies have proven very popular with exhibitors by reason of their big box office value.

Exhibitors at Big Showing of Warner Picture

PHILADELPHIA (Special) — Representative exhibitors from this territory and Harry M. Warner, President of Warner Brothers, and others from New York, attended a special showing of Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf production, "Heroes of the Street," with Wesley Barry, at the Knickerbocker Theatre here on Sunday night. Several hundred members of the police force were the guests of Lou Berman of Independent Film Corporation, under whose auspices the showing was held. The production was enthusiastically received. Following the showing the prominent guests and representatives of the Philadelphia police force were the guests of Mr. Berman at a supper. Harry M. Warner made an address in which he told exhibitors that it was the intention of Warner Brothers to give them "nothing but the best." He discussed production costs, saying that the estimates made on certain productions that that firm will release in the near future have been exceeded and in one case trebled.

The fight that has developed out of the alleged action on the part of Amalgamated Film Exchanges, Inc., of selling territorial rights to their pictures to Robert Lynch of Metro Exchange when a previous contract is alleged to have been signed by David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., will be settled early this month in the United States District Court. In a letter to David Barrist, publisher of The Exhibitor, a Philadelphia regional, Mr. Lynch states that he has "not received any court order from Mr. Segal's attorneys." He adds further: "and so there will be no further misunderstanding as to the merits of this case. Please be advised that as far as I know Mr. Segal signed a contract for these pictures back in July and I also signed a contract for them thirty days after without any knowledge of him having already signed. His action now is against the manufacturer, who signed the contract with him, and I have nothing whatever to do with the matter."

Wilkes-Barre was signally honored recently when Johnny Hines, Robert Edeson and Violet Mesereau visited that city to shoot scenes at the mine operations of the Glen Alden Coal Company for the next picture C. C. Burr is making with Hines starred and entitled "Luck." Robert Edeson had a holiday, for Mayor Daniel L. Hart of Wilkes-Barre is an old friend of his.

More independent pictures are being booked in this territory by the big circuits than ever before, according to reports from the various exchanges. The melodramas are in big demand in cities and towns outside of Philadelphia, while the high class pictures get their biggest draws in Philadelphia.

"Deserted at the Altar" is doing a land-office business in suburban towns, according to exhibitors' reports.

Gene Marcus of Twentieth Century Exchange will release the first Principal picture, "The World's a Stage," based on Elinor Glyn's story, with Dorothy Phillips starred, late in January. Right now he is concentrating on "Deserted at the Altar."

Ben Amsterdam's Masterpiece Film Exchange is doing a wonderful business. The Al Lichtman special, "Shadows" has several records to its credit at the bigger Stanley Philly houses, including the Victoria, where it opened several weeks ago. Amsterdam's short subjects have been taken over by David Starkman Exchange.

Independents in A. B. C.-Syndicate Booking Squabble

The competitive bidding between the A. B. C. and syndicate bookers in New York City involves independents. Already one company—Warner Brothers—has decided to play with the independents. The Warners broke with the syndicate bookers last year when they were exploiting "School Days." The syndicate proposition was turned down flat because of the alleged ridiculous figure set by the bookers. At that time Harry M. Warner announced he would book his pictures in independent houses. The experiment was a successful one, for, according to Mr. Warner, "School Days" grossed a record figure and since then Warners' productions have been playing independent houses.

There is a merry war brewing in film circles hereabouts. It concerns the A. B. C. and syndicate booking offices. Allied Distributors will release its massive "Salome" production early next month. This production will be shown at one of the Broadway first-run houses and then is slated to play the Marcus Loew metropolitan circuit. The A. B. C. have abandoned hope to land this picture, but with the announcement made last week of the release of Malcolm Strauss' "Salome" by an independent distributor, George H. Wiley, plans are in the making to book this picture over the Independent houses. Whether or not this independent will be shown day and date as opposition to the Allied "Salome" remains to be seen.

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, handling the Al Lichtman product, could have obtained a Broadway showing at two big houses had he selected to delay the release of the B. P. Schulberg special, "Shadows" with Lon Chaney, until the latter part of next month. Subsequently the Broadway run was abandoned and the picture leased to Marcus Loew for presentation over his circuit the week of January 8.

Johny Hines will have his feature production, "Sure Fire Flint," which Sam Zierler is releasing for C. C Burr, shown at a Broadway house for the first time, for that much-advertised and money-making special opens at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre within two weeks. The engagement will be elaborately exploited in New York.

The new Renown Pictures Exchange has taken over the New York State and New Jersey rights to the second Principal Pictures picture, "Environment," co-starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills. This firm also will release "Malcolm Strauss' Salome" and the first Principal release, "The World's a Stage," with Dorothy Phillips.

Foster Moore of the Jans Film Exchange exploited the Al Lichtman special, "Shadows," on a pretentious basis during its premiere showing at the Strand Theatre in Newark, N. J. A transparency was used. This is a shadow box standing about eighteen inches high and is about twenty-four inches wide and six inches from the proscenium arch to the back wall. There is an electric light hooked up with a skidoodle plug arranged just back of the wall, directly back of a man and woman cutout. When the skidoodle plug shoots the light on the shadow appears at the window and when the light goes off the shadow disappears, giving the illusion of sudden motion and a surprise and suggestion of drama which stops the "window shoppers." The stunt also was used in Elizabeth and Paterson, N. J.

Eddie Earle Is Still Dickering

Contrary to the report published in this department last week, the publicity department of Arrow Film Corporation this week said that while such a deal was pending, Edward Earle, one of the most popular leading men in the business, had not signed the long-term contract with Arrow, as reported in this publiction. Several other companies, according to this latest report, are dickering for Earle's services. Right now he is making personal appearances in conjunction with Arrow's Burton King special, "The Streets of New York."

Principal Gets New Features

"Mind Over Motor" is the title of the third Principal Pictures Corporation's release, which will be ready for general distribution through foremost exchanges handling Principal pictures early in January. This announcement was made this week by Irving Lesser, eastern manager for Principal Pictures Corporation. Starred in "Mind Over Motor" is Trixie Friganza, one of the best known stars on the stage today. The production, which is characterized in Coast despatches as one of the most pretentious independent pictures of the year, was several months in making. Ward Lacsalle directed and produced the picture which embodies a cast of well-known and popular players.

Burr Film at Cameo

"Sure Fire Flint" is to be the New Year's week offering at the Cameo Theatre according to latest reports, coming from the offices of C. C. Burr. This will be the second full length production featuring Johnny Hines which Mr. Burr's organization is putting out to the independent field as part of his "Big-Six" program.

Arrow, North & Weber, C. B. C. and Principal Pictures Close Deals

The current week turned out to be one of the most active of the year in independent circles, virtually every company reporting important territorial sales. Arrow Film Corporation led the list with announcements of the consummation of a number of sales, while other sales statements emanated from the offices of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, Bobby North and Lawrence Weber and a number of others.

W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, this week announced the following sales:

H. C. Simeral Co., Pittsburgh, for Western Penna.; "The Streets of New York," "Night Life in Hollywood," "The Innocent Cheat" and "Chain Lightning," the Neva Gerber series of four features; the Grace Davison specials; the Peter B. Kyne specials; the William Fairbanks series of six Westerns, and the Eddie Lyons series of two-reel super-comedies.

In Ohio the recently organized Progress Pictures Co., of which J. S. Jossey is President and E. H. Fielder Vice-President, contracted for "Night Life in Hollywood," "The Streets of New York," "The Innocent Cheat," "The Broken Silence," "The Girl from Porcupine," "One-Eighth Apache," "Back to Yellow Jacket," "A Motion to Adjourn," "The Splendid Lie," "Love, Hate and a Woman," the Neva Gerber series, "Chain Lightning," "Headin' North," "The Stranger in Canyon Valley," "The Blue Fox" serial starring Ann Little; William Fairbanks' series of Westerns, and Eddie Lyons comedies.

In Chicago, Frank Zambreno, Progress Pictures: "Night Life in Hollywood," "The Streets of New York," "The Innocent Cheat," "Chain Lightning."

In St. Louis, Tom Leonard, Pioneer Exchange for southern Illinois and east Missouri.: "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Night Life in Hollywood," "The Streets of New York," the William Fairbanks Series of six Westerns, "The Blue Fox" serial, "Chain Lightning," "The Deceiver," "The Star Reporter," "The Inocent Cheat," "Jacqueline," "Western Justice," "The Lone Horseman" and twelve Eddie Lyons Comedies.

The approach to a 100 per cent. sale of territoral rights on L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North's first Will Nigh production, "Notoriety," was hastened this week when the Peerless Film Company of Atlanta, Ga., bought the state-rights to the seven-reel society drama for the five states including North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama. S. W. Grow & J. A. McWhorter, proprietors of the Southern Exchange, and Sam Sax, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, were the agents in the deal.

Two important territorial sales on the second Principal Pictures Corporation special, "Environment," co-starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills, were announced this week by Eastern Manager Irving Lesser. The Irving Cumings production which has won considerable enthusiastically favorable and high praise from the trade and metropolitan press critics, has been sold to William Shapiro of Franklin Film Company of Boston for New England, and to Renown Pictures Corporation of New York City for New Jersey and New York State.

"Beautiful and Damned" Gets Double Premier

Warner Brothers production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," with Marie Prevost, was given a preview presentation at the Paramount Theatre, Los Angeles, on November 27, to one of the largest and most representative audiences on the west coast. The eastern premiere was held at the Strand Theatre, New York, during the week of December 17.

At the Los Angeles showing were present the members of the cast, directors, authors and city officials. The cast, in addition to Miss Prevost, includes Kenneth Harlan, Harry Meyers, Louise Fazenda, Tully Marshall, Cleo Ridgley, Emmett King, Walter Long, Clarence Burton, Parker McConnell, Charles McHugh, Kathleen Key and George Kuwa. William A. Seiter, who directed the picture, and Olga Printzlau, who is responsible for the adaptation, were also present.

Southern Trade Is Improving

ATLANTA, GA. (Special) — Business insofar as independent productions are concerned continues to improve in the Southeast territory. The bigger pictures are having no trouble getting into the representative first-run houses in the territory. "Shadows," the Al Lichtman special, is creating considerable comment in this section and is characterized by fastidious critics as "one of the truly great pictures the motion picture industry has contributed for public entertainment."

Virginia Pearson, the star, is in this territory making personal appearances in conjunction with first-run showings of the Ivan Abramson special, "The Wildness of Youth." Last week she appeared at Loew's Grand in Atlanta, the week being one of the biggest that house has had in a long time.

Arthur Bromberg of Bromberg Attractions Inc., is getting some choice dates on "Night Life in Hollywood," which he will release in this territory.

Production Plan Wins Lichtman

The executive offices of the Al Lichtman Corporation received the following telegram this week from Al Lichtman and B. P. Schulberg, both of whom are in Los Angeles:

"Please inform the trade papers of our complete satisfaction over the manner in which exhibitors are receiving 'Shadows.' At first turned down by important exhibitors who doubted its entertainment value, 'Shadows' is now meeting with a reception that is particularly gratifying. There are no more skeptics among theatre men. In Washington the picture played to 2,076 more paid admissions at the Rialto than 'Rich Men's Wives,' and the latter picture met with universal satisfaction there. Here in Los Angeles, on the opening night at the Kinema, 'Shadows' drew such crowds that the Kinema was forced to put on an extra show at ten-thirty at night. In Newark, at the Strand, the picture played to the best business at that house in six months, despite strong competition from other theatres. In San Francisco, at the Strand, the production met with praise from all of the newspaper critics. The Victoria, Philadelphia, played to crowded houses when the picture was at that theatre. The Loew Circuit has signed a contract which becomes effective January 8.

"It is extremely pleasing to us that our original opinion of the production has been borne out. Although 'Shadows' is really starting on its career, the manner in which it has gone over in those few cities where it has been shown is a clear indication that artistic pictures are commercial successes as well."

"I Am the Law" a Big Winner

ST. LOUIS (Special)—"Go to the Movies" week here was a huge success with independent productions playing an important part in attracting patrons to the theatres. C. C. Burr's "I Am the Law" proved the biggest surprise picture of the season, for the grosses piled up at houses showing this picture in many cases exceeded those accredited to the big program specials that were extensively exploited here in extra advertising that appeared in local newspapers.

The personal appearance here last week of Rodolph Valentino prompted many of the neighborhood and suburban houses to book re-issued pictures in which that popular star appeared. In fact, exchanges handling independent re-issues of Rodolph Valentino pictures have been reaping a harvest in this section.

The syndicate circuit situation in Missouri remains unchanged with independents being able to break into real first run houses only with exceptional productions. The Warner Brothers, Al Lichtman and Equity productions have played the syndicate houses, but, for some reason or other, the others have been kept out.

There is some talk that independent exchangemen in this territory are about to promote a stock proposition involving the erection of a new first run theatre in this city. However, very little stock is being placed in this talk, for this sort of rumor has been in circulation for a long time.

Sam Werner of United Film Service anounced this week that he will release "Your Best Friend," the Warner Brothers picture starring Vera Gordon and Dore Davidson, late this month when he will also have ready for distribution "The Hope Diamond Mystery," a serial.

Two Big Bison City Exchanges in Consolidation

BUFFALO, N. Y.—(Special).—Bond Photoplays Corporation is the new company just organized to take over the distribution of Grand & North and Nu-Art Pictures Corporation product. At a meeting at the Lafayette Hotel last Thursday, attended by Sam Zierler of Commonwealth, Bobby North and Sam Grand of Grand & North, Sydney Samson, Buffalo and Albauy branch manager for Grand & North, and Fred M. Zimmerman, president and general manager of Nu-Art, the organization was perfected. The exchange end of the business will be supervised by Messrs. Samson and Zimmerman. The Nu-Art office and exchange equipment has been moved from its quarters in the Film building at Pearl and Tupper to the Grand & North building, 265 Franklin street. It is understood that several of the salesmen and office workers of Nu-Art will be retained on the Bond Photoplays payroll.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Albany office of Filkins & Merit, was in town last week for a conference with Bob Murphy, local manager. "Filk" reports business booming in Albany and said that the past week was the most successful from a financial viewpoint in the history of the company.

Martiu Solomon, special representative for Warner Brothers, who has been doing special work in the Buffalo territory, has started back to New York, stopping off at Rochester, Utica and other towns on the way.

Jack Berkowitz, manager of the local Graphic exchange, has obtained the Mutual Chaplin re-issues, 12 of them, for distribution in western New York. Mr. Berkowitz has just returned from a trip to Gotham.

P. H. Smith has resigned as local manager for Warner Brothers and has been succeeded by Mr. Levee, who recently resigned from Paramount in New York to go with W. B. Mr. Levee was in Buffalo several years ago with World Film and later with Paramount.

Bob Murphy booked Pete Morrison in "Daring Danger," for presentation the last half of last week at the Palace Theater on Main street, where it is said to have attracted fine business.

The Bond Corporation deal was the topic of conversation on all lips along Film Row. Fred Zimmerman is one of the veterans of the western New York exchange business as well as one of the most popular managers in the business hereabouts. Syd Samson is also well known and stands high in the favor of exhibitors. With these two men as its active heads, the new organization should enjoy real success. The amalgamation came as a distinct surprise to most of the boys.

Lynch Circuit Books C. B. C. Feature Over Entire Circuit

Proof that independent features are more and more getting the biggest bookings all over the country comes again this week with word that "More To Be Pitied." first of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series of Box Office Winners, has been booked over the entire Lynch Circuit.

This is one of the most important big circuit bookings, not only in the South, but anywhere in the country, and is considered by Oscar Oldknow, head of the Southern Enterprises, which holds Southern rights to the entire six features on the series, as one more proof of the truth of the big things that have been predicted for these features.

Hyman's New Stage Set at Mark Strand Designed to Give Full Value to Color

ALTHOUGH some of the Broadway managers seem to feel that this department might better give space to their productions than to those effected by Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, there is a reason for the preference.

The Broadway productions are made on a scale beyond the reach of the average out-of-town house, and they are often of a nature to appeal chiefly to Broadway and its visitors rather than to a general audience. On the other hand we have taken a number of visiting managers over to the Brooklyn house and they have all remarked that the productions and effects here, while less elaborate, were far more enjoyable. It is for this reason that we are giving this description of Hyman's new stage setting, which seems to be an adaptation of the "new art" ideas to a demand for "real" scenery.

Uses Scrim

The new set is designed to make more effective use of color, for Hyman regards color and music as much a part of his offering as the pictures he shows on the screen. He has established his house in the minds of Brooklyn patrons as a place of entertainment rather as the theatre in which this or that particular star or feature can be seen for a limited period. Patrons regularly attend the Strand, regardless of the featured picture, because they want to see the productions. They feel certain they will be well repaid whether or not they like the major offering, and the layman often frankly says that the feature was not to his liking, but "the show" was good. He goes away satisfied whether the feature be to his individual taste or not.

A Valuable Asset

In other words, Hyman makes his house the real star, and he often sells the house to those who do not desire the picture. This is a condition greatly to be desired, and the new setting which has been in use for a period of several weeks, contributes materially to the effect.

The curtain to the production stage at the rear has been painted with an eye to lighting, and the colors "take" almost any color. The box set is but faintly seen through a scrim drape placed directly over the canvas. On either side are large window openings for which a set of frames has been provided, varying the outline and bars from week to week and giving variety. Across the top is a canopy of scrim upon which lights can be thrown either from above or below. This is the most novel point of the setting.

Works Elaborate Effects.

Hyman has a larger battery of lamps than the average house, and can obtain more pretentious effects, but any house with three or four floods can suggest similar effects and work in the strips and borders for additional color, though Hyman has discarded the old-fashioned border strips.

In general the idea is to split the colors by well-defined effects. To this end the orchestra, the windows, the canopy or ceiling and the production stage or the curtain to that stage are regarded as separate units. The orchestra, for example, may be flooded in one color, with a sympathetic or contrasting color on the production stage curtain, while a third color may be used for the canopy and a fourth for the windows.

Light Rehearsals Help

Whenever possible, Hyman holds a light rehearsal, usually after the regular performance, and sometimes these rehearsals last for several hours. At such times the lights are worked in various combinations and the results noted. Subsequently these combinations are typed out and copies supplied the various light men.

As a result, Hyman knows just how to gain a desired color effect, and at the full rehearsal he has only to order a light combination by number and each man knows precisely what to do. The rehearsal is not unduly prolonged by experimentation. This is all done when there is more time.

A sample combination reads, for instance: "Blue stage, green foot fronts and on production stage. Windows in orange. Entrance spots in magenta. Two medium green on ceiling. Orange flood on stage and tab curtains. Magenta X rays." This is used for an overture, and the effect of the mingled lights on the scrim are prismatic without being violent.

More Elaborate

A more elaborate effect is gained when there is a soloist on the concert strip in front of the orchestra. In this the two top entrance spots are thrown down on the orchestra with a magenta medium. The lower spots are thrown on the ceiling, that on the left, with a magenta medium, hitting the right side, while the right shoots over to the left in blue, the colors merging at the center. One of the windows is in magenta and the other in orange, while the footlights of the small stage are in blue to mix with a magenta flood from the operating room. Amber is thrown in from the sides to give more light intensity and a blue flood is thrown on the orchestra to mix with the magenta from the spots. Instead of working this out at rehearsal, Hyman merely orders "number nine" and all concerned known precisely what he wants.

Work For Color

It is not possible to give in type any suggestion of the richness of the effects gained through these mixtures of lights, but if you will get the stage hands to stay overtime some night and will do a little experimenting you will find that sometimes you can sell the spot lights where you can't pull a dollar with a weak film.

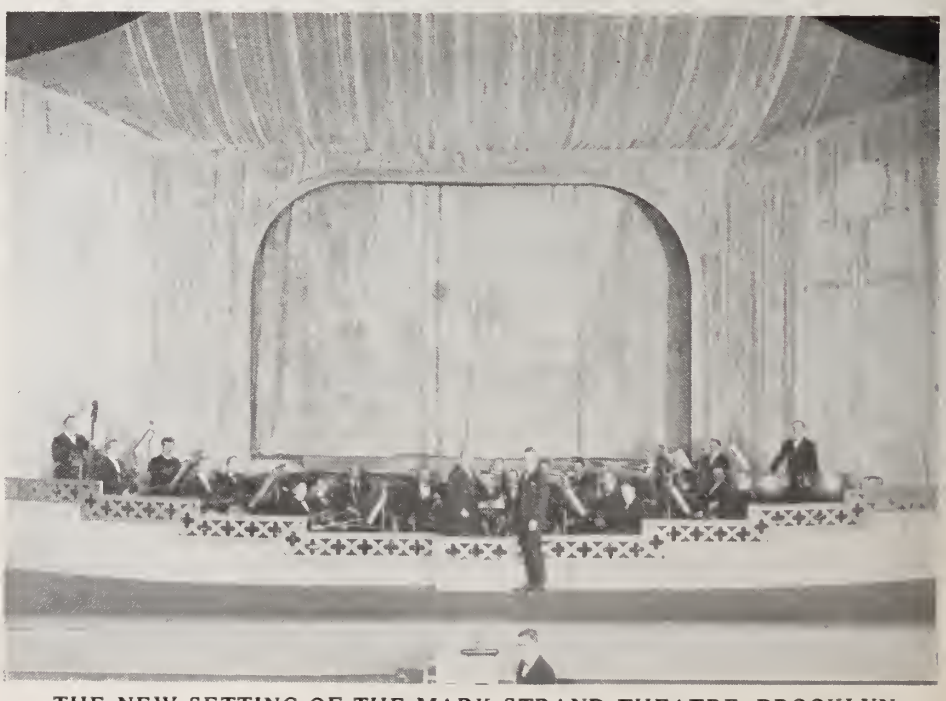
Hyman does it. You can do it. Try it some time.

Untruthful Pointers

Out in San Francisco, where "East is West" was put on for a three-week run at the Tivoli, one of the best stunts was corner signs with pointing arrows which stated that "East is West." The standard was also lettered with the title and the addition of "Tivoli, Now."

A set of these was run along the business section of Market street and got considerable attention.

They also used a Navy hook-up with the rather weak connection of "Constance Talmadge says 'East is West.' Join the Navy and see the world." The rest of the poster was house stuff.



THE NEW SETTING OF THE MARK STRAND THEATRE, BROOKLYN

At either side can be seen the vague outlines of the transparent windows. The general veiled effect is due to the use of scrim over the painted canvas, which takes the lights yet still permits the design to show throug h. Designed by John Wenger.

in "Plunder"

Superlative box-office satisfaction to any exhibitor, anywhere.

The most successful serial star the business has ever seen in a production offering unparalleled opportunities for profits.

In star, story, cast, direction and production the Patheserial supreme.

Pathéserial

Pearl White in "Plunder"

FOR five dazzling years Pearl White made Patheserial history.

She made her fame and achieved her popularity as a Patheserial star. The public wants her as such a star. Now, after an extended stay abroad, she returns to star in her greatest Patheserial.

Hundreds of exhibitors got their start on the road to independence by playing her in Patheserials. They still talk of the amazing profits they made.

The same brilliant and unapproachable combination of star, authors and director that created the never-to-be-forgotten "House of Hate" has made in "Plunder" a serial better than any of the past, for it is thoroughly modern, thoroughly censor-proof.

The unbeatable combination, then, has made the unbeatable Patheserial.

TRADE MARK

Gets Real Help

What your department has done for me no other paper, friend or person has done. Since 1910, when Motion Pictures really started as business here, I have been a subscriber to Moving Picture World, and by means of your department I have packed my house every time I have had a good picture.

I have used your suggestions for lobby displays, parades, throwaways and newspaper advertising ever since your department was started, but it never occurred to me that I could help others. Now that I have returned from Cuba, (where I managed the Fausto Theatre) and am again at Victory Gardens, I shall try to pay back some of the help others have given me by sending you my advertising and photographs of my lobby displays.

My specialties are the programs, building lobby displays, doing my own painting and laying out the advertising. I hold my pictures to normal speed and make my leader work up the picture with proper musical effects, and all I know I have learned from your department and Mr. Richardson. I have his Projection Handbook and your Picture Theatre Advertising, from which I have taken many profitable ideas.—Jaime Gelabert, Victory Gardens, Santurce, Porto Rico.

A Universal Release

A SALES STUNT THAT CAN BE MADE INTO EXPLOITATION

This was used by William H. Tracy, Chicago film salesman, to advertise the Universal Serial as he sold it to the exhibitors, but a mudded car will give the suggestion of an auto tourist and put the idea over.

Sent Film Cans to Real Prison

Figuring that the proper place for a prisoner was a prison, A. J. Moreau, of the Palace Theatre, Arctic, R. I., varied the safe deposit stunt by persuading the police to bring about the "arrest" "The Prisoner of Zenda."

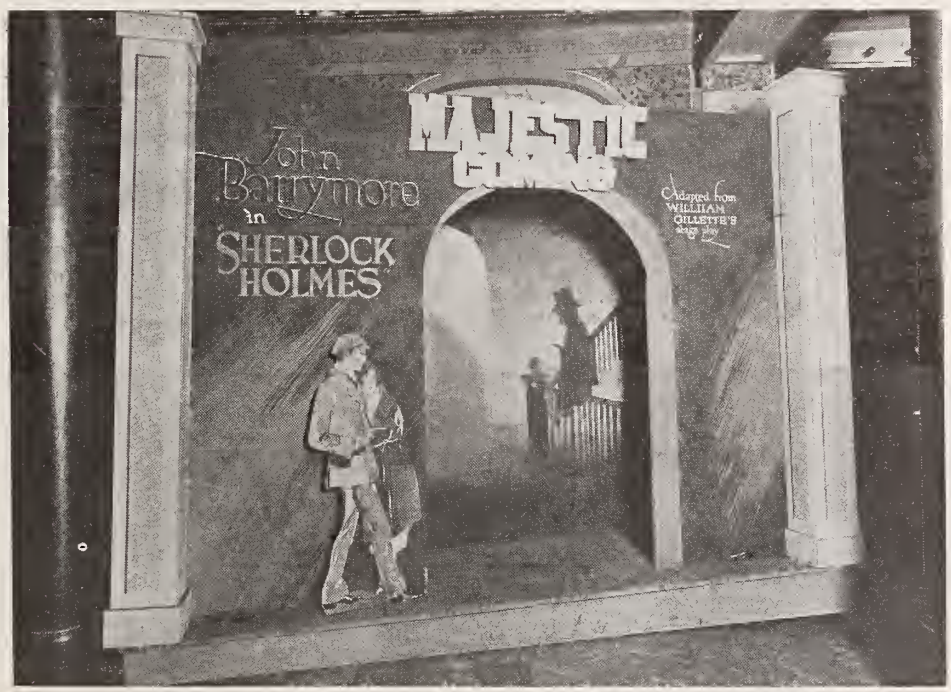
The police met the train and pinched the cans in due and ancient form, taking them over to the theatre for a photograph in front of the lobby, for newspaper work, before taking the cans to the State Prison, where they were incarcerated over Sunday. The picture was due to open Monday, so the arrest caused no inconvenience.

The stunt broke all over the front page of the Sunday paper.

"Tailor Made Man" Sold to Students

Going with the crowd instead of against it is always easier, and instead of fighting a big football game, Maj. I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., went out and billed the ball field with tack cards for "A Tailor Made Man," figuring that the students would be interested in clothes. Two banners were placed where the crowds could see them, and five by twelve-inch auto stickers helped to announce the police rules by telling that there was "No parking on Broad street Saturday, but you can park in the rear of the Rialto Theatre and see 'A Tailor Made Man.'" Naturally the title was not set in the smallest type.

A Better Films Committee was given a previewing and their favorable comments reported in the papers, and more press notice came from an invitation to the Kiwanis Club. Special bargain tickets good for the opening matinee were printed in the morning papers and brought people in to go out and tell the others that Ray had a good play, and the colors of the rival colleges were used for lobby decoration.



A Goldwyn Release

A SHERLOCK HOLMES DISPLAY FROM FRANK LACEY

This was used across the street from the theatre to put over the coming of the picture to the Majestic, Portland, Oreg. At night the lighting effects threw it into such high relief that it served as fully as a lobby display.

Fifteen Yards

C. A. Crute, of the Lyric Theatre, Huntsville, Ala., must have been reading the football reports, for he went out and made a fifteen yard gain on his own account. He got a forty-five-foot banner on the hotel for a week before the picture, telling that "Blood and Sand" was coming. All of his lobby lights were red and yellow, to match his draperies.

For Nice People he strung cutout letters across the street in front of the theatre, the letters being three feet high and broad in proportion; what printers call an "extended" letter.

In place of the usual mat boards for the still frames when you play "East Is West" try gaily colored grass matting for the background for your stills. If you want to show the stills behind mat openings, glue any cheap pasteboard, spread down the matting and dry under pressure. Then cut your mats from the back, putting the matting against a hard surface and using a sharp knife so as not to splinter the straws and produce a ragged edge.

A First National Release

AN OLD "PENROD" IDEA IN A DECIDEDLY NEW FORM

Frank J. Miller's idea for the "Penrod" fence as worked by him for the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga. Some idea of the size of the head can be gained through comparison with the entrance ways cut inthe fence.

Showed 'Lorna Doone' for a Mission Fund

One of the most remarkable bits of exploitation comes from Albany, where the members of more than thirty Protestant churches united to put over the showing of a picture at a local theatre.

Hill, of the Strand Theatre, knew that they were raising funds for women's colleges in the Orient, and he gave the committee a private showing of the First National picture and then offered them a percentage on the tickets they sold.

Every church announced the showing, for the benefit of the fund, and several ministers wove the story into their sermons, while two Bishops were put back of the movement.

Though the commission was comparatively small, a handsome sum was paid into the fund and at the same time the house, for its own share, chalked up considerably more than normal business.

The stunt is old, but the support has seldom been so general as in this instance.

Smilin' Through Was a Red Cross Slogan

Pretty soon "Let's Go Smilin' Through 1922" will go into the discard, Allah be praised! But H. C. Farley got a final kick out of the widely-used idea by hooking it onto the "Red Cross Roll Call" when he played the First National at the Empire Theatre, Montgomery Ala.

The whole town was plastered with the slogan in connection with the membership drive and you could not help the "Red Cross" without helping the Empire and Norma Talmadge. On the other hand, the connection with Miss Talmadge helped to put the drive over, so it goes 50-50. Even the Armistice Day parade was tagged by eight boys, each bearing banners with the title and with red crosses in each corner.

The slogan has proven one of the most useful devices originated through First National exploitation, but it will have to be changed to "Let us go Smilin' Through 1923 with you." That will be less brief but it will extend the idea for the late comers.

Not In the Sticks

Where did you get on at? Burlington is no backwoods town. We have the livest, biggest small town in North Carolina. It is well known among film peddlers that Greensboro, with its narrow streets, large buildings and big theatres considers Burlington strong competition in all lines, especially the theatres. We are the New York of the South. Sticks! Hell! We teach the college kids, managing the large town theatres, more than half they know. We don't sleep. We have well paved streets, a Great White Way, about twenty industries, street car lines and excellent schools. Real estate is high here and not a store or residence for rent. We have over five thousand inhabitants, with a nest of small towns all around us. Get the idea out of the back of your brain that we are a dead one. I fully appreciate that nice little reproduction you gave my advertisement on page 696 of the October 21st. issue, but I can't let you refer to us as "out in the sticks. If New York wants any help let them ask me. We are wide awake and give the people what they want. I am President, Vice-President, Secretary, Manager, Assistant Janitor, advertising man, and do the shipping. Work sixteen hours a day, stay on the job and see that my patrons are courteously treated at all times. I manage two houses, lock, stock and barrel. When you birds in New York want some money getting ideas on how to exploit any picture, just write the guy you believe lives in the sticks, namely William C. McIntyre, Rose Theatre, Burlington, N. C.

Took An Interest

Using the candle stunt on "The Eternal Flame," J. G. Evins, of the Lucas Theatre, Savannah, got 3,500 replies, which must be close to the record. It helped to bring a 50 per cent. increase at a cost of $42.

Paramount Releases

TWO OF THE LARGEST HEADS EVER WORKED INTO MOTION PICTURE LITHOGRAPHS

Appreciating the value of large heads for cutout use, the Paramount poster staff has produced 24-sheets for Marion Davies and Valentino which are nearly nine feet high. Both are so placed on the sheet that they can be used without additional painting, and the Valentino cutout has already been worked in Pittsburgh by Amike Vogel

Had Sample Castle for "Ghost Breaker"

What might be called a cumulative lobby was worked by A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, on "The Ghost Breaker." He began with cutouts of Lila Lee and Wallace Reid over the marquise. They were chaperoned up there by an owl with flasher eyes. When the play opened, a castle design was built under the marquise and out to the curb, with an opening for pedestrians. The cutouts on top of the marquise were retained, the entire design being planned as a whole.

A truck with a large castle structure was run around town. Cutouts of Reid and Miss Lee were placed in the side windows while Walter Heirs looked out from the rear opening. The perambulator was used for three days in advance and three days of the run.

As one of the days fell on Halloween, he sent out five of his staff in masquerade costumes, and carrying cards for the attraction. There were one white and one negro ghost, a clown and two minstrels in cork, and they worked the entire downtown section. The lobby was also especially dressed for that night.

Photos for Josh

Putting a cutout of Roberts in "The Old Homestead" into a photographer's window gave point to a card reading "Uncle Josh is looking for those who have neglected to send their portraits to the folks back at the Old Homestead." The cutout was the one with Josh holding a lantern, and was surrounded by examples of the photographer's art.

Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, and Paul Witte, of the Bijou Theatre, Decatur, Ill., worked the stunt.

The exploitation for "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis, was hung to an automobile home which rolled into town opportunely. This car was occupied by a couple touring from New York to San Francisco, and the occupants seem to seek a hook-up in all the large towns they make, as the stunt has been reported several times lately. Possibly it is the same car used through Florida last winter.

A First National Release

HERE IS ANOTHER WINKER STUNT FOR "EAST IS WEST"

This is not a cutout in the pagoda, but a real girl who initiated the Ming Toy wink at the Garden Theatre, Davenport, Ia., when the Constance Talmadge play was run there. The poster shows the appreciation letter from a local stock actress who played the part

Had Cozy Corners for "Burning Sands"

Cozy corners were Barry Burke's best bet when "Burning Sands" same to the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. He had two, one in each corner, and into them went about all the Oriental rugs and furnishings the leading dealer could supply. Canopies, rugs, incense burners, lamps, divans and everything else were carted over to the theatre in return for a credit card, but the displays were very tastefully done and did not look overloaded. It taught a lot of people that good rugs make fine wall decorations, and helped the subsequent sales.

A book store turned over for a window composed of desert sands and copies of the book, and a ten cent store, just opening with a big flourish of trumpets, gave one of its best windows largely to the plugger song, with a cutout. For a prologue a troupe of Hawaiians were turned into Bedouins.

Beat All Records With Floral Lobby

Harry Swift went over to Columbus, Ohio, and helped the Southern Theatre on a lobby for "The Old Homestead," which broke the records by more than $1,000 and got a second week for the feature.

He did not make a barnyard of the entrance, but built a pretty floral display, with a cutout from the six sheet for a centrepiece and the rest greenery. Even the cutout letters forming the name were done in flowers.

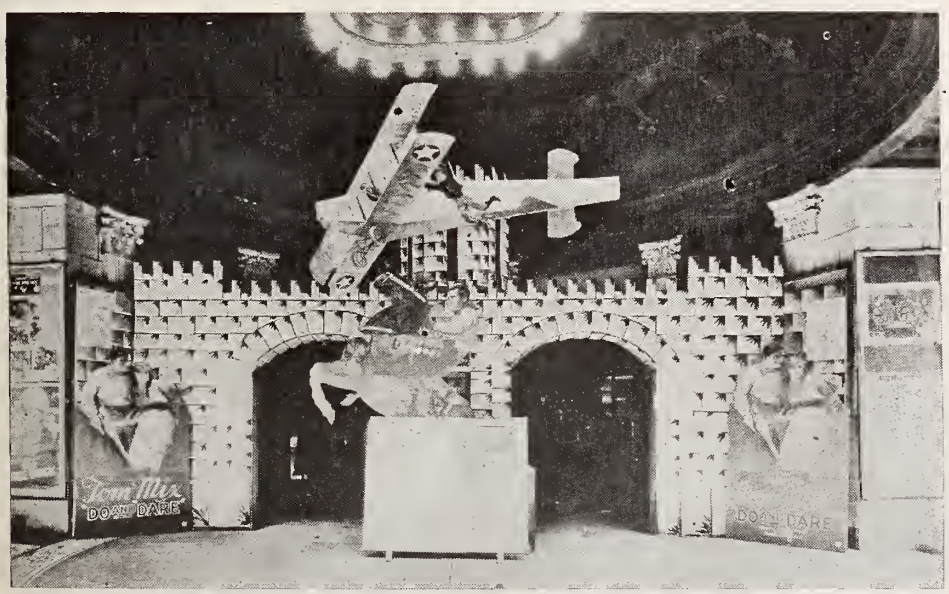
It is interesting to note that the b'Gosh lobby has not yet pulled to capacity. The record breaking has all been done through a different form of approach, which seems to bear out Lem Stewart's warning.

Swift Menus

Harry Swift, the Cincinnati Paramounteer, has gone in for domestic science. Dropping in on Oxford, Ohio, where Miami College is located, he sought out one of the favored college eating places and sold them on the Blood and Sand sandwich. This is a thin steak and a fried egg (red and yellow) between two slices of bread, with potatoes and gravy on the side. It was advertised as "A meal in itself."

Swift's sundae on the same play is yellow peach ice cream with marshmallow and topped with a red cherry and pink whipped cream. This gives the yellow and red color scheme.

Then he made a hit with the 1,400 student prospects by announcing that "Big Red has the Blood and Sand to win all games," and he did it on the fence around the athletic field.



A Fox Release

BOTH DOING AND DARING IN THIS TOM MIX LOBBY

Mix is a fine box office bet down South, and the managers play him up to the limit. The rearing horse is a favorite display but the Plaza Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., added the airplane stunt from "Do and Dare," with a castle background. It pulled real money

At last the men have had a fashion show. C. A. McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, Houston, figured that if fashion shows brought in the women, clothes for men might help "A Tailor Made Man," so he tied a local shop to a display of clothes for men from six to sixty, including sports clothing, and it got him a twenty per cent. boost in business at a cost of $30. The store contributed a series of large display advertisements as well as a window hook-up.

A Fox Release

THEY TOOK SHEBA FOR A BUGGY RIDE IN MONTGOMERY

H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, in the Alabama town, masked in an old buggy with compo board and did it up with purple and gold for "The Queen of Sheba" and it got a chariot attention at a much smaller cost. Keep this handy and adapt the idea

It Was Botsford's

A. M. Botsford, of the Paramount publicity, writes that the Grauman advertisement in the issue of December 9, which was praised as a plan book advertisement in cut and layout, and adds that the copy credited to Ralph Ruffner was also from the campaign book.

He adds: "I realize that it is impossible for you to determine which of the ads your corresponding exhibitors send in are taken from the press sheet, but maybe you could establish it as a general rule that the best ads they return to you are the ones furnished them by us."

We don't know that this modest suggestion could be made a hard and fast rule, but the Paramount ad layouts are almost uniformly good (except for some of the line cut portraits), and exhibitors would do well to follow the suggestions as to layout and cut placement.

Sectional Flasher

Major I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., more than doubled the attention value of his lobby sign on "To Hame and to Hold," by wiring it to a flasher in such a manner that on every other flash only half of the sign would light up. That would get attention in the belief that something had gone wrong, and then the full sign would flash.

Major Holloway and his staff made the cutout letters, wired them and painted them up without outside assistance.

He also used the contest hook-up page and gave out 500 passes. All through the South the receipts on this picture have been in direct ratio to the number of passes won. The more passes distributed, in proportion to population, the larger the cash receipts.

Teasers for the title and the out-of-town postcard stunt, with a personal guarantee, were the other methods used to put the picture over to a 35 per cent. increase.

Pinched Four Times

Max Rosenfield, who usually is accurate except when he is measuring Golems, says that Walter Lindlar, Paramounteering in Traverse City, Mich., managed to get himself pinched four times for disobeying traffic regulations. Each time he was booked on the records as "Uncle Josh" and by the time he had reporters writing kidding stories about the old farmer who could not master the traffic regulations, Frank Anderson, of the Lyric Theatre, sprang his "Old Homestead" advertising.

It reads all right, but in the first place we do not believe that Lindlar can make up to look convincingly like a hick and in the second no newspaper man would fail to smell a rat when a theatre manager bailed out a rube character four times in succession, with "The Old Homestead" in close view.

If this keeps on we shall have to put Max under oath each time he brings in copy.

Grand Dads Now

Grandma matinees have made a mint of money for "Grandma's Boy," and now comes Ben Levy, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Joplin, Mo., with a Grandpa's Matinee for "Remembrance."

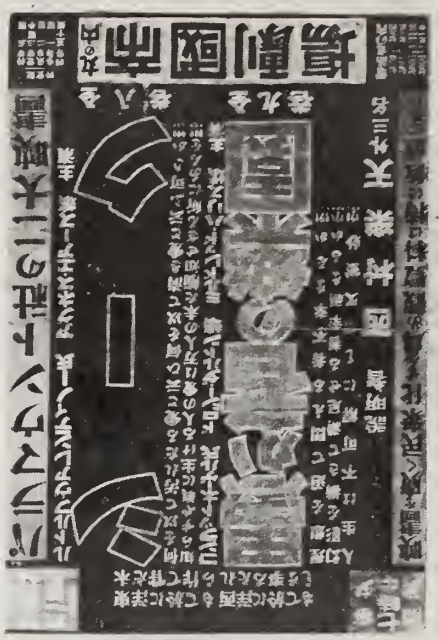
A local paper issued an invitation to all grandfathers to attend a specified performance as the guests of the publisher, each accompanied by his favorite grandchild, provided the youngster was under fourteen. Grandpa himself had to be over sixty, but the doorkeeper was nearsighted and a couple of years did not matter much.

It brought in five pure reading stories and most of them were on the front page, where the house stuff never gets.

Also it made verbal advertising worth many times even the newspaper publicity.

Take a Crack at Our Own Contest

Not to be outdone by exhibitors who are staging misspelled word contests, this department is staging a contest of its own along similar lines, and a fine grade pure rubber cigarette will be given each person who marks the misspelled words in this poster.



A Paramount Release

THE CONTEST POSTER

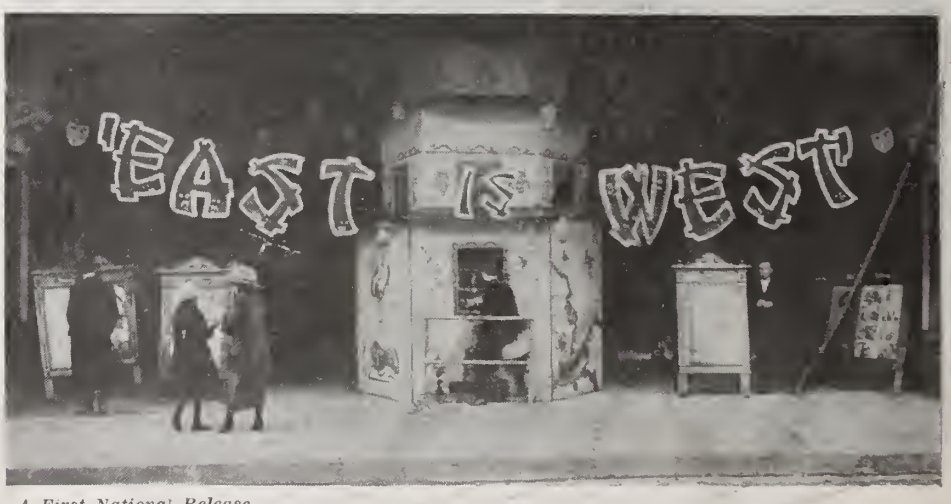
For the guidance of contestants, it may be said that this is a six sheet poster advertising "Fool's Paradise" and "The Sheik," at the Imperial Theatre, Tokio, the first time in nearly two years that this house has been opened for motion pictures.

Mark the misspelled words and write out the proper spelling. The contest will close January 1, 1925.

For You, Too

Tying all the drug stores in town to a slogan sold a play for the Rialto Theatre, Lakewood, N. J.

Every large store in town urged "Don't be afraid of chapped hands or cheeks. They are only 'Skin Deep.'" Then they sold remedies.



A First National Release

A SIX SIDED PAGODA WORKED AT THE MELBA THEATRE

This three-story pagoda is the box office of the Dallas Theatre, and is made of compo board painted in yellow and ornamented with dragons and other emblems. The letters are also cut from compo board and are in vermilion and gold

This Shadow Box Typical of Title

Generally any miniature set is supposed to be the well-known whiskers of the celebrated cat, but H. P. Whitfield, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, introduced a new refinement.

The play was "The Ghost Breaker," and he made a cutout of the paper showing Wallace Reid in the trunk as a foundation. A castle arch, with a landscape showing through was the background, set several inches to the rear, to gain perspective.

And the whole was enclosed in a shadow box painted to suggest a turreted castle, which worked in well with the background and added importantly to the effect.

Baker Exploiteers

Even cracker salesmen can be made exploiteers in a pinch. The A. B. C. promised to get behind Lorna Doone with its similarly named shortbread, and is making good. It got more than 300 windows for the First National release when it came to the Grand Opera House and Regent theatres, Pittsburgh.

The biscuit salesmen were offered prizes for the largest number of window hooks in proportion to their sales list, and a five dollar gold piece was offered for the best window display.

The 300 windows seemed to be a record, but Chicago is yet to be heard from.

Pyramided

Although the pyramids are supposed to be constructed of sandstone, Walter Penn, of the Bext Theatre, Palestine, Texas, built his of copies of "Burning Sands" for his display on that picture.

He borrowed a window from a book store, filled it with sand, built the pyramids and then peopled his desert with doll Arabs, added palm trees, camels and everything else but the fleas. He wasted all of a dollar and a half on the display, but he built business more than that.

Rep Helped

Just before "East Is West" played Crandall's Strand Theatre, Cumberland, Maryland, a stock company in Washington put on the play. The Crandall offices in Washington rented one of the costumes for the following week and sent it up to Cumberland, where it was worn by a girl in a 'rickshaw. She was also used in a prologue.

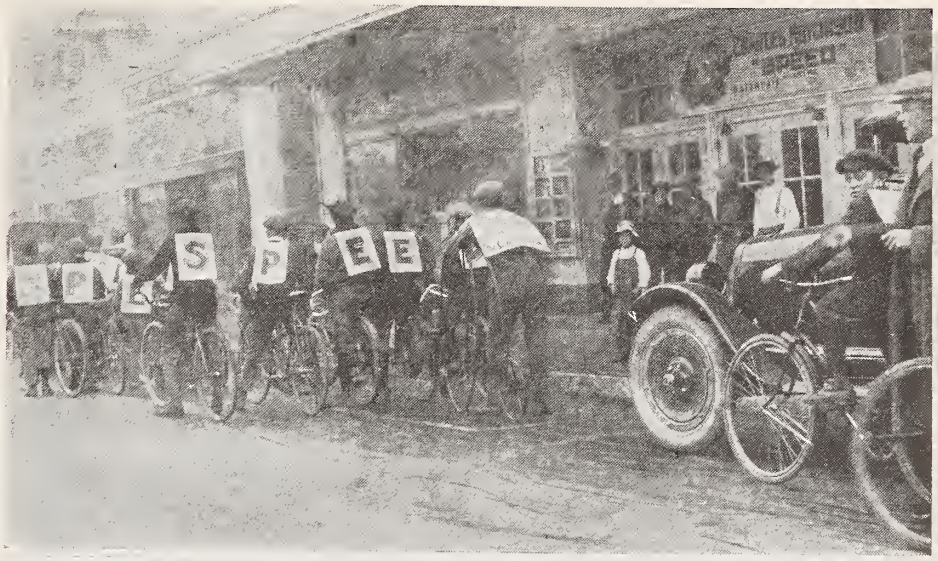
This offers the suggestion that you try to get your local repertoire company to use the play if you have a rep show in town. It will help your business to make a close connection with the stage version. The stock fanatics will want to see the picture and compare the star with their local idol.

Two for One

Putting over "The Fighting Streak," the Strand Theatre, Brandon, Manitoba, put out a hook-up page with ten co-operative advertisements. East of these displays carried a cut of a horseshoe, with an inset of William Fox.

Friday and Saturday of that week were designated as "lucky horseshoe" days, when any child could clip any one of the ads and use it as a pass if accompanied by one adult.

It was just a variation of the two-for-one idea, but it helped put Tom Mix over, and a lot of houses have found that when he is established, Mix is as good as money in the bank.



A Pathe Release

A BIG FLASH PARADE WHICH COST ONLY $3.80 FOR CARDS

Bicycles dating as far back as the old high wheel machines were used to advertise the opening of the Pathe serial, "Speed," at the California Theatre, San Francisco. Twenty-two boys were used, each of whom was given a ticket to the show

Cheated a Coroner and Landed a Story

Being new and more or less enthusiastic, Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, went to Peoria, borrowed an automobile and staged a succession of fake accidents all the way down Main street and back again.

Bill would fall down in front of the car and almost get run over. Then, when the inevitable crowd collected, he would hop to his feet and lecture them on "Manslaughter" at the Palace Theatre.

It is interesting to record the fact, but we think the stunt too strenuous to be recommended. It is too much of a shock, and if some nervous woman drops dead of heart disease, it is not going to help the theatre a lot. It's better to play safe.

Still There

Sensational exploitation has grown so common that some exhibitors are losing sight of the fact that there still are newspapers. Joe Mayer, a Universal exploiteer, put over a campaign for the Auditorium Theatre, Newark, Ohio, in which he employed only the usual accessories and about 300 column inches of display, getting many times that in publicity for "The Storm," including a Which Man contest. It still is possible to use the papers. Don't forget them.

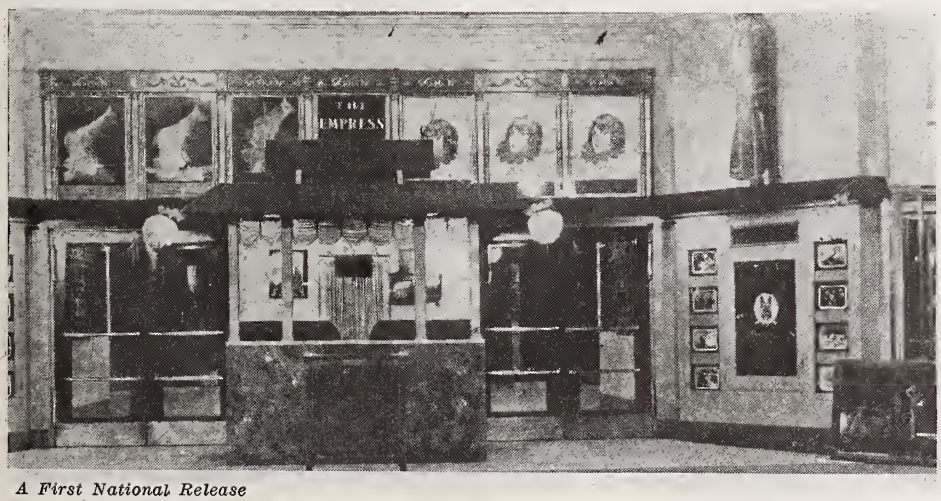
Different

Not wanting to be one of the 8,649 managers to use the klansmen cutouts for lobby decorations for "One Clear Call," Frank J. Miller, Manager of Theatres for Southern Enterprises in Augusta, Ga., decided to do his own thinking, and found that it paid.

In the lobby of the Modjeska Theatre he set up a painted flat showing a brick wall with the title lettered across the face. The wall stood nearly four feet high.

Two feet back on this he placed a profile klan trumpter and between this and the wall he set red incandescents. Back of the horseman, who was considerably over life size, he set up a black backing on which were painted a dead tree and a moon with an owl sharply outlined against the luminary.

He backed this with a mounted rider.



A First National Release

A PAGODA EFFECT FOR THE BOX OFFICE IS VERY SIMPLE

Put a red roof on any structure, put tinkling bells or wind bells at the corners. Mask in with red cloth and you have something that will sell many more tickets for "East Is West." That is what Tom Boland, of the Empress, Oklahoma City, discovered

A First National Release

A NEAT DISPLAY FOR A "LORNA DOONE" CINDERELLA CONTEST

The Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Ia., had to use the police to preserve the line while the Iowans sought to qualify for the honor of having the model foot. Apart from the unmounted stills this is an attractive window dressing

Autographed Prizes

Autographed copies of "Lorna Doone" were offered as prizes in an essay competition at the Des Moines Theatre for that attraction. First National exploitation states that copies of the book desired for use of prizes will be autographed by Ince and Miss Bellamy if sufficient notice be given.

The Des Moines also ran a Cinderella contest for a pair of brocaded slippers and tied up the various proprietary articles in addition to a bannered street car with a sizable mileage.

Remember This One?

Remember a couple of years ago when you would get the exploitation man to send a few hundred postcards from the nearest large city reading: "Am having a fine time. Saw 'Manslaughter' last night. Don't miss it when it comes to the ....., Nellie," and the blank filled in with the name of your house?

A. H. Cobb, Jr., of the Alamo Theatre, Griffin, Ga., got the Atlanta office to send out 300 cards to a list of names he supplied and it works just as well as ever.

He also used the traffic cards and rotogravures to help build business 35 per cent. It cost him $15.

Gave a B. B. Ball

Revising an old stunt, the Lyric Theatre, Fort Collins, Col., persuaded a local dancing master to give a Buffalo Bill ball the Saturday before the serial, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," opened at the Lyric.

All who came costumed as the historic personages in the picture were admitted free and prizes were awarded for the best costumes. It put over the picture and helped the dance, for the extra attendance more than offset the free admissions.

Paraded the Cops

Wanting something newer than the newsboy's parade, the Strand Theatre, Seattle, paraded the police force to a special showing of "Sherlock Holmes," on the proposition that they might learn something about catching criminals. Goldwynner Frank H. Burns helped Manager Wright put the idea over, and they made motion picture of the parade as a special feature, this being shown in all of the Jensen and von Herberg houses to advertise the film at the Strand.

The "21" puzzle was used for amateur Sherlocks and a street ballyhoo was put out with a fore-and-aft cap and magnifying glass.

Eddie Bonns Booms "Hungry Hearts" Run

Eddie Bonns does not believe in a one-stunt exploitation. He gets even the New York papers to fall for his big stunts on the Goldwyn releases when they come to the Capitol for the New York run, but he believes in backing that up.

For "Hungry Hearts" he put out a boy and a woman, dressed as Russian peasants, who perambulated the financial and theatre sections, and he also put out 3,000 peppermint hearts printed up "No More Hungry Hearts." Each was in a glassine envelope printed with the playing date and house.

The same legend was used on 5,000 paper shopping bags distributed within a mile radius of the theatre, and an equal number of potato bags were put out with the grocers and vegetable markets.

Twelve thousand red paper hearts and 15,000 heralds completed the campaign, except for the book hook-up, which was very largely employed.

Whirling Wheels

Three hundred above the average, with perhaps another three hundred lost through a Sunday missout was the record of "The Fast Mail" at the Majestic Theatre, Memphis.

For two weeks in advance H. B. Clarke had a window on Main street showing a transparency drop of a speeding train with an airplane above it going even faster. In front of this was a layout of stills and cards.

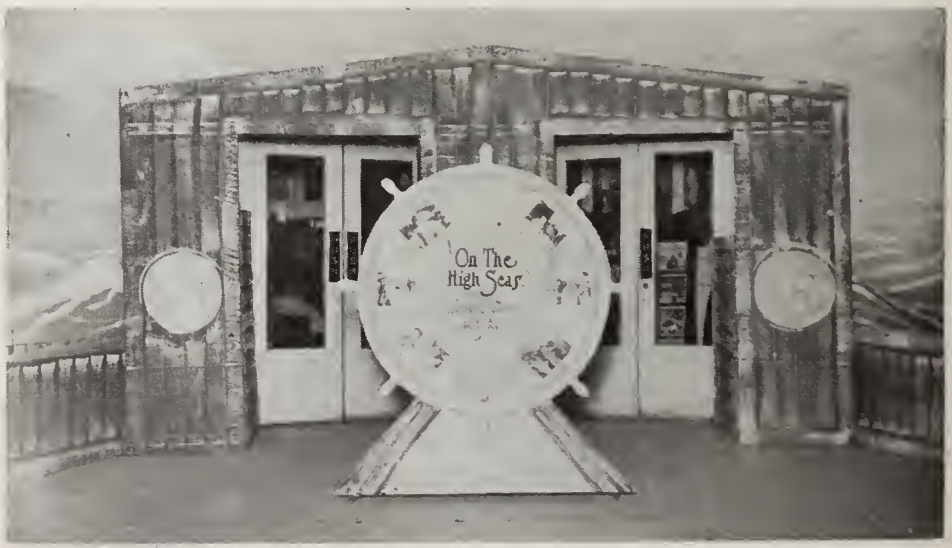
For the lobby he used a compo board locomotive with the wheels geared to high speed on a fan motor. Two 24-sheets were spread across the entrance with a banner on either side of the lobby.

Another Hot Sands

Add to J. M. Edgar Hart's steam heated sand for "Burning Sands," the device of A. R. Lynch, of the Lyric Theatre, Jackson, Tenn.

Mr. Lynch buried cans of solidified alcohol in his sands, so that the blaze came through. It was realistic and inexpensive; less costly even than the El Paso stunt.

If you put a little powdered borax on top of the alcohol in the can, you get a more visible green blaze. Also some fumes. Use it only in the open.



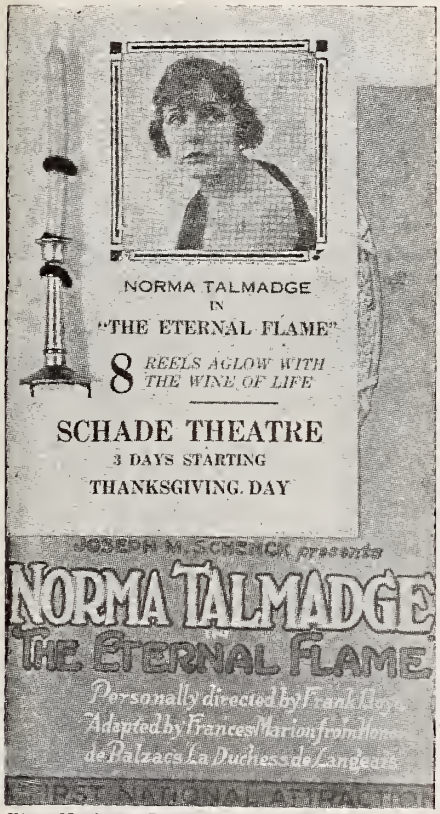
A Paramount Release

HERE'S A LOG BOAT OUT "ON THE HIGH SEAS"

G. M. Phillips, of the Strand Theatre, Atlanta, built this for Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt to sail in. It looks as though it might have been a log cabin in the remote past, but the wheel gets over the idea of "On the High Seas"

Novelty Folders on "Eternal Flame"

George J. Schade is going in for novelty stunts at his Sandusky house. Several of his schemes have been listed and the latest are small rubber boots for "The Storm" and miniature candles for "The Eternal Flame."



A First National Release

THE SCHADE NOVELTY

This is a three-piece mailer; a card folder telling of the attraction and apparently accessory stuff; a card printed for the house and announcing the date, and a candle one inch long in a metal holder half as long again. The card was slit to let through the base of the candlestick. All were clipped together for mailing.

Most exhibitors have pinned their faith to the three foot candle. Schade goes to the other extreme, and with even better results, for the appeal is more direct.

Music for Ming Toy

A phonograph hook-up was not listed for "East Is West," but that did not prevent the Coliseum Theatre, Seattle, from getting four phonograph windows on the Chinese play.

All companies have a considerable selection of Americanized Chinese numbers on their records, and a cutout from the three sheet gave point to a drive on the play and the selections. This is a little different angle, and if you can get the stores to play the selections, with a repeater, it will be better yet.

A First National Release

THE PHONOGRAPH IDEA

And do not forget that both Victor and Columbia can supply real Chinese records, even though they may not have them in stock. Try a couple in the lobby. The instrumental numbers are the best.

Rings Were Passes

H. H. Wilson, of the Sherman Theatre, Sullivan, Ind., adapted the lost key stunt to "Man-Woman-Marriage," when he belatedly played that production.

Ten wedding rings, procured from the ten-cent store, were "lost" and the finders were rewarded with passes. Everyone was looking for the rings and talking about the play.

Real Circus Flavor Given to a Serial

Roland G. McCurdy, Des Moines Universalist, is evidently an old circus man, with a little sawdust still in his hair.

To launch the Universal chapter play, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," he used a poster wagon to distribute the lithos and other accessories, but he had two sets of signs painted.

A Universal Release

McCURDY'S CAR

The cut shows "Car No. 2," but the same wagon with the other set of signs was "Car No. 1" and the signs were alternated to give the idea that the serial was so big that it took two outfits to put it over properly. It had a substantial moral effect, and offers an idea to managers for their own bill wagon—whether they have one or not. An express wagon can be hired for a couple of hours a day, and it certainly does give an impression.

Mother's Matinee Hits New Zealand

Human nature is pretty much the same everywhere, and the Fox office reports that the Mother's Matinee, worked in connection with "Over the Hill," is doing as well "down under" as it did in this section of the globe.

The Grand Theatre, Christ Church, a city of 100,000, played to a continuous standout through the use of this device, giving a morning performance when elderly women were admitted as guests of the house. The theatre is located in the center of the town's business activities, and the arriving guests made a wonderful ballyhoo.

An Equity Release

CARTOONS HELPED "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN?" AT THE MAJESTIC THEATRE, MEMPHIS

H. B. Clarke turned to cartoon work to get attention for this attraction. His lobby front was a huge cartoon poster showing what poor fishes the men are, and his entry in the Armistice Day parade was a truck with a more decided reply to the question, showing what Jiggs thinks is the reply to the question. The receipts were pushed several hundred dollars over the usual gross

A Page and a Half for "Foolish Wives"

In addition to taking slightly more than half a page on its own account for "Foolish Wives" on the opening day, the Strand Theatre, Cumberland, Md., one of the Crandall houses, got a full page hook-up, the feature of which was the use of a name plate in each of the hook-up ads, which gives six repeats of the title in reverse to go in with the space on that page either taken by or given to the house. This space is in addition to the half page already mentioned. Supplying name plates to the merchants gives a more complete hook-up and the value of iteration is apparent from a glance at the page. This holds up better than a page in which each merchant follows his own devices in hooking in. The cost of the plates is not heavy, and each is an additional advertisement to be had only for the cost of the cut instead of the cut, plus the space.

Cobb On the Job

Revival meetings are serious troubles to southern managers. The entire population turns out and the theatres have to starve.

When A. H. Cobb, Jr., of the Alamo Theatre, Griffin, Ga., came to play "Nice People," the churches were holding meetings preparatory to the revival to be started the following week. It looked pretty blue for Cobb, but he started in by getting the unqualified endorsement of the women's clubs and then tied that next day to the statement that no better preparation for the revival could be conceived than a viewing of the sins of society in "Nice People." It saved a lot of seats from being empty and, better still, it gave emphasis to the moral value of the pictures.

Employs Full Page for Return Feature

Taking a full page for an important attraction is nothing new, but the Royal Theatre, Victoria, B. C., does something different when it uses an entire page in which to make announcement of the return engagement of Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through." It brought the picture back for a full week and sells it on the original notice, given when the picture played the house nearly five months before. There is a keen appreciation added in the column at the left, but the real selling talk is the reference to the original hit. The stuff is well written, though a familiar error is made in the box, "To the public," where the management says in part: "If you have not seen it, don't miss it. If you have seen it, I think you will agree with us that it is worth seeing again." When you start to write decide whether you will use the editorial "we" or the first personal pronoun and stick to your choice. This employs the we earlier in the box, goes to "I" and returns to the "we." It's a very minor matter, but it is so easily to be avoided that some care should be exercised. It is a real tribute to Miss Talmadge that this return should be so widely proclaimed, but "Smilin' Through" is a play most persons will gladly see again, and it should be good for almost universal repeats.

Signed the Shanties

Because the railroad runs right down Main street in Lafayette, Ind., and past the Arc Theatre, the house placarded the flagman's shanties with all sorts of advertising for "The Fast Mail."

Few towns can work this stunt, but there is a good suggestion in the idea. It might be possible to make up a few slab shanties for the main crossings with flagmen to warn of the coming of the "Fast Mail." You don't have to have a railroad to use the shanties, and if you can hook it to the traffic control, so much the better.

Those Penny Tickets

Selling tickets for a penny apiece seems to be the newest cleanup in the Southern Enterprises territory. R. L. Towns, of the Strand, Birmingham, lays off 500 tickets to a local store, good until one o'clock for the opening matinee.

The store advertises the sale heavily, and limits the purchase to two to a customer. To get full value, the counter at which the sale is handled is always adjacent to some merchandise the store wishes to move, and the location is changed for each sale.

The Monday matinee is never very good, and this brings in an additional 500 to spread the valuable word of mouth advertising. It also helps in that the pay patrons, who come later, do not feel so lonesome. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred the visitor is impressed by the full house and likes the picture better than he would in a half empty house.

Sells Harold Lloyd With Little Effort

Because Harold Lloyd is a self-seller, the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, gives most of the display to his name and drawings of himself and grandma, contenting itself with a few strong lines to get the general idea over. This would be inadvisable in many instances, but it will sell Lloyd because so much has been said about his first excursion into the longer lengths. He needs no more argument, for he is already sold through the newspapers and fan magazines. It is required only that the fact of his appearance be stated, and this is done nicely and without waste of words, yet each word in the four lines in the shield is carefully considered that the best and strongest may be used. All the rest of the show is thrown overboard except the overture and the sole appeal is made with the comedy.

Cuts Down Stock Cuts to Fit Desired Space

Edward J. Hiehle, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Marietta, Ohio, does not sit down and weep profusely because the plan book cuts are not always what he wants. He does the best he can with what he can get. He has no engraver in town, but the printer has a hacksaw and he can cut down to make a fit. This display using a familiar Norma Talmadge cut is about the best of a number of efforts he sends in, though there are several specimens in which he gains a good effect through cutting out only the head of a star and taking off the bareness, as in this example from a Metro cut of Mae Murray. This is really a better display in all except the placement of the cut, because it gives better publicity in smaller space. We think the "Smilin' Through" is a bit too large for what should be a self seller, and the title cut is too obscure. This would get a better display in type, for we take it that Mr. Hiehle wants display and not merely a picture. The design obscures the name and makes even the title less prominent, and this is an instance wherein both name and play title have a value. Clearness is to be preferred to prettiness, and the cut is not even pretty because the drawing is too close and it looks more like a smudge than a design. This "Smilin' Through" advertisement could have been pulled in by a third with no loss of appeal by cutting out the title design and setting this in two lines to the left of the cut, retaining the present selling lines. In the main, the printer seems to run too much to panel work. A little of this is good for a change, but most of the displays are ruled off in somewhat similar manner and the idea becomes monotonous. The device should be saved for use where two or more program units are to be put over equally, as where Barthelmess in "Sonny" and the "Buffalo Bill" serial are given a joint showing. Here two paneled cuts and two panels for the titles work better than they would loose in the space, but this does not apply to the two examples shown, where dropping some of the rule work would have given a more airy and inviting display. For Mr. Hiehle's benefit, we like very well his display for "The Four Horsemen" and do not like the fussy display for the last day of "Smilin' Through." Here the cut is a detractor. They did not think that the plan book suggestion for a hook-up page on "In the Name of the Law" would suit the local merchants, so the local ad man got up his own hook-in lines and found no difficulty in selling the merchants by displaying the matter ready to go into the form. This very greatly simplified the matter of selling off the page, and is a hint to others who may experience difficulty. Show them just how it will look. Don't bother to set up, but show the rough pencil sketch.

A DIFFERENT HANDLING

Thanks An Exhibitor for Capital Copy

A. O. Gill, of the Erie Theatre, Hugo, Okla., sends his thanks to Hayes, of Hillsdale, Mich., for the reader reprinted in this department for October 21. Mr. Gill writes that he thinks it hard to beat, so he copied it off into his own display, as the larger of the two advertisements shows. He realizes, as does Mr. Hayes, that he can advertise something besides features and that an occasional little comment will do the house infinite good. He is getting nice results from his printer and this paneled advertisement for "Is Matrimony a Failure?" gets nice treatment, to match his carefully written copy. The proportioning of the types could not be much better done, and yet it will be recalled that Mr. Gill's debut in this department was to get a criticism he could shoot into the printer. Evidently the suggestions were accepted, for since then the Gill advertisements have been decidedly good. He writes that he is cutting down his displays. The display for "Is Matrimony a Failure?" occupies a three sixes, but in another sample he puts over a last day and an underline in just half that space and does it adequately. For the matrimonial picture he saw his chance for more good copy, so he took more space and added the Hayes reader. For "Too Much Speed" and "Bought and Paid For" he figured that he would be able to put them over with less talk, so he cut down his advertising space. He seems to reason along the Lem Stewart lines that large displays are of no value unless they get over better copy. Of course you cannot cut it too much without getting the paper busy with the blue pencil on readers, but you can effect a gradual reduction that will bring your advertising down to more reasonable limits, and then you will have more money with which to splurge on a big special. Figure on just how little the paper will expect and then make that your usual space; building up on this only when you have more to say or wish to say it more importantly. The idea that a three nines will sell twice as many seats as three four and a halfs is fundamentally wrong, else you could take all full pages and crowd the house at extra performances all the time. There is no magic in newspaper advertising save that you put in it yourself with smartly written copy. Mr. Gill also reports that he got good results from a program appeal to patrons to check their preferences on a blank which listed "Society drama, society comedy, love drama, tragedy, classics (from books), comedy drama, slapstick comedy, western." Were also four lines for favored stars, and spaces for the name and address and telephone number. This is old stuff, but once or twice a year you can dig up the copy, run it and not only get a line on your patrons' tastes, but you can verify your mailing list and at the same time persuade them that you are giving careful attention to your programs. It would be good work, from this latter angle, even if you threw the replies in the waste basket. It would have a definite moral value, but no wise manager will basket that stuff until he has taken off the results, and if he gets the favored stars checked, he can use the telephone numbers to good advantage.

David Horsley Runs Theatre in Hawaii

David Horsley, who figured prominently as a producer in the good old days of the M. P. Sales Company, is now conducting the States Theatre in Honolulu. He writes that he is coming to New York to make additional contracts, but meanwhile he sends in samples of his advertising. These are on pink paper and cannot be reproduced, but they are interesting examples of what can be done in Hulaland. Evidently he is also connected with the First National exchange there, for one of the ads—on "Jim the Penman," urges the reader to demand the States program at his own theatre, which may account for the large spaces taken for all of the advertisements. They seem designed to sell the program as well as the house. His display for "Go and Get It" is a six fifteens, and for Norma Talmadge in "The Sign on the Door" is even deeper—about a seventeen. This lists twenty-one houses playing First Nationals in the Territory of Hawaii. It is evident that he has not lost his skill as an advertiser, and we regret that the tint of the paper prohibits reproduction, for they are interesting examples and show none of the amateurishness which too often marks the territorial work. This might have been set in any city in the States.

"All Wet"

Because there was a flight aviator in town, J. P. Harris, of the Arcade Theatre, Fort Myers, Fla., swapped a slide for an aerial bill stunt. Fifty passes were thrown from the plane while it flew over the main streets. Ten went into the river, but it is still warm down in Florida and small boys dived in and rescued them. With window cards, extra stills and general jazz, combined with the air stunt, Mr. Harris played "Blood and Sand" for three days, where two days was supposed to be the limit for this town.

GREAT ALONE. A very good picture of the outdoors that pleased the people who saw it. Get this, as I believe you can make some money. Advertising: newspaper, lobby, etc. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. Good picture. Race scene good. Pleased about 87%. Patronage: town. Attendance: good. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. Excellent picture; audiences enthusiastic over it. But it did not draw commensurate with its big cost. Advertising: like a circus. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

F. B. O.

BEYOND THE RAINBOW. Good story, fine cast, excellent photography. Went over big with our patrons. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

BLOT. A clever picture, cleverly played and very entertaining. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

COLLEEN OF THE PINES. For me, just an ordinary movie, poorly constructed, very improbable and unusual. Did not please generally, although no outspoken kicks registered. Usual advertising and lobby display of pictures and posters. Star: Jane Novak. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. Good picture; one that is true to life. Harry Carey gaining in popularity. Advertising: usual lobby display. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FIRST WOMAN. A good picture with a punch at the finish that pleased the few who came in. Our town is very short on business. Advertising: photos, newspapers, etc. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. A picture that everybody liked; no more than a regular program, but it has the pulling power and it pleases. I beat all records in attendance and receipts. You won't go wrong on this one. It brings them in. Advertising: cutouts, two papers, ones, threes, photos, heralds, slide. Patronage: average. Attendance: broke all records. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

First National

EAST IS WEST. An exceptionally good picture. Full of entertainment. Everybody well pleased. A good box-office money-getter. Star: Constance Talmadge. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ETERNAL FLAME. Certainly great. Get behind it and push; and above all, get a window for the candle stunt. Advertising: strongest in three months. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

ETERNAL FLAME. Excellent picture; one that will appeal to the better class. Norma Talmadge does her best in this; good supporting cast. Will draw where the star has a following. Advertising: newspaper, twenty-fours, threes, sixes, postal cards, all kinds. Attendance: good. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

GO AND GET IT. Wesley Barry takes good here. Patrons were much delighted with this type of picture. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, photos, papers. Patronage: local. Attendance: good. F. M. Knight, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. A good picture which drew good business and pleased all seeing it. The kind of a picture that makes new fans. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LOVE'S REDEMPTION. Extra good picture. Norma Talmadge, the star, quite a favorite with all my patrons. Advertising: two threes, four ones. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. W. Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE. In spite of the fact that there was a cold rain, I had a full house and they all said it was worth going through to see. Advertising: every way I could think of. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

MARRIED LIFE. Good comedy drama. R. P. Cecil, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

ROSARY. Another mistake for us. Steady patrons walked out. Did they like it? Ran two days; receipts first day, $123.50; second day, $9.40. A shame to both Catholic and Protestant—had as many kicks from one as from the other. Advertising: special order posters and lobby. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good first day only. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

SEVENTH DAY. Very, very good; but couldn't compare with "Tol'able David" and "Sonny." It will please and draw on account of the star, but don't over-advertise it. Advertising: posters and heralds. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SMILIN' THROUGH. Norma Talmadge never did anything better. I don't have to go into detail; every exhibitor that keeps in touch knows this picture value. You'll do business, and if you can get it without giving your right eye, do so and make some change. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SMILIN' THROUGH. I have shown at least a half dozen of "the greatest pictures ever made," this year; but none of them drew like this. Fully a hundred told me that it was the best they had ever seen. Personally, I think it wonderful. Though I broke the house record, I made very little on it. Advertising: trebled newspaper; tie-up with music store, doubled posters, etc. Patronage: small town. Attendance: biggest yet. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SMILIN' THROUGH. Hung up a box-office record. First real business in months. Pleased most all. Advertising: regular. Patronage: family. Attendance: big. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. Beyond the shadow of a doubt, the greatest picture of mountain life ever made. For casting, direction, locations and titles, it can't be beaten. The most enjoyable picture thrown on my screen this year. Book it; boost it every way you know how. Advertising: every way known. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. As good a picture as we have seen in years. The kind of a picture that will make and hold picture fans. Advertising: photos and mail. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

TRAPPED IN THE AIR. Very good Western. Pleased about eighty per cent. A fine program picture; plenty of action all the way through. Advertising: ones, threes, newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

WEDDING BELLS. Constance is evidently trying to come back, as her stories are getting better. She's always been fine, but there must be some excuse for her appearance. Advertising: regular lobby with heralds. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

Fox

ARABIAN LOVE. Our Saturday crowds liked this one very much. Gilbert looks promising. Advertising: as usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BAR NOTHING. Jones exceptionally good in this one, but you couldn't possibly get them in, even with a "free show." Although it lost us money, the picture is in no way to blame. This was an especially good Western and those who were there were greatly entertained. Jones has a good following here, but a free show will hardly get them in during the week. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. Good comedy drama. Sub-titles great. Lost money on fifteen-thirty-five cents admission. Bad weather. Advertising: photos, handbills. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. E. A. Oestern, Oestern's Theatre, Harper's Ferry, Iowa.

DO AND DARE. Boys, here is a snappy one. Mix gets better all the time. Just a word to all of you exhibitors: I have run Fox pictures for three years. I only run three days a week, but I have better service out of Fox than from any other film company. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

ELOPE IF YOU MUST. This is just a mediocre picture; only fair entertainment. Advertising: regular. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

FAST MAIL. Full of action and pep. A splendid picture, splendidly played, and to pleased good business. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FIGHTING STREAK. One of Mix's good ones, well liked by his following, and went over good. Advertising: newspaper, posters. Patronage: mostly men. Attendance: good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

FOOTFALLS. For me, this has less entertainment value than any picture to date. Imagine the star of "A Fool There Was" as an ingenue. Advertising: ones and six. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. S. Pace, Jettie Theatre, Texline, Texas.

FOR BIG STAKES. A splendid Tom Mix picture. Full of the Mix fun and pep. Advertising: posters. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

FOR BIG STAKES. Boys, get this picture! One you can call a special; action from start to finish. Advertising: six, three, photos. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

JUST TONY. A human horse is Tony. They cannot help being satisfied with this "Mix" picture. It will please men, women and children alike; invite the whole family to see it. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison street, Chicago, Illinois.

JUST TONY. Mix and his horse. Without exception the greatest masterpiece in horsemanship. The horse is wonderful, and a whole lot better than some stars we have. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good (as usual). R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

LIVE WIRES. A very good five-reel program picture. Young folks especially will enjoy it very much, being a college picture. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed Attendance: fair. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

LIVE WIRES. Stars made a very good showing in this picture. Pleased about eighty per cent. Advertising: slide, paper, cards. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: fair. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

MOONSHINE VALLEY. Fine acting. Picture could have been better, though. Farnum does not draw half as much as he used to. Advertising: photos, one sheet, slide, newspaper. Patronage: rough class. Attendance: poor. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

THE NEW TEACHER. Despite the fact that the reviewers say it is a conventional picture, it went over good. Everybody satisfied. Advertising: three ones, one three, slide. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

TO A FINISH. Buck Jones in a five-reel thriller that pleased a majority of my patrons. Some very thrilling stunts pulled by Buck. A clean Western. If your patrons want excitement, get this one. Avertising: ones, threes, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WEST OF CHICAGO. Good program picture. Will please those who like Westerns. Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

WEST OF CHICAGO. Quite good if Westerns are desired. Advertising: posters, program, newspaper. Patronage: country town. Attendance: fair. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

Several weeks ago Mr. Thos. L. Haynes said that he found Straight from the Shoulder Reports ninety-five per cent. accurate.

That leaves only a five per cent. leak in the dependability faucet, but you want no leak at all.

Sometimes you'll get a real "lemon" and that's when you need to tip the rest of the crowd before they get stung, the same as they are handing you the office to lay off of some other "quince."

But how about the average stuff that hops onto your screen when you pay too much or don't happen to get the right pulling angle, and old Pa Patron sits tight with his feet in the oven at home—and you get sore and shoot in a "panning" that makes that particular film curl up and die in the opinion of a lot of folks?

Whale the daylights out of any real "bloomer"—but, fellows, for the sake of one hundred per cent. trustability, make every tip a true tip, even if you do miss a chance to get back at somebody.

VAN.

Goldwyn

BEATING THE GAME. I am a booster for Tom Moore. He never disappoints my audiences. A fine program picture. Advertising: usual. Patronage: country town. Attendance: good. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

HEAD OVER HEELS. Some like it, but don't think the majority would. Advertising: program, newspaper, posters. Patronage: country town. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

HIS OWN LAW. Just a fair program picture. My patrons were about fifty-fifty. Some liked it and some didn't. Quite heavy in places. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

MADAM X. Nothing extra. Parts cut out. Rental too high. Nothing but a fair picture. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

REMEMBRANCE. Not what it was cracked up to be at all, for me. A fair program picture and nothing more. Lost a lot of money on it. Advertising: window cards, newspapers, etc. Patronage: high class. Attendance: poor. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

WALL FLOWER. Had some favorable comments on this and others did not like it. Personally, could not see why it did not please all; should call it a good program picture. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Massachusetts.

Hodkinson

NO TRESPASSING. Good picture; but the women were disappointed. They expected her to dance and wear pretty clothes. It pleased, however, but they like her better in other type stories. Advertising: posters and heralds. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FREE AIR. A good picture, reasonably bought. Far above the average program material. Advertising: posters. Patronage: rural. Attendance: fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

SLIM SHOULDERS. Everybody seeing "Slim Shoulders" well pleased. No kicks registered. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Metro

BROADWAY ROSE. Good. Satisfies about seventy-five per cent. Good direction; settings very good; dance scenes the best Mae Murray has done. Picture will make you money if you don't pay too much for it. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones, window cards, slides. Patronage: everybody. Attendance: fair. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

BROADWAY ROSE. Well pleased audiences. Mae Murray was fascinating in this one. No kicks registered. A good booking proposition. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CONQUERING POWER. For me, a great picture. Sorry to disagree with some who said picture was a failure. Pleased a hundred per cent. For myself, I believe the picture to be a masterpiece. Advertising: extensive. Patronage: small town. Attendance: excellent. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

INFAMOUS MISS REVELL. A very poor story, but Alice Lake did as well with it as could be expected. Comments by patrons favorable. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

LIFE'S DARN FUNNY. An ordinary Viola Dana picture. She usually goes good with me and is well liked by my patrons. Advertising: newspaper and posters. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Here is one that went over big for two days at advanced prices and pleased them all. Did not hear any complaints at all, so it must be a one hundred per cent. production when my patrons don't kick any. Advertising: lobby, sixes. Patronage: regular. Attendance:

good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

WOMAN'S HATE. Terrible title, with no drawing power. Patrons unable to make out into what part of the picture the title was supposed to fit. The picture itself not so bad. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. Good Reid picture. His automobile stories always please. Everyone seemed satisfied. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. Familiar theme, treated in the usual way. To me, a very ordinary picture. Theodore Roberts, rather than Wally Reid, pulled it through. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BEAUTY SHOP. Boys! I just can not tell you how disappointed I was in this picture. When the show was over I went in my office and closed the door for I felt sure I would have to fight or take a lot of abuse. Had this picture booked for two nights, but was so bad, returned after first night. W. Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. Excellent. In my opinion, book this one and you can't go wrong. Advertising: twenty-fours, sixes, threes, ones, photos. Patronage: resort. Attendance: good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

BLOOD AND SAND. A high class motion picture for a high class audience, in every sense of the word. A story that tells something and tells it in a most entertaining way. The cutting in of the real bull fight scenes with the studio stuff is marvelous, a work of art that has seldom been equaled. Valentino is at his best. If he was starred in a part similar to his vagabond bull fighter in the first of the picture, he would be immense. Attendance: capacity, three days. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

BURNING SANDS. Not another "Sheik" by any means, but a fine picture. I did not see this one before running it. Advertised it as bigger and better than the "Sheik" but the public do not think so. Why they cast Wanda Hawley in her role in this one I can't tell, but she is out of her depth and struggling hard. She does not arrive at all in this one. Sills is fine, and Regan is as good, except that her attempt at dancing is rather lamentable. Hawley in the scene after the attempted seduction should cover up and not continue the display of flesh too long. Small matter, but it counts in towns like this. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

DICTATOR. Enthusiasm of large audiences throughout the week was faithfully mirrored in the box office receipts, which were unusually large. Star: Wallace Reid. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okahoma.

EASY ROAD. An excellent picture. Lila Lee is to be commended for her work in this. Drew fairly well. Advertising: six and ones. Patronage: small town. S. Pace, Jettie Theatre, Texline, Texas.

EVERYTHING FOR SALE. Not a bad picture, but failed to do any business. No one walked out; but several went to sleep. Advertising: average. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very light. Big Ben Theatre, Ilion, New York.

EXCUSE MY DUST. A good Reid picture. About like others he has starred in. Gave the usual satisfaction Advertising: ones, threes, lobby, cards. Patronage: small town. Attendance: ordinary. A. L. Hepp, Idyl Hour Theatre, Greeley, Nebraska.

FIND THE WOMAN. An excellent crook picture, starring Alma Rubens. Play this up with this star, who was featured in "Humoresque." We had many excellent comments on this one. Advertising: threes, ones, photos. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

FOOL'S PARADISE. Here is a hundred per cent. production; one that will stand two days and you can raise your prices. I paid too much to show a profit, but it's a good show. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

FOOL'S PARADISE. For me, one of the most wonderful attractions of the year. Went over fine. Don't be afraid to boost this one. Advertising: special printed cards, one sheets and posters. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

GILDED CAGE. Gloria will have to do more than wear pretty clothes if she becomes popular enough for the prices they ask. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

GREEN TEMPTATION. Patrons very well pleased. A good program picture and will stand extra advertising. Advertising: photos, ones, threes. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

LANE THAT HAD NO TURNING. This was fine; but I started Paramount Week with the "Wife Trap" and killed the week. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

LOVES OF PHARAOH. Good picture, good cast. One of the best pictures, for me, Paramount has ever made. Picture should please all classes and is a sure nuff box office coin getter. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MAN FROM HOME. Pleased one hundred per cent. Very good story and some wonderful scenery. Advertising: lobby, newspaper, billboards, hand bills. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. Have been showing pictures here now for ten years and I believe that, for me, this is the rottenest I ever ran in the ten years that I have been here. Attendance: what did come walked out. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

PINK GODS. A three star Paramount. Bebe Daniels' best work so far. Wonderful melodrama. Advertising like a circus. Business, S. R. O. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

Thank You!

Just as soon as Straight From the Shoulder asked for reports on "Woman of No Importance" good friends, including D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pa., shot them in. The reports have been sent to the folks who wanted them. Thank you.

Playgoers

TRACKS. With special cast; an excellent picture, well executed and well played. No mistake can be made in booking this one. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Selznick

CHIVALROUS CHARLEY. Just fair. O'Brien is a new star here and the way he draws now think that he always will be. If I was rating this picture for entertainment value I'd say about fifty per cent., and you would have to have a strong short subject to brace it then. Advertising: regular. Patronage: country. Attendance: poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

A MAN'S HOME. Not a great picture, but people liked it and said so. Advertising: one, six, photos, throwaways. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MIRACLE OF MANHATTAN. A fair program picture; a good Society drama. Pleased about seventy-five per cent. Advertising: ones, three, six, dodgers. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

RECKLESS YOUTH. You will like this picture. Elaine Hammerstein is the star; she is most always good and draws well at my theatre. Advertising: one three, four ones. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

RECKLESS YOUTH. Hammerstein, as usual, good; but this picture is suggestive. My patrons hate such scenes. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

REPORTED MISSING. Owen Moore in a real comedy-drama that makes 'em hold to their seats. Title and paper good; it went over good. F. L. Anderson, Queen Theatre, Marfa, Texas.

UNDER OATH. A very pleasing picture that drew very well and was liked here. On the program order, but a shade better than the average program picture. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

United Artists

ORPHANS OF THE STORM. D. W. Griffith made a picture here; any exhibitor that can't get business with this, don't know the game. But buy it right. Advertising: heralds and mailing list. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: excellent. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WAY DOWN EAST. Advertised this in seven towns for both my houses and made a little money. Best picture we ever saw. Advertising: photos, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair—I should have done better the way I advertised. E. A. Oestern. Oestern's Theatre, Harper's Ferry, and Lyric, New Allis, Iowa.

WAY DOWN EAST. Wonderful attraction, but greatly disappointed on its drawing power, although strike conditions were bad. Advertising: extensive. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Universal

THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL. With Mae Murray, an instant hit. Held up fine all week and enjoyed pleased good business. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DON'T GET PERSONAL. Here is a splendid comedy-drama that should please your patrons if they are not too critical. It is clean, entertaining, and carries a good moral. The team work of Marie Prevost and T. Roy Barnes makes this more than an ordinary feature. Will stand extra advertising. Advertising: regular. Patronage: community. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

THE FOX. While this is a very good Western, it is far from being a Special. I promised a little too much on this. Be careful not to oversell it or you'll hear from your patrons as I did. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

THE FOX. This is truly a super-Western production. Harry Carey never fails to please our patrons and in this picture he has outdone himself. The fact that a genuine plot has the spectator in suspense 'till the climax, distinguishes this as a masterpiece in the motion picture realm. Patronage: very best. Attendance: good. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

LONG CHANCE. Good program picture. All of the Winning Nine have been good. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

PLAYING WITH FIRE. A genuine knock out. This little star (Gladys Walton) knocks 'em for a home run every time. I am strong for Universal; its prices are fair, prints good, pictures average good. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

RED COURAGE. Hoot always brings in the bacon for me and pleases my audience. Advertising: nothing special. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

THE STORM. This one came here with a fine reputation and went away with a better one. It is all picture; interesting all the way. Gave splendid satisfaction to all. Forest fire scene vividly realistic. We know, because we have seen them burning. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: big. H. S. Mitchell, Opera House, Windsor, Nova Scotia, Canada.

Use the blank below to introduce yourself among the crowd of good fellows who are making Straight from the Shoulder the exhibitor's dependable tip department.

SHATTERED DREAMS. In our estimation Miss Du Pont is very pleasing to look at, but a star will have to have other good qualities to be a drawing card with us. Although this is not such a terribly bad picture, neither is it a very good one. Don't promise your patrons very much if you play it. Patronage: community. Attendance: just fair, and glad of it. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

THE TRAP. A program picture with one punch near the end; otherwise rather draggy. But Lon Chaney does fine work. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: fair. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

WILD HONEY. A fair picture, but business always slumps when a Dean regular picture comes to this theatre. Advertising: newspapers, three ones, slide, photos. Patronage: local. Attendance: not good. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

Vitagraph

RECEIVED PAYMENT. A good program picture. Miss Griffith, an Arkansas girl, has a large following here. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

RECEIVED PAYMENT. Very clever picture and well acted. Miss Griffith is getting to be popular here. Advertising: lobby, newspaper. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

SHEIK'S WIFE. The American people do not care for foreign made pictures, therefore we lost money on this one although the story was very good. G. K. Nenes, Liberty Theatre, Miami, Arizona.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. A very good comedy with a very good picture cast and unfortunately a cast that had very little pull here outside of Tully Marshall; but if you can get them in at your matinee they'll publish the fact regarding its merit. I did very well and the audience was highly pleased. Advertising: heralds and mailing list. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance; good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHEN DANGER SMILES. With William Duncan and Edith Johnson, a very interesting picture which pleased and drew very good business William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Comedies

ALL WET (Fox). Although there are many laughs in this, it is not up to Al St. John's standard. Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

THE BOAT (First National). A great comedy. Plenty of new stunts. Buster Keaton a big drawing card here. Advertising: extensive. Patronage: small town. Attendance: excellent. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

HEART BREAKERS (Universal). A fair comedy, although, like the rest of the Star series, not worth to us the money we paid for it. I think some one laughed out loud once at this. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

KISS ME, PAULINE (Chester-Educl). A scream from start to finish. Hope the rest of the Educationals are like this. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

PALEFACE (First National). Absolutely nothing to it; did not hear one laugh in the whole two reels. Looks like he made all the good ones for Metro, as we have yet to get one of his First Nationals that will stand up. Showed in connection with this one Harold Lloyd in "I Do," and pleased them all; otherwise would have had to hide out or give back their money. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

REPORTER (Fox). A good, laughable comedy. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

SAILOR MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib). Harold Lloyd at his best in this picture; audience pleased. Lloyd a good puller here. Advertising: slide and posters. Patronage: small town. Attendance: full capacity. W. T. Edom, Dixie Theatre, Rosboro, Arkansas.

TWIN HUSBANDS (F. B. O.). One of the De Havens' best. It will please. Patronage: general. Attendance: very good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Serials

IN THE DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (Universal). It started off with the best serial patronage I have had for over two years. Buy it; it's a sure winner. Advertising: ones, three, six, photos, heralds, newspapers, dodgers, hats. Patronage: general. Attendance: very good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxon, Pennsylvania.

ROBINSON CRUSOE (Universal). On the sixteenth episode and still losing money. Had they made this in more episodes than eighteen it would break me. The worst serial I ever saw. Nothing to it. Any exhibitor who wants to lose money should run it. Advertising: every possible means. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Have run twelve serials and, boys, here is the best serial you can buy. Advertising: six, photos, ones, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

AESOP'S FABLES (Pathe). Always great. Audience looks forward, expectantly, for their Fable, and feel disappointed when they are not shown. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

COME CLEAN (Universal). With Tom Santschi, a pleasing two-reel drama; find Tom O. K. in all of his two reelers. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

State Rights

BURN 'EM UP BARNES (C. C. Burr). A corking good light comedy that will delight a sophisticated audience. If you have played Torchy comedies, book "Burn 'Em Up Barnes." Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good, there is a decided and pleasing upward trend in business in this section. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

I AM THE LAW. This is a good picture which pleased a big business. William Noble, New Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LAST CHANCE. For me, it's a lemon to lay off of, brothers. Our patrons were disgusted. Franklyn Farnum is the star. Patronage: mostly men. Attendance: rotten. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

MAN FROM HELL'S RIVER (Federated). Not up to the standard of Curwood's stories, but pleased eighty per cent. Just a program picture. Advertising: lobby, newspaper, billboards, handbills. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

MAN FROM HELL'S RIVER (Federated). A fairly good Curwood story with a real good cast including Wallace Beery. They feature a dog but he doesn't do anything at all. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Marsden Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

RICH MEN'S WIVES (Lichtman). Stood them up for three nights—something rarely done here. A real box office picture. It delivers the goods, pleasing everybody. Well worth heavy advertising. B. Warner, Warner Theatre, Niles, Ohio.

UNDER WESTERN SKIES (Acie). Absolutely the worst thing, for me, I have run for many a day and I'd stay away from this one again. Advertising: six, three, ones, slide. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: poor, and glad of it. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Consensus of Published Reviews

The Loaded Door

(Hoot Gibson—Universal—4,563 feet)

M. P. W.—Has novel climax. . . . There is melodrama of a familiar sort in the body of the story.

E. H.—A Western thriller, with the popular cowboy actor doing his best to put over a rather obvious story.

N.—Just a snappy, full of action, rapidly moving and thoroughly satisfying Western.

F. D.—First rate comedy drama, with good action and plenty of laughs.

The Prince and the Pauper

(Tibi Lubin—6,522 feet)

M. P. W.—Mark Twain's delightful story, "The Prince and the Pauper," is beautifully and sympathetically picturized.

F. D.—Interesting and fairly spectacular version of Mark Twain's story. . . . Should appeal to matinee crowds especially.

N.—For the most part, "The Prince and the Pauper," is entertaining and should do especially well in neighborhood houses and at matinees when the children are present.

T. R.—A picture which should find favor with young and old.

The Eyes of the Mummy

(Pola Negri—Paramount—3,805 feet)

M. P. W.—Has dramatic force and is well directed.

E. H.—A rather conventional story of the Sahara desert. It contains a thin plot and many stock situations.

N.—Much below par.

T. R.—This picture at its best is far below the majority of former German films that have been shown in this country.

Under Oath

(Elaine Hammerstein—Selznick—5,175 feet)

M. P. W.—Heart-gripping story lavishly produced.

N.—This is Elaine Hammerstein's best picture to date. . . . It has a good story.

E. H.—Without a doubt this is one of the finest pictures in which Elaine Hammerstein has been seen for some time.

T. R.—An extremely interesting picture and admirable starring vehicle for Elaine Hammerstein.

Chain Lightning

(Ann Little—Arrow—5 reels)

M. P. W.—If your patrons enjoy entertaining Southern pictures you should cash in on this one.

F. D.—Pleasing Southern romance and good race track sequence in this. . . . The average audience will like it.

E. H.—Here is a good program picture.

N.—The racing scenes are filled with color and thrills, and there are sufficient elements of a dramatic nature to provide a first rate entertainment.

Destiny's Isle

(Featured Cast—American Releasing Corp.—5,496 feet)

M. P. W.—Attractive but lacking in strong story.

F. D.—Splendid pictorial appeal and good direction keeps story interesting.

N.—Here's a picture whose somewhat hackneyed theme is redeemed by really worth-while direction and the careful work of a well-chosen cast.

T. R.—An attractive picture which holds its interest fairly well.

Smudge

(Charles Ray—First National—4,716 feet)

M. P. W.—In "Smudge" Charles Ray has a story that is interestingly told, and a vehicle that is well acted throughout.

N.—Here it is—something different. Yet "Smudge" resembles other Charles Ray productions sufficiently to identify it with the star's numerous successes.

T. R.—Affords fair entertainment.

E. H.—An amusing and diverting comedy-drama.

So This Is Arizona

(Franklyn Farnum—W. M. Smith Production—5,800 feet)

M. P. W.—An entertaining Western, with more merriment than is usually associated with this class of features.

N.—Here is a rip-roaring Western, full of speed and pep, with a lot of genuine comedy flung in, and some rather broad humor that starts the risibles of Western devotees.

F. D.—Fair Western, built along familiar lines.

E. H.—It should give general satisfaction where Westerns are booked.

Heroes and Husbands

(Katherine MacDonald—First National—5,460 feet)

M. P. W.—Holds interest from start to finish.

N.—Really fine dramatic narrative, well acted, well directed and well photographed.

T. R.—Pleasing entertainment, but appears to be slightly long drawn out.

E. H.—Rely upon the name and popularity of Katherine MacDonald to put this picture over.

"Broken Chains"

Goldwyn Production of Prize-Winning Scenario Should Prove a Good Box-Office Attraction

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Heralded as the winner of a $10,000 prize in a scenario contest conducted by the Chicago Daily News, being selected out of 32,000 manuscripts submitted, the Goldwyn production, "Broken Chains," deals with the regeneration of a coward through the power of love. A striking point in the picture is the logical development of the action along straight-forward lines with no devious by-paths, and the bringing out of new twists in the theme which is not altogether as unique as might be expected under the circumstances. There is intense characterization, strong dramatic situations and thrills, and this coupled with the strong human interest, make it a worth-while picture, considerably above the average, and one which should satisfy a majojrity of patrons, even in the face of a heavy stressing of the brutal side of the villain, which many may consider overemphasized. But it is this handling which adds to the intensity of the drama.

The title has a double significance as not only does the hero break the chains of cowardice that bind him, but the heroine also at the crucial moment in the story is enabled to break the real chains with which her brutal husband has bound her. It is also a good title for the wide-awake exhibitor to use for various kinds of exploitation stunts, tie-up, teasers and posters.

It is a story that is admirably suited to the screen, logically developed with straightforward action and contains many points of audience appeal. There is strong suspense in the situations involving a bridge over a deep chasm which has been equipped with a trap arrangement so that the unwary is liable to be precipitated into the river below. And there is an unusually thrillng stunt where four men on horses make the jump across this big gap to aid in rescuing the girl.

Much of the footage in the latter part of the film is taken up in a thrilling fight between the regenerated coward and the villain who seems unevenly matched, but which the hero by his persistence finally wins. This is probably the longest fight ever seen on the screen; again and again they separate and return to the conflict; in fact, it appears to have been too long drawn out so that it loses some of its force. Even when the villain throws the hero out of a window and lies down to rest, the hero again comes back, as he is determined that one of them must be killed so that the villain's wife may be free. Some of the action is inclined to be stagy and unconvincing, but at the same time it is thrilling. There is one scene which will get a laugh and seems almost like burlesque, where the villain lying down blinks his eyes rapidly at the returning hero.

In building up the characters the brutal and fiendish side of the villain has been accentuated to such an extent that it is distinctly unpleasant, as for instance, where he strikes matches on his dead baby's coffin, breaks up its cradle, and chains his wife so she cannot leave the cabin, while his dog is allowed to roam at will. Conversely, the hero is shown first as unusually cowardly, then as intensely heroic and self-sacrificing.

A feature of the picture is the beautiful photography, there being many exquisite camera shots that would do justice to a scenic.

While nominally, Malcolm McGregor has the leading role and portrays it creditably, Ernest Torrance as the villain gives a particularly interesting performance and he is the outstanding characterization of the film. Colleen Moore is excellently cast as the brutally treated wife and is effective in the lighter as well as the emotional scenes. The remainder of the cast is entirely satisfactory.

Story

Percy Wyndham, reared in luxury, is a mollycoddle. While with the girl his parents expect him to marry, the butler is attacked and shot by a burglar and Percy does ont even raise a finger. The girl is disgusted. Percy, ashamed, goes West to his lumber properties and again shows the white feather. While wandering around he gets lost and inquires his way at a lonely cabin. There he finds the owner, a brutal lawbreaker, has chained his wife so she cannot leave the cabin. Sympathizing with her he pays many visits and their friendship ripens into love. Caught with her, the husband lets him go, as he has learned Percy is to return and bring money to enable the wife to go to her sister.

After a sleepless night comes the determination to die for her so that she may be free. He goes and attacks the husband and there is a long drawn out fight. In the meantime a posse is starting out after the husband, whose gang has robbed the bank. A fiendish trap in a bridge has been sprung and just as the posse comes to get the criminal, Percy succeeds in forcing him through the open bridge where he falls to his death in the river below. Percy and the girl-wife are last seen in each other's arms.

"The Ninety and Nine"

Vitagraph Produces Famous Stage Melodrama With Powerful Climax. Featured Cast

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Wherever the grip of old-fashioned melodrama has not loosened its hold, "The Ninety and Nine" will be a strong attraction. For the second time and with an entirely new cast, Vitagraph has produced this celebrated stage success written by Ramsay Norris.

The production has everything to recommend it to those who like sensational drama of the old school. A falsely accused hero, recurring emphasis on the strain of the lost sheep, a faithful sweetheart, a mustached villain, the fantastic character of a half-wit and a stupendous climax serve to keep the sentiments and emotions of the susceptible spectator in constant upheaval.

By far the most thrilling feature is the climax. In this a raging forest fire and the dramatic escape of the villagers in the train that plows through the flames provides some vivid scenes that will not be forgotten. The appeal is more than spectacular. The fate of the hero, who has come to the rescue of the whole town by driving the engine that is to bring the train to safety, is a matter of the most acute concern. Until now the doom of the murderer has been hanging over him. But closely following his act of heroism comes the proof of his innocence, making the melodrama complete.

There is no attempt at subtlety and not much originality. Those who look for this in a picture will not find satisfaction. But for the many who like sensational entertainment and the old thrills there is a wealth of appeal. Colleen Moore has the featured feminine role and plays with familiar art the maiden who is willing to risk anything to shield her sweetheart. The cast is comprised of good types consistently directed.

Length, 6,800 feet.

Story

Kate Van Dyck, society girl, is secretly engaged to Phil Bradbury. While he is in South America, she falls in love with Mark Leveridge. A mysterious murder in her home makes Phil appear guilty, and he escapes by climbing into a railroad engine and driving away with it. Some time later, after he has settled in the town of Marlow, where Ruth Blake is the attraction, Kate and Mark come upon the scene. Mark is led to suspect Phil, despite his new name, and frames him. Ruth is banished from town because she shields Phil, who is suspected now of robbery. He prepares to leave town. A forest fire starts and he saves the villagers by driving an engine to a train of box cars where they have taken refuge and bearing them from danger. Soon after word comes that he has been proved innocent of the murder. Ruth and he are reunited.

"The Hottentot"

Ince Comedy, Released by First National, is a Knockout and Should Prove Box-Office Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

William Collier's farce comedies on the stage are always good, and one of the best of them, "The Hottentot," has been transferred to the screen by Thomas H. Ince with Douglas MacLean in the leading role, and is being distributed through First National.

It is one of the very best and most highly amusing comedies yet brought to the screen. The humor is clean and refreshing enough to suit the highest class patronage, but at the same time some of the situations are so hilariously funny that they will provoke gales of laughter from any audience. In addition this picture contains one of the finest and most thrilling horse races conceivable. It differs from the regulation horse race, as it is a cross-country steeplechase race, around sharp curves, across fields and rough ground, over obstacles such as hedges, rail and even picket fences, with wide water jumps, etc. This race has been finely handled and photographed and there are a number of thrilling spills. Also, one of the cleverest scenes in the picture occurs near the end of the race, combining a thrill and a laugh, where MacLean is thrown from the horse and almost trampled on and immediately remounts. The way he gets back on that fast-moving horse should make anybody laugh.

The story is also about horses, and while it was a success on the stage it should be a greater one on the screen; in fact, it is essentially a screen story for the camera has pictured in full many of the most humorous and thrilling situations which could only be suggested on the stage because of space limitations.

The situation where the hero, who is deadly afraid of horses is catapulted into the air when his auto strikes a big stone in the road, and he lands on a horse's back is about the most genuinely funny and unexpected situation this writer ever saw. It is thrilling, too, for the hero and others are chasing the heroine's runaway horse and regardless of his handicap he saves her. In fact, a striking point in the picture is the clever manner in which the thrills and humorous situations have been intermingled.

Douglas MacLean was an ideal selection for the leading role, Madge Bellamy is charming as the girl and Raymond Hatton does his usual effective work in a character role. The remainder of the cast are entirely satisfactory.

The title of the picture is the name of an exceedingly spirited horse that everyone is afraid to ride. The hero, who is afraid of horses, is mistaken for a champion rider, and is forced to make good. This furnishes the farce comedy complications on which the plot hinges; of course, it is all done for the girl in the case.

With its ideal combination of thrills and laughter, "The Hottentot" certainly looks like a big box-office winner. It is the kind of picture your patrons will recommend to their friends, so don't be afraid of this one.

Story

Sam Harrington, wealthy young yachtsman, calls on friends on Long Island and finds himself with a select circle on Long Island who seem to think of nothing but horses. Harrington, however, is intensely afraid of horses. He is attracted to a girl whose horse runs away and he follows in an auto, an accident throws him onto a horse's back and he saves the girl. Acclaimed as a hero he is mistaken for a celebrated steeplechase rider and forced to ride a particularly unmanageable steed, "The Hottentot." Of course he is thrown, but he gets away with it. The girl desires that he ride her mount. Bountiful, but the horse eats so many apples and drinks so much water it cannot run. Rather than disappoint the girl, Harrington buys "The Hottentot" and rides him to victory in a thrilling steeplechase, winning the coveted cup and the girl as well.

Vitagraph Presents Excellent Cast in Exceptionally Good Comedy Drama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This is an exceptionally good comedy drama. As a newspaper story, it is distinctly superior and Vitagraph is to be congratulated for its production. In any community it should be a success and live up to its title, proving to be "A Front Page Story" in your theatre records.

Politics and the small town newspaper prove lively subject matter. There is so much good comedy in the picture that it will be popular for this, if for no other reason. But there are other reasons, such as a capable cast, expert directing and smooth continuity.

The comedy is derived from very human, natural situations. For instance, the carriage of a faithful flivver parts company with the wheels just when the owner is down to his last cent; the mayor and the editor of the Gazette never meet without threatening each other's lives; the hero who is obliging about everything except firing himself brings them together against their will and pop has a flashlight taken when they shake hands. It is done with a snap and originality that anyone will appreciate.

A few shots of a composing room and realistic settings throughout give the picture an atmosphere that is the more enjoyable because so frequently missing from newspaper stories. The cast has an abundance of fine talent. Edward Norton goes about the business of being a co-editor of a newspaper with a manner of agreeable stubbornness that is most entertaining. His acting is delightfully natural. The mayor and the publisher are played by Lloyd Ingraham and James Corrigan, respectively, and their impersonations of the two unfriendly enemies will appeal to anyone with a sense of humor. Edith Roberts is wistful and charming. Buddy Messenger adds his enthusiastic bit. Everywhere there is evidence of imagination and good workmanship.

Story

Edward Norton hears a vague account of a dispute between Mayor Gorham and Matt Hayward from Hayward's daughter, Virginia. She is employed by her father on his paper the Gazette, a sworn enemy to the Mayor. Norton outwits the Mayor and buys from him a note that would have endangered the fortune of the Gazette. Norton realizes that the only remedy for the situation is to get the two men to shake hands and be friends. He gets himself a job as partner to Hayward and then in a puzzling series of maneuvers acomplishes his purpose. He almost loses all his friends, including Virginia, in the process, but his final victory makes him a hero in the eyes of all.

'The Beautiful and Damned'

F. Scott Fitzgerald Novel Furnishes Theme for Warner Production Starring Marie Prevost

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

In reading F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," one winds up the stormy romance of Gloria and Tony with our adventurers moving forth into a world of wealth, but with their future happiness a matter of personal conjecture. Not so with the Warner Brothers' screen version of this popular novel. On the screen one sees the wiser Gloria and Tony starting on a journey that promises everlasting happiness—and that is as it should be, for tragic or questionable conclusions involve too great a speculation, and, after all, "The Beautiful and Damned," while produced to entertain, to the trade and exhibitors in general, is merely a merchandise, the commercial value of which gauges its worth to the theatre owner.

Insofar as entertainment is concerned, "The Beautiful and Damned" won't disappoint anybody and it will surprise everybody, for adapting the story to the screen was by no means a task of simplicity. On the contrary, there were any number of questions that had to be taken into consideration. And these thoughts as they weighed on the adapter's mind must have multiplied the problems, for there are tendencies in the original script that mislead and tempt the director. The nature of the screen adaptation is an object of curiosity to all who have read the book and none of these will be misguided or disappointed, for the reason that while, for drama's sake, certain liberties had to be taken, the fact remains that the Warner production is a box-office attraction.

With the Fitzgerald story for the ground work, William A. Seiter constructed a vehicle that stands up solidly. There are tense moments that enliven the picture to the extent that one who read the original story is book form, must admit that the picture is more convincing, more true to life. However, exhibitors' interest alone must be considered, for the public will demonstrate its verdict at the box office. Yet, the qualification of the picture, its ability to entertain to the point where the first-nighters will talk and encourage others to see it must be analyzed carefully, for to properly cash in on this production the exhibitor must unloosen the band around his pocketbook and spend in proper exploitation.

Gazing at the picture from the angle of exploitation one readily sees any number of hints that lend themselves to advertising. There are characters that can be capitalized upon, but more than anything else there is a sermon delivered that, carefully handled, should contribute materially in bringing patrons to your box office. So that "The Beautiful and Damned" to the exhibitor who has learned the real value of meritorious exploitation, is a big picture.

To the exhibitor who demands largely upon word of mouth advertising, this production will not prove an unwise investment. On the contrary, the nature of the story, as it has been adapted to the screen, is such that will arouse much talk, for it involves a timely question, which is novelly worked out to the satisfaction of everybody. The story is well told, smooth and given elaborate scenic backgrounds. Some of the settings are especially luxurious. The photography and direction are good with the lighting effects worked to advantage.

There is one sequence, in particular, that will stand out above anything else in the production. This pertains to a scene enacted at a drunken party that nearly ends in a tragedy. In the course of the merriment, Adam Patch, the wealthy grandfather of the spendthrift Tony, appears on the scene. Disillusioned, he leaves the crowd. Grief-stricken Tony's wife, Gloria, rushes to her room whither Hull, a tramp, pursues her. She madly dashes out of the house, into the stormy night in her negligee, down the water soaked streets and up the railroad tracks. The Limited is coming in the opposite direction. Tony and his friends follow, but she ignores their cries and dashes in the direct path of the on-coming train. The train sweeps seemingly onto the woman, and her friends, terror-stricken, run back. And after the train has dashed by an arm is shot up from a hole in which she had fallen, miraculously escaping being ground to death by the locomotive. This experience marks the awakening of Gloria, soon followed with an almost equally thrilling experience by Tony. And then Fate turns with the inevitable happy ending following soon afterward.

The histrionic laurels should go to Marie Prevost, who, as Gloria, makes an attractive picture and proves herself an actress of many emotions and rare ability. She is graceful in her dancing and totally charming in her mannerisms. Kenneth Harlan, as Tony, her husband, is equally good and in view of the considerable pleasant publicity this couple is receiving in the newspaper their appearance in a picture like "The Beautiful and Damned" should be another tip for exploitation tie-ups. The cast is an all-star affair with Harry Myers a complete success as the drunkard would-be author. Others who contribute generously to the artistic presentation are Louise Fazenda, who proves herself one of the best clowns on the screen; Walter Long, Tully Marshall, Cleo Ridgeley, George Kuwa, the latter a particularly clever Japanese actor. The direction is something of which William A. Seiter can be proud. The picture is now in seven reels and, with about 800 superfluous feet eliminated, the action will be sped up considerably for toward the end the picture tends to lag for about five minutes.

Length, Seven Reels.

The Story.

Anthony marries Gloria, whose extravagance had nearly bankrupted her father. The two resume their reckless spendthrift career together, Tony's one hope lying in the expected death of his grandfather, who offers him an opportunity to go abroad. However, Gloria, who had previously turned down a tempting theatrical offer, urges him to refuse it. But money is running low and, after grand-daddy disinherits Tony, the couple find themselves practically penniless. Not one cent is left to Tony. Gloria seeks out her friend, the theatrical magnate, but the latter's proposition, because of its high price, is turned down. Tony turns to drink.

Gloria, now awakened to the futility of their old life, urges Tony to find work. They quarrel, in the course of which Tony is informed of the theatrical magnate's proposition. Tony seeks vengeance, but falls in the clutches of a gangster, who knocks him out and incidentally a little sense into him. Repentant and determined to make good the two start life anew. Meanwhile, Tony's legal contest for his grandfather's fortune is won and the two set out for new worlds to conquer, wiser and happy in the knowledge that the old life was a failure.

"A California Romance"

Melodrama and Burlesque Combine in Fox Production Starring John Gilbert.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

It is difficult to classify this feature which is a mixture of melodrama and burlesque with no great attempt at consistency. The secret of the effect created is that the action itself is dramatic, the demeanor of the cast serious, but the subtitles are written in a hilarious mood. A production of this character will not appeal to everyone. It will be popular chiefly with those who enjoy an hour of loose entertainment without having any inclination to analyze.

John Gilbert plays a romantic troubadour who is mighty with the guitar. The time of action is about seventy-five years ago before California became a part of the United States, and the troubadour's sweetheart is a Mexican girl who is loyal to her own country. The plot gives a chance for some spectacular action. It would perhaps have been more entertaining if treated more consistently as comedy, as neither the action nor the atmosphere seems authentic. George Seigmann as the villain seems to carry out the comedy motive better than others in the cast. John Gilbert has a dashing role that affords more of a tribute to his attractive personality than acting ability. He engages in a few fencing bouts and is altogether the hero of ideal, not realistic, standards.

The Cast

Don Patricio Fernando ..... John Gilbert
Donna Dolores ..... Estelle Taylor
Don Juan Diego ..... George Seigmann
Don Manuel Casca ..... Jack McDonald
Steve ..... Charles Anderson

Length, 3,892 Feet.

The Story

Patricio Fernando, a handsome, romantic son of California, loves Dolores who is loyal to Mexico in the days of California's struggle for liberty. She despises Patricio because he will not fight against America. She pledges herself to Don Juan Diego, whom she believes to be a hero, but who is really a leader of a band of renegades. Don Juan, however, proves his falsity and when Patricio comes to the valiant defense of Dolores and the band of women who have been imprisoned, she believes no longer that he is a coward and accepts him.

"Heroes of the Street"

This Warner Special is a Beauty and Shows Wesley Barry in His Best Production

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

If you cashed in on "Go and Get It," "Penrod," "School Days" and "Rags to Riches," you'll mop up with "Heroes of the Street," for this latest Warner Brothers' special represents the best picture in which that juvenile star has appeared. And it looks like a far better box-office bet than any of the productions mentioned above. Harry Rapf knows Wesley's best talents and in "Heroes of the Street" he went "Rags to Riches" one better, for if Barry had never before appeared in pictures this vehicle would popularize him with the movie theatre-going fans. Artistically, it is all that a first class production should be, but its exploitation possibilities are unlimited. As a production it has 100 per cent. value, for the producer has injected some settings that are not only picturesque, but extremely good to look at and indicate that this feature represents a greater financial investment for Warner Brothers than either "School Days" or "Rags to Riches." One does not wonder why the Warners signed Wesley Barry to a long term contract after observing his wonderful work in this splendid picture.

The action is smooth and swift throughout, with not a dull moment, and Wesley Barry is at all times in the limelight and portrays a youthful role that is true to life, minus exaggeration. And it is because this picture is so true to life, so responsive to human emotions, that it should register greater and bigger than either of the specials previously featuring him.

Producer Rapf supervised with a careful hand, and cut and edited his film with equally careful precision. There are many good punches and these can be capitalized. Commercially, "Heroes of the Street" looms up, in the humble opinion of this writer, as the best Warner offering thus far, for you have everything to sell your public, and you need not worry about the picture, or story involved, for it is up to the minute, and entertaining.

The supporting cast is a consistently good one. While the freckled-face star stands out as the most conspicuous individual in the histrionic lineup, Marie Prevost as the chic young show girl is a winner. She is charming and knows just what the public expects of her in such a difficult role as she portrays. Aggie Herron as the mother, "Peaches" Jackson as the little sister, Jack Mulhall as the reporter and Will Walling, the policeman-father, all contribute notably to the unusual artistry of the production as a whole. Philo McCullough also works creditably.

The Story

Mickey Callahan, adoring his father, a policeman, swears vengeance on the crook who had shot his dad. The crook sought is known in the underworld as "The Shadow." Disguising himself as messenger boy, Mickey enlists the janitor's aid. After a series of adventures in the course of which is introduced a romance involving reporter and chorus girl, Mickey finds the crook, turns him up and gets $5,000 as a reward for the apprehension.

"Environment"

A Clever Principal Pictures Production Replete With Unlimited Exploitation Possibilities

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

When Principal Pictures Corporation selected "Environment" as a substitute for "Chicago Sal," they did Irving Cummings. the producer, and exhibitors in general, a favor that will furnish its reward at the box office, for besides being a well-produced, well-constructed and entertaining picture, this one, with its new title, offers exploitation possibilities unlimited—and, after all, exploitable pictures are what exhibitors are demanding from independent producers and distributors. And "Environment" will fill every exhibitor box-office requisite.

To begin with, cinematographically, "Environment" is a thoroughly good production, entertainingly interesting and based on the seemingly ever popular crook theme. In this case, however, the master mind is "Chicago Sal," a character that is charmingly and realistically portrayed by Alice Lake, who despite the many temptations thrown in her path, never overacts. Her regeneration, calling for careful characterization, is interestingly brought out and furnishes the feature with an asset that will help considerably in exploitation.

"Environment" as a title should prove a real bet for it can be hooked up with almost any phase of private and business life and inspires co-operative tie-ups. You needn't be afraid of the picture in itself for it will stand up against any melodramatic test, for from production and acting angles it is well done. It is certainly the best production that Irving Cummings ever turned out with individual honors going to Alice Lake and Milton Sills, the latter playing a role entirely different from the ordinary line and which is bound to increase his popularity, particularly among the fair sex with whom he is apparently extremely popular.

Gertrude Claire, as the grandmother, is very human, while Richard Headrick does his usual good work as a child. Ralph Lewis, as "Diamond Jim," makes his part stand out like some of the gems he wears. Ben Hewlett, as "Willie Boy," has a disagreeable heavy role, but he enacts it well. There are many pretentious settings mingled with the colorful rural atmosphere that pervades now and then. You should not miss this one if your patrons like crook pictures.

The Story

Sally Dolan, known to the Chicago underworld as "Chicago Sal," deserts "Diamand Jim" Favre's cabaret to head "Willie Boy's" gang of crooks. They leave for the country to do a 'job." Willie's tactics are not to the liking of Sal, who in an effort to save him, lies to Steve MacLaren and his grandmother, whose earnings Willie had stolen. She is sentenced to work out the amount and in time she falls in love with Steve. She is accepted as a member of the household. With Steve's love, Sal's redemption seems assured. There come times when she longs for the big city. "Diamond Jim," hearing that Sal has settled down, visits her. Willie serves as his chauffeur. Steve recognizes Willie as the thief who had knocked him down, but Sal interferes. Sal forces Willie to forfeit the money. He does and she leaves it. Then she decides to return to the city. She participates in one more crime. Meanwhile Steve has followed her to Chicago. He aids Sal to escape, but is arrested on a vagrancy charge, Sal promising to wait for him. Sal returns to the country and there waits for Steve, satisfied that there she has at last found peace, love and everlasting happiness.

"As a Man Lives"

Serious Story With Tense Climax in American Releasing Corporation's Offering

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Supported by a theme that holds the serious interest of the spectator, and culminating in a climax of more than ordinary tension, "As a Man Lives" will appeal to those who like restrained melodrama.

It is melodrama more in motive than in form. There are few, if any big scenes of conflict, but there is an undercurrent of threatened disaster from the start, so that the suspense is assured. The atmosphere throughout is heavy, probably too heavy for the complete satisfaction of all. It is the type of picture which has a definite point to make and proceeds consistently to realize it, possibly at the sacrifice of minor opportunities for comedy, sentiment, etc.

The relation between a man's physical features and his character is the subject-matter. When he is rejected by a girl because she reads in his face the record of an unwholesome life, the hero of the story goes forth in search of wider experience and in re-moulding his character, changes his looks and becomes attractive to the girl. This same idea is developed conversely as well in the case of a wicked man given a beautiful countenance by a facial surgeon.

The climax brings the story to a thrilling close. It includes some remarkable shots of a mine explosion and a tense scene in which the heroine and the villain hang over death on a weakened rope. It is at this moment that the wicked man's struggling soul asserts itself and he relaxes his hold so that the girl may be saved. This has been well done, The director has been successful in making the settings atmospheric. He has used charming, romantic backgrounds in introducing the love motive and has been particularly skillful in suggesting the Apache scenes in Paris.

Robert Frazer, Gladys Hulette, Frank Losee and J. Thornton Baston are all in the lead, with the greatest responsibilities upon Robert Frazer. The entire cast shows good directing, and a fine performance.

The Cast

Sherry Mason.....Robert Frazer
Nadia Meredith.....Gladys Hulette

Length, 6,000 Feet.

The Story

Sherry Mason, accused by his father of being a wastrel, lives up to it. He is refused by Nadia Meredith because of an expression on his face that she does not like. He goes to Paris with Henri Camlon, his father's legal counsellor, as a guardian. He is involved in a murder in an Apache den and gets several bruises. He goes to Dr. Neyas, a facial surgeon, for treatments. Dr. Neyas, believing that the boy really has character, decides to keep him under his care and experiment with him. He goes back to America with Sherry and the dramatic complications that bring Sherry, Nadia and his worst enemies together comprise the climax.

"Peg O' My Heart"

Laurette Taylor, Stage Star, is Delightful in Pleasing Metro Version of Stage Play

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Laurette Taylor as the star, "Peg O' My Heart" achieved a phenomenal success on the stage, playing over two years in New York. This production has been transferred to the screen by Metro and bids fair to duplicate its stage success for much of the charm of the original play has been infused into the screen version in which Miss Taylor is also the star and it was made by the capable director, King Vidor, under the supervision, as we understand it, of the author, J. Hartley Manners.

While this is her first screen appearance, Miss Taylor appears perfectly at home and she is such an accomplished artist that she does not seem to have experienced any difficulty in mastering screen technique. There is no evidence of camera consciousness or unreality or stiffness in her work, such as is sometimes noticeable with the initial appearance of stage stars. She is a welcome addition to the list of screen luminaries and acts before the camera as if she had been "brought up" in that atmosphere. She has beauty, intelligence and charm coupled with unusual magnetism. By her winsomeness, vivacity and sense of humor she makes delightful the role of the unspoiled Irish girl who is suddenly transplanted into the atmosphere of snobbery and selfishness and wealth in England, and in the serious scenes calling for emotional work she is just as effective.

The role of Peg is filled with heart interest and delicate humor and immediately wins and holds the audience's sympathy. In fact, most normal persons will love Peg and the way she so cleverly matches her Irish wit alone against the chilly heartlessness of her English relatives and beats them to a standstill.

The story of the picture is pleasing and with strong audience appeal, and though there are certain familiar dramatic devices, it is very human and plausible. Then, too, there is a delightful little romance running through it, which has an odd twist when she comes near spoiling it all with one of her peppy shafts of wit. But it all ends happily, however.

King Vidor has excellently directed the production. The home of Peg in Ireland, the little cottage with lake and mountains in the background is truly beautiful and the big English interiors are effective. The sub-titles which appear to be for the most part lines from the play are clever and bring many smiles. About the weakest point in the picture is the ending. After the satisfactory clumination of the romance you see Peg and her father all dressed up in court costume being presented to the King and Queen of England, and somehow this seems as if it just did not "belong." To eliminate it entirely, would in our opinion, improve the picture.

Miss Taylor has been surrounded by a good cast. Russell Simpson as her father and Mahlon Hamilton as her lover, are especially fine and the same is true of D. R. O. Hatswell as a wealthy but not too intelligent young Englishman. Ethel Grey Terry, Nigel Barrie, Lionel Belmore and the others, do effective work. And we must not forget Peg's little dog, Michael, which adds much to the enjoyment of the picture.

"Peg O' My Heart," with its simple and appealing story, its blending of pathos and humor, and the charm and artistry of Laurette Taylor should find a welcome on any program and prove a box-office winner.

Story

Peg is the daughter of a poor Irish farmer who has married a high-class English woman, whose family has disowned her. She grows up into a vivacious, fun-loving imaginative girl and aids her father in his campaign work for the Irish cause.

On his death bed, her uncle repents of his harsh treatment and leaves a sum of money to be used for Peg's education, with the proviso that she be taken in hand by his sister, Mrs. Chichester. Peg goes, taking with her her little dog Michael. The Chichesters are snobs and treat her with small consideration, but with her native wit she frequently gets the best of them. She makes one real friend but is disillusioned when she finds he is a nobleman, Sir Gerald Adair. Conditions get so that she decides to return home, but Sir Gerald follows her and all ends happily.

"Thirty Days"

Newest Wallace Reid Production is a Farce Comedy of Only Mediocre Entertainment Value

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

While there are several amusing situations in "Thirty Days," Wallace Reid's newest production for Paramount as a whole it is hardly up to the standard of his previous pictures. It is a farce comedy adapted from a stage play by A. E. Thomas and Clayton Hamilton, which is lacking in the pep and rapidity of action of the majority of his films on the one hand and does not contain as clever lines or situations as "Clarence" on the other.

The story is slight and at the start you think when Reid proposes to his girl and she puts him on probation to refrain from flirting for thirty days that this situation is going to furnish the plot, but the action switches and it is not to get away from the impetuous flappers, but from an irate Sicilian desperado who is after him that he seeks refuge in jail for the period that gives the picture its title.

James Cruze, who directed the picture, has produced it in good style with attractive settings and Wanda Hawley wears some stunning gowns, but there does not appear to have been sufficient rapid-fire material at hand to make it a fast-moving farce comedy of feature length.

There is much brandishing of knives and stilettos, and the attempts of the star to get away from the desperado, the way the desperado's wife keeps bobbing up, of course, at the time that Wally's real girl is around, the secret society business with the slogan of the wide-open eye, the finding of the desperado and the star in jail at the same time and the unexpected pardon of the star just one day before the desperado is to sail for Italy, seems machine made and unconvincing even for a farce comedy.

Some of the funniest scenes occur in the jail, where the warden showers Wally with favors of all kinds to keep him from revealing a shortage in his accounts, but these are overdone. Kalla Pasha, the fat and fierce looking comedian who has appeared in many Mack Sennett comedies, adds much to the merriment of these scenes, being cast as the warden.

Wallace Reid portrays the role of a woebegone and sacred young gentleman who is in fear of his life and looks the part. Wanda Hawley is attractive as the girl and Carmen Phillips is well cast as the Italian's wife. Herschell Mayall, an excellent heavy, struggles hard with the role of the desperado, but is handicapped as it does not entirely suit him.

As a whole, it is a mediocre comedy which never arouses any great amount of interest and is only mildly amusing. We do not believe that this picture will enhance the star's popularity with the fans.

Floyd beats a hasty retreat, the woman follows and says her husband is going to kill him. To escape, Floyd picks a fight with a pal and a friendly judge sends him to jail for thirty days. He soon finds the man is in the same jail. Floyd becomes friendly with the warden, who has the desperado discharged. Lucille comes to the jail and finds Floyd, but he bluffs her by saying he is studying prison conditions. He is pardoned one day before the man is to sail for Italy and finds him waiting outside, but eludes him. That night the desperado makes another attempt to get Floyd, They, however, grab the judge instead. Lu- They, however, grabe the judge instead. Lucille captures him with a revolver and demands an explanation from Floyd. He cooks up one and all ends happily.

"One Wonderful Night"

Universal Feature Starring Herbert Rawlinson is Crook-Mystery Melodrama of Ordinary Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In the newest Universal production in which he is starred, which is titled "One Wonderful Night," Herbert Rawlinson appears as a young man who immediately upon his arrival in New York is plunged by the god of chance right into the midst of a thrilling and mysterious adventure.

As the title implies, the entire action takes place during one night, and events move rapidly. There is plenty of action, several fights, secret rooms, a hurried wedding, a near-murder, police third degrees, a chase through the dark, and other devices of productions of this type.

The action of the picture is not always consistent, due to certain points which are not made quite clear, as for instance, just how a man can legally marry a woman with a license made out to another man, even though their names may be strikingly similar; nor as to just how the hero obtained the overcoat containing the license, so eagerly sought after by several different parties. There are also other unconvincing aspects to the picture.

The main theme, that of a girl who has to be married by a certain hour to obtain a big fortune, has been used many times before. In this instance it is complicated by the fact that a crook posing as a count has won her father's consent. He obtains the help of a gang who use desperate measures to prevent the marriage until the count, who is delayed, arrives. This brings about the situations on which the picture hinges.

Herbert Rawlinson is cast in the heroic role of the young man who agrees to marry the girl and win her love afterward, which he succeeds in doing within a few hours, and his work in this instance should fully satisfy his admirers even though he comes out unscathed from a terrific fight. Lillian Rich is attractive as the girl.

The production as a whole is a melodrama of only ordinary quality. It will probably satisfy a goodly number of patrons, but it can hardly be classed as among the best of the Universal program releases.

The Cast

John D. Curtis.....Herbert Rawlinson
Hermione Fane.....Lillian Rich
The Maid.....Dale Fuller
Z. F. Fane.....Sidney DeGray
Chief Detective.....Joseph W. Girard
Jean DeCurtois.....Jean DeBriac
Juggins.....Sidney Bracey
Minister.....Spottiswoode Aitkin

Story by Louis Tracy.

Directed by Stuart Paton.
Photgraphed by G. W. Warren.
Length, 4,473 Feet.

Story

John D. Curtis has just returned from China when he is unexpectedly thrust into a mysterious series of adventures. Witnessing an assault on a man whose assailants make a getaway, he finds he has the over coat of the injured man. In the pocket he discovers a marriage license. Scenting a plot he calls on her and finds she is a girl he danced with in China. The girl is in difficulty, as she must marry by midnight to get a fortune and has hired the man who is supposed to have been injured, to marry her. John obligingly takes his place. But this is only the beginning of the adventures which culminate in the exposure of the fact that all the trouble has been caused by a crook posing as a count who has hired the thugs to prevent the wedding until he arrives. The gang is rounded up and Curtis wins the love of the girl he has married.

"Lucky Dan"

Dick Talmadge's Antics Make Phil Goldstone Picture Double Bill Proposition

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"Lucky Dan" is not up to the standard, insofar as production is concerned, to previous Phil Goldstone pictures starring the versatile and acrobatic star, Richard Talmadge. However, what the production lacks in construction, the star makes up in swift action and totally entertaining mannerism plus a personality that is catchy at every turn. His somersaulting and diving antics play an important part in this picture, and tend to hold your interest. As one of two features on a double bill, "Lucky Dan," should be a wise investment for any exhibitor located in second run houses or the combination picture and vaudeville places or those playing to neighborhood clineteles.

The supporting cast always is decidedly in the background in these pictures, for the work of Richard Talmadge is incomparable and right now he looks like one of the best starring bets in the business. There is no star in the business with whom he can be compared, for his work is individualistic and decidedly original. He carries the story on his own shoulders and what is more remarkable than his personality and ability to accomplish feats others insist on calling in doubles to play, is the fact that one never tires of him nor his knockabout daringly acrobatic stunts.

The Cast

"Lucky Dan".....Richard Talmadge
Remainder of cast unavailable.
Produced by Phil Goldstone.
Length, 4,700 Feet.

The Story

"Lucky Dan" is a reckless, carefree, daring young cowboy in love with a pretty lass. The latter returns that "on-to-the-altar" admiration, but her daddy is one of those gentlemen with Missourian leanings, namely, he must be shown. And at the outset daddy doesn't think much of Dan as a business man. But then inheritances always do come in handy and in this particular instance, an unexpected inheritance not only made popper see things different, but incidentaly earned a wife for our hero—thus leaving no doubt that between the two the much-welcomed inheritance would be well taken care of. And so it ends.

The Pep of the Program

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Will Rogers' "Fruits of Faith" Heads Pathe Release Program for December 24

Will Rogers in "Fruits of Faith" leads Pathe's program of ten subjects for release December 24. It presents Rogers in three reels of characteristic humor and is rich in genuine human sympathy. Influenced by a street preacher's sermon, Rogers as a tramp tries faith and it works. He later finds a baby in the desert, adopts it, goes to work and finally wins the love of a girl and marries her. They idolize the baby, but its father unexpectedly returns and claims it. Seeing, however, the couple's intense love for the child he goes away and leaves the boy with them.

A Leo Maloney two-reel Western is also on the week's list. It is titled "Here's Your Man," and like the rest of the series, is filled with hard fighting and riding and plenty of pep and action. It deals with a rancher who just as he is about to be strung up for a murder is saved by Maloney, as the sheriff, when he produces the guilty man. There is also a pretty little romance running through the story.

The current Paul Parrott single-reel comedy in which he is assisted by Jobyna Ralston, is "A White Blacksmith." The action deals with an uncle's will which leaves a blacksmith shop to Paul and a garage to his brother. Paul is having a hard time to make a living, but goes through several exciting and laughable experiences. The lawyer finally discovers he has made a mistake and the garage belongs to Paul.

The Hutchison serial, "Speed," reaches its tenth episode, "Buried Alive," where the hero in a mining region is in peril from a dynamite explosion. The single-reel Harold Lloyd reissue is "Sic 'Em Towser."

There is also an Aesop Film Fable based on "Every dog has his day." It is titled "A Dog's Paradise" and shows the amusing adventures of a bunch of dogs, a butcher and a dog-catcher which they outwit.

Pathe Review, 197, has a beautiful section dealing with the legend of "The Bubble Girl" of the Mongaup River; also a section dealing with monkey psychology, another with analysis of animal motion and a color section showing the unique straw huts in French West Africa.

Robert Bruce Completes Second Series of Educational's Wilderness Tales

Robert C. Bruce, who has spent the summer and fall in the Pacific Northwest, making the second series of Wilderness Tales for Educational, has just returned to New York with this group of scenic dramas.

Mr. Bruce, whose "And Women Must Weep," the opening number of his first series of Wilderness Tales, is said to be creating a sensation, believes he has done the best work of his career this season, declaring that he has even surpassed this remarkable single-reel picture in beauty and dramatic appeal.

"And Women Must Weep" was the first single-reel picture of a scenic character ever classified as an exceptional picture by the National Board of Review. Critics all over this country have been unanimous in calling this subject one of the most beautiful pictures ever made by any American producer, while in England the Manchester Guardian declared "And Women Must Weep" and two other pictures of this series, the finest artistic gems which had ever come out of America.

"I believe," said Mr. Bruce, "that the critics will agree with me that some of my new pictures will surpass 'And Women Must Weep.' There is perhaps more of a story in each of my new subjects than there was in the pictures of the first group of Wilderness Tales. Still, however, they are all laid out of doors and I have found and photographed in my recent travels in our own country the most beautiful scenery I have ever found in the world."

The work of cutting and titling the second group of Wilderness Tales is almost finished and the earlier releases will be ready in the near future for private screenings for exhibitors at all Educational exchanges.

"Night Before Christmas" to Be Distributed Through W. W. Hodkinson

Announcement has been made by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau that one of the most widely known poems, "The Night Before Christmas," has been picturized by the Bray Productions, Inc. Distribution is to be made through Hodkinson, proceeds of which will be turned over to the fund used by the Committee for Devastated France and Maternity Center Association of New York. Miss Sophie K. Smith, field secretary for the bureau, wrote the scenario.

The Film Mutual Benefit Bureau is interested in insuring the success of this benefit. Among the members of the bureau who are lending their support are Governor-elect Alfred E. Smith, Miss Anne Morgan, Mrs. Gordon Knox Bell, Miss Mabel Choate, Mr. Arthur C. Train, Mr. Frank Crowninshield, Mrs. Meredith Hare, Mr. George Gray Barnard, Hon. Everett Colby, Miss Rachel Crothers, Mr. Charles Dillingham, Mr. Henry F. DuPont, Mrs. LeRoy Edgar Newbold, Mr. Douglas Elliman, Dr. John A. Harris, Mr. Otto Kahn, Mr. Clarence Mackay, Mrs. Gouverneur Morris, Mr. Conde Nast, Mrs. Herbert C. Pell, Jr., Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, General John O'Ryan, Hon. George W. Wickersham, Mrs. Mortimer Schiff and others.

The picturization of this was made under the direction of Ashley Miller, in two reels. It opens with a brief prologue reciting the genesis of the poem. The poem itself is picturized as having been dreamed by the six Moore children, that night before Christmas, 1822. Authentic details of costumes and accessories in the picture were furnished by descendants of Dr. Moore living in New York.

More of "Our Gang"

The Hal Roach two-reel comedies issued under the general title, "Our Gang," were intended to be but six in number. But the series has met with such wide-spread popularity that plans have been made to continue the activities of the producing unit indefinitely. A new series of these popular "Our Gang" two-reelers will be made, the first of the new series, "The Champeen," being scheduled for release on January 28. It will be followed by others, at intervals of four weeks. The Capitol, in New York, makes "Saturday Morning," one of the former series, an important feature of its Christmas Week bill.

E. W. Hammons Back From Studios

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has returned to New York after a visit to the Los Angeles studios making pictures for Educational's short subject program.

The object of this trip was to discuss preliminary arrangements for a probable increase in Educational product for the next season.

While Mr. Hammons was at the United studios three companies were making two-reel comedies: Lloyd Hamilton, with Ruth Hiatt as his leading lady, was making the fourth of his Hamilton comedies, while Louise Fazenda and the company headed by Lige Conley were busy under supervision of Jack White.

Several companies were also busy at the Christie studios, working on "Be Yourself," "Hazel From Hollywood" and succeeding pictures.

Century to Film Buster Brown

The Stern Brothers announce the purchase from Richard F. Outcault of the screen rights to his Buster Brown cartoons as the basis for a series of Century comedies. These Outcault cartoons were first published in The Herald and then syndicated all over the world. They were immensely popular with children and with their parents, who laughed heartily at the pranks of Buster and his dog, Tige.

On the screen the part of Tige will be taken by Brownie, the Century Wonder Dog. The part of Buster has not been filled yet and the Stern Brothers are in New York looking for a boy to play the part.

"Grandma's Girl" Postponed

"Grandma's Girl," the picture Baby Peggy was working on when she contracted pneumonia, will have to be discontinued indefinitely as Alf Goulding, its director, became ill and his physician ordered him to take a long, much needed rest.

Fourth Mirror, Ready for Release, Shows Royal Pomp of Pre-War Europe

The International News Reel Corporation announces the early release, through the Universal Exchanges, of the fourth issue of The Mirror, the novelty reel chronicling events of the past.

The new Mirror, titled "The Last Days of King Edward," show remarkable pictures of that British Monarch's last days. Mirrors one, two and three have been proved a big box-office attraction, Universal records show. Mirror number one showed the inauguration of President McKinley, in 1897. Mirror number two, "The San Francisco Fire," was quite as well received, and Mirror number three, "The Birth of Aviation."

Mirror No. 4 is of especial interest because of the unusual number of world-famed personages it shows. King Edward VII. is seen in various poses, in and out of uniform, aboard a battleship, reviewing a regiment and in other ceremonies. With him are seen his family, including the present king, and the Prince of Wales, then a boy of 14.

The funeral of King Edward, who died May 6, 1910, is shown in all its pomp and ceremony. In this comes a remarkable scene, showing nine of Europe's mightest monarchs walking behind the casket. King George heads the royal mourners. Then comes the Duke of Connaught, followed by Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany; Princes Edward and Albert of Great Britain, the former now Prince of Wales; King Alfonso of Spain; King Mauel of Portugal; King George of Greece; Prince Constantine of Greece; the Czar of Bulgaria, and with them Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, who at that time was on his way back to the United States from his African expedition. The reel closes with pictures showing the investiture of the young Prince of Wales.

Because of the unusual value of Mirror series, Universal is putting out a varied assortment of accessories for use in exploiting each issue. These include, a one-sheet, a three-sheet, a slide, a set of lobby stills, and a press book containing publicity, advertising and exploitation suggestions. It is said to be the most elaborate offering ever put out with a one-reel picture.

Highest Praise for "Plunder"

Pearl White, star, and George B. Seitz, producer of the new Patheserial, "Plunder," says Pathe, are being credited throughout the industry with having reached the highest point in their screen careers. In New York, Chicago and other centers where trade showings of "Plunder" have been given, the result has been to evoke the highest praise.

Now that "Plunder" is completed and ready for release late this coming winter, the verdicts from the exhibitor viewpoint are significant, Pathe points out, as realizing anticipations created by the original announcement that the "Serial Queen," favorite in Europe as well as in this country, was under contract to return to the "House of Serials."

Monte Carlo in Fox Educational

Monte Carlo has been filmed in a Fox Educational Entertainment, "Bits of Europe." Monte Carlo, the playground of millionaires," has been the subject of several stories of numerous fortunes lost and few won. The town of Monte Carlo in Monaco, is built on high cliffs overlooking the Mediterranean Sea. No natives are permitted to gamble in the Casino. The steep mountain heights, the winding roads, the magnificent natural scenery, forming a picturesque background for the Casino and the surrounding hotels, have tempted the motion picture cameraman.

Gets Barton Films

Bruce Barton, famous for his humorously philosophical editorials, has entered the field of motion pictures. Second National Pictures Corporation is arranging for the release of the first of a series of one-reel photoplays visualizing his word pictures. The first, "Just a Little Late Club," was finished a few days ago by Better Day Pictures, Inc., of which Mr. Barton is president; Elmore Leffingwell, editor, publicity expert and vice president; Roy S. Durstine, treasurer, and James S. Brown in charge of production.

"The Texas Sphinx"

(Universal-Western—Two Reels)

This features Harry Carey in some lively scenes in which the thrills consist chiefly in the capture of a bandit. It is a shortened version of one of the earlier three-reel features. The star is supported by a good cast which includes Alice Lake. It offers the usual opportunities for action and suspense and is entertaining if not remarkable in its novelty.—M. K.

"The Chewing Gum Industry"

(Fox-Cartoon—One Reel)

Mutt and Jeff attempt a short-cut to prosperity by establishing an industry in their own novel way in this number. There are some amusing stunts. They procure a Gum-Gum bird which hatches a magical brood of chicklets. They manufacture a gum that is invincibly tough and test it with a false set of powerful teeth. In the end their own creation, the gum proves the master of them both.—M. K.

ThreeMoreCompanies for Century

Plans to add three more producing units to the three now making comedies for Century Film Corporation will be completed upon the return of Julius and Abe Stern to Hollywood.

The Raymaker, Goulding and Edwards units will be supplemented by three new directors of long experience in making comedies. Announcements will be made at an early date, both as regards the new additions to the producing staff, and the rights to certain screen material to be used for the series both of Baby Peggy and of Buddy Messenger.

"Pop" at Rialto

Dan Mason appears as an amateur detective in the latest Plum Center comedy on the Film Booking Offices of America program, "Pop Tuttle, Deteckative," and is the fifth of this comedy series to be produced by the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation. The Rialto Theatre, in New York, is this week playing its second Plum Center comedy, "Pop Tuttle's Grass Widow."

"Henry's Busted Romance"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

This Aesop's Film Fable, distributed by Pathe, deals with a wiser and better husband, after a series of "vamping" experiences, all with the usual animal characters. It is a gem of imaginative humor, one of Cartoonist Paul Terry's best—(1 reel)—S. S.

"The Pest"

(Metro—Comedy—Two Reels)

Stal Laurel is the star of this two-reel comedy distributed by Metro. It is a knockabout comedy of average entertainment value which has several humorous situations. The story of this comedy deals with a book-agent who meets with exciting experiences and finally helps a girl by going out and getting money so she can pay her house rent. A curious point in this comedy is the fact that according to the cast sheet, the title does not refer to the hero, but to a talkative woman who only appears in a few scenes.—C. S. S.

"My Hero"

(Fox-Comedy—Two Reels)

This is another of the Lupino Lane series in which the star's funny acrobatics score heavily. It is his unique style of putting over his comedy and his command of facial expression that transforms familiar material into lively amusement. The action relates, in slapstick, the experiences of a city chap who is sent West by his father for taming. Lupino Lane is so clever that the comedy should be a success everywhere. —M. K.

"Unblazed Trails"

(Bray—Scenic—One Reel)

This is the first of a series of single-reel Bray Nature Pictures which will be distributed on the State right market. It deals interestingly with mountain climbing in the Canadian Rockies. There are many beautiful shots of lofty mountains, glaciers, etc., and some thrilling scenes of a party climbing up the face of a five-hundred foot cliff which appears to be tractically vertical and where it would seem that each step would be the last. Some of the sub-titles, especially in the early part of the film, are lengthy and could be shortened to advantage. —C. S. S.

"Voice of the Land"

(American Releasing—Biblical—One Reel Each)

This is a series of fifty-two single-reel subjects made by Geographic Film Company and distributed by American Releasing Corporation. They are scenics dealing in a reverent manner with places of interest in Palestine which are mentioned in the Old or New Testament. A striking feature of the five shown for review is the fact that much of the land which is described in the Bible as "flowing with milk and honey" is now desolate. They are instructive and will appeal to spectators who are interested in the Bible and familiar with the places mentioned. These pictures have been nicely photographed and are embellished with scenes painted by Paleologue picturing certain Biblical events, and these scenes have been filmed in Prizma colors effectively.

"Jerusalem the Holy"

Jerusalem, sacred alike to Jews, Christians and Mohammedans, is shown to be a walled city. Much of this reel consists in showing the eight gates in the city walls and the significance of each, such as St. Stephen's gate where the first Christian martyr was stoned, Herod's gate, Damascus gate, and others. There are also views of the interior of the city.

"Down to Jericho"

The different points of Biblical interest on the road from Jerusalem to Jericho are pictured, including the Dead Sea, the Wilderness of Judea, the Brook of Cherith where Elijah was fed by the ravens, and the Plains of Jordan.

"Hebron the Ancient"

Hebron is said to be the oldest city in the world, being settled by the son of Abraham, the country being promised to his posterity forever. Of especial interest are the Pools of Solomon, which are wonderful examples of engineering and said to be the oldest water-supply system for a city.

"Beersheba"

Abraham once lived here, but jealousy between Isaac and Ishmael led to the putting out of Ishmael and his mother, Hagar, on the desert. On the nearby hills of Zyph David and Jonathan pledged eternal friendship. Nearby is the wilderness of Edon and other places mentioned in the Bible.

"Valley of Dry Bones"

As the name indicates, this was the ancient burial ground of Jerusalem and the location of the vision of Ezekial when he saw the flesh go back to the bones of the dead. Here are the tombs of the Kings of Judea and the cave in which Jeremiah wrote his Lamentations. Here is also a tomb which many believe to be the burial place of Christ, and the hill nearby to be Golgotha. —C. S. S.

"Fruits of Faith"

(Pathe—Drama—Three Reels)

Will Rogers is the star of this story, which is decidedly out of the ordinary and very entertaining. It is filled with Roger's characteristic humor, many of the sub-titles being unusually good and there is very strong human sympathy throughout. The star appears as a tramp who hears a street minister preach on the power of faith. The manner in which Roger's applies this lesson is alternately humorous and pathetic and these scenes have been handled so as not to give offense to anyone. Chance leads him to place in the desert where he finds a baby. He adopts it and then finds work is not so distasteful after all. He marries to get a "mother" for the baby, and then the child's father returns. Finding how much the couple love the child, who is now four years old, the real father departs and happiness again reigns.—C. S. S.

"Via Radio"

(Educational-Special—One Reel)

Here is one reel of absorbing entertainment that will do credit to any program. A subject that is still an enigma to thousands receives careful and authentic attention, that cannot fail to leave the average spectator dazzled, and with a clearer understanding of the fascinating phenomena.

Educational has produced this subject under the supervision of the Scientific American. Minute diagrams of radio vibrations, and voice waves, comprehensive maps of this country and the world visualizing the radio routes, photographs of the technicians and their operations and glimpses of the artists entertaining countless listeners are included. One of the most interesting is the photographic illustration of the human voice. The vast potentialities of wireless as indicated most strikingly in the signalling of ships are a marvelous revelation. "Via Radio" is a rare and valuable attraction.—M. K.

"Here's Your Men"

(Pathe—Drama—Two Reels)

This is another of the Range Rider series of two-reel Westerns, starring Leo Maloney. It is well up to the standard of the previous issues and is recommended for those who desire snappy Westerns with plenty of action and real "punch." There is hard riding and hard fighting and an absence of padding, the story being tersely told. The theme deals with a man with a violent temper who is accused of killing another man. Maloney, his friend, is also the sheriff. He suspects two men and in a dramatic manner succeeds in freeing the innocent just as he is about to be the victim of a "necktie" party, and in making the guilty pair confess. The manner in which he grabs both off their horses is somewhat overdone. —C. S. S.

"The Educator"

(Educational-Comedy—Two Reels)

Lloyd Hamilton amusingly depicts the difficulties that face the poor school master in the town where ignorance is preferred. Most of his pupils have passed the half-century mark and are unwieldly subjects. They bring their guns to school. Hamilton's placid style of humor and attempts at physical grace are featured to a successful degree. The little traveler who accompanies the school teacher on his way toward the scene of action is an unusually charming child and Ruth Hiatt as the star pupil is a lovely, old-fashioned type. The picture is highly amusing in spots and on the whole is agreeable entertainment.—M. K.

"Town Terrors

(Fox-Comedy—Two Reels)

The famous team of Lee Kids keep up a fast pace in this comedy, one of the series which Fox is preparing from the old five-reelers. They are cast as two small but efficient cyclones who set the whole town in an uproar. Finally to relieve their own boredom they get themselves kidnapped and prove too difficult even for kidnappers. There are some rollicking scenes in the dungeon where they are imprisoned and these will keep any spectator entertained.—M. K.

"Fair Week"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Rapid action seems to be the keynote of this one-reel Pathe comedy starring Paul Parrott, with Jobyna Ralston. Paul is as "loose as cement with his money," but a "shell game" reforms him. There are funny mix-ups with the competing live-stock at the fair. The subject is of ordinary value. —S. S.

"A Small Town Derby"

(Universal-Comedy—Two Reels)

Johnny Fox is the star in this Century comedy, but Maudie, the mule, comes off with high honors, too. She takes an active part in many clever stunts. His master's sister has many beaux and Maudie is of great service in evicting the undesirable ones. Later she proves a reliable substitute for a motor engine in carrying the family to the circus. Johnny enters the pie-eating contest but falls woefully behind because of the unprecedented speed of the black boy sitting next to him. With Maudie's assistance he is the final winner. The comedy ends with a horse race, an entertaining close to a comedy that will bring many laughs.—M. K.

"Pop Tuttle's Grass Widow"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

There is some good rural comedy in this most recent of the Dan Mason series. The barn dance is the big hit of the comedy, and due mainly to the enthusiasm of the performance it goes over with many laughs. Enlivened by the good old Virginia reel and Pop Tuttle's jigging it offers wholesome merriment of a sort that one does not tire of. Dan Mason is as usual, excellent. He becomes infatuated with a married woman who poses as a widow and behaves like one at the dance, but is painfully disillusioned when he discovers her jealous husband. —M. K.

"Screen Snapshots No. 15"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

This pictures, in one reel, Hall Caine, English novelist, watching Director Maurice Tourneur, Mae Busch and Richard Dix make "The Christian," Nazimova and her husband at the beach, Will H. Hays greeting various stars, and some real antique "movies."—S. S.

"Starland Revue No. 17"

(F. B. O. Release—One Reel)

Among the attractive contents of this number is a study of Muriel Stryker, Ned Wayburn's "Girl in Bronze" which proves unusually interesting as a screen subject. Screens from popular Broadway cabarets, and rehearsals and close-ups of the artists in the "Greenwich Village Follies"; Ethelind Terry's unique style of making her own blouses. Herton Spurr and his vaudeville art are included.—M. K.

"A Rip Snoreing Night"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

A decidedly funny plot that runs along in smooth sequences, makes this comedy unusually good. There is hardly a moment in which something laughable fails to occur.

Lew Sargent is featured, and the story shows how he takes his boss' place in bed, while said boss goes out to a poker game. Sargent is discovered by his employer's wife, and a series of comical complications develop.—T. S. daP.

"Glad Rags"

(Metro—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is a Metro two-reel comedy, which is admirably suited to Bull Montana's distinctive personality. He appears as a tough prize-fighter who learns how to be refined in order to win a swell girl. He succeeds in getting a certain amount of polish, but loses his big fight thereby and the girl says "What an awful oil-can you turned out to be." There is considerable action, several laugh-provoking situations and it should prove satisfactory for spectators who liked Montana's previous comedies, though it is hardly as speedy. Tom Gallery, in an unusual role for him, contributes much to the merriment.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Fifteen Dollars a Week

Abe Greenwald, of Local 307, Philadelphia, writes as follows:

Dear Friend and Brother:—Well, Frank, it's a long time since I saw you last, in the rays when we used to ride home together in the extremely early (or was it late) hours of the morning after attending those perfectly wonderfull meetings of that perfectly wonderful Auxiliary Local Union No. 35. That was in the days when the "operator" got fifteen whole dollars for seven (count em, 1111111) days, and thought he received big money.

Pauses to Remark

I might here pause to remark that I have observed that the projectionist who does not get more than the union scale usually stays put in about the same place for quite a spell.

I have been following the Projection Department for several years, but have never said anything about some of the ideas I have put into practice in connection with my Simplex projector. After reading about Brother Baldassari, Hamilton, Ontario, I concluded it was my move. I therefore herewith subit two of them for comment and approval.

Sketch No. 1 represent sa tube, made from sheet tin, to fit over the projection lens barrel, with an aperture cut in its front end. This aperture is the exact size of the effective light beam, and intercepts all stray rays, so that they cannot reach the screen.

The tube is made long enough to reach out to the rotating shutter. The back end is cut as per Fig. 2 in sketch No. 1. To do this just cut a "V" every ¾ inch, and then bend the points in a bit, so they will grip the lens barrel. If you do this and do it right, you may be a bit astonshide at the improvement in your picture.

Sketch No. 2 represents two 3-point switches wired to control a motor from two different points. To install same so that you may start or stop the projector motor from working position beside the other projector, remove the four-pole switch from the projector and connect one wire from line to motor, soldering the necessary wire joint, of course, or using a good "connector," the other live leg to run to 3-pole switch located in convenient position near the other projector.

These two wires are indicated by broken lines. You then connect two wires from 3-point switch to another 3-point switch located on projector. Connect other pole of motor to the still vacant contact of one of the switches, and the job is done. A piece of 3-wire BX is all you need from outlet box on projector to other outlet box.

Plan Is Practical

This plan is entirely practical and will be found very convenient for projectionists who are alone either a part or all the time. It will, in fact, be found to be a very handy thing in the long run, regardless of whether a man is alone or not.

To illustrate its convenience, suppose you are at one projector, and the other is about through with its reel. You are waiting to make the change-over, hence are not beside the working projector. Something happens to the working projector—a not at all impossible, or even very improbable thing, considering how some so-called projectionists butcher up the end of reels with paper stickers which are often more or less loose and overworcked punches.

In this event you can instantly stop the projector and start the other, thus avoiding letting the audience know anything went wrong and possibly avoiding damage to film, or even a fire.

I hope I shall see you when next you visit the City of Brotherly Love. I am at the Locust Theatre, Fifty-second and Locust tsreet. In closing I wish you a Merry Christmas.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies by mail on matter which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through our department remit one dollar.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in succesful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

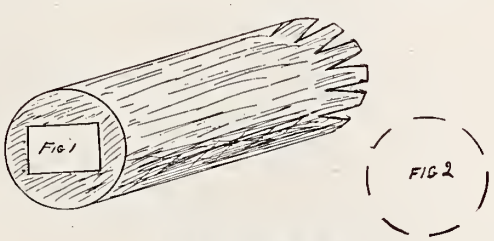
"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave., New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Good Stuff

Good stuff, Brother Greenwald! The publication of such ideas as this does not in the least injure you—quite the reverse, in fact—and is helpful to other progressive men all over the world.

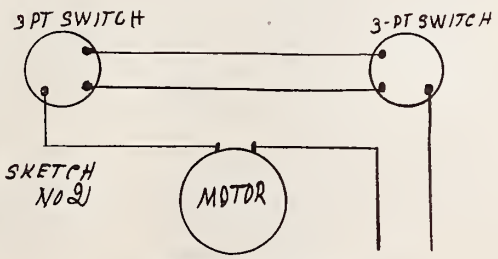
Your ideas are excellent. I was obliged to change the wording of your letter quite a bit, but don't think I changed your meaning. I tried not to anyhow.



SKETCH ONE
Tube Fitting Over Lens Barrel

The tube and aperture will prove of some value in all cases, if rightly made and rightly used. Under some conditions they will be very valuable indeed.

What you have done is to follow the recommendation of Brother Griffith and place the stray-light mask at the shutter plane, the shutter plane being presumably, at the aerial image. The tube and aperture should be painted a flat black, both inside and out, but especially inside.



SKETCH TWO
Motor Control Switch

When I next visit Philadelphia I would be delighted to visit you. I enjoy visiting the projection room of any and all progressive men—men whose ideas are not entirely limited by or to quitting time and payday. The trouble is, however, that in a city like Philadelphia there are so very many things to do in the limited time at my disposal that when I leave there is always much left undone. I will, however, bear the matter in mind and try to pay you a call anyhow.

What Do You Think?

From a projectionist in Pennsylvania comes a complaint that his theatre has been called upon to pay for damage done while running first run by scratches caused by deposit of emulsion on tension shoes. He says:

Inclosed find communications between myself and one of the local exchanges relative to damaged film. The De Luxe Exchange, of Philadelphia, sent a first-run two-reel comedy for a run in our theatre. I put it into the projector and it started off fine, but in a few moments the tension shoes started chattering, which was, of course, caused by emulsion deposit on them.

In my opinion the exchange should inspect the films and properly lubricate them to prevent this trouble. If the projectionist parafines or oils them, the exchange howls its head off and we catch the devil just the same. If we run them as received we are forced to pay for damage, as in this case. The film is scratched for about fifty feet along both edges. No other damage was done. Any suggestion by you will be appreciated and will be followed.

No Proof of Damage

In the first place the fact that a scratch mark shows is no proof that any APPRECIABLE damage has been done the films. If the marks are merely on the surface of the emulsion then the exchange has no valid claim, since no appreciable weakening of the film has occurred, provided the added strain set up by increased friction was not sufficient to abrade the edges of the sprocket holes.

If the scratches are deep, but do not extend through the emulsion, then while the celluloid base has not been weakened, it is probable that the edges of the sprocket holes have not entirely escaped damage by abrasion, due to the added strain put upon them by forcing the intermittent to pull against the high friction set up. If the scratches extend through the emulsion and into the celluloid base, then the damage is serious, and the injured portion should be immediately replaced, because the stock is weakened and unquestionably the sprocket hole edges have not escaped, even though they be not actually broken at the corners.

Microscope Needed

It is for just such examinations that the projectionist really should have a microscope, or at least a high-power magnifying glass. A condenser will not serve. In the end it might pay such of you as use first runs to have one.

BUT, my friend, are you, yourself, blameless. HOW MUCH TENSION HAS YOUR PROJECTOR at the aperture??? If it is excessive, then YOU ARE NOT BLAMELESS. You are in fact culpable, and I will have small sympathy if you get soaked by the exchange.

Examine General Instruction No. 9, page 603 of your new handbook—I assume that you already have your copy. If not, why not?—and set your tension as it should be. A too heavy tension greatly aggravates emulsion deposit, as you can readily understand.

DON'T imagine that the tension is set right when the new projector comes. If it is it is purely by accident. The projector manufacturer does not and cannot know under what conditions any given projector will operate—whether it will fall into the hands of a "speed demon" or not, so he must perforce set the tension for the WORST POSSIBLE CONDITION, which means a tension set for at least 125 feet of film per minute. You may never exceed seventy feet, and it requires small reasoning power to see that the tension of the new projector will, in that event, be too heavy for your work.

If you have a projector without a tension adjustment you are out of luck, as you will be compelled to lighten the tension by bending the springs—a slow and difficult task, but one which can and must be done. If you have a projector with a tension adjustment, then follow the instructions laid down in general instruction No. 9, page 603 of the new handbook, and all will be well.

But what I want to know is, what is the view of other projectionists as to the duty of the exchange in the matter of film lubrication? Also I will say that the Eastman Company will soon place on the market a machine which looks as though it will solve the first run film lubrication problem.

From Spain

Jose Sola Guardiola, Barcelona, Spain, writes:

We are constructing one of the largest cinemas of Europe. Knowing your great experience in such matters, we would be obliged to you for advice on the screen. What we want to know is what class of screen you consider best of all and size of same. Room is thirty-three meters in length, thirty-one meters large (presumably meaning wide) and twenty meters high. Distance of projection is thirty-five meters.

It is difficult to give advice on such matters as screen size when one knows little or nothing about the customs of the country. Australia, for instance, for the most part uses a picture so large that to my way of thinking it is distinctly bad practice, yet it would be useless to advise a small picture because Australia exhibitors firmly believe a huge picture is necessary. An 18 or at most 20 foot picture is ample large for any theatre.

Your room is, roughly, about 110 feet front to back, 102 feet wide and 65 feet high. On the plan you drew the projection distance is approximately 120 feet, or 35 meters.

Problems

There are problems connected with the matter which prevent me from giving intelligent advice without further knowledge. If your screen is within say twenty feet (six or seven meters) of the front row of seats you must either use a screen having excellent diffusing powers or have a tremendous "fadeaway." By this I mean that if a screen of low diffusing power be used, while the picture may be brilliant from in front of the screen, at the extreme side front seats it will be very dim; also you will have a tremendous distortion from the extreme side front seats. Everything on the screen, as seen from those seats, will be very thin and tall.

What I would strongly advise you to do is to send six dollars at once, and have a copy of the new handbook sent you. The matter dealing with the screen, pages 219 to 267, is precisely what you want. To give you any kind of comprehensive understanding of the matter in this department or by letter would require at least thirty pages of manuscript, with a half dozen tables and an equal number of drawings. Much as I would like to help you it is impossible to spare either the time or space. The handbook is what you need. It is all there, and in excellent form, with tables and data enabling you to apply the knowledge to your own house.

It Travels

David Livingstone, projectionist, Tioga Theatre, Owego, New York, is having trouble which he describes as follows:

Our current is 110 volts A.C. We use a Hallberg Economizer at fifty amperes. The economizer feeds both lamps, so that striking one arc kills the other. In the second edition of your handbook you recommended a carbon set, which we are using. The carbons are 5/8 cored.

The trouble is that the flame travels around the outer edge of the carbon. Usually the light then strikes directly toward the back of the lamphouse. Sometimes it will light half the picture.

We can find but one remedy, viz: to keep the carbons separated about 3/8 of an inch, but this gives a blue field below and a yellow above. I would be glad to have you call at the Tioga if ever you again pass through our city.

A Bit Rusty

There is so comparatively little A. C. used at the arc now-a-days that I am a bit rusty on such troubles. I think, however, that your difficulty is most likely due to damp carbons. Suppose you park about a dozen of them on the top of your lamphouse, or on its floor, if there is room, and leave them there for three or four days.

Then try them and I think you will find the arc will stay put. If not, then advise me and I'll refer the matter to the carbon manufacturers and see what they can get out of it.

The second edition? Man alive! I did not suppose there was still one of them still doing service. Take my advice and invest six dollars in one of the new books IMMEDIATELY.

The second edition has been out of date for five long years. You must invest a little money in knowledge if you want ever to get ahead. Six dollars may seem quite a lot to you, but what you get you will find to be worth several times that sum.

Oh! yes, by the way, be sure you haven't a lot of lamp lead (wire) inside the lamphouse, laying in a coil. This has been known to set up magnetic action and disturb the arc. Don't think that is your difficulty, but look into it anyhow. I will be glad to give you a call if I ever pass through Owego again.

An Argument

Two projectionists of Boston, Hub of the Universe, set forth the following:

Brother Umti Ump and myself (names requested to be kept a dark, dense mystery) have had an argument and have agreed to leave it to you, with a bet of a dinner for ourselves and squaws on the result. The burning question is:

Would it be practical to use fifty amperes D.C. at one arc and 100 amperes A.C. at the other without the audience seeing a difference at change-over?

In this we assume that both arcs be handled in the best possible manner. One of us says it could be and the other says it could not. Which is right?

I think what the yesser has in mind is merely screen illumination. If this were all maybe the no man thought further—maybe not—then it might be possible that there would not be sufficient difference to cause the audience to notice when change-overs were made.

But screen brilliancy is NOT all. There is the quality of the light to take into consideration, and there is a great difference in light quality from an A. C. arc and a D. C. arc, especially if the A. C. carbons be used. The light from an A. C. arc is very much more harsh. It contains what is, I suppose, more of the violet rays.

It is also more penetrating. D. C. light is "smoother" and more soft and pleasing. That is not very well put, but the terms "smoother" and "soft" are the best I can think of to convey the idea.

The man who voted no is correct, and the yesser will kindly step up to the window of the cashier when the dinner is finished, but inasmuch as probably you may both have had merely the item of screen brilliancy—density of illumination—in mind, I would suggest that the squaws do NOT order too expensively and that the hemales stick to refreshments of reasonable price.

Flicker Elimination

L. S. Cusick, projectionist, Peck's Theatre, LaSalle, Illinois, says:

I have two Powers projectors and am using sixty cycle current. Have a projection distance of about 75 or 80 feet. Rotating shutters are set to eliminate all travel ghost. Question: What shall I do to eliminate flicker when projecting at ANY speed?

Your question is not very clear. You may mean what can I do that will enable me to project at any desired rate of speed, no matter how fast or slow, without flicker, in which case there is no answer, for the simple reason that it cannot possibly be done. Presuming that you already have your Fourth Edition Handbook, turn to page 611 and study General Instruction No. 22, which continues to page 625.

When you have mastered what is therein contained you will not ask such a question, because you will understand what flicker is, why it is and how far you can go in its elimination. To set it all forth here would consume several pages.

You also may mean that you now have a flicker, no matter at what speed you project. If this is true then it is likely that you are using a rather "brilliant" screen, and using the maximum of current very efficiently. It is also quite certain that you never project very much in excess of sixty feet a minute.

Give All the Facts

Kindly give me all facts and I will see what can be done for you. By all facts I mean, what kind of screen do you use? How many amperes at the arc? Do you use rheostats or transformers, and if the latter, what kind? What is focal length of condenser lenses? Are they plano convex? How far are they spaced apart? What is distance front surface of converging lens to film? What distance film to first lens of projection lens? What is free diameter of projection lens and what is size (width) of picture? What is your maximum speed of projection? Any other information which you may think will help me in forming a opinion of your case.

Handbook Error

Under table No. 18, page 393 of the handbook, the printer man got the line of caption all balled up, and it was not noticed in proof reading, it seems. Below the line appears as it should be. Owners of the handbook should clip this out and paste it over the one on the book. This is the line:

1 Sq. mm is .00155 of a Sq. inch. 1 Sq. inch equals 645.2 Sq. mm.

As I said, just clip the line above out and paste it in the book over the caption line under table 18, page 393.

Better Equipment

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

Work Commenced on Crandall's $650,000 Tivoli in Washington

ON Monday, December 4, work preliminary to the construction of Crandall's new Tivoli Theatre, at Fourteenth Street and Park Road, Northwest, was begun in Washington and two days later announcement was made that Mr. Crandall had acquired control of the Garden Theatre on Ninth Street between D and E Streets, Northwest, to be known hereafter as Crandall's Central Theatre. Detailing and fabrication of the steel for Crandall's new Ambassador Theatre at Eighteenth Street and Columbia Road, Northwest, are well under way and work on this handsome new addition to the Crandall list of theatres will be begun at once.

The completion of these operations will swell the number of Crandall houses in Washington to ten and the total circuit to fifteen. The entire circuit comprises Metropolitan, Savoy, Ninth and E Avenue, Grand, Apollo, York, Lincoln, Ambassador, Central and Tivoli in Washington, the Strand in Cumberland, Md., the Apollo and Strand in Martinsburg, W. Va., and the American and Rialto in Roanoke, Va.

Beautiful and Commodious

Crandall's Tivoli will be one of the most beautiful and most commodious residential theatres in Washington and one of the most noteworthy structures of its kind in the United States. It will have a frontage of 220 feet on Fourteenth Street and 109 feet on Park Road with a total seating capacity with balcony of 2,500.

The entrance will be at the corner of the intersecting streets. On the Fourteenth Street side there will be twelve two-story shops and an equal number of spacious offices. The entrance will be surmounted by a decorative marquise and it is promised that every approved modern appliance and appurtenance that can add to the beauty, comfort and convenience of the house will be present.

Unique in Many Ways

While it is the purpose of Mr. Crandall to conduct the new Tivoli as a motion picture theatre, the house will be equipped with a full-size stage capable of accommodating any form of dramatic, operatic or concert attraction. The heating and ventilating systems will be of the latest approved types and exits will be provided on three sides of the building in greater number than District of Columbia regulations require.

The Tivoli will be unique in many ways. The exterior will be of highly ornamented polychrome terra cotta, modelled on a beautiful of the Italian renaissance monumental building. In the spacious arches of this facade are the shops the distinctive feature of which will be the open well permitting a clear view of both first and second floor displays upon entering the door.

The interior of the theatre will disclose a simple and dignified Italian renaissance design. The interior decoration will be carried out, as in the other Crandall houses, in marble, silks and satin tapestries.

There will be spacious and handsomely furnished retiring and smoking rooms for both ladies and gentlemen on both the orchestra and balcony floors. Another distinctive feature will be found in the mezzanine lounge where writing materials and other conveniences will add to its attractiveness.

Novel Projection Room

One of the most novel innovations in the construction of the house will be the location and arrangement of the projection room. This will be on a direct line with the screen and will have a fireproof wireglass window opening directly into the mezzanine, thus enabling the patrons to view every operation within and observe precisely what processes are necessary to project an entertainment upon the silver sheet.

The Tivoli when completed will represent a total investment of approximately $650,-

000. The designing and construction of the house is under the direct supervision of Thomas W. Lamb, of New York City.

The Garden Theatre, to be known hereafter as Crandall's Central is a downtown house in the heart of Washington's business section with a seating capacity of approximately 1,000. It was built originally as the Imperial Theatre to house a musical comedy stock company which was successfully operated for several seasons, and therefore has full stage room and equipment which greatly facilitates the staging of prologues and other embellishments of the pictures.

The Central will be completed renovated, reseated both on orchestra and balcony floors and new projection room equipment will be installed. Instead of an orchestra, the Central will be musicalized by the installation of a large pipe organ.

It is expected that this house, which has stood idle for the past year, will be ready for public opening Christmas week.

Motion Picture Incorporations at Albany Are Increasing in Number

WITH seven companies incorporating, the capital represented by motion picture concerns entering the business in New York State during the week ending December 9, reached only $316,500. The following shows the individual capitalization and directors for the first year, Genees & McIsaac Producing Corporation, $5,000, James L. Robinson, Upper Montclair, N. J.; Mercedes von Bredow, Henriette Smith, New York City; Notable Screen Productions, $500, Merritt Crawford, A. E. James, Charles Ascott, New York; Victory Cinema Corporation, $10,000, Joseph Schron, Louis Ogust, Frederick Zorn, New York; Premier Productions, $500, H. J. Sanders, New York City; Nat Lesser, Fay Alexander, Brooklyn; J. Searle Dawley Productions Corporation, $250,000, Merle I. St. John, Grey M. Burns, Vera A. Roberts, New York; J. and L. Corporation, $50,000, William Kaufman, Edward N. Bloomberg, Ida Shmunis, New York; Church Motion Picture Syndicate, $500, Paul Smith, Ethel G. Martin, Eleanor B. Ryan, New York City.

More Capital Attached

Apparently reassured that the motion picture industry has not reached the saturation point, and that there is no danger that the motion picture is ceasing to attract and entertain, capital is being attracted toward the industry in far more certain terms than at the beginning of this year. The incorporation bureau of the secretary of state's office at Albany, New York, by its records, substantiates this assertion.

While fewer companies, perhaps, are incorporating and entering the motion picture business in some one of its many phases, these companies during the past two months have shown capitalization far in excess of those which incorporated up to the latter part of September.

During October, 22 companies represented a combined capitalization of $4,309,500, while 33 companies in November showed a capitalization, which in the aggregate amounted to $3,784,500.

Compare these figures with the fore part of the year. In January, 31 companies were incorporated, but these represented a capitalization, all told, of but $953,500.

February showed 31 companies as having incorporated during the month, but the capitalization dropped to $562,000, or little over a half million.

During March, 41 companies incorporated, with a capitalization of $1,712,000.

April witnessed a slump to 15 companies showing a capitalization which amounted to but $274,000.

There was some pick up in May and June, but July found only 19 companies forming and incorporating in New York State, and representing a capitalization footing to $609,000.

August and September each brought about some increase, but not to the extent shown by the last two months.

During the eleven months thus far this year, 289 companies, with a combined capitalization of $17,782,100, have been formed.

No part of your equipment costs so little for initial expense and practically nothing for maintenance as the Projection Lens—yet it is the most important factor in producing a perfect picture on the screen, and perfect pictures insure a crowded theater.

It is to your decided advantage to use—

GUNDLACH RADIANT PROJECTION LENSES

The finest lenses that optical science has produced. Outstanding features of Radiant Lenses are—

Critical definition Flatness of field
Brilliancy of image and illumination
Uniformity of quality

Radiant Projection Lenses are particularly adaptable for Mazda light source.

Order Radiant Projection Lenses from your dealer on approval—Give them the hardest tests you can think of—then, if you are not completely satisfied—return them.

CHARLES C. BURR

CHARLES C. BURR PRODUCTIONS are built in the belief that there is no substitute for quality.

Somewhat more than two years ago this organization began with the making of a two reel comedy series.

Slowly, steadily, its production grew, the staff responsible for the various pictures being increased by careful selection and thorough training.

"Entertainment always—but quality first" has been the principle upon which this growth progressed.

In features, in comedies, in cartoons, in scenic pictures, that slogan reveals itself.

Independently made pictures should be quality pictures. We believe no producing organization puts more of its sense of responsibility to exhibitor and public upon the screen.

THIS is the first of Paramount's new National Advertisements.

It will run in the Saturday Evening Post, January 13th, in two colors!

The use of color more than doubles the attention value, and consequently the number of readers. That means more money for exhibitors.

Paramount plans to make its national advertising campaign for the coming season far ahead of any former motion picture campaign—and one of the finest in the whole field of advertising.

A THEME that always interests—the off-stage life of a footlight favorite. With gowns that make you gasp, and sets that astonish with their beauty.

The story was especially written for the star and director by Clara Beranger, author of "The Gilded Lily," and it is altogether the biggest box-office picture William deMille has ever made.

D.W.GRIFFITH'S

"One Exciting Night,"

The first genuinely up-to-date mystery picture ever filmed. Brimful of love, laughter and thrills. A frantic search for a missing half million dollars. Stealthy figures and peering eyes. Sliding panels and secret doors. The funniest black-face comedian possible. And a tremendous storm scene as a gorgeous, dynamic climax.

"Orphans of the Storm,"

A Griffith picturization of the famous "The Two Orphans" as the basis for a historically accurate presentation of the titanic upheavals of the French revolution. The sweetest love story of all history. Scenes of pagan splendor among the aristocrats as the rabble riots for bread. The "great ride" as a Griffith climax.

"Way Down East,"

Foremost among the most popular pictures D. W. Griffith ever made. Melodrama and romance; comedy and adventure; box-office certainty everywhere every time. A cast beyond criticism or comparison. A picture for the small town theatre as well as the big city. And there's the Griffith thriller in the form of a smashing ice scene.

"Dream Street,"

A truly Griffith feature in every sense of the word, picturing the famous Limehouse district of London. A tenderly beautiful love story for the romantically inclined, plus mystery and melodrama as only Griffith himself transfers to the screen. The great director is at his best in this picture of beauty in the midst of squalor.

"The Love Flower,"

A D. W. Griffith triumph from all phases of picture-making. A wonderful story that runs the gamut of all the human emotions—love, hate, revenge, forgiveness. Superb settings on a tropical isle, with marvellous photography showing a battle to the death deep, deep, in the water at the foot of a towering cliff. A real thriller.

"Broken Blossoms."

The most artistically beautiful picture this master producer ever filmed, with real entertainment for all classes. Not a "high-brow" picture, but a tremendous melodrama of the London Limehouse district, with a love story so tenderly told as to bring tears—tears that wash away sadness and make beauty seem more beautiful.

"The White Rose,"

Now in course of production.

The picture is fascinating, and certainly holds one's interest from first to last.

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER

Martin Johnson, intrepid explorer that he is, always may be relied upon for discovering unusual and out-of-the-way parts of the globe. In "Head Hunters of the South Seas" he offers to his public another actual drama of nature —stranger and more interesting than many of the dramas concocted in the minds of frenzied scenario writers. Attention in this production is concentrated chiefly in the Island of Malekula, one of the innumerable islands of the South Sea group.

The picture is fascinating, and certainly holds one's interest from first to last. There are many intimate glimpses of the dusky head-hunters. There also are glimpses of jungle-dwelling dwarfs, weird ceremonies enacted by the savage tribes, even weider manners and customs, and primitive nature in its varied moods. The expedition even succeeded in photographing a volcano in the act of eruption. Accompanying Martin Johnson on this trip was his wife, who adds a welcome touch of womanly grace.

ARTHUR S. KANE, PRESIDENT

"CONQUERING THE WOMAN" presents Florence Vidor in the most delightful and whimsical role of her career.

In a word, the story of how a perplexed father cures his strong-willed daughter of the "high-falutin' notions" acquired during a sojourn abroad.

He puts her aboard one of his merchant ships and strands her on a lonely island with a young man who had said that women are like high-spirited horses—they must be broken to the bit.

The story is from the pen of Henry C. Rowland, one of the most popular writers for The Saturday Evening Post.

It is a King Vidor Production which guarantees straight-forward direction and excellent presentation.

The supporting cast includes David Butler, Peter Burke, Bert Sprotte, Roscoe Karns, Mathilde Brundage and Harry Todd.

"Conquering the Woman" is in six parts.

FLORENCE VIDOR, a star who disarms criticism; who never disappoints; who can always be relied upon to attract business.

She won stellar prominence through these very qualifications.

Everyone admires her; everyone respects the charm of her womanliness and warms to her radiant personality.

But Florence Vidor is not only beautiful and talented. As an attraction she occupies a place among the mighty. A place she ranks by virtue of box-office performance and honest audience satisfaction.

Your latest production, "The Pride of Palomar" which has just completed a week at my Capitol Theatre has occasioned so very many enthusiastic comments that I am forced to take out the good picture set into the Madison for week of December 17th and insist that you let me play this production another week at my Madison Theatre. This is only the second time in the history of my theatres that I have done this. "The Pride of Palomar" is undoubtedly one of the best productions of the year.

THIS should be the season of greatest rejoicing for our art-industry. For it is the climax of a year of substantial progress—a year of constructive development toward stabilized conditions and higher ideals.

Better showmanship in our theatres and better pictures from our studios have been the two great contributing factors to this progress. Realization on the part of the producer of the demand for more sincere creative effort and for real entertainment, coupled with splendid presentation and constructive exploitation, has re-established public confidence in motion pictures with consequent reaction at the boxoffice.

This season has brought the greatest array of big pictures in the industry's history—and the producing schedule for 1923 indicates that the high standards of 1922 will be excelled

I offer as my contribution to the continued prosperity of the theaters, "The Hottentot," now in release through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., with every assurance that it will prove the greatest comedy-drama of the season, with "Bellboy 13" and "What a Wife Learned!" for release in January and February and "Scars of Jealousy," "A Man of Action" and "The Sunshine Trail" to follow in the spring.

Trade Paper Facts

There is only one answer to an A. B. C. Audit.

And that answer is—another A. B. C. Audit.

Any other answer is either Good Salesmanship—or just plain Bunk.

You wouldn't buy a blooded animal without examining his pedigree.

You wouldn't buy a pig—if he were offered to you in a black bag.

You wouldn't buy any goods of any salesman if the salesman himself showed a lack of confidence in his product.

The publisher with confidence in his publication and its circulation has one way to show it—the A. B. C. Audit.

The publisher without faith in his circulation has one fear—the A. B. C. Audit.

Two motion picture trade publications have the courage to submit to an A. B. C. Audit and to present the figures to you.

There are no ifs, ands, or buts about it. There is only one answer to an A. B. C. Audit—that is another A. B. C. Audit.

Any other answer is either Good Salesmanship—or just plain BUNK.

Life Says

Heart Interest

SOME months back, I had occasion to lament the quality of the heart interest in contemporary movies—the old mothers placing lights in windows, the misunderstood ingenues, and all their fellow tear promoters. At the same time, I expressed the belief that heart-interest could be legitimate on the screen—just as it is in life—and that the spectator's lachrymal glands could be squeezed by other than artificial means.

This week, two pictures come to hand which serve to substantiate my statement. They are both overflowing with heart interest, and they are both genuine.

"Oliver Twist"

THE first is Jackie Coogan's production of "Oliver Twist," which has been awaited with no little expectancy by those who believe that, after all, something can really be done with the movies.

Anyone who doubts that Jackie Coogan is competent to play Oliver Twist will do well to see the picture. For this child is incredible. There is not one false note in his entire performance—not one moment when he steps out of his part and becomes a cute, movie kid doing cute, movie tricks.

Jackie Coogan is an artist (I think I have said that before), not because he possesses the power of mimicry, or because he can behave just as the director tells him, but because he possesses that power of appreciation which is only present in a born actor. He can feel the character which he is called upon to create. It is not a mechanical process, by any manner of means, but an inbred sense. In this respect, an actor is an artist.

ASIDE from his splendid direction in "Oliver Twist," Frank Lloyd has distinguished himself for his intelligent adaptation of the story. He has seen to it that Charles Dickens was not lost in the shuffle. The dramatic sequence has been so well arranged that no part of the eight reels is permitted to lag, and none of the story's vitality has been weakened by insipid treatment.

The cast which Mr. Lloyd has selected is generally good, the particularly bright spots being furnished by Gladys Brockwell, Lionel Belmore and Lewis Sargent.

ALL in all, "Oliver Twist" is a distinct credit to the movies. It is one of the few really great pictures of this or any other year.

The Editor's Views

Here and There Among Film Men—The Arbuckle Case—Prosperity Dinners and the Fatted Calf—A Few Two Line Editorials

THIS makes about the tenth Christmas issue of a motion picture trade paper with which the present writer has found himself in more or less intimate contact.

We approached the first with burning ambition to create one of those well advertised fictions, "a book that will be saved and referred to throughout the year." We approach the tenth with the feeling of the carnival showman. "Oh, shucks, it's time for another one of those 'Grand Annual Christmas Numbers and Festival of Fun Extraordinary."

The Christmas issue enthusiasm has a way of slumping off perceptibly with the years. First, the staff works for weeks, and maybe months, on an assorted collection of pet ideas that an insatiate industry is waiting anxiously to see.

"Features" are evolved that, to return to the phrase, "will be saved, and filed, and referred to throughout the year." Art and color lend their aid. The industry's dynamic figures employ thousands of otherwise valuable words to talk of "The Outlook for the Coming Year."

Twelve office boys, twenty press agents, the boss, and your wife tell you the day the issue is published, "It was wonderful."

A week later you hesitatingly mention your "Christmas Issue" to a sales manager or an exhibitor and he says, "Are you going to have one this year?"

So this year we've given you a little froth, a few smiles—maybe—as little bunk as possible, and—"A Merry Christmas to You."

This issue also marks a change in the style of our editorials and the editorial page itself.

Based on this idea:

If we drop into the office of a film man to say, "Hello," we are fully aware of the fact that he does not expect—nor want—us to deliver a five-minute oration on "The Whichness of the Why."

And that is what any attempt at a ponderous weekly "single subject" is certain to become when limited by the boundaries of trade discussion.

But we do notice that the film man mentioned above does enjoy a random dialogue about this and that in the field, what So-and-So thinks about it, and what Somebody-or-Other is going to do about it.

In such chatter between film men every development is not a "Crisis for the Industry" and every proposal a "Problem That Must Be Certainly Grappled With."

So we are going to ramble on in conversational tone with a few views, a little news and more of personalities than anything else. Other people's personalities. Not the editor's.

Will Hays has put the American public's Christmas spirit to the test by his Santa Claus offering to Roscoe Arbuckle. What will the answer be?

Will Hays, master of mass psychology as taught in the political maelstrom, has put the lessons of his past to the crucial test.

The Christmas season, time of "peace on earth," the best of things to men of good will, has been chosen as the moment to pronounce forgiveness for Roscoe Arbuckle.

The industry can expect a variety of reactions, both within and without the fold. The loudest talkers and the most prolific letter writers in the ranks of reformers will probably be prominent with their denunciation. Many well-meaning exhibitors and others in the business, without giving consideration to Arbuckle's personal plight, will probably feel that the lifting of the ban will react harmfully on the screen.

Our personal feelings have undergone many remarkable changes since the day that the Arbuckle scene was first set in a courtroom.

Principally because we have tried to keep from forming any prejudices of our own and to allow the attitude of the lay public to produce our conclusions.

And it is our sincere conclusion at this minute that the great masses of the American public harbor no spirit of vengeance towards "Fatty" Arbuckle.

There will probably be many to disagree with us on this. It can be no more than an opinion so long as mass psychology cannot be counted, weighed, and tabulated.

But to our mind, the question of the American public's willingness to allow Arbuckle an opportunity to earn a living is entirely separate and distinct from the question of the same public's later attraction to the name of Arbuckle on a billing.

That is a matter for the exhibitor to face with particular reference to the pulse and sensitiveness of the small slice of the public to which his own house caters.

Joe Gook says that "Prosperity Dinner" sometimes means Prosperity to the promoters thereof.

In the rush of sending a miscellaneous mass of news matter through the presses, Moving Picture World last week carried an account telling of a "Welcome Prosperity Dinner" announced for the Hotel Astor, with film men as the chief guests, speakers and all-around performers.

We were sorry to see the story in type ourselves, because it is our own opinion that the motion picture business has been over-banquetted and "over-speechified."

The promoters of the present affair may be very sincere and enthusiastic. We do not presume to say.

But while film men are perfectly willing to put a "Welcome" mat out on the front porch if Mr. Prosperity is coming our way, it is the writer's view that at two hundred and fifty dollars a table, twenty-five a plate, they are also killing the fatted calf. Handing back a lot more than Mr. Prosperity has yet given them.

Whenever you are certain the world is growing better and better in every way Frank Rembusch enters the office.

As we are impressing these words upon a none too spontaneous typewriter, the thought comes that no Christmas issue this year can be complete without reference to the general era of wonderful pictures, and returning prosperity for producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Then Frank Rembusch, of Indiana, is announced.

And Frank tells us that we are all wrong.

"The smalltown exhibitor is just getting by," says Frank. "And you can't say much more for the man in the larger communities.

"I know because I am running a string from auditorium size down to village centers.

"If it were not for my unusual buying power and the fact that I am working twenty-four hours a day myself I would never get away with it. Now what is the small town man doing who buys for only one theatre and often lacks the backbone necessary to combat the film salesmen?

"Film rentals are too high. And the producer is not getting the money. It is being eaten up in the forty to fifty per cent. selling cost."

Some exhibitors see more film salesmen in a day than they do patrons.

We always have to keep a wary eye on these exhibitors who talk a melody of "blues" because any wise theatre man will yield to the temptation to put in print a talk that will help his individual price arguments with the salesmen.

Rembusch, however, does not merely argue in words. He will let you see the books and prove his point by the figures. His views sum up in several high lights:

"The public shows its displeasure every time we attempt a few cents increase in admission price. They won't go higher."

"The war tax is taking just so much money out of the exhibitor's end. Mr. Public will pay just so much for his entertainment, whether it ends up in Uncle Sam's pocket or ours."

"Thousands of houses need new projection machines, painting, and general toning up, but the exhibitor has not been able to lay a cent aside for this in years. The eventual result will be disastrous."

"We called General Film a trust and felt oppressed. The truth is the pioneers were good business men. They knew that first of all the customer must make money. The result was that they made money and the exhibitor made it on a scale that will never again be equalled in this business."

"The good old days" is a popular song hit in the picture business as well as anywhere else.

Film men looking forward to the New York Censorship Board dying a painless and noiseless death are very apt to be disagreeably surprised.

We feel that censorship in the Empire State is doomed, but we also know that politicians do not give up jobs nor will reformers admit defeat without a battle and a real hard one.

Rumblings that we have already heard convince us that we are making no mistake in warning the industry that this fight will not be a walkover.

Just a thought that it is well to keep in mind.

Robert E. Welsh

The Film Horoscope for 1923

JANUARY——Will Hays, in speech before the Iowa Society of Los Angeles, declares that every day the picture industry is growing better and better in every way.

Loud rumblings in the neighborhood of Albany, N. Y., followed by appearance in Help Wanted Columns of three ads signed "Ex-Censor."

Continued zero weather lays magnates low with epidemic of "mysterious trips to Los Angeles." Four sales managers decide to look over the Atlanta territory.

All box office records at the Capitol, Rialto, Rivoli, and Strand, were broken to smithereens only four times. Each.

FEBRUARY——Will Hays, in a speech before the Assistant Property Men's Association, of Jacksonville, Fla., declares that every day the picture industry is growing better and better in every way.

Twenty film magnates suddenly recall the February of the "flu" year. Twenty panic-stricken film magnates hurriedly take up Doc. Coue.

Joe Glook, prominent executive, announces new long run record—"Only a Mother Could Love Her" being first picture in history to play Dannenburgh, Nevada, for two consecutive performances. Matinee and evening.

New advertising manager makes alarming discovery that newspapers give pages of space to baseball, which does not advertise and interests men only, with scant treatment for motion pictures—big advertisers with millions of followers. Consternation in newspaper circles over the discovery.

All cash receipts records at the Capitol, Rialto, Rivoli, and Strand, were smashed to pieces only four times. Each.

MARCH——Will Hays, in speech before the Step-Fathers Club of Oskaloosa, declares that every day the picture industry is growing better and better in every way.

Trade paper editors get their wires crossed and all run their annual "Percentage" editorial the same week.

Frantic editors trying to cover up slip a cog and all follow the next week with their annual editorial on "Censorship."

Editors come clean and in closing week of month select one of their number to write four editorials on "Cooperation and Confidence."

Ditto last paragraph January and February forecast.

APRIL——Ditto first paragraph January, February and March prognostications. Ditto last paragraph January and February.

Milton Mix, prominent film magnate, in exclusive interview for Moving Picture World, declares that "the story is the thing."

Milton Mix, prominent film magnate, in interview exclusively granted to Motion Picture News, announces that "exploitation is the answer."

Milton Mix, P.F.M., in exclusive interview secured at great pains by Exhibitors Trade Review, declares "The star is the cure for all box office ills."

Milton Mix, P.F.M., etc., ad lib., for Exhibitors Herald, says, "Let's have less Bunk in the trade papers."

Jack Whoozis, press agent for Milton Mix, drops dead at shock of having his salary raised.

MAY—JUNE—JULY—AUGUST —— Ninety-four and a half pictures advertised in trade papers with slogan, "Here's the wallop that will break the back of the summer slump!"

Fourteen thousand exhibitors, twenty magnates, and ten thousand assorted payroll decorators, decide that the picture business has gone to the dogs.

Somebody thinks up a new alibi for a trip to Europe and twenty magnates book passage.

Twenty sales managers take up fancy diving in order to keep up—or down—with the weekly collection figures.

Heat wave breaks and picture business comes back from the dogs.

SEPTEMBER——Never before in the history of the motion picture industry were so many big, super, marvelous productions put forth by so many companies.

The exhibitors don't know what to do about it.

Authoritative Wall Street rumor rumors that fifteen leading film companies are going to merge and that the new gigantic combine will employ J. P. Morgan as general manager of the Poster Department.

Authoritative Wall Street rumor authoritatively denied.

Picture business continues to grow better and better in every way. Not a week passes without four Broadway box office records being broken, smashed, and busted.

OCTOBER—NOVEMBER—DECEMBER——Ditto, ditto, ditto, ditto.

Letters to Santa Claus

The Magnates Were All Too Busy to Write Their Own Notes, So We Had the Job Done, With All Due Apologies, By a Mere Member of the World Staff

Adolph Zukor of Famous Players Lasky

Dear Santa:

If you find something in my stocking when you crawl down the chimney—don't get scared. It's only a few dozen of those small theatres you wished on me last Xmas. Take 'em back—I don't want 'em. All they ever got me was hard names, assorted brickbats and insomnia.

I have so many great writers, greater stars, and greatest directors, I don't know anything you can bring me—and I don't believe in you much anyhow. I have more confidence in Jesse Lasky and Sidney Kent.

But you might send me a nice, new, shiny adjective. "Famous Forty-One" was great, "Super Thirty-Nine" is better. Now if you got one something like "Sizzling Sixty-Six" slip it to me and I'll keep it happy till September.

P. S.—If you know the address of Al Black and Steve Lynch you might plug their stockings with those theatres. They believe in Santa Claus.

Adolph Zukor

Dear Santa:

Let the next Norma Talmadge picture pass the "Smilin' Through" mark.

Let the next Constance Talmadge keep pace with "East is West."

Let the next Chaplin make "Shoulder Arms" look like a flivver.

Let the next Ince have more thrills than "The Hottentot."

And so on, ad infinitum, whatever that means.

I'm not handing you such a difficult job at that, Santa, as you will admit if you've read Bill Yearsley's announcement of First National's line-up for the next six months.

Outside of that, fill my stocking up with a generous portion of Harmony. I don't need it now; got the greatest Harmony act working around here now that you ever saw. But a year is a long, long time, Santa, and you know how these co-operative affairs are.

Besides, I'm going to be too busy making good pictures to have any time for politics.

Richard A. Rowland of First National

J. A. Rowland

Arthur S. Kane of Associated Exhibitors

Dear Santa:

Send me the name of a first-run theatre in New York with the nerve to run a good picture as long as it will stand up—as they did in Los Angeles with Harold Lloyd's "Grandma's Boy."

You might stretch that request to include many other eastern cities along with New York.

Santa, can you imagine a theatre that will take a big picture off while business is still GOING UP? Well, that's what some of these exhibitors will do just because of "policy."

Pardon me if I seem to be trying to sell you, Santa, but selling is my business and I just can't help it.

Please don't think I'm a hog when you see two stockings hanging on my mantlepiece. I have a double identity and can use presents two ways—for Associated Exhibitors and Playgoers' Pictures.

If you can keep these identities straight you'll be doing better than a certain bone-headed trade paper editor.

Arthur S. Kane

Dear Santa:

Send me a picture that has—

A title with the box-office pull of "Rich Men's Wives;"

A story with the strength and artistry of "Shadows,"

And the sure-fire melodramatic hokum of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms."

Do that for me, Santa, and I'll say you're almost as good as Benny Schulberg. That's saying a lot because Benny turns the trick without me writing him foolish letters like this or hanging my stocking up.

Do that for me, Santa, and I'll tell you a funny story. You know, I've told funny stories to ten thousand exhibitors in the United States. And they always laughed. Even when I was telling them for Paramount.

I can even make Ben Amsterdam, Sam Zierler and Harry Charnas laugh. And they're hard-boiled.

You know it.

William Fox of Fox Films

Dear Santa:

I need your help.

Please fix it so that the Shuberts, Erlangers, etc., can build at least a dozen more Broadway theatres this Spring and have them all ready for me next Fall.

I took over the White Way playhouses on a wholesale plan this Fall, to take care of all my big specials, but even with all the ticket windows I had working for me I didn't have enough. I suppose you noticed that announcement I made a week or so ago of six big specials that I have had up my sleeve all the time and haven't said a word about. These are big enough for Broadway but I ran out of theatres. So they go right to the exhibitors after the first of the year.

The New York dramatic critics are complaining that they have forgotten the sound of the human voice, so many of the legit houses are confined to my silent drama.

William Fox

Dear Santa:

I ask nothing for myself—all I ask is that you fill the stocking of every exhibitor in the country with "Plunder."

You can't give them a better present if you comb the earth—take my word for it. And that of the reviewers. Also that of P. A. Parsons. And anyone else you happen to meet.

I have a tip for you.

The other day I saw a letter in which a fellow asked you for an idea for a serial to run in fifty-two episodes and guaranteed to hold up to the end.

Tell him about Pathe News.

If you're real good to me I may fix it so that O'Flaherty will put you on the screen the next time he travels to Eskimoland.

Some of these other film men may not believe in Santa Claus, but I've seen "Nanook of the North" and I know there is a Santa Claus.

Elmer Pearson of Pathe Exchanges

Elmer Pearson

W. W. Hodkinson of Hodkinson Company

Dear Santa:

If you want to be real nice to me this Xmas give me a radio broadcasting set that will enable me to talk at one and the same time to the fifteen thousand more or less exhibitors, er, I mean, the fifteen thousand exhibitors more or less, er, you know what I mean.

Be sure it's a radio set that won't slur or cough on the word "Percentage."

If I can put that message over I won't ask you for anything next Xmas. I won't need it. I've got the pictures, got the greatest home office executive staff in my history, and a selling force that is stepping.

Of course, I can put that "Percentage" argument over in the trade papers, but the editors tell me no one reads those solid pages of type and it takes me two pages to tell 'em anything. If they hear my voice on the radio they won't realize how long my story is. But I can't draw a diagram by radio, can I?

Dear Santa:

Just slip me a little legal advice, Santa, and I'll be satisfied—

If it was alright for Sammy Goldwyn to change his name couldn't we, individually and collectively, or whatever it ought to be, change our names to "Warner Brothers?"

It don't seem to make any difference anymore whether it's Harry, or Abe, or Sam, or who it is, half the men I meet say, "Hello, Mr. Warner Brothers."

We don't need any of your help this year, Santa, we're hitting on high. But just to show how generous we are, if you have any presents to spare you might slip a few to the poor loco bird who said five years ago that "My Four Years in Germany" was just dumb luck.

If there is anything left after that hand a lollypop to the gink who muttered that "Why Girls Leave Home" was another lucky accident.

We showed them how to set a pace and HOLD IT, didn't we?

Letters to Santa Claus

he Magnates Were All Too Busv to Write Their Own Notes, So We Had the Job Done, With All Due Apologies, By a Mere Member of the World Staff

Lewis Selznick of Selznick Company

Dear Santa:

I'm not much at asking for favors, Santa—I usually go after what I want—but if you have to be a good fellow you might send me a couple more sons who will develop like David and Myron.

I suppose you heard about "One Week of Love," and all the boosts those wise-cracking film men are giving Myron who supervised that knockout in its entirety? And you must have read that letter Rupert Hughes wrote him? He knows what he's talking about—that fellow Hughes.

Folks have called me "crazy" lots of time in this business and I've gone right ahead and "shown them." Well, the biggest things I've shown them are David and Myron.

Things are going so smoothly right now, Santa, that I got my fingers crossed and that makes it pretty hard to write you a letter. Besides, with David and Myron to make the pictures and Jack Woody to sell them I don't see much use for a Santa Claus anyway.

Dear Santa:

I don't know just how you can make this Xmas any merrier that it is just naturally going to be, or 1923 any happier a year than 1922 has been for Universal.

Why, didn't the editor of The World even go out of his way a few weeks ago in an editorial to register his admiration at the sustained level of quality Universal has maintained this year?

About the only thing I can think of that would make 1923 any more complete than 1922 would be a good fight.

Gosh, it has been years since I had a regular two-fisted fight—something that I could really scorch and sizzle about in those "Straight from the Shoulder" talks.

If you don't provide me with any better subject for argument I'll have to present my own by exposing those bunk Broadway showings and near-first-runs. I can tackle that now without having them say I'm jealous—my pictures lick that argument this year, don't they?

Carl Laemmle of Universal Company

Dear Santa:

Send me another Jimmy Grainger.

That would be enough for any good film company to get for Xmas—and I'm no hog. So I won't ask for anything else.

Any other Xmas I might have asked you for a few good pictures, but if you've been reading my ads and the Associated Press stuff Dietz and Bonns put over you know that this year I'm going to be there with all the good pictures I need. Wouldn't I have an awful nerve to ask for pictures when I have such whales as "The Stranger's Banquet," "The Christian" and "Ben Hur" coming along?

Still, if you insist, and really must give me something else you might drop Valentino in my Holeproof to star in "Ben Hur."

And please, Santa, PLEASE don't drop Sammy Goldwyn in my stocking. Give Sammy a nice little company of his own to play with. He's a good boy but we have more fun playing in our

F. J. GODSOL.

Dear Santa:

I have a hunch that it was Santa Claus that sent Louis B. Mayer to me a few months ago with Fred Niblo and Reginald Barker, so I don't suppose I can count on you to pay me another visit because it's Christmas.

But I'm going to hang my stocking up, anyway. I always hope for the best.

And they say I'm a pretty lucky boy.

Maybe you'll slip me another "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

But don't start another war just to give me a pig picture, Santa, I don't as kthat much.

If you want to be real good and crown a few years good work with glory maybe you can convince that partner of mine, Nick Schenck, that the Talmadge girls and Buster Keaton wouldn't look bad under the Metro banner.

In a year or so, huh?

E W Hammons of Educational Exchanges

Dear Santa:

The first Xmas I was in this business, Santa, I asked you to fill my stocking with plenty of good short subjects.

You came across.

The next Xmas I asked you to give me my own distributing machine so that I could follow up good short subjects with the right service.

You came across.

Xmas after that I asked you to send me a few thousand exhibitors who would be willing to pay real money for good short subjects.

You are coming across—with more and more every day. And you've even thrown in a lot of showmen with sense enough to feature good short subjects, beg pardon, my short subjects, in their advertising.

I'll say you're good.

I haven't the nerve to ask for any more. Unless you have an extra large, super-proportioned case to hold my growing collection of golf cups.

E. W. Hammons

Dear Santa:

I suppose every other letter you are getting, Santa, says "please send me this," and "please send me that."

Well, if the shock isn't too much for you I'm just going to tell you some things that I DON'T WANT YOU TO SEND ME.

First of all, don't send me any stars!

I got a lot of stars from you in my stocking every past Xmas and gave them a lot of attention, but when the year was all over I found it was "My Wild Irish Rose," "Black Beauty," "Dead Men Tell No Tales" and pictures like that that got me the money.

The stars are the bunk. I'm after good stories and box-office angles this year more than ever.

Also—don't send me any exhibitor deposit money. I don't need the money. I don't need a deposit if the exhibitor's name on a contract means anything, and I don't want the contract if it doesn't mean business. So there you are.

Albert E Smith of Vitagraph Company

Albert E. Smith

Hiram Abrams of United Artists

Dear Santa:

All I want for Xmas is an A. B. C. in every big first-run city in the country.

I don't mean a set of alphabet blocks, but booking combinations that will give the average exhibitor a chance to show the real big stuff (adv. for me) and give the producer a chance to get the money he should.

I don't like to be mean around Xmas time, but as far as I am concerned there are a lot of circuits and some one man towns that you can forget if you are extra busy and the reindeers grow tired.

I don't suppose I can expect many Xmas presents when I am already set to open the year with two royal flushes like "Robin Hood" and "Tess of the Storm Country."

But if you want to make the new year three hundred and sixty-five Xmas days for United Artists just slip the first Chaplin in my stocking. Oh, boy!

Hiram Abrams

Dear Santa:

Just because this is our first Xmas don't send us a lot of baby toys. American Releasing is a pretty lusty one year old infant and I don't want to give it any lolly-pops—it's only playing with he-man's size toys.

I guess you don't need to be told that after looking over the quantity of top-notch product we hit them with this Fall.

So the best thing you can do, Santa, is to imagine you are calling on me back in the old Paramount days—give me the same line of presents, only don't get the addresses mixed.

Just send me about forty like "Timothy's Quest" for the balance of this year and fifty more to carry next year's September to December period. What do you think of a twelve month baby getting one of its offerings right up there in the select "Big Ten" of the year?

Some baby, eh?

Ohio Censors Bar Love-Making Scenes from Films

LOVE-MAKING scenes, involving the love triangle, will be barred in the future by the Ohio Film Censors. Such an announcement was made on December 15, at Columbus, Ohio, by Vernon Riegel, director of education, and head of the censor board. This is one of the most drastic policies put in operation by the board, and is one of part of a general policy for love-making scenes. Riegel said:

"We shall be as liberal in our censorship in general, as is consistent with the proper performance of official duty, but there will be strict censorship of pictures involving love-making in the future."

If Riegel's words are carried out to the letter, it means that most every motion picture comedy or drama will feel the knife, for the great majority of films contains love-making.

This new order comes on the heels of action of the censors in rejecting several important pictures in which thousands of dollars have been invested. The two latest pictures to be rejected are Gloria Swanson in "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew" and Elsie Ferguson in "Outcast." It is possible the latter will be passed with eliminations. Dorothy Dalton in "The Siren Call" was recently passed after considerable reconstruction.

During the last six months, or since the row which resulted in Mrs. Evelyn Snow resigning, and Riegel taking charge, the following pictures have been rejected:

"The Alibi," "The Bootlegger's Daughter," "Father Tom," "Foolish Wives" (second time), "Heedless Moths," "Here Come the Girls," "Hypocrites," "The Knife," "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," "The Law and The Woman," "The Love Slave," three chapters of "The Leather Pushers," "The Red Peacock," "The Storm Girl," "Striking Models," "The Weak-End Party," and "Whose Baby?"

It is possible that the new order by Riegel has some political significance, because a new governor goes into office January 1, 1923. The new governor, A. V. Donahey, is a democrat, while the present executive, Gov. Davis, is a republican. Riegel is a democrat, one of the very few held over when Davis took office.

"Just Like a Woman," First Picture of New Organization

By MARY KELLY

IN the name of a new picture corporation known as G. H. Haskins Productions, the "G" is for Grace. This should be a practical tip when you consider the title of the forthcoming picture, "Just Like a Woman." For the producer, author and director is a woman, and in her first picture she offers her personal conception of a modern girl. "Just Like a Woman" will be released by Hodkinson in February.

Grace Haskins is a new figure among producers. The last five of her twenty-three years have been spent in gaining a practical knowledge of the details of picture making. First, as secretary to Madeleine Travers and subsequently as an assistant in the editing and cutting departments of various companies, she studied the work from different angles.

"My observations while engaged in the various studios, convinced me that a large amount of expense is not necessary to make an attractive production. I set about my own production with a definite rule—economy. I looked over some of the used sets in the big studios and decided that with a little reconstruction, re-tinting and imagination it would be possible to transform them into something that would look like new. Since my picture has been completed, it has been appraised by old-timers in the industry. I have had the great satisfaction of having one of the best judges tell me that 'Just Like a Woman' has the appearance of costing two and one-half times what it did actually cost."

To inspire public interest in the picture, Miss Haskins is announcing a contest in which she will offer $500 to the one who can write the best story on the title, "Just Like a Woman.' This is open to everyone.

In view of the nature of this contest, she is not giving a detailed synopsis of the story of her picture. She is endeavoring to obtain a number of individual opinions on the subject before she discloses her own. The picture is a comedy drama, light in motive, and featuring Marguerite de la Motte.

Boston Theatres Robbed

Yeggs Break Into Four and Make Their Escape

Yuletide yeggs, seeking a little coin to tide them over the holiday season, paid their respects during the past week to several moving picture theatres in Boston and the vicinity, forcing open strong boxes in a half dozen different picture houses and making good their escape with several hundred dollars in booty. It appears quite probable that the midnight marauders entered the several cities and departed thence on night freight trains, as the picture houses, for the most part, were located near the railroad tracks.

The theatres which were robbed were the Dudley, Washington street, Boston; the Theatre Comique, Munroe street, Lynn; the Strand, Green street, Newburyport; the Palace, Broadway and Modern Theatres, Lawrence, and the Plaza at Salem.

With Warner Brothers

Watt L. Parker, for the past four years connected with the Select Pictures Corporation, most recently as advertising manager, has resigned to accept the position of advertising manager of Warner Brothers, with offices at No. 1600 Broadway, New York City. He assumed his new duties Tuesday, December 26.

Mrs. Goldman Dies

News of the sudden death of Mrs. Montague Goldman, wife of manager of the department of distribution of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of London, was received in New York by cable December 19.

Had It Wrong

A statement to the effect that the films of certain motion picture companies, members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, had recently been barred from Mexico was printed, in error, in Moving Picture World's issue of December 23.

The companies named were Metro Pictures Corp., Warner Bros., Educational Film Exchanges, Select Pictures Corp., Goldwyn Pictures Corp., Vitagraph, Inc., and Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

It develops, however, that instead of being barred from Mexico recently, the facts of the case were that the embargo against them which had been made effective last April, was recently lifted.

Fighting Music Tax

F. J. Rembusch Also Leading Movement for Lower Film Rentals

F. J. Rembusch, the Indianapolis exhibitor, on his arrival in New York this week announced that he was leading an exhibitor movement to defeat the music tax and lower the film rentals. He condemned certain attorneys who had informed him that the music tax fight was useless and retaliated by "firing them and getting new counsel which is prepared to carry on a fight that is certain to eliminate this obnoxious tax."

His letter to Will Hays on the high rentals follows:

"When the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors formed a new company with yourself as president, the theatre owners rather believed that your purposes were mainly to bring more wholesome pictures on the market, and in this work you have well succeeded. We also hoped that your organization would work for the greater good of all branches of the industry as you promised to co-operate with theatre owners in every way possible.

"We anticipated that more equitable trade relations would result between your clients and the theatre owner and that an era of economy would result so that prices for pictures would recede so as to conform more nearly to our box office results, but our experience has been rather the opposite.

"Since the formation of your company picture prices have increased at a gradual and alarming rate, while the value of picture product has not increased, and our box office receipts have decreased. Furthermore, some of your companies have lately instituted other hardships, such as 'Block Sales,' which compels us to buy and book blocks of pictures at advanced prices, which are unreleased and unfinished, and the quality of which is unknown, instead of selecting only those pictures which we wish to buy. We are also denied the right to cancel, so necessary to our financial success and the satisfaction of our patrons, by the selection of suitable pictures for each particular locality.

"But above all, through the report system the film companies are giving each other information on their sales to us that enables producers and distributors to extract every dollar possible from the theatre owner. This report system is functioning through the weekly meetings of film salesmen and exchange managers, both in local districts and the sales heads in New York. This report system on sales is so accurate and highly organized that your companies know almost to a cent how much can be charged to the theatre owner for pictures and they invariably take it all. If the film companies owned our theatres they could not make greater profits. The film companies are receiving every dollar and more over our regular expenses for service and this is unfair.

"The theatre owner is operating either at a loss or barely paying expenses. All this I have verified in my own case and from other theatre owners and from information secured from the Federal Trade Commission, who are investigating this industry. We find that these conditions prevail everywhere in America. The public are also vitally interested in this question because of the high admission prices which we are obliged to charge.

"The producers are organized and the theatre owners are disorganized and you are in a very strategic position as sellers of pictures against theatre owners as buyers of pictures. A careful analysis of the situation brings us to the conclusion that whether unintentionally or surreptitiously your organization is dominating prices and trade conditions and really functioning as a highly organized picture monopoly. As such we must object to your organization and make every effort to protect ourselves. I am bringing this to your notice because I am absolutely sure that you, if you were aware of this condition, would use every means to correct it.

"I originated the 'Big Man Idea' when I proposed Mr. Taft to direct the theatre owners, some three years ago, and I believe the idea is good if properly directed. However, it seems to make a difference what branch has the big man, and we have no big man to champion our side of the case. I believe that you have no desire to work a hardship on the theatre owner, through the fact that we are unorganized and your clients are highly organized. I shall be very glad to hear your side of the question, and as the question is one affecting all theatre owners you can readily reply openly."

"P. S. From very accurate information on hand we know that the general cost of production has decreased. Inasmuch that the cost of film service has increased we naturally believe the film producers are making tremendous profits.

"If we are wrong in this statement then it is high time for producers to institute a system of economy and get away from the extravagant production costs.

"The fact that producers are able to continue to buy theatres and wage a double monopoly is also significant that they are getting the rewards that should be more fairly divided."

Christmas Greeting

CHRISTMAS of 1922 brings to me, and I am sure it brings to everyone in the motion picture industry, a sense of joy born of the certain realization that we are working with each other in a great service to Mankind.

The motion picture has carried the silent call for virtue, honesty, ambition, patriotism, hope, love of country, and of home to audiences speaking twenty different languages, but all understanding the universal language of pictures; it has brought to narrow lives a knowledge of the wide, wide world; it has clothed the empty existence of far-off hamlets with joy; it has lifted listless laboring folk till they have walked the peaks of romance and adventure like their own Main street, with laughing lips and healthy hearts; it has been the benefactor of uncounted millions.

To the men and women who are actually doing this great service of Motion Pictures I would voice the sincerest appreciation.

To every one in the industry I send Christmas greetings, and the earnest hope that their happiness may be as great as is my gratitude for their splendid co-operation.

Paramount Pep Club to Furnish Dinners and Toys for Children

Miss F. V. McGovern, chairman of the Educational and Welfare Committee of the Paramount Pep Club, has put her original idea of playing Santa to the poor families of New York into rapid action by obtaining from club members the names of unfortunate families whom the club will make happy on Christmas Day.

The poor children are to receive toys of every description as well as all kinds of eatables, such as turkeys, candy and dainties, canned goods, etc. Baskets will be made up by volunteers from among the club members.

There will be more than four hundred families in Greater New York that will receive from the Pep Club a substantial Christmas dinner.

Suit Discontinued

Action Over Alleged Stock Manipulation Now Out of Court

Justice George V. Mullen of the N. Y. Supreme Court has signed an order discontinuing the suit brought by the Triangle Film Corporation against Harry E. Aitken, Roy E. Aitken, Hyman Winnik and Joseph Simmonds.

The action was one of several that had been brought in the N. Y. Supreme Court over alleged manipulation of the stock of the Triangle corporation while defendants were officers and directors, and controlling factors especially the Aitkens in the Triangle corporation. It involved transactions on the part of the defendants acting for Triangle with other concerns including the Western Import Company, which Triangle alleged caused great losses to the Triangle Film Corporation.

"You Know Me, Al" Says Lee Moran

NEWSPAPER circles showed considerable interest this week when it became known that Ring Lardner, the well known humorist, had decided to enter the sphere of motion picture comedy with his celebrated baseball characters. Lee Moran is the fortunate comedian who has been selected as the ideal prototype of "Lefty" Keefe.

Lardner has come to the front with startling rapidity in the past five years and at present commands an unusual following in the magazine and newspaper fields. His characters have recently been introduced in cartoons and are already appearing in over a hundred newspapers.

Lee Moran has been a Universal comedy star for years but it is reported that the Lardner subjects are destined for distribution through other channels, the film rights being controlled by Moran and a newly formed producing unit.

Two Promotions

John P. Goring, the first man hired by Claud Saunders when the Paramount exploitation department was launched three and a half years ago, has been promoted to the staff of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres where he will have an executive position For the last year he has been exploiteer in the Los Angeles' exchange.

Claud Saunders also announces the appointment of Arthur G. Pickett to fill the Los Angeles' post vacated by Goring. Pickett was publicity manager for the Rickard & Nace string in Phoenix, Arizona.

Thomas Ince Predicts Big Boom for Picture Industry

THOMAS H. INCE, whose latest feature, "The Hottentot," will be released by First National Christmas Day, believes that the picture industry is in for a boom that will last. In an editorial in the Ince publication, "The Silver Sheet," edited on the coast by Arthur MacLennan, Mr. Ince writes: "There have been booms in our industry, but just as the boom days of other industries have slumped into days of lessened popularity so have our periods of the unnatural growth fallen away—we had not built a firm foundation and our periods of hectic prosperity could not endure.

"But our day of enduring stabliziation is here. This season will see the screen permanently established!

"I am not concerned with the pessimistic reports of 'picture-goers' indifference'—'poor productions'—'nothing new in pictures'—'no new faces'—'necessity for mixed programs,' or any one of the countless phrases that are being uttered by individuals who do not appreciate the strides we have made in a few years.

"Such unintelligent mutterings are not consistent with the evidences to the contrary that are everywhere throughout the industry.

"Would business men of proved judgment such as Balaban & Katz launch such a house as the magnificent 'Chicago' theatre in the face of a possible waning popularity? And what of Colonel Fred Levy's new house, 'The Kentucky,' at Lexington—the 'Melba' in Dallas—John Kunsky's new Detroit Theatre — Sid• Grauman's 'Hollywood' — Gene Roth's 'Granada' in San Francisco—the splendid 'Eastman' in Rochester?

"And throughout America and the civilized world where American-produced pictures are being shown countless theatres have been launched during the past few months—all dedicated to the exhibition of motion pictures.

"Out of the general chaos in the motion picture industry immediately following the war—with its under-production and later its over-production—came a steady growth for our Art-Industry toward a permanent foundation. And I firmly believe this enduring foundation is now established.

"Never before have we had as many big splendid productions from American producers as are available in this season. Each producer seems determined to give the best that it is possible for his organization to achieve, whether it be spectacle, big drama, program picture or comedy.

"There is no need today for any individual connected in any way with the motion picture industry to make apology for a lack ing booked this season, and there will be more next year. This situation, alone, is answer sufficient to any mutterings concerning the one medium of expression that today entertains and educates millions throughout the civilized world.

"We will have pessimists within and without our industry—we may have censors or arbiters, for one kind or another, but the screen is established.

"My faithful hope of twelve years ago is my certain knowledge of today."

Better and More Varied Films for Xmas Season

By ELMER PEARSON
General Manager Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE motion picture industry deserves a Christmas present this year, and there are many signs that Santa Claus hasn't overlooked that fact. The present is arriving on the installmant plan, in the shape of better quality and more varied production, with attendance stimulated accordingly. That the desired effect should follow so closely on the cause is sufficient warrant for our settled confidence in the future, and for a continuance of our efforts to supply the public with the most attractive examples of screen entertainment.

In claiming its share of credit for bringing about these improved conditions, Pathe is only reflecting the spirit of testimonials received from both exhibitors and patrons throughout the length and breadth of the land. In the field of comedy alone our efforts have set several new standards of the highest exhibitor value both present and prospective.

The new feature length comedies of Harold Lloyd are acknowledged to be at once the best and the most popular ever given to the picture-loving public. They establish Lloyd as the peer of the greatest living comedy genius, and in comedy creations which compare favorably in form and human quality with the best popular examples written for the stage. It has been noted that "Grandma's Boy" and "Dr. Jack" are doing more than any recent motion picture productions of any type to influence a better class and more general patronage of the screen. And Lloyd has only just begun this advanced stage of his extraordinary career.

In the too long neglected field of two-reel comedies we have started a consistent line of development which has met with hearty public encouragement. This is especially true respecting the outtput of two producing units at the Hal Roach Studios. It is our purpose to continue the development of the comedy field.

Exhibitors and the public are coming to recognize the short subject at its true worth. Along this line lies the biggest development of the motion picture industry. Whether it proceeds quickly or slowly depends largely upon the exhibitor. The moment he realizes the necessity of making a proper and substantial price distinction between good short subjects and mere fillers, attractive producer profits will result in tremendous improvement of product.

Total 110 Days on Loew Circuit

Prominent in the news of "Dr. Jack" bookings is Pathe's interesting statement of a happy program solution connected with showings of the Harold Lloyd comedy feature under contracts just made with the Loew Circuit.

Loew, the statement says, booked Will Rogers in the three reel screen drama of humor and pathos, "Fruits of Faith," to play all over the circuit with "Dr. Jack." The Rogers picture is announced for the Rialto for the week of December 31. Following this engagement, the Loew theatres will play the Lloyd-Rogers program uninterruptedly for a total of 110 days.

Fireless Film by 1925

If Bill Passes It's That or No Pictures Can Move

It certainly will be tough for exhibitors in 1925 if a bill introduced in the House by Representative Sanders, of Indiana, gets through their guard and becomes law.

They'll be prohibited from importing, mailing, shipping, sending, carrying and transportation of any film that is inflammable, likely to get hot and burst into a blaze, or, maybe, even get close enough to that state to sweat a little.

The definition of what may be considered an inflammable film is drastic. The pictures running now won't get within fifty miles of a railway or post office if the bill passes. They couldn't even be carried around in bomb-proof containers ten miles underground. The bill provides as a penalty a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year.

Newlan T. Miller, State Fire Marshall of Indiana, asked Mr. Sanders to introduce the bill—and there it is. Indiana legal talent has drawn up a brief showing that the bill would be constitutional if enacted into law.

Inventors are said to be burning the midnight oil to perfect a transparent steel tape on which the photographed story can be etched or otherwise impressed in a manner fully meeting every exigency of the occasion; of course, nothing has been said in the bill as to whether the new restrictions will decrease film rentals or otherwise.

Legislation to prohibit the interstate transportation of film that can burn, flare, flame or otherwise cause heat or illumination has also been asked of Congress by the executive council of the Fire Marshalls' Association of North America. A memorial embodying the resolution was introduced into Congress by Representative Fuller, of Illinois.

Phil Masi Dies

Phil Masi, who has assisted Robert Vignola, Maurice Tourneur, George Archainbaud and Edwin Carewe in some of their biggest screen plays, died December 10 after an illness of one week. During his career in pictures Masi was associated with such stars as Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson, Marion Davies, Clara Kimball Young and House Peters.

Federal Support Pledged by Harding to Hays' Plan

President Indorses Development of Pedagogic Pictures

UNQUALIFIED approval of the plans of Will H. Hays, working with the National Education Association, to develop pedagogic pictures for the classroom is expressed this week in a letter from President Warren G. Harding to the president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. In which President Harding pledges the support of the federal government to the movement:

My Dear Mr. Hays:

Your most interesting letter concerning the plans for co-operation between the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and the educational leadership of the country, is received and I am pleased, of course, to note this progress and to assure you of the co-operation of the Federal Department of Education. I am mindful, too, of the efforts being made by your association for the general betterment of pictures which is distinct contribution to the general good.

Your letter has prompted me to a little thinking-out-loud about the educational value and possibilities of the screen. Possibly in my inexperience and lack of technical information I shall sound extremely amateurish, so I apologize in advance for rushing in where wiser folks might fear to tread.

Your address to the National Educational Association has impressed me greatly; especially your conviction that the films represent an educational potentiality, despite that you are not quite sure how it is to be utilized. I have long been precisely of the same mind. Unquestionably, for the purpose of merely imparting information, the most effective approach to the mind is through the vision: "seeing is believing." Much of what we study rather mechanically and zestfully in youth and, therefore, rather futilely, might be made dramatically interesting if we could see it. Imagine how thrilling the study of geography would be if it meant actually touring the world, seeing countries, cities and peoples, and having the essential facts about them explained by qualified persons with the gift of being truly interesting!

Then imagine how inevitable would be the combination of studies in history and geography under such a plan! From my earliest thumbings of the Primary Geography and the Elements of History it has seemed to me that geography and history could not be taught properly in separate compartments. They naturally and inevitably belong to each other. Neither can be studied and assimilated properly without the other.

This notion of the fundamental oneness of these studies was, I think, impressed on almost everybody by the war. We were all compelled to be students of history and students of geography. We were made to realize how little we knew of either, and how absolutely necessary was a thorough understanding of both if we would truly understand the great things that were going on in the world.

It seems to me that the screen could be made an effective medium for illuminating our studies in history and geography. Next to studying geography by seeing the world, its people and its institutions, would be studying it with the aid of the moving picture. Next to studying history by the procedure of living through its epochs, its areas and its periods, would be that of seeing its actors and evolutions presented before our eyes.

These things, it has long seemed to me, might be accomplished by a proper use of the moving picture. I do not want to be understood as assuming that education can or ought to be made a mere pleasure, a titillation of the fancy, by making it too easy. I would not by any means turn the school room into a moving picture theatre and save the pupil from serious, hard, disciplining mental effort. On the other hand, I would use the picture as a means to enlist the pupil's interest in the real work that must be involved in acquiring any education worthy of the name.

Let me hasten to say that I have no formula for effecting a co-ordination of the printed page and the picture screen, in the process of education. I have some general ideas, however. I remember when I was quite young, somebody put into my hands a copy of Thackery's "Henry Esmond." I read it not merely as an absorbing interesting story but as a revelation of the life, manners and institutions of the early eighteenth century. I found myself hunting for books to illumine further the history of that period. I think the reading of that one novel did as much to give me a real interest in the study of history as any other experience of my boyhood years.

I do not know whether anybody has presented "Henry Esmond" in a screen drama. I do not even know whether, as a commercial proposition, it could be thus dramatized. I should think it could. Likewise I should think that if it were done in a series of reels, and if these, gradually unfolding the story, were interspersed with studies and lectures on the history of the period, it would constitute an ideal method not merely of imparting knowledge, but of inspiring a desire for more of it, to be gained through further reading and study.

Let me take another of my favorites among the historical novels. If we are to understand the present and attempt to conjecture the future of the world, we need to know a good deal about its backgrounds in the past. The Europe of the later middle ages, of the period just before and at the beginning of the Renaissance, would be wonderfully portrayed in a similar series of pictures dramatizing "The Cloister and the Hearth." I do not know whether anybody reads "The Cloister and the Hearth" any more, but I am sure that one family with which I am pretty well acquainted would be glad to patronize a combination of picture serials and really intelligent talks, with this story as the basis, and with the purpose of giving a real conception and understanding of the Europe of that epoch.

The other day there came into my hands a copy of Irving Bacheller's "In the Days of Poor Richard." You know what it is; an historical novel of the pre-revolutionary and revolutionary period in our country. I think the author perhaps overcrowded its pages in the attempt to introduce about all the great figures of those times. We saw King George III, as the incognito spectator of a duel on the outskirts of London; we were with Washington at the siege of Boston and during the campaigns in New York and New Jersey; we met Hamilton, and John Adams, and Benedict Arnold; we had a delightful picture of crossing the Atlantic in an old-time sailing ship; we saw the war between the Indians and the Whites in the great woods of what was then the Northwest; we listened to Mr. Adams' lectures on the political relations between the colonies and the mother country, and to General Washington's expressions of that wonderful, unswerving faith which he always maintained and which enabled him to lay the foundation of our republic.

Now, it seems to me such a book, not slavishly reproduced on the screen, but used rather as inspiration and general theme, might be made the basis of a most inspiring and illuminating treatment, for educational purposes, of the revolutionary period. I may confess that ever since I read Mr. Trevelyan's History of the American Revolution, I have wondered if some genius of the movies might not arise who could take Trevelyan's History, Paul Leicester Ford's "Janice Meredith," Parkman's Histories of the Indians, and, now, this Bacheller book and various others of the same sort, and prepare out of them a combined screen and lecture presentation of the dramatic things in our country's history. Its succeeding chapters, or reels, or whatever you moving picture people call them, could be interspersed with studies and lectures and made to produce a wonderful impression upon the student's mind of the events and their meanings.

It seems to me that I have read recently that somebody was movieizing Mr. Wells' "Outline of History." If I am mistaken I shall take the risk of saying, anyhow, that I think there must somewhere be a big enough genuis of the movies to accomplish this, and to make it an extremely useful work. Along with it I would like to see Mr. Van Loon's "Story of Mankind" handled in the same way. For the school room and the college, I would by no means confine the teaching of such subjects to the entertainment and incidental suggestion that the pictures would provide. I would supplement these with a great deal of very serious, very earnest, and perhaps to some people uninteresting study of books, maps and charts; with lectures and a carefully organized line of collateral reading.

If I have thus far confined myself to the possibilities of the screen in the study of geography and history, it is not because I doubt its usefulness in other directions. I cannot help believing that a properly directed corps of camera men might make a series of films, at, for example, the Bureau of Standards, which would be of the utmost assistance and inspiration in many scientific studies. That is just one suggestion; a score of others, more or less related, will readily enough occur to you. I suspect that a competent moving picture producer who chanced also to be a reasonably good amateur geologist would have no great difficulty devising a series of pictures that would wonderfully illuminate studies in that fascinating department of natural science. Again let me say, I would by no means eliminate the studying; I would at all times keep in mind that there cannot be real education without those efforts that train and discipline the mind and develop its powers of analysis and correlation.

Perhaps these rambling suggestions are without any value at all in connection with your efforts. Perhaps they will be rather amusing than useful; at any rate they represent the general notions of one who feels a real interest in the thing you are trying to do, and has a firm belief that somehow it can be done. I hope the co-operation of the moving picture people and the educators may find ways of producing the results which I know you have in mind.

Hays Gives Arbuckle Chance to Come Back; Protests Raised

WILL HAYS in allotting his Christmas presents did not overlook the unhappiest and most repentant man in the film industry. He injected the true Christmas spirit in his offerings by "forgiving and forgetting." He presented Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle with a real man's gift to a repentent sinner. He boldly challenged the public and announced he had "given Arbuckle a chance to make good." But he supplemented this announcement with the statement that this action did not constitute a reinstatement.

"The public will decide," he commented in Los Angeles late this week. "Mr. Arbuckle repents and has learned his lesson. He is entitled to a fighting chance. And permission to make the best of this chance is hereby given him. The public will give the verdict."

And that great jury—the public—is already deliberating. What the ultimate verdict will be time alone will decide. However, there was jubilation and condemnation. The clergy seemingly arose as a unit in opposing Hays' move. But that action did not come unexpectedly, for it was anticipated on the Coast that with Hays' announcement, would come attacks from the "reformers."

Jesse Lasky of Famous Players Corporation, on the Coast, issued a statement in which he said that that firm had no intentions of releasing any of the completed "Fatty" Arbuckle pictures that it has shelved since the Virginia Rappe incident. Joe Schenck, Fatty's pal, who has been caring for him since he was literally stripped of every cent he possessed in the world, is standing by the comedian, and will take advantage of Hays' proposition by giving Arbuckle a "fighting chance" and putting up the money to finance his productions.

The show world, in general, received Hays' announcement enthusiastically. There was not a single actor or actress in New York who did not rejoice with the comedian. But in other quarters opinion was divided. Representative officials of exhibitor organizations did not comment on the press reports, most of them preferring to wait. Others agreed with Hays that "any man is entitled to a fighting chance," but they did not care to be quoted or to make publicly known their identity.

Just what concern will release the proposed new Arbuckle films has not been made public, but one thing is certain and that is with Joe Schenck piloting him, Fatty will get a hearing, for Joe is the sort who finishes what he starts. However, as Will Hays announced, "the public will decide."

The first indication that forces other than producers and distributors may decide the fate of Fatty came on Thursday when the Federation of Women's Clubs for the Los Angeles district met and adopted a motion indorsing its previous stand taken shortly after the arrest of the comedian in San Francisco, in opposing his return to the screen.

Mr. Hays comment, prior to leaving Los Angeles for New York to spend his holidays with his family, said that Arbuckle had "gone straight" and promised to continue. The spirit of Christmas, he added was not the least factor in the decision.

Mayor Shanks of Indianapolis, and Mayor Lodge of Detroit, according to press despatches, ordered the chief of police of their respective cities not to allow Arbuckle films to be shown.

The Milwaukee Federation of Ministers also opposed the return of Arbuckle to the screen.

Just what the attitude is in other sections of the country was not clear at press time.

Cohen on Arbuckle Case

Telegrams Indicate "General Opposition" to Actor's Return to Screen

Sydney S. Cohen has issued the following statement:

"We at the national headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were much surprised to learn of Will H. Hays' move to reinstate Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle as a motion picture actor, as the same was revealed in the articles from Los Angeles in the newspapers today.

"As Theatre Owners, having the only direct contact with the public, we know of no new developments to change. the minds of the people on the Arbuckle situation. As the public alone constitute the judges of what should or should not appear on the screens, the American people will determine whether or not they want Arbuckle films. No act of any official can make up the public mind in this matter.

"Telegrams coming to the national office of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America indicate general opposition to the return of Arbuckle to the screen. We are now awaiting a more general expression of opinion in this relation, as the same is being obtained from the public by Theatre Owners in different states and districts."

Schnitzer Returns

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the Film Booking Offices of America, returned to the home office this week from a trip to the R-C studios in California. Mr. Schnitzer accompanied P. A. Powers, F. B. O. managing director, to the Coast on a tour of inspection. Mr. Powers will remain at the studios for the time being, and will line up productions for the next year's schedule for F. B. O.

Departments Moved

The advertising, art and publicity departments of Select Pictures Corporation, for the past year or so located in the Hooven Building, 117 W. 46th street, New York City, have been moved to the Select home offices on the fourteenth floor of 729 Seventh Avenue.

Los Angeles Is Logical Production Center, Says First National

THE executive committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., officially ended their Los Angeles meeting on Thursday, December 14, and President Robert Lieber, Secretary-Treasurer H. O. Schwalbe, General Manager Richard A. Rowland and Moe Mark have left for New York.

Messrs. A. H. Blank and E. V. Richards have returned to their respective homes in Des Moines and New Orleans. Sam Katz is remaining in Los Angeles for a few days in order to enjoy a short vacation.

Before disbanding the First National officials gave forth the following statement:

"We have carefully gone over the entire production situation in Los Angeles, both with respect to our company and others. We have satisfied ourselves that Los Angeles is the logical production center of the universe and we have decided that the majority of our pictures will be made in this city.

"A great many independent stars, directors and producers have submitted propositions to us, many of which are under serious consideration and a few of which have already been accepted.

"We have decided, however, that we will not make any statement of our new acquisitions until we return to our home office in New York.

"The outlook for the future of our company, both from a distributing and exhibition standpoint, is exceedingly bright. We have lined up for our 1923-24 season the greatest number of box office attractions ever assembled under one company's banner.

"We want every independent star, director and producer to know and appreciate that Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has been and always will be, principally a distributing and exhibiting company and will always be receptive to making contractorial relations for high class film productions."

Looking Backward—and Forward

By ROBERT VIGNOLA
Director of Vignola Productions

LOOKING back over the year just ended, I cannot help but feel prideful that I am a part of this tremendous influence known as the motion picture screen. Notwithstanding that we have been maligned by the yellow journals, dragged through the mire of vilification by certain ladies and gentlemen of constricted mentalities, and otherwise slammed, sloughed, and sledged, we have managed to keep our heads high, our hearts keen and progress.

The large number of unusually fine pictures that the year 1922 has given to the world give ample attestation of the inevitability of the screen and of its destiny. It has proven that it is too big to be kept down, too deeply intrenched in the hearts of the public to be destroyed or even halted in its advancement, only so long as we give our best. The future of the motion picture business depends upon every man and woman who is a part of it, however small that part may be. Nothing can stop it as long as we continue to do our utmost to raise its standards, and we need have no fear of outside influences as long as we have our faith. When one considers the adversities we have had to overcome and the exceptional pictures that have been produced in the past year one cannot help but feel proud of the industry as a whole.

The achievements of the past year having been so stupendous, the question naturally resolves itself: "How must farther can we go?" This is difficult to answer. No one can foresee with any degree of accuracy what the future will bring in the way of screen development. But at the same time one would be narrow-visioned indeed to say that we have reached anything like perfection or that there isn't room, and much room at that, for improvement. If the growth of the past year is any basis of prognostication, the year 1923 should see some forward strides in the screen. Just what they will be is hard to say, but the standards will be raised, that's certain, and fine though the pictures of 1922 have been, I hope the pictures of 1923 will be even finer. This is an industry where progress means life. We cannot stand still and point to the past. We must keep moving forward, ever forward, if we are to achieve our destiny.

Another thing which I hope the new year will bring is a basis of understanding between the producer, the distributor, and the exhibitor. It seems to me that the whole trouble is due to the fact that the other fellow's problems are not understood or appreciated. Lack of under standing or interest has built up a wall of suspicion and mistrust which is keeping these three elements of the industry from getting together. This year I hope this wall will be dissipated and that this triumvirate will patch up all existing differences for the good of the entire industry.

With the ills within the industry cured and with all the elements that compose it standing together shoulder to shoulder there is no reason why the coming year shouldn't see the antagonistic influences from without put to rout. Then and then only will the screen come into its own.

Modification of Five Per Cent. Tax Asked by M. P. P. D. A.

MODIFICATION of the regulations surrounding the administration of the five per cent. film rental tax were sought on December 15 by Siegfred Hartman, representing the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, who appeared before a board composed of six assistant solicitors of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to protest against the manner in which this tax was assessed from the time of its inception to its repeal on January 1, last.

Double Taxation

Mr. Hartman told the board that the methods followed by the bureau were, in effect, double taxation, in that frequently the same film paid two or more rental taxes. He declared that it was not the intention of Congress to permit double taxation when the revenue laws were passed, nor, in ordinary instances, is it the policy of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to permit double taxation. In substantiation of this contention he pointed out that the bureau itself, in the case of many other commodities, has made decisions which would prevent double taxation.

Under the regulations of the bureau the presumption is that any transaction between a producer and a distributor for films is primarily leases for exhibition, and that, therefore, all such transactions are subject to the tax. Mr. Hartman pointed out, however, that in many instances this is not really the case. A producer may turn out a picture, he said, and sell it to some other company for distribution; that company in turn may make leases to other persons, and those other persons may be the ones who really place the films in the theatres for exhibition. Under the regulations of the bureau the sale between the producer and the first distributor is taxed, and then subsequent contracts made by that distributor are also taxed. This same applies to the State rights method of distribution. It was urged that the regulations of the bureau should be so changed as to relieve from taxation the contracts made between a producer and a distributor where the distributor is not, in fact, the distributor who places the films in theatres for exhibition.

The Board of Solicitors has taken the case under advisement and will make their decision known to Mr. Hartman and his principals within a few days.

To Show Relativity Film

Many Men of Science Will Attend Screening by Riesenfeld

The news that Hugo Riesenfeld will give the premiere theatre presentation of the Einstein Theory of Relativity early next month at the Rivoli and Rialto is creating daily a great interest in scientific and educational circles.

Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee, has taken such an interest in the picture that it asked the chairman of its executive committee, William H. Baldwin, to secure it for presentation in that city. Mr. Baldwin, whose office is in New York, visited Nashville recently in the course of his activities, and found a great interest in the Einstein film manifested in the university, other educational institutions as well as among civic organizations, and was commissioned to secure the film.

Many local institutions of learning and many of the most noted scientists and engineers of the East have expressed a great interest in Mr. Riesenfeld's venture, and have accepted his invitation to attend the special showing before its public premiere.

The six associates of Prof. Einstein who were responsible for the production of the film are: Prof. S. F. Nicolai, Prof. H. W. Kornblum, Prof. C. Bueck, Prof. C. Santa, Prof. Rudolf Lammel and Dr. Herman Beck. Dr. Korblum lectured with the film at three performances in Berlin, there being no reading text in the production, the picture being used as a sort of gigantic, animated blackboard.

Misleading Reissue Charged

Federal Trade Commission Complains Against Signet Films

The retitling of an old film and its distribution without adequate indication of the fact that it is not a new picture is made the basis of a complaint which has just been issued by the Federal Trade Commission against Signet Films, Inc., of New York.

The complaint alleges that some time in 1915, the Intermotion Film Corporation produced a photoplay entitled "The Decoy," which was released through the Mutual Film Exchange for a number of months and was widely distributed by that exchange under that title. In 1920, the negative film of this photoplay was purchased for the respondent by one Ness Nagem, at that time secretary and treasurer of Signet Films, and on or about November 1, 1920, it is charged that Signet Films began the distribution of positive prints of the photoplay to exhibitors throughout the several states under the title of "The Faithless Sex" without disclosing to the exhibitors that the film was a reproduction and reissue of the old photoplay, "The Decoy." It is alleged that the advertising which accompanied the film was worded and designed in a manner calculated to mislead the theatre-going public into the belief that the photoplay was a new or different photoplay. This, it is charged in the complaint, was to the prejudice of the public and of the respondent's competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission act.

The respondent has been given 30 days in which to file with the Commission an answer in writing to the charges in the complaint.

Industry Cases Pending

Important Matters Before Federal Trade Commission

Several cases of considerable interest to the moving picture industry were pending before the Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., at the close of the fiscal year on June 30, last, according to the annual report just submitted to the President.

Among the cases then pending was that against the Sanger Amusement Company, in which it was charged with stifling and suppressing competition.

One of the most important cases ever taken up by the commission was pending at the end of the year, that against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Stanley Company of America, Stanley Booking Corporation, Black New England Theatres, Inc., Sanger Amusement Company, Southern Enterprises, Inc., Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Jules Mastbaum, Alfred S. Black, Stephen A. Lynch, Ernest V. Richards, Jr., in which charges of unfair methods of competition were made in that the respondents Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Adolph Zukor, and Jesse L. Lasky had combined and conspired to secure control of and monopolize the motion picture industry, and to restrain, restrict and suppress competition.

Another case, of indirect interest to the industry, was that against the Chamber of Commerce of Missoula and its officers, directors and members, and the Northwest Theatres Company, in which it is charged that unfair methods of competition were resorted to.

Exhibitors Put Up Fight

Industry Battles Against Censorship Before Missouri Constitutional Convention

Final efforts of the motion picture industry to gain immunity from the possibility of censorship legislation in Missouri by specific prohibition in the proposed new Constitution will be made during the coming week at Jefferson City, the state capital.

The Constitutional Convention is sitting as a committee of the whole, and is considering various matters. Former Congressman M. E. Benton is chairman of the committee.

The friends of the screen, led by L. M. Henson, of Poplar Bluff, and Paul S. Conwell, of Kansas City, are endeavoring to have Section 14 of the bill, relating to free speech, changed to include freedom of the screen as well as a free press. The committee has recommended that the section be permitted to stand as it is in the present Constitution. That does not embrace the screen, having been written in 1876, long before motion pictures were dreamed of.

Reported to Be Excellent

New Raw Positive Film Makes Its Appearance Here

A new raw positive film that advance reports say is an equal of the best on the market, is being imported from Italy. It is manufactured by Fabbrica Italiana Lamine Milano, which the name of its factory in Ferrania, near Genoa. The plant is said to be equipped with the most modern facilities.

Louis Berizzi, vice-president of the Italian Discount and Trust Co., New York City, is president of the Commercial Fibre Co. of America, Inc., sole distributors of F. I. L. M. in the United States. G. Zezza is manager of the raw film department of the Commercial Fibre Co. John A. Kent is handling the sales.

Graham Tells of Growth of Paramount's English Business

JOHN CECIL GRAHAM, managing director of the Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., and Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., the British Paramount organizations, accompanied by Mrs. Graham and their daughter, Dorothy, is in New York on his annual visit to the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Graham will remain in New York until the first of the year for a series of conferences with E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department, regarding distribution plans for Paramount pictures in Europe during the coming year.

As on other occasions in the last few years Mr. Graham has returned to the United States with the greatest praise for the development of the motion picture industry in Europe and especially in Great Britain. The next few years, in his opinion, promise to bring still greater growth and prosperity for the industry in Great Britain.

"The outstanding feature of the motion picture industry in Great Britain during the last twelve months has been the reduction in the length of time between the American and British release dates," said Mr. Graham. "The state of affairs which has existed since the war has steadily improved under the operations of the law of supply and demand and during the coming year we will be able to bring our schedule within from six to eight months of the release date in this country. When one recalls that this difference in schedules was often from one to two years for a period of several years one can begin to appreciate the changes that have taken place abroad.

"In compliance with the requests made by some of the first run houses we made plans some weeks ago for the immediate release of four Paramount productions, 'The Young Diana,' 'Bought and Paid For,' 'The Good Provider' and 'Saturday Night.' These pictures have been greeted with the greatest enthusiasm and interest and are duplicating their success in America. 'Blood and Sand' also was shown in the Scala Theatre to large crowds despite the fact that during the run London was experiencing one of its worst fogs of the year.

"The British showmen are showing a constantly increasing interest in exploitation.

"In France we held the first sales convention of our organization there at the same time as the Paramount gathering in Los Angeles. Sales representatives from all of the French branches met in Paris to discuss plans for the releasing year and to make preparations to meet the increasing demands for Paramount pictures. Paramount's French business has shown most satisfactory gains during the first year of the organization and the coming year should witness still greater growth. Preparations have been completed for extensive exploitation of Paramount pictures in Belgium, Switzerland, Egypt and Morocco during the coming year."

Fox, Goldwyn, Universal and Vitagraph Going Smoothly

FOX, Goldwyn, Universal and Vitagraph are getting under way in the new exchange building at New Jersey avenue and K street, Washington, D. C. Construction of this building was recently completed and the film companies moved in as soon as possible. None of the companies named have completed the outfitting of their quarters but have made excellent progress in getting their offices in shape to handle their business in an efficient manner.

All of the exchanges are so situated that practically all of the offices and workrooms are brightly illuminated by daylight. Supplementing the natural light is an extensive system of electric illumination. The building is as near fireproof as human ingenuity can make it.

One feature is the all-steel adjustable paper racks with which each exchange is supplied. Another feature is the driveway which runs on two sides of the building and which, with the two streets, makes a complete circle around which the mail and express trucks can go to the rear entrances to the exchanges to collect and deliver shipments of films.

Each of the four exchanges has features of its own to fit peculiar needs or the ideas of its occupants. For instance, in the Universal exchange additional precautions have been taken to prevent fires in the shipping and examination rooms.

Taking the several exchanges alphabetically, the first one is that of the Fox Film Corporation, presided over by George A. Roberts, assisted by J. Dermody. It is the largest of them all, both floors of the building, with frontage on both New Jersey Avenue and K Street, is occupied by it. As one enters this exchange he finds himself in the exhibitors' reception room where there are chairs and tables for the use of visitors. On either side of this reception room are the offices.

Next comes the Goldwyn exchange, located on the second floor at the other end of the block. This exchange is presided over by Walter J. Price. It is equipped throughout with mahogany furniture. Particular attention has been paid to the workrooms. Mr. Price had the wall locations changed in order to obtain a better lay-out and everything is so arranged as to make for the greatest efficiency.

Quartered on the first floor of the section occupied by Goldwyn is located the exchange of the Universal Pictures Corporation. The Washington branch manager is Harry S. Brown, who came recently from Cleveland. Furniture and fittings are of golden and quartered oak and very attractive. The general layout of this exchange is similar to that of the others. It has its two vaults constructed in conformity with the new fire regulations, the projection room and operators' booth, with storage space beneath the latter for film cans and cases.

The fourth-named exchange is that of the Vitagraph Film Corporation—of which Eugene Wilson, one of the deans of the local industry, is manager. It is already running like clock-work, and is handling its business expeditiously.

Judge Lindsey Denounces Censorship as Un-American

CENSORSHIP of moving pictures is attracting more attention from public organizations in Ohio than ever before. This is no doubt, because the newspapers have been condemning the idea with increasing vigor day by day. In Cleveland within the last month, there have been more than a dozen meetings of organizations where film censorship was discussed, and in half of these speakers from other centers have denounced it.

The Chamber of Commerce, with a big audience present, listened to J. D. McGuire, of the National Board of Review, tell about how it works in Ohio and Pennsylvania. His talk was illustrated by pictures which had been barred from these states. He was immediately invited, and accepted, to another meeting which was arranged two weeks later by the Cleveland Cinema Club.

Judge Ben Lindsey, in speaking before the Cleveland Ad Club, took occasion to tell what he thinks of film censorship, by denouncing it as un-American. He said:

"There is a disposition in the country today toward a dangerous kind of paternalism. The tendency is to let the state do too many things for the individual, to prepare the path for the youth, when we should prepare the youth for the path.

"For this reason I am opposed to movie censorship. It promotes intolerance. Homes, schools and churches have failed with the modern youth, and they are seeking false remedies for their failure, but such things as censorship, instead of being remedies, are absurdities."

Senator James J. Walker, of New York, addressed a large gathering at the City Club, Saturday, December 16. His subject was "Censorship—100 Per Cent. Un-American." This address was an answer to one made last spring to the City Club by Mrs. W. H. Sharp, a member of the Ohio Censor Board.

Crowds Greet Opening of New Schenectady Theatre

REPRESENTING an investment of more than $500,000, and embodying the last word in construction and equipment, the State Theatre, of Schenectady, N. Y., the latest link in the chain of theatres operated by the Mark Strand Company, of New York, was opened last Saturday night under ideal conditions. Lieutenant-Governor-elect George R. Lunn, and many other notables in the political, theatrical and civic life of the state, were present. From a theatrical standpoint, the opening of the new house was of great importance, attracting exhibitors and others associated with the business, from all parts of the state.

Saturday night's opening was by invitation only. Long before the appointed hour, crowds began to assemble in the lobby of the theatre. Following an organ recital, beginning at 7.30 o'clock, and lasting for an hour, during which time the house rapidly filled, there was a short overture, preceding a program of entertainment arranged by Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Strand. Edwin O. Weinberg is managing-director of the house.

The entrance to the theatre is through a long marble lobby which was filled with many floral tributes for the opening. These included floral horseshoes from the First National and the F. B. O. and from Joseph Field, as well as magnificent baskets of flowers from the Albany Film Board of Trade, the Associated Exhibitors, Warner Brothers, and others. The theatre has a seating capacity of about 2,200. The program of the evening was made up of a music-film entitled the "Arabian Duct," a Topical Review, which included a choice bit from Howe's Gems of American Scenery, a solo by Miss Eldora Stanford, a personal appearance on the part of Wesley Barry, who made a short speech, a comedy entitled "Fresh Fish" and the feature of the evening, "Grandma's Boy."

St. Louis Theatre Owners to Join Distributing Company

A NUMBER of the smaller picture houses of St. Louis and vicinity are expected to purchase stock in the $5,000,000 Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation launched in Chicago December 13 by Sidney Cohen and his associates.

Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and Fred Wehrenberg, vice president of the league, attended the Chicago meeting and pledged themselves to come in. Mogler owns three houses, the Mogler, Excello and Bremen, while Wehrenberg's houses are the Cherokee and Melba. Wehrenberg is also president of the Exhibitors' Service Exchange, distributors, which is owned by the proprietors of twenty-seven theatres.

There is a possibility that the St. Louis exhibitors' distributing organization will be taken over by the new national body. An organizer will come to St. Louis within the next few days to inform members of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the aims and purposes of the new company, and to interest them in the sale of stock.

Wehrenberg and Mogler are very enthusiastic about the new organization. They say that while a general distribution of pictures will not be attempted before September, 1923, it is possible that some outstanding features may be obtained in the meantime.

Mogler said that conditions are such at present that it is impossible for outlying theatres in large cities to pay the prices demanded by big producers for pictures and show at the present admission prices.

Stereoscopic Pictures

Are to be Seen Upon Screen With Aid of Televiev Device

After two years' experimentation, Laurens Hammond, a young Cornell University graduate, has perfected an electrical invention called the Televiev, and it is now to be introduced as a theatrical attraction at the Selwyn Theatre beginning Wednesday, December 27.

The Televiev is an instrument attached to each orchestra chair and is synchronized in harmony with special projection machines as to enable the spectators to see Nature in solid form instead of pictures on a screen. In other words, this device introduces to the world of science and amusement that which we have been pleased to call stereoscopic movies.

Every seat in the Selwyn Theatre will be equipped with the Televiev instrument.

Following the opening on Wednesday evening, December 27, the Televiev performance will be given twice daily, at 2:30 and 8:30.

Elects Officers for 1923

Plans Dinner and Dance to Be Held in January

Annual dinner and dance of the F. I. L. M. Club will be held January 13 at the Majestic Hotel. The following are in charge of arrangements: W. E. Raynor, Harry Thomas, Tom Murray, Samuel Zierler and J. Weinberg.

At a meeting of the club held at 1520 Broadway, December 13, the following officers were unanimously elected for 1923: Samuel Zierler, Commonwealth, president; William E. Raynor, Pathe, vice-president; Henry Siegel, Select, second vice-president; Joseph Ungar, First National, secretary; Louis Rosenbluh, Fox, treasurer; Harry Thomas, Arrow, master of ceremonies.

Comes East on Trip

Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York from the company's West Coast studios in Los Angeles, Friday, December 22 on a short business trip. "Rupert of Hentzau," the mammoth production from Sir Anthony Hope's immortal romantic novel, which the Selznick company are producing with a lavishness calculated to make it one of the greatest sensations of the motion picture industry to date, and Robert W. Chambers' "The Common Law," are both in production on the Coast, requiring President Selznick's most careful attention. His trip east was made necessary in connection with these two big productions.

Editor Called to Coast

Harold J. McCord, of the Selznick Pictures Corporation's staff of film editors and cutters, left New York on Saturday for the company's West Coast studios in Los Angeles on call of President Myron Selznick to assist in the work now in progress at the studios on "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law." Mr. McCord's endeavors will be confined largely to the editing and cutting of "The Common Law" as it is being produced.

French Agent Here

Jacques Edelsten, general manager of The Films Erka in Paris, has arrived in New York on the steamer Paris and will remain here one week in consultation with Goldwyn officials. The Films Erka is the representative of Goldwyn Pictures in France.

Mr. Edelsten said that his company had released eighty-five pictures during the past thirteen months.

Chicago Gets Premiere of Ince Feature

Thomas Ince's big racing picture "The Hottentot" a First National release with Douglas MacLean and Madge Bellamy in the big roles will have its premiere showing at the Balaban and Katz Chicago Theatre, on Christmas day, and after playing there Christmas week will be seen during the New Year week at the Tivoli and the Riveria, also Balaban & Katz houses. The feature is booked to show at The Strand, New York, late in January.

"The Hottentot" as a stage play was one of Willie Collier's greatest successes. Alan Dale called it "Broadway's Finest." Allison Smith in the N. Y. Globe wrote: "The Hottentot is the funniest play in years." Renold Wolf in the New York Telegraph wrote: "A thousand laughs in The Hottentot."

Films Exploit Industries

Department of Commerce Productions to Enhance Prestige Abroad

Several moving picture films, depicting the operations of important industries, have been completed by the Department of Commerce, according to the annual report just made public by the Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The work in connection with the motion picture activities of the bureau, for the purpose of exploiting American industries abroad, was started on January 1, 1922. Since that time four films have been completed—"The Story of a Watch," "The Story of an Electric Meter," "The Story of an Automobile" and "The Story of Compressed Air." The total cost of these has been approximately $75,000, this sum having been expended by the various industrial organizations that have co-operated with the bureau. The Government was subjected to no expense whatever in the production of the films, other than the salary and incidental expenses of the single engineer in charge.

Four other films are under way and will be released probably within a short time. They are "The Story of Paper," "The Story of Waterpower," "The Story of Transportation" and "The Story of Steel."

The films made under the supervision of the Department of Commerce are to be circulated through the Government agencies in foreign countries, as well as to numerous civic and educational organizations which have used such films extensively in the past. The work is carried on under the personal direction of M. F. Leopold, engineer of the United States Bureau of Mines, who has been assigned to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce by a co-operative arrangement between the two bureaus.

"Movies" on Train

The Chicago and Alton Railroad will have picture shows every afternoon on limited trains between Chicago and St. Louis and return. George J. Charlton, passenger traffic manager, says they will rent film like regular exhibitors.

Kane Sees Big Advance in Industry During Year 1923

BASING his optimism partly on the phenomenal advance made by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., since he became president of the organization not quite ten months ago, Arthur S. Kane is enthusiastic in predicting that the year just ahead will be a notable one for motion pictures.

"No year ever started under more favorable conditions than are prevailing at the present time," said Mr. Kane in a conversation this week. "The answer of the industry to such criticisms as have been launched against it has been the opening of the 1922-23 season with a far greater number of outstanding attractions, photoplays that are meritorious from every point of view and have proved real triumphs, than have marked any previous season.

"There is every reason to believe that the determination to maintain this high standard is fixed and definite. Those of us who know something of the plans of producers, and of features which are being projected, are justified in believing that great attractions will continue to be the rule rather than the exception. In consequence, I feel safe in predicting that, not only will the advance now under way continue, but that it will gather impetus as it progresses. Hence, even were the trend in the entire business world not in the direction of a complete restoration of normal conditions—and it is, unquestionably, we in the motion picture industry would have good reason to greet the new year in a spirit of enthusiasm.

"When I assumed the active direction of Associated Exhibitors, last March, I announced that the policy of the organization was to obtain and release the pick of all independently produced features; that insistence would be placed on the selection of absolutely clean photoplays, not only because of our unyielding preference for products that are wholesome and decent, but also because of the proven superior box office value of films of this character.

"Associated has never swerved an inch from these principles and the results have amply vindicated the conviction expressed at that time. The reception universally accorded 'Grandma's Boy,' Harold Lloyd's first five-part comedy, was impressive evidence of the public's reaction to such a policy. This feature scored one of the most notable triumphs in film history. Not only did it have a phenomenal run of 19 weeks in Dr. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, but it smashed records in cities, towns and villages in every part of the country.

"This passing year witnessed also Florence Vidor's elevation to stellar rank by Associated Exhibitors, a move which the public acclaimed heartily. Each of her features has brought many recruits to her host of friends and admirers. Another item on our list of successes is the series of pictures featuring Leah Baird, and among attractions introducing other popular players and winning wide approval have been 'The Woman Who Fooled Herself,' with May Allison and Robert Ellis; 'Till We Meet Again,' with Mae Marsh, and 'Breaking Home Ties.'

"'A Bill of Divorcement,' starring Constance Binney, and just now being released, is typical of the outstanding features to which I referred a few minutes ago as making the 1922-23 season notable.

"The early months of 1923 will see the release of productions by a number of other stars whom Associated has recently enlisted under its banner. Madge Bellamy is now preparing to begin the first of a series of pictures for us, as is Douglas MacLean, and there is assurance that each of these artists will produce the finest features in which either has ever appeared. Madge Evans, under the auspices of Edgar Selden, will produce for us a number of popular works, starting with Paul Dresser's 'On the Banks of the Wabash.' With such an array of talent added to Associated's already long list of popular stars, do you wonder that I face the future with equanimity?

"During 1923, Associated Exhibitors will traverse the same path it followed in 1922, but its operations will be on a broader scale than ever, as these evidences of expansion indicate."

Introduces Bill Providing More Theatre Tax Exemptions

REPRESENTATIVE CLARENCE MacGREGOR, of New York, has introduced a bill increasing the exemption of theatre admission from the tax provisions of the revenue act from 10 cents to 25 cents. Mr. MacGregor states that he has introduced this measure at the request of the motion picture exhibitors of Buffalo, which city is in his Congressional district. He points out that the small theatres throughout the United States have been hard hit during the business depression and the removal of the tax on admissions of 25 cents and under would materially assist them at this time.

Asked as to what chances the bill would have of passage at this session of Congress, Representative MacGregor points out that it will depend largely on the support given it by the people, and particularly by those engaged in the motion picture industry. "In any event," he declares, "we ought to get rid of the special taxes on special industries, as rapidly as possible. There is no reason for taxing one industry and not another. The motion picture industry would be greatly revived if we could eliminate some of the taxes levied against it. I want to develop sentiment in order to bring the matter before the Ways and Means Committee with a view to securing hearings on the measure. I have asked officials of the Treasury Department to furnish me with data as to the difference that would be made in the Government revenue in the event that Congress should agree to my bill.

"I think the motion picture industry should be assisted all possible, because it is one of the greatest educational factors we have, especially with respect to the outlying districts where the young people of the various communities can get instruction and entertainment which they would not otherwise receive, and therefore the industry should be fostered."

REGIONAL NEWS AND GOSSIP

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

A Christmas Message to Exhibitors

SHOULD the Regional News and Gossip Department be renamed the Exhibitors' News and Gossip Department? We'd like to have the opinions of exhibitors on this. This is their own department, and shouldn't it be named for them? We have used "Regional" because the news comes from everywhere in the U. S. A., but that idea seems, to us, really of secondary importance.

What do you think of the new style? We've graduated from four columns to three, which means a much more easily readable page. This will be a permanent feature; it means that this genuine exhibitor department, the first and only one in any trade paper, is here to stay; that it will continue serving exhibitors to the best of its ability until Gabriel blows his trumpet. We know from letters already received, that this will be real Christmas news to exhibitors, and we are proud of it.

Some film folks said exhibitors didn't give a particular darn for any news but that involving picture values, that gossipy items about what their brothers are doing wouldn't be warmly welcomed. Those skeptical persons are proved all wrong by the reception exhibitors have accorded their department. We knew that would be the case, because in this day of exhibitor organization and increasing exhibitor strength through organization, the theatre men are vitally concerned in what their brothers are doing. They have met each other at conventions and know each other as human beings, not merely as names, and they want at all times to keep in touch with each other.

That is our chief mission here—to enable exhibitors to keep in personal touch with each other. There are other missions, not yet fully developed, such as affording exhibitors the opportunity to swap opinions through this department, and they will be realized in due time.

We want to take this opportunity to thank exhibitors for the interest in and support of this department. It's young but lusty, and we have great hopes for its future. With continued exhibitor co-operation the battle will be to make it better and better, week after week—and never "good enough."

A Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year to you all.

Five Theatres Burned in $10,000,000 Oregon Fire

All eyes have been turned toward Astoria, Oregon, since the magnitude of the $10,000,000 fire, which wiped out the business district and a portion of the old residence district over an area of thirty square blocks was first reported December 8. Messages of sympathy and aid were sent by naval radio from the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, and like action taken by similar organizations in other cities. The fire got beyond control by eating under the pilings upon which the city is built on the banks of the Columbia River.

Looking at the terrible disaster from one trade angle alone, it sums itself up in the total destruction of five theatres: the Astoria, a legitimate house; the Columbia, a small 10-cent theatre, and the new Blue Mouse, the Liberty and the Star theatres, all owned and operated by the Astoria Amusement Company, of which John Hamrick is managing director.

Mr. Hamrick received the news at his desk in Seattle. Disposing of important matters requiring his immediate attention took until train time. He taxied to the depot through a blinding snowstorm, arriving ten minutes late for the 1:30 train. Chartering another taxi, Mr. Hamrick beat the train to Tacoma, where he boarded it, arriving in Astoria in the evening. Here he learned that due to the prompt and untiring efforts of Arthur Hile, his local manager, all office records had been saved. In addition, every print was rescued, being moved four different times to a place of safety. The mechanism out of the Blue Mouse Simplex machines was also removed to safety.

Mr. Hamrick has just returned to Seattle. He reports that the spirit and courage of the stricken people is remarkable. Out of the still smoldering ashes of the old Astoria, they are eagerly planning the erection of a better city. In co-operation with the mayor and leading citizens, who are planning the immediate erection of a temporary community center, removed a short distance from the scene of the fire, as soon as the location is decided upon, Mr. Hamrick will build a temporary Blue Mouse, seating 1,000, and has promised a finer theatre will be raised out of the ashes of the beautiful house, so lately opened.

Mr. Hamrick's message to the people, which reached them through the medium of large advertisements in the first papers to be printed following the disaster, was one of confidence and co-operation, carrying his personal pledge of sympathy and faith in them, and by its simple dignity was carried far above the plane of an ordinary commercial advertisement.

Mr. McRae, of Issaquah, Wash., is reported to have taken over the Glenn Theatre, formerly operated by R. H. Glenn.

Reports have been received here of the total loss through fire of O. Peitrich's Rex Theatre, Vale, Oregon. Mr. Peitrich does not know at this time whether he will rebuild.

According to a wire received from J. J. Parker, owner of the Majestic, Portland, where "Doctor Jack" is in its third capacity week, patrons were standing in long lines for the last show in the ninth day, and the first two weeks' receipts about equalled the four weeks' receipts of "Grandma's Boy," which recently showed at the Heilig.

It has been cold in Seattle, but that is nothing to the winter experienced by exhibitors in other parts of the Pacific Northwest, according to correspondence received along the row. Many are complaining that it is the coldest winter they have ever experienced in the business. And many of the Northwesterners will swim through torrents of rain to see a picture, while one measly icicle will keep them indoors over the fire.

R. L. Ruggles, of the Liberty and Dream Theatres, Chehalis, Wash., is in Seattle for a couple of days.

For its entire circuit, the Blue Mouse Theatre Co. has booked the F. B. O. product, consisting of features and comedies, which include Carter de Haven and Plum Center comedies and Travelaughs. The Film Booking releases will probably be alternated with the United Artists' product which has also been booked by the same circuit.

Jack Allender and wife and "Young Jack" are in Seattle from Spokane for a few days. Mr. Allender, who operates a circuit, has again taken over the Liberty in Moscow, Idaho, recently sold to C. A. Coates.

R. K. Dunham was scheduled to open his new Rex Theatre, Mount Vernon, Dec 16 The new house is built upon the site of the old one, which was completely demolished to make way for it. It seats 450.

The Coliseum Theatre management announces the acquisition of M. Jacques Beaucaire as orchestra leader.

One Is Identified

Editor, Regional News and Gossip:

When reading your esteemed magazine of December 23, my heart leaped with joy when I saw on page 716 at the bottom of the sheet, the film beneath which was the notation "Who can identify the two films shown here?" It brought back to my mind many pleasant memories, one of which was the excitement of being almost trampled upon by the horses that could hardly be stopped in front of the camera.

This picture was taken twenty-seven years ago, in 1895, by Messrs. Lumiere, Lyons, France, and was entitled "The Charge of the French Cuirassiers." I was the assistant to the camera man. We showed this picture with several others, but always kept this with one other, "The Arrival of the Train in La Ciotat," for the last, as they had the real punch. The people who sat close to the screen, fell back in their seats when the horses made their mad rush towards them on the screen.

At that time we did not change the program as often as we do today, and I showed these pictures throughout Europe and Asia for three years.

Very truly yours,

F. DOUBLIER.

General Manager, Palisade Film Laboratories, Inc., Palisade, N. J.

Noisy Chicago Gum Chewer Is Arrested in Theatre

An interesting as well as amusing case was tried by Judge Jacobs in his police court last week. Phil Brodsky was arrested for chewing gum too loudly in a Loop movie and vaudeville house on the complaint of a woman. She complained that Philip cracked his gum so loudly she could not hear the music. After the experts were through with their arguments, the judge decided to let the defendant off with a lecture on the art of silent gum chewing.

The new year will open at the Chicago Theatre with the first offering of the prize photoplay, "Broken Chains," which won the $10,000 prize offered by the Daily News of this city in competition with thousands of other photoplays that were entered in the contest from all parts of the world.

The Ascher Palace Theatre at Peoria is now showing a unified program of five acts of vaudeville and feature photoplays. This is a radical departure from the previous policy of the house and business has been above expectations.

The big event of the week here was the organization of the Independent Exhibitors' Association at the meeting held at the Sherman and now the Row is waiting for the next move of the co-operators.

William H. Malone is going to build a new theatre and office building at Park Ridge of the latest fireproof construction, and the best equipment will be used in the new structure.

Harry Lubliner and Joseph Trinz, of Lubliner and Trinz, have closed a contract with Paul Sternberg and his twenty-seven piece orchestra for a long time engagement starting at the Pantheon on December 24.

This city will have a civic theatre in the near future, and a strong organization is being recruited to back up the enterprise. Donald Robertson will be art director.

Manager Nelson of the Star Theatre at Quincy has booked "The Kentucky Derby" for a showing, and he expects to do an S. R. O. business, as Charley Dazey, the author of the play, is a native son.

Vaudeville as well as films are drawing the crowds on Roosevelt road. Both the Central Park and Broadway Strand are using standard vaudeville acts with their photoplays to fill the houses, especially on Sunday and holiday shows.

Charley Cohen has reopened the Colonial Theatre at Kendallville and made several improvements in the house.

A new theatre and store building will be erected at Whiting on 119th street, seating 1,000. Malton and Blakunka are the contractors.

Another theatre is rumored for the Rogers Park district, as this is a section of the city that is growing rapidly and there is always room for one more.

L. O. LUKAN

Leaves First National Western District Management to be General Manager of John Hamrick Theatre Circuit

Elmer Benesch will soon install a Kimball organ in the Bell Theatre, and is making other improvements in the house that will add to its popularity.

Abe Gumbiner has taken over the LeGrand Theatre on North Clark street and will make some improvements in the house.

Andrew Karzas, of the Woodlawn Theatre, one of the live houses of the South Side, is at the head of the company that opened the neew Trianon ballroom, which is considered one of the finest dance palaces in this country. The boys are pulling strong for the success of the new enterprise.

Andy Gump is coming into his own in the movies, as a company has been formed by Sam Van Ronkel, Charles Sincere and Harry C. Levinson under the name of The Gump in the Movies Corporation, with offices at 29 South La Salle street. The capital stock is $150,000.

Competition among the movie houses at Bloomington is quite keen these winter days. Almost every one is showing some novelty, musical specialty or presentation to bring in the crowds. Last week the Rialto had a mind reader as an extra attraction, the Castle had illustrated organ recitals, the Majestic had three acts of vaudeville, the Irving strong musical programs under Director Porter Phillips, and all this in addition to feature films is going some for a city the size of Bloomington.

R. G. Liggett Extends Exhibitor Greetings

R. G. LIGGETT, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, and an exhibitor of Kansas City, Kan., has sent out his greetings of the holidays through the press. Parts of his greetings follow:

"We are thankful for the business we have enjoyed during the past year. We are thankful the public appreciates the many new, modern and luxurious theatres that have been built to educate, edify and amuse the ever-increasing theatre goer. We are thankful for the rapid strides being made by the producer in perfecting bigger, better and cleaner pictures. We are thankful for the general upward trend of the industry, despite the many adversities and abuses we have suffered. Our silent progress can only be appreciated by those who are particularly interested in our efforts and accomplishments.

"The officers and directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas will continue in the future, as in the past, to be of greater service to their fellow members. The coming year will mark the epoch of one of the most constructive programs ever attempted in the history of this organization. We have hopes and ambitions of building one of the strongest Motion Picture Theatre Owners' organizations in existence, and to this end we are working.

"In order that we accomplish this achievement it is necessary that we continue to have and hold the undivided co-operation of every exhibitor. United we stand—divided we fall! An injury to one is the concern of all.

"Let us keep faith in our work; keep our feet on the ground and our eyes on the stars. It is up to us exhibitors to set the pace—the theatre is the barometer—and we hold the key to the barometer—let's go!

"In closing, I would be very ungrateful indeed, if I did not extend thanks to the exchange managers for the excellent co-operation they have given our association. We hope for a continuation of their good will and respect."

Buffalo Exhibitors Elect Al Beckerich President

Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew State Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., has been elected president of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, the membership of which comprises both the picture and legitimate houses. Other new officers are: Fred M. Shafer, manager of the Lafayette Square, vice-president; W. W. Bradley, of the Joseph H. Schuchert Enterprises, secretary and treasurer. The new board of directors has the following personnel: Henry Carr, Shea's Court Street Theatre; John R. Oishei, Shubert-Teck; Dr. Peter C. Cornell, Majestic; Jules H. Michael, Regent; Arthur L. Skinner, Victor, and Elmer C. Winegar, Elmwood.

The board of trustees of Fredonia, N. Y., has put the ban on Sunday shows. The action followed the reading of several protests from clubs, churches and others and the protest of the ministers of several of the town churches.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., put over some fine ads in the local newspapers when he presented "If I Were Queen." Being so near the Canadian border and catering to a large number of Dominion residents, he headed his ads, "Royalty Coming!" The rest of the ads were built with this idea in mind.

One of the finest projection booths in Buffalo is that in the Lafayette Square where A. A. Geddis is in command, assisted by Leo Hilbert and F. C. Stevens. Mr. Geddis has been with M. Slotkin and his house for some fourteen years. The booth has two latest type Simplex projection machines, Brenkert double lens stereopticon, spotlights, its own ventilating system, lavatory. In fact, it has everything but the fur-lined bath tub. Many Lafayette patrons have commended the management on the excellent projection.

Mrs. Bruce Fowler, wife of the former manager of the Buffalo Elmwood and now manager of the Indiana Theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., is in Buffalo and Niagara Falls for the holidays. Bruce writes local friends that he also is coming "home" to spend Christmas, at least.

A. A. Fennyvessy, Rochester theatre owner, was in Buffalo to visit M. Slotkin, president of the Monument Theatre Corporation, last week.

Vincent McFaul, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is making plans for Christmas week at this famous theatre. The feature will be "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," and there will be a jazz band, special organ music by Albert Hay Malotte and a brilliant stage setting. Business continues S. R. O. at the "Hip."

John Amendola, manager of the Amendola, Niagara Falls, N. Y., announces that the stage will soon be moved back to make room for 400 additional seats, which are required because of the greatly increased business.

Dave Walsh, manager of the Little Hippodrome, Buffalo, was struck by an automobile last week. He suffered a broken shoulder. The driver drove away after the accident, failing to stop to aid the injured man. His identity is unknown. Mr. Walsh is one of the pioneers in the Buffalo picture world.

Howard F. Smith, manager of the Palace Theatre, and Dewey Michaels, manager of the Plaza, were in Chicago last week to attend the meeting of M. P. T. O. A., at which the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation was formed.

Fire damaged the lobby of the Imperial Theatre in Painted Post, N. Y., last week. The loss is small.

Charlie Hayman, president of the Cataract Theatre Corporation of Niagara Falls, operating the new Strand and Cataract, has returned from a trip to New York to look over some of next year's product.

M. J. Schine, of the Schine Theatre Enterprises, was a Buffalo visitor last weekend. He visited several friends along Film Row.

Charles Smith, of the Shattuck Theatre, Hornell, N. Y., will give his patrons "Dr. Jack" as a Christmas present. Mr. Smith is the first exhibitor in western New York to secure an approved contract on the new Lloyd comedy.

Walter Hays, vice-president of the Mark-Strand interests, after attending the opening of the new State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., rushed to New York to take over the work of Max Spiegel, who has suffered a nervous breakdown.

Herbert N. Birchall, formerly organist at the Elmwood, Buffalo, has been engaged to play the new organ which has been installed in the Regent Theatre, Dunkirk, N. Y. The opening recital was given last Sunday.

A Universal Release

AN EFFECTIVE DRAPERY SCHEME FOR "UNDER TWO FLAGS"

The Albemarle Theatre, Brooklyn, did not make too heavy a display, but by separating the flags got a completely dressed lobby with very little bunting and one cutout. The house has the advantage of a handsome lobby.

Atlanta

Manager De Sales Harrison, of the Howard, is receiving congratulations on the way his Atlanta Journal essay contest on the rival attractions of Rodolph Valentino and Ramon Navarro has worked for his picture, "Trifling Women." Mr. Harrison claims that his theatre is playing to a heavy masculine business.

Manager T. R. James, of Loew's Grand, is very busy preparing for the Follies—of which more anon—which he will present at his theatre early in January. The Grand is playing to its usual good business.

Manager "Pat" Patterson entertained the Better Films Society of Atlanta recently at a showing of "Oliver Twist," and was rewarded by the unanimous indorsement of the picture.

There have been women's fashion shows with lovely languid-looking ladies as models in Atlanta—but it remained for Manager W. R. Bedell to stage the very first—so far as we know—fashion show for men, which he did in connection with the showing of "A Tailor-Made Man," to the great assistance of the box-office receipts. Manager Bedell is a Tech man, and so he was able to enlist the services of "models" from the Tech Glee Club, and the "fashions" were furnished by one of the most exclusive men's shops in town.

Manager James Jackson's Tudor Theatre is one of the brightest spots on Peachtree Street these days, by reason of the brilliantly illuminated marquee as well as by his pictures and the attractive theatre itself. These rainy, cold and dreary afternoons, when it gets dark about 4 o'clock, Manager Jackson turns on the "juice" in the marquee-lights and considerably cheers up the populace with the ensuing warm light.

Manager W. T. Murray, of the Alamo No. 2, is proving himself a daring exhibitor. His theatre has heretofore had a policy of three changes a week. Recently he held over a picture for three days, then for four—and his boldest stroke came this week, when he booked "The Four Horsemen," which is about a fifth-run in Atlanta, "to run as long as it draws the business," with a minimum date of one week.

Manager John N. Thomas of the Vaudette reports good business—no startling news. Which is a report that a lot of exhibitors would be tickled to death to hand out regularly.

Manager G. M. Phillips, of the Strand, Atlanta, used a shadow-box and cut-outs to excellent effect in erecting a lobby display for "The Man from Hell's River" that was a winner. Manager Phillips has a long line of effective displays to his credit, by the way.

Manager Darley, of the Alpha, is playing three serials a week—"The Radio King," on Mondays and Tuesdays; "The Jungle Goddess," on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and "Buffalo Bill," on Fridays and Saturdays, and reports that, while "The Radio King" is quite popular, he believes that "Buffalo Bill" is the most popular of the three and the best drawing card.

Many Managerial Changes Reported in Pittsburgh

Several changes in the theatrical firmament are reported from Erie, Pa. J. E. Rainey has resigned as manager of the Rialto, and John Sanford has gone from Wheeling, W. Va., to manage the Erie house. Mr. Fordham has been transferred from the Perry Theatre to the Strand, and Nick Wagner, formerly First National exploitation man in Pittsburgh, is now managing the Perry. The last-named two houses are controlled by the Rowland and Clark interests.

Florence Elfenbein, well-known Pittsburgh organist, has gone to Erie to officiate at the organ in the Perry Theatre there.

The Rialto has disposed of its orchestra, and hereafter pipe organ music only will be used.

Bert Newton has been spending much of his time at Sharon, Pa., since the opening of the Columbia Amusement Company's new Columbia Theatre there. Bert is publicity man for the company, with headquarters in Erie.

Harry Thomas and his son, Paul, the exhibitor-druggists of Greensburg, Pa., have returned to the drug store and the theatre after several days in the woods chasing deer. We have not learned whether or not they had any luck.

The new State, being built by Frank Fairgraves, is to be opened on Christmas Day. The State will seat 1,100 and is located on Eighth street, between Peach and State.

And we mustn't forget Fred Gohrs, hustling manager of the Aris Theatre in Erie. Fred is busier than ever and the Aris is always crowded.

Lewis Farro, of the New Majestic, Bentleyville, Pa., has sold his house to Reuben Soltz, formerly of the Majestic, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh. The Majestic is a brand new theatre which Mr. Farro has never opened, seating about 500. Mr. Soltz opened the house on December 18.

Some more Erie news. One evening recently there were so many film people in the lobby of the Columbia that it looked like a convention. There was in one group, O. A. Potter, head of the Columbia Amusement Company; W. E. Minton, house manager; Brown of Goldwyn; Miller of Vitagraph; Cooper of Paramount; Hogan of Universal; Shulgold of F. B. O.; Sammy Steinberg of the S. & S. Film & Supply Company, and J. E. Rainey, former manager of the Rialto at Erie.

H. D. Wells, owner of the Spencer Theatre, Spencer, W. Va., is in a serious condition as a result of having been bitten by a copperhead snake. He was working in the attic of his theatre and suddenly felt a stinging pain in his ankle, but thought nothing of it until a few minutes later, when his shoe burst from the swollen foot.

On December 11, Philip Reich celebrated his thirteenth anniversary at the helm of the Auditorium Theatre, Meyersdale, Pa. That's a long stretch at one house.

The Grand at Somerset, Pa., has been entirely remodeled and is now under the management of the Ridenour brothers, of the Photoplay Theatre at Rockwood. Business is good, the boys say.

The Richman Brothers have purchased the property on which stands the Century Family Theatre which they are operating on the North Side, Pittsburgh. The cost is said to have been $50,389.

Ralph Meyers, one of the old-timers in the picture business in this territory, as well as having been on the road for local film houses, is again back in the business after having deserted it sometime ago to enter the automobile business. Ralph is managing Mr. Kelly's Superior Theatre at California and Superior avenues, North Side, Pittsburgh, and began his new duties on December 11.

Ralph began many years ago when he conducted the Olympic Theatre at Emsworth, and then in turn he controlled the destinies of the Lyric, Mt. Washington; Palace, Homestead; Strand, East Liberty, and the American, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh. He was also on the road for the Goldwyn and Vitagraph exchanges here.

R. J. LaVoise, who left the Cameraphone Theatre, East Liberty, in October to be a Washington Goldwynner, has returned to his former position.

Joe Stanson, better known among the film folks as "Buck," is no longer manager of Ed Harvey's big theatre at Woodlawn, Pa. At the present time Ed is taking care of the management of the house himself.

Charlie Schatz, of the Park and Lyceum theatres, Meadville, is confined to his bed with a severe cold and touch of influenza.

F. C. Smoot, of the Smoot Amusement Company, Parkersburg, W. Va., was a recent Pittsburgh visitor. Other recent exhibitor visitors from West Virginia were Jos. Solomon, of Clarksburg; George Shafer, of Wheeling, and T. J. Gallaher of Fairmont.

Detroit Showmen Uncover Unscrupulous Practices

Following the big success of "Shadows," an Al Lichtman production, at the Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, the week of December 3, one of the most unscrupulous bits of film practice ever attempted in this territory has come to light.

A postal card bearing the signature of a Detroit exchange was sent out to presumably all the exhibitors in this region, as several of them have already shown the card to Jess Fishman, manager of the Standard Film Service, distributors of the film in Michigan. The card was worded as follows:

"'Shadows' is playing the Broadway-Strand, Detroit. You can book 'The Shadows' at your own terms from us."

Receipt of the card started a storm of protest and several members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan bitterly denounced the guilty exchange. The members of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan are expected to take some drastic action, inasmuch as it is felt that if this occurrence was overlooked, many theatre owners may be hoodwinked into buying inferior attractions bearing similar names.

W. S. McLaren, president of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan, Claude Cady, of Lansing, and J. C. Ritter were in Cleveland during the week of December 11, where they conferred with Sydney Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A.

Dave Rennie, 31 years of age, was found guilty in Recorder's Court on December 15, of having hurled the bomb that shattered the Chopin Theatre, 7320 Michigan avenue, Detroit, on the morning of May 1, 1922. He was remanded for sentence.

Rennie was blown into the street and his clothes torn to shreds by the force of the explosion, which occurred at 6:30 A. M. A passing workman lost the sight of one eye as a result of the explosion, and another was hurled across the street by the explosion. Both of these men were important witnesses for the prosecution.

Stanley Oleszkowicz, owner of the theatre, had been having trouble with the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union over the employment of his two sons as operators. Rennie was a picket for the union, which had protested the theatre owner's action.

A First National Release

ONE MORE MERCHANDISE HOOK-UP FOR "LORNA DOONE"

First National Exploitation tied up everything from biscuits to baby food, but the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, found one more chance, and hooked a confectioner to a special candy in an ornamental box. It won four stills and a card.

St. Louis Awaits Erection of $400,000 Film Building

A five-story building housing a theatre seating 1,200, seven stores and forty-eight apartments, will be erected at a cost of $400,000, on a lot 143 feet by 110 feet on the south side of Delmar boulevard, 400 feet west of Limit avenue, in University City, a St. Louis suburb. The purchasers are Harry J. Cohen, Charles S. Bowman, Walter A. Hays and Joseph H. Grand. The theatre will contain a balcony.

The rapid increase in the population of University City has been the incentive for the promoters to erect a structure of the kind contemplated. University City is without a first-class picture house.

East St. Louis may have a $750,000 theatre and office building in the very near future. Several prominent business men have approached Harry Redmon, owner of the Majestic Theatre, Collinsville avenue, near St. Louis, on the subject. Redmon has a frontage of 83 by 175 feet. With an adjoining 50 feet it would be an ideal spot for a structure of the kind contemplated.

Tentative plans prepared by an East St. Louis architect call for a 2,200-seat theatre, containing a balcony and an eight-story hotel or office building. Redmon has long planed to eventually replace the Majestic with a more modern structure. He was the pioneer exhibitor of East St. Louis.

The Illmo Amusement Company has added another house to its string, the Princess, Macon, Mo. Wallace Akin will take charge as manager on January 1. The new owners will spend a few thousands in improvement. Two hundred additional seats will be installed, giving accomodations for 700. Akin has been traveling for Select. His vacancy will be filled by J. F. Duthrie, who has worked for several exchanges in this territory, at present being with Vitagraph.

Some of the out-of-town exhibitors seen here recently were J. F. Whalen, Old Monroe, Mo.; R. E. Adkins, Lyric, Elksville, Ill.; F. M. Francis, Lincoln, Charleston, Ill.; Charley Law of Pana, C. Henderson of Paducah, Ky., and Paul Zurilla of Memphis, Tenn.

Arthur Schoenstadt, owner of the Atlantic Boulevard Ashland and Brighton Park Theatre of Chicago, was a St. Louis visitor, spending two weeks here with friends and playing golf.

L. J. Bulger, of Marshall, Ill., has sold his theatre to Mr. Fundis of that city.

Fred C. Ditzenberg, owner of the St. Clair Odeon, East St. Louis, Ill., while booking pictures at the First National office, had his automobile stolen.

The Main Theatre, Anna, Ill., has been purchased by the Illmo Amusement Company of St. Louis. The name will be changed to the Yale Theatre. Lou Wagner, now in charge of the Yale Theatre, Shelbyville, Ill., probably will take charge of the Anna house.

The Illmo Amusement Company, organized a few weeks ago, now has three houses and is dickering for two more. Its houses are the Yale, Shelbyville, and the Yale, formerly the Princess, Macon, Mo. All bookings for the Illmo houses will be made through the St. Louis office, 3330 Olive street.

Wallace Akin is manager of the Macon house. The company is spending $2,500 for improvements to that house, which has been closed for two weeks. New projection equipment and 200 additional seats have been purchased.

Coolness on the part of the attendants prevented a panic in the Lyceum Theatre, Poplar Bluff, Mo., December 11, when fire broke out in the Borth Drug Store, next to the show.

Someone cried fire when smoke came into the theatre and for a second it looked like a panic might result, but the theatre employes quickly took charge and had the audience of some several hundred file from the house without any being hurt.

The theatre was slightly damaged. The drug store was destroyed.

Among out-of-town exhibitors seen along the St. Louis Picture Rialto during the past week were: R. E. Atkins, Elkville Theatre, Elkville, Ill.; Carson T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.; Billy Mueller, Jefferson Theatre, Jefferson City, Mo.; W. A. Boyd, Louisiana, Mo.

The Star Theatre, Quincy, Ill., has arranged to have Charles T. Dazey, author of "The Suburban" make personal appearances during the run of "The Kentucky Derby" at that house. The Universal feature will be shown for five days commencing December 19. Dazey lives in Quincy.

Joe Hewitt, owner of the Opera House at Robinson, Ill., entertained his old side-kick, Barney Rosenthal, a few days ago, for the first time in ten years. Eighteen years ago the pair of veterans worked together in the old General Film Company's exchange at Chicago, Ill., and although their visits are often far between they have always kept in touch by letter or through their mutual friends.

The Opera House, Newton, Ill., has reopened and will play road shows only. A local banker is the backer of the venture.

Callers of the week included: John Pratt, Fulton, Mo.; A. C. Norwein, Bonne Terra; Elmer Brient, Illinois Theatre, Centralia, Ill.; James Lowry, Star Theatre, Highland, Ill., and Charles Luttrell, Majestic, Jacksonville.

John Reese, of Wellsville, Mo., who was elected to the Missouri Legislature in November, came in to arrange his programs for the next three months so he will have nothing to worry about when he goes to Jefferson City in January.

The Exploitation Backfired

Mayor Neal, of Oswego, put his foot down most emphatically this past week on sensational exploitation of motion pictures in his city, with the result that the Schine Theatre in that town was forced to cancel a showing of "The Outcast." Furthermore, the Mayor made it plain that he would not tolerate any such sensational advertising.

The trouble started with a sensational suicide story, hatched up by an exploitation man, who hoodwinked the citizens into thinking that a young girl had drowned herself in the river at Oswego. A suitcase had been planted on the river bank. In this was found a young girl's clothes, her picture and a pathetic letter to her sweetheart to the effect that she was an outcast and was ending it all. The story of the suicide quickly spread over the city and was carried in the newspapers. As soon as it was learned that the picture entitled "The Outcast" was to be shown at one of the Oswego theatres, the police got busy.

Many sympathetic women called up the city hall and shed many a tear over the sad story of the tragic death of the young girl. When found that they had been the victims of overdone exploitation, they were indignant. The affair was called to the attention of the Mayor, and as a result "The Outcast" was cast out of Oswego.

Cincinnati

Gifts Theatre, one of the larger downtown houses, has been purchased by Jules Frankel, who controls a number of picture and small time vaudeville houses hereabouts. Considerable secrecy attended the negotiations and the original rumor was that the purchaser was I. Libson, who operates virtually all the first run houses in this city. Frankel, however, has assumed active charge and will not change the policy.

The Lyric, a pretentious house located at a strategic point in the heart of the Vine street business district, in which McMahon and Jackson have been running pictures for the past two seasons, has passed to the control of Ralph Dunbar, who will install his own company for a season of operatic repertoire, opening Christmas day. The Lyric was the home of Shubert road attractions prior to the McMahon and Jackson incumbency. "The Headless Horseman" is being shown as the final picture.

Once again the iron hand of the Ohio board of censors is being felt. "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," starring Gloria Swanson, was recently cast into outer darkness by the august body of picture potentates at Columbus, while last week "The Outcast," featuring Elsie Ferguson, came under the ban. The latter picture was booked and heavily advertised by the Palace here for December 17 opening, but "The Daughter of Luxury," with Agnes Ayres, was hurriedly substituted.

Montana

At the Broadway Theatre, Butte, Mont., Tuesday afternoon, December 5, the M. P. T. O. of Montana, new unit of the national exhibitor organization, met to elect officers and perfect the organization. Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, was elected president. F. A. Bodecker, of the Ellen Theatre, Bozeman, was made first vice-president, and E. Lake, of the Lake Theatre, Baker, second vice-president. The treasurer is William A. Woolfall, live Butte exhibitor. Albert Nadeau, of the Blue Bird Theatre, Anaconda, is secretary. The board of directors is composed of James H. Rowe, Butte; W. B. Harding, Dillon; E. P. White, Livingston, and Rolla Duncan, Billings.

The Montana organization immediately affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A. Merle Davis was elected executive committee member of the national body. Over fifty exhibitors registered at the meeting, which was called to order by A. J. Moeller of New York, general manager of the M. P. T. O. A.

Arthur Hile, formerly manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, Butte, has wired Merle Davis of the Ansonia that Mrs. Hile and son and he are safe at Astoria, Ore., but the three theatres are a total loss in the Astoria fire. Mr. Hile left Butte this fall to assume charge of the Astoria division of the John Hamrick chain of theatres which have their headquarters at Seattle.

Albany Exhibitors Urged to Watch Film Shipments

Exhibitors in the Albany, N. Y., section have just received a letter from the Albany Film Board of Trade, which, if followed, will go a long ways toward righting a situation which has existed for some time past, and which has been a hardship to more than one exhibitor through the negligence of others in shipping film on time.

It appears that there has been a tendency on the part of some exhibitors to hold over film, apparently forgetting that some other exhibitor probably has the same picture booked for the next day. Fortunately there are not very many such fellows in the Albany territory, but the few who do exist are responsible for much of the confusion which the Board of Trade would like to see cleared away by the first of the year.

In some instances, exhibitors, forgetting to ship the film, have blamed the express or other carriers. It is expected that the letter will bring about a remedying of the condition.

Lewis Fischer, of the Playhouse in Ticonderoga, was in town this week, and even to the exchanges admited freely that business was topnotch.

J. Broff, of the Lyric in Albany, is smiling all over these days on account of good business, and that in face of the holidays. Mr. Broff has just booked a couple of serials, "Buffalo Bill" and the "Radio King," for early showing.

In Ballston Spa, N. Y., there is talk now of putting in an anti-Sunday motion picture ticket in the field for the village elections next spring. This move is being engineered by those who are not satisfied with the recent referendum vote in the village on Sunday movies. Members of the village board will seek re-election next spring, and have already said to have agreed to stand or fall on their action in granting Sunday shows.

The Leland in Albany has a cat which is very fond of the movies, particularly those which portray animal life. It is nothing uncommon to see "Tabby" perched on the arm of some seat, watching a picture as it passes before her on the silver screen. In fact, the cat is one of the prized possessions of Oscar Perrin, manager of the house.

Syracuse decorators are busy at the Graylin Theatre, in Gouverneur, preparing it for the opening early in January. The house has been undergoing extensive repairs. Rubber flooring will be used for the main portion of the house, as well as the lobby. The house is being run by Harry Papayanakos.

The majority of Albany's theatres have already assumed their holiday decorations, those at the Leland and Strand being particularly attractive.

Still the annual meeting of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association is being postponed from time to time, and it now looks as though it would not be held until some time in January.

William Berinstein was up from New York this week and closeted at the Colonial for some time with George Roberts, his local manager, in going over preliminary plans for the new $200,000 house which he will erect at once in Little Falls.

Practically all of the local exhibitors have paid their compliments to Edwin Weinberg, through visiting the State, just opened in Schenectady.

The Leland did exceptionally well the last three days this week with a Tom Mix special, "Do and Dare." In fact, Thursday's receipts were ahead of a similar Thursday when "Under Two Flags" was played.

The Castle Theatre in Norwood, N. Y., was destroyed by fire last Saturday. The house was owned by William Greig, who bought it about two months ago and was living in apartments above the theatre. The loss was about $10,000, with $5,000 insurance.

The Avon in Watertown, N. Y., ran an "old clothes matinee" this week in connection with the showing of "Oliver Twist." The contributions were many and were turned over to the Salvation Army. Each child who brought a bundle containing at least one article that could be worn, was admitted free.

Up to the present time Albany exhibitors have had no difficulty in obtaining sufficient coal to heat their houses. Soft coal, however, is being used in all of the places, and according to some of the exhibitors who like to take a slam at the exchanges, the coal is worth more than some of the film.

The Women's Club of Albany has just formed a new department, to be known as "Better Films," and will work for better photoplays. Mrs. Henry Streibert is chairman of this section. Members are being asked to make a report on at least one picture a year.

Pictures costing huge sums and requiring many months to make are frequently injured in their finer portions through hoodlums who apparently delight in laughing at just the wrong moment. This was apparent the other night, when "My Friend, the Devil" was being shown at the Leland. A stiff fine, or a few days behind the bars would help to convince such persons that hundreds of others in an audience, having paid their admission, are entitled to the full enjoyment of a picture.

C. W. Reese, a theatre proprietor of Clayton, N. Y., was in Utica this week, appearing before Federal Judge Cooper in answer to an indictment charging him with falsifying returns in his theatre tax. Mr. Reese explained that the return had been made out in wrong form and without an intention of cheating the government. He was fined one dollar.

Some of the best publicity ever seen in Ticonderoga is being turned out these days by Harry Filkins, who runs the Rialto in that village. Mr. Filkins isn't a bit partial to any picture and is cashing in heavily through a little extra work and gray matter on his part.

Charles Sesonske, of the Nova Operating Company, of Watertown, featured in an automobile smashup this week. While his car was badly smashed, Mr. Sesonske escaped injury.

Milwaukee

Fire which on December 6 destroyed the Eagles Clubhouse in the heart of the downtown district, temporarily tied up one picture house and one vaudeville theatre, almost a block away.

At the Garden Theatre, Third street and Grand avenue, managed by Leo A. Landau, the water that rushed in through an abandoned tunnel reached a depth in the basement of eight feet, according to Henry Taylor, house manager. All lights in the house were darkened when the switchboard was submerged and only through the combined efforts of firemen and theatre employes was the work of draining accomplished so as to allow the program for the day to start only several hours late.

Scrub women at work in Ascher's Merrill Theatre, managed by Ralph Wettstein, upon being told what had taken place at the Garden, only a few doors away, dragged musical instruments and a valuable curtain from the low orchestra pit to higher ground in the lobby. This precaution proved unnecessary later when it developed that the tunnel did not connect with the Merrill.

Probably the hardest hit of the buildings in the vicinity was the Majestic Theatre, Milwaukee's skyscraper and home of the junior Orpheum circuit. When the lights were dimmed in his theatre by the water rushing into the basement, Harry Billings, manager, resorted to torch and lanterns to keep his show running. Elevators in the building were put out of commission and tenants were obliged to walk the fourteen floors.

A Pathe Release

CUTOUTS OF LLOYD SOLD "DR. JACK" IN PORTLAND, OREG.

The Majestic Theatre used three, two of which can be seen on the sidewalk while the third was perched over the box office. We think the sidewalk signs would have worked better on the marquise, to supplement the electrics.

Debonair Brooklyn Manager Dolls Up His Women Ushers

Eddie Hoffman, the debonair manager at Loew's Brevort Theatre, Brooklyn, sprung a new one Sunday night. All his women ushers were dressed in new uniforms, a light gray set off with pink tassels down on the side (his own idea by the way), and he was tickled to death. Ed was also all set for the occasion by appearing in a brand new Tuxedo, while in his buttonhole he wore the inevitable white carnation. He is surrounded by a fine staff and is a great man to keep a house in order.

Harry Seglin has taken over the Strand Theatre, corner Washington avenue and Lincoln place, Brooklyn. This house was formerly owned by John Whipen. Mr. Seglin has made many changes and has everything running in fine order. His partner in this venture is Mr. Pear, owner of the Avon, Ninth street and Fifth avenue.

Frank Pleseia, who was for many years connected with the Rose Theatre at 118th street and Third avenue, New York City, is now manager of the Victoria, 1368 St. John's place, Brooklyn. Frank doesn't change a bit. He still has that diamond horseshoe pin and that big ring he bought in Harlem and there are no silver threads among the gold.

Some years ago when what is now called North Beach (then Bowery Bay), Bill Stanley had charge of one of the Big Casino's there. The act was known as The Stanleys, and some act it was, too. We are reminiscing about Mill Stanley, manager of the Victoria in 125th Street. Bill's been in the show business easily fifty-three years, and to look at him today one would think it was just a few weeks ago. Well, he's up there on the job and full of pep, and there is very little that escapes his eagle eye. He says that he only had one run-in in all his life with any man, and that was when he got the tiger and the zebra mixed up on Noah.

John Green, who opened the Troy Palace Theatre and who afterward took the management of the Cleveland Theatre on Pitkin avenue, is now in full charge of the Court Theatre at South Third street, Brooklyn. This house is one of the finest of its size in this part of the city.

Leon Greenfeld, owner of the Eden Theatre, 201 Atlantic avenue, will shortly open the Atlantic Theatre at 70 Atlantic avenue. This house will undergo many changes and it will be a complete fireproof building. A large lobby will also be added, and when completed will cost $15,000.

Bill Sheehy, manager of Gates Theatre, formed a year ago what is known as Loew's Gates Theatre Employes' Mutual Association, and on Tuesday night they held their first entertainment and ball at Trommer's Hall, Bushwick avenue and Conway street. Several small affairs had been held, but it was decided to do greater things, "big time stuff," and that's how everything turned out.

The Nostrand Theatre, Nostrand avenue near St. Marks avenue, has increased the strength of the orchestra.

Manager Robinson, of Proctors 125th Street Theatre, near Lexington avenue, is a great believer in exploitation and is the promoter of many novel ideas for the front of the house. He is always doing something that will catch the eyes of his patrons. Just now he also is helping needy families to have a Merry Christmas.

"Pop" Fulmer, of the Elite Theatre, 2705 Pitkin avenue, owns and runs that place with his two sons. 'Member him as one of the old timers? Yes, away back when they used to run the reels in a burlap bag and start to rewind them on a lead pencil. "Pop" and his sons have made many alterations both in the place and in the running of the house, and with his knowledge of the business and an excellent run of pictures he's got them coming.

Marcus Loew Withdraws from Field in Windsor, Ontario

Marcus Loew has withdrawn from the theatre field in Windsor, Ontario, the Capitol Theatre Company of Windsor having taken over the Loew Theatre there on December 11. With the change in control, the Loew house has been re-named the Capital Theatre but it has no direct relationship with the chain of Capitol theatres operated throughout Canada by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, it is intimated

On the same date the Capitol Theatre Company also took over the Windsor Theatre which was previously controlled by Allen Theatres, Ltd. Simultaneously, the Empire Theatre, Windsor, was closed permanently, those in control of the Empire being identified with the Capitol Theatre Company.

The policy of the new Capitol Theatre management will be to present both film features and vaudeville with the general admission for afternoon shows of 16 cents and that for evening of 37 cents.

The Loew Theatre in Windsor was built only three years ago when Loew houses were erected in London and Hamilton, Ontario, the idea being to split playing weeks for the vaudeville with London. The Loew Theatre at Hamilton was recently acquired by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, being re-named by the latter corporation and having Oral Cloakey, manager of the Capitol Theatre at Winnipeg, as manager.

The withdrawal of Marcus Loew from Windsor and the closing of the Empire Theatre there has not occasioned real surprise because it has been generally argued that Windsor, with its 45,000 population, has been "over-seated." The Allens disposed of the Windsor Theatre at Windsor some time ago.

The interesting announcement has been made at Toronto, Ontario, that Sam Garr has bought back the National Theatre, Yonge street, from Sol Allen, brother of Jule and J. J. Allen, who was reported to have purchased the house some few months ago. The National is a medium-sized downtown house that has been operated successfully for some years. Mr. Garr has also purchased the People's Theatre, Toronto, also in the downtown section, for the presentation of pictures and vaudeville.

With the appointment of Oral Cloakey, former manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, as manager of the new Capitol Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, there have been several other changes in the management of theatres under the control of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. H. M. Thomas, general supervisor of theatres for the corporation, who has been the resident manager of the big Capitol Theatre in Montreal, has taken temporary charge of the Capitol at Winnipeg while Harry S. Dahn, manager of the Capitol at Regina, Sask., has been made manager of the Montreal Capitol.

John Hazza, manager of the Capitol at Calgary, Alberta, is being transferred to Toronto, the headquarters of the corporation. Leonard Bishop, treasurer of the Winnipeg Capitol, has been transferred to the Calgary Capitol to relieve Manager Hazza. H. A. Bishop, a brother, has been appointed treasurer of the Winnipeg Capitol, after many years in railroad work at Winnipeg.

Gilbert Smith, a Winnipeg theatrical man, has been appointed manager of the Regent Theatre, Winnipeg, one of the newer houses of the Manitoba capital.

All exhibitors and exchange managers of Montreal, Quebec, were scheduled to get together for an annual love feast at Ciro's Cafe, Montreal, on Christmas Eve. Those in charge of the annual function were George Rotzky, manager of the Allen Theatre, Montreal, Maurice Davis, representing the exchanges, and H. M. Hooper. The picture men are to forget all business for the nonce and enjoy a real old-fashioned banquet and cabaret program—such as the law prevailing in Montreal will permit.

The Victoryscope Theatre, Montreal, has been sold to A. Blanchard by J. Astaphan, former proprietor. This is one of the older houses in the city.

Indiana

Bloomington's new picture theatre, the Indiana, operated by Harry P. Vonderschmidt, of Washington, was formally opened last week with "The Storm" as the feature. The opening was a huge success, capacity crowds attending each of the two performances.

The theatre is built of yellow pressed brick, seats 1,300, has three heating plants each of which can be operated independently of the other, and is attractively decorated in ivory. The cost of the building and equipment is estimated at $90,000. Harry M. Palmer, of Washington, is managing director.

Petitions asking the enforcement of the Sunday closing laws against owners or operators of picture theatres in Richmond were circulated in many of the city's churches, Sunday, and it is understood several thousand signatures were obtained. The movement is said to be backed by the Richmond Ministerial Association. Four picture theatres and one vaudeville theatre have been operating in Richmond on Sundays without interference for the last several years. It is understood the ministers intend to submit the petitions to the mayor and prosecuting attorney with a request that the law be enforced.

Wabash bids fair to rival the "Deserted Village" in popularity if someone has the inspiration to chronicle the Sunday "blue laws" that are now in force there. As a sequel to the agitation over the opening of picture theatres on Sundays, the authorities have ordered the law enforced in regard to all other business and as a result restaurants and churches have been the only places open on the last two Sundays. William and Perry Dickson, proprietors of the picture theatre which caused the rumpus, say they will not operate the theatre on Sunday as long as the law is enforced against other businesses.

There is already much "crabbing" on the part of some of the group which was so insistent on the theatres being closed, and it is believed the Dicksons will soon be able to give as many shows as they please without any complaints resulting. The ministers, of course, are much elated over the situation.

Revivals Help Yankees Beat Toughest Show Week of Year

New England exhibitors beat the so-called "toughest show week of the year" by billing revivals of big productions of bygone days. Particularly true was this in Boston, Providence, Lowell and Springfield. In fact, in the Rhode Island capital, two opposition houses billed revivals. William Mahoney, manager of the Rialto, topped his week's bill with "Four Horsemen" and much to his surprise his business on Monday and Tuesday was almost as great as the house record for that period. A couple of blocks away, at the Victory Theatre, "Way Down East" was brought back.

Providence, R. I., exhibitors this week forgot their show business for the time being to give most of their time to putting over the annual minstrel show of the Providence Lodge of Elks, No. 14, at the Elks' Auditorium. The committee in charge of the affair, the proceeds of which will be donated to the Christmas basket fund for the poor, was headed by Martin Touhey, manager of the Emery Theatre, while William Mahoney, of the Rialto, was treasurer.

As was exclusively published in this department last week, the Shubert-Majestic Theatre will revert back to its original owners, the Emery Brothers, on January 1 and several weeks later will re-open with a first-run picture policy. The stage will be renovated and a fifty-piece orchestra installed. High class incidental entertainment will be given to strengthen the picture showing. William Mahoney will in all probability put on the shows. The house is now playing Shubert attractions.

The Victory Theatre on Sunday evening, December 17, staged a special benefit for the Providence News' Christmas fund. Something like $700 was realized from the donations made at the door. "Notoriety" was held over for the occasion. The theatre was crowded and several hundred persons were disappointed in not being able to get into the house.

Local children's revues are quite popular in New England theatres. These are being used for box-office attractions with unusual success. Edward Fay is putting on a "Local Follies" at Fay's Theatre, Providence, this week. Nothing but local talent is being used.

"Robin Hood" opened at the Park Theatre, Boston, Monday night to one of the biggest and most distinguished audiences that has ever attended a first night at that house. The picture is here for an indefinite engagement, its stay depending entirely upon how long the picture draws paying business.

"Lights of New York," Fox's latest melodrama, opened at the Modern-Beacon Monday night. This is a Gordon establishment that is plugging hokum pictures. Next week the Ivan Abramson picture, "Wildness of Youth," is to be shown.

It has been definitely decided by the Providence, R. I., exhibitors that no midnight shows be given Christmas eve, although there is a probability that special shows will be given after midnight, January 1.

In connection with the very successful run of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at the Park Theatre, Boston, the management of that theatre has directed attention to the highly important work done by Edwin Mochary, the manager of the attraction, as one of the big factors in this success. Upon him fell the responsibility of refurnishing and preparing the theatre for the picture's reception, and the most notable work he accomplished in this direction was highly appreciated by both the management and the public who have thronged the popular playhouse during its run.

Boston picture interests were much interested to learn of the marriage of Jack S. Connolly, formerly secretary to ex-Congressman William H. Carter of Massachusetts and now assistant to Will H. Hays, with headquarters at Washington. He has married Miss Helen Maule of St. Louis, Mo., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Maule. They were married at Rockville by the Rev. John R. Henderson.

Panic was narrowly averted Friday, December 8, when a fire started in the projecting booth at Shea's Theatre at Fitchburg, Mass. Frank L. Healey, the proprietor, spoke to the audience in a reassuring manner and quieted their fears, while two of the city's firemen, who were attending the show on off time, extinguished the flames. Traynor Brown, the operator, was badly burned about the face and hands and was sent to the Burbank Hospital. About 1,000 feet of film was destroyed.

The Strand Theatre of Worcester affected a tie-up with the Worcester Telegram by which a coupon clipped from the latter is redeemable for 5 cents at any matinee, except on Saturday or a holiday, in the purchase of a floor seat. The Telegram is advertising this nickel saving as worth while in this season of Christmas shopping, and, incidentally, in calling attention to some of the notable screen productions which are in prospect at this theatre.

The Rialto Theatre at New Bedford lost two films by theft recently. Two youngsters who had attended an afternoon performance grabbed the films, after the performance was over, and coolly walked off with them. The janitor of the theatre witnessed the theft and gave chase, but the boys escaped. The missing films, which are valued at $100, are "The Bond Boy" and "A Matrimonial Boomerang."

The management of the New Bedford Theatre is successfully catering to the large Portuguese population of the Whaling City, and last week presented before large-sized audiences the famous Portuguese picture, "Amor da Perdicano." This picture is based on the novel of the same name, written by Camilo Castelo Branco, who is considered among the foremost of Portuguese authors. The screen version was made by the Invicta Film, Inc., of Oporto, and its interpretation and scenic backgrounds were left entirely in the hands of Portuguese artists.

On last Sunday afternoon and evening, at the same theatre, "Tempesatades da Vida," ("The Storms of Life"), another Portuguese moving picture, was shown successfully. This photoplay was written by Augusto de Lacorda, who plays the role of Pedro Arraes. In addition to the photo-drama, there was a special film showing the flight of the Portuguese aviators, Gago Coutinho and Sacadura Cabral, from Lisbon to Rio de Janeiro.

The Daylies Theatre, at the North End, New Bedford, was opened to the public the latter part of last week under most successful auspices. The initial head-liner was "Deserted at the Altar." A $10,000 organ is one of the many attractions. Paramount and First National pictures are to be shown.

Manager Perkins of the Empire Theatre of New Bedford took advantage of his showing of "Clarence" to extend a cordial invitation to every man in New Bedford beaing the name of Clarence to attend the Monday evening performance as his special guest. Cards, business letter-heads or other identifying matter were all that was necessary to obtain the tickets. The tie-up proved highly successful.

Fire caused damage estimated at $60,000 to the opera house on Water street at Gardiner, Me., late last week. The loss fell on the Russell Amusement Company which used the greater part of the building as a picture house, and upon Claude S. Smith & Co., dry goods dealers, who had a store on the ground floor.

Henry J. Long, formerly an operator at Haverhill and secretary-treasurer of the Haverhill union of operators, was arrested at Springfield last week and returned to Haverhill to answer to a charge of larceny of the union's funds to the amount of $300. He denied his guilt and maintained that the shortage in his accounts was due to his good nature in marking dues of members paid, when they were short of money, rather than see them ousted from membership for non-payment.

The motion picture as an adjunct to a political campaign may not be anything new, but James T. Purcell, candidate for the Boston City Council, introduced a novelty into his campaign last week by touring the city and giving a motion picture show in each of the twenty-six city wards. A parade of 125 automobiles, all illuminated with red flare torches, started from Post-office Square, in the center of Boston's business section. Included in the procession was a big truck carrying a searchlight and the motion picture apparatus, and another one carrying a fifty-piece band. Large crowds turned out at every stop, and the parade dispersed in Newspaper Row shortly after midnight.

The Norwich Palace Theatre Corporation of Norwich, Conn., has recently been incorporated under the laws of Connecticut to operate the Palace Theatre, that city. The capital stock of the new company is $150,000 and it will commence business with $35,000.

The incorporators are Abram A. Spitz of the Spitz Theatre interests, Providence, R. I.; Charles H. Stedman and Herbert M. Leron.

Baltimore

The Metropolitan Theatre, North avenue at Pennsylvania, has been completed after the plans of Otto Simonson & Co., architects, and was opened to the public on Saturday afternoon, December 16. The approximate cost, including the entire building construction containing a number of stores, floor space, bowling alleys and billiard rooms and the theatre equipment, was $325,000.

The building and theatre project was built by Baltimoreans with Baltimore capital. The officers of the Metropolitan Theatre Company operating this theatre are: Dr. Frederick W. Schanze president; August Malthan, vice-president; John Ament, secretary, and J. Alan Fledderman, treasurer.

Dr. Schanze will manage the theatre. Bernard Depkin, Jr., will direct and stage the presentation of the shows. Mr. Depkin is well known as an exhibitor and also operates the Boulevard, Forest Park, Pimlico and a number of other theatres in Baltimore.

"One Week of Love," starring Elaine Hammerstein, was the opening attraction. It was continued as a first run attraction for the entire week, beginning December 18. A private show for invited guests took place on Friday night, December 15. William F. Broening, mayor of Baltimore, and his family were present, as well as other notables.

The seating capacity of the Metropolitan is 1,450 and there is a balcony. There are two entrances, one at the corner of North and Pennsylvania avenues, the other on North avenue.

San Francisco's Film Men Off to Quiet Wild Ducks

C. C. Kaufmann, of the Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, and as a result of his report that wild ducks are so numerous that they disturb the peace of the community, several film exchange managers and salesmen have found that their presence is urgently required in the Sacramento Valley territory. Mr. Kaufmann has purchased the equipment of the Lyric Theatre at San Rafael.

Ed. Stark, of the Opal Theatre, Hollister, was a visitor in San Francisco early in December. He remarked that while the name of this house might seem an odd one, it was, nevertheless an asset, having been used for many years.

W. H. Poole, an exhibitor of Klamath Falls, Ore., was a recent visitor at San Francisco, arranging bookings for 1923. A fire occurred recently in his projection room, but the loan of a machine was secured and shows were presented with but little interruption.

A surprise party was tendered Ellis Arkush on the evening of Deeember 11 by the management of his Burlingame Theatre, thirty-five employes from the four houses in which he is interested being present. He has theatres at Palo Alto, Redwood City, Burlingame and San Mateo. The surprise dinner was held just before his departure on an eastern trip for the holidays.

C. A. Sweeney, who has theatres at Boulder Creek and Brookdale, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco and announced that he had ciosed his houses for two months, owing to the rainy weather.

F. N. Nishioka, owner of the Ryan Theatre, Fresno, Cal., sailed recently for Japan on a visit.

Francis Egan, who recently purchased the Liberty Theatre at Lemoore, Cal., has since had the misfortune to lose his home by fire.

The Glade Theatre at Lindsay, Cal., is being remodeled under the direction of Arthur Wobber.

The Hayward Theatre, Hayward, Cal., is being enlarged and a gallery added. Shows are being presented in a temporary location while the work is under way.

J. J. McNamara, who was building a large picture theatre at Martinez, Cal., passed away recently. He was a newcomer in the amusement business, but was well known in Martinez.

L. R. Crook, for many years with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit and later with the T. & D. Jr., Circuit, has organized the National Theatre Syndicate and has opened offices in the Loew Theatre Building, San Francisco. He has since sailed for Honolulu on a business mission.

M. L. Markowitz, head of the New York and San Francisco Amusement Co., which operates the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, has decided to install a musical comedy company commencing December 23, but will continue to make use of moving pictures.

Pantages Theatre, Oakland, Cal., has added feature pictures to the regular vaudeville show, the first offering being "Glass of Fashion," featuring Irene Castle.

The Balboa Theatre in Westwood Park, San Francisco's famous scenic residential district, will be formally opened on December 23. The house is owned by Samuel H. Levin, former owner of the Haight and Coliseum theatres.

J. G. Von Herberg, trustee of the First National Film Co., was a visitor at San Francisco from Seattle, early in December.

Alex. Salomon is promoting a project for the erection of a 1,300-seat theatre at Lodi, Cal.

The Golden Gate Productions, Inc., has entered the moving picture producing field at San Francisco and has opened offices in the Chronicle Building. The officers are: L. S. Jennings, president; E. M. Levin, vice-president, and Mark E. Levy, secretary-treasurer. J. L. Dewey is production manager and Walter Law is supervising director.

Circle in Kansas City Has Narrow Escape from Panic

The Circle Theatre, a Kansas City suburban house, was threatened by fire Tuesday night, December 12. Shortly after the second evening show had started, fire was discovered on the stairway leading to the basement in the front part of the theatre. D. J. Steel, manager, instructed ushers to open side and rear exits and then walking to the center of the stage he announced that the show would have to stop. He also requested the patrons to use the open exits in leaving the theatre.

The audience was calm in leaving the theatre and many did not know that the building was on fire until they reached the street. No one was injured. The fire started when flames from an oil-burning furnace set fire to a pile of papers. Very little smoke entered the auditorium, but considerable damage was done to an adjacent drug store and two suites of rooms on the second floor.

W. L. McDowell recently sold the Bancroft Theatre, a suburban house of Kansas City, to L. A. Wallace.

J. E. Albright, who owns the Community Theatre at Holt, Mo., was a visitor at some of the film exchanges the early part of this week.

Charley Sears, Lee Jones and Tom A. Wasgein of the Sears and Jones Circuit, were also in town doing some Christmas film shopping.

Robert Rhoades has leased the Gillham Theatre, Kansas City suburban house, to the Gillham Amusement Co. Mr. Rhoades has been with the Gillham for nine years and it is rumored that he intends going to California for a long rest.

Judd and Rardin of the Orpheus Theatre at Excelsior Springs, Mo., were in town.

C. W. Hunt of the Rex Theatre at Higginsville, Mo., was another exhibitor who dropped in.

The future of the Doric Theatre, which was damaged to the extent of $60,000 in a large explosion two weeks ago, is still uncertain. Sam Harding, who has the lease on the theatre, which is a downtown house, has not decided whether or not he will repair the building for theatre purposes. The theatre has been closed all season, but was sublet a week before the explosion.

L. A. Wagner of the Princess Theatre at Eureka, Kas., was another visitor this week. Mr. Wagner was doing his Christmas shopping early.

E. L. Balfour, who has the Orpheum Theatre at Springfield, Mo., was also a caller.

C. E. Cook, manager of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas; Clair M. Patee, Patee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; A. F. Baker, Electric Theatre, R. G. Liggett, Gauntier Theatre, and M. Van Praag, Art Theatre, all of Kansas City, Kas., made a trip to Chicago last week. It was purely a business trip, but they did find time to visit some of the larger picture theatres in Chicago.

Recent local visitors were: S. A. Davidson, who has the Princess Theatre, Neodesha, Kas.; Edward Boylston, of the Victorian Theatre, Hiawatha, Kas.; A. Baber, of Edgerton, Mo.; Pete Evans, of the Liberty Theatre, Cherryvale, Kas.; John Courter, who owns the Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo., and Clair M. Patee, of the Patee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.

North Carolina

The grim monster, influenza, which stalked throughout the land with such disastrous results in 1918, is again prevalent in many cities of North Carolina. Statesville and High Point, it is reported, have been closed for some days, all theatres, places of amusement, etc., being forbidden to open. In many other cities, including Wilmington and Charlotte, it is prevalent but has not become widespread to such an extent that authorities have deemed it necessary to take such stringent measures.

The large Academy Theatre, Charlotte, was burned to the ground early Sunday morning, December 17. The entire building was a total loss, even the walls crumbling into the street in a fire that for hours threatened a big portion of the downtown business section. It is in the same block with the Imperial, Broadway and Ideal, neither of which, however, was damaged. The Academy was the largest theatre in Charlotte, under lease to Southern Enterprises, Inc., and was playing a combination program. Announcement as to whether or not it will be rebuilt could not be obtained this week.

Charlotte entertained many of the Carolina exhibitors during the past week, the occasion being the annual ceremonial of Oasis Temple of the Mystic Shrine, many new candidates crossing the burning sands. U. T. Rice, of the Piedmont Amusement Company, Winston-Salem and Marsh Morrow, of the White Way, Dun, N. C., were among the number. A large majority of the exhibitors of North Carolina are Shriners, and Brother E. F. Dardine, who was chairman of the entertainment committee, of course, looked out for the comfort of his brother exhibitors. Dardine has the record of having been on nearly every entertainment committee ever named in Charlotte.

H. H. Anderson, who formerly owned a chain of seven theatres in the two Carolinas, has moved his residence from Hamlet to Charlotte, and it is rumored will at an early date announce the acquisition of another theatre circuit.

H. B. Varner, of Lexington, secretary of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., was in Charlotte the past week on business in connection with the mid-winter convention. "Our organization has a larger membership right now than ever before," declared Mr. Varner.

J. E. Simpson, of Gastonia, was a caller on Charlotte's Film Row the past week.

Film Exchange Personalities

Albany

Goldwyn opened offices in Albany on December 18, occupying quarters in Broadway, vacated last week by Select. Charles Walders is in charge of the exchange. Gilbert Becker, who was office manager for Select, in Albany, will remain with Goldwyn. At the present time, there are about a dozen exchanges located in Albany.

William Allen, salesman for Universal out of here, returned Saturday from a two-weeks' swing through Northern New York, which brought with it plenty of good business. According to Mr. Allen, 90 per cent of the houses in the north country are doing a good business these days.

"Pop" Filkins, who works out of Albany for Merit, has just completed a successful trip through Western New York in promoting Betty Blythe specials. Mr. Filkins is booking "How Women Love" heavily over the circuit.

Vic Bendell, who has been with Goldwyn out of Albany for eight years, has just connected up with F. B. O.

Harry Bernstein, of Buffalo, who took the place of M. A. Chase as manager of Universal's territory, including Albany, spent two or three days this week in the Capital City.

Few exhibitors are visiting the exchanges these days. The majority drop into town during the early fall and book up for the entire winter.

Henry E. Wilkinson, former manager of Select's Albany office, just closed, will remain in Albany, however, as a sort of resident manager for the company, although the shipping will be done from the New York and Buffalo offices.

Local exchanges are hard hit for coal these days and many are being forced to use buckwheat coal. In a way, the exchanges are not faring as well as the theatres.

Marie Wheeler, managing Merit's exchange in Albany, and who has the distinction of being the only woman managing a film exchange in the state, has just booked one of the post-nature storiettes at the Mark Strand here for Christmas week. These storiettes are being shown at the Capitol, Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York City.

Universal's office in Albany has taken on a holiday aspect with its red shaded lights and window decorations.

Word reached Albany this week that Nu-Art had closed its Buffalo office and joined hands with Grand and North, to be known from now on as "The Bond Company." Past and future releases of the two companies, however, will be distributed through the former offices of Grand and North in this city.

"One Week of Love" has just been closed for twelve towns by Henry E. Wilkinson. Mr. Wilkinson has also booked this Selznick special, together with "Pawned," over the entire Myer Schine circuit. "One Week of Love" will be shown at the Leland in Albany for a straight week beginning January 8, while the Lincoln, in Troy, will run it between Christmas and New Years. Mr. Wilkinson left Saturday to spend the week-end in New York, as the guest of Charles O'Reilly, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the state.

Gilbert P. Josephson

Buffalo

Gilbert P. Josephson has arrived in Buffalo to take charge of exploitation at the F. B. O. exchange. Last week he advanced on Lockport, N. Y., and put over the first co-operative page ad ever used in the Lockport Union-Sun and Journal in the course of his campaign on "In the Name of the Law," which he aided Manager Robert Kane put over at the Hi-Art Theatre. Mr. Josephson just now is busy getting out some very attractive lobby displays on "The Third Alarm," and when some of these are set up in front of local theatres they sure are going to attract attention.

J. D. Mooney has resigned as local sales manager for Associated Exhibitors and has gone to Cleveland to enter the independent exchange business. He has been succeeded here by Harry E. Thompson, who has been with Hodkinson in New York.

Manager Earl Kramer has engaged "Vic" Bendell as a member of the F. B. O. sales staff covering the Syracuse territory. Walter Bengough is no longer associated with the F. B. O. staff.

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro office, has cause for joy at this season of the year. The two weeks just closed have been called Kahn weeks. The salesmen made special effort to get business. They did. They sent in a record amount of it and now it looks like Henry has got to give the boys some decorations for the Christmas trees.

The happiest guy along Film Row these days is one Gene Markens, member of the First National sales staff, who has won third prize in the recently closed sales contest held throughout the country. The prize consists of some 150 iron men, with which Gene expects to buy Buffalo.

The Universal sales staff has lost Charles Faust and J. G. Fater. Neither have as yet announced their plans for the future.

The Goldwyn exploitationist, Irving Zeltner, is in New York for the Christmas holidays which he is spending with the home folks.

Basil Brady and Louis Schindler, of the Pathe office, are also in Gotham.

The Carolinas

J. U. McCormick, Charlotte manager for Select, announces the closing of his office on December 16 He states, however, that he will still reside in Charlotte, handling this territory for both the Atlanta and Washington offices of Select.

Wm. Conn, well-known film man, has recently opened an office in Charlotte for F. B. O. He announces all prints working and success for the new office beyond his fondest expectations.

M. J. Sparks is packing a portfolio through the Carolinas in the interest of American Releasing Corporation.

George V. Atkinson, prize salesman of the Pathe office, Charlotte, is concentrating at present on Pearl White's new serial, "Plunder," and reports 100 per cent. bookings so far.

E. F. Dardine, manager of the Charlotte Universal exchange, was chairman of the entertainment committee for the annual ceremonial of Oasis Temple, Mystic Shrine, held in Charlotte during the past week.

James B. Buchanan, Pathe's cameraman in the Southeast, recently shot some wonderful mountain scenes in North Carolina around Chimney Rock, which are being shown in Pathe Review.

R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, has purchased "Sure-Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, for the southeastern states.

T. A. Branon, general manager of Eltabran Film Company, Charlotte and Atlanta, has spent the past week in the Charlotte exchange.

San Francisco

The annual meeting of the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade was held December 8 when officers for the ensuing term were chosen and changes made in the by-laws. The new officers are: President, Sidney Goldman, of the Film Booking Offices; vice-president, Morgan Walsh, of the Federated exchange; secretary, G. C. Parsons, of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and attorney, Milton A. Nathan. A general meeting will be held each month at the Whitcomb Hotel, and all claims and routine business will in the future be handled by a board of governors, consisting of the officers and two additional members. The outside members chosen for the first term are Carol Nathan, manager of Universal, and W. A. Crank, manager of the American Releasing Corporation.

The American Photo Player Company, which has occupied temporary quarters at 134-146 Golden Gate avenue, since the disastrous fire of a few months ago, will shortly return to its old home at 109 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, reconstruction work being well in hand. More space will be occupied than formerly.

Manager W. A. Crank, of the San Francisco branch of the American Releasing Corporation, has added three new salesmen to his staff. These are Gust. Oren, who will cover Northern California; E. W. Kruckeberg, who will visit exhibitors in the Bay territory, and Stuart A. Findlay, who will now [illegible] San Joaquin Valley field.

Pittsburgh

H. M. Wilkinson has just been appointed exploitation director at the Pittsburgh First National exchange, succeeding Nick Wagner, who has gone to Erie to manage Rowland and Clark's Perry Theatre there. Mr. Wilkinson comes here from New York where he was employed at the First National home office. However, he is well known in the local territory, having served in a similar capacity for the Silverman Brothers at the Strand Theatre, Altoona. He is an old-timer in the show game, and consequently he is well-versed with the various problems that confront the exhibitors, especially in the exploitation end of the business.

Messrs. Alexander and Davis, of the Columbia Film Service, Inc., Pittsburgh, took a day off recently to go hunting in the wilds near Prospect, Pa. During their absence, another partner, Ed Lebby, was in charge of the office, and he says he was worried all day for fear that the boys would shoot each other. But nevertheless, they returned safe and sound to the city—each with one rabbit.

Abe Steinberg, manager of the S. & S. Film & Supply Company, is a proud daddy, Mrs. Steinberg having presented him with a seven-pound baby girl a few days ago. Congratulations, Abe!

A. F. Marrone, formerly installation man with the local U. T. E. office, has resigned his position, and accepted a similar one with the S. & S. Film & Supply Co.

Robert Smeltzer, eastern division manager for Pathe's is spending a few days in Pittsburgh at the local exchange branch. Wesley C. Bachmeyer, Metro division manager, was also a recent visitor.

Sam Fineberg and Guy Ainsworth, of the Hodkinson exchange, recently drove to Pittsburgh from Erie on a wet day in the former's Durant car. Roads were bad, and Sam was not satisfied if he was not "doing forty." Guy says it takes a lot to make him squawk, but he came pretty close to a little squeak.

The Universal exchange held a trade showing at the Cameo Theatre, Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, on Sunday afternoon, December 17, at which there were about 700 people, exhibitors and their families. The principal attraction was Frank Mayo's "The Flaming Hour." Also shown were opening episodes of the new serials, "Social Buccaneer" and "Around the World in 18 Days"; also one of the "Leather Pushers" series and some of the comedy shorts.

Cleveland

William Skirball, distributor of Warner Brothers' pictures in Ohio, has pulled off a big stunt by engaging Wesley Barry for personal appearances, beginning with the Allen Theatre Christmas week. "Heroes of the Street" will be shown.

Carl Mechener, who has been shipper for Metro, has been promoted to booker in the Cleveland exchange. Sam Gorrel, the booker, has become assistant manager of the Kansas City Select exchange.

General Sales-Manager E. W. Saunders and W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager for Metro, were in Northern Ohio last week, calling on theatres in Cleveland, Canton and Akron.

Maurice Safier is the new manager for the United Artists exchange in Cleveland, succeeding King Evans, who was transferred to Canada.

Chicago

The Universal premiere of "The Flirt" to the trade was pulled off at the Randolph Theatre last week and a large number of the exhibitors and trade folks were on hand for the showing, under the direction of Sales Managers Herman Stern and J. Lesserman.

Charley Heede is now with the Goldwyn office in the sales department and B. T. Phelps has joined the sales staff of Progress Pictures.

The trade showing of "Thunder," latest Pearl White serial, was pulled off at the Illinois Theatre and the trade was out in force for the first look.

Exploitation Manager Bonns will direct the campaign to put over the Goldwyn Daily News prize photoplay, "Broken Chains," and Walter D. Neal, publicity manager of the Chicago office, is already at work on the details of the campaign.

Louis Kramer, of the F. B. O. office, is kept busy these winter days with plans for publicity of the various attractions handled through the office here and had a large crowd out for the trade showing of "Thelma" at the Barbee Loop Theatre last week. J. J. Lynch is now covering Indiana territory for the office and expects to put over a lot of business before the year is gone.

Jeff Lazarus has resigned from Associated First National Pictures and about the first of the year will assume charge of Sid Grauman's publicity on the West Coast.

The new offices of Famous Players-Lasky at Peoria, Ill., are busy with business of the territory and the men who have been transferred there from other branches are hard at work to make a record for the first month the office has been in operation. The personnel of the new branch is as follows:

Milton M. Hirsch, branch manager; Joseph Griffin, accessories manager; Jack Frost, booker; W. G. Carmichael, salesman; A. W. Frieml, salesman; L. C. O'Connor, salesman; H. D. Charness, salesman.

Dan Roach, manager of the Chicago exploitation department of Famous Players, is away on a two-weeks' trip to Charlotte, S. C., on business and Will Danziger is keeping the boys keyed up on the latest publicity angles in the territory during his absence.

The new Peoria office of Paramount pictures under Milton Hirsch is a busy place these days and the staff of bookers and salesmen are hard after the business. The new office takes in some of the best towns in the state, such as Springfield, Jacksonville and Quincy.

Atlanta

H. W. Clark, of Goldwyn, is the recipient of the sincere sympathy of all his friends on the death of his four-months'-old daughter, one of twins. Mrs. Clark died a little over three months ago. Mr. Clark is cashier of the Goldwyn company and one of the best-liked men on Film Row.

Hugh Cardoza, one of the best known men in the film game, and who is at present exploitation representative for Associated First National is seriously ill at an Atlanta hospital.

There is a temporarily vacant office in Paramount's luxurious quarters in the Howard Theatre Building. Dan Michalove has gone to New York for a short business trip.

Hugh Manning, of the Manning and Wink combination, was glimpsed on Film Row last week.

St. Louis

Well, Jimmy went and done it. Some thought it wasn't possible, but it was. During the past week James H. Bradford, road salesman for the local American Releasing Corporation branch, officially announced his marriage in Minneapolis, Minn., on August 7, last, to Miss Etta Stannus, of Quincy, Ill.

Little Daniel chased Jimmy all over the world before he finally shot an arrow into him. The pursuit took him through Mexico, Hawaii, Philippines, Japan, China, Canada and even California. But what the movies and straight theatricals couldn't accomplish, the combination of oil and a pretty, winsome girl brought about.

It will be recalled that Jimmy deserted the pictures for a brief period last year, going to Quincy to become manager of the Quincy Oil Corporation. Well, that is what done it. While working about specific gravity, etc., Jimmy met Miss Stannus, who is the daughter of Mrs. F. E. Stannus, of Quincy, and the balance is now history.

Al Lichtman, of the Al Lichtman Corporation, was the guest of Harry Weiss, First National manager, during a brief stay in St. Louis.

Another First National visitor was S. Keeley, of the Service Division, Department of Distribution, Associated First National Pictures.

H. S. Brown is in St. Louis in the interest of the Tri-Art Pictures. This company's product is founded on famous paintings and are two-reels each. Brown expects to spend several weeks in this city. His product is being handled through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Four of the series have already been released. "The Bashful Suitor," the first of the series, is being shown at the Del Monte Theatre.

A Paramount Pep Club has been organized by the local Paramount workers. Each Monday evening is devoted to an entertainment and dance. The latest Paramount pictures are included on the program and after refreshments dancing is enjoyed.

James Gregg, Fox salesman, lost his daughter, Delores, 12 years old, during the past week. The child had been sick only a short time.

Canada

The second annual convention of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributor of Paramount releases in Canada, was held at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, during the week of December 11, with C. E. Akers, general manager of the Canadian exchange, presiding. The Paramount policy for 1923 was outlined and a declaration of plans was made.

Mr. Akers declared that although film conditions throughout Canada are steadily improving, they were not yet entirely removed from certain false standards which prevailed until a year or two ago.

The convention was attended by managers and chief salesmen of the six branches of the Canadian company at Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. Heads of various departments from the home office in New York were also present to gain first-hand impressions on conditions in the Dominion.

A feature of the convention was the publication in the Toronto Telegram of a Paramount page on December 16, showing the Paramount releases which were being played at ten of the theatres operated in Toronto by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation for the week of December 18.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

How An Exploiteer Feels About Eggs; Pathetic Letter From a Field Worker

ABOUT two weeks ago Harold F. Wendt, now an exploiteer for F. B. O., dropped into town and of course came in for a call. And one of the things he wanted to know was why business was so patchy.

"I hit one ton," he explained, "and things could not be better. Ten miles away and they have crepe on the door and immortelles on the box office. Another fifteen miles and business is good again."

We explaned that a great deal depended upon the manager, particularly in a one-house town. One man makes business; the other kills it.

Hence These Tears

And a couple of days later Max Rosenfield was showing a letter from a field man to the home office explaining why he did not get results in a certain town. It is so typical of a certain type of alleged manager that we got permission to publish it, without identification marks.

The exploitation man had jumped forty or fifty miles to help a smaller house put over "When Knighthood Was in Flower." He had with him a doll used for contest schemes, and an abundance of pep. When he sat down to type his letter to Leon Bamberger, he still had the doll, but his pep was exhausted.

This house is in the average sized town able to support two newspapers. It has established industries and a largely non-foreign population. The reason business was poor is shown in this letter:

A Tale of Woe

"I got there around ten o'clock Thursday morning—with the doll—my head full of ideas, and all cocked and primed to 'put 'er over.' There was no one at the theatre. I waited a few minutes and then got to scouting around on a little 'asking for the manager' trip and found that he had gone out of town for a few days. I wrote him a letter asking him to give me a little co-operation, almost one week ago. His landlady told me she knew he was gone for over Sunday.

"The theatre is run by two men and I then tried to locate the other one, but no luck, so I sure had to do some thinking. I had been there before and I knew how tight he was and I thought it best to get his or their authority to spend a little money.

Know Nothing Usher

"Finally the usher came around and I asked him about getting hold of the operator. He was dumb. Had been there all his life and did not know where we could find the operator. Well, to make a long story short, I fooled the entire morning away trying to get started, so by afternoon I was absolutely disgusted, but I took it upon myself to spend some money for him. So I arranged with the evening paper for that resemblance contest, giving away prizes of $5, $3, $2, and a couple tickets. That is not much of an inducement, but I was afraid to say more for fear he would object.

"Next I got the Superintendent of Schools and found that they were having a teachers' convention. Teachers from the county there, so I had them arrange their schedule so as to be the guest of the theatre for Saturday morning. I knew how he was on tickets so I didn't do a thing with the newspaper ad or the doll.

Both Hard Boiled

"About four fifteen the OTHER manager came down and to begin with he said he was too busy to monkey with me. Finally I got to talk with him and tried to explain the thing to him. He said he couldn't do a thing without ———, the one who is away. I talked with him for some time and he assured me of the fact that they would not buy the doll, and that they would absolutely not give away any, ANY free tickets. So at last I sprung the screening on him, and you should have seen and heard him rave: 'NO, I WON'T have them in my house. WHAT, that many people to see a picture when we are trying to get all we can.' There would have been possibly sixty teachers.

"I tried to show him the value of the advertising from newspapers and etc., but he said: 'NO, he WOULDN'T have such a thing.' So all I could do was to forget the screening. I am very hard to get sore but from then on in my Irish-Scotch or whatever it is, was up. I realized that I was up against some miser, and a damn fool. They may be getting business but why not try to get more.

Took An Appeal

So at last I thought I would go over his head and I had the operator try to find the other man. I thought perhaps he would give me authority for something at least. I talked to him for about five minutes and he said he could not do a thing while he was away.

"I am not trying to spend exhibitors' money and I always prove to them that I am not, but you know there are times when a man must spend a little. What could a fellow do when you were working with a man who wouldn't spend twenty dollars and a few free tickets and his house for a screening for a picture like 'Knighthood?' So all I did was to arrange the resemblance contest and I have my doubts that he will carry it through, because the paper he does all his advertising with would not take it so I went to the other paper which liked it fine."

A Week for a Day

When David Chait, of the Palace Theatre, Flemington, N. J., saw that he was playing "The Song of Life" during "Apple Week," he hooked the First National to the campaign. Repeating the slogan that an apple a day keeps the doctor away, he announced that all patrons must bring three apples, which were donated to a Children's Home.

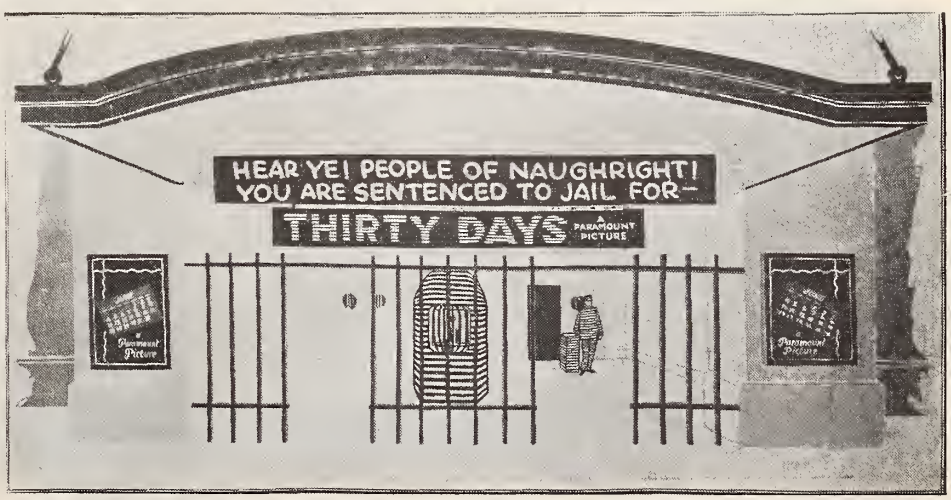
Behind the Bars for Thirty Days

Mindful of the success of the "Gilded Cage," the Paramount lobby suggestor repeats the idea for the new feature, "Thirty Days." Just why the box office should be put in convict stripes is not apparent, but the black and white is not going to hurt the effect in the least. The ticket box and the doorman are done up to match.

The beauty of the idea is that it makes a good flash at a very small cost. The sawmill can supply the rods cheaply, or you can plane down one by twos to get eight sided rods that will be close enough, and the lumber can be stored and used again in slightly changed form for other pictures.

Of course the sign is changed to suit the name of the town. Naughright is merely put in as a horrible example. It is too small to have even a lockup, let alone a picture house.

If you want to build up the idea you can put in cells with cutout star prisoners and introduce other small refinements. Paramount merely offers the bare idea.



A Paramount Release

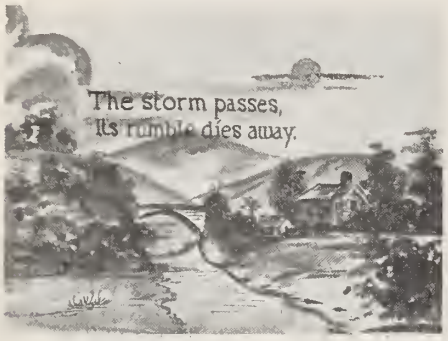
A SUGGESTION FOR A LOBBY DISPLAY ON "THIRTY DAYS"

It is merely the gilded cage with the gilt taken off, and you can build up the idea with many touches according to your familiarity with penitentiaries. Your own town should be lettered instead of Naughright on the banners.

Had Organ Prologue for Universal Play

Prologues cost money and are not always worth the money they cost, but the Tompkins Theatre, Colorado Springs, used an organ prologue instead of a prelude for "The Storm."

Joe Koehler, the manager, planned a set of seven slides to be run in conjunction with a descriptive piece played by the organist, Frank W. Thomas. The first slide announced the original composition, "The Passing Storm," and the others were descriptive of the phases of the composition as shown by the slide reproduced.



A Universal Release

ONE OF THE SLIDES

These slides were specially painted, but often this cost can be dodged by lettering old prints and making slides from these, or making straight slide reproductions and then lettering in, where it is desired that the print be not defaced.

It is not necessary to write an original composition. There are a number of storm selections available, such as the overture to William Tell, and similar descriptive music may be had for other titles.

The idea gives a prologue value without prologue cost, and Mr. Koehler has made a distinct contribution to theatre economics.

London Makes Record Selling 'Foolish Wives

The most elaborate campaign for "Foolish Wives" was that planned for the London run at the New Oxford Theatre by Edwin J. Smith, managing director of European Motion Pictures Co., and our own Ben Grimm.

Included in the street work were an even dozen masked girls who paraded the streets in costumes duplicating one of those worn by Maud Earl in the play. Lettered sashes were their only advertisement and they got so much attention that the police requested the management to keep them off certain streets where traffic jams were likely to result.

Somewhat similar was a parade of seven short skirted shop girls, each carrying a hat home to "Foolish Wives." They got even more attention than their longer skirted sisters for obvious reasons.

The same seven girls were also used to paint a gigantic sign in reproduction of one of the plan book advertisements. The work was laid in by professionals and the girls put on the finishing touches and were not urged to great speed.

A bus load of a dozen von Stroheims were sent around the city, and two others manoeuvered around in a three-wheeled car, covering the outlying districts, and a crowning stunt was selling one of the daily papers on printing the story of the play and announcing it on the contents bill. The news vendors are not allowed to cry their headlines, but are given posters about the size of one sheets on which the leading items are listed. The headline for the star was "'Foolish Wives' Crowd the New Oxford," startled the conservative Londoners.

The ever popular sandwich men were employed in large numbers and electric signs occupied some of the best locations.

It was one of the most ambitious campaigns ever worked anywhere, and it put the picture over to enormous business for a number of weeks.

Publishers Aid Film Publicity

Crosset and Dunlap, who publish the popular edition of Hungry Hearts, are doing practical publicity work for the Goldwyn picture in the shape of two window cards supplied all dealers handling their publications. It is not necessary for the theatre to land the cards on the dealer. All the house had to do is to ride on the publicity.

A Goldwyn Release

ONE OF THE CARDS

The larger of the two cards is shown in the reproduction, being done in red and black, the red so sparingly used as to get the best result instead of reducing to the level of the usual two-color card where each color fights the other. This card is about 14 by 23 inches. The other is slightly smaller and carries for illustration the front cover of the jacket. Both will help the sale of the play. Make certain, if you book the play, that dealers know in time to procure the cards if they have not received them, but the idea is to put them to all dealers at once.

One man's meat may be another's poison. Suit your exploitation stunts to the class of patrons you most desire to attract. Know the tastes of your clients.

A FEW OF THE ELABORATE EXPLOITATION STUNTS FOR FOOLISH WIVES IN LONDON

Edwin J. Smith, managing director for the European Motion Pictures Co., the English Universal company, planned a number of stunts which equal the best we have done over here. The top row shows the shopgirls with hat boxes for "Foolish Wives" and twelve perambulators dressed as is Maud Earle in the play. The shopgirls were also used to paint a gigantic sign, and twelve von Stroheims were given a bus ride

ENLISTING THE MAYOR REVIVES A HACKNEYED STUNT

First National Exhibitors hate to let go of an idea. Now they are pinning the old clothes stunt to "Oliver Twist." The Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, enlisted the aid of the mayor to give a new bounce to the timeworn idea.

Max Doolittle

Max Doolittle, a member of the exploitation staff of the Famous Players-Lasky, died at his home, 1179 Churchill avenue, St. Paul, Friday, December 15. Working out of the Minneapolis office through Minnesota and the Canadian territory, he contracted pneumonia some months ago and several times his life was despaired of, but he was gradually regaining his strength when an intestinal complication set in.

Max Doolittle first came into prominence through his work in the Des Moines territory, and his work in obtaining from the local papers a stirring testimonial as to the value to the paper of the various theatre hook-ups was a signal aid to exploiters in all sections of the country, who were enabled to use these letters to convince their own publishers.

He was an active and aggressive publicity man, inventing a number of the now standard stunts, including the automobile doorknob and the milk bottle card. For a few weeks he was brought into New York in an effort to put the Criterion Theatre into some semblance of life, but lacking the co-operation of his associates, he was again transferred to the field.

Personally he was one of the most likable men in a business where an agreeable personality is almost a requisite, and he numbered his friends by the hundreds. He was married and is survived by his widow, but had no children.

We feel a sense of personal loss in the passing of Max Doolittle, for he was one of the best of the clan, and his passing is a distinct loss to the industry.

Changed the Design

On the 24-sheet for "The Cowboy and the Lady" are these two characters in larger than life size. Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., cut them out for either side of the lobby and then ran real rope from the cowboy's hand to the neck of the lady, spelling out the title of the play in its transit across a backing board. It cost only $6.

Made Patrons Laugh and Got Their Coin

Roy Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., took advantage of the first cold snap, plus the coal shortage, to get out a novelty herald on Calvert's Valley.

It was headed "This thrilling motion picture free" and went on to tell of the feature and the supporting reels then added that the pictures, the music and all of the comforts of the house were absolutely free, BUT—he was charging regular prices to keep his patrons warm for ninety minutes.

The exact text reads: "But—we will charge you 5-10-20 or 25 cents for keeping you warm for 90 minutes on this, the coldest day of winter, and that's cheaper than you can keep warm at home. Come down to the Noble and be comfortable while you enjoy the big picture program—absolutely free."

Save that for a real cold snap.

These stunts have a real KICK in them. They bring in the customers.

Eighty Cent Lobby for "Burning Sands"

Using the red and yellow bunting from "The Sheik" for "Burning Sands" enabled C. A. Crute, of the Lyric Theatre, Huntsville, Ala., to put the receipts up 30 per cent. on an investment of eighty cents.

He changed the style of the drape, to gain a new effect, and burned a flasher sign in a pile of sand in the lobby, the letters showing only when the current was on. Cutout letters for the title, lighted with red, threw their glow upon the sand pile and helped the effect. This was the only lobby lighting.

Special hand lettered cards were used for window work with a number of insert cards and all paper was posted a full week in advance.

Two Printings

A number of theatres are using a booklet with the rather unoriginal "What I Know About Women," this time by "Nero." It is stale stuff, but it seems always to get over. Most of these are four page cover and four pages white insert all blank except the cover and the house page.

The Apollo, Indianapolis, prints the cover and the third cover page, which involves two printings, unless the cover is supplied ready printed by the Fox exchanges. It would be better to print the front and back covers and omit the inside pages.

Fine Slab Front on "Brawn of the North"

Dignity combined with effectiveness characterizes the front used by C. R. Sullivan, of the Fair Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, on "Brawn of the North." This is built of slabs, with a window for the box office and four panels for the posters, also framed in slab. It is one of the best designs for a log front that we have ever reproduced.

In the foreground is shown a chained wolf which is the mother of two wolf-dogs very like "Strongheart." For some reason they do not show in the photograph, but they were chained to the curb on either side. They got a great deal of attention which was transferred to the picture, for the first instinctive act was to compare them with the posters shown on the front. Police dogs can be used where wolf dogs are not available, but it is better to cage them, for their own protection as well as that of the public.

The two wolf dogs, ringers for Strongheart, were not included in the photograph for some reason. This simple yet handsome front was conceived by C. R. Sullivan, of the Fair Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, for the First National release.

Made Extra Drive on "Prisoner of Zenda"

Raymond Willie, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, wanted to see what he could do with "The Prisoner of Zenda," and he helped his publicity promoter, George D. Watters, extend himself.

A hardware concern was building an extension to its establishment, and they sold the billboard rights to the Palace. This gave a stand which will take five twenty-four sheets comfortably and six with a little crowding. It was between two of the principal business thoroughfares and had the additional attraction value that attaches to any building operation. The first use of the stand was to put up five twenty-fours for Zenda in two styles.

At the same time an animated display of the castle was made for the foyer. This was as large as a six sheet and showed two circular towers with an arched gateway between. This was backed by a second gate in the distance and a straight backing of purple velvet beyond the second opening. The moving figures were worked between the first and second planes and clever lighting enhanced the effect.

On the playing date this display was moved into the lobby and at the same time a larger castle was built on top of the canopy. This gave a balcony effect and displayed six cutouts from the posters against a backing of royal purple velvet. Purple gold was the general decorative scheme. The towers were fifteen feet in height and made a fine display up and down the street. With a soloist from the Chicago Opera Company to augment the feature, there was no trouble in bettering business by a third; a sizable increase in so large a house.

Good Gravy for Program Display

Eddie Hyman went up state the other day to stage the first show for one of the new Mark-Strand houses. The Brooklyn manager is usually selected to put on the opening shows for the out-of-town houses, and he put together a splendid program.

One of the items was a creeper title with copy which promises to be so useful that we annexed a copy. It can be adapted to houses already opened by cutting out references to the first performance. Save it up. You will need it some time. It runs:

TO OUR PATRONS:

It is our promise to give you every time you visit this theatre, a program built along the same entertainment principles as the one you have just honored by awarding it your plaudits. This theatre—just dedicated to your pleasure—will pursue a policy of presenting distinctive photoplays from the realm of romance, drama and comedy. These attractions will be the big productions, featuring the leading stars. In addition to the best in the world of screen amusement, the latest in musical novelties and other attractions such as have just pleased you, will be a part of every program in this theatre. Please regard our first program as an advance notice of many pleasant hours to come.

Tied to Y. M. C. A.

The Tacoma branches of the Y. M. C. A. have an annual Father and Son week. Ralph Winsor, of the Colonial Theatre, not only ties the Y. M. C. A. to "Remembrance" for this special week, but he went after "Rotary and Kiwanis" and the churches and tied them all to the Y, and so to the showing of "Remembrance." Then gift dealers were tied in from that angle and not only gave their windows, but contributed to a co-operative page, as well.

If you have no such week, it is a simple matter to work on the Y secretary if you begin early enough.

Window Worker Is New Japanese Idea

Window displays are old stories in most countries, but Japan has just surrendered to the Oriental Harry Swift, who in this instance happens to be Hugo Amberg, Japanese representative for Universal.

He worked what is believed to be the first window display in Japan on "Foolish Wives" with a set of four oil paintings, and the statement that "Foolish Wives" are those who do not use Hoshi Thiol as their household remedy.

Hoshi is a prosperous pharmacist and he did so well with his Thiol sales that he wants to hook in again. It always works.

Add This One

Add to the "blind" man who would give a thousand dollars to see a specified picture, the convict perambulator whose sign announces "I broke jail to see ...."

This was worked by Roy L. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., on "A Connecticut Yankee" and gives a new aspect to the old idea.

FREE TICKETS WITH LORNA DOONE HATS IN OKLAHOMA

The Odeon Theatre, Bartlesville, hooked a merchant to the Lorna Doone hats and gave him tickets to be presented each purchaser. Two hats and you could get a pair, and the hats cost only $1.98. That's cheap enough.

Howard Anniversary Hooked Up to Candy

De Sales Harrison, manager of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, did something worth while when that star of the Southern Enterprises came to an anniversary. He wanted something that would mark the event apart from the house advertising, and he made a connection with Nunally's, the "Page and Shaw of the South."

They got up a very handsome special package in blue and gold, printed with "Howard Anniversary Package" and a cake with two gilt candles burning, and with the slogan "Typifying Southern Ideals." It was wrapped in glassine paper and tied with gold cord; altogether as handsome a packing as could be prepared.

On his part Mr. Harrison got out a strip poster in sepia on a cream-brown, with an orange stripe to give color. The attractor was a cut from Peter Ibbetson, which looked enough like the ante-bellum styles to motivate the Southern ideals idea. One side announced "Atlanta's Finest Theatre" and the other "Atlanta's Finest Candy" and each profited through the connection with each other. Mr. Harrison also provided passes for a sales scheme.

It was a splendidly planned campaign and even the price—$1.50—served to suggest the highest grade. It did the house great permanent good.

Had the Big Head

W. J. Lyttle did not have the big head. He used it to advertise "The Young Rajah" at the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Texas. The Empire has no lobby, entrance being had through a drug store, so he has only the street corner to decorate and he put up two of the 24-sheet heads, with an oriental arch over the store entrance.

This corner for a long time was a favorite lounging place with the local cake eaters, but Mr. Lyttle put up three 100 watt reffector lamps, ostensibly to illuminate his posters, and the limelight drove away the flirtatious loafers. Mr. Lyttle's head seems to be long rather than big.

Small Work Paid

Five hundred hand-written postcards and a 24-sheet put up two weeks in advance were about all W. A. Byers, of the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C., needed to put over "Human Hearts" to a thirty per cent. hoist for "Human Hearts." There was also a special showing for the local Better Films Committee and this helped not a little for they were warm in their praise.

The campaign cost only $7.50, which included the $5 for the cards.

Admits He Is

In a recent story on a contest stunt which resulted in the distribution of an almost unparalleled number of passes, we referred to the "stupid break" of the author of the scheme.

Comes Leon J. Bamberger, assistant to Claud Saunders, of the Paramount exploitation, to chide us for not giving his name as the author of the break and explaining that he knew all the time that it would work just that way because he had tried it out in his road days in the Canadian territory, adding "if this be stupidity, make the most of it."

Of course after the successful post-mortem you can't blame Bamberger for wanting the credit of authorship, since the idea went over, but we think any scheme which will take from one to five thousand passes out of a house in one week should have had a label tied to it, to prepare the local manager for the shock.

Anyhow, the scheme is Bamberger's and we have Lem Stewart's testimony that: "throughout our territory, the success of the contest has been in direct proportion to the number of passes given out per thousand of population. The greater the number of passes, the larger the cash sales."

ANOTHER DECORATIVE DETAIL FOR "EAST IS WEST"

This time it is the underside of the marquise and not the inner lobby which is shown, the idea being contributed by the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville. The open parasol is five feet in diameter.

House Uses Float With Ten Cent Top

Although many houses with a top admission of from 25 to 50 cents use little exploitation on account of the cost, the Rex Theatre, Spokane, found it profitable to put out a pretentious float for a five-day run on "The Idol Dancer."

The building is a bit sketchy, but it makes a good flash and uses four persons, three negroes, one of whom is the chauffeur, and a white girl for the dancer. Note how grass is used to mask in the radiator of the truck, solving the problem of doing away with this always unsightly feature.

The Rex found that the stunt brought a real return even though it got only ten cents for admissions.

This was used in the go-to-the-theatre week, when the weather was considerably warmer, which explains the somewhat scant costumes. This would not work as well now.

A First National Release

THIS BROUGHT IN ENOUGH DIMES TO PAY THE COST

Large houses sometimes feel that big exploitation costs too much. The Rex Theatre, Spokane, has a ten-cent top, as the sign shows, but it found it profitable to make this float for the five-day run of "The Idol Dancer"

Another Revival

One by one the old ideas come back again, without the use of gland treatment and apparently not needing it. The latest to reappear is the "Dare You" envelope, which apparently has been dug out by the Universal's Des Moines exchange for "Human Hearts." As it is a stock stunt the enclosure lacks the definiteness a house and date would give, and we believe it would pay to make a special printing to use these essential facts.

The envelope is a pay envelope 2¼ by 3½ inches, printed up "Dare you to give this to the lady unopened." Inside the sealed container is a card to fit which is printed "I have been somewhat neglectful of late. It's about time I took you somewhere. Let's go to see 'Human Hearts.' It will do your heart good to see it." These were passed around at stag club dinners, to the men at mixed gatherings and left on the counters of tobacco stores. It helped to make big business in the territory.

Light Exploitation

Although almost everyone else from political candidates to automobile manufacturers have resorted to the free match advertising, the picture producers seem to have overlooked this idea.

Now comes Arrow with a match case containing twenty parlor matches in a container printed up for "The Streets of New York," and which can be supplied at reasonable cost to theatres for distribution through the house or through tobacconists. Arrow has arranged with United to handle these where the house supplies the matches. If desired the inner flap can be given the house imprint, but the added return will scarcely repay the additional cost. It is a useful novelty and should be found of value.

A Better Angle for Memory Gags

Most sections of the country report good results from the use of the memory contest for "Remembrance." Generally this has been worked in the form of prizes for the best reminiscences of the early days of the city.

The Sun Theatre, Omaha, working in with Howard J. Phillips, Goldwynner, used it for better results. Instead of prizes for stories, the News was tied to a picture contest, and money prizes were given for the best old time photographs. An old horse car was one of the winners and the mounted police being reviewed by then President Cleveland was also in the money.

On the general proposition that pictures possess greater appeal than words, this brings far better returns. Almost any town can turn up a lot of old time stuff. The News gave the best pictures a four column spread each. You'd like that, wouldn't you?

There were also a thousand tickets offered for rhymed reminiscences, these short stanzas being worked in with the photographs.

Sold Off Tickets

Planning a special matinee for children on "Oliver Twist, William Shirley, of the Strand Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., decided that he need not pay the cost of special tickets.

He dropped in on a merchant neighbor and sold him the back of the tickets for the cost of the job and stood free of that expense while he put the merchant under obligation.

In case the merchant cannot be made to see the scheme, offer to let him distribute the tickets in his store. That may sell him on buying some newspaper space, too. Get the idea?

There is nothing new in the misspelled word contest to get interest in a hook-up, but when the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, put on the idea they gave it a little monkey gland of its own.

The picture was "Sherlock Holmes," and th interstitial substance was "What sort of a detective would you make? Get out the microscope and win free tickets to the greatest drama of the season."

There was a challenge here that gave a new appeal.

THIS MIGHT BE ANYWHERE IN THE U. S. A. BUT IT ISN'T

This is the lobby display from the Strand Theatre, Perth, Australia, for "A Connecticut Yankee." It shows a very handsome banner and the perambulating Sir Boss, and a set of escutcheons just below the banner for Arthur's Knights

Adapted Idea

Recently Herschel Stuart, in charge of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, used a headline from the local paper for the frame for his advertisement. It linked up to the feature being advertised and gave him art work at no cost.

Now comes Amike Vogel, Pittsburgh Paramounteer, who nearly swooned with joy when he picked up the morning paper and found a screamer across the page reading "Motorists Indicted on Manslaughter Charges." He tore out the centre of the page, framed in an announcement for the De Mille picture and is using a reproduction for heralds all through his district and is even shipping to other territories. It works better than the stock herald and costs only $15 a thousand imprinted.

Picture Drew More Than a Vaudeville

Pantages Theatre, Minneapolis, is a vaudeville house with a film feature, and generally the film gets the short end of the stick. But in the case of the imported production of "The Prince and the Pauper," J. J. Cluxton figured that he could get more out of the celluloid star and he went after it like a hound after a jack rabbit.

He gave a preview to all the school teachers in the "Twin Cities," to capitalize on the Mark Twain angle, and hooked the book stores. The cut shows a department store window in which the picture was made the basis of a display which included a number of other juvenile specialties handled by the store. The chief attractor was a pair of absurd dolls, set well to the fore. They got attention which was passed along to the general display. Three book stores also hooked to displays of Mark Twain's works.

Accident Helped

And as a reward for all of this effort, the gods willed that one of the local papers should run a Sunday syndicate feature in which Chauncey M. Depew gave his reminiscences of a dinner at which Mark Twain and the then Prince of Wales were the guests. This was purely an accident of chance, but it worked over to the film, and helped to make business.

And the business was so much above the average that it would seem that the film can bring in more than the vaudeville, when it is the right sort of picture.

Two Trains

Generally a miniature train is supposed to be able to get all the money in town, and usually it does, but the Park Theatre, Franklin, Pa., made assurance doubly sure.

It set up the toy train in the window of a store, with the usual scene made up of toy train accessories, but the store had a smaller window and wanted something for that. A freight and a passenger train were piled up in an apparent wreck and a placard stated that "The Fast Mail" was never wrec ed. It put in two good punches for the Fox special and sold even better.

How would it do to stage a wreck every fifteen minutes the first time you get a picture with a wrec'k scene, and then advertise the fact. It will be a little extra trouble, but a small boy will cost little and the stunt will work largely.

Several of the Universalists are women, and one is Miss Hattie K. Morrill, who works out of Washington. She persuaded the Liggett & Myers Company that the cigarette of "Under Two Flags" was the natural exploitation for a new brand of paper smokes. The tobacco company supplied the cigarettes and Miss Morrell distributed the cigarettes in the Foreign Legion uniform. She also got windows all through that territory, which covers the Virginias.

Made Triple Tie-up for Armistice Day

Lem Stewart, of the Southern Enterprises, advised all of his managers to tie up to Armistice Day where possible, and all through that territory the response was prompt and profitable. Memphis, with three associated houses, used a joint display with a ribbon across the top telling that three unusually good plays had been obtained. The Palace had "The Eternal Flame," the Strand used "Burning Sands" and the Majestic offered "The Man who Saw Tomorrow." At an additional cost of the seven inches for the top all three were put into a special class, and were put over to unusual business. The same idea is as useful for any holiday where there are two or more houses in town.

Clothing Hook-Up

Donald W. Bonstein, exploitation man for the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa., sold off a clothing store on a four columns full for "Rags to Riches." He got hold of Benjamin B. Belfer, who does the advertising for Mintz, a clothier just across the street, and Mintz came out with the big display on the theatre page announcing that "you do not have to go in rags and do not need great riches to avoid them if you buy your clothing at Mintz's." Apparently Mintz took about three-fifths of the space above and below the theatre announcement, and both got value of the full space for the hook-up. This should be made a standard stunt where the Warner production plays.

Jazz Got Thirty

Jazzing up his campaign on "Flesh and Blood" brought a thirty per cent. increase to H. J. Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas.

He started his screen work ten days in advance and a week ahead used a lobby miniature, later changing this for a larger display showing Chaney leaving the jail. This was built in several planes to give perspective—and importance—to the display.

A number of drug stores permitted fountain painting, and a float reproducing a scene from the play was sent out. At night this was lighted by red flares. Armistice Day the float trailed the parade, and ushers accompanied it, passing out some 2,000 heralds.

He not only built up business, but by making it important, he drew a number of letters favorably commenting upon the picture.

Has Stair Design for Lengthy Casts

Dan Carrothers, of the Orpheum Theatre, Pocatello, Idaho, has developed a good idea for the exploitation of lengthy casts. He figured that many of the players in "Manslaughter" would repay a little advertising, so he evolved this stair design with Meighan and Miss Ayres in cutout at the top.

CARROTHERS' STAIRWAY

The tread of each of the thirteen steps is painted with the name of one of the players in the production, with an announcement card at the top of the flight to mask in the lighting and another pendant from the canopy. Painting on the risers instead of the tread would give a better effect if the stairway were higher, but this is so low that even the top names can be read by a five footer, and it involves less construction work.

The idea is capital for any play with an all-star cast.

A FLORAL FLOAT GOOD FOR ANY FLOWER TITLE

A. B. Morrison, manager of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, used it for "Broadway Rose" in the Armistice Day parade. A girl's head showed from the large rose in the rear seat. The flowers were artificial and were made by the ushers. It cost $35

Old and New

It is reasonably old, but it still works. Bill Robinson, helping out the Rialto Theatre, Allentown, Pa., persuaded the local paper to run nine scene cuts under the general caption "Sherlock Holmes told in pictures." The captions were rather full and gave the entire story of the play.

The newspaper was glad to get the idea and played it up as its own special feature, and gave advance notices in return. The house ran the usual advertising up a little, partly to encourage the paper and partly to hook in on the extra display, and the picture went over with a minimum of stunt stuff, which left the town more ready for the next stunt campaign.

Some time when you cannot sell the idea in any other way, offer the idea of pasting these cuts into the book for extra illustration.

Schade Sells Tablets

George J. Schade, who named his Sandusky theatre after himself, is working a good general advertising stunt. He contracted for a large order of scratch pads with "Shade Theatre. Always a Good Show. The Home of First National Attractions" at the top of each sheet, while the cover is adorned with a picture of the house.

Shade sells these to the stationers at a price which gives them a profit as large as they would get from regular pads while at the same time they can offer them at a more attractive price, with the result that the advertisement is to be found in practically every home where there are school children.

Ordering in quantity, Schade makes no profit, but stands no loss, so the big advertisement is practically free.

Split for a Banner

Columbus, Ohio, has an idea that it does not care to banner the streets for amusement enterprises. The First National office had an idea that a banner would help sell "Skin Deep."

By arraging with the houses showing the film to give ten per cent. to the Legion, the objections were overcome and a three-strip banner given the air at the intersection of the two most prominent streets. There is more than one way to work a scheme.

Sold On Sample

American Releasing Corporation is advertising "When the Desert Calls" by means of letters in reproduced Turkish script. Each letter encloses a few grains of sand as a sample of the desert.

The same idea can be worked for any desert picture, the same as it was used some time ago for Bill Hart's "Sand." Just to make it look more interesting, the American used an Ecuadorean stamp alongside the regular United States pink 'un. The effect is puzzling and makes for an added interest which should be worth the small cost of the stamps. Any collector will sell cancelled stamps of current issues for about ten cents a hundred, and you cannot realize how it dressed up the letter until you have seen them used.

A Burglar Invasion Wrote the Teasers

the paper, and as soon as possible followed this up with snipes to the same effect. There was no connection with the house in these displays and it had the people wondering just what it meant until the house came along with the regular advertising, of which the second example is typical. There was not much they needed to say about the attraction, which had been pretty well sold on the teasers, so they simply remarked that everyone was talking about the play and offered the suggestion that it be seen at once. That house name looks almost too large for a border, but it looked better in the paper and served very well. We think, though, that the "everybody's talking about" would have been better in a lighter line, preferably italic. Then it would have had the same reading value and yet you will have given more display to the star name. The same sized face could have been used and it would have been precisely as legible and distinctive without being as hampering. It does nicely as it is, but does not yield the fullest display value.

Let Hearst Paper Give Theatre Party

De Sales Harrison, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., worked a good stunt on "The Old Homestead" when he permitted the Atlanta Georgian to entertain the inmates of the Home for Confederate Veterans and from an old ladies' home at a performance of "The Old Homestead." It cost only forty tickets and it broke a story on the front page, usually reserved for the Cosmopolitan productions in the Hearst papers. A new stunt was throwing on the screen an announcement of the arrival of the guests, with due credit to the Georgian, and then throwing on the house lights while the party was ushered in. The spectators rose in courtesy to the aged, and it gave a very impressive yet simple ceremony. This can be worked wherever the age of the guests makes it permissible.

Stanley N. Chambers Trusts to All Type

Now and then Stanley N. Chambers, of the Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kan., discards the plan book line cuts he uses so effectively and goes to all type. Sometimes he does this because he has no cut, but more often because he knows that now and then he can put over a big attraction better in a type display of unusual form than he could with an entire page of cuts. He worked it on George Beban's personal appearance in "The Sign of the Rose." The border is the repetition of the star's name, set in a bold italic twelve point. It might have been raised to an eighteen with perhaps a slightly better effect, but a twelve-point border is generally ample, and it gives more white space to set off the real announcement. Mr. Chambers figured that if he used the regulation announcement it would suggest the same old thing, so he used type to tell that it was different because type can talk better than the most elaborate cut layout. The "Warning" is hooked to the fact that the house is going to be too small to hold the crowds, and the other display lines hook to this and carry on the display. One of these every week would soon lose its effect and degenerate into ineffective selling, but for a special now and then it will talk harder than the most elaborate cut. The very form of the display sets it apart as something unusual, and the reader starts in to find out what it is all about with that impression strongest in his mind. If Mr. Chambers seldom used cuts, and then only to designate the most important attractions, then cuts would have the same effect. It is not a matter of cut or no cut, but a matter of difference — the change in pace which makes for importance.

Fought County Fair

C. A. Crute, who manages the Lyric Theatre, Huntsville, Ala., is wise in his generation. He planned his vacation just when county fair time came, and A. L. Snell, who moved over from Gadsden, to relieve him, had to put over "Blood and Sand" with the fair for opposition.

He bannered a wagon, which got twice around the racetrack before the police chased it off, and even the chasing aroused a sentiment in favor of the theatre. Then he parked the car just outside the gates where people simply had to see it.

A fake blind man proclaimed that he would be willing to give $1,000 to see "Blood and Sand," and when the charitable dropped coins into his cup he would hand the money back with his thanks and the suggestion that they apply it to the purchase of tickets to the Valentino picture.

Used Plan Book Cut for Effective Space

Evidently the Rialto Theatre, Baltimore, appreciated the fact that there can be good in the plan books, for the cut they used on "East Is West" a 165 line by four was clearly a plan book design. The type in the cut is not as clear as that in the few lines of original text, evidently because the cast was a little faulty, though this will probably not suggest itself to the untrained eye. This was a "world premier" and they swelled the display to get that fact over to the appreciation of the public, chiefly through the line at the top. Plan book cuts work all right where they are well planned, and this seems to be as good as anything the local artist could have done. The best point is the display in the panel, which stands out, though mostly in hand lettering. The proportions are preserved and full value is gained for star and title.

Puts in Pictures Just to Fill In

Nelson Bell, of Washington, D. C., puts in a couple of poses in his display for "The Masquerader" just to fill in. Probably he did not expect to sell on the cuts. He sells on the talk he writes, and it is the sort of talk which sells. He used the lines to throw the selling talk into relief on the page and put in a couple of cuts to help break the monotony on the principle that they would not hurt and might help a little, but evidently he did not expect them to fight their way through the bars. He does his selling on the talk, and plays up star, title and the word "miraculous," the latter referring to the playing of the dual role. The cuts and lining are merely the frame to the sales talk, and the effort is put into the talk. Bell usually writes good stuff, but he went over his best on this and made a wonderful appeal. It's better than the press book and is written in the style that will get people to the house; particularly those who will feel most strongly the appeal of the play. If the cuts were to do the selling, they should have been held free from the linear design, but we do not believe that they were expected to sell many of the tickets, but were merely thrown in for good measure.

Still Going Strong

Although in its second year, there seems to be a kick left in "The Queen of Sheba."

B. B. Garner, of the Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Fla., played it lately, and got it over to good business—about 50 per cent. above the normal. For a week in advance he used teasers and four days ahead he skied a large banner, placing it well above the marquee that it might not be confounded with the current attraction, and bringing it down for the playing dates.

Two of the circular pictures from the six-sheets were mounted on cloth and a background painted in. Then the entire panel was given a coat of shellac and the result was sufficiently like an oil painting to deceive the patrons. One was placed on either side of the lobby and did much to help the sale.

Once More the White Beats Out Reverse

If proof were needed at this late day to show that white space is better than reverse, we think this three eighths from the Allen, Cleveland, would clinch the argument, for the minor features lay all over the big feature for display. You can get the title in two looks, but even then it lacks the strength of the type announcement of the costume review, and the cut is largely lost. Only the selling talk is played up, and if you like that, you can go back and find out that "Remembrance" is the title of the play you wish to see. There is greater strength to the outline cut for Lloyd Hamilton than there is to the otherwise effective cut of Pop and the grandson. An outline would be better against reverse, if carefully handled, but a halftone on reverse is just rolling the money down the sewer. It goes, and you don't see where it comes out. This might have been better with a good black reverse, but good black in newspaper printing is a rarity not to be counted upon, and the goods were not delivered in this instance. That costume review is a novelty. They have had a couple of fashion shows, so this was made a display of fancy dress costumes and Hallowe'en clothes. Fashion shows are getting to be so popular that houses are now hard put to find new titles, and fancy dress displays give all the latitude an exhibitor could ask.

A ONE-PAGE HOOK-UP

Emporia Hook-up Is Minus Any Contest

A hook-up without a contest is almost a novelty these days, but the Strand Theatre, Emporia, Kans., negotiated a page "In acknowledgment of the splendid tribute to the new social and economic position of American womanhood" in the Ince-First National production. Only eight merchants contributed space, but they made a very pretty display, and the results proved that the straight hook-up will still sell a production, even though it may not be of very recent release. The cooperating merchants all appealed to women with the exception of a typewriter concern which came in because the machine was endorsed by the producer, and even here the woman typist was supposed to know the merits of the machine, which was another reason why the company acclaimed her.

Eastman Theatre Ads Are Largely Uniform

The style of advertisement used by the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, seems to be fixed. It is not pretty, but it gives a distinctive form in a small space, and where too much is not said, it gets over. In any event, it is better than a lot of cut work that means nothing. This is 85 lines on two, and most of the space is given to what the New York Herald thinks of "The Loves of Pharach."

THE EASTMAN STYLE

The text is better chosen than that in most quotations, for it really gives some idea of the play. It is the best chosen press notice we have seen in some time, but that does not convert us to the value of other town notices. We think the house itself should have more to say about what it has to offer and not pass the buck. One expects better than usual from the Eastman, and it is to be hoped that a more original style of advertising is presently developed, for this is by no means in keeping with the character of the house. Perhaps when the novelty has worn off more of an effort will have to be made to get them in.

A Very Definite Appeal to a Big Majority of Picture Goers

"THE NINETY AND NINE"
Vitagraph

DIRECTOR ..... David Smith
AUTHOR ..... Ramsaye Morris
SCENARIO ..... G. Graham Baker
CAMERAMAN ..... Steve Smith, Jr.
AS A WHOLE.....Fine money-making possibilities in this one for a big majority of exhibitors
STORY.....Contains elements of appeal that make it a good general audience picture that will prove sure-fire for "fan" crowd
DIRECTION.....Very good for a picture of this kind; sequences too long drawn out occasionally; climax a genuine thrill
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... First rate
LIGHTINGS ..... All right
PLAYERS.....Warner Baxter and Colleen Moore both do splendid work in this with Lloyd Whitlock, Gertrude Astor, Robert Dudley and others giving capable support
EXTERIORS ..... Suitable rural locations
INTERIORS ..... Good
DETAIL ..... Ample
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Fugitive, seeking forgetfulness in drink, is saved by little country girl and eventually has his name cleared
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 6,800 feet

For the biggest majority of picture-goers in this country, the city patronage in particular, "The Ninety and Nine" will undoubtedly prove an especially strong attraction and sufficiently popular to make it a definite box office offering for those exhibitors who make up the largest part of the entire number of picture exhibiting theaters, catering to people who seek action and thrills for their entertainment in preference to originality of story or artistry of production.

And as an entertainment of its kind, "The Ninety and Nine" is thoroughly capable of satisfying the many who want their diversion supplied in quantities of thrills. Besides this element of appeal Ramsaye Morris' story, adapted from the play, contains other angles that make it an attractive audience picture. It includes the ever popular regeneration theme in which a fugitive from justice, trying to drown out the past in drink, is urged to "go straight" by the little girl who sticks by him even when her father falsely accuses her and turns her out of his house. This sequence, especially, is very well handled by Colleen Moore and Warner Baxter, who have the principal roles. Director Smith has directed it well also except that he uses too much footage and draws it out longer than he should to obtain the best effect.

The development is smooth and the interest very well sustained. Coincidence is the most prominent means of development, but it probably won't annoy those to whom the picture will appeal and for whom it is evidently intended. Prohibition has been ignored for purposes of the plot, and hero drinks freely at an honest-to-goodness bar.

The very best feature of this production is the splendid climax which Smith has provided. The forest fire has been staged with unusual realism and offers a genuinely spectacular thrill. It has been excellently photographed, and no doubt will set a good many wondering how it was done. The train flying through the forest with the flames jumping at it from both sides is indeed fine.

Story: Tom Silverton, a fugitive, hides in Marlow, where a little girl of the town, Ruth Blake, urges him to give up drink, and her interest in him finally causes her father to send her from the house. Leveridge, owner of the railroad who, with his fiancee Miss Van Dyck, is stopping with the Blakes, secures the cooperation of a half-wit admirer of Ruth's to frame a robbery on Silverton, whom he suspects to be Bradbury, the fugitive. How Silverton saves the lives of many in a forest fire and wins the admiration of all follows the clearing of his name which proves him not guilty of the crime which made him a fugitive.

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

SISTERS. Very good. I was indeed surprised Patrons voiced their approval. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Associated Exhibitors

WHAT WOMEN WILL DO. I hope every exhibitor who reads this will book this picture, for I think any producer that releases one like this, at no extra price, merits support. The grip of "The Miracle Man" paired out with the excellent work of Anna Q. Nilssen, backed up by the cast in general—what's the use!—book it. Advertising: one sheets. Patronage: mill help. Attendance: good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES. Just ran my second Leah Baird feature. These pictures sure surprised me—we held this over for Monday and did almost as much as Saturday. These, and Harold Lloyds, are proving better than those of another company for drawing crowds here; but Florence Vidor is kind of weak yet. L. N. Harding, Strand Theatre (family patronage), Mackinac, California.

F. B. O.

BILLY JIM. A good, clean Western that is fairly entertaining and which pleased about 90 per cent. Fred Stone a good actor, but he ought to be starred in pictures with action more rapidly moving than this one. Will fill in as an excellent program feature. Advertising: ones, threes, slide, mat slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. This picture has more age on it than what we usually run, but the reports on it did the selling; to say we were disappointed is to put it mildly. For us, it is just an average "soppy" emoting picture, too much footage is given to the sympathy working stage business and too little action for those recently educated audiences. Very mediocre production for a first-run house. Patronage: country town. Attendance: poor. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

MY DAD. Only a fair picture. Didn't go over; something lacking. Nothing to rave about. Advertising: newspaper, lobby, slide, cards. Patronage: family. Attendance: fair. William Brill, Rialto Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

UNDERSTUDY. The best Hoyt-like comedy we have caught Doris May in. Otis Harlan at his best. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

UP AND AT 'EM. With Doris May, the picture enjoyed good business. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

First National

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. A good audience picture. The kid is wonderful. Worthy of a showing in any theatre. Book it; it will make good for you. Advertising: sizeable campaign. Patronage: high-class. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

EAST IS WEST. The very best picture we have had this season. Advanced prices, extended the run, and turned away hundreds. Advertising: newspaper ads. doubled. Attendance: excellent. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

ETERNAL FLAME. A very good picture, but failed to draw in our town, as conditions are bad here at present. Advertising: newspaper, lobby, heralds, 2,000 letters mailed. Patronage: very best. Attendance: fair. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

GIRL IN THE TAXI. Very good comedy-drama which pleased everybody. First National giving us good pictures. Advertising: ones, threes, photos, papers. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Tom Marksby, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

HURRICANE'S GAL. This, as a picture, 100 per cent., but that means nothing; the name killed it for me. The class of people I play to would not come out. A splendid production, but would not draw on a two days' run. Lost money, in fact. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, twenty-four, heralds, etc. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

MASTER MIND. A very interesting plot. Offers an opportunity for an excellent guessing contest. Find the moral! Just an average program picture. Advertising: usual billboard and lobby. Prices: ten and thirty cents. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. H. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

MY BOY. It's one that will get them all. I liked it; my people liked it; so will you. Advertising: usual. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

ONE CLEAR CALL. Very good picture; very good business. Advertising: like a show. Patronage: family. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

PECK'S BAD BOY. A good picture. Clean, wholesome fun. No complaints in any way. Brought out the crowd. Advertising: posters, usual. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

ROSARY. The name leads one to think it a religious story, and while it has religious characters, it is really a good melodrama, pretty well done. It brought big business for me, and a great many not regulars. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

SKIN DEEP. We put this on as a benefit for the American Legion, and they didn't manage to sell enough tickets to pay for the cost of printing. For some reason Ince's pictures always lose money for me. Fair picture only. Advertising: played up as American Legion benefit. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

SKY PILOT. Really a picture that's in a class all by itself. Its got a moral, and it's put over with a punch. Had lots of compliments on this one. It'll make new patrons. Advertising: extra billboard, heralds, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

SMILIN' THROUGH. I can truthfully say that this was considered one of the best pictures of the year. Pleased 100 per cent.—many saw it twice, and all well satisfied. William Noble, New Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SONG OF LIFE. Entirely too "sobby" for here; a hard luck story all the way through that did not please my invalid patrons—they have their own troubles. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: poor. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SONNY. One of the best features we have shown in a long time. Everyone was pleased. Deserved a better house. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

STRANGER THAN FICTION. Only fair. Story cannot be easily followed. Advertising: usual, posters and photos. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. I cannot praise this picture too highly. Patrons talked about it; said it was a beautiful picture. Advertising: six, three, one, slide. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TROUBLE. Good picture, but not as good as "My Boy." Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

TROUBLE. Jackie can act like a veteran. This picture pleased old and young. No end of pleasing comments. Advertising: doubled billboard and press space. Patronage: general. Attendance: light, but not picture's fault. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

Fox

ARABIAN LOVE. Had several good comments on this one. Some enjoyed it as much as "The Sheik." Picture should please all. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, slide. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

CHASING THE MOON. Garsh, the last reel "saved the bacon." Mix is too good to waste on such a story, even though he writes a number of them himself. It pleased the majority, however, just because they have faith in Tom Mix. Advertising: regular. Patronage: country. Attendance: fine. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. A faithful adaptation of the great Mark Twain story, ably acted and perfectly staged. A distinct credit to Fox and to the industry. Advertising: extra campaign. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CRUSADER. With William Russell. Extra fine, thrilling Western drama. Advertise this one big; it will please them all. Five reels and all good. Advertising: threes, ones. Attendance: extra good. Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

DO AND DARE. With Tom Mix, a very poor picture, which did not please here. Advertising: usual. Attendance: fair. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FAST MAIL. Wonderful Jones picture. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FIGHTING STREAK. Up to Tom Mix standard. This star has a following here and does well for us. This one is O. K. and will please his "fans." Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FOOL THERE WAS. Well worth showing. Everyone went out telling me what a fine picture it was. Teaches a good lesson. Excellent photography. Boost it strong, as it will back up your claims. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

FOOL THERE WAS. Very good picture of the vampire type. Lewis Stone does some fine work. Estella Taylor as the vamp not as good as the original Theda Bara, acting in the old picture. Advertising: regular billboard and lobby. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

JUST TONY. Tom Mix is good as ever. Pleased all. Mix always means a packed house for us. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: great. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

MONEY TO BURN. A good program picture, but Russell fails to draw for me. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

MY FRIEND, THE DEVIL. Exhibitors, here is a wonderful picture for you. Did not see another drama so interesting as this one for a long time. Advertising: two ones, one three, slides. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

THE NEW TEACHER. A splendid program picture. Good for Sunday audiences. It pleased our patrons. Advertising: regular. Patronage: high class. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Exhibitors who are reporting on pictures for Straight from the Shoulder are doing such a splendid service of unselfishness that it is only fair to make the work of tip-sending just as simple and as easy as possible.

Through the help and suggestions of Mr. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky, Mr. Thos. L. Haynes, Old Lyme Amusement Company, Old Lyme, Connecticut, and others, a new report blank has been prepared.

This new blank gets rid of the need of signing and giving certain information on every picture and hooks up six on the same blank.

Hope this will make it a lighter task for the good friends already sending tips—and for a lot more who will certainly come in and keep Straight from the Shoulder the dependable tip department.

VAN.

RAGGED HEIRESS. Shirley Mason in a Class B picture. This pleased ninety per cent. Was a well executed theme. Mason has a loyal bunch of backers here. You'll get by on this one if the title suits your territory. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

OVER THE HILL. A fair picture, but not as good as "Humoresque." Yet it will get by and will please a majority of the audience. No kicks registered. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SKY HIGH. You will make no mistake in booking this picture. One of his best for thrills and action. Advertising: regular. Attendance: good. Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

SKY HIGH. Mix was always ace high with our Empire patrons and he is still with the Lafayette patrons. Played this on Sunday to S. R. O. Regular Mix stuff with fine action. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

STAGE ROMANCE. Absolutely nothing to it. Too deep and entirely too long. We didn't take in film rental and those who came left before it was over. My advice would be, pay for it and don't run it. Advertising: posters, slide, heralds. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

STAGE ROMANCE. I left town on this one. Couldn't face the music of continuous complaints which I knew must come. Heard about it after my return. If you have it bought, go fishing on the day you play it. Advertising: ones, threes, six, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

STRANGE IDOLS. Just a program picture of very mediocre value. This program stuff is about as poor as one can find. Advertising: posters. Patronage: rural. Attendance: fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

STRANGE IDOLS. For me, here's a picture that holds the interest and will make 'em talk. They'll like, and wonder why, all at the same time. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. A mixed up mess of melodrama that was not cared for here. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Goldwyn

BEATING THE GAME. Unusually good picture. Clean, snappy, and held the interest. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Al. C. Stewart, Empire Theatre, Waitsburg, Washington.

BE MY WIFE. Max Linder makes 'em take notice in this comedy. A roar all the way through. Price was right and print A. 1. Advertising: ones and one three. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Werner Brothers, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS. If you like real old Scotch atmosphere here it is for fair. Don't think the average fan cares for this kind. Advertising: one sheets. Patronage: mill help. Attendance: good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

MAN FROM LOST RIVER. Six reels. House Peters, star. A story of the North Woods that should appeal to all classes. Well acted and interest holding from start to finish. Photography unexcelled. Some beautiful shots. Clean. Pleased 100 per cent. House Peters becoming favorite here. Little town man can't go wrong on this one. Advertising: ones, threes, slide, show windows. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MR. BARNES OF NEW YORK. Just a fair picture, so the patrons said. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: medium. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

POOR RELATION. A very good program picture and one that pleased. I would like to have more of them. Advertising: usual. Patronage: country town. Attendance: good. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

REMEMBRANCE. Don't be fooled into the idea that this is in the class with "Old Nest." A very pleasing picture, but nothing super-special about it. Did not go over for me. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, photos, heralds, window cards, newspaper, etc. Patronage: high-class. Attendance: poor. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

THEODORA. I'd say I'd lay off of this one. I bought it for a special and almost lost my shirt. It cost a lot of money, and I sure helped to pay for it. Advertising: enough. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: rotten. H. W. Deutschmann, Playhouse, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Hodkinson

CAMERON OF ROYAL MOUNTED. An extra good Northwest Mounted Police story. In fact, the photography, scenery and acting is A-1. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

FRENCH HEELS. Mighty good picture; the ladies, especially, liked this, but will please 100 per cent. from my viewing. Advertising: two ones, three, photos, two papers, slide. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

GREEN FLAME. With Warren Kerrigan, this one failed to please, as picture is too old and people have forgotten who J. Warren Kerrigan is. Hope that friend Jack H. Hooks, of Thomas, Oklahoma, is now satisfied that all is not gold that glitters. William Noble, Broadway Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HEADLESS HORSEMAN. This is a splendid piece of work. Will Rogers certainly makes an A-1 Ichabod Crane. Plenty of fun, action, and a classic of a real classic. Advertising: posters, mail. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

JANE EYRE. Not a very good story, but is one of the best pictures ever run in my theatre on account of the acting and sets, which are wonderful. Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

Metro

BROADWAY ROSE. Very good; better than "Peacock Alley." She always pleases. Main thing, get it at a live-and-let-live price. Advertising: special lobby, and usual advertising, heralds. Patronage: country town. Attendance: good. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

BURNING DAYLIGHT. Jack London's name pulled them in on this. A number of patrons told me it didn't follow the book very closely. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

FASCINATION. A great picture, splendidly played, with Mae Murray. Very pleasing to the large audiences that saw it. William Noble, New Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FASCINATION. A showman's picture that contains every necessary ingredient for drawing and pleasing the people. Paid rather high for it, but it did pretty well, and we were satisfied. Recommend it highly if your public likes splendor and brilliancy. Advertising: enlarged campaign. Patronage: high-class. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. A very poor Dana picture. Not at all what it's put up to be. Just an ordinary program picture. Patrons disappointed. Advertising: ones, threes, six, photos, newspaper. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Jack Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

LITTLE EVA ASCENDS. Excellent Barnstorming story that went over with a bang. Audiences delighted. Lots of good, solid laughs. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

PUPPETS OF FATE. An excellent program picture. Advertising: regular. Patronage: resort. Attendance: fair. Holeman & Shaw, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

Paramount

AT THE END OF THE WORLD. One of the best we have shown. Betty Compson is quite a favorite with my patrons. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones. Patronage: resort. Attendance: good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

BLOOD AND SAND. Too much Valentino. It would have been good with any other star. Brought the crowds, but people disappointed. Altogether too long. Advertising: house organ, lobby, newspaper, billboards. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

BONNIE BRIER BUSH. Rather well below average. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: very poor. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BURNING SANDS. Did not do the business it should, by half, although picture was well liked. I blame it to non-pulling of stars. Advertising: a little of everything. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

BURNING SANDS. For me, better than "The Sheik," with a cast that can act. Hawley not much, but Sills and Logan good. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: average. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

CALL OF THE NORTH. Film was in such poor condition that I don't know whether it was any good or not. I know we got credit for running it too fast when most of the picture had been cut away. Advertising: posters and slide. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

CAPPY RICKS. Meighan is indeed "the good luck star." Story fine. This one should please ninety-five per cent. Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

FOOTLIGHTS. Very good and pleased a large audience. Elsie Ferguson does good work in this. Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

GAME CHICKEN. A very good picture and will please most any audience. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

GET-RICH-QUICK WALLINGFORD. Good picture. Clever acting. Well liked by patrons. Attendance: fair. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK. Here is a picture that is good. It is exceptionally clean, has a good story, good action, good scenery. Advertising: newspapers, ones, slide and posters. Patronage: local. Attendance: good. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

A Double Letter

Dear Van:

It may interest you to know I found in my mail the following note:

"Thos. L. Haynes,
Dear Sir:

Your letter in Straight from the Shoulder in Moving Picture World of November eighteenth was read by us with great interest. This department is certainly very valuable and we don't see how any live exhibitor can get along without it. Sincerely,
C. M. LYNCH,
HARRIS & LYNCH,
Gem Theatre, Peoria, Ill."

Very truly yours,
THOS. L. HAYNES,
Old Lyme Amusement Co.,
Old Lyme, Conn.

A letter within a letter that shows how Straight from the Shoulder is promoting good fellowship between exhibitors who count.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. Rather belated showing, but picture drew well. Reid not very good; support made the picture. Advertise good; you won't lose. Advertising: billboard, lobby, program. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

YOUNG RAJAH. If you have to pay a big price for this—look out! It disappoints as did "Blood and Sand." We played day and date with Detroit, but to no avail. Advertising: heavy. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor—lost money. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

Selznick

PROPHET'S PARADISE. For me, picture rotten all through; film badly cut. Advertising: usual. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

REPORTED MISSING. Picture good; for me nothing special. If you can get it at a right price, buy, and your average patrons will be pleased. Do not advertise as special—it is not! Have had two- and three-reel comedies that went over better. Advertising: special. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

SAFETY CURTAIN. Splendid picture. A revival that tells the tale of "why" Norma is so popular. These pictures are worth what these people ask; they don't try to rob you. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

United Artists

LOVE FLOWER. A very good picture, with special cast, and one which pleased. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

RULING PASSION. Not a heavy puller, but a great picture. All should run it. Advertising: regular. Patronage: family. Attendance: fair. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. One of the best I ever saw of Nagel. A good picture to boost. Advertising: lobby and daily papers. Attendance: good. H. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

AT LARGE. With Tom Santschi, a very good picture with very good business prevailing. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BEAR CAT. One of the best Westerns we've shown. First, the story is good, and second, Hoot is a likeable cuss, a combination Chas. Ray and Tom Mix. I'd class it as extra good. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

SCRAPPER. For me, a fine "lemon." Certainly not what we expected after reading exhibitors' reports. No plot, no acting Fight O. K., but that was all. Too improbable. Advertising: good. Patronage: village and country. Attendance: fair. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

TOP O' THE MORNING. One of the nicest little program pictures released. Star fine; direction excellent. Advertising: ordinary. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. H. J. Longaker, Goward Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

TRAP. Very good subject, but failed to please all. Only a few liked it. Chaney does wonderful acting and the scenery is good. Advertising: two threes, one six, four ones, heralds, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama. Wisconsin.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. A knockout of a picture, and one we made a little money on; we got it quick, and price right. Book it. Advertising: twenty-four, ones, heralds, photos, papers, etc. Patronage: country town. Attendance: good. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. Did not take here. Sixty per cent. dissatisfied. Raised price and lost money. Advertising: fifty per cent. extra on account special production. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

WILD HONEY. This Universal-Jewel has many entertaining qualities, yet in my opinion some of the scenes are so suggestive and improper that it would be hard to recommend to every one. The plot is rather light, and taking everything into consideration this picture does not measure up to some of her former successes, although no fault of Miss Dean's, who lifted the feature as much as she could from the cheap tawdry class with her remarkable characterization. Advertising: special. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

WISE KID. Here is a nice little picture which pleased nearly 100 per cent. and you will make no mistake in booking it. It has plenty of comedy in it that just set right with the audience. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Vitagraph

FLOWER OF THE NORTH. With special cast including Pauline Stark; good picture and good puller. Gave good satisfaction. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MY WILD IRISH ROSE. A big, clean story. Pleased 100 per cent. and got the money. Many compliments from our patrons. Advertising: ones, threes, twenty-four, slides and cards. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Werner Brothers, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

SHEIK'S WIFE. Very good. Pleased a hundred per cent. Rained all day Sunday, but did fair business. Advertising: lobby, cutouts, billboards. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

SHEIK'S WIFE. While this foreign picture is good, frankly it doesn't compare with "The Sheik." Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

VIRGIN'S SACRIFICE. (The title of this picture has been altered to "A Woman's Sacrifice.) An awful title for a picture. I should call this a nasty type of story, and am glad there are not many of them made any more. There were many beautiful snow scenes; it was well staged. Advertising: two papers, photos, threes, ones and slide. Patronage: family. Attendance: poor. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

Christmas Wish

We hope that you'll hang up a stocking this year and find it, on Christmas, just packed with good cheer; we've asked good old Santa to see that you get a year's run of pictures the best you've had yet; an S. R. O. business, each patron a fan; no films mutilated, no censorship ban; each contract a fair one, at a price you can pay—and a real Merry Christmas!—what more can we say?

Comedies

CIRCUS CLOWNS (Universal). Baby Peggy is growing popular here. Although her comedies have no fast action they fill the bill as a distinct novelty. Played it with "Shattered Dreams," and it was our life-saver for that show, as the feature was mediocre. Patronage: community. Attendance: fair. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

DUCKS (producer not noted). One-reel comedy, praised by everyone. Can be safely called a first-class one-reeler. Some fine photography depicting scenes in and around a lake that actually seemed the best place in the world for ducks. Very appropriate picture here, as this is a great hunting country for small game. The producers are to be congratulated. (And if they will come forward and identify themselves we will be glad to give them credit.—Ed.) Advertising: none. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FALL GUY (Vitagraph). Larry is very popular here and his comedies are usually quite good. This one, however, is below his standard, and I could not make much noise about it. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

ICE BOX PIRATES (Universal). These Star comedies are no good for us. Our patrons walk out on them. They might go over good if called scenics or bathing girl novelty reels. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

I DO (Assoc. Exhib.) If there is any comedy worthy to be featured with the regular picture, it is this one. A big crowd roared all through it. Positively the best comedy ever shown here, at least from the viewpoint of my patrons. Advertising: slightly more than regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

LINE'S BUSY (Universal). Best Star comedy we have shown yet, but that is not saying it is good, for it doesn't begin to measure up to the standard of a real comedy. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

PALEFACE (First Natl.). For me, not one laugh in the whole two reels; absolutely poor for me. Keep it on the shelf. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: poor. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

SHOW ME YOUR SAMPLES (Universal). About the poorest excuse for a comedy that was ever shown in our theatre. I am glad they have finally woke up and quit producing the Star Non-Sensered Reels. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

SKIPPER'S LAST RESORT (Educl.). These might go in other places, but not here. Do not satisfy patrons at all. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

SOLID CONCRETE (Vitagraph). Larry Semon comedy. Very good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

Serials

GO-GET-'EM HUTCH (Pathe). A good, snappy serial; but we were loaded up with an awful lot of stuff with it, and have had a hard time keeping the crowds. Advertising: usual. Patronage: country town. Attendance: has been fair. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

ROBINSON CRUSOE (Universal). Have just finished this one and must say it was the biggest failure for me. It will not draw, in my experience. Advertising: all kinds, paper, etc. Patronage: children mostly. Attendance: poor. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). On the sixth episode. Holding up fine. Lots of action and fine snow scenery. Business good. Can't go wrong on this one. We are running Lloyd single reelers and Playlet with serial. Playlets all good and in good shape. Will make a good variety show. We started this serial off to a good business. Advertising: ones, photos, slide. Patronage: middle class. Admission: ten-twenty cents. Attendance: good. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Short Subjects

44 CALIBRE MYSTERY (Carey-Univ.). Very pleasing picture. Holds interest all the way through. Acting good, but not very much of a story. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUDSON TRAILS (Educl.). As good as any Travel pictures, but had to stop showing them as the patrons don't want travelogs. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

JAPANESE NIGHTINGALE (Pathe). This is a good picture of the kind. Advise you, if you are running a middle-class house, not to run this playlet—get Pathe to give you something in place of this one. We ran this with "Timber Queen" and single-reeler. They walked out on "Nightingale." Middle-class audiences don't seem to want such a picture. You will find that all of Pathe playlets are good. Make a good show with a serial and comedy. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Prove that you wish every other exhibitor a Merry Christmas and a prosperous future—send reports.

RULES OF ROAD (Pathe). Where Frank Keenan is liked, these are good fillers with comedy. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS (Pathe). The best short subject we ever ran, and have tried many. Everyone likes it fine. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

State Rights

AMAZING LOVER (Federated). Not a good picture from any angle. Marc McDermott was unfortunate to be in it. Advertising: newspaper, card and screen. Patronage: family. Attendance: excellent. Arthur G. Pearson, Auditorium Theatre, Melrose, Massachusetts.

KAZAN (Hamilton). Very good Curwood story and will please eighty per cent. Not in it with "Silent Call." Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

LAST CHANCE (Standard). If you don't have to play this one, don't. For me, nothing to it. 'Nuff sed. Admission, ten-twenty cents. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SILVER SPURS (Standard). Those that like Westerns will like this. Some real thrills and plenty of action. Advertising: regular. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

SCHOOL DAYS (Warner). Truly in every sense of the words a wonderful production. It not only pleased, but it drew well. Little Barry is exceptionally good in this one. Book it by all means. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, photos, heralds. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN? (Equity). Good, the best picture made in several years; everybody should see it. Hartsville Theatre, Hartsville, Tennessee.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY? (Equity). Not as great as cracked up to be, although price right on same, and drew well with its wonderful title. Advertising: special printed one sheets, cards, newspapers and posters. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME (Warner). Should make money for every exhibitor who shows it. Advertising: six, one sheet, news cuts. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. L. P. Stubblefield, Hartsville Theatre, Hartsville, Tennessee.

CONSENSUS of PUBLISHED REVIEWS

The Lavendar Bath Lady

(Gladys Walton—Universal—5 reels)

M. P. W.—An attractive combination of light comedy and melodrama offers pleasing entertainment.

E. H.—As a program picture it will answer every requirement.

F. D.—Rather slight but interesting feature that would have been a real winner if it held starting pace.

T. R.—It is entertaining, light and frolicsome with occasional touches of melodrama that stimulates the interest.

N.—The picture may be called fair entertainment.

The Lone Hand

("Hoot" Gibson—Universal—4,857 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture is one of Ed (Hoot) Gibson's best and destined to enjoy success.

F. D.—A good climax but otherwise not as strong as Gibson's recent pictures.

E. H.—It will fill the bill wherever good Westerns are in demand.

N.—Gibson has a good cast. . . . Your folks will like him in his latest feature.

T. R.—Is a picture with plenty of excitement, many humorous situations and other ingredients that make up satisfactory entertainment.

Manslaughter

(Thomas Meighan—Paramount—9,061 feet)

M. P. W.—Gorgeous scenes interpolated in intensely dramatic story make this Cecil B. DeMille's best.

T. R.—After one has said that "Manslaughter" is a typical Cecil B. DeMille Production the first and the last word has been spoken about the sumptuous and gripping screen presentation of Alice Duer Miller's story.

F. D.—Adds another to a tremendous interesting lot.

N.—Looking aside for the moment from the spectacular side of this newest DeMille achievement, we must give him credit for building the most direct action which has graced the screen in many a day.

The Mohican's Daughter

(Featured Cast—American Releasing—5,500 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture's appeal is not broad enough to include all classes of patrons. It will afford entertainment principally to those who are interested in typically Indian subjects.

T. R.—Will no doubt prove to be an interesting story of the North American Indian.

F. D.—While probably losing somewhat in being transferred to the screen, still makes an interesting if somewhat improbable entertainment.

N.—Doubtless the picture will please seven patrons out of ten because of the well sustained interest.

More to Be Pitied Than Scorned

(Featured Cast—C. B. C.—5,800 feet)

M. P. W.—All indications pointing to a season of melodramatic revivals this entertaining independent production affords the independent exchangeman and exhibitor a genuine opportunity to combat the stiff opposition that is certain to develop next season.

E. H.—With proper exploitation it should go well.

N.—Far from hitting near the mark of a good picture.

F. D.—Has really one point of appeal and it is to the lovers of melodrama.

Shirley of the Circus

M. P. W.—The picture as a whole is good entertainment.

N.—This picture is one of the best bets you can book this season.

T. R.—Possesses sufficient points of interest to entertain and amuse both children and grown ups alike.

F. D.—Delightful circus story with fine action and thrills in climax.

E. H.—One of the best Shirley Mason pictures in some time.

The Fighting Guide

(William Duncan—Vitagraph—4,905 feet)

M. P. W.—The atmosphere is in keeping with the story and the backgrounds are second to none. Added to that, the photoplay is excellent, the cast is strong, and in his direction, Duncan has had full opportunity to display his unusual talents.

T. R.—There is an amazing amount of "zippy" action in this film, which registers as an uncommonly good western melodrama.

N.—This is a very satisfying little western picture featuring in addition to several dramatic situations a lot of "different" comedy moments.

E. H.—A good Western.

Headin' North

(Pete Morrison—Arrow—4,257 feet)

M. P. W.—More attention given to accumulating the thrills than to making the theme seem plausible.

E. H.—For the exhibitor looking for a good Western feature we unhesitatingly recommend "Headin' North."

F. D.—They'll have to be mighty easily pleased to be satisfied with such old school meller.

N.—If you are looking for action in this picture without caring much whether it is logical or not, just so long as it keeps moving, you are apt to be satisfied.

The Jilt

(Marguerite De La Motte—Universal—5 reels)

M. P. W.—Irving Cummings produced what should prove a splendid audience picture when he made "The Jilt."

N.—Seems to be a good audience picture of its type.

E. H.—While there is nothing outstanding about "The Jilt" it should get over with audiences that like domestic dramas.

T. R.—A fine program attraction, worthy the attention of all exhibitors.

F. D.—Pretty good audience picture that will appeal to the majority.

"The Flirt"

Universal-Jewel Is Intensely Human Drama of American Life Offering Exceptional Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There is an abundance of heart-throbs and real humor in the Universal-Jewel production, "The Flirt," which is adapted from the widely read novel of the same title written by one of America's foremost novelists, Booth Tarkington. Under the expert direction of Hobart Henley it is one of the most intensely human stories ever presented on the screen.

Although the title aptly described the main character, the pampered and selfish flirt, it does not reveal the depth of human interest in which the story abounds; for it is a cross section of a type of American family life with which we are all familiar. Beside the flirt, who has the entire family catering to her every whim, there is the lovable and self-sacrificing father, a man of sterling honor who struggles to give his family every advantage possible; the fond mother who takes up for her children under all circumstances; the other sister who uncomplainingly sees the man she loves fall victim to her flirty sister and the younger brother who is just a real boy with the usual mixture of mischief and love and boyish wisdom. Then there are other easily recognizable types found in a small community.

A striking point in the production is the unusual fidelity of the character-drawing, everyone of the characters seem real living persons; though you may not know any one family in which all of the types are present, you will probably find yourself picking out each one and thinking that you know someone who is just like that.

There is strong drama in the story, the kind that strikes home, for it is not an exaggerated story. You never feel that you are looking at a picture which is the creature of some writer's brain built solely to entertain or present some social problem, but rather that you are getting an intimate insight into the life of a real family. There is a note of simplicity and sincerity running all through the picture that is in keeping with this idea, and though finely photographed, there is no attempt at elaborateness; the sets and locations are all "homey" and the kind you expect for a family like the story typifies.

Director Hobart Henley is to be congratulated upon this production; we believe it is the very best thing he has ever done; he has strikingly retained the charm and human note of Tarkington's story. He has made the characters do the things you expect of them and refrained from over-emphasis, at the same time giving everyone a chance and developing each character with fidelity and fine detail.

The entire cast for this picture is exceptionally well selected, and all give fine performances. Eileen Percy is a perfect embodiment of "The Flirt"; Helen Jerome Eddy does some of the finest work in the film in the pathetic role of the other sister, while George Nichols is exceptionally fine as the father, acting this role with intelligence and force. Buddy Messenger is "real" as the small boy; Harold Goodwin, as the brother, and Lydia Knott, as the mother, are thoroughly capable. All the other members of the cast are true to type.

"The Flirt" is a picture that should appeal to every class of spectator. There are no spectacular scenes or melodramatic thrills, but it holds you just the same because of the fact that it is real human drama with the humor and pathos of every-day life and genuine living characters. It should appeal to every type of audience and prove a big box-office attraction.

Story

Cora, a flirt, and the pampered pet of the entire Madison family who sacrifice to humor her whims, becomes engaged to Richard Lindley who does not know that Laura Madison silently loves him. Valentine Corliss, a former member of the community, reappears with a big stock scheme and Cora falls for him. Pretending love he uses Cora and endeavors to get her father to become secretary of his company knowing his name and reputation will lend prestige. Cora finally brings Corliss the paper with her father's signature which later proves to have been forged. Corliss makes a getaway but is nabbed as he reaches New York. In the meantime, the townspeople who have been cheated, demand the arrest of Papa Madison. Cora to get away, goes to Lindley but he says their engagement was a mistake, she then goes to another admirer and they are immediately married. Laura, learning of the situation, becomes enraged, gets Cora and brings her home where she confesses despite her father's attempt to keep her silent. Jimmy Madison to whom Papa appealed when he got in trouble, appears and with the arrest of Corliss affairs are straightened out. Lindley, who through a prank of little Hedrick, has learned of Laura's intense love, sees his error and they become happily married.

"Kick In"

Suspense in Famous Crook Drama of Stage Splendidly Handled in Paramount Version

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

If it is possible that the dramatic interest in the stage play, "Kick In," could be intensified, George Fitzmaurice has done so in the picturized version. It brings back the many thrills of the original with wonderful realism. The action and settings have been considerably elaborated upon with results which upon the whole, will vastly increase the story's appeal.

The picture's greatest achievement is the handling of the many crucial situations. The struggle between the law and human sympathies is a constant factor in the construction of the drama, and the vital appeal in these scenes shows fine directing and fine acting.

With a cast composed of Betty Compson, Bert Lytell, May McAvoy and Gareth Hughes, Director Fitzmaurice has built swift and convincing action. Betty Compson's charm and dramatic gifts are, as usual, most appealing. May McAvoy's performance is a triumph of delicate pathos. She is an inspiring type for this particular role and has several really exquisite scenes. There is a lightning-like quality in Bert Lytell's interpretation of Chic Hewes, fighting against his crook-tendencies, but forced to get mixed up in the affairs of his pals, that gives it great force. The suspense, throughout, has been very well handled.

The tendency toward extravagant scenes is illustrated to an exaggerated degree in the earlier part of the picture. The nature of the picture does not call for so much elaborateness, as the drama is intense enough, of itself, to hold the interest. These scenes devoted to the revelry which affects only the minor characters are not distinguished and could be curtailed.

The Cast

District Attorney Brandon has a frivolous wife who gives a wild party at which a man is murdered. Chic is in the house, after an attempt to rob the safe to get even with the District Attorney. Jerry, the latter's son, robs the safe first then lays the blame upon Chic. Molly, however, the daughter of the District Attorney, sees her brother's dishonest maneuvers and tells the truth. Chic is freed. His brother meantime has been fatally shot while stealing a necklace, and Chic is hiding the body from the police. Brandon arrives with the police to get the necklace, but Chic has succeeded in shielding his brother and Molly shields Chic. Brandon lets him go. He goes out West to take a new position and Molly follows one year later.

"Man's Size"

William Russell Assisted by Alma Bennett in Fox Drama of the Northwest

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"Man's Size" presents William Russell in a drama of the Northwest with considerable action. The story is quite similar to others that have been used on the screen. This fact is not as objectionable as it is frequently, however, due to the presence of Alma Bennett. When the age-old situations of a heroine in distress are depicted, they succeed in arousing more than usual suspense, because an unusually attractive actress plays this role. Her beauty is one of the production's best points of advantage.

Pictures which resort to the Enoch Arden idea for interest have been so numerous that they are not satisfying to the average entertainment-seeker. This and a mystery regarding the parentage of a child are used as a foundation for the story of "Man's Size." The plot is unusually thin in originality but the performance on the whole is capable and the attractive forest settings should appeal.

The Cast

Tom Morse.....William Russell
Jessie McRae.....Alma Bennett
Bully West.....Stanton Heck
Angus McRae.....Chas. K. French
Carl Morse.....James Gordon
Whaley.....Carl Stockdale

Story by William McLeod Paine.
Scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland.
Direction by Howard Mitchell.
Length, 4,316 feet.

The Story

Tom Morse is sent by his father to investigate the latter's trading post in Canada. He finds that Jessie McRae is a self-appointed revenue officer, endeavoring to punish the bootleggers of the country. He hears the sad story of how she was deserted by drunken parents when an infant. Angus McRae is taking care of her, and claims to be her guardian. He is really her father as developments prove, after he has forced her to leave to marry a brute. Tom rescues her from this and marries her himself, and her father plans to atone for his cruelty to the girl.

"Hearts Aflame"

Fine Acting, Entertaining Story and Exceptionally Thrilling Forest Fire in Metro Feature.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There is big audience appeal in "Hearts Aflame," which is adapted from the novel, "Timber," by Harold Titus and presented through Metro by Louis B. Mayer as a Reginald Barker production. In addition to having an unusually realistic and exciting forest fire the picture tells an interesting story of how a lazy young man of wealth found himself and made good fighting against difficulties in the lumber country. An unusual angle is the fact that part of the time he has his own father arrayed against him.

The picture opens with a strong plea for forest conservation and is based on this theme. It is a story of the pine lumber country in Michigan and while the big punch scene is the forest fire, there are several other good scenes as, for example, the building of a big dam and the dynamiting of this dam so that the rush of the water will carry with it about a half million feet of logs to the mill lower down. It is exciting to watch these big logs, hundreds of them, being carried down on the swift current and to see how the lumberjacks expertly handle them when they get into slower current. This, however, has been handled in such a manner that it does not in any way anti-climax the big scene, the forest fire.

Although there have been several pictures with forest fires, we believe that this is the best handled one yet presented on the screen, and the use of natural colors in these scenes strikingly heightens the effect. You seem to see the whole forest on fire, a whole hillside in flames, with the blazing yellow and red tongues of fire leaping from the giant trees. These scenes have been finely handled and are not simply thrust into the picture for effect but are an integral part of the drama; the action of the picture runs all through them and a number of the most dramatic situations occur against this fiery background. The scenes where the girl and the hero board an engine and ride a half mile through the flames to get dynamite to blast a ridge to stop the spread of the fire, are unusually well handled, especially where the flames leap across in front of the windows seeming to actually scorch the players. There are some especially effective photographic effects, with stirring scenes of wild animals, wolves, deer and bears driven from their lairs by the flames.

There is also a charming romance in the picture, and the work of Frank Keenan as the hard-headed old lumberman who is determined to get the girl's timber at any cost, but eventually capitulates and agrees to aid the girl in what he considers her foolish ideas of conservation, add much to the enjoyment of the picture. Keenan's work is the outstanding characterization of the film and is one of the finest things this sterling actor has ever done. He injects unusual vigor into the role and dominates, but does not "hog," every scene in which he appears.

Anna Q. Nilsson is attractive and appealing as the girl and Craig Ward is satisfactory as the hero, though he appears rather light for the role. There is considerable humor of an out-of-the-ordinary sort supplied by Russell Simpson as a lumberman and Martha Mattax as his wife, who have not spoken to each other for twenty years and always talk through a third party. Ralph Cloninger also supplies several laughs in a character role. Lee Shumway makes a minor role stand out, and Stanton Heck is good as the villain, while little Richard Headrick is appealing as an orphan child.

It is a picture which will please the masses and, if properly exploited, should bring business to the box-office.

Story

Luke Taylor, millionaire lumberman, is pining away in Florida because he believes there are no more big tracts of trees that he can get to convert into lumber. Trouble develops in moving his last big lot of logs and when his young son who seems to prefer idleness wants him to start him in a swell business, he tries to arouse his manhood by sending him to Michigan to move the logs. The boy goes and meets a girl whose father forty years before had replanted a forest which is now about ready for cutting. They join forces and get the logs to the mill. The boy falls in love with her and in order to get his father to come up and help her he sends a wire saying he can get the land. His father comes, but in the meantime the girl learns of the message and turns on him. The villain, a land schemer, finally thwarted at every turn, gets a half-witted man to set fire to the timber. The blazing forest is saved by the girl and boy, who ride through the flames and get dynamite to explode in the path of the flames. The boy's father comes around to the girl's way of thinking, agrees to help her and straightens out matters between the young couple.

"The Inner Man"

Wyndham Standing in Amusing Character Role in Release of Playgoers Pictures.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Wyndham Standing's amusing characterization in "The Inner Man," is the most novel feature of a production that is interesting but not especially distinguished. It is one of his first efforts at comedy, and will be entertaining to many. He visualizes the popular conception of an absent-minded college professor with successful effect. If the comedy mood, apparent in the first part, had been more carefully preserved the general effect would be more consistent. Instead, the last part is melodramatic and more or less stereotyped.

The timid professor finds his manhood when he discovers a plot to cheat his father in the development of his silver mines. A mountain maid played charmingly by Dorothy MacKaill is his inspiration. After his first meeting with her he has a dream about himself pursuing wood nymphs. This is a fantastic touch in the picture, achieved with slow motion photography, and hovering between the romantic and ludicrous. Dorothy MacKaill is attractive despite her extremely plain attire, which is the same throughout the picture until the last scene, where she dresses like a lady—and looks like one. A good supporting cast includes Gustav von Seyffertitz and J. Barney Sherry. The picture has been attractively photographed.

The Story

Thurlow Michael Barclay is a mild-mannered, absent-minded professor of mathematics who is a great trial to his father, who wishes he had an instinct for business. Thurlow decides to give up college and go down to his father's mine, which is reported as petered out.

In the Kentucky hills he meets Sally Wolf and, under her influence, develops some backbone. He learns that the mine's superintendent has discovered silver and is selling it on the quiet. The superintendent tries to terrorize Thurlow into leaving the hills, but Thurlow has found his manhood. He rounds up the thieves, rescues Sally from their vengeance and makes such a hit with his dad that he is taken into partnership. Dad also even approves of Sally as a daughter-in-law.

"The Flaming Hour"

Thrilling Fire Scenes in Universal Production, Starring Frank Mayo

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A spectacular climax brings five reels of entertaining action to a close in this Universal feature for Frank Mayo. It comes as an expected end, but is none the less picturesque. Early scenes in the picture and the title suggest that the finale will be a big explosion, and when it does come it is not a disappointment. As drama, spectacle and photography this scene is strong in appeal.

In preparing for the final thrill there is a story of at least average suspense intensified by the magnetic personality of the star. He has a role that brings out his most forceful qualities with now and then a hint at brutality. He is fired from a magazine plant because he uses his fists too readily. At this point his matrimonial problems commence and his wife fires him for the same reason that his employer did. At length the dramatic opportunity comes to him and he redeeems himself nobly. On the whole it is an effective role for Frank Mayo. The only unreal touch is his striking facial transformation after the change in fortune. Helen Ferguson, playing opposite, gives an earnest performance and the rest of the cast is well chosen.

The climax is well laid out. There is a fight, a careless shot, a flame and then a wild conflagration in which the whole sky threatens to be consumed. From these melodramatic scenes the victims make their escape through a secret channel in a row boat. Every move is worked out successfully to keep the interest at high pitch, and this scene alone should sell the picture.

The Story

Bruce Henderson, manager of the powder and fireworks plant of Danby & Son, is in love with Danby's daughter, Lucille. So is Richard Mower, sales manager. Bruce, hot-headed in argument, is fired after a quarrel, and Lucille sides with him and marries him. Danby gives Mower Bruce's job, unaware that Mower is stealing from him all the time. Bruce and Lucille are happy until Mower calls on Lucille. Bruce flames into a temper and makes such a spectacle of himself that Lucille leaves him.

Disguised as a bum, he gets a laborer's job in the plant and soon gets evidence against Mower. Just at this time Danby and his daughter enter the plant and catch Mower and an accomplice robbing the vault. Mower locks the two in the vault. Running out he is stopped by Bruce and shoots at Bruce, missing him and hitting some explosives. The plant begins to go up, section by section. Through this hell on earth, Bruce has one idea—to find Lucille and her father, which he does!

"Wasted Lives"

Second National Vehicle Conglomeration of Bits From Past Hits

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"Wasted Lives" starts off with "The Miracle Man" theme, then hits the wealthy but idle son's reformation bit, bounds off into "The Faith Healer" plot, borrows a timid triangle affair and finally injects itself into the world war bit. But withal this borrowing, "Wasted Lives," while the title has no bearing whatsoever on the story itself, is an entertaining picture, inoffensive and makes a praiseworthy effort at gripping the heartstrings.

Had the producer carricd out the story he started to tell in the Northwest country logically, he would have probably turned out a production that would have merited more than passing attention. As it stands, however, he jammed too many situations into the picture and failed to avail himself of the dramatic moments they tempted. One is introduced to a persistent wooer of the wife of the philanthropic surgeon, who "finds his place in the world" after heeding some fatherly advice given by an aged gentleman of the Northwest country. But in the rush of themes—although he crops up now and then—he is lost sight of and his presence in the entire picture meant nothing, unless he was there to demonstrate the wife's love for her husband.

There is an attempt made at depicting the surgeon's neglect of his wife, but it is feeble. Yet, on a double bill at the right price, "Wasted Lives" should make money. Just what this picture is worth to the exhibitor depends entirely upon what the latter is asked to pay in the way of rental. The cast includes hard-working Richard Wayne, whose work stands out above that of anybody else, although the others try hard. The direction is so-so, while the photography perfect and picturesque, some of the settings being particularly pleasing to the eye.

The Story

Randolph Adams, son of a wealthy man, while on a hunting trip in the Northwest with Ned Hastings, a friend, comes to a lonely cabin wherein lives an aged man and his infant grandchild, who is ill. Adams, who had studied medicine, gives successful treatment. The old gentleman gives him food for thought when he says, "Instead of coming here to take life, you should resort your efforts to saving it." He returns home, decided to resume his medical studies. He marries Dorothy Richards, who is also loved by Ned. Dr. Adams is successful. His wife resents the advances of Ned. War is declared. Randy goes abroad, but Ned stays at home. Word is brought back home that Randy has been killed. Ned unsuccessfully seeks to win Mrs. Adams. Randy's mother, heart-broken, is taken ill and figures in an automobile accident. She is given up as dead. Dr. Adams unexpectedly appears on the scene, the death report being a case of mistaken identity. He applies the "vibrameter," his own invention, which saves his mother. A happy reconciliation follows and Dr. Adams resumes his work of saving the lives of poor and needy children.

"Captain Fly-By-Night"

Romance and Conspiracy in Story Pictured by F. B. O. with Johnnie Walker.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This is not unlike one of the Arabian Night's tales in its fantastical conception of bandit life. It is the type of subject that cannot be taken too seriously, as it is too highly colorcd for that. Neither is it light enough for comedy. The success of a production such as this is more than usually problematical, because the picture is difficult to clasify and will appeal to a certain type of patrons rather than generally.

California in 1824 is the setting. The unsettled political condition of that period provides an opportunity for dramatics in blending the conflicting activities of the conspirators, the renegades and the loyalists with a romantic story.

Due perhaps to the fact that Johnnie Walker, the star, is not well suited to the troubadour-detective role, the suspense is not strong. The plot hinges largely on the identity of this character. But the performance does not seem to inspire much mystery as almost anyone feels assured at the start that Johnnie Walker is not the villain. The riding and picturesque settings give the picturc a ccrtain dash, appealing to those romantically inclined.

The Story

A notorious bandit, Captain-Fly-By-Night, keeps the Californians in terror. A stranger arrives with the tale that he has been accosted and robbed of his horse by the mysterious Captain. A second stranger arrives with a similar tale. The two are regarded as suspicious. They play cards for the second stranger's horse, and the first one wins and rides away. He goes to the conspirators' headquarters and warns them not to attack the mission until he sets the time. They address him as Captain-Fly-By-Night. Meantime the government has sent out an agent to arrest a stranger who is traveling without a pass. In the resulting complications which involve a beautiful Spanish girl, engaged to a man whom she has never met, the first stranger proves to be a secret agent from the government, and the second the notorious Captain, who is justly punished.

"The Forgotten Law"

Metro Has Achieved a Notable Success in Picturing Drama Starring Milton Sills

Reviewed by Charles M. Inman

A notable success has been achieved by James W. Horne in his direction of "The Forgotten Law," a Metro picture in seven parts that has much to commend it and undoubtedly will meet with favor with most audiences. With a plot that is considerably out of the ordinary and with a cast of players that is adequate to a most faithful interpretation, the director has been able to weave a beautiful pictorial story. There are plenty of thrills and opportunity for emotional acting, and the story is carried along to its climax without a break in the continuity. The photography, also, is all that could be desired, and the lighting effects are excellent.

The plot is based upon a "forgotten law," which through long ycars of disuse has become obsolete, by which a husband by will may deprive his wife of the custody of his children after his death. Some dramatic incidents hinge upon the operation of this law, as invoked in the story, and there are situations that call for rare dramatic ability, which is shown. The screen story is from Caroline Abbott Stanley's novel, "A Modern Madonna."

"A Dangerous Game"

Universal Attraction Starring Gladys Walton is Largely Episodic in Action

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Without any apparent objective, "A Dangerous Game" pictures a rambling story of the rise of a backwoods girl. It is typical of the recent efforts to star Gladys Walton in Cinderella parts. The drama is not strong as the action is more in episodes and most of the interest lies in characterization.

A story which appeared in a popular women's magazine under the title of "Gret'n Ann," furnished the material for the picture. The title of the pictured version applies more to one specific scene which more nearly approaches a climax than any other part. A fake spiritualistic seance is the "dangerous game." The heroine is incredulous and curious, and disillusions the entire assembly by exposing the staff of spirits which the clairvoyant employs. A better appreciation of comedy values would have improved this scene. It ends in the raiding of the establishment, but is somewhat lacking in punch.

The rest of the picture is an amiable portrayal of the kindly folk who befriend Gret'n Ann, give her a home and finance her schooling. The conclusion is familiar—showing the waif of the woods transformed into a lady of fashion. There are several good character types in the cast. The picture will be more apt to please children than adults, although it should do fairly well wherever the Cinderella theme has not lost its appeal.

w a selfish, hard-hearted and exceed- snobbish young man of wealth was to see the error of his ways and real- ie value of kindness, of making friends loing for others when he unexpectedly l himself in a situation where he needed badly, is the theme of "Making a Man," Paramount feature starring Jack Holt.

The picture has been well produced, and ably directed by Joseph Henabery and ely acted by Jack Holt and a good cast, its entertainment value will largely de- d on the manner in which you accept the main situation; that a millionaire beet sugar king who practically owns a whole valley in California would have no business connections in New York that he could call upon at least to help get a check cashed when he is broke, that the hotel which he owes several hundred dollars would not stand for one dollar more for a telegram in the hope of getting the money, or that the millionaire when robbed of his pocketbook would have nothing about his person that he could turn into money except cuff links, for which he only gets eighty cents.

If your audiences accept the plausibility of this situation or are willing to overlook it, the picture affords good entertainment, and is a good lesson in the value of kindness and the folly of snobbishness and not making friends, for it shows you may need them when you least expect it. There is a lot of human interest in the story and it is well brought out.

Jack Holt has a role that suits him well and he handles it nicely. Eva Novak is attractive in the opposite role, but she has little to do. Frank Nelson is especially effective as a "bum" and his work is one of the outstanding points in the picture. The remainder of the cast is entirely satisfactory and production details are up to the Paramount standard.

Cast

Horace Winsby .....Jack Holt
Jim Owens .....J. P. Lockney
Patricia Owens .....Eva Novak
Henry Cattermole .....Bert Woodruff
Shorty .....Frank Nelson
Balley .....Robert Dudley

Based on story by Peter B. Kyne
Scenario by A. S. LeVino
Directed by Joseph Henabery
Length, 6 reels.

Story

Horace Winsby, a young snob, owns or has mortgages on almost the entire San Geronimo Valley in California. He falls in love with Patricia Owens, but because of his patronizing manner, she turns him down. He treats his debtors so hard-heartedly that they finally make it uncomfortable for him and he thinks it best to leave town. Coming to New York he takes a big suite at a hotel and runs up a big bill. When asked to settle for it .he finds his pocketbook has been stolen and he is without funds. Put out of the hotel, he goes into the park and there meets a bum, who helps him, and after a couple of days gets him a job as dishwasher.

In the meantime Patricia and her father come to New York, learn the story, have the hotel find Winsby, and everything is straightened out. Winsby has learned his lesson in sympathy and human kindess, he wires his manager to extend the mortgages of his debtors, arranges to take the bum back with him and, Patricia seeing he has made a man of himself, accepts him.

"Conquering the Woman"

Popular Theme and Diverting Performance in Associated Exhibitor Release—Starring Florence Vidor

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The immortal theme of manhandling a willful woman receives entertaining treatment in this picture which stars Florence Vidor. It has been produced in popular style. Settings, characters and direction are of a nature that caters to generally approved standards.

Much of the action takes place at sea. A rough seafarer who has taken a voyage around the world attempts to save a woman from drowning and receives her hearty scorn in return. The rest of the picture plays largely on this motive—the social antagonism between the girl and the rough hero. Familiar situations have been used in showing how to tame a spoiled woman, Life on a desert island forces her to work or starve and finally succeeds in changing her from a snob to the man's most devoted admirer.

There are picturesque shots of the sea, a yacht race, and a thrilling rescue scene where the girl is saved on the sinking ship. Comedy touches are frequent, especially in the earlier part. Florence Vidor is gifted to play the conventional young heroine in charming style and David Butler, as her heavy disciplinarian gives an attractive, good-natured interpretation of the part.

The picture offers pleasant diversion and fulfills the usual requirements of the successful program feature.

The Cast

Judith Stafford.....Florence Vidor
Aunt Sophia.....Mathilda Brundage
Count Henri.....Peter Burke
Larry Saunders.....David Butler
Shorty.....Roscoe Karns
The Captain.....Harry Todd
Tobie Stafford.....Bert Sprotte

Story by Henry C. Rowland.
Scenario by Frank Howard Clarke.
Direction by King Vidor.
Length, 5,887 Feet.

Story

Tobie Stafford, a self-made man, is shocked to see his daughter Judith return from Europe an unbearable snob. He enlists the aid of a rough sea captain and some crude friends in teaching her more democratic ideals. They kidnap her, put her on a yacht and make her eat her meals with the captain and Larry Saunders, a rough Westerner. She scorns both of them. The next move in the plot is to put her on a desert isle with Larry. He makes a new woman of her so that the old associates are no longer attractive to her. When the Count, a former suitor, arrives she refuses him, but he takes her away on his yacht. Larry follows in another ship and rescues her and her father's purposes are carried out.

"The Firebrand"

Phil Goldstone Presents Franklyn Farnum in Western With Plenty of Action

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This Western has more snap and better comedy situations than any of the other recent Franklyn Farnum features. It furnishes the star with the usual generous opportunities for heroics, but succeeds in making them more interesting than frequently. This is because the story has a few original twists.

With the advance of the melodramatic moments there is a full appreciation of the comedy values, this not to the extent of burlesque but just enough to make it a well-balanced entertainment. The charging of the barbed wire fence with electricity, the descent of the villains into the well and the trick which the hero plays with their saddles illustrates this. These scenes, and in fact the entire picture has been well directed by Alfred J. Neitz.

There is continued swift action, expert riding and a choice of beautiful exteriors. Fred Gamble plays an amusing character, the gouty checker fiend who is father to the hero's sweetheart. He is responsible for a good share of the laughs. Farnum has an entertaining role with plenty of chance for spirited action. The picture should be a decided hit with those who admire the star.

The Story

"The Firebrand" is the story of a nester, holding his small tract in the face of opposition, and overcoming the obstacles that force him to vacate his homestead. He not only gains the upper hand but aids the sheriff in capturing a gang of cattle rustlers, forcing the gang down a deep well for safekeeping until the sheriff arrives. And after defeating old Judd Acker, the neighboring rancher, in his attempts to make him leave, he informs that gouty old individual that he has been married to his daughter Alice for a year.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Ambitious Short Subject Program Announced by Bray Productions

A significant indication of the growing importance of the short subject is to be found in the program by Bray Productions, Inc. Two regular releases to be handled by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation produced by Director Ashley Miller and a large art staff headed by Production Manager J. A. Norling. One of these releases is the Bray Romances, a series of senational adventures, released one every four weeks. These Romances are extraordinary flights of fancy with just enough of scientific fact to make them plausible and mysterious. The other release through Hodkinson is the Bray Comedies, made up of an ingenious combination of straight motion picture photography and animated drawings.

In addition to these, Bray Productions are bringing out two releases for the State's rights market. One is the Bray Magazine, not a news reel, but, as its name indicates, a magazine on the screen, each number containing either three or four subjects, to be released every two weeks. The other State's rights release is Bray Nature Pictures, a series to be available every four weeks, containing unique examples of micro-photography.

In addition to these four releases the production staff is hard at work on a quantity of material not yet ready to be announced. Finally, a two-reel dramatization of Dr. C. C. Moore's famous poem, "A Visit from St. Nicholas," or "The Night Before Christmas," was completed by Director Ashley Miller in time for Hodkinson to distribute for the holiday season.

Laemmle Says New "Leather Pushers" Are Best Pictures He Has Ever Seen

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, says "The New Leather Pushers" series of two-reelers starring with Reginald Denny, based on prize ring stories by H. C. Witwer, are the best pictures he has ever seen.

Mr. Laemmle reserved opinion until he had seen each of the six, just as he plans to have Universal's patrons view the entire series before booking.

"I'm a case-hardened picture producer, says Mr. Laemmle, harder to satisfy than any exhibitor or any movie fan I ever met. It takes something like dynamite to get a rise out of me, as far as pictures are concerned. But these pictures turn the trick.

"I thought the first series of six 'Leather Pushers' was good, and we have received countless letters praising about these pictures. But the new series has far eclipsed the first series.

"The series is filled with excitement, thrills and comedy. The fights are corking. Denny certainly can handle his mitts, and he is stacked up against some of the cleverest box-fighers on the West Coast. Among them are Cliff Kramer, heavyweight champion, and Al Norton, light heavyweight champion, and Al Smithford, amateur middleweight champion, of the Pacific Coast; Leo Matlock, middleweight sensation of California; Frankie Adams, Chicago featherweight; Texas Kid, bantamweight; Kid Wagoner, Brooklyn light heavyweight; Johnny Schiff, former California contender for the world's featherweight title and winner over Frankie Fleming for the Canadian featherweight title in 1915.

"The pictures are red meat—and the moving picture public is hungry for it."

Another "Our Gang" Comedy Heads Pathe List of Ten Subjects for December 31

The leading feature of the Pathe program for release December 31 is the Hal Roach kid and animal two-reeler in the Our Gang Comedy series, "A Quiet Street." "Our Gang" are up to mischief which causes them to believe that they are objects of police activity, they beat it to a cellar where "Red Mike" is in hiding. It is only when he quits in a mixup with bulldog and boys that the latter discover themselves to be heroes instead of culprits.

Paul Parrott, assisted by Jobyna Ralston, is the hero of the one-reel comedy, "Fire the Fireman." All the other firemen are "fired." The hotel landlord decides to burn down the place for the insurance money. The hero has a describable struggle with the hose, a scaling ladder and a life-saving net—but he gets off with his life and wins the girl.

The Patheserial, "Speed," with Charles Hutchison, reaches its eleventh episode in the mining regions, where the hero learns that his enemies have secreted the witness needed to clear his name.

"Sammy in Siberia," the one-reel Harold Lloyd re-issue, in which Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard appear, mixes up the hero as one of a squad of American soldiers with much snow and many bewhiskered and misapprehending "mujiks."

In Screen Snapshots No. 16 many favorites are shown in interesting scenes. Gloria Swanson, Director Sam Wood, Rosemary Theby, House Peters, Little Mary Jane Ircing, Pauline Stark and Antonio Moreno. Mary Miles Minter, Sunshine Sammy and others.

Pathe Review No. 188 charmingly illustrates Longfellow's Poem, "The Brook and the Wave," shows deft fingers making life-like birds, and presents a chemical novelty, "Fire Snake." American toe-dancing is analyzed by slow-motion. The Aesop's Film Fable, "The Two Trappers," is also on the week's schedule.

Final Title Announced

The first of the Buddy Messenger small town boy stories made by Century comedies will be released shortly under its final title, "Boyhood Days." It was directed by Harry Edwards.

Book Hodkinsons

Hodkinson announces the Rivoli has also booked the first Heeza Liar comedy, entitled "Colonel Heeza Liar's Treasure Island;" also the Bray Romances.

"The Mystery Box," first of the Bray Romances, deals exclusively with the radio "The Sky Splitter," second of these novelties, has for its subject the question of light and its speed. It is further stated that the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., has booked the entire short subject program of the Hodkinson Corporation, including "Days Afield With Rod and Gun" and the "All Star Comedies," produced by C. C. Burr; "Fun from the Press" series, Movie Chats and Bray Romances, and "Heeza Liar" comedies

"Plunder" Bookings

Trade showings of "Plunder" in the key cities, together with the widely published and uniform praise of reviewers, Pathe reports, have stimulated the heaviest advance bookings at highest rentals yet recorded for a serial pic[illegible]e branches report that "no argument" on three essential points is the average exhibitor's attitude after seeing the early episodes of the new Pearl White Patheserial, these points being: First, the star; second, the story; third, the production.

Repeats Serial

Exhibitors who "don't play serials," says Pathe, are invited to note the experience of the management of the Hippodrome Theatre, Richmond, Va. They have contracted to repeat within a space of less than two years their first run engagement of the Pathe serial, "White Eagle."

Most Notable Year for Short Subjects Says Hammons

"No one in our industry will be likely to question the fact that the year just drawing to a close has been the most notable as far as short subjects are concerned since the multiple-reel feature came into popularity," says E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges.

"Organized nationally and dedicated exclusively to short subjects, Educational is proud of the part it has played in the advancement of the short-reel picture," continued Mr. Hammons. "In the last year, it has become increasingly obvious that the day is not far off when the "feature picture" will be the best picture on the program, not the longest.

"One and two-reel pictures have been prominently displayed in lights by theatres which heretofore made no effort to exploit any but the longer features. Many of the best houses are regularly giving space in newspaper "ad" layouts and on billboards to exploiting short subjects, and entire programs made up of short subjects are becoming more popular.

"Educational has kept faith with the exhibitor; the exhibitor's response has been most heartening, and I desire for myself and the whole Educational organization to extend to our exhibitor friends our sincere thanks for their co-operation and support and our best wishes for a prosperous year ahead," says Mr. Hammons.

The year also saw Jack White's talents in the present series of Mermaid comedies of high speed, thrills and laughs, starting with "Lookout Below" and including "The Steeplechaser," "Blazes" and others, which have proved big business getters.

Lloyd Hamilton's work during two years earned for him a company of his own. The first of the series, "The Speeder," was a big success, which has been duplicated by the later releases, and it is said that "The Educator," the newest of the series, shows signs of even surpassing "The Speeder" in popularity.

The season has also shown new groups added to Educational's program, including the Earl Hurd comedies, combining living characters and cartoons; Lyman Howe's "Hodge Podge" series, the one-reel Cameo comedies, and a two-reel series of Sherlock Holmes stories, together with Tony Sarg's Almanac.

"So great has been the public response that it seems probable it will be advisable to further increase our output for the next season," says Mr. Hammons.

In calling attention to its achievements for the past year, Educational calls attention to the cutting down of the number of Christie comedies from twenty-four to twenty and to the fact that the new series, including "That Son of a Sheik," "Pardon My Glove," "Let 'Er Run" and "Choose Your Weapons" have proved among the most popular of the year and achieved a unique niche as a happy medium between farce and slap-stick.

Pollard Going Strong

That Broadway audiences eagerly accept Snub Pollard as a star in two-reel comedies is recognized by the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres in booking "Newly Rich" for two weeks.

Pathe further announces representative houses in all sections of the United States are demonstrating a similar degree of faith in Pollard's drawing power in the new two-reelers.

Fox Films Venice

In the Fox Educational Entertainment, "Bits of Europe," the camera lens brings Venice into focus. Here motley gondolas are poled along winding canals. Being the only means of transportation in the city, they are aptly termed "the floating taxicabs of Venice." The lagoons of Venice have been the subject of many paintings. Swinging along the main route, the observer sees on one side St. Mark's Cathedral. Near St. Mark's is the palace of the Doge of Venice.

"Leather Pushers"

(Universal—Dramas—Two Reels)

If you want a good snappy lot of two-reel dramas get the new series of "Leather Pushers" distributed by Universal, they are even better than the first series. As is to be expected in prize-fight stories, they have plenty of punch, and this holds true in more ways than one. There is also considerable action, good comedy, and so far as the first four are concerned, each has an entertaining story. They are thoroughly enjoyable offerings which will hold the interest and should please nearly everybody. "The Chickasha Bone Crusher" was reviewed in the issue of December 23. Each story is independent of the others but they all deal with the adventures of Kane Halliday, known in the ring as "Kid Roberts," which is finely portrayed by Reginald Denny. The main characters, Hayden Stevenson as his manager, and Elinor Field as the girl, appear in most of the subjects. The series is based on magazine stories by H. C. Witwer.

"Young King Cole"

In this number, the "Kid" is abroad. First he has a couple of rounds with old King Booze which results in his girl giving him a K. O. punch. In the big scene he fights a Frenchman who puts dope on his gloves which causes the Kid to be unable to see distinctly. He gropes around with his eyes nearly closed and takes a good beating while resting his eyes, but finally comes back with a mighty wallop and wins the fight. There are several clever and humorous bits in this subject.

"He Raised Kane"

A good human interest touch is given to this "round" by the fact that Kane, who does not want his father to know he is a fighter, thinking he objects, nearly loses the fight when he sees him at the ringside. In the end, it is the words of encouragement from his father which causes him to win. It develops that the "Kid's" father has known it all the time and has been getting reports on his son's prowess in the ring.

"When Kane Met Abel"

Like the other numbers in the series, this one has a "bout" as the principal scene. In this instance, however, the "Kid" is in the studio playing the star role in a "super-feature." The director gets his cast to put extra snap into the big scene by making each of the fighters think the other is double crossing him. There is considerable burlesque on film-making in this number, including a scene where a lot of dummies are hurled over a cliff after a fierce fight, and another scene which will bring a big laugh, where one of the fighters in a preliminary warm-up breaks through the wall into the next set where another director is filming "Daniel in the Lion's Den," the lions get peeved and the fighter climbs up the wall with Daniel at his heels.—C. "Gym Jams"

(Fox—Cartoon—One Reel)

The gymnasium is the setting for the nonsense in this Mutt and Jeff cartoon. It proves a resourceful background for their fondness for their exercising a grudge against each other, this in robust physical fashion. It is not above the average of these cartoons in entertainment value.

M. K.

"Christmas"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

Atmosphere and action are abundant in this Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven comedy. It is a splendid subject for the holiday program and will keep the children entertained. Sambo, the cook's son, receives a goat for a Christmas present and the goat's contribution to the family excitement is considerable. After difficulties the tree gets trimmed and all retire except Santa Claus. It develops that several play Santa Claus, including a burglar, and the final capture of the real thief is a lively climax. M. K.

"Graphic No. 2550"

(Educational—One Reel)

This is a good short subject for the holiday season because it shows the intricate technique of correctly carving a turkey! A chef from a popular hotel gives a neat demonstration. Other features of appeal include a detailed illustration of the famous leaps of Camillia Sabie, champion woman hurdler; a romantic appreciation of a New Orleans chimney sweep; Babe Ruth as a day laborer, and the Buoy Patrol of Ambrose Channel.—M. K.

"Reversability and Relativity"

(Orndorf—Scientific—Comic)

This is a very unusual picture and it is hard to know just how to accept it. It is described on the Capitol Theatre program as a satire on the Einstein Theories, and starts out by means of diagrams and photos to explain the Fourth Dimension, reversability and relativity. Apparently serious it suddenly changes into a comedy showing what happens to man who has been studying these theories and dreams his auto has been "reversed" and that he is able to elude the cops by disappearing and reappearing before them at will. Frankly the writer could not tell how much of this was intended to be serious or if it was all satirical, and although it is hard to follow the "explanation" it is nevertheless interesting. Those who expect to see a simple and clear-cut explanation of the Professor's theories may be disappointed.—C. S. S.

"Hee Haw"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

There is considerable good humor and several funny situations in this Century comedy. Much of the laughter is furnished by the natural antics of Maudie the mule, the featured member of the cast, as when this animal after walking ludicrously upstairs with its feet incased in pillows, kicks strenuously to get them off, making the feathers fly. It is a slapstick comedy based on a book agent who, after other exciting experiences trying to sell his books, finds a boy and his mule and takes them up to his hotel room. There is considerable slapstick in this number and it will prove enjoyable to the average spectator.—C. S. S.

"Baron Bragg and the Haunted Castle"

(Educational—Silhouette—One Reel)

This number of the Tony Sarg Almanac tells by means of silhouettes the story of a man who loses his money and horse on a bet and then tells his wife a weird story of his experience in a haunted castle. The chief point of interest in addition to the clever silhouette work is the imaginative stunts in the castle, such as the disappearing fairy and the tables, chairs, beds, etc., which appears to be alive and walk around, kicking and other-wise abusing our hero. As a whole, it is not as high in entertainment value as some of the other issues in this series.—C. S. S.

"A Quiet Street"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

There are few "quiet" moments in this latest of the "Our Gang" series. It is unusually snappy entertainment with the famous Hal Roach collection of children and animals in constant progress from the frying pan into the fire and back again. The pursuit of Red Mike, a notorious robber, is mixed up with their activities. Unexpectedly they land in the cellar where he is hiding and the bull dog brings him to justice. This after a noble fight.—M. K.

"Pathe Review 187"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

There are several interesting items in this issue of Pathe Review including an exquisitely photographed number built around the legend of the Bubble Girl of the Mongoup River. There are picturesque views in color of the straw thatched huts of Sangha in French West Africa, also entertaining slow motion photographs analyzing animal action, including the jumping of deer and dogs; together with a section dealing with monkey psychology.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 188

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Beautiful photography make the first scenes in this which are devoted to an illustration of Longfellow's poem, "The Brook and the Wave," a delightful subject; there is an informative demonstration of how to make feathers for milady's hat thus saving the birds; the production of weird chemical form known as "The Fire Snake" and a slow-motion analysis of toe dancing.—M. K.

"The Two Trappers"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this Aesop's Film Fable, Farmer Al Falfa disdains to make use of the cat's assistance in charming birds. He prides himself as a too experienced hunter for this. He loses out, however, and is robbed of his spoils and almost of his life. Meantime the cat brings home the birds. The moral is "All are not hunters who toot their horns." The number is typical in merit of the usual Paul Terry cartoon.—M. K.

"Siege of the Lancashire Queen"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is another of the series of "Tales of the Fish Patrol," founded on stories by Jack London, which are being distributed by Universal with Jack Mulhall as the star. From a standpoint of interest and entertainment, it is of the same average as the earlier numbers in the series. The story revolves around two men who are caught using illegal lines. They seek refuge aboard a British ship, Mulhall follows disguised as a convict and after a thrilling fight in which he is aided by the head of the Chinese illegal fishermen, he succeeds in getting the men he went after, also in rescuing the girl who has been lured aboard.—C. S. S.

"A White Blacksmith"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Paul Parrott is the hero of this single-reel Pathe comedy which deals with the will of an old man who leaves a blacksmith shop to Paul and a garage to his brother. Paul does not succeed in getting any paying business, but meets with varied experiences and finally learns the lawyer has made a mistake and the garage is his. There are several laugh-getting situations and it compares favorably with other Parrott comedies. A unique feature is where the blacksmith shop begins to sink into the ground when an auto is being hoisted to the ceiling. This is ingeniously done. Jobyna Ralston has a prominent role and appears to advantage.

"The Agent"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)

Larry Semon offers an abundance of hilarious comedy in this. It is broad slapstick of the class that thousands will enjoy. He has handled old material with many original flourishes and the laughs come fast and furiously. Hootch barrels, trap doors and molasses combine to send his foes to ludicrous disaster. As usual, there are a few pretentious scenes, too, with Spanish settings and attractive girls. Toward the close, Larry Semon doubles and gives a most entertaining impersonation of a nobleman. Larry Semon fans and all slapstick enthusiasts will welcome "The Agent."—M. K.

"A Good Scout"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Book agents again come into their own in this Mermaid comedy distributed by Educational which features Jimmie Adams. It is a rough and tumble slap-stick comedy directed by Arvid Gillstrom and the action is considerably involved, there being very little connection between the first and second reels. In the first reel the hero has the usual experience of a comedy book agent, then gets into trouble, being mistaken for a flirt. In the second reel the action all take place in a Boy Scout camp. There is not much originality in this comedy and it is hardly up to the standard of entertainment value of the majority of the series, but it will prove satisfactory to the majority of fans who like slapstick.—C. S. S.

"Once Over"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Educational set a high record for speed and action and laughs in the first two issues of the new Cameo comedies, "Crash" and "Pitter Patter" and this number is hardly up to that standard. At the same time, it is an entertaining slap-stick comedy with a number of humorous situations. Most of the fun takes place in a barber shop where the girl is a manicure and the hero (Jimmie Adams) gets a job as a barber though he knows nothing about the business.—C. S. S.

"Fire the Fireman"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

The fire department serves once more for burlesque treatment in this. Paul Parro and Jobyna Ralston are featured in a seri of stunts that are too lacking in originali to be amusing to everyone. The fire depar ment is shown, preparing to respond to call of distress and later in action at th hotel to which the landlord has set fire. Th hero's struggle with the fire-apparatus an his rescue of the girl's dog is depicted i rapid slapstick.—M. K.

"Newly Rich"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

"Snub" Pollard is the star of this two-reel comedy distributed by Pathe. It is one of the best of the series of two-reelers in which he has appeared The plot centeres around a chauffeur who marries a wealth girl. It is a rough and tumble comedy whic has many laughable moments. These scene around the hornets' nest while not new, ar quite funny. One of the best things in th picture is the way the bunch of swell gue cannot resist the lure of the music wh the fiddler is playing "Turkey in the Stra and they all get up and start to dancin This comedy is one of the best of the tw reelers in which Pollard has appeared.— S. S.

"Aladdin Jr."

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Lewis Sargent is the star of this number in the Messenger Boy series. It is a fantastic comedy, and as the title suggests, the action hinges on an Aladdin's lamp that Sargent finds just after reading the story of Aladdin. He gets his wishes and very cleverly succeeds in getting more than the three allotted, as after using two he then wishes for three more. He meets with al sorts of experiences and when he tells th gang about it they dub him an awful li It is a comedy that will appeal particula to children.—C. S. S.

"Cupid's Elephant"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Sunshine comedy featuring Si Smith is unusually original. An elephant, a girl and her two suitors are involved in a romance with one ludicrous episode after another. The first big laugh comes when the smaller suitor, whose car has broken down, kindles his energies with some magical pills, and by the time his rival's taxi arrives at the girl's house, the little fello is taking tea with her—in fact he is almo through. The rest of the comedy and th best part of it in fact is furnished by th elephant, which the hero buys for h sweetheart. The elephant has been clever trained and does some stunts that brin many laughs. M. K.

"Bruce Barton Series"

(Second National—Novelty—One Reel)

"The Just-a-Little-Late Club"—This is the first of a series of one-reelers edited and produced by Bruce Barton, editorial writer of Collier's Weekly and released in the independent market by Second National Pictures Corporation. The first subject concerns the adventures of tardy gentlemen and ends with the moral "Watch Your Watch." It is a clever pictorial editorial, interesting and entertaining and very cleverly produced. This series, if the first subject can be taken as any criterion, should prove exceedingly popular with the theatre-going public, for it touches on interesting human sidelights, comprehensively brought home so that even the primary school child can grasp the moral. You had better grab this picture, Mr. Exhibitor.—R. F.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Some Party

The editor attended one of the most remarkable gatherings of motion picture projectionists it has yet been his lot to be present at on Saturday, December 16, at midnight. The place was the Rustic Restaurant, Sixth avenue and Twenty-fourth street, New York City. The occasion was the fourth annual banquet of the Loew projectionists. The affair was in honor of Mike Campbell, Chief of Projectionists, Loew Theatres, who has direct charge of projection in thirty-one of the Marcus Loew theatres in and about Greater New York.

The dinner was served in the banquet hall on the second floor of the "Rustic," and around the tables foregathered one hundred and fifteen men, all of them either Loew projectionists or invited guests.

The job of being toastmaster of the evening was wished on F. H. Richardson of the Moving Picture World, and during the entire time, from twelve, midnight, to four A. M., there was not a single incident to mar the harmony and pleasure of the evening.

Campbell Spoke Frankly

In addressing the gathering Campbell spoke frankly and plainly with regard to his intents and purposes with relation to projection in Loew theatres.

"We propose to have 100 per cent. results," said he. "You are not held down unreasonably in the matter of needed supplies. In fact you may have anything which will tend either to improve screen results or to minimize projection costs."

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in succesful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Christmas Time
1922

To all my friends I extend my hearty wish for a merry christmas and a happy new year!

May the God of Fortune deal kindly with you through the coming year and may next yuletide find us all better and wiser men.

F. H. Richardson

"Mike," as friend Campbell is familiarly hailed, was the recipient of many Christmas gifts, some of which were very substantial in value. He is one of the lucky ones for whom Santa Claus seems to make special pre-Christmas trial trips. Most of us call ourselves lucky if he finds us even on Christmas morning.

Personally I have one criticism to make, Viz: In his address Mike stuck persistently to the somewhat shop-worn terms "operator," and "booth."

This I would let pass without comment, because I don't like to slap friend Campbell on the wrist, but the trouble with that is that we look for and have the absolute right to expect better things of men in his position. We expect men like Campbell to be progressive and up-to-date. Campbell owes it to his position to not lag behind in the use of up-to-date terms, any more than he would lag behind in projection equipment. The adherence of men of his standing to such back number terms retards progress and does much harm.

Cleanliness a Requisite

Campbell warned the men that he demanded absolute cleanliness in the Marcus Loew projection rooms, and that a third warning as to uncleanliness would inevitable result in discharge. He also warned them that injury to films through scratching and strained sprocket holes would have to be paid for by the man or men perpetrating the abuse, to all of which the editor of this department gives most hearty approval.

The first speaker introduced by the toastmaster was Will C. Smith, who was placed first because of the fact that friend Smith not only is a man loved by us all, but also because of the fact that of all those present Smith was the eldest in point of time of entering the projection field.

He was followed by Harry Sherman, representing the I. A. International office, our old friend Joseph Basson representing the American Projection Society, "Al" Polin, President of the International Projection Associaton, whom the toastmaster described as "an old war house, with the light of battle always in his eye."

An Old Timer

Harold Williams, widely known both in and outside of New York, was introduced both as one of the really honest to gosh old timers and as representing the firm of Durkin and Williams. Rabell—oh yes, he was there. It wouldn't have been a real party without him. It was a job to pry him away from the remains of the chicken on his plate, but it was finally accomplished and he said a lotta very kind things about friend Campbell and then—returned to the aforesaid remains. Without W. H. Rabell a party would be as lifeless, as would the Independent Movie Supply Company if he resigned his office therein.

Next, in quick succession, came "Herb" Griffin, all dolled up in swaller tail 'n everything, representing the N. Power Company, W. Green, representing the Precision Machine Company, The Redoubtable Mike Campbell himself, J. H. Schick, of the Bausch and Lomb Company, Harry Macklet, of the American Film Renovating Company, E. Hoffman, of the Hoffman and Soons Company, Electrical Contractors, M. R. Wolfe, representing the National Carbon Company, and C. Long Cobb, General Manager of the new "Art Color Process"

Announcement

IN keeping with the marked progress shown in the improvement of machinery and equipment for the highly perfected projection of motion pictures, the FEASTER MANUFACTURING COMPANY announces that, beginning with the New Year, there will be ready for distribution the

NEW IMPROVED FEASTER NO-REWIND MACHINES

with one and two thousand foot magazines for the Power's, Simplex and Motiograph Projectors.

The progress of the management in perfecting a modern device that evidences the most marked mechanical development since the inception of the industry. It is an accomplishment that supplies the missing link in the chain of mechanism that assures perfection in projection.

Territorial representation through distributors of recognized ability will be established throughout the United States to provide efficient installation and service for FEASTER NO-REWIND MACHINES.

In announcing plans for enlarged production activities, the FEASTER MANUFACTURING COMPANY extends New Year's Greetings to its many friends in every branch of the motion picture industry.

which is the successor to, or outcome of the old Kinemacolor process.

Among Those Present

Among those present were: Will C. Smith, U. T. E.; W. H. Rabell, Independent Movie Supply Company; Fred Stoffregen, Capitol Theatre; Joe Basson, H. Mackler, who many hope and believe will be the next President of Local Union 306; "Al" Polin, "Jimmie" Daisy, for years identified with union matters in New York City and known as the "Wild Irishman" of Gotham; S. Goldfarb, M. Fernberg, W. Guth, Harry Sherman, M. Rottiner, E. Klinowski, J. Lafauti, L. Coco, Joe Abrams, J. Goldhammer, Harry Williams, Gus Durkin, E. Hoffman, Jas. E. Soons, Joe Krulish, Herbert Griffin, friend MacGuire, advertising manager N. Power Company; C. Long Cobb, Art Color Process; James Lava, Superior Machine Company and oodles of others whose names I was unable to make note of, as I was myself reasonably busy all through the evening.

Some Party

Some party, my boy, if you ask me—SOME considerable party.

I might add that such gatherings as these accomplish much good. They bring the men together in a sociable way and permit an exchange of ideas; also they serve to strengthen the morale of the entire projection force. In my opinion it would mean many thousands of dollars a year added box office revenue, and other thousands in lessened operating expenses if such corporations as the Marcus Loew obliged their projectionists and theatre managers to all meet in one of the theatres, say once every three months, offering something fairly substantial in the way of first and second prizes for ideas submitted at these meetings which are found of value to the company in improving either projection or other results.

I would also like to suggest that inasmuch as men like Marcus Loew have a direct and enormously large money interest involved in what these men do or do not do, it would be a mighty good financial investment to lend encouragement to them by recognizing such a gathering as this, either by personal attendance, by direct representation or in some other way.

Viewed purely as an investment I cannot imagine anything of equal cost in time or effort which would be likely to return even one-tenth the probable interest.

Lens Data

O. H. Butler, Projectionist Majestic Theatre, Centerville, Iowa, asks me to autograph the new handbook he ordered. Concerning the handbook he says:

Have been the owner and student of both the second and third editions, which have been of so much help that I am afraid words cannot express it. As to the lens chart, for which the price is inclosed, why I should have had it long ago.

Referring back to an earlier issue of projection department, I therein asked about my lens combination and you requested further information, viz.: Is the distance I gave from condenser to film from face of converging lens or from center of combination, and what is exact horizontal diameter of crater, which is 5-16 inch. Distance is 19 inches center of combination to film. Many thinks for reply to my former letter.

Followed Instructions

Later, under date of Nov. 16, brother Butler says:

Did as you said and got two 6.5 plano convex lenses. With the aid of lens chart and chart on pages 196-197 of handbook and your letter I have been experimenting.

Am not done yet, as I think I can still better things. Here is present line-up, which is a wonderful improvement as against what I originally had. Want your criticism and to have you point my errors, if any.

Use mercury arc rectifier, 30 ampere capacity. Use 28 amperes. Carbons ⅝ positive cored and ½ inch solid negative, set as per "C," figure 120B, page 407 of new handbook.

Crater distance to lens 2.5 inches. Cannot get it any closer. Two 6.5 plano convex lenses spaced ⅛ inch apart. Distance center of condenser combination to film 18.75 inches, which is as much as I can get. Projection lens 4.5 inch, E.F., and 1⅝ diameter. Working distance 3.5 inches. Crater diameter ¼ inch. Lens stopped down to little less than ¼ its diameter. Find aerial image to be 10⅛ inches from aperture. It is 1 inch wide by ¾ high.

It is at end of shutter shaft. By reversing shutter on shaft I can just reach it. At this position I am able to use a three-blade 50-50 shutter. Now where can I improve? We project a fourteen-foot picture at ninety-six feet.

What Griffith Says

After doping this out for myself I checked by sending it to brother Griffith, who says:

Seems to me, Butler has got about as near as he can get with the small lens he has. He needs a larger diameter projection lens, though with the small amperage he uses there will be but little current waste.

I don't quite understand what he means by the lens being stopped down to a little less than ¼ its diameter, but presume he must refer to the condenser, which he has topped down to get the entire line beam into his projection lens.

The small lens diameter wil cause him to advance his crater a bit ahead of its normal position. I am afraid the collector lens will break if he gets any closer to it.

And there you are, brother Butler. I, too, could not quite make out what all that lens stoppage meant. Certainly, unless you had a heavy projection angle and was obliged to stop down to increase depth of focus, there could be no reason for stopping an already too small lens, and it hardly seemed possible that it would require all that stop to get the entire beam into the lens, though perhaps it does.

If so, then certainly you do need a larger projection lens. I'll just lay your system out on paper and see what is what. Should have done it in the first place.

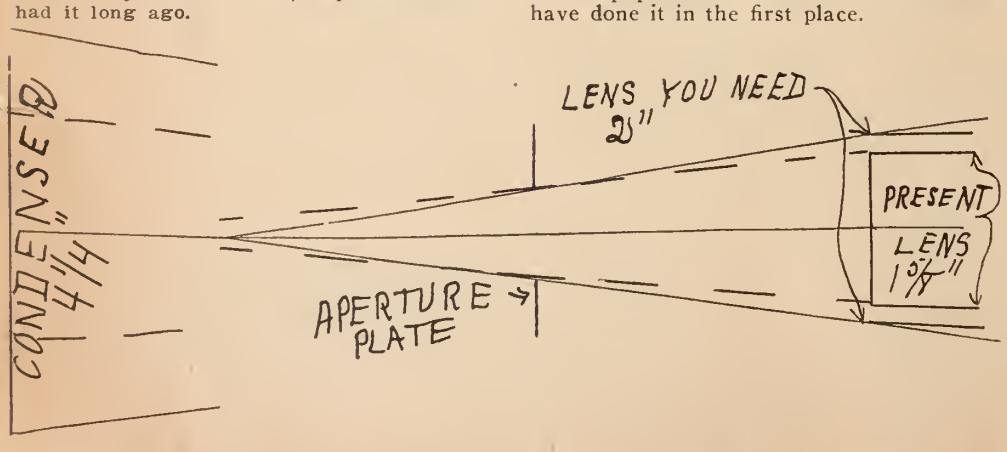

DIAGRAM ILLUSTRATING MR. BUTLER'S PROBLEM
Showing lens used at present and what the actual conditions require

There! Take a rubber at the diagram and learn that it does not pay to guess too much. I was surprised to find that it really is necessary to stop down your condenser as indicated by the broken lines (the diagram is not precisely accurate, but approximately correct) in order to get the entire light beam into your lens. What you need is a lens of not less than two inch diameter, and that is what you must have to work at the best possible advantage.

At Last

A projectionist in Providence, R. I., writes:

Have at last decided to write the department, of which I am one of many constant readers.

Am using two Simplex motor driven projectors which I like fine. Current is 110 volt, 60 cycle, taken through a Ft. Wayne A.C. to A.C. Compensarc, set at 60 amperes. What is the voltage at the arc?

Project a nine foot picture at 52 feet. Axis of projection is horizontal. Films come in pretty good condition, except that they mostly have holes punched and bits of paper stuck on them near ends of reels. Pretty rotten work, that, I think. Attached find two samples of film. They are from a new print.

For change-over I use a slide carrier on each projector, with a piece of tin in one side of each. They are connected by means of a string, so that opening one closes the other. It makes a fine dissolving effect. If this is published, kindly omit name.

Why So Bashful?

Why so bashful? Let your light shine forth. Your slide carrier scheme is not a good one. It will give the desired effect, but if you will examine figure 42A, page 177 of your new handbook, you will see what an expensive way it is of doing the trick.

The film samples you sent show carelessness on the part of the studio inspector. It is a fault he is paid to catch and cut out. I heartily agree that the punch marks and paper stickers show very punkly rotten work on the part of whoever did it.

The voltage of your arc should be about 35, though it may be more or less, according to how you handle it.

Give Full Data

A projectionist in Trenton, New Jersey, asks:

How may I obtain your latest lens chart pertaining to condensers and covering amperage up to 125. Also how obtain a projection lens chart including sizes up to 200 feet.

It is not "sizes" but focal length for distances up to two hundred feet. But anyhow Trenton could not have an answer to his question because there is at present no such chart available. By this I mean there is no chart of that sort for general distribution.

I have such a one, yes, but the average man would have about as much chance of applying it intelligently as I would have of writing the language of ancient Rome correctly.

We are trying to get the thing into a usable shape. Meanwhile two courses are open to you. First, if you will look at pages 194 to 202 of the new handbook you will find complete directions for figuring it out for yourself. Or if you will send me information I will give you the dope, no matter what your amperage may be, though with warning that above 125 amperes D. C. you are merely wasting current.

What you must send is. First, the EXACT horizontal diameter of your carbon crater. Second, the distance of projection, width of picture, working distance and free diameter of your projection lens. Mind you, I don't want these "on, near or about," but EXACT. I would also like to know the minimum and maximum distance you can get from face of converging lens of condenser from film.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Here you are, girls and boys of all sizes and ages! Here is the latest idea in Santa Clauses, according to Miss Norma Conterno, leading lady for Al St. John, star comedian with Fox Film Corporation. In place of the jolly old chap with his long whiskers and his generously rounded limbs and form you are offered a fair feminist, 1922 crop, in top boots, riding breeches and a snug-fitting, bell-skirted coat with leopard skin trimming, who looks as if she hailed from the Equator rather than from the North Pole.

Around the World for Data

Cecil B. DeMille is sending two women half way around the world in search of authentic data for his forthcoming film production of the Ten Commandments for Paramount.

Clare West, who heads Mr. DeMille's costume department, will leave shortly for Paris to gain ideas for gowns to be worn by the Paramount stars in the modern sequences of the production, and Mrs. Florence Meehan, traveler, and authority on ancient peoples and customs, sails immediately on a lengthy tour of Palestine, Arabia, Egypt, India, Java, Ceylon, Thibet and Baluchistan to obtain costumes, properties and historical data on the places actually named in the Old Testament.

Lois Wilson Added to Cast

Lois Wilson is the latest as well as the last addition to the stellar cast of "Bella Donna," Pola Negri's first American-made picture, which George Fitzmaurice is producing at Paramount's West Coast studio, according to an announcement made by the producer.

W. W. Hodkinson Has New Selling System

A decided innovation has been inaugurated by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which, that company believes will revolutionize the usual system of selling which is now in vogue throughout the country.

Beginning with the feature, "Heart's Haven," the Hodkinson advertising department, working in conjunction with the sales department, has originated a short "sales-trailer," which is sent to the branches. In place of sending a print to the theatre for pre-viewing, this reel is taken by the salesman direct to the theatre and screened for the exhibitor's benefit.

This reel carries the salient sales points necessary to give the exhibitor an idea of the real worth of the feature in a short space of time. The Hodkinson Corporation feels that the smaller exhibitors in this way will have the opportunity of judging the real value of the production without depending exclusively on the word of the salesmen or the press books.

Gerson Corporation Enlarges Activities

The Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco makes a formal announcement of the expansion of its producing activities for the coming year. The company is now finishing a series of twelve two-reel comedies featuring Dan Mason, which have been unusually successful, it is stated, and which are being distributed by the Film Booking Offices of America. A demand has been made for another series of these comedies, and these may go into production about the first of the year.

Peter B. Kyne has signed a contract with the Gerson Company to furnish it with a series of Saturday Evening Post stories, which will introduce a character new to the screen in the person of Tiberius Tinker. Orral Humphrey, well known on stage and screen, will have this role.

In order that these stories may have every opportunity to be successes, David Kirkland and Craig Hutchinson, two successful comedy directors, have been secured to direct the entire series. In addition, an all-star cast will support Humphrey.

Distinctive Engages Marion Abbott

Marion Abbott has been engaged by Director Edward Sloman to play the part of Mrs. Whidden in "Backbone," the all-star production which he is now directing for Distinctive Pictures Corporation at the Biograph Studios in New York.

Miss Abbott is a newcomer to the screen, having appeared in only one other picture, "Tol'able David," in which she played the mother role. It was because of her remarkable work in this production that Mr. Sloman sought out Miss Abbott.

Books Fifty First National Productions for Alaska

J. F. Spickett, owner and manager of the Palace Theatre, Juneau, Alaska, booked fifty First National attractions during his recent visit to Seattle from the gold country and told about the troubles Alaskan exhibitors were having in getting pictures.

"I have to make this long trip because I want to see the pictures I am booking," he declared. "The people of Alaska are just as keen picture fans as you will find anywhere in the U. S., and like the people in the States they don't want any more 'shooting gallery' photoplays. They are willing to wait quite a time to get the high class plays, but they don't want the out of date ones. They read the latest books and the newspapers and know what is going on.

"Business up in the North hasn't been so good because of the slump in mining and we must have high class pictures to bring them at all. Because of the closing of some of the big mines the population of Juneau has decreased from 5,600 to 2,500 since the end of the war. Fishing, canning and government offices provide most of the industrial activities of the southern Alaska cities."

Playgoers Picture Highly Praised

Following the opening in Louisville of the run of a Playgoers Pictures special, the Times of [illegible] city said: "'The Boot[illegible] Daughter,' as presented at the Walnut yesterday, with Enid Bennett and Fred Niblo, her husband, famous director of 'Blood and Sand' and 'The Three Musketeers,' featured, is abounding in dramatic situations. Miss Bennett, as Nell Bradley contributed a colorful bit of acting to the screen. She gives dignity to a role that required nothing less than an artist to put it over."

Hodkinson Picture Breaks Records

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation relative to the fact that "The Headless Horseman" or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," a picturization of Washington Irving's famous classic, featuring Will Rogers as Ichabod Crane, smashed all box office records for four days at the Modern and Beacon Theatres, Boston, Mass.

Hilliard To Be in "Ne'er Do Well"

Ernest Hilliard has been signed to play opposite Thomas Meighan in the forthcoming Paramount special, "The Ne'er Do Well," in which Mr. Meighan will be starred by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Work on "The Ne'er Do Well" started this week in the Famous Players-Lasky studios in Long Island City, with Alfred Green directing.

May Become Star

A new star may dawn on the Paramount horizon in the near future if a "hunch" on the part of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation turns out successfully, in the person of Orlando Cortez, a romantic actor of Castilian descent and with more than the usual share of good looks and Latin grace, it is reported.

News of Goldwyn Activities

Goldwyn has arranged with Eric von Stroheim to write the continuity for his first production based upon the late Frank Norris' realistic novel of San Francisco. "McTeague."

Hugo Ballin is using 500 men showing the British soldiers' marching through Brussels to meet Napoleon for the screening of the battle of Waterloo for his screen version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," starring Mabel Ballin.

A. L. Erlanger, the New York theatrical producer who has been at the Goldwyn studios conferring regarding the forthcoming production of "Ben Hur," left for New York on Monday.

Rupert Hughes is on location with "Souls for Sale" at Palm Springs, Calif. Dorothy Farnum has completed the continuity for "[illegible] of the D'Urbervilles."

Distinctive Buys Rights to Novel

The film rights of Harold McGrath's novel, "The Ragged Edge," have been purchased by the Distinctive Pictures Corporation, it is announced by President Arthur S. Friend with a view to putting it into production almost immediately.

Forrest Halsey, who is under a long-term contract with Distinctive and who was responsible for the scripts of "Disraeli," "The Ruling Passion" and "The Man Who Played God," all starring George Arliss, is now engaged in writing the scenario for "The Ragged Edge."

The McGrath story will go into production immediately.

Careful Attention to Detail

An indication of the careful attention which Fred Niblo is devoting to the many details of his production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," says Metro, is that already nine weeks have elapsed since the first scene was photographed, and there are still several weeks of active shooting to come before the photoplay is actually completed.

"The Famous Mrs. Fair" is the first of a series of Fred Niblo productions presented by Louis B. Mayer and released by Metro.

Thirty Governors Praise Film Highly

Enthusiastic praise for Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "Back Home and Broke," was the greeting given by the thirty governors before whom Mr. Meighan showed the picture Friday at the annual conference of governors at the Greenbrier Hotel, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

After the performance, which was a regular Broadway show given under the personal direction of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, each of the governors tendered his personal thanks to Mr. Meighan, to George Ade, the author of the picture, who also attended the performance, and to Paramount for having produced it and having arranged the showing.

Not only did the governors tell Mr. Meighan personally how much they liked the picture, but fourteen of them sent him a round robin letter in which they commended him for the picture, which they characterized as "delightful, clean and wholesome."

Enthusiastic Praise for Universal Film

The Philadelphia Riders and Drivers Association, one of the leading and most exclusive horse-lovers' associations in the country, and the membership of which includes such national figures as President Harding, General Pershing, Herbert Hoover and E. T. Stotesbury, selected "The Kentucky Derby," Universal's Jewel production of the famous Charles T. Dazey melodrama, "The Suburban," as the feature of the association's annual meeting, held last week in the ball room of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

The society horse lovers applauded the stirring race scenes and the exciting finish of the Derby with the same abandon many of them had shown last summer at Churchill Downs, when scenes for the picture were made at the actual race won by Morvich, it is reported.

A few weeks before the Bellevue-Stratford showing, "The Kentucky Derby" was shown privately at the yearly party held at his home, Glen Riddle, Pa., by Samuel H. Riddle, owner of "Man-of-War" and the new whirlwind mare, "Oceanic." The Glen Riddle showing was attended by the Governor of Pennsylvania and other notables. Riddle and his guests were enthusiastic over the film, the veteran horse owner reported.

Judge J. Willis Martin, of the Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia, who is president of the Philadelphia Riders and Drivers Association, wrote to E. J. Epstein of the Philadelphia Universal exchange, who arranged the showing, thanking the film company in glowing terms.

Beaudine to Direct Viola Dana

William Beaudine has been engaged by Metro to direct Viola Dana in "Her Fatal Millions," a story by William Dudley Pelley. Its production is scheduled to begin next week at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

"Her Fatal Millions" is a comedy-drama, adapted for the screen by Arthur Statter.

What Every Exhibitor Can Have

News, editorial outlook on conditions, advertisements of coming films, and a flock of departments of value, such as "Selling the Picture to the Public," "Straight From the Shoulder," "Regional News and Gossip"—and more—are things you GET without asking, in every issue of Moving Picure World.

BUT:—

There are other things coming to you. They are yours for the asking—services that your own trade paper stands ready to render as part of its duty to you:

Ask "Straight From the Shoulder" for any reports on any picture; the department will furnish them or do its best to get them for you from exhibitors. Ask the "Regional News and Gossip" man for any information within reason about exhibitors; he's your friend and stands ready to treat you right. Ask "Selling the Pic-to the Public" for help if you are stumped by any picture advertising problem—poor houses, weak days; you all know E. W. Sargent—he's here when you need him.

Plenty of other services waiting to be asked for. Just ASK.

Joins Griffith

Mae Marsh "came back home" the other day when she signed a contract to play a leading role in D. W. Griffith's next photoplay, now in course of production under the title, "The White Rose."

After an absence of six years the little school girl whom Mr. Griffith moulded into fame in "The Birth of a Nation," returns to his direction again to resume her career.

Will Soon Begin on Her First Film

A new motion picture woman producer comes to the fore in Marguerite Gale, who announces the formation of Marguerite Gale Productions. Work begins in the course of a few weeks on her first picture at a New York studio. The title of her initial production will, in all likelihood, be "The Turning Point," a western story and the first of a series. Lem Kennedy will direct.

Eleanor Boardman Selected

Goldwyn production executives have decided upon Eleanor Boardman, the young woman selected out of 4,000 New York applicants for a motion picture job, as the principal player in the film version of Rupert Hughes' new novel, "Souls for Sale," which the author is now directing.

"Drivin' Fool" Is Nearly Finished

"The Drivin' Fool," the automobile thrill picture which is being directed by Robert Thornby for Regent Pictures, the new organization which E. D. Newman recently formed to produce independently, is nearing completion with the return this week of the company from Big Bear Valley with the snow episodes of the feature.

Exhibitor Pleads for Play Date

The following letter was received by Associated First National last week from Charles W. Picquit, of the Carolina Theatre, Pinehurst, N. C.:

"I had the pleasure of screening the new Guy Bates Post subject 'Omar, the Tentmaker,' and I do not know when I have had any more real pleasure.

"It is a splendid production every department, and will surely be way up on the top of the season's best productions.

"I shall take delight in recommending this picture to all managers who are ambitious to give their patrons the best.

"I surely would be glad to get date on it as soon as possible, and I trust you may be able to take care of me."

American Releasing Announces Release of Big Block of Special Productions

Chooses Holiday Season as Opportune Time To Divulge Plans

Choosing the Holiday season as an opportune time, American Releasing Corporation announces the release date of a big block of special productions to the exhibitors of the country. In this block, or second quarter's output, two special productions that have had three release engagements in certain of the larger cities, now become available for national release date throughout the country. These two productions are the Hampton del Ruth comedy-melodrama, "The Marriage Chance" with an all-star cast featuring Alta Allen, Milton Sills, Henry B. Walthall, Tully Marshall, Mitchell Lewis and Irene Rich, written and directed by Mr. del Ruth is the first of four big special productions to be made by him for American Releasing. The other attraction previously prereleased, is the Mark Twain Company production, "The Prince and the Pauper," played in New York with success at the Capitol Theatre and having also scored box-office successes in pre-release engagements in eight or ten cities.

Two additional productions that it is stated, rank with the biggest that have been released in the United States within the past twelve months are the Harley Knoles' production, "The Bohemian Girl" with a cast including Ivor Novello, Ellen Terry, Constance Collier, C. Aubrey Smith and Gladys Cooper. Novello became widely known in America in the previous Harley Knoles' production, "Carnival." Novello has just been engaged by D. W. Griffith as the star of the next Griffith production. American Releasing confidently announces "The Bohemian Girl" as one of the greatest pictures made in the past two years.

Another big capture by American Releasing is the newest Nell Shipman-Bert Van Tuyl production, "The Grub-Stake." This is a romantic melodrama of Alaska in all of its primitive rawness and wildness and depicts the opening of the gold country to civilization. Miss Shipman and Mr. Van Tuyl have been at work on this picture for the past sixteen months up in the Priest Lake country of Idaho and in and around Spokane. The story is written by Nell Shipman herself, who is the star and co-director as well. Supporting Miss Shipman in "The Grub-Stake" are Alfred Allen, Walt Whitman, George Berrell, Hugh Thompson, George Hernandez and B. K. Van Auker. This picture will have its pre-release engagement in New York and certain eastern cities early in January and the national release date has been set for February 18.

"The Danger Point," another of the productions announced, is made by Victor Hugo Halperin and directed by Lloyd Ingraham. It features Carmel Myers, Joseph Dowling and W. P. Carleton and is being played for a pre-release presentation at the Cameo Theatre, New York, the week before Christmas.

An M. C. Mims' production "That Woman" starring Catherine Calvert and directed by Harry O. Hoyt is announced as the release for December 31. This is a story of a stage beauty who married a millionaire's son and went through poverty to prove that she really loved him.

The release for January 7 is "As a Man Lives," an Achievement Film's production directed by J. Searle Dawley with an all-star cast including Robert Frazer, Gladys Hulette and Frank Losee. This picture was given a pre-release presentation at the Cameo in New York the week of December 10.

American Releasing says "The Bohemian Girl" with its splendid cast is destined to attract great attention throughout the larger cities of the country and go a long way towards putting Harley Knoles, its producer, at the topmost directorial rank in this country. It is announced for release January 14. The January 21 release is "The Web of the Law," a Gibson-Dyer production directed by Tom Gibson.

On January 28 announcement is made of the release of "Milady" which is the famous Dumas story, "Twenty Years After." This is a Diament-Berger production of romance, intrigue, loyalty and treachery. "A Son of the Desert" is the release for February 4. This is an F. W. Kraemer production featuring Marin Sais supported by William MacCormick.

J. P. McGowan has made a melodrama and jewel smuggling story for release by American on February 11. This production is "One Million in Jewels," written and directed by Mr. McGowan, who himself plays the role of Burke of the Secret Service, supported by Helen Holmes, Elinore Faire, Charles Craig and half a dozen other widely-known players. This production was photographed in New York, Havana, Key West and Miami.

Nell Shipman's production, "The Grub-Stake" is the release for the week of February 18.

On February 25 American will release "Vengeance of the Deep," an A. B. Barringer production made in Honolulu and California. The cast includes Ralph Lewis, Virginia Brown Faire, Maida Vale, Van Mattimore and Harmon MacGregor.

In a day when comparatively few pictures other than those made by big producer-distributor concerns owning their own first run theatres on Broadway, New York, are able to get first run engagements and Broadway presentation says American Releasing Corporation, it and its producers are fortunate enough to have their own first runs in the majority of cases in New York at the Cameo Theatre with immediate release following the first run presentation throughout the best theatres in Greater New York. This arrangement does away with the long waits and deferred release of important pictures, which deferrments cause the producers, heavy losses and retarded returns of their investment.

Calls "Quincy Adams Sawyer" the Box-office Champion of the Year

"The year's all-round box-office champion," is the manner in which William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, designates the company's screen version of "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

From the standpoints of the merit and reputation of the story, of the excellence of the cast and the skill in production the Metro official this week said he considered this Metro-SL Special Production—which opened in New York at the Capitol Theatre December 17—would prove, by returns at the ticket-window, the best motion picture attraction available.

Summarizing Mr. Atkinson's statement from the home offices of Metro, in New York, the following items of popular appeal in "Quincy Adams Sawyer" are found:

1. The story itself is human, exciting, amusing and unquestionably clean.

2. The reputation of the story, as told in the original novel by Charles Felton Pidgin and later retold on the stage, alone is sufficient to attract patronage.

3. The cast is of a brillance as to require no verbal illumination, comprising Blanche Sweet, Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Barbara La Marr, June Elvidge, Louise Fazenda, Hank Mann, Victor Potel, Billy Franey, Edward Connolly, Gale Henry, Elmo Lincoln, Joseph Dowling and others.

4. In both adaptation and direction Metro has delegated the screening to experts especially fitted for the task; the scenario to Bernard McConville, author of the script of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" and other major attractions; the direction to Clarence G. Badger, whose success with a series of Will Rogers' features was pronounced.

"I admit I am prejudiced in favor of 'Quincy Adams Sawyer,'" says Mr. Atkinson, "but I won't admit that I'm prejudiced without cause. When I put myself down as believing that it is the all-round box-office champion of the year, whether it steps from this company's corner or another's, I can bring facts to rationalize my enthusiasm.

"To me, more significant than a mere listing of elements of appeal, is my own reaction. I have seen 'Quincy Adams Sawyer' five times, in the Metro projection room, where there is no theatrical gilding to a picture's showing. And each time I saw the film it got me. I laughed at the comedy, although I knew after the first time what was to happen. I got all excited at the river scene, again and again. Briefly, I had a good time.

"Having a good time is the hope that draws people into motion picture theatres."

Variety of Scenes in "Garrison's Finish"

Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation says there probably never was a motion picture in which so many widely separated "locations" played such a big part in intensifying interest in the story as is the case in Jack Pickford's new production, "Garrison's Finish," which marks this star's return to the screen after an absence of about two years during which time he has been directing his sister, Mary Pickford.

Scenes of the Kentucky Derby at Louisville, also the Metropolitan Handicap at New York and other scenes at San Francisco, Pasadena, Exposition Park, Los Angeles, and on the Mojave Desert are included in this production, which is set for release January 15. There are also said to be plenty of interior scenes with elaborate settings.

Will Play Opposite Norma Talmadge

Jack Mulhall has been selected to play opposite Norma Talmadge in her next Joseph Schenck production "Within the Law," which will be directed by Frank Lloyd who made "The Eternal Flame" already released by First National and "The Voice from the Minaret," soon to be released. First National will distribute "Within the Law."

Edwin Carew Goes to the Coast

Edwin Carewe who is making a series of special productions for Associated First National release, departed for the coast December 16. He has just finished a picture in the East, the title of which has not been announced. He will produce in California a screen version of the Belasco play, "The Girl from the Golden West."

Gives Receipts to Charity

Royalty and the English nobility took charge of the premier of Constance Talmadge in "East Is West" at the Marble Arch Pavilion, London, and made this First National attraction a huge success, it is reported.

Just prior to the first showing of "East Is West" The Queen's Hospital for Children of which the Duke of York is president and Queen Alexandra patron, had issued a plea for funds. So Ralph J. Pugh and the other directors of Associated First National in London offered the entire receipts of the premier showing for the Hospital. The Duchess of Somerset took charge of the showing aided by the entire staff of First National and the management of the Marble Arch Pavilion. Society attended in force.

"Hungry Hearts" Selected

The National Motion Picture League selected Goldwyn's "Hungry Hearts" from a carefully compiled list of suitable photoplays to show to children, during its Better Motion Picture Week. The showing was held at the Children's Theatre in the Heckscher Building. New York City, following a parade in which pictures of half a dozen or more producing concerns were represented by floats.

Begins Filming of Mack Sketch

Production of "Your Friend and Mine," the Metro-S-L screen version of Willard Mack's sketch, has begun at the Metro studios, according to advices received this week at the company's home office in New York.

Enid Bennett, whose most recent success was as Maid Marian in "Robin Hood," will appear in the leading feminine role. Mr. Mack himself will play an important part.

Eyes and the Exhibitor

You get all sorts of eyes in an audience—far-sighted, near-sighted, strong, weak.

When your audience slaps down its admissions at the box office, it expects an eyeful of entertainment, and doesn't explain what sort of eyes it has, individually or in the aggregate.

You have to suit all the eyes. The first bit of picture out of focus in the tiniest degree gets somebody's goat. The slightest flicker or lowering of light intensity in your projection starts the fidgeters.

You can get by with average pictures if your projection is faultless; but a "Humoresque" will start them walking out on you if the projection falls down.

Don't forget that F. H. Richardson has been giving, in the best projection department ever published—in Moving Picture World, of course!—helpful hints and ideas, news of newest projection stunts, points of advantage in new apparatus, and is still giving them. Take care of your projection and your audiences will take care of you.

Forest Fire Scenes Are in Full Color

Although painting the lily long has been frowned upon, the idea of reddening the fire, while analogous, seems to have proven effective, according to Metro.

It has been done in the case of the forest fire scenes in the Reginald Barker production, "Hearts Aflame," soon to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation. The picture is presented by Louis B. Mayer. Every inch of the many hundred feet of film was retouched by hand, in full and natural colors.

More than a month was spent in this work. Each streak of flame and each burst of flame was colored individually, no general tinting being used. Though this method the forest fire is seen exactly as it would appear to a spectator of the original scene, it is stated.

Sales Drive Breaks All Weekly Quotas

The fourth week of Pathe's Eschmann Sales Contest, according to reported tabulated returns, brought to the surface several indications of general interest to exhibitors everywhere, General results show that all branch exchanges are keeping well ahead of their weekly quotas, with nothing in the Pathe list, either standard or new product, failing to profit by the drive.

Change in the standing of the branches was most spectacular in case of Seattle, which jumped from seventeeenth to third place. Portland continues to lead, with Los Angeles holding second, to which position it was reduced at the end of the third week. Denver drops from third to seventh, while Spokane rises from seventh to fifth, and Indianapolis climbs from eleventh to sixth place, with Milwaukee standing pat on fourth.

Tells of Advantages

"An opportunity for me to make pictures just as big as I want to make them; to spend just as much money on their production as I want to spend; to produce just as good a picture as I know how to produce and then sell it in an open market on its individual merits as a box-office attraction—that, in brief, is what my recently signed contract with Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation means to me," said Mack Sennett, when asked for an authoritative statement concerning his new releasing affiliations with the organization of which Hiram Abrams is president.

"And to the Allied Producers and Distributors organization the new arrangement means additional product that they know is going to be saleable product," Mr. Sennett went on. "It means that I am going to give them pictures that have had time enough and work enough and money enough spent on them to give them that quality which enables a distributing company to sell every picture it handles on its individual merit."

Duell Joins Company in Italy

Charles H. Duell, president of Inspiration Pictures, has gone to Italy to join the unit of that company which is filming Marion Crawford's celebrated story, "The White Sister," in which Lillian Gish is to make her initial appearance as an Inspiration Picture star.

This unit has been in Italy for several weeks. Henry King, who directed Richard Barthelmess in his greatest successes, "Tol'able David," "Sonny" and "The Bondboy," is directing this picture.

Mr. Duell, prior to going to Italy, spent a week in Havana, Cuba, where Richard Barthelmess' next starring vehicle, "The Bright Shawl," is being filmed. With John S. Robertson as director, the entire company was sent to that place in order to bring to the screen the color called for by the author, Joseph Hergesheimer, who wrote 'Tol'able David."

Flower Novelty at Brooklyn Strand

Girls dressed to represent various flowers diverted Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre patrons from thoughts of winter when Managing Director Edward L. Hyman introduced them in a dance "Valse Bluette," a rhythmic number which utilized all the lighting tricks from booth and stage.

Each girl dancer wore a different colored dress and was costumed as nearly as possible to resemble a designated blossom. Colors used in costuming were yellow, pink, deep blue and pale green. A spotlight on each dancer brought out the coloring and the intermingling of tints made a delicate picture.

A scrim was used with two set pillars, a foliage tree-top and a ground row to aid in the stage scenic mounting. The girls' dresses were of chiffon with skirts to appear as rose-colored petals.

Cullen Landis Now with Vitagraph

Cullen Landis has been engaged by Vitagraph to create the role of Dick Halpin in its forthcoming special production, "Masters of Men."

"Masters of Men," is the second of the series of twenty-four special productions announced by Vitagraph for the coming year. Work on the new production already has been begun at the West Coast studio under the direction of David Smith.

Is Fourth Week for Strongheart Film

Strongheart, the wonder dog, is being shown for the fourth week in "Brawn of the North" in Los Angeles at the Alhambra Theatre. This First National attraction, directed by Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin, got an exceptional reception from the critics, it is stated, when it was first shown at the Kinema, where it was held two weeks.

Twelve Super-Productions Scheduled to Be Released in 1923 by Universal

Hobart Henley and Tod Browning Head List of Directors

The most comprehensive aggregation of super-productions ever planned ahead by Universal Pictures Corporation has been scheduled for the coming year and will stand as that company's Universal Jewel offering for 1923. Universal says it includes twelve pictures of the highest quality, enacted by stars and players of great box office value, and made by directors whose past success have placed them on the top rung of the screen's ladder of fame.

Universal plans to release these Jewels once each month. Three of them already are in completed form and soon will be in the hands of the various Universal exchanges. Six others are now in production and the remaining three are being translated into screen form by the scenario department at Universal City. Universal announces that each of the twelve Jewels will be completed far enough ahead of release date to admit of unusual exploitation, and to assure thorough service and co-operation for the exhibitor.

The 1923 list of big pictures includes films by such stars as Priscilla Dean, Lon Chaney, Reginald Denny, Virginia Valli, Eileen Percy, Helen Jerome Eddy. They are supported by such popular players as Mabel Julienne Scott, Raymond Hatton, Patsy Ruth Miller, Wallace Beery, George Nichols, Forrest Stanley, Robert Ellis, Joseph Swickard, Estelle Taylor, Sylvia Breamer, Ray Griffith, Matt Moore, Norman Kerry, Maude George. Some of these players also have leading roles in special cast productions.

Universal's 1923 Jewel directors include such successful picture makers as Hobart Henley, Tod Browning, Lois Weber, Rupert Julian, Erich von Stroheim, Lambert Hillyer, Stuart Paton and Wallace Worsley. Henley will be remembered for such work as "The Gay Old Dog," "The Sin That Was His," "Star Dust," and a series of Goldwyn successes. Tod Browning is the man who directed Priscilla Dean in such successes as "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Outside the Law," and "Under Two Flags."

The first release for the New Year will be "The Flirt." It was adapted by A. P. Younger from Booth Tarkington's well known novel of American life by that name. It is an all-star cast production and is said to be Hobart Henley's masterpiece. The two leading roles are taken by Eileen Percy, in the title role, and Helen Jerome Eddy, as her unassuming sister. The picture is scheduled for release New Year's Day. Its pre-lease premiere is in the Rialto Theatre on Broadway, during Christmas week.

The February Jewel release will be "The Flame of Life," a new Priscilla Dean feature. It was adapted from a story by Frances Hodgson Burnett, the popular novelist. "The Flame of Life" is another Hobart Henley production and is said to be just as good, in its sphere, as "The Flirt." Elliott J. Clawson adapted it for the screen, and Virgil Miller filmed it. The big thrill of the feature is a coal mine disaster which, it is said, has been characterized by survivors of actual underground holocausts, as the most startling and accurate reproduction ever made.

A strong cast supports Miss Dean in this special. Robert Ellis is her leading man and the chief heavy role is played by Wallace Beery. The picture will be released February 5.

The March release will be a Universal-Jewel starring Lon Chaney. It is called "The Shock," and is a screen adaptation by Charles Kenyon from a story by William Dudley Pelley.

"The Shock" is laid in the San Francisco underworld, and shows the regeneration of a deformed underworld character through the love of a pure woman. The picture is said to come to a vivid and terrifying climax with the San Francisco earthquake and fire. This great catastrophe has been reproduced for the screen in remarkable shots, it is reported.

Virginia Valli, a Universal star in her own right, who will be remembered for interpretation in "The Storm," supports Chaney in "The Shock." The feature will be released March 5.

Universal's super feature for April will be a screen adaptation of Jack London's powerful story, "The Abysmal Brute." It stars Reginald Denny, with Mabel Julienne Scott in the leading supporting role. It is another Hobart Henley production.

Reginald Denny was chosen to interpret London's cave-man character because of his popularity as the hero of "The Leather Pushers" series, the celebrated H. C. Witwer prize ring stories filmed by Universal. "The Abysmal Brute" will be released April 2.

In May, Universal will release another Priscilla Dean Jewel. It is "White Tiger," written and directed by Tod Browning, one of Universal's leading directors. Wallace Beery agains plays the heavy opposite Miss Dean. Ray Griffith and Matt Moore also are to be seen opposite the star, Moore as the leading man. The picture is a crook story laid in New York and London. In order to obtain certain sequences, Browning brought his company all the way from Los Angeles to New York for several weeks' work. May 7 has been set as the release date for this feature.

"The Attic of Felix Bavu," a screen adaptation of Earl Carroll's spectacular play, is scheduled for June release by Universal. It deals with a mixture of romance and adventure in Soviet Russia. Stuart Paton is making this feature. A strong cast, headed by Wallace Beery, as the chief villain, now is engaged at Universal City in its production. This feature was prepared for the screen by Albert G. Kenyon, one of the Universal leading scenarists. It will be ready for release June 4.

For July release, Lois Weber has returned to Universal City and is making a super-production of "Jewel," the popular novel by Clara Louis Burnham. Eight years ago, Miss Weber made this as a Bluebird picture for Universal. It was a big success. Today, with modern directorial and photographic methods, Universal expects it to be one of the big hits of the year.

Miss Weber is assisted by Arthur Forde. Ben Reynolds, who filmed "Foolish Wives," is her camera-man. The picture will be placed in the hands of exhibitors July 2.

August will see another Priscilla Dean Jewel. It will be "Drifting," adapted from John Colton's popular play, produced in New York by William A. Brady with his daughter, Alice Brady, as the star. Tod Browning is directing from a continuity by Lucien Hubbard. The picture is laid in China and will have all the exotic atmosphere of the Far East, it is promised. Matt Moore will be Miss Dean's leading man. The picture will be released August 6.

September 3 will see the release of "Merry-Go-Round," the Erich von Stroheim successor of "Foolish Wives" and which Rupert Julian is completing after von Stroheim's break with Universal. The story, credited to von Stroheim, is laid in Vienna before, during and after the World War.

The picture will present a big special cast. The leading roles are taken by Norman Kerry, Mary Philbin, Wallace Beery, Maude George, and others.

Universal's October release will be "Up the Ladder," a super-production starring Virginia Valli. It has been adapted from the highly successful stage play by Owen Davis which was a sensation in New York last year. It marks Miss Valli's first appearance in a Universal Jewel picture all her own. Hobart Henley may direct it, if he completes "The Abysmal Brute" in time to get it ready. A strong cast is promised in support of Miss Valli for this feature. "Up the Ladder" will hit the screen on October 1.

The following month, Universal will release "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," super screen adaptation of Victor Hugo's world famed novel, "Notre Dame de Paris." It is now in production under the direction of Wallace Worsley, who was chosen because he played for many years in the stage version of the celebrated story.

This Jewel is being made with a special all-star cast, including Lon Chaney, Raymond Hatton, and Patsy Ruth Miller. E. T. Lowe, Jr. and Perley Poore Sheehan recently finished putting the novel into continuity form. It will reach the screen on November 5.

The last Universal Jewel production to be released in 1923 will be a Priscilla Dean super-special adapted from Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel and play, "A Lady of Quality." No director has been chosen for this picture, as it will be several months before Miss Dean can start work upon it. She will play the role made popular on the stage by Julia Arthur. This Jewel will be released December 3, 1923, and will be Universal's final super-production offering for the coming year.

The Exhibitor Who Saw Tomorrow

In a little town there was a theatre. It ran Saturday nights. The shows were punk. The audiences were light. Yet the town was growing all the time.

Along came a chap with vision. He saw a chance. He knew that a three hundred seat house ought to be filled every night, not half filled each Saturday, in a town of four thousand—and growing!

Because he read Moving Picture World's "Better Equipment" section, an up to the minute news section for exhibitors, dealing with everything for the theatre, he was able to renovate cheaply, advantageously.

Now he has that house running every day, and it's packed. Keep in touch with equipment through Moving Picture World's "Better Equipment"—it may mean money to you almost any time.

Breaking Records

It is not alone in the big cities that the Harold Lloyd attraction, "Grandma's Boy," has been breaking records, says First National. the same thing is happening in many smaller towns and even in villages, thereby making it nearly unanimous, it is stated.

"Grandma's Boy" showed recently in M. Kenworthy's Kenworthy Theatre, Moscow, Ida., where it was seen by 1,596 people, or nearly 40 per cent. of Moscow's total population. Moscow's achievement almost matches the record of Tarentum, Pa., where, out of a population of 8,925, "Grandma's Boy" played to 5,350 paid admissions, and that of Crete, Neb., where 1,670 of the 2,400 inhabitants bought tickets and then chuckled loudly over the Harold Lloyd picture.

Talk About Picture Sent Out by Radio

Miss Grace Haskins, of Hollywood, recently made an announcement and gave a talk to more than five hundred thousand radio fans in this section of the country with regard to her forthcoming production, "Just Like a Woman," which will be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation sometime in the early Spring. She spoke from a broadcasting station in Brooklyn and made many interesting comments on her initial production.

Miss Haskins has the distinction of being a full-fledged director and producer of motion pictures at only twenty-two years of age.

During her brief stay in New York, Miss Haskins was busy interviewing fan magazines and representatives of the press, attending special luncheons given in her honor, and getting her picture taken with Will Hays.

"Second Fiddle" to Be January Release

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that "Second Fiddle," first of the Film Guild Productions featuring Glenn Hunter, will be released January 7.

"Second Fiddle" constitutes the first of a series of four pictures to be produced by the Film Guild and distributed through the Hodkinson Corporation.

The story is by Frank Tuttle and is laid in the little New England town of Spell's River. It deals with two brothers, Herbert Bradley and Jim Bradley, and shows how Jim plays "Second Fiddle" to his magnificent brother Herbert who has just returned from college.

Glenn Hunter and Mary Astor are the co-stars, supported by a cast, including Townsend Martin, William Nally, Leslie Stone, Mary Foy, Helenka Adamowska and Otho Lang.

Stanley Circuit Books "Dr. Jack"

In booking "Dr. Jack" last week for many theatres in the Philadelphia territory the Stanley Circuit is said to have made its biggest contract so far for any one picture. This statement, made on the day following the signing of the contract, and verified at the Pathe home office, refers both to the number or houses included in the blanket contract and to the amounts stipulated in rentals.

Another important contract in the list of last week's bookings of Harold Lloyd's new feature comedy was made with Loew's Circuit. In both instances the majority of play dates are the earliest which previous engagements permit.

The country-wide "Dr. Jack" bookings, with contracts accepted at the Pathe general offices, are said to have been still further stimulated by news of box office records broken not only in Portland, Ore., and Spokane, Wash., but at such interior points as Denver, Milwaukee, and Indianapolis.

At the Majestic Theatre, Portland, there was such a stampede of attendance that, in spite of bad weather, the "Dr. Jack" engagement was extended to a second, then a third, and was still scoring capacity attendance in its fourth week.

Big Exploitation for Metro Film

In addition to the unusually large number of exploitation accessories prepared by the Metro Publicity Department to exploit "Quincy Adams Sawyer," Bert Ennis, in charge of a special publicity department maintained by Sawyer and Lubin, producers of this S-L special, has created several special exploitation aids intended principally for use on the part of first-run theatres.

Sandburg Praises "Sherlock Holmes"

Carl Sandburg, poet of the Middle West, author of "Corn Huskers," "Slabs of the Sunburned West" and many other poems, also author of the children's book, "Rootabaga Stories," reviewed for the Chicago Daily News a Goldwyn picture, "Sherlock Holmes," starring John Barrymore, at the Chicago Theatre. His review said, in part:

"This is a picture sure to be generally classed among the best of the year. Not only have they taken the greatest figure in the detective story realm and given him plausible and exciting setting; they have also surrounded that figure with foils, matches, contrasts of character.

"Much thought was given this picture. It represents intelligence of the sort needed in the movies.

"This is a time when a reviewer can say rightfully and in all conscience, 'See this picture if you want mystery, entertainment, good acting and photography."

"Trifling Women" Is Doing Big Business

Telegraphing to the Metro home offices in New York in the course of his visits to the company's exchanges, E. M. Saunders, general sales manager, reported: "'Trifling Women,' Ingram's biggest box office bet. Public not happy till it sees it."

This statement to the effect that this latest of the Rex Ingram productions is repeating in all parts of the country the success it scored in New York, at the Astor Theatre and later at the Capitol, has been preceded, accompanied and followed by a flood of bookings of the picture, Metro states.

Mr. Saunders said in another part of his telegram: "You can't give exhibitors too many Ingram pictures. Until he can make eight a week there won't be overproduction."

Reports from the exchanges and from the home office of Metro state likewise that contracts for "Trifling Women" are coming in in chunks.

Two Are Featured on Paramount Schedule

Thomas Meighan in George Ade's "Back Home and Broke" and Agnes Ayres in "A Daughter of Luxury" are the features on the Paramount release scheduled for December 24.

As in the case of "Our Leading Citizen," the author's first direct contribution to the screen, George Ade, wrote "Back Home and Broke" expressly for Mr. Meighan, whom he has known intimately ever since Meighan appeared in Ade's stage success, "The College Widow." The scenario was written by J. Clarkson Miller, but most of the subtitles are the author's own. Alfred E. Green was the director.

Paul Powell directed the Agnes Ayres picture, "A Daughter of Luxury." The scenario was written by Beulah Marie Dix and is an adaptation of the stage play, "The Imposter," by Leonard Merrick and Michael Morton. The supporting cast is headed by Tom Gallery, leading man.

Many Bookings for "Peg o' My Heart"

Five hundred and fourteen bookings of "Peg o' My Heart" in one week is reported by the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, in New York. So far as is known by the distributing company this evidence of the demand for the screen version of J. Hartley Manners's play, with the original star, Laurette Taylor, as Peg, represents a record.

Not only is the volume of the bookings significant of the picture's box-office value, but the distribution of the theatres which have contracted for "Peg o' My Heart" is also it is stated demonstrating that interest in this forthcoming Metro release is not sectional, but country-wide, Metro says.

The picture has recently been completed at the Metro studios in Hollywood, under the direction of King Vidor. The scenario was written by Mary O'Hara, author of the script of Rex Ingram's production of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Kept 'Em Happy

Marshall Neilan's picture "Minnie" a First National release was shown to the governors in conference at White Sulphur Springs last week. The governors had much serious business to discuss at the conference but Neilan's big comedy drama helped to keep them in good humor, it is stated.

Goldwyn Schedules Nine Big Films for 1923 Noted Directors and Actors to Make Them

The Goldwyn schedule of releases for the new year includes the biggest and best pictures yet made by that firm—and this statement is made, says Goldwyn, after taking into consideration that the fall and early winter releases included such whirlwind successes as the John Barrymore picture, "Sherlock Holmes," "The Sin Flood," "Brothers Under the Skin," "A Blind Bargain" and "Broken Chains."

The productions now completed, or under way for release during the coming calendar year, come nearer, it is said, to realizing Goldwyn's policy of "bigger and better pictures" than any other group, taken as a whole, because the new policy has been in operation longer and advance preparations can be made more easily than for the first group.

The coming releases are headed by Marshall Neilan's first production in association with Goldwyn, "The Strangers' Banquet," from Donn Byrne's novel, to be released on December 31, and Maurice Tourneur's production of Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Christian," to be released January 28. Release dates have not been set for any of the other productions. According to Goldwyn the casts for both "The Christian" and "The Strangers' Banquet" are startling in their array of screen talent. In "The Christian" are Richard Dix, Mae Busch, Phyllis Haver, Claude Gillingwater, Cyril Chadwick, Mahlon Hamilton, Beryl Mercer, Joseph Dowling and Gareth Hughes. In "The Strangers' Banquet" are Claire Windsor, Rockliffe Fellowes, Hobart Bosworth, Eleanor Boardman, Nigel Barrie, Thomas Holding, Claude Gillingwater, Arthur Hoyt, Brinsley Shaw, Stuart Holmes, Ford Sterling, Eugenia Besserer, Lucille Ricksen, Cyril Chadwick, Jean Hersholt, James Marcus, Edward McWade, Dagmar Godowsky, Lillian Langdon and Jack Curtis.

Following these come several other pictures, the release date and the order of release of which have not been decided upon. There is a Rupert Hughes' picture, "Gimme!," said to be written in his particular vein of comedy that is native to American life and character with a cast embracing Helene Chadwick, Gaston Glass, Kate Lester, Henry B. Walthall and David Imboden. Mr. Hughes directed.

Carey Wilson's first picture for Goldwyn, "Lost and Found," a romance of the South Seas, and the islands in them, formerly called "Passions of the Sea," is said by the producers to be an unusual picture, unusually done. R. A. Walsh directed it. He took the entire cast to Tahiti, where the film was made on the island and on board a ship chartered for the occasion. In the cast are House Peters, Pauline Starkey, Antonio Moreno, Rosemary Theby, George Seigmann, Mary Jane Irving, William V. Mong, Carl Harbough, and others.

Hugo Ballin's production of "Vanity Fair," starring his wife, Mabel Ballin, is now nearing completion at the Goldwyn studios. It is said to be the Ballin's most ambitious undertaking and advance reports from the studios are said to indicate that it possesses pictorial and dramatic qualities which should rank it among the big films of the year, Goldwyn says. In the cast, besides Mabel Ballin, are Hobart Bosworth, Earl Fox, Willard Louis, Eleanor Boardman, George Walsh, Harrison Ford, Robert Mack, William Humphrey and Tempe Piggott.

Another Rupert Hughes' picture is "Look Your Best," at one time known as "Bitterness of Sweets," with a cast which includes Colleen Moore, Antonio Moreno, William Orlamond, Orpha Alba, Earl Metcalfe, Martha Mattox and Francis McDonald.

Two more Marshall Neilan productions—a screen version of Thomas Hardy's great novel, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," many exteriors for which were "shot" in England under the direction of Mr. Neilan's lieutenant, Frank Urson, and a picture made from Edward E. Rose's new and highly successful play, "The Rear Car." The film title for this will be "Red Lights."

Foresees Demand

Every indication points to a continued demand for the Dorothy Gish picture, "The Country Flapper," says Producers Security Corporation. Glenn Hunter plays opposite her.

"Village Blacksmith" Heads Special List

"The Village Blacksmith," the super-special production which had a month's run at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre, N. Y. City, heads the list of the six new specials announced by Fox Film Corporation last week as a supplement to the original group already released for the season of 1922-23. Based upon the famous poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, this 1923 melodrama leads off the second set of special pictures.

"The Village Blacksmith" was directed by Jack Ford. Ford is also the director of "The Face on the Barroom Floor," a special included in the group of six to which "The Village Blacksmith" belongs. The cast is composed of William Walling, Virginia Valli, Bessie Love, Dave Butler, Pat Moore, Tully Marshall, Ralph Yeardsley, Virginia True Boardman, George Hackathorne and Lucile Rutton.

What some of the New York critics said of "The Village Blacksmith" is told here in part: Herald—"Hits the mark for which it was meant as unerringly as though it were aimed by a rifle." The Journal—"It does for Father what 'Over the Hill' did for Mother. It is a wholesome and interesting story of family life." The Telegram—"It is as lovely as a New England Springtime, and as rugged and strong as the sinews of the blacksmith—it is universal in its appeal."

The Commercial—"The picture is one of the best of the season . . . . a brilliant cinema . . . . a story that applies to almost any village in the United States . . . . the characters are truly American." The Morning World—"So far as we are concerned, William Walling is precisely the person we met some years ago in a very small school-house out in Kansas."

Big Crowd Acclaims Fairbanks Picture

Jammed to the doors by the largest attendance ever disclosed in the history of the Park Theatre, Boston, Mass., Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" made its initial public appearance on Monday night before a highly enthusiastic audience.

Preceded by an exploitation campaign of two weeks' duration, the Boston premiere marked one of the most brilliant social events of the season. Twenty-four hours before the opening performance, the entire house was sold out and thousands were turned away during the day of the premiere.

Paul Dickey, prominent playwright and actor who portrays the part of Sir Guy of Gisbourne in the Fairbanks spectacle, came to Boston from New York to personally officiate at the opening, as did John Fairbanks, brother and manager of Doug. A press luncheon was tendered the guests at the Touraine shortly after their arrival at which all the critics were present.

Ready for Titling

A Wyndam Standing picture just finished for Producers Security and ready for illustration of titles is "Lion's Mouse," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. In it Mr. Standing is supported by Marguerite Marsh and Mary Odette. Oscar Apfel directed the picture.

Special Poster

From out in Omaha, Nebraska, comes a special block one-sheet which says: "Coming. Not Three Weeks—But Just One Week of Love."

The foregoing is a supplementary poster put out by an exhibitor to exploit the Selznick special, "One Week of Love."

Four Big Films in Production; 25 Others Are Being Prepared

With the starting of work on Marion Davies' next super-special, "Little Old New York," from the famous play of Rida Johnston Young, the Cosmopolitan Corporation now has four companies working on new Cosmopolitan Productions.

"Little Old New York," directed by Sidney Olcott, is being made at Cosmopolitan's main studio at 127th street and Second avenue. In addition to Miss Davies, the company includes the following well-known players: J. M. Kerrigan, Mahlon Hamilton, Courtney Foote, Harrison Ford, Norval Keedwell, George Darraud, Sam Hardy, Montague Love, Riley Hatch, Charles Kennedy, Spencer Charters, Harry Watson, Charles Judels, Pauline Whitson, Mary Kennedy, Thomas Findley and Marie R. Burke.

At Cosmopolitan's Jackson avenue studio, Alan Crosland is making the smaller sets for "The Enemies of Women," the principal ones having been made at Cosmopolitan's main studio and abroad, the author, Vicente Blasco Ibanez, assisting Mr. Crosland at Monte Carlo. Lionel Barrymore is featured in "The Enemies of Women" and the all-star cast includes Alma Rubens, Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, Gladys Hulette, Wm. H. Thompson, Wm. Collier, Jr., Mario Majeroni, Paul Panzer and Betty Bouton.

At the Universal studio in Fort Lee, Director E. H. Griffith is making "The Go-Getter" from the Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Peter B. Kyne. Seena Owen and T. Roy Barnes are featured and the cast includes William Norris, Tom Lewis, Frederick Santley, John Carr, William J. Sorelle, William Strauss, Ann Brady, Ed. Elkins, Florence Hadley and Jane Jennings.

At the Thomas Ince studio in Culver City, California, Frank Borzage is at work on "The Nth Commandment" from the Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Fannie Hurst. Colleen Moore and James Morrison head this cast which also includes Eddie Phillips, Charlotte Merriam and George Cooper.

In addition to these pictures now in course of making, the Cosmopolitan Corporation is preparing to produce what it says are the greatest array of high-class motion pictures ever turned out by one company.

"Adam and Eva" has already been completed, and Cosmopolitan expects to make the following specials in which Marion Davies will be starred: "Little Old New York," "La Belle Marseillaise," "Alice of Old Vincennes," "Yolanda," from the novel by Charles Major, the author of "When Knighthood Was in Flower"; "The Forest Lovers," "Hearts Courageous" and "Amy Robsart," from Sir Walter Scott's "Kenilworth."

In addition to these Cosmopolitan will make, after "The Enemies of Women," "Under the Red Robe," "A Gentleman of France," "Helmet of Navarre," "The Grey Cloak," by Harold McGrath; "The Torrent," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, author of "The Enemies of Women" and "The Four Horsemen"; "Woman Triumphant," also by Ibanez; "Hearts of Three," by Jack London; "White Shadows of the South Seas"; "The Desert Healer," by Edith M. Hull, author of "The Sheik"; "The Love Piker"; "Mother McGinn," by Jack Boyle, author of "The Face in the Fog"; "Ice Water, Please," by Fannie Hurst, author of Cosmopolitan's "Humoresque"; "The Crimson Tide," by Robert W. Chambers; "The Flaming Forest," by James Oliver Curwood, author of "The Valley of Silent Men"; "Snowblind," by Arthur Stringer; "The Country Beyond," by James Oliver Curwood; "Joss," by Hugh Wiley, and "Behind the Velvet," by Lowell Otis Reese.

"Slippy McGee" for December

Another "best seller," says First National, comes to the screen this month with the release of Oliver Morosco's production, "Slippy McGee." The book is by Marie Conway Oemler. Wesley Ruggles directed the screen story.

Made Good Profit

One of the latest booking contracts made with Associated Exhibitors was that of M. L. Markowitz for a week's showing of the Associated feature, Florence Vidor in "Conquering the Woman," in his big Strand Theatre in San Francisco. This is the fourth Florence Vidor production for the organization of which Arthur S. Kane is president. The Strand played each of the preceding three pictures in the series for week showings, and, according to Mr. Markowitz, made a good profit on each.

"Conquering the Woman" has been playing this last week in Sam Harding's Liberty, Kansas City, and Fred Dolle's Alamo, Louisville, among other important theatres. Among other houses which have booked the feature for early showings are: I. Libson's Strand, Dayton; I. Frankel's Palace, Cincinnati; Keith's Theatre, Portland, Me.; Manager McGiven's Victoria, Altoona, Pa.; Harris's Capitol, Passaic, N. J., and the Lyric, a Loew house, in Hoboken, N. J.

Monte Carlo Casino as Setting for Film

Monte Carlo and its world famous Casino serve as the setting for some of the most interesting moments in "The Enemies of Women," the super-special feature which Cosmopolitan Productions is making under the direction of Alan Crosland from the story by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, author of "The Four Horsemen." While the company making the picture took a number of "shots" of the Casino during six weeks spent on location in France, this, it is stated, being the first time that the resort had been filmed, a number of other scenes of the Casino, in replica, are now being made at International's Jackson avenue studio.

Joseph Urban, Cosmopolitan's scenic artist, has designed a replica of the Casino's magnificent interior, so perfected in every detail that it vies in magnificence with the original, it is reported.

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL CONVENTION IN LONDON

After welding together an organization that now has ten exchanges and branches in Great Britain and Ireland, and getting it into running order, Ralph J. Pugh, managing director of Associated First National, Ltd., called his selling force to meet in London early in November. In putting forth his selling plans for the future, Mr. Pugh had the assistance of E. Bruce Johnston, Associated First National foreign manager, and David P. Howells. Mr. Johnston has been in England and on the continent for about three months now. Mr. Pugh's policy of selling and exploiting pictures is along American lines and his methods are getting early play dates for the big First National pictures, where the old methods were to wait a year or eighteen months before showing to the British public. He is putting on "Oliver Twist," released here only a few months ago, during Christams week.

"Modern Matrimony" Selected for Title

"Modern Matrimony" has been definitely chosen as the title for the next big Selznick picture starring Owen Moore; this is the production which has been finished on the coast under the working title of "A Dollar Down." The first print, finally cut and titled, is expected at the home offices of the Selznick company, in New York City, within the next few days. The picture will be released in the near future.

"Modern Matrimony" is a Victor Heerman production, the story and direction both being his. This picture differs to a considerable extent from other productions in which Mr. Moore has appeared. It is not broad farce, but rather the more refined type of comedy which is best exemplified by stage productions like "The First Year," Selznick states.

Almost equally important with Owen Moore in the cast is Alice Lake who plays the principal feminine role.

In Big Demand

Great interest, says Producers Security, is being shown in the demand for "Just a Song at Twilight," starring Richard Barthelmess, supported Evelyn Greeley and Pedro de Cordoba.

Fashion Show Novelty at the Strand

"Ye Olden Fashion Show," a departure in motion picture theatre novelties, combining quartette, ballet group, symphony orchestra and lighting effects, had its first presentation recently at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre under the direction of Edward L. Hyman, managing director.

The feature novelty number played up the Criterion Quartette, male singers, with the fashion show built around them. The dancers appeared in costumes of 1830, while the singers were seen as dandies of the same historical period. The ballet soloists wore silk hoop skirts and lace bonnets, the dresses having delicate black patent leather decorations.

The quartette interpreted the spirit of the time with such songs as "Old Uncle Moon," "Sally in Our Alley," and others. The special colonial dance was "The Madrigal Dance."

Mr. Hyman arranged a unique stage setting consisting of a big cut out Colonial house surrounded with apple trees in blossom. The lights were worked to bring out a moonlight effect which emphasized the apple blossom coloring prettily.

Recommended Two Universals

The two family films recommended in the September 11 issue of the motion picture bulletin of the National Motion Picture League are both Universal pictures. They are "The Flirt," the Hobart Henley production of Booth Tarkington's novel, for the Universal Jewel release schedule, and "Forsaking All Others," a Universal attraction featuring Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis.

The National Motion Picture League has recommended both of these pictures, both for adults and young people.

"Lefty" Flynn on Way West

Maurice B. (Lefty) Flynn, former Yale athlete and well-known leading man in motion pictures, has been engaged to play the leading male role in Alice Brady's newest Paramount picture, "The Snow Bride," which will be put into production soon at the Long Island studio under the direction of Henry Kolker. Flynn is on his way East from Hollywood where he recently appeared with Mary Miles Minter in "Drums of Fate," a forthcoming Paramount release.

First of Farnum's for January 14

On January 14, William Fox will release the first of the 1923 Dustin Farnum series of new pictures, "Three Who Paid," from the story by George Owen Baxter, and directed by Colin Campbell.

Bessie Love is leading lady. Others in the cast include Frank Campeau, Fred Kohler, Robert Daly, William Conklin and Robert Agnew.

Praise for Fairbanks Film

Newspapers of Boston were, it is said, unanimous in acclaiming Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," which opened at the Park Theatre there on Monday evening, Dec. 18, as a marvelous contribution to the screen. Here is what they had to say:

"Chivalry, romance, love—and Douglas Fairbanks. One doesn't need anything more to make a perfect picture.—Globe. "It is not only the best picture Fairbanks has made; it is one of the best that has ever been made."—Traveler.

"From this prodigality of Mr. Fairbanks a film results of truly imposing proportions. No admirers of his art should fail to see 'Robin Hood.'"—Herald. "As a combination of chivalry, romance, spectacle, comedy and personality that give Fairbanks a place all by himself, 'Robin Hood' is irresistible."—Advertiser.

"In 'Robin Hood' Douglas Fairbanks has made the most stupendous picture ever screened."—Telegram. "Extremely rich in color and romance. Everything is done sumptuously to the last detail."—Post.

E. K. Lincoln May Become Producer

With his busiest year now well behind him, E. K. Lincoln, popular screen star and leading man (and also "a man with a hundred varied interests"), looks forward to 1923 as even more interesting, because he may step out of the familiar role of actor and become a producer of motion pictures "on his own."

The year that is closing found Mr. Lincoln in the studios while various directors and stars were at work with him on such productions as "Women Men Marry," "Devotion," "The Light in the Dark," "The Woman In Chains" and "The Little Red Schoolhouse," which represents a full year.

It is known, however, that production activities have been calling E. K. Lincoln more insistently of late than heretofore, and nobody who knows "E. K." will express the slightest surprise to read an announcement of his joining the ranks of the producers.

Mr. Lincoln is the owner of Greenacre Kennels, near Fairfield, Conn., where there are housed more than one hundred and fifty prize canines, including more than a hundred Chows, to say nothing of numerous blooded Pekinese, Japanese Spaniels and Boston Bulls. Blue ribbon winners abound in the Greenacre Kennels, where there are youngsters coming along and heading straight for the judging benches in future dog shows. Heading the list is Champion Greenacre Li Ping Tow, an unbeaten champion, a great red Chow with a lion like mane.

The master of Greenacre is the son of a Western business man. He was born in Johnstown, Pa., and made his first appearance on the stage in a stock company in his home town. He ventured into the steel business, but when motion pictures "came in" he joined Vitagraph and played in many pictures, being starred or co-starred in several, including "A Million Bid," the first of Vitagraph's big features.

Mr. Lincoln did some silver mining in Mexico; returned to the States and indulged in more picture work; bought a gold mine and worked it; returned to motion pictures as a star; developed his country homes in the Berkshires and in Connecticut; established his New York City offices, and has gone right on successfully making business and motion picture work and breeding prize winning Chows match up together at odd intervals.

84 A. B. C. Houses Book "Tess" Film

Mary Pickford's brand new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," a United Artists Corporation release, will be shown in eighty-four theatres in the Associated Booking Corporation group in New York City and metropolitan district during the Christmas-New Year's holiday week and the month of January, with most of the houses opening on various dates between Christmas and New Year's.

This is one of the most sweeping simultaneous list of play dates ever booked for New York and contiguous territory. The bookings cover all sections of Greater New York, trail over into Long Island and New Jersey, with engagements announced as far up-State as Peekskill.

An extensive co-operative advertising campaign has been mapped out by the executive committees of the A. B. C. which includes a lot of space in New York City dailies, with lists of the various theatres playing "Tess of the Storm Country," their addresses and their play dates.

Jones Film Set for January

Fox Film Corporation offers for release January 7, "The Footlight Ranger," starring Charles Jones. It was directed by Scott Dunlap from the story and scenario by Dorothy Yost. Fritzi Brunette supports the star.

In the cast, beside those mentioned, are James Mason, Lillian Langdon, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Henry Barrows. This will be the first of the series of Jones' productions for the new year.

Set Occupies Acre of Ground

Among the several big sets now in use at the Paramount West Coast studio, that for "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," starring Walter Hiers, stands out above all the others, Paramount says. Not only in size, but in unusual appearance does this scene tower over all others, it is stated.

With a hotel and many surrounding buildings, the street occupied fully an acre of ground at the Lasky ranch.

Gloria Swanson, Star in Wood Film

Gloria Swanson, Paramount star in "Prodigal Daughters," a Sam Wood production, has Ralph Graves as leading man and Vera Reynolds plays the part of a young pleasure-loving girl who is plunged into tragedy through her love of a good time. Theodore Roberts, veteran character actor, has the role of a successful American business man who suddenly finds his home involved in moral chaos.

Metro Will Handle "Hearts Aflame"

Metro Pictures Corporation will distribute "Hearts Aflame," the Reginald Barker production for Louis B. Mayer, according to an announcement from the releasing company.

The photoplay was presented before an invited audience of exhibitors and important motion picture personages at a private showing held at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in New York, and it is said to have been the consensus of opinion of those present that "Hearts Aflame" would be one of the biggest pictures of the year.

Melford Returns

George Melford has returned to New York from White Sulphur Springs, West Va., where he has been on a short vacation, to begin preliminary preparations for his next Paramount picture, "You Can't Fool Your Wife."

Goes to Canada

Henry Kolker, who will direct Alice Brady in her next Paramount picture, "The Snow Bride," by Sonya Levien and Julie Herne, has gone to Montreal, Canada, to select locations for the exterior scenes of the picture which will be "shot" in the wilds of Quebec.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

1923 Prospects in Metropolis Are Most Promising

Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, in a statement issued this week, said that prospects for 1923 for independents were most promising. Business during the early half of the 1922-23 season, Mr. Zierler said, has exceeded the expectations of the most liberal optimists.

Manager J. Bellman, of Renown Pictures, Inc., has acquired the Amalgamated franchise for New York. This company's releases are the Principal Picture features. "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips, and "Environment," with Milton Sills and Alice Lake, and "Women Men Marry."

Frank Mattison, who used to handle publicity for Reelcraft exchange, was a New York visitor last week. He is touring the country in the interests of Phil Goldstone, producer of "Deserted at the Altar" and the Richard Talmadge pictures.

Harry Brandt, brother of Billy Brandt, the popular New York exhibitor, this week purchased an interest in the Garden Theatre in Brooklyn, and booked the entire output of Commonwealth Exchange, including all the big specials Sam Zierler is releasing.

Nathan Hirsh, of Aywon Film Exchange, this week announced that he would release three pictures per month during the coming year. He is also planning the production of a feature which he will sell on the independent market.

C. C. Burr, of Mastodon Films, Inc., announced this week that he had closed a deal whereby Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, will handle the metropolitan distribution on the next Johnny Hines feature, "Luck."

Al Feinman, the enterprising exploitation manager of the New York Warner Brothers' exchange, has been pretty much of a globe-trotter since joining this progressive organization. The Warner releases have kept Al on the jump, hopping all over New York State putting on stunts.

Apollo Exchange this past week was busily planning for a series of important first-run engagements on the Will Nigh production, "Notoriety," which already has been shown in many parts of the country, but which will be released generally in the metropolitan district next week.

The following constitute the sales staff of Atlas Exchange: Joe Forster, Bronx and Manhattan; Louis Newstead, Brooklyn, and Rudy Becker, New Jersey.

The resolution recently passed by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in New York demanding advance trade showings of pictures has no bearing on independent exchangemen, for the latter have been holding trade showings regularly.

Norca Pictures, Inc., a new distributing company, is expected to release its own pictures in the metropolitan district.

Norca Gets "Love's Old Sweet Song"

Hop Hadley, of Lund Productions Company, this week announced that Norca Pictures, Inc., had acquired distribution rights to "Love's Old Sweet Song." Louis Wolheim is starred in this production, which is based on James Molloy's story.

Merry Christmas

A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND HAPPY NEW YEAR! May the year that is about to make its bow be productive of even greater results for independents than the one that is now gradually passing out.

Christmas Day, 1922, finds the independent market healthier, wealthier and better than ever.

It finds in our midst business men—men who have invested carefully, considerately and liberally, men who have fought against seemingly tremendous odds—and conquered. They accomplished tasks that a year ago were considered impossible. They dashed forward, not blindly, but with a determination that has permanently established the independent market as an institution the existence, encouragement and prosperity of which is an absolute necessity to the industry as a whole.

THE pace set by the leaders has been so remarkable that those who lagged, those whose tactics were questionable, those who operated, literally, on a shoestring, those who practised deception as a means of turning their wares into money, those who misrepresented—now on Christmas Day, 1922,—find themselves on the outside looking in on a cleaner and better market. The independent man—the man who can do things—has arrived. His word is his bond. The "leech" has died.

WHY certain distributors should expect 100 per cent service from exhibitors, producers and trade papers when they demonstrate no inclination on their own part to co-operate with the latter is a problem that is unsolved. This department has made it a rule to give the trade all the news available, we have sought to give reviews that were written with the trade's interest in mind, and we have published data that we believed would interest the field in general. We have relegated to the waste paper basket thousands of sheets of paper on which were typewritten hundreds of meaningless words that did no one any good and that constituted gross misrepresentations. We are giving 100 per cent. service, but it won't come in the way of publication of "bunk" press stories. Don't waste your time sending them, for one of our good friends has very generously presented us with a large waste paper basket for a Christmas gift.

FROM our Detroit correspondent this week we received an interesting piece of news. It concerns certain tactics utilized by an exchange in exploiting one of its pictures. The picture in question was "The Shadow," a hopeless mess that this writer saw early in 1921. Muriel Ostriche is the featured player. Anyway, the distributor of this picture in a cheap effort to sell his film tied it up with "Shadows," the Al Lichtman special, starring Lon Chaney. This picture, readers of this department will recall, played Phil Gleischman's big house in Detroit. After the showing, the offending exchangeman circularized the territory. The text referred to the fact that "Shadows" had played the big house, but was supplemented with the information that "The Shadow" could be purchased at the exhibitor's own price.

FORTUNATELY, no one was fooled by this cheap bid at exhibitor patronage. In fact, the laugh is on the "leech" exchangeman. It was an amateurish stunt and did the exchange no good. But it did arouse the exhibitors. It did prompt the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan to condemn the exchange and to warn its members not to be deceived. And no one was deceived. The stunt was a decided flop.

BUT we hope that the disaster that befell this exchange's cheap effort to capitalize on the success of the genuine article will serve as a lesson to others. There is no comparison between the two pictures. It is an insult to the intelligence of any exhibitor for any exchangeman to compare the two. "The Shadow" was cheaply produced and ridiculously poorly acted with a story that will be slaughtered by censors. "Shadows" is a masterpiece. It is one of the greatest pictures we have ever seen. Everything about the picture is wonderful—production, story, acting, settings, photography and titles. "Shadows" is one picture, were we an exhibitor, that we would exploit so elaborately that every man, woman or child in our town would know about its engagement.

WE congratulate the M. P. T. O. of Michigan on taking the immediate action it took. We want to extend our congratulations to Harry Charnas and Jess Fishman of the Detroit Al Lichtman Exchange for exposing this cheap bid for patronage. We congratulate Al Lichtman and his organization on the immediate steps they have taken to put a stop to such unfair methods. We are certain no one in Michigan will dare repeat the offence.

Business in the Middle West Is Promising

CHICAGO (special) — Independent business in the Middle West for 1923 is most promising, judging from observations made by independent exchangemen during the current month. Business during the past three months has been particularly good with the leading distributors of independent pictures, the better class features getting choice dates at the best Loop houses.

However, the meteoric progress made by independents during the past three months has not been confined exclusively to Chicago, for reports from Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Peoria and other cities are equally encouraging. With independents in this territory this fall it was not a question of extensive selling so much as an unusual demand from exhibitors for big box-office productions.

Take, for instance, the remarkable progress made in this territory by Al Lichtman Exchange, whose productions are handled through Celebrated Film Players Corporation, of which Joe Friedman is the head. This organization is but four months old, and yet in that period its pictures have popped forward among those in biggest demand. "Rich Men's Wives," the first release of this exchange, played to excellent business, and in many instances left a trail of box-office records. It is no wonder here among film men that the demand for dates on "Shadows" is so great.

Frank Zambreno's Progress Pictures Exchange has developed into one of the busiest and most important independent exchanges in this country. Mr. Zambreno has purposely held up the release of a number of productions that have played in other territories. He is planning the release of twelve big pictures a year, and already he has announced the following pictures for 1923: "Streets of New York," with Edward Earle and Barbara Castleton; "Shylock of Wall Street," with Zena Keefe and Dore Davidson; "Little Red Schoolhouse," "Night Life in Hollywood," "Wildness of Youth," "Lost in a Big City," and others.

Si Griever, of the Griever Exchange, is planning to expand his interests in the independent field locally. Mr. Griever has been going along quietly, blowing no horns, but at the same time building up a business that is well patronized by exhibitors.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, stopped off here this week on his way to the coast. He was the guest of Frank Zambreno, of Progress Pictures Corporation.

Balaban & Katz, who are releasing Warner Brothers' product through their First National exchange in this territory, are planning a series of personal appearances of Wesley Barry at their Chicago houses next month.

Tom Forman Signs Two Stars

Los Angeles (special). — Tom Forman has signed Ethel Shannon and Mary Culver to appear in "The Girl Who Came Back," which he is now directing for Preferred. Miriam Cooper heads the cast. The picture is scheduled for March release through the Al Lichtman Corporation.

B. P. Schulberg has selected Tom Forman to direct "The Broken Wing," for Al Lichtman release. The picture, it is understood, will be made on a lavish scale, and is designed for release in the spring.

Neutral Booking Syndicate Forecasted Within Six Months, Says Charles C. Burr

IN discussing the present condition of the industry last week, C. C. Burr made the startling prediction that unless a decided change is put into effect at once, a change that will guarantee a square deal all around and stabilize the business, that within six months the booking of pictures will be done in precisely the same manner as attractions for the speaking stage are handled. In other words, that there will be at least two large concerns routing pictures over a circuit of houses, similar to the Erlanger and Shubert booking combines of the legitimate.

"Such film booking organizations," says Mr. Burr, "will consist of the present big producing and theatre companies on the one hand and the neutral distributing organizations, independent producers and the recently formed booking combines on the other."

Therefore it is Mr. Burr's opinion that, should no change for the better take place in the present method of booking or selling product to the exhibitors of the country within a few months, an entirely new arrangement will be put into effect that will pattern itself after the two stage booking combinations.

"My own personal opinion," said Mr. Burr, "is that only one thing can be done to prevent such a drastic and unfortunate move. The industry must have a thorough housecleaning which will result in a standardization of business methods which will affect every phase of the industry. Methods that will guarantee a square deal all around, one that will bring the producer, distributor and exhibitor into perfect harmony."

In discussing the prevailing method of booking pictures, Mr. Burr says that in most instances there is entirely too much bargaining between the producer and the exhibitor. The practice of "gypping" the producer is far too prevalent, he says, and is one of the things that should be stopped, unless the producer, theatres and distributor want to see two such booking combines as he predicts, come into being.

"A readjustment at this moment is needed, and needed badly," continued Mr. Burr. "Yet if no other solution offers itself, if the big producers and the exhibitors cannot get together and iron out their differences for the good of all concerned, if there are no compromises of some sort which will put the industry on a more businesslike basis, then the division I outline will come, let the consequences be what they may.

"The chief trouble is the uneven and often discriminating bargaining between the producer and the exhibitor. This could be eliminated by adopting a uniform system of percentage booking. This remedy has been advocated consistently for some time. Nevertheless, the fact that combinations of exhibitors more or less powerful are being formed almost daily, is sure proof of the fact that the present system of hit-or-miss bargaining has failed utterly. Percentage booking is the salvation.

"A further split in the ranks of the industry would only prolong matters which must ultimately meet a more logical solution. At the same time, such a split as I forsee, unless there is a surer remedy, will serve only to aggravate matters and make feeling all around more unyielding.

"The signs all point one way or another. Let us hope, for the good of the industry, the proper actors will read the signs aright."

Warners Sign Monte Blue, Harry Meyers and Miss Fazenda

Sinclair Lewis' novel, "Main Street," the last of the seven classics of the screen to be released by the Warner Brothers for the current season, has been placed into production by Sam and Jack Warner. The feature will be made at the Warner coast studios under the direction of Harry Beaumont. With the completion of this production the Warner Brothers will have completed one of the busiest and most active seasons in the history of the organization.

In accordance with the policy of securing the best available screen talent, it is reported that Monte Blue, Harry Meyers and Louise Fazenda were engaged to play prominent roles in the production. Blue and Meyers have been placed under long term contracts. A large number of other screen players are being engaged for what is said to be the greatest all star cast production of the year. Julien Josephson adapted the novel for the screen.

Principal Pictures Buys Plays

Word comes from Los Angeles, where Eastern Manager Irving Lesser arrived Sunday of this week, that Principal Pictures Corporation had purchased the rights to three productions now playing at Broadway theatres, and that these would be adapted to the screen and included in Principal's 1923 program, which embraces not less than eighteen productions, made by directors reputed with having turned out box-office winners and internationally famous stars. On his return from the coast on January 6 Mr. Lesser will issue a complete statement, disclosing the identity of the plays his firm has acquired, as well as that of the stars under contract.

Many First Run Theatres and Circuits Book Warners

The entire series of Warner Brothers' five classics of the screen have been booked by a large number of first-run theatres and circuits throughout the country, according to Harry M. Warner. The five classics include "The Beautiful and Damned," F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel dealing with the modern flapper; "Rags to Riches" and "Heroes of the Street," with Wesley Barry; "Little Church Around the Corner," 'Sinclair Lewis' "Main Street," and the Charles G. Norris novel, "Brass."

Among the many theatres and circuits that have contracted for the series are the Strand, California and Granada Theatres, San Francisco; Modern and Beacon, Boston; Chicago Theatre, Riviera-Tivoli, Chicago; the Ascher circuit, Lubliner & Trinz circuit, Chicago; Allen, Cleveland; Walnut, Cincinnati; Colonial, Columbus, Ohio. The California Theatre, San Francisco, has secured four of the productions, and Mack Sennett's Mission Theatre has booked "Main Street."

Grossman Joins Lichtman Corporation

Edward Grossman has joined the home-office staff of the Al Lichtman Corporation as a special sales representative, whose duties will take him often into the field. He came to New York from Chicago on Monday and left Tuesday for St. Louis on his first assignment in the field for the company. Grossman has been affiliated with enterprises in which Mr. Lichtman has been interested for some time. Henry Ginsberg is general sales manager, and Leon D. Netter a special sales representative, whose duties are similar to those Grossman will undertake.

Arrow Gets "Shylock of Wall Street"

News From Eastern Studios

Burton King this week signed Mary Alden and Harry Morey for important roles in his next production that he will make at the Ideal Studio in New Jersey.

Daniel Carson Goodman completes shooting on his next Equity special this week. The title, despite last week's announcement from Equity, has not been definitely decided. The cast includes Mary Alden, Charles Richman, Robert Edeson, Hedda Hopper, Elinor Fair, Vincent Coleman and Lyda Laloa.

Marguerite Gale Productions, Inc., was formed this week for the production of a series of westerns. The first will be "The Turning Point."

The Tilford Studois in West 44th street, New York, have been exceedingly busy and there is big demand for space there. Daniel Carson Goodman has been working there for the past few weeks.

Pending a number of last minute changes production on the next Will Nigh picture has been held up, although announcement was made this week by Bobby North that work would actually start early in January.

Production started this week on "The Garden of Desire," starring Betty Blythe, at the Whitman Bennett studios in Yonkers, N. Y. William T. Carlton, Tyrone Powers and Fred Jones are in the cast, while Lawrence Windom is directing.

There is a report current in production circles that Harry Hoyt will direct a series of two-reel subjects that will be made for a Boston producing concern.

Several new pictures are being planned for production the latter part of January by units whose product will be released on the independent market through C. C. Burr's Mastodon Films, Inc.

The Warner Brothers this week denied the rumor that they were in the market for an Eastern studio. On the contrary, Harry M. Warner went to Los Angeles last week to sign papers which will enable the firm to enlarge the present studio on the Coast.

Eddie Polo, according to reports, has received several offers to make pictures in Italy, but so far as could be ascertained he has accepted none of them. His future plans are not known.

Something like seven independent pictures will be in the process of production by the middle of next month in New York and New Jersey studios, according to announcements made during the past few weeks.

"Faint Heart," the first Ray McKee "Torchy" comedy, made by C. C. Burr, released through Hodkinson, was shown at the New York Rialto Theatre this week, and several members of the cast including Charley Murray, Mary Anderson and several others, attended the first showing.

With "Luck," the third Johnny Hines feature which C. C. Burr produced at his Glendale, L. I., studio completed plans are now in the making for the production of the fourth picture on which work is expected to be started late in January or early in February.

Lichtman, Back from Coast, Tells of Progress in Production Plans

Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, distributors of Preferred Pictures, returned last Monday from a three weeks' trip to Los Angeles, where he has been in conference with B. P. Schulberg, head of the producing organization. As a result of his visit in the West Lichtman had some interesting things to say about plans governing the distributing company's future program and the general expansion of production activities.

Lichtman states that 1923 will find Preferred Pictures a power to be reckoned with in the production field. The first news in his Christmas message to his franchise-holders was the announcement of Schulberg's signing Gaston Glass for a period of three years to appear as leading man in forthcoming stories to be filmed by him. The signing of Glass marks Schulberg's second acquisition to his permanent stock company of well-known players. The announcement of a long-term agreement with Kenneth Harlan was made some weeks ago.

While in conference with Schulberg, Lichtman formulated arrangements for eight new pictures. The line-up will keep Directors Gasnier and Forman busy for months to come. The productions include "Mothers-in-Law," "The Broken Wing," "The Parasite," "Frivolity," "The Aristocrat," "The Satin Woman," "My Lady's Lips" and "A Mansion of Aching Hearts."

Lichtman made the prediction that the next four releases of the Lichtman Corporation — namely, "The Hero," "Are You a Failure?" "Poor Men's Wives" and "The Girl Who Came Back"—will establish a new high level in the business, and will place Preferred Pictures up front among producing companies.

"I am willing to stake my reputatiou as a picture mau," said Al Lichtman, "on the box-office value of these four. They will, I am certain, surpass even 'Rich Meu's Wives,' which exhibitors have found one of the most satisfactory releases of the past year from the point of view of the box office. Each of them has been made with the box office in mind. Shortly after my arrival at the studio I viewed 'The Hero' and 'Are You a Failure?' in the projection room, and issued the statement without reservation that they are, beyond question of a doubt, the best pictures which have come from us thus far. Were it possible to turn out pictures witb more sure-fire box-office touches I would say that Schulberg has achieved this in Gasnier's production of 'Poor Men's Wives,' a companion piece to 'Rich Men's Wives,' which has been produced along the same elaborate lines. Forman is making 'The Girl Who Came Back,' which is unquestionably the most ambitious tbing he has undertaken for us. Both of these pictures I saw in the making, and am willing to endorse them personally."

Lichtman furthermore expressed his satisfaction at the manner in which exhibitors throughout the country have accepted his proposition. This is evidenced, he says, by the manner in which theatre owners have insisted upon block bookings in many instances, even in the face of the announcement of policy from his office by whicb each picture was to be sold on its individual merits.

"The records set by 'Rich Men's Wives,'" he says, "have made history for picture houses everywhere. While in Los Angeles Sam Katz told me that the picture had done so well at the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, that he was willing to pay me more than the rental originally agreed upon. The Kinema in Los Angeles made a profit of $3,200 on a week's run of 'Shadows.' In Cleveland and Detroit the picture has established new records also. These are facts that bespeak more than any extravagaut statements I could possibly make regarding the Preferred output."

Schulberg is constantly adding new names of well-known picture people to the ranks of those helping to make a reputation for his company. It has been announced that Olga Printzlau will prepare the script for Gasnier on "Mothers-in-Law," which follows "Poor Men's Wives" on his schedule. Olga Printzlau is among the foremost screen writers. She was connected with William De Mille for a number of years during her affiliations with Famous Players.

Lichtman brought up the point that future Preferred Pictures will be cast with the finest players available. He added that Glass had been awarded a contract for his excellent work in "The Hero" and "The Girl Who Came Back."

Detroit Leech Are in Action

DETROIT—(Special)—Much indignation has been felt by local reputable film folks at the tactics utilized by a certain exchange in this city. Jess Fishman, manager of the local Al Lichtman Exchange, this week made public a postal card on which a Detroit exchange advises exhibitors to the following effect:

"'Shadows' is playing the Broadway-Strand, Detroit. You can book 'The Shadows' at your owu terms from us." Receipt of the card immediately started a storm of protest in exhibitor and exchange circles, all taking exceptions to such tactics. Phil Gleichman of the Broadway-Strand condemned the exchange.

"The Shadows" is a picture made several years ago, starring Muriel Ostriche. J. Charles Davis, who is now assistant to President W. E. Shallenberger of Arrow, directed the production.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan have taken the above matter under advisement, and Business Manager H. M. Richey this week issued a statement warning theatre owners, adding the comment: "In fact, the two pictures are so dissimilar that 'The Shadows' is not even nearly enough like 'Shadows' to be a shadow of the feature that is being distributed by Standard."

Favorite Film Company bas just announced the release of a series of twelve two-reel comedies and comedy-drama subjects during the coming year. These are being made by a concern working in co-operation with the Woman's Home Journal, it is said.

Tom Leonard's New Exchange

ST. LOUIS — (Special) — Progress Pictures Corporation is the uame of a new exchange orgauized by Tom Leonard of Pioneer Pictures Company of 3435 Olive street. Leonard is president and general manager. The exchange will specialize in the handling of Arrow pictures, and already has acquired territorial rights to the following: "Streets of New York," "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Night Life in Hollywood," "Chain Lightning," "The Lone Horseman," "The Star Reporter," "Jacqueline," "The Innocent Cheat," "Western Justice," "Blue Fox" serial, six new William Fairbanks Westerns and twelve Eddie Lyons comedies.

The formation of the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation in Chicago did not come as a surprise to local independents, who had been expectiug such a move for some time. There is a direct-exhibitor distributing exchange in this city and it is meeting with fairly good success.

Sam Werner is exploiting "Your Best Friend," the Warner picture which he bought last season. Sam held up release of this film until this season because of the issuance last season of the Paramount picture, "The Good Provider," starring Dore Davidson, who is co-starred with Vera Gordon in "Your Best Friend."

Everything taken into consideration, the new season thus far has been fairly good for independents, although practically all the exhibitor demand has been for the higher class productions.

Standard Will Expand Operations

DETROIT — (Special)—Business in 1922 was particularly good for Standard Film Service Exchange here. The latter part of the year more than offset the slump experienced during the latter portion of 1922-23, when business was away below normal. However, this week word was given out that the exchange will double its floor space in the Film Building by taking over the former offices of the Nelson Productions, Inc., on the sixth floor. This will give Standard a floor space of 3,500 square feet.

Al Lichtman Exchange here is now showing the third Preferred picture to exhibitors. A print of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" was received several weeks ago.

Carl Sonin, manager of Warner's Exchange, having spent Thanksgiving Day with his family in New York, is planning to spend Christmas in similar style also in the metropolis.

W. B. Hurlbut of Favorite Film Company has completed his 1923 line-up of productions and will announce his acquisition immediately after the New Year, according to a statement he gave out to the press this week.

"Malcolm Strauss' Salome" Popular

The independent market has responded with the greatest interest to the announcement by George H. Wiley, Inc., that "Malcolm Strauss' Salome," has been secured for release in the State right field. The judgment of Mr. Strauss and his associates in thus recognizing the growing importance of the independent field, has been amply justified by the number and variety of the inquiries received from every part of the country. Bobby North, of Apollo Exchange, Inc., who has secured the exhibition rights for the production for the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory, announces that he is planning an "ad" drive.

Unusual Dates Are Closed

Due to the unusual business done by "Rich Men's Wives" at the Lafayette Square theatre, in Buffalo, the Grand and North Film Exchange, holders of the Al Lichtman franchise in Northern New York has placed the picture in the folowing theatres there:

The Elmwood, Victoria, Criterion, Central Park, Capitol, Maxine, Rivoli, Plaza, Ellen Terry, Allendale, Cirole, Jubilee, Columbia, New Ariel, Frontier, Emblem, Lovejoy, Broadway, Park, Little Hippodrome, Marlowe and Oriole.

Here are three scenes fror. clever and bold exploitation stunts successfully worked by Warner Brothers' staff in conjunction with appearance of Wesley Barry in "Heroes of the Streets" at Stran d Theatre, New York, this week.

Warners' Staff Pulls Nifty Parade Stunt on Barry Film

The Warner Brothers' publicity and exploitation staff, headed by Lon Young, with the air of Lou Marangella and Al Feinman, on Saturday, December 17, pulled another stunt that took New York by storm when they marched several hundred youngsters, police officers, cadets and firemen down Broadway from Columbus Circle to the Strand Theatre, where a special showing of "Heroes of the Street," starring Wesley Barry, was given. The stunt literally jammed the sidewalks along the route for more than two hours, for the bands with youngsters carrying banners properly advertised the occasion and the fact that "Heroes of the Street" and Wesley Barry were the attraction. The sunt, which was one of the boldest and most daring, yet ranks among the most valuable pulled at the expense of New York's main stem, did not cost Warner Brothers a single penny.

Much credit for the stunt, which won considerable newspaper attention on Saturday, thus giving the picture which opened at the Strand the following day. The attendance at the opening, notwithstanding the fact that it marked the advent of the concededly worst theatrical week of the year, was one of the best that house has recorded in some time.

It was about ten o'clock when the Catholic Protectory Band of fifty boys rode downtown aboard the Fifth Avenue buses, which were donated by the bus company. All along the route from the Bronx to Columbus Circle the band played popular tunes. The sides of the bus were properly plastered with banners advertising the picture in brilliant fashion. Then at Columbus Circle the parade was organized.

In addition to the band there was a special police escort of 50 men and three sergeants. One hundred and fifty members of the Junior Naval Reserve, of which Wesley Barry is a cadet, followed. Barry led the parade, escorted by the three sergeants and members of the New York Fire Department. They marched down Broadway to the Strand, where 2,000 children, members of families of the New York Police Department, chaperoned by Mrs. Julia M. Loft and Inspector Leiber of the Police Department, made their way into the theatre, the guests of Warner Brothers and Wesley Barry. Barry appeared personally and presented the kiddies with souvenirs. Members of the Naval Reserve Band, which also was in line, were given harmonicas by Wesley.

More than 1,000 feet of film of the parade was photographed, special syndicate photographers snapped Wesley and his youths and distinguished guests. These pictures were published in the Sunday papers and the reel shown at the Strand on Sunday afternoon. Following the showing the paraders marched back to the Circle where they disbanded. Later Wesley Barry gave a luncheon in honor of the bands.

Many First Runs Are Booked for Principal Films

Something like forty important and representative first engagements were closed this week by the various exchanges throughout the country releasing the initial Principal Pictures Corporation production, "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips, and based on the latest story written by Elinor Glyn. Following the unusually praiseworthy comments of the newspaper and trade press critics, announcement of these important first-run showings came as no surprise to those who have already seen "The World's a Stage."

An interesting phase of the contracts already procured by the exchanges on this picture is found in the fact that few of the theatres booked ever exhibited independent productions. Negotiations are now under way for the showing of this production over some of the most important circuits in the country.

Independents in the Northwest

SEATTLE—(Special)—Norman McLeod, title writer for Christie Comedies, who has been visiting his folks in Seattle during a brief vacation, dropped into the Educational Film Exchange. After a short palaver, he discovered J. A. Gage, Educational manager here, to be an old University of Washington classmate. The film business had "laid lines of care upon the brow of each," making instant recognition impossible; but great was ehe reunion thereof. After a grand pow-wow McLeod started on his long drive back to California.

Al Rosenberg, manager of De Luxe Feature Film Co. and of the Al Lichtman Exchange in Seattle, had a birthday yesterday which he celebrated in the usual form!

L. K. Brin of Kwality Exchanges, exclusive distributors of Warner Brothers product in the Pacific Northwest, announces that he has secured Wesley Barry for six weeks' personal appearance commencing February 18. The announcement has been greeted with great enthusiasm by exhibitors in the territory, where the season's product is booked in key towns 100 per cent. "Rags to Riches," first of the new Wes. Barry features, will show at the Seatle Colseum Holiday week, Dec. 23-30. Seattle youngsters are already chalking it off on the calendar. Prints of "Heroes of the Street" have just been received.

The tremendous national advertising campaign launched in the East by Warner Brothers, the bally-hoo floats and unique novelties have had far reaching effects. Northwest exhibitors are realizing that Warner Brothers' pictures are numbered among the big successes of the year. That there is no question of their box office value. The twenty-four sheets of the Warner Brothers' screen classics have led many picture fans to phone some of the leading theatres to inquire when a certain number would be shown and where. They need no introduction.

"Saved by Radio," the seven-reel special featuring Jacqueline Logan and George Larkin, has been purchased by Greater Features, Inc., for the Pacific Northwest, for early January release. It is a Russell production.

New Exchange Opens in South

ATLANTA, GA. — (Special) — The Peerless Film Company is the newest independent exchange in the South. Its heads are Steven W. Grow and James A. McWhorter, both well known in Southern film circles. The first big special this company will release is Will Nigh's "Notoriety," purchased from L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North. The rest of the schedu'e at present includes westerns, outdoor pictures featuring William K. Hackett, produced by Shamrock Photoplays, Inc., and some short stuff.

Oscar Oldknow reports heavy bookings on Warner product. He recently made public a letter received from Lester Rosenthal of Independent Film Corporation of Washington, D. C., wherein the latter stated that he had sold "Heroes of the Streets" to Tom Moore of the Rialto in that city at 25 per cent. more than that showman paid for "Rags to Riches."

Hank Hearn is touring Florida and reports business there booming. He is sending back batches of contracts for the Warner and C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation product.

R. D. Craver of First National Exchange here, following the great finacial success attendant the showings of "I Am the Law," distributed by C. C. Burr's Affiliated Distributors Corporation, last week closed for the rights to six southeastern States for Johnny Hines' special, "Sure Fire Flint."

Lester Scott, representing C. C. Burr's enterprises, closed the First National deal. He is now heading North and is expected in New York again the latter part of December or soon after the New Year.

Gaston Glass With Schulberg

Los Angeles (special).—B. P. Schulberg, in commenting on the placing of Gaston Glass under contract, told a representative of the World that Glass' fine work in "The Hero" and "The Girl Who Came Back" was responsible for it.

Wiley's Sales on Strauss' "Salome"

George H. Wiley this week announced the following sales on Malcolm Strauss' "Salome": Imperial Pictures Corporation of Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey; Federated Exchange of Washington, for District of Columbia, Virginia and Maryland, and Apollo Exchange, for Greater New York and northern New Jersey.

Warners Adopt a Trade Mark

Warner Brothers have applied for a patent for a new trade mark which will be used in connection with the productions for this season, and the eighteen scheduled for 1923-24. The trade identification with each production will be, "Warner Brothers' Classic of the Screen."

According to Harry M. Warner this trade mark has been devised primarily to firmly imbed in the minds of the motion picture public the fact that the Warner features are distinctly individual in production and story value, and in excellence of screen players. The word "present" has, in the estimation of Mr. Warner, become meaningless and its constant reiteration has made it stereotyped. As a consequence the theatre public has paid little or no attention to the concern whose productions they are witnessing in the many theatres throughout the country.

H. Lieber Buys Nigh's "Notoriety"

The calibre of Will Nigh's box-office sensation, "Notoriety," produced and distributed by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, was demonstrated this week, when one of the leading exchangemen of the country—H. Lieber, head of the H. Lieber Company, of Indianapolis—bought the rights to the super-special for the state of Indiana. Sam Sax, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, negotiated the deal.

Both Warner Brothers and Principal Pictures Making "David Copperfield"

Two screen versions of Charles Dickens' "David Copperfield," both destined for distribution in the independent market, will soon be in the course of production, according to announcements that have emanated from the offices of Warner Brothers in New York and Principal Pictures Corporation in Los Angeles. Accompanying the announcement from the coast was a note attached and signed by Harry Wilson, publicity director of Principal Pictures Corporation, in which he stated that, "notwithstanding the announcement of Warner Brothers that they had acquired the rights to Charles Dickens' 'David Copperfield,' Sol Lesser would go ahead with his plans to make that picture, and this means there will be two such pictures in the market."

That a lively tussle may develop from this situation was intimated at the New York offices of Warner Brothers. The two statements follow:

Warner Brothers' statement:

"Warner Brothers have the rights to 'David Copperfield,' and, as announced several weeks ago, this firm will produce such a picture. In so far as we know no one else has authority to make such a production, and we will immediately take steps to safeguard our interests."

The Principal Pictures Corporation statement follows:

"Sol Lesser, of Principal Pictures Corporation, has plans practically completed for the production of Charles Dickens' 'David Copperfield.' According to Mr. Lesser this Dickens' classic will be given the biggest production ever attempted by himself or his staff. The settings will be started in the immediate future, and casting for principal roles should take place at once. It is Mr. Lesser's idea to place an English lad in the role of 'David Copperfield,' and for this part several talented English boys have been submitted.

"Lesser's foreign representative this week cabled that he has an eighteen-year-old 'find,' and it is quite likely that this boy will be brought to America to play the titular role in the Dickens' masterpiece.

"'It is my intention,' stated the coast producer, 'to give the industry a genuine screen classic in this Dickens' story. No expense will be spared. The settings will be most elaborate. I have had experienced people busy for the past six weeks compiling authentic data pertaining to the Dickens' period in England. Every set will be true to that period. Every character will be as if he or she had stepped from Dickens' story.'

"Announcement was also made by Mr. Lesser that he contemplated producing 'David Copperfield' some time ago. Meanwhile his staff has been busily engaged setting the stage to make the production. The picture will be made at the United Studio as the new studio for Principal Pictures Corporation has not been completed, nor would it be ready for production activity in the near future."

"Notoriety's" Drawing Power Is Well Tested

The opening of Weber & North's Will Nigh production, "Notoriety," in the leading first-run theatres of the country affords all those interested in the feature a test of the pulling-power of the advertising prepared for newspaper use with the feature. When a press book on "Notoriety" was first shown the film men the superior brand of advertising called forth the highest praise, and predictions were freely made that the artistic excellence of the newspaper ads illustrated in the press book would arouse a keen desire on the part of the public to see the picture.

The first runs have already begun on the picture, and newspaper ads are now on hand to verify the judgment of the advertising department of Weber & North. Inquiries have been sent to all exhibitors who have thus far played the picture, asking for their opinion as to the drawing power of the newspaper advertising on "Notoriety." Replies speak for themselves. The combination of society atmosphere and action in every stock ad was successful in drawing both classes of patrons. The feminine movie fans were attracted by the class and the artistic finery of the ads, while the men were drawn by the punch and the dramatic high-lights. The consensus of opinion from distributors and exhibitors is that no independent production has ever had the artistic and the dramatic treatment that "Notoriety" has been given in its advertising campaign.

ST. LOUIS (special) — Warner Brothers' exploitation float, in charge of Frank Cassidy, a circus man, well known here, arrived here on Monday. Cassidy immediately went into conference with the local Warner exploitation man, and the two grabbed much newspaper space. Several ballyhoos were successfully pulled.

CHICAGO (special) — "Rags to Riches," the Warner special, opened at the luxurious Chicago Theatre here this week and was given one of the most pretentious showings ever accorded any production at the Balaban & Katz theatre.

CHICAGO (special) — "Rich Men's Wives," the first Preferred picture, is still quite popular among exhibitors in this territory, most of them having done such a wonderful business on this production that they have contracted for the entire Al Lichtman line-up.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (special)—William Mahoney, manager of the Rialto Theatre, one of New England's best and most luxuriously furnished first-run picture houses, announced this week that he had booked the entire Al Lichtman program for his house after seeing "Shadows," starring Lon Chaney, which he will show at his theatre Christmas week.

CLEVELAND (special) — Wesley Barry's latest starring vehicle, "Heroes of the Street," the Harry Rapf production, released by Warner Brothers, will be shown at the Allen Theatre during Christmas week.

BOSTON (special)—"Down to the Sea in Ships," the Elmer Clifton production, closed Saturday night at the Selwyn Theatre following a most successful three weeks' run at that house.

CLEVELAND (special) — "What's Wrong with the Women?" is still drawing good business in the neighborhood houses in this territory after having played out the downtown houses. The gross for this picture is one of the biggest piled up by an independent production this season.

PITTSBURGH (special)—The Chic Sale picture, "His Nibs," is now being released to first-run theatres in western Pennsylvania. The Rowland & Clark circuit has booked the picture, which had its premiere showing at the State this week, doubling on a bill with Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends."

WASHINGTON (special) — "Ten Nigths in a Barroom" is playing the Leader Theatre here. This picture is being handled by the new De Luxe Exchange in Baltimore, which is doing a big business on this production, which was the talk of the 1922-23 season.

BALTIMORE (special) — "The Man from Hell's River," the Lesser Brothers' special James Oliver Curwood picture, played this week to one of the biggest grosses recorded at the box office of the Garden Theatre here despite the fact that this was a busy Christmas shopping week.

CINCINNATI (special) — Unless all present signs fail Al Lichtman's "Shadows" will have the distinction of being one of the heaviest booked pictures of the year. Every important circuit in this territory has booked this special, starring Lon Chaney.

Al Lichtman Moves to New Quarters

What officials of the Al Lichtman Corporation point to as an indication of good business and a firm belief in the future is embraced in the announcement issued this week that the company had moved from 576 Fifth Avenue to new quarters on the ninth floor of the new building at 1650 Broadway, at 51st Street, opposite the Capitol Theatre.

The new quarters, which are exceedingly large, at last take care of the requirements of the company so far as office space is concerned. The old quarters, at 576 Fifth Avenue, were inadequately arranged and not large enough to insure a maximum of efficiency. The removal to the Broadway offices was anxiously awaited, but was held up until the building was far enough advanced to permit occupancy of the offices.

In its new home the executive offices face the Broadway side of the building. Mr. Lichtman's office has two windows facing the Capitol Theatre and Broadway. Adjoining his is J. G. Bachmann's office, where he will manage the company's affairs as treasurer. Opening from Bachmann's office is that of Richard P. Hildreth, comptroller of the company, and adjoining Lichtman's office is Henry Ginsberg's.

The latter is general sales manager. To the left of the elevators as one enters is the reception room. The private offices open off this. To the right is the general office, where the sales and accounting departments are. That portion of the floor which faces Seventh Avenue is the new home of the publicity and advertising departments.

C. B. C. Proves a Showmen's Asset

By Roger Ferri

In starting the new year, C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation does so as an independent institution that is truly a showman's establishment. Joe Brandt, Harry and Jack Brandt, who constitute this progressive organization of producers and distributors, have kept in constant touch with exhibitors and their wants, Mr. Brandt having made no less than five continental trips during the year that is passing, keeping tabs on what the theatre owners want.

When C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation first announced the release of the "Bix Six" series, few in the independent distribution field dared anticipate the wonderful results that have blessed the efforts of these pioneer film men. Nevertheless, their first release," "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" proved such a wonderful box office magnet that virtually every theatre owner who booked that feature is now angling for the exhibition of the second release, "Only A Shop Girl," which in the opinion of the writer, is a splendid box office bet.

One praiseworthy feature of the C. B. C. organization is found in the fact that it is not experimental, that it does not force on the market pictures for which there is no demand. "Only A Shop Girl," we believe, will make money, because, while based on Charley Blaney's old time melodrama, it has been carefully produced with exploitation angles that will bring patrons inside the theatres and entertain them superlatively once they are in.

We look forward to big doings from C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

Christmas Finds Independents on West Coast in a Happy Mood

LOS ANGELES — (Special) — Christmas finds independent picture producers, directors, stars and players very much satisfied with the world in general, for the current year has been one of the best in the history of independent production. Virtually every independent picture in Hollywood and neighboring vicinities have been working over time during the past six months. That the ensuing year will be an even more prosperous one for independent producers is generally accepted here as a fact and preparations for a busy year are now being made. Virtually every big independent producing corporation has announced its intentions of increasing its output for the coming year. Particularly true is this of Warner Brothers, Al Lichtman and Principal Picture Corporation.

Gasnier's next picture for Preferred Pictures Corporation, releasing through Al Lichtman Exchanges, will be "Mother-in-Law." Tom Forman will make "The Broken Wing." B. P. Schulberg has thus decided on the next series of Preferred Pictures, although both Forman and Gasnier are still at work on two other subjects. Forman is working on "The Girl Who Came Back." Effie Shannon and Mary Culver has been added to the cast of this feature. Gasnier is working on "Poor Men's Wives," for which he has just shot an elaborate roof garden scene. "Poor Men's Wives" will be released in February, while "The Girl Who Came Back" will be released in March, "Mothers-in-Law' in March and "The Broken Wing" in May.

With Frankie Lee's latest two-reel comedy drama, "Robin Hood, Jr.," now on its way to New York for release, Clarence Bricker, the director of this starlet, announces this week that his next production will be a two-reel comedy drama founded on the story, "Last Night When You Kissed Blanche Thompson," originally published in the American Magazine. This story, written by Bess Aldrich, was purchased during Mr. Bricker's visit to New York several months ago following a conference between Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions, Inc., and the officials of the producing company.

Good comedy talent has been engaged to support "Fatty" Karr in his new two-reel comedy, "Long Skirts." The work that "Fatty" Karr has done so far indicates that he will be generally recognized as the logical successor to Roscoe Arbuckle. In addition to "Tiny" Sandford, Lilymae Lyle and others whose names were recently announced, Director Bruce Mitchell has now signed Geary O'Dell, who is considered one of the best known comedies heavies in the films.

E. Richard Schayer, who wrote the continuity for the special, "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," also "Kismet," and many of the big specials of the year, is now associated with Phil Goldstone writing the continuity for Rex (Snowy) Baker's picture, entitled "Pals," the first of a series of six thrill-o-dramas which Phil Goldstone will produce, starring Rex (Snowy) Baker and his wonder horse, "Boomerang." "Pals" is a sensational race story.

Monte Blue, the popular character actor, has been appointed a representative of the film industry by the Woman's City Club, Los Angeles, in a Congressional petition signature drive for the enfranchisement of the Indians. Blue has sent petitions to all the Hollywood and New York studios, and expects to have 5,000 signatures.

Harry M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, arrived at the Warner studios early this week. He will remain here about two weeks and then he will return East with some important news.

Warner Brothers have acquired the screen rights to "Irene," the famous musical comedy, which will be adapted to motion pictures next week. This will be included on Warner Brothers' 1923 schedule of eighteen releases.

Warner Brothers have also purchased the screen rights to "Babbitt." This story was written by Sinclair Lewis, author of "Main Street," which has been completed by the Warner Brothers. Harry Beaumont directed.

Monty Banks has completed his 20th comedy for Federated Film Exchanges release. It is entitled "Four o'Clock in the Morning."

"Rip Tide," the production that A. B. Maescher Productions, Inc., produced at the Hollywood studios, has been completed and is now being cut and edited. Jack Pratt directed with the assistance of Walter Mayo.

Sanford Productions, starring Pete Morrison, are working on "The College Rancher," a semi-western, at the Fine Arts studio.

Anchor Film Corporation has signed Grace Darmond for a leading role in "The Wheel of Fortune."

Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles Sunday morning. He is here for the holidays. He will return to his office in New York next month, leaving on January 2.

The Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., with headquarters in Hollywood, has added two exceptionally well staged features to its list of releases. These films will be known as "Gold Seal" productions. "The Wheel of Fortune," starring Grace Darmond, is the title of one "Gold Seal" feature, while Hobart Bosworth in "The Law of the Sea" is the other.

Clarence Badger, former Goldwyn director, wrote the continuity for "The Law of the Sea," Hobart Bosworth's current picture, now being released by the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., of Hollywood. William H. Clifford, well known scenarist, directed.

Grace Darmond, sometimes called the most beautiful girl on the screen, whose latest production, "The Wheel of Fortune," is now being released through the Anchor Film Distributors Inc., believes in saving her pennies. Every dollar she doesn't need for current expenses goes into Hollywood and Wilshire—both fast growing Los Angeles, Cal., suburbs—real estate. She is also the owner of twenty acres of oil lands at Santa Fe Springs.

The Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., of which Morris R. Schlank is president, now has the largest organization, both staff and field, than any other firm dealing in independent films from the West coast. No Eastern branch will be maintained, according to Mr. Schlank.

G. H. Dumond to Pilot Wes Barry

George H. Dumond, a well-known showman and former manager of Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, arrived in New York this week to act as special representative for Warner Brothers. He formerly managed Wesley Barry, the Warner star, whom he will pilot on a personal appearance tour. He will co-operate with exhibitors, and also to ascertain what can further be done to aid both the exchange and exhibitors in deriving bigger profit from Warner pictures.

R. W. Baremore, formerly exhibitor editor of New York Morning Telegraph, this week assumed charge of the advertising, exploitation and publicity department of C. C. Burr's Enterprises.

Walter Parker joins the Warner Brothers' publicity and exploitation staff next week. He goes to Warner Brothers from Selznick, and on Thursday afternoon was tendered a testimonial luncheon by his Selznick associates and friends at Healy's, in New York.

Hy Daab, one of the most popular showmen-publicists in New York, and now associated with F. B. O., goes to the Pacific Coast on January 1 as special coast publicity director for that firm. He will co-operate with the producers there in injecting angles in productions that can be sold and exploited to the public and exhibitors. Before invading the picture filed Daab was one of the best known of New York's sporting writers.

Shallenberger Announces Eight New Productions

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, prior to his departure for the coast this week, announced the first eight productions that firm will release. Included in this list of releases are "Night Life in Hollywood," an A. B. Maescher picture; "Streets of New York," a Burton King special, with Edward Earle and Barbara Castleton; "Man and Wife," an Effanem production; "Shylock of Wall Street," a Burton King special, with Zena Keefe and Dore Davidson; a Blazed Trail feature, entitled "Lost in a Big City," starring John Lowell; "Jacqueline," a James Oliver Curwood Northwestern, made by Dell Henderson for Pine Tree Pictures Corporation; "The Broken Violin," an Atlantic pictures picture, directed by Jack Dillon, and Martin J. Heyl's special, "The Little Red Schoolhouse."

Dr. Shallenberger will remain on the coast for a month, conferring with producers there and otherwise perfecting plans for his organization for 1923.

"Secrets of Paris" Will Get a Premier Showing on Broadway

Closely following the announcement by C. C. Burr that Johnny Hines in "Sure-Fire Flint" would be presented at the Cameo Theatre, beginning December 31, comes word that the same producer is completing arrangements whereby "Secrets of Paris," another of his feature productions, will be shown on Broadway within a short time.

"Secrets of Paris," a screen version of Eugene Sue's widely read novel, "The Mysteries of Paris," was produced by Whitman Bennett, directed by Kenneth Webb, and is a thrilling story of the underworld of Paris, which has already received high praise from the critics of the trade press. Incidentally, it has, according to reports sent to Mr. Burr from out-of-town exhibitors, been particularly well received wherever shown, pleasing theatre patrons and putting considerable extra money into the box office.

ONLY A SHOP GIRL

"One of the most attractive offerings"

Why Santa Had a Large Package for the Long Suffering Supply Dealer

THE trained seal raised himself up on his hind flippers, grabbed the tip of Santa Claus's beard between his teeth and gave a gentle yank. Santa, although he made the same caustic remarks to his official call boy that the rest of us do to our alarm clocks, rolled over, rubbed his eyes and arose.

"Well, I guess it's time that I did get up, because it looks as if this was going to be a particularly busy Christmas," he observed, and for some hours thereafter he was as busy as a ticket taker on a feature night when the boss had failed to equip her with a ticket vending machine.

After a period of strenuous endeavor, during which the reindeer were inspanned and the sleigh loaded, Santa was just about to crack his whip and start on the southward journey when he suddenly remembered something.

"'Hey! there," he shouted to his chief assistant, "run back to the packing room and get that extra large bundle that we were fussing about all last week. Gosh! if I had forgotten that, I would never have forgiven myself."

The Recipient—and Why?

"Who's the bird that gets all this?" gasped the chief assistant, panting under his heavy load.

"That's for a supply dealer down in the States," replied Santa, "and, what's more, it's coming to him."

"Why?" asked the chief assistant.

Santa Claus looked at his wrist watch, "Well, seeing that there is an interval of fifteen minutes before the northern lights go on and illuminate the road properly, I'll spend them telling you why I'm so keen that this supply guy gets something good.

"It's this way. About a year ago they started digging a hole down in Main street, Metropolis, U. S. A. A certain supply dealer, whose front name is Bill, found out that it was going to be a new moving picture theatre and straightway made a business call on the party scheduled to navigate the aforesaid enterprise.

"But, before he had a chance to more than hand over his card, the prospective exhibitor told him to go chase himself, that the house would not be ready for at least six months and there was plenty of time to bother about equipment.

"Bill went away, but came back from time to time and watched the hole grow and just when they got the foundation started, he returned to the exhibitor and suggested that they sit down and figure over the requirements for the projection room and other equipment.

"'Don't bother me,' said the exhibitor. 'I'm due for a conference with the architect this afternoon and more important matters than yours are claiming my attention.'

"Bill went, as per request, but returned by the time the walls were up and tried to negotiate with the exhibitor. But the exhibitor only looked at him over his left shoulder and said: 'Get to blazes out of here, 'I've a soiree on with a heating and ventilating man and can't be bothered.'

"When the house was roofed over and the interior began to look like a theatre, Bill went back again. 'It is really serious now, you know, old man,' he said to the exhibitor, 'You may need a lot of special equipment and we should begin figuring it out so that you will open on time.'

Busy With Miracles

"But the exhibitor was busy trying to make a seating expert show him how fifteen hundred seats could be put into a eleven hundred seat house and he had no time to talk to the supply dealer.

"Two weeks afterwards, the supply man, with the same original smile not yet erased from his map, made another call. 'Go jump off the dock,' said the exhibitor. 'I can't be bothered with you. I have deeper and weightier problems. It's of vital importance that I decide immediately whether the floor covering should be of verdant green or a passionate red and I cannot be interrupted by any of your small talk. Run away or I'll bean you with an inkwell.'

"And the supply man who had already made more use of the exit than anyone else as yet wore one more outward leading groove in the floor.

"When the seating arrangements had been arbitrated and the color problem solved, the supply man got back to his task. 'You're worse than instalment payments on the income tax,' said the exhibitor, 'you always pop up when I don't expect or want you. How the deuce do I know what I'm going to need until I get an idea of where my projection room will be and how much space it will occupy?'

Time to Decide

"'Well,' said the equipment dealer, 'that is just what we ought to decide right now before we go any further.'

"'You talk like a phonograph with a busted record. How in thunder can I decide what the projection room is going to look like until I can find out where I can stick it without interfering with my $7,500 chandelier or spoiling my $2,500 worth of fresco. I am so worried with important details that I feel as if I were going to throw a fit. Please quit the premises so that I can have room to throw it properly.'

"And once more the supply dealer patronized the exit sign.

"After this experience, the supply dealer made fifteen calls. But the exhibitor was busy with a conference, thinking great thoughts, arranging for his publicity, talking to his press agent, or otherwise engaged.

And Then—One Night

"And then, one night, when the supply dealer was getting over a fit of the 'flu and his assistant was busy getting married, he got a call on the home telephone.

"It was the exhibitor and this is what he said: 'Hey, Bill! for the love of Mike come down to the office quick, we're scheduled to open next week and we've got to get all that equipment stuff installed in time so that we can keep faith with the public.'

"Did Bill tell him he was busy or that he was thinking great thoughts, or that he had a conference?

"Bill did not. He wrapped himself in patience and an overcoat and staggered down to the exhibitor's office and did two weeks' work in eight days' time. He drew up the specifica-

MOV-EZY

"Means Ease at the Movies"

A New Theatre Which Is Filling to Capacity Nightly Its 1800 Mov-Ezy Seats

Building from the ground up a $500,000 theatre in a town of 18,000 inhabitants, and in which there is already competition, would seem to be a large undertaking to the average theatre owner.

But not to Major R. T. Rasmussen, C. E., the builder and managing director of the New Freeport Theatre, Freeport, Long Island. Major Rasmussen by giving Freeport the finest theatre on Long Island, excepting one or two in Brooklyn, and by furnishing it with the best equipment obtainable, and featuring a super performance, has little trouble filling his house to capacity.

Of course, a house as fine as the Freeport is equipped with Mov-Ezy Chairs, the new theatre seat which eliminates such annoyances as standing to allow others to pass to their seats.

And no small amount of the enthusiastic comments of Freeport over their theatre have been about the convenience and the added comfort of this new type of seat.

You can make your own patrons just as appreciative. Mov-Ezy Chairs are easily installed in place of the old-fashioned kind of seats.

"Safety First" Cautions F. H. Elliott Former Secretary of the N. A. M. P. I.

"GIVE some well merited thought to 'Safety First'" is the holiday message of Frederick H. Elliott, Vice-President of the Feaster Manufacturing Company, to those engaged in the motion picture industry. Mr. Elliott knows whereof he speaks, for he has the distinction of having inaugurated and directed the original "Safety First" movement in this country, and subsequently co-ordinated the various branches of the motion picture business through the formation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Mr. Elliott's warning is timely in view of the holiday activities in all lines of trade and industry—the rush of holiday shoppers, crowding shops, stores, hotels and restaurants, and with transportation facilities taxed to the utmost, everybody scrambling for theatre tickets and the motion picture palaces, looking forward to a record-breaking holiday business.

"Throughout the theatre," says Mr. Elliott, "the 'Safety First' slogan should be brought home forcefully to every employee, particularly in the projection room. In handling film the greatest care should be exercised to avoid even the slightest trouble. Smoking when film is exposed is criminal and the law prohibiting smoking, or even the carrying of parlor matches, should be rigidly enforced by the management.

Duty of Attendants

"It is the duty of attendants at the theatres to exercise the greatest watch over the carelessness of smokers, owing to the habit of throwing matches, lighted cigars and cigarettes about the lobbies and theatre entrances. There have been many instances where panics have been created through such carelessness.

"The attainment of good housekeeping conditions rests largely with executives and their first duty is to thoroughly instruct all employees concerning what is expected of them. They should be informed regarding the various proper and improper practices and warned that they must adhere strictly to the rules and regulations under pain of instant dismissal.

"Particular attention should be given to the handling of crowds attending the theatres during the holiday season; as the attendance by children is greatly augmented at this time of the year and the little folks all enjoy 'the movies' and they are really the best little boosters 'the movies' have. The safety, comfort and convenience of theatre patrons should be the watchword and due diligence will gain thousands of friends.

In Exchanges and Laboratories

"In the exchanges, laboratories and studios, the same care and diligence should be exercised to safeguard life and property. Motion picture film should be kept in approved containers at all times, except when being actually handled or inspected.

"The stacking of naked film is one of the most dangerous practices in the industry and should be absolutely forbidden. Such exposure of film affords an opportunity for fire to spread; whereas, containers or other protection retard the spread of fire.

"The case of ignition can only be offset by an habitually careful and conscientious elimination of all possible causes by which film might be ignited, through contact with flame, sparks or heat.

"Rubbish, scraps of paper under tables and desks and back of radiators, cabinets and other fixtures may afford a starting place for a conflagration.

"Many fires have their origin with the heating system, because combustible materials, such as wood, paper and film, if left in contact with hot pipes or surfaces for a sufficient length of time, may ignite. Steam pipes and radiators are especially dangerous and should be properly guarded.

Precautions Are Simple

"Nitro-Cellulose motion picture film handled with simple precautions offers no great danger or hazard; nevertheless, those engaged in the industry should have a full knowledge of the characteristics of motion picture film and applying the correct methods of handling and storing, with an understanding and appreciation of the necessity of complying with the established rules and regulations for the protection of life and property.

"Good housekeeping should be the motto of everyone connected with the great cinema industry; for the art of good housekeeping consists principally of two things—order and cleanliness. The easiest, most effective, yet most neglected means of eliminating hazards, is the exercise of this warning.

"In this connection, attention is directed to the fact that in many communities, laws or ordinances have been enacted providing that when a fire results from their non-observance, the offenders shall pay to the city the full value of the services of the fire department and any damages in person or property resulting thereto in extinguishing or attempting to extinguish such fire. There is already such provision in the charter of the City of New York, the state law of Pennsylvania and the city ordinance of Cleveland and Cincinnati, Ohio; Portland Ore.; Austin, Texas; Billings, Montana and Newark, N. J. These communities are, therefore, the leaders in a movement, the justice of which is irrefutable."

Albany Incorporations

With fifteen new corporations forming during the week ending December 16 the motion picture business in New York State, showed a decided increase not only in number but in the amount of capitalization represented, which totaled to $703,800. These companies, with their directors and amount of capitalization were:

Jack Raymond Comedies Corporation, $50,000, Alibel Corey, Sylvia Schwartzman, Alfred Worsnop, New York City; Jacques Tyrol Productions, $250,000, A. H. Kurzland, Leo Linker, Jack Acks, Brooklyn; Bert Green, Inc., $50,000, Bert Green, F. W. Green, Bayside; L. B. Cornwall, Port Washington; Richard Bartlett, Inc., $5,000, and D. and L. Productions, $5,000, both having as directors, Sylvia Schwartzman, Alibel Corey and David Schneer, New York; Waverly Photoplay Corporation, $100,000, J. J. Jansen, jr., Thomas E. Halle, Robert A. MacLean, New York; Howden Producing Corporation, $1,000, F. H. Schnebbe, Kilbourn Gordon, E. C. Carpenter, New York; Ex Fin Company, Inc., $10,000, Harry Glenby, Edward Silton, Albert Lewis, New York City; Bellford Hotel Corporation, $500, C. M. Bellak, William E. Webb, Harry Moran, New York; Bewtex Products Corporation, $100,000, James B. Bateman, Arlington, N. J.; C. D. Cowl, I. L. Dreeben, New York; Schine-Oneonta Corporation, $5,000, and Oneonta-Strand Corporation, $50,000, Gloversville, both having as directors, J. M. Schine, L. W. and Martha Schine, Gloversville; Kapfall Productions, $1,800, William Kaufman, Edward N. Bloomberg, P. H. Weiss, New York; Photoplay Finance Corporation, $500, A. J. Callaghan, C. F. Smythe, Markley Franham, New York; The Movad Corporation, $75,000, Rochester, William H. Wilson, Edwin Allan, M. G. Ellenbogen, Rochester.

Schenectady's New State Theatre Most Wonderfully Well Equipped

IN the way of equipment, the recently opened State Theatre, in Schenectady, N. Y., the latest addition to the chain operated by the Mark-Strand Theatre Circuit, is a model of its kind

Joseph L. Gale, of New York, associated with the Mark-Strand Theatre Circuit for many years, acted as manager of the department of construction and maintenance. The construction of the house was done by Shapiro and Son, of New York, Paul Stirn acting as the company's representative in charge of the work.

The interior decorations for the theatre were by the William-Eckart Studios, of New York; the E. P. Finn Company, of Albany, furnished the tile, as well as the marble and the slate employed in the construction of the building.

From the Lee Lash Studios, New York, came the motion picture stage settings and the screen. The electric signs were supplied by Straus and Company, New York; the Rialto Stage Lighting Company, of New York, supplying the stage lighting effects William Camph and Company, New York, supplied the decorative draperies in the lobby and interior of the house. The plumbing was done by Fred Brown, of Schenectady.

The Projection Room

The projection rooms are said to be models of their kind. Taken as a unit, they include the projection room proper, a generator room, a rewinding and stock room, and a connecting lavatory.

The generator, housed in a room about 15 feet square, is a Hertner vertical 15-horse power, 100 ampheres, Transverter. It furnishes direct current to the projection machines in the adjoining room. In addition to the Hertner outfit, the room also includes the latest in switchboards and Ward Leonard dimming devices, with emergency rheostats for alternating current equipment.

The switchboard was made by the Empire Switchboard Company, of Brooklyn, and among other features possesses a complete interlocking switch, the dimmers being of the multi-color type. The lights throughout the house are controlled from this room.

In the projection room, which measures 13 by 24 feet, two projectors have already been installed and a third will be placed later on. These projectors have a throw of 150 feet to the screen. The spotlight is also located in the projection room. Each projector is so connected and controlled electrically that the orchestra leader as well as the projectionist can instantly control its speed. The curtain is also controlled from the projection room. The electrical equipment was installed by the Van Wagoner, Lynn Construction Company of New York.

The rewinding and stock room, which adjoins, is 9 by 10 feet and has ample equipment in the way of rewinders, etc., to handle reels with the utmost speed.

Heating and Ventilating

The heating and ventilating system consists of three propeller fans, two measuring six feet, and one three feet in diameter. These quickly clear the house of foul air, or excessive heat, the main ceiling of the theatre being so perforated that foul air can quickly be expelled into the open by these fans which are controlled from the manager's office.

The heating system is of the indirect type, the heat being forced through a series of ducts under the main floor with mushroom devices under the seats, disseminating the air at an equal temperature throughout the entire house. The air is first brought in and after being forced by a blower-like contrivance through steam coils through the winter months, and through refrigerating coils in the summer, is then forced into the house proper.

A $600,000 House Opens in New York's Italian Quarter

THE Fugazy Theatre, operated by the MacDougal Amusement Company, MacDougal and West Houston street, New York City, in the heart of the Italian district, was opened to the public the night of December 5.

The house, which was under course of construction about a year, cost in the neighborhood of $600,000, including the value of the land.

The building, which was designed and supervised by Reilly and Hall, architects, of New York City, is of structural steel with stucco covered brick walls.

The seating capacity of 1,800 is arranged in three units, nine hundred seats being in the orchestra, five hundred in the balcony and four hundred in the stadium. In addition, loge boxes are provided in the fore part of the stadium and also in the balcony.

Both exterior and interior of the house are in Italian renaissance.

A combination heating and ventilating system insures the comfort of the patrons and a Spencer Turbine vacuum cleaning system has been installed.

Horizontal Projection

The projection room is so located in the balcony as to afford horizontal projection. Two Simplex projectors are used, the installation having been made by B. F. Porter, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

The pictures are shown on a screen manufactured by the Raven Screen Corporation.

Two ticket booths cater to the prompt dispensing of admissions and this work is expedited by the use of Automatic Ticket registers and Simple Coin changers in [illegible] booth.

The Stanley Frame Company, of 729 Seventh avenue, installed the seating.

An orchestra of twelve pieces supplies music, under the direction of Gino Allesandria, and will be augmented by a large organ shortly to be installed.

In addition to its motion picture equipment, a stage, twenty-eight by forty-two feet, has been provided.

New 500 Seat House for Washington, D. C.

That section of northeast Washington which is now without moving picture facilities will have an up-to-date theatre, seating 500, by June 1, next, with the completion of the Classic, which is to be erected by D. G Joseph at Sixty-first and Dix streets.

The entrance will be on Dix street, and there will be a large lobby in the center of the building with a store on either side and with offices on the second floor.

The house will not only be equipped to

Reproductive quality enables the sensitive emulsion to correctly portray every step of gradation from highest light to deepest shadow.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

faithfully reproduces every tone of the negative. It carries the quality through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base—now available in nine colors, is identified throughout its length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in black letters in the transparent margin.
